THE

HOLY BIBLE,

CONTAINING THE Old and New Testaments

WITH

ORIGINAL NOTES

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS, AND COPIOUS MARGINAL REFERENCES

BY THOMAS SCOTT,

RECTOR OF ASTON SANFORD, BUCKS, AND CHAPLAIN TO THE LOCK HOSPITAL.

IN FIVE VOLUMES.

VOL. III.

THE FOURTH AMERICAN, FROM THE SECOND LONDON EDITION, IMPROVED AND ENLARGED.

New-York:

PUBLISHED BY DODGE & SAYRE, No. 86 BROADWAY.

J. SEYMOUR, PRINTER, No. 40 JOHN-STREET.

1815.
THE BOOK OF ECCLESIASTES.

THE name of this book is taken from the Septuagint, and is a Greek word signifying a preacher, or one who harangues a public congregation. The Hebrew name is Coheleth, which may either mean, the person who assembles the people, or he who addresses them when assembled. The book is generally ascribed to Solomon: and it can scarcely be doubted, but that the tradition of the Jews is well grounded; namely, that Solomon wrote it, when brought to deep repentance for the atrocious crimes into which he had been seduced by his idolatrous wives and concubines. Certain it is, either that Solomon was the writer; or that some other person wrote it as assuming his character: for many things in it are so peculiarly appropriate to Solomon, that no other man who ever lived could truly speak them. (1. 12. 16. ii. 4—10. vii. 25—28. xii. 9.) But it would be very absurd to suppose, that any inspired writer would use a feigned name and character. Groton finds some words in this book, that are not to be met with at all, but in Daniel, and Ezra, and the Chaldee interpreters; which makes it probable, he thinks, that it was written after their captivity in Babylon. But supposing Solomon to write here as a penitent, after he had frequented the company of many outlandish women, (1 Kings xi. 1, 2;) it need not seem to us strange that he had learned the use of many of their words. Besides, in other books of Scripture there are words, for the signification of which we are fain to have resort unto other languages, and particularly the Arabic:—and yet for all that they might be pure Hebrew, according to the language which was then spoken. (Bp. Patrick.)

The nature of this book, which is properly a sermon on a special occasion, precludes the expectation of prophecies in it: nor is there any express quotation from or reference to it, in the other Scriptures, especially in the New-Testament, as far as I can recollect, or discover; yet, it is indisputable, that it formed a part of the sacred Canon in the time of our Lord; and the instruction it contains, when well understood, appears quite to coincide with the writings both of the prophets and apostles. Detached passages indeed, have been considered as containing unscriptural doctrine, and even such as leads to skepticism and licentiousness; and no doubt superficial and carnally-minded men, may “wrest them as they do the other Scriptures, to their own destruction.” but they all admit of a sound and useful interpretation, when accurately investigated, and when the general scope of the book is attended to. The tendency of this book is excellent, when rightly understood: and Solomon speaks in it with great clearness of the revealed truths of a future state, and universal judgment. (Grey.)—It is evidently an inquiry after the chief good, or what can make man happy: an inquiry which the most learned, sagacious, and ingenious pagan philosophers, often made, but never could solve; but which the inspired preacher hath satisfactorily and finally settled, not merely by authority, or argument; but by the result of his own experiments. A more unexceptionable decision cannot be conceived, whether Solomon’s greatness and prosperity, his wisdom and knowledge, or his advantages for making these experiments, and his assiduity in them, be considered. He had evidently two objects in view. First, to show where happiness could not be found: and secondly, where it might. Whatsoever is vain and perishings cannot make men happy. But all men’s ‘designs in this world are vain and perishing; therefore they cannot by prosecuting such designs make themselves happy.’ That which can make a man’s mind quiet, still, and calm, both in life and death; that alone can make him happy. Now this the fear of the Lord can do for him, and this alone: therefore this and nothing else can make him a happy man. (Bp. Patrick.)—The first six chapters are principally employed on the former part of the argument; in which is shown the vanity of knowledge and wisdom, (apart from true religion,) of mirth and pleasure, of magnificence, prosperity, power, and wealth: yet, some counsels are here interspersed, tending to show how the vanity, at least the vexation, of each may be abated; and also intimations afforded, that wisdom is far preferable to all other acquisitions, and that a cheerful use of providential blessings is much better than covetousness. In the second part, from the end of the sixth chapter, the general object of the writer is gradually unfolded; and many important cautions and instructions are given, how to make the best of things as we find them, how to live comfortably and usefully in this evil world, and how to derive benefit from the changing events of life. Here indeed, the royal Preacher sometimes pauses, to show the vanity of the several things of which he has occasion to discourse: yet, this part is chiefly employed in teaching us where and how to seek present comfort and final happiness. In respect of outward things, the sacred writer inculcates a cheerful, liberal, and charitable use of them; without expecting to derive from them any permanent or satisfactory delight. Yet he counsels us to take the transient pleasure, which agreeable circumstances can afford: as far as consists with the fear of God, or true religion; to be patient under unavoidable evils; not to aim at perils, ardours, or impracticable changes; to fill up the station allotted us in a peaceable, equitable, and prudent manner; to be contented, meek, and affectionate; to do good abundantly, and to persevere in so doing for the pleasure arising from it, and in expectation of a gracious recompense. These general rules are interspersed with warnings and counsels to princes and great men; and to subjects in respect of their rulers: nor can it be doubted, but that a great part of the vexation of human life is occasioned by the misconduct of men in these particulars. But the conclusion of the whole matter is this. "Fear God and keep his commandments; for this is the whole of man:" and thus habitually prepare for death and judgment, which will surely and speedily arrive. In fact, it is evident, that Solomon shows the vanity and vexation of all those things from which idolatrous and apostate men seek happiness; in order to recommend the substantial blessings of true religion: and that, however some parts of his doctrine militate against the traditions of men, or the impositions of Antichrist; none of them, when fairly interpreted, and compared with the context, will be found inconsistent with the doctrines and precepts of Christ and his apostles.

B.C. 975.

CHAP. I.

The vanity of earthly things illustrated by the shortness of life: the restless motions of the sun, wind, and waters: the correspondent toil of man; and the want of satisfaction, or novelty, experienced in every thing, 3-11. The writer shows his royal authority, his pursuit of wisdom, and the vexation that he found in it, 12-18.

THE words of the Preacher, the son of David, king of Jerusalem.

2 Vanity of vanities, saith the preacher, vanity of vanities all is vanity.

NOTES.

CHAP. I. V. 1. The word rendered preacher, has a feminine termination, though it is used both with a masculine and a feminine verb: but the connexion, in several places, confines the meaning of it to the speaker, and not the discourse. In its general meaning it signifies one who gathereth; that is, one that collects the people together into a congregation, in order to instruct them. As Solomon, in the preceding book, spake in the name of Wisdom, (which is feminine in the original;) it seems most obvious to consider him as speaking in the name or a similar character; if the feminine termination of the original word be at all regarded. The name of Solomon indeed is not mentioned in the book; but no other son of David reigned in Jerusalem over Israel; (12:) Solomon's successors were called kings of Judah, as distinguished from the kings of Israel, or of the revolted tribes; and many things in the book can suit none but Solomon. 'These are the words of him who thought the name of a preacher, or public instructor of God's people, no less honourable than that of the son of king David, whom he succeeded in his throne.' (Bp. Patrick.)—Solomon is here called a preacher, or one that assemblcth the people, because of his teaching the true knowledge of God; and how men ought to pass their life in this transitory world.' V. 2. This abrupt proposal of his subject shows how full Solomon's heart was, and how desirous to impress the reader forcibly with it. He does not say, all things are vain: but that they are vanity in the abstract; yet, vanity of vanities, one complex vanity constituted of numberless
ECCLESIASTES.

3 What profit hath a man of all his labour, which he taketh under the sun? 4 One generation passeth away, and another generation cometh: but the earth abideth for ever. 5 The sun also ariseth, and goeth down, and hasteth to his place where he arose. 6 The wind goeth toward the south, and turneth about unto the north: it whirleth about continually, and the wind returneth again according to his circuits. 7 All the rivers run into the sea; yet the sea is not full: unto the place from whence the rivers come, thither they return again. 8 All things are full of labour; yet man cannot utter it: the eye is not satisfied with seeing, nor the ear filled with hearing.

V. 1. “In all labour there is profit,” whilst earthly things are subordinated to heavenly: but when a man disturbs that order, no solid good accrues to him from all his toil and toil. The ambitious, the covetous, the sensual, nay, the studious, labour for a bubble, a shadow, a chimera, which is but a vanishing and leaves them in darkness and despair. 4.11. The earth indeed, and its productions and affairs, abide nearly the same through successive ages: but it is continually shifting its inhabitants: and what are they the better for all they possessed on earth, when swept away to make room for another generation? The swift approach of death, is alone sufficient to prove the vanity of a portion in this world. But the incessant motion of the sun, which is but what he was yesterday, or last year, at this time; the shifting of the wind from one point to another, and then back again; and the speedy current of the rivers to join the ocean, which yet is not filled with them, but returns them in various ways to water the earth, to feed the springs, and to supply the rivers, are so many emblems of man’s restless state in this world; and lessons to him to spend his span of life in doing the will of his Creator, and in serving his generation. All things here are full of toil and labour, which man cannot describe, explain, or account for: and after all his labours, he is no nearer finding rest than the sun, the wind, or the current of the river; but is hastening to the dust whence he set out: and then his soul will find no rest, if he have not sought it in and from God. Nay, the eye, though wearied and worn out with seeing, and the ear with hearing, are not satisfied: every thing satiates the senses and appetites, and pulls them with sameness and tedious repetition; and yet leaves them dissatisfied and craving. Thus men go on from age to age; we find the world the same as our ancestors did, and shall leave it the same to our posterity; and all the new inventions and discoveries that men boast of, are unreal or immaterial. Many things are deemed new through ignorance: men not being aware that the same truths were known, the same errors contended for, the same objects pursued, and the same plans adopted, in former ages, as at present. The learned often know this to be the case: and probably it would be found to be so in still more things, if the records of antiquity had not been lost or neglected. In particular, he who is but moderately acquainted with ecclesiastical history, will scarcely find one modification of religious opinion, amidst the endless variety of modern days, which may not be matched with something of the same kind in ancient times. Upon the whole, it is the same scene over and over again: so that there is scarcely any thing of which it may be said, “See, this is new”: but it hath been already in old times; though there may be no remembrance of former things; and in like manner many modern inventions and conclusions will hereafter be exploded and forgotten. It is, however, certain that there is nothing new discovered, which can prevent the world from being that same vain vexatious place that it was found in former ages.
made straight; and that which is wanting cannot be numbered.

16 I communed with mine own heart, saying, Lo, I am come to great estate, and have gotten more wisdom than all they that have been before me in Jerusalem: yea, my heart had great experience of wisdom and knowledge.

V. 12—18. After this exordium, the preacher proceeds to a more particular account of himself and his subjects. Being king over Israel in Jerusalem, he desired wisdom and knowledge, in order to a proper discharge of his high and important trust: and he applied himself heartily, and with all the powers of his capacious understanding, to learn everything that had been done under heaven, as far as it was discoverable by him. For God hath so ordered it, that even knowledge must be acquired with sore labour and travail by the sons of men; which, however, tends to exercise and employ their minds in a salutary manner, and serves to humble them, as some render the words. Or the clause may mean, that Solomon searched out the nature and causes of that sore labour and travail, with which God exercises the children of men. The result of this inquiry, however, was, that when he had considered all the works done under the sun, he found them, not only to be vanity, but vexation of spirit: anxious cares and insipid pleasures ending in bitter disappointments. For no human power, sagacity, or industry can rectify the crookedness of men's dispositions and behaviour: or cure worldly enjoyments of their vanity; or supply, or even number up, those things which are wanting to felicity. These subjects Solomon pondered in his own mind with serious attention: and considering that he had both riches, authority, capacity, and leisure, he was determined to examine critically the different pursuits from which men expected happiness. And in the first place he purposed to examine the difference between the enjoyments of such as sought knowledge and studied the rules of prudence and natural wisdom, and the pleasures of those who lived at their ease, and minded nothing but sensual mirth and indulgence: which was generally deemed to be madness and folly, and yet had many advocates. But he found the very investigation of the subject to be vexatious; and he was convinced, that there was no solid satisfaction on either side. For even the pursuit of knowledge and wisdom only made distressing discoveries to him of man's wickedness and misery: so that the more he knew, the more he saw cause to lament and mourn; and at the same time the increase of knowledge rendered the mind more susceptible of painful feelings; and aggravated the guilt of him who continued impenitent. We must remember, that the wisdom which cometh from God, and leads to him, and which is the whole duty of man, is excepted from the general charge of vanity. And all other wisdom and knowledge, abstracted from their connexion with it, and subservient to it, are indeed vain and vexatious.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.
V. 1—11.

None are more capable of forming the evil and misery of sin, than they who have been very guilty, and then become deeply penitent: and they generally are very desirous to warn their fellow-sinners, and to call them also to repentance. In like manner, none are so well qualified to preach the vanity of worldly things, as they who have had an opportunity of giving them a full trial, and then renounce them all for the comforts of true religion: and if kings, whose examples proved them to be in earnest, would discourse on this topic to their subjects, they would be the most unexceptionable of all preachers; nor would it be any degradation to their characters, nay; in the judgment of angels, who “rejoice over one sinner that repenteth,” they would then appear more truly honourable, than when leading victorious armies, haranguing assembled nobles, or seated on the throne of judgment. For to the calm reflection of a believer, who hath run the circuit of earthly good, and is brought back from his wanderings; and then from the verge of the eternal world looks round upon the crowds which throng the court, the city, the change, the theatre, what doth it all appear but vanity? Imperial sceptres, high-sounding titles, flattering panegyrics, renowned achievements, are as mere a vanity as the rest of the shadowy possessions and enjoyments of life. The whole is vanity of vanities, the vainest of vanities, and nothing more. If this world, in its present state, were all, it would not be worth living for: but what shall we say, when for the sake of such shadows, eternal happiness is forfeited and eternal misery deserved? What “profit then have ungodly men of all their labour, which they take under the sun?” As far as this world is concerned, we are sensible, that all former generations have laboured only for a grave. The present race of men are treading in their steps; soon the same observations will be made over us; and if we have our good things on earth, it had been better for us that we had never been born. If indeed, like the sun, we rejoice to run our course of duty, and make haste to fill up our measure of services to our generation, according to the will of God, and then seek our rest in him: the shortness of human life and the vanity of the world will be no loss to us. But if we seek our happiness, and attempt to take up our rest on earth, where all things are full of labour; we shall at last be but where we set out; all our toil and inquietude will be in vain, and we must then go and give an account of ourselves to God our Creator and Judge. We cannot alter this state of things, which is the effect of man’s apostacy, and of the wrath of God against his sins; our wisdom therefore consists in accommodating ourselves to it; and in ceasing to expect satisfaction here, where every short-lived enjoyment either pall and nauseates through excess, or grows insipid through repetition. For no discovery has yet been made of any new source of pleasure or happiness,
CHAP. II.

Solomon shows, from his own experiments and reflections, the vanity and vexation of mirth, pleasure, riches, and magnificence. 1-11: of wisdom and knowledge, though far preferable to folly, 12-17; of the most successful labours of man; except as the things of the world are used in a proper manner, according to the will of God, and by his special gift, 18-22.

I said in mine heart, Go to now, I will prove thee with mirth; therefore I enjoyed pleasure: and, behold, this also is vanity.

2 I said of laughter, a It is mad: and of mirth, What doeth it?

3 I sought in mine heart to * give myself unto wine, (yet accounting my heart with wisdom,) and to lay hold on folly, b till I might see what was that good for the sons of men, which they should do under the heaven † all the days of their life.

4 I made me great works; b I built me houses; 1 I planted me vineyards; and I planted trees in them of all kind of fruits;

5 I made me gardens and orchards, and 9 I planted trees in them of all kind of fruits; which is exempt from vanity and vexation: after all our boasted improvements, the world is the same discontented, disappointed place, that men complained of in former ages; and it will be the same when we are gone, or forgotten, like those former things of which there is no remembrance.

V. 12-18.

It behoves all men, as well as kings and preachers, to apply their hearts, and the abilities which God hath given them, to find out that wisdom and knowledge which is connected with their duties in the community. Yet in the present state of things, even this is a sore labour and travail: and the more we read, hear, or observe of all the works that are done under the sun, the more evil and misery we become acquainted with. We discover calamities, which we cannot relieve, errors which we cannot rectify, and vices which we cannot reform: besides those crooks in our own lot which we cannot straighten: and those obliquities in our dispositions, and manifold defects in our own characters, which we feel ourselves unable fully to remove. Communing with our own hearts on these subjects will serve the more deeply to convince us, that neither wealth, authority, nor wisdom, even if they exceeded those of Solomon, could alter these things. And it is madness and folly to expect that satisfaction from madness and folly, which wisdom and learning fail to confer on their disciples. Yet that libertinism and epicures might have no plea left them; and that no man might be enticed by them to make the pernicious experiment, in order to a decision of the question: we have it here made by Solomon, and to the greatest advantage; and, as might have been expected, he found it " vexation of spirit." Whilst at the same time he excludes the wise and learned from their boastings also; seeing, with all his unparalleled wisdom and knowledge, he assures us, " that in much wisdom is much grief, and he that increaseth knowledge increaseth sorrow."

Let us then learn to hate and fear sin, the cause of all this vanity and misery; to value Jesus Christ, by whom we may return to God and happiness; to despise and renounce this vain world; and to seek our rest in the knowledge, love, and service of God our Saviour.

NOTES.

CHAP. II. V. 1, 2. Solomon, having found learning with all its discoveries, to be labour, sorrow, and disappointment, deliberately proceeded to make trial of mirth and pleasure, in order to find out the happiest course of life. We may now, therefore, imagine him surrounded with the most witty, gay, and dissipated of his courtiers and subjects; and endeavouring to relax his mind, and dissipate his cares, by jollity and laughter. But he soon found this was to be vanity. Upon reflection he said of laughter, it is " mad." For a rational creature to indulge in excessive mirth was a voluntary insanity, which rendered him for the time devoid of reason, and the object of pity or contempt, which betrayed him into foolish actions, and entailed on him many painful consequences. And what at last could this noisy flashy mirth do towards making a man happy? For on trial it was found to be little more than the affectation or hypocrisy of pleasure: a forced appearance of joy concealing an aching heart, and increasing its anguish and remorse when it subsided.

V. 3. The royal preacher next devised to make a critical experiment of the pleasures of wine, which have been so much celebrated by licentious poets. He therefore determined to indulge his sensuous appetite, and see what it could do for him. But yet he acquainted himself with wisdom: either he devoted the former part of the day to study and business, and then indulged himself in the evening; or he conducted the experiment with wisdom, and did not disorder himself by running into great excesses; or he endeavoured to take his knowledge, and wisdom along with him, (so to speak;) that he might estimate the degree of satisfaction to be found in drinking; thus attempting to lay hold on folly in a wise manner, and for a wise end, namely, that he might discover which of the pursuits of man was worthy of the decided preference, and ought for that reason to be adhered to all the days of man's life on earth.
6 I made pools of water, to water therewith the wood that bringeth forth trees;

7 I got servants and maidens, and had servants born in my house;

also I had great possessions of great and small cattle, above all that were in Jerusalem before me;

8 I gathered me also silver and gold, and the peculiar treasure of kings and of the provinces; I got men-singers and women-singers, and the delights of the sons of men, as musical instruments, and that of all sorts.

9 So I was great, and increased more than all that were before me in Jerusalem: also my wisdom remained with me.

10 And whatsoever mine eyes desired I kept not from them; I withheld not my heart from any joy; for my heart rejoiced in all my labour: and this was my portion of all my labour.

11 Then I looked on all the works that my hands had wrought, and on the labour that I had laboured to do: and behold, all was vanity and vexation of spirit.
18 Yea, I hated all my labour which I had taken under the sun: because I should leave it unto the man that shall be after me.

19 And who knoweth whether he shall be a wise man or a fool? yet shall he have rule over all my labour wherein I have laboured, and wherein I have shewed myself wise under the sun.

This is also vanity.

20 Therefore I went about to cause my heart to despair of all the labour of man, which I took under the sun.

21 For there is a man, whose labour is in wisdom, and in knowledge, and in equity; yet to a man that hath not laboured therein shall he leave it for his portion. This also is vanity and a great evil.

22 For what hath man of all his and anxieties of life, and pain, sickness, and death, no wisdom or learning can ward them off; so that Solomon himself in respect of the most important temporal concerns, was upon a level with his meanest subject; his wisdom and knowledge were in this view a mere vanity, and his labour in pursuing them seemed altogether lost. He observed also, that when a wise man died he was commonly forgotten or neglected, with his maxims, devices, and performances. So that if it was asked, "How dieth the wise man?" It might be answered, "As the fool." These reflections rendered him weary of life and of all its employments: as he found every thing "to be vanity and vexation." We suppose this to have been Solomon's experience, whilst he was seeking satisfaction in the world, and before he began to return back to God and his service.

V. 18—22. Solomon next considered what would become of his wealth, buildings, and improvements after his decease. He had indeed a son to succeed him in his kingdom, but who knew whether he would prove a wise man or a fool? and he seems to have perceived that Rehoboam was not likely to inherit his wisdom, or to preserve that prosperity in which he left his kingdom. Yet having rule over all his labour, in which he had showed his diligence and wisdom; he would have it in his power to overturn the whole. This reflection so disquieted his mind, that he desired to bring himself to despise of deriving good from all his labours, about those things, "which are under the sun," seeing, that having bestowed great pains to establish the affairs of his kingdom in wisdom, knowledge, and equity, his successor, who entered upon it without any labours of his own, might destroy all by his neglect or imprudence. This Solomon saw to be a great evil in the affairs of men, which could not be rectified; by means of which, the incessant labour and care of man, by day and night, only produces proportionable sorrow and vexation. And yet, such is our folly, there is no end of our cares: for we see many a man whose life is nothing but a mere drudgery, who never has leisure to enjoy any thing that he hath, but still engaged in one troublesome employment or other to get more: which he follows so eagerly, as if it were his business to vex and disquiet himself! This content with his daily toils, he racks his mind also with care in the night! This is so void of all reason, that nothing can be imagined more vain and foolish! (Bp. Patrick.)—"I went about to make mine heart abhor all the labour, wherein I had travailed under the sun;" that I might seek the true felicity which is in God.

V. 24—26. The result of these experiments of the preacher was this, that instead of ceaseless cares about getting and hoarding, nothing could be found under the sun, which deserved to be preferred to a cheerful and liberal use of the fruits of a man's labours. Yet even this was the gift of God; and without dependence on him, a man must be disappointed even here: for who could bestow more attention to it, or have more advantages for it, than he had possessed? and yet he missed of the comfort of his prosperity when he was wandering from God and his duty. But when a man is accepted of the Lord, and does that which he approves, he gives him true wisdom, knowledge, and joy; a peaceful conscience, a contented and thankful mind, a joyful hope, and solid satisfaction in the knowledge and love of him: and by teaching him to conduct his labours, and use his good things, in a pious, charitable, temperate, and sober manner, he enables him to rejoice in all the works of his hands, and in the abundance of good conferred on him. But to the sinner God allotts labour and sorrow, vanity and vexation in seeking a worldly portion, which yet afterwards comes into better hands. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—17.

The manifold devices of men in order to derive satisfaction from the world, and their incessant changing from one B
CHAPTER III.

The mutability of human affairs, as resulting from the unsearchable, wise, forethinking, or the idea of increasing and supereminent greatness and renown float before the mind; and whilst improvements are making, and something new every day excites the attention, there is a degree of joy in a man's labour and success, and this he has for his lasting portion. But when his designs are finished, and he vainly hopes to be repaid for all his trouble, care, and expense: he "looks on all that his hands have wrought, and behold all is vanity and vexation of spirit; so that there is no profit "under the sun." And if the richest, wisest, and most prosperous of kings could find nothing but vanity and vexation in all his possessions and enjoyments, what can any man do that cometh after him, and determines to repeat the same experiment! We must not indeed place mad mirth, intemperance, and folly upon a level with the liberal arts, useful learning, or economical or political wisdom. The former are evil in themselves, the others are good, except when misplaced, idolized, and abused. So that even this "wisdom excelleth folly as far as light "excelleth darkness." A man's knowledge and prudence, like the eyes in his head, preserve him from many temporal evils, into which he will fall, who walketh in darkness and ignorance: and they enable him to do virtuous and useful to the community. Yet in the grand concerns, one event happeneth to them both; the advantages of wisdom are precarious and transient; and the most sagacious of men, who dies a stranger to Jesus Christ, will perish equally with the most ignorant, and often with peculiar aggravations; so that this is vanity, and worse than vanity. And the imaginary advantage of being honoured after death is as uncertain as it is vain. Perhaps even Solomon, with all his glory, would have long since been forgotten, or his history disdained by false, if he had not been made partaker of divine wisdom, and placed as king over God's people; and honoured as a writer of the sacred Scriptures. And what is this bubble, which so many covet and so few obtain? What good can commendations on earth do the body in the grave, or the soul in hell? And can the spirits of just men made perfect at all need them? It would indeed he as well, if there were in no case any remembrance of the wise man, more than of the fool, except as survivors are the better for his wisdom. So that, if this were all, we might be tempted to hate our life, with all the fruitless toil and work that is done under the sun; as "it is all vanity, and vexation of spirit."
when they come to have much in their power; and the fears lest it should do them harm and not good, and multitude of their means may make a worldly man hate all his labour and under the sun. Soon it must all pass into other hands: who perhaps will subvert all his schemes, waste all his treasures, and destroy all those works in which he fancied that he had shown himself wise: may, supposing he has laboured in wisdom, knowledge, and equity, to establish beneficial regulations, the man to whom he leaves it for a portion, perhaps overthrows all by his vice and folly, before he is well cold in his grave. This is also vanity and a sore evil; enough to make a man cease his heart to despair of all his labour about worldly things. For what hath man of all his labour, and the vexation of his heart? for all his toilsome days and anxious nights, but sorrow and grief? Indeed worldly things were never intended for anything more and better, than to supply our bodily wants, and our expectation of more from them is the main cause of this vanity. To eat and drink to the moderate satisfaction of our appetites is so far good; and there is nothing better for man, of earthly enjoyment: these, the animals share to greater advantage, but the rational soul requires some better portion. No wonder then, that when man mistakes this for his intended good, he is restless and dissatisfied, and prone to excess: so that he cannot attain to the comfortable use of the creatures, without the special gift of God: even though he had Solomon’s wisdom and wealth, and obtained to as much as he did. In order to attain that, and every other good, we must first seek and labour for those things which are above, and not for those under the sun: and having found acceptance with God, and being good in his sight, we shall receive from him wisdom and knowledge, productive of solid joy. Then we shall not have any cause to hate our life, or our labour, nor to sit down in despondency: but leaving our children, and all our concerns with the Lord, we may cheerfully attend to the duties of our station, pass through life without anxious cares; avoid much of its vanity and vexation, by the exercise of faith, patience, and joyful hope; and “abound in the work of the Lord, as knowing that our labour shall not be in vain in the Lord.” We shall not need to covet wealth or honour; but “having food and raiment, shall learn to be therewith content,” and to use what God giveth to his glory, with thankful hearts: and at length shall leave the world in a very different manner, either from the fool, or the worldly wise man. So that the vanity and vexation spoken of belongs only to men as sinners, and is confirmed to them as unbelievers; to the most prudent and prosperous of whom God giveth travail, as his portion: he toils and labours to gather and to depopulate, and the real benefit of all his care and pains, and the sum total of all his enjoyment, even of this life, devolves to “him that is good before God.” “To all others there is vanity and vexation;” but “to him that soweth righteousness and truth shall be a sure reward.”

NOTES.

CHAP. III. V. 1–11. Solomon, having stated at the close of the preceding chapter, that a man should use cheerfully and piously the gifts of Providence, here proceeds to show, that he ought not to expect too much from them, seeing they are so fluctuating and uncertain. There is a season and a time for every one of God’s purposes to take place in this lower world; and for us to perform the several parts of our duty, and prepare for the future: and we cannot anticipate or retard those appointed seasons, by any of our contrivances or labours. Thus there was a time, in the purposes of God, for our birth; and there is

B 2
CHAPTER III.

12 I know that there is no good in them, but for a man to rejoice, and to do good in his life.

13 And also that every man should eat and drink, and enjoy the good of all his labour, it is the gift of God.

14 I know that whatever God doeth, it shall be for ever: nothing can be put to it, nor any thing taken from it: and God doeth it, that men should fear before him.

15 That which hath been is now; and that which is to be hath already been; and God requireth that which is past.

16 ¶ And moreover I saw under the sun:

V. 12—15. Wherefore long consideration and experience assure me, that leaving these fruitless inquiries and vexatious cares about the future, the only happiness that is in our power is to make the best of our present condition; being solicitous for nothing in this world, but to obtain good hope in God, by living piously and virtuously, and by doing good to others with what we have: and this not remissly and by fits, but seriously and constantly, as long as we live. (Bp. Patrick.) Indeed the chief advantage of worldly possessions consists in the pleasure which arises from doing good with them, and in using moderately and cheerfully the fruit of our labour, which is the gift of God. It would be madness to think of altering the decrees of God: his appointments cannot be frustrated or disconcerted: nothing can be added to or taken from them; but they remain for ever as he hath purposed them: and he orders all things in that manner which is best suited to bring men to stand in awe of his power and wrath, and to reverence his glorious Majesty. There is also an uniformity in the vast variety of his dispensations; the same scenes are exhibited over again to successive generations; and God, as it were, recalls those judgments and mercies which had been employed on former occasions. So that his dealings with individuals, and with collective bodies, from age to age, make the same displays of his divine perfections. It is a very great plague to be discontented that things go otherwise than we desire: for certain it is, that God hath settled them by such an eternal and immutable law, that it is not in the power of man to make the least alteration. Therefore we must alter ourselves, and not murmur, that we cannot change the course of things; but be happy by reverent submission to the divine government; and a due care not to offend the divine Majesty, whose will shall be done one way or other; if not by us, yet upon us. For we are subject to no other laws, than those by which God hath governed the world from the beginning. (Bp. Patrick.) sun the place of judgment, that wickedness was there; and the place of righteousness, that iniquity was there;
17 I said in mine heart, God shall judge the righteous and the wicked; for there is a time there for every purpose and for every work.
18 I said in mine heart, concerning the estate of the sons of men, that God that manifest them, and that they might see that they themselves are beasts.
19 For that which befalleth the sons of men befalleth beasts; even one thing befalleth them: as the one dieth, so dieth the other; for there is no Competence between the living on this earth.

V. 16, 17. Solomon here more directly revolve to his subject, namely, the vanity of earthly distinctions or possessions. Men are very ambitious of power and authority, and these are deemed important acquisitions: yet they who obtain them commonly, more or less, abuse them, and instead of administering justice, are guilty of oppression and iniquity. And as God will surely call both the just and the wicked to account for their works; so their exaltation frequently proves the occasion of their more aggravated condemnation: for as this is a time of the Lord's patience, speedily the time of his vengeance will arrive; seeing there is a time for every purpose and every work. In the mean while, however, the iniquity perpetrated under the colour of law and justice, exceedingly enhances the vanity of the world, by turning the principal outward remedy against misery into an engine of torture.

And Solomon seems to have felt that even a wise and righteous prince could not prevent this: as he must leave so much to be done by others, and cannot secure, in general, the impartial execution of justice, however ardently he may desire it.

V. 19—21. Some think that these verses contain the objections of some infidels to Solomon's doctrine of the righteous judgment of God. But the construction requisite to make out this meaning appears to me perplexed. Solomon seems to have expressed the wish of his heart concerning the estate of the sons of men, especially that of powerful oppressors, that God would manifest it unto them, and cause them duly to consider it; that they might perceive, that by choosing this world as their portion, they reduced themselves to a level with the beasts, without being like them exempted from present vexation and a future account. For that which befalleth the sons of men, respecting mere animal pleasures or pains, befalleth also beasts. Both live, and breathe, and die alike, and go to the same place, and return to the dust whence they were taken. So that, in these things, man hath no pre-eminence above the beast; for all is vanity. As none can fully comprehend, so few consider properly, the difference between the rational soul of man, which after the death of the body returns to God, and enters upon an eternal state of happiness or misery; and the spirit, or life, of the beast, which is extinct with the body when it returns to the earth. And for want of attending to this, men forfeit their real and vast pre-eminence, and expose themselves to final and eternal misery.

V. 22. Wherefore, &c. In the midst of all this disappointment and vexation, the best thing that a man can do, is to "exercise himself to have a conscience void of offence towards God and man:" returning to God through Jesus Christ, relying on his mercy, and rejoicing to do his duty. This will give him a humble confidence and a joyous hope, which is his present portion and highest of his future happiness. And he will not want to know, as indeed it would be vain to inquire of any one concerning, the things which are coming upon him, in the intervening years or days of his life.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

In this changing world our proper comfort lies in the expectation of unchangeable happiness in heaven. How wretched then are they, who have nothing to hope, and every thing to fear, beyond the grave! In that world, to which the believer is hastening, there will be no more death or sickness, no more plucking up or breaking down, no weeping and mourning, no losing or scattering, no hatred, envy, or war; but eternal peace, and love, and joy complete, yet still receiving continual accessions. Whilst we continue on this stormy ocean, let us cast anchor within the vail: and let us seize the favourable opportunities of every good purpose and work. As the time for our being born is past, the time for us to die is speedily approaching: in the interval there is a reason allotted to us to work out our own salvation, and to do good to our brethren. If it had not been for sin, there would not have been a time for death; if it had not been for Christ, we must have died without hope. Our sins bring upon us all our personal, domestic, and public calamities; to Christ we owe all our comforts. Let us then learn to acknowledge the hand of God in all the varying scenes of life; to submit to his justice without murmuring, to humble ourselves for sin, to seek the supports of his grace, and to hope for returning comforts: if he please to pluck up, or to break down our prosperity, and to wither our graces; if he call us to mourning and weeping, to rending our garments and girding ourselves with sackcloth; if he mar our enjoyments, bereave us of our substance, or expose us to embittered enemies. And on the other hand, if the Lord be
CHAPTER IV.

The miseries arising from oppression; and the vanity resulting from envy, idleness, and arrogance, 1—8. The advantages of friendship and social affections, 9—12. The vanity of royal dignity, through the folly of princes, and the fickleness of their subjects, 13—16.

So I returned, and considered all the oppressions that are done under the sun: and beheld the tears of such as were oppressed, and they had no comforter; and on the side of the oppressors there was power; but they had no comforter.

Wherefore I praised the dead who are already dead, more than the living which are yet alive.

Yea, better is he than both they which hath not yet been, who hath not seen the evil work that is done under the sun.

pleased to plant, to build up, and to heal our wounds, to give us peace, and cause us to rejoice, if he send accresions of property, or of kind friends, or render relative endeavours comfortable to us: let us beware that we do not trust the transient calm; but in the day of prosperity let us prepare for adversity, in the time of love for vanity, in the time of peace for war, in the time of health for sickness, and in the time of life for death. In the mean while let us receive the present comfort with gratitude, and bear the transient affliction with patience; let us diligently attend to the duty, and accommodate ourselves to the circumstances of the present time; and expect our happiness, not from this changing world, but from an unchangeable God. But if we reverse this order, it will still recur to be inquired, What profit hath he that worketh in that wherein he laboureth? Nay, the more men see of the world around them, the more they will witness the travail which God hath given to the sons of men to be exercised in it. Yet let us not rashly censor the appointments of God: every thing which he hath planned and executed, is perfectly fitted to its time, place, and occasion, and is beautiful in its reason. But in such a world as this, where our needful employments are so many, and with such hearts as ours, which are so needlessly sat upon and careful about earthly things, no wonder that we are not able to find out all the works of God, and to see the reasons and glory of them. To believe, obey, and submit, is our part on earth; and not, to comprehend the deep things of God. We should be daily occupied in doing good to all around us, as we have ability; and this would render our own temporal comforts doubly sweet to us: for indeed it is the only good in them. We should also avoid the extremes of avarice and extravagance, in the use of our substance; and should continually seek wisdom and grace from God, that we may properly eat and drink, and enjoy the good of all our labour, without disquieting ourselves about the everlasting and most perfect appointments of God. Rather let us fear before him, and reverence his wisdom, justice, and power; being assured that he deals with all his creatures in every age by the same unerring rule. Leaving these matters therefore to the Lord, we should take the place, and do the work, assigned us. Nor need we desire eminent stations, which so often tempt men to atrocious wickedness, and expose them to severe judgments. And should we not only witness, but suffer from, iniquity being found in the place of judgment, we need not faint; for the time of deliverance for the oppressed, and for ventence on the oppressor, will soon arrive. Rather let us pray for our poor besotted fellow-sinners around us, that the Lord would show them their real condition, and not leave them to their wickedness, as brute beasts that have no understanding. Surely the case of those who are so desirous of living like beasts, that the height of their hopes and wishes is, that they may die like them, is most deplorable. And yet must they be disappointed in this their grovelling expectation. Indeed, as to the body, there is no great difference at present; both must return to the dust. But who can describe the difference, when the breath of man leaves the body, and enters upon an eternal state of unmixed joy or sorrow; whilst the beast dies to live no more? Though we cannot fully explain this matter, yet, believing the word of God, we may know enough to convince us, that our business on earth is to seek future happiness; and embracing the salvation of the Gospel, to be zealous of, and rejoice in, all those good works which are the evidences of faith and love. If we choose this as our portion, we shall be safe for eternity: though no one can tell us what shall befall us hereafter during life; or what will come upon our family or country after we are gone.

NOTES.

CHAP. IV. V. 1—3. Solomon returned from his survey of the general condition of mankind, as in many things resembling that of the beasts that perish; to consider the case of the oppressed, who are rendered more wretched than the beasts by the cruelty of their oppressors. He had doubtless often had occasion to behold, and re-dress the oppression committed in his own kingdom, by the rich and powerful on the poor servant and labourer, on the widow and the orphan. This led him to reflect on those who were crushed by more potent tyrants, and who were destitute of any comforter or helper; as none would dare to appear for them, lest they should share their injuries from that power which was employed to commit and maintain injustice. This view of human misery made him ready to conclude, that it was better to die than to live in such a wretched world; nay, that it would have been better never to have been born, to witness and experience the afflictions which arise from man's wickedness all over the earth. And so doubtless it would, if it were not for the comforts of religion and the hope of a better world; which the preacher all along meant to except from his general charge of vanity.
V. 4—6. Turning his thoughts another way, Solomon next considered the labour and pains which men take in useful undertakings, and in rendering important services to mankind. Thus they often become renowned, eminent, and prosperous; but then this excites envy and opposition, the effects of which not only balance all the temporal advantages of their right work. (Note, Prov. xxvii. 4.) Others, seeing the vexation which they meet with in an active course, foolishly expect to find more satisfaction in sloth and inactivity. Thus their strength and faculties lie dormant, and they often reduce themselves to pining distress: and yet some of them will assume an air of wisdom and urde, that "Better is a handfull of quietness, than both hands full with travail and vexation of spirit," which, though true of him who prefers quietness in doing his duty with a narrower income, to greater abundance with contention; yet applies not to the case of the sluggard. His quietness is a mortal disease both of body and soul; his hand full is wretched and wifful poverty; and the honest labour, or cumberous plenty, is better than his quietness and starving. Pride, ambition, emulation, envy, and hatred reign so uncontrollably among all orders and ranks, all trades and professions; that when a man has taken a deal of honest pains, in some useful work, and brought it to perfection: instead of gaining credit by it, his neighbours look away at him; nay, he is disfigured and traduced by those who cannot or will not imitate, (but only carp at) his ingenious labours. Some are so absurdly foolish, as to sit down in perfect idleness. A wise resolution this! to do nothing because others do ill! (Hp. Patrick.)

V. 7, 8. Solomon next considered the case of one that went into the opposite extreme. A single man, without any associate, for fear of the expenses of a family; one who not only has no children, but is without any near relation; and yet who toils and labours incessantly all his days; who is full of care about scraping together and hoarding riches; who grows griping and penurious as he becomes wealthy and old; who lives in the meanest manner, and yet grudges himself every morsel, bereaving his soul of good; and who has not sense to ask himself, for whom he thus labours and starves? to whom it does not occur to inquire, whose slave am I, seeing work and fare so hard? and who is to reap the fruit of all my toil, and penuriousness? The distant relations, or strangers, who inherit such a man's wealth, never thank him for it; for they know that he would not leave it to them, if he could keep it any longer.

V. 9—12. From the folly and misery of the solitary miser, the wise man takes occasion to point out the advantages of friendship, or marriage, and a social life. Two may live more comfortably together, if suitably paired, than one can alone; and their satisfaction in each other's company will be a good reward for the additional labour that it may occasion: for surely he has more satisfaction in life, who labours hard to maintain a wife and children whom he loves, than the miser has in his absurd care and toil, and every kind of honest and faithful friendship, and productive of some solace, amidst the ills of life. This proposition is illustrated by some familiar cases. If a man travel alone, and any accident befal him, he may be lost for want of help; but when two journey together, the one is at hand to help and take care of the other. When two lie together, they communicate heat to each other; but either of them alone might have been incumbered by the cold. And two, or more, united together, may withstand an assaillant, who would have prevailed against all of them separately; even as a three-fold, or twisted, cord is not readily broken, except by uniting it. This is applicable both to the benefits of common friendship, and to the communion of the saints. Lamentable is the condition of him who hath no friend or companion to reach out a charitable hand to him, when he falls, suppose into a pit; none to comfort him when he is sick; none to testify to his innocence when he is defamed; or, which is worse, to restore him, when, by his own carelessness and negligence, he falls into sin. (Hp. Patrick.)
CHAPTER IV.

16 There is no end of all the people, the evil of the earth is full of the oppressions of the powerful, even of all that have been before them: they also that come after shall not rejoice in him. Surely this also is vanity and vexation of spirit.

1:3 I considered all the living, which walk under the sun, with the second child that shall stand up in his stead.

proceeded to show the vanity of royal dignity. Frequently they, who should be most revered for authority and seniority, are very ignorant and imprudent; yet are too proud to be admonished or counselled: and thus they involve themselves and their people in great calamities. But a nation had better be governed by one of mean extraction, and in his youth, who is wise enough to take advice and prefer good counsel; than by such an old and foolish king. Or rather, a poor youth, who behaves prudently, is more respectable and happy than he. Wisdom indeed may bring a man even from a prison to the greatest dignity, as it did Joseph; and then his former obscurity is no reproach to him: but one born to inherit a throne, may become poor and distressed by his misconduct. 'Folly makes the other impatient of all advice; and the older he is, the more obstinate he grows: because as his kingly dignity, he fancies, authorizes him to do what he lists; so his age gives him a privilege of knowing better than any 'body can tell him.' (Bp. Patrick.)

Probably Solomon forebode, that this might be the case with Rehoboam, as it afterwards in some measure proved.

V. 15, 16. These verses state that Solomon observed the general propensity of men to prefer the heir-apparent, as we say, to the reigning prince, however wise and excellent. This he remarked to be the way of all the living, who walk under the sun: they are fond of changes, and pay court to the king's son, though comparatively a child, in preference to the king; as he is second, or next to him, and is shortly to stand up in his stead. Probably Solomon observed this in the case of Rehoboam, with some uneasiness. But he remembered also that the people were continuing the conduct of all that had been before them; of them for instance, who raised a rebellion against David, in favour of Absalom: and however fond they might be of his successor now, they that should come after would not rejoice in him, but choose another favourite instead of him, still worshipping the rising and neglecting the setting sun: and this rendered royalty, however well supported, ‘vanity and vexation of spirit.’ So this young prince, who is so followed with such vast applause, must not think that it will last always; but they that come after will take as little delight in him, as the present generation doth in his father; and when he grows old, court his son, after the same fashion, as they now do him being young.

(Bp. Patrick.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1–3.

Wherever we turn our eyes, or our thoughts, we see melancholy proofs of the wickedness and misery of mankind; who, as if the evils of life and death were insufficient, seem to employ all their ingenuity and industry in creating trouble to themselves and each other! So that everywhere under the sun, (excepting good government always)
CHAPTER V.

Cautions against those things, which render men’s devotions and vows vain and sinful; and against being stumbled by beholding oppression, 1—8. The vanity of riches, in the getting, keeping, or loss of them, 9—17. The proper use of them in the fear of God the only remedy against this vanity, 18—20.

K EEP thy foot when thou goest to the house of God, and be more ready to hear, than to give the sacrifice of fools: for they consider not that they do evil.

2 Be not rash with thy mouth, and let not thine heart be hasty to utter any thing before God: for God is in heaven, and thou upon earth: therefore let thy words be few.

3 For a dream cometh through the multitude of business; and a fool’s voice is known by multitude of words.

4 For God, are advanced from the bondage of sin and Satan, to the glorious kingdom that cannot be moved! And how miserable and contemptible they, however rich and great, who have their good things here; and then for their sins are condemned to everlasting punishment in hell! Indeed the most politic and successful princes find little comfort in their dignity and reputation. The inconstancy of the people, who soon forget their services; the domesticque disguises, to which they are far more exposed than their inferiors; and the parties and rivalry, which are thus excited and fomented, commonly fill their closing scene with vexation and bitterness, as every reflecting reader of history must have often remarked. This has been the case in every age: and men must lay their account with it, however at first they may be casued and extolled: and “surely his also is vanity and vexation of spirit.” But the willing subjects of Jesus, our king, from age to age, rejoice in him alone, and they will love him more and more to all eternity. May all the living that walk under the sun hear of him, trust in him, and obey him, henceforth to the end of the world. In this alone there is no vanity and vexation.

NOTES.

CHAP. V. V. 1—3. Solomon meant by his whole argument, to show, that every thing was vanity except true religion: but here he cautions his readers against those mistakes, which render even religious duties vain and worthless.

—Religion is the only remedy indeed, the only comfort we have against all the troubles to which we are subject in this world: but such is the vanity of mankind, they spoil their very remedy, and take away all the virtue of that which should be their support, turning it into a mere ceremony, whilst their minds remain impure, and without any true sense of God.” (By. Patrick.) Every one indeed ought to attend the house and ordinances of God: but it should be done with holy awe and reverence, shown by the customary external expressions: as Moses was commanded to uncover his feet, when on holy ground. The first care of all, who would acceptably worship God, should be to hear, and learn how he would be worshiped; that they may not, in a precipitate manner, affront him with a hypocritical or superstitious service, or with sacrifices, oblations, or ceremonies, without a correspondent frame of mind. These are the sacrifices of fools; who, through ignorance and carelessness, do evil and are not aware of it, but suppose they recommend themselves to God, when in fact they greatly provoke him. Men should therefore avoid rashness in their professions, petitions, or vows; they should not hastily speak before God in every thing which occurs to their thoughts. They should remember his greatness and purity, who dwelleth in heaven, that high and holy place, and their own impiety and sinfulness: They ought to avoid useless and vain repetitions; and express themselves in plain language and with perspicuous brevity, such as springs from the heart, and not such as is affected and studied. All kinds of copious prayers cannot be condemned, but only those that are unmeaning; such as the vain repetitions of the heathen who expected to be heard for their much speaking; (1 Kings xxviii. 26—29;) the pater-nosters, and other forms used by the Papists, and the long prayers of the Pharisees. These verbose supplications show certain traces of a man's ignorance and folly, and that he has confused, false, and dishonorable thoughts of God and religion; even as the inconveniences of a dream often show the multitude of cares and employments which occupy our waking hours. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 4—7. Great cautain is requisite to avoid sin and vexation in religious vows. In general, a man should pay his vows, if lawful, however inconvenient it may be, and that without delay; for the contrary is extremely foolish and displeasing to God, who is mocked and trifled with; and it is much better to avoid all vows, than thus to infringe them. If a man had vowed any thing rashly, his mouth had given occasion to his flesh, or his corrupt nature, to commit sin; and he would have to plead, either before the great Angel of the Covenant, (whom some think to be meant;) or before the priest, the messenger of God, or those angels which witness our conduct, that his vow was an impropriety or a mistake. This would provoke the Lord to frown upon him, and prevent the success of his undertakings: and why should a man expose himself to such severe rebukes, by needlessly vow ing, or by distrustfully refusing to pay his vow s? Men should therefore be watchful over their tongues; for as divers vanities are found in the multitude of dreams; so assuredly will much sin and folly intermingle with the words of him who speaks a great deal, and without due deliberation and reflection. But the proper remedy of these evils consists in the habitual, reverential fear of God, as present with and searching the hearts of all men. 'Cause not thyself to sin by vowing rashly; as they do who make a vow to live unmarried, and such like.' (Note, iv. 1—3.) It is a great discouragement to those who fear God, to behold the successful villany that is done on earth; especially by the violent perversion of law and justice, which the governors of kingdoms and provinces commit, in defiance of God and man. But they should consider: that though the Lord regardeth, and is higher than the highest of these oppressors; yet he doubtless hath wise reasons for permitting these things, and knows how to educe good from them, and in due season will execute judgment upon the most haughty and pernicious sinners. Nor ought such transactions to excite greatest amazement, as they are the effects of man's depravity and Satan's power; and it is a part of the Lord's present system, to permit them to take place, for the fuller display of his own glory; though he confines them by certain limitations, which they cannot exceed. The last cause seems to mean the holy angels, the ministers of Providence; who are far higher and mightier than the most powerful tyrants, whom they are often employed to crush and destroy, though even they be as nothing before the King of kings. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 9—12. The productions of the earth are intended for all men, and to be, in some degree, enjoyed by them, and the king depends as much on them as his poorest subject, and must perish if they were withheld: so that agriculture should above all things be encouraged. Thus our natural wants may be supplied and satisfied; but covetousness is an insatiable lust. If a man have ever so much, he grasps after more; or if he should at length give over his pursuit, he finds himself no more satisfied and happy than he was. His servants and dependents are commonly increased in CHAPTER V.

B. C. 975.

13 There is a sore evil which I have seen under the sun, namely, riches kept for the owners thereof to their hurt.

14 But those riches perish by evil travaile: and he begetteth a son, and there is nothing in his hand.

15 As he came forth of his mother’s womb, naked shall he return to go as he came, and shall take nothing of his labour, which he may carry away in his hand.

16 And this also is a sore evil, that in all points as he came, so shall he go: and what profit hath he that hath laboured for the wind?

17 All his days also he eateth in darkness, and he danceth not; and what profit is to the name of the world, that the sons of men walk therein?

18 Behold that which I have seen: it is good and comely for one to eat and to drink, and to enjoy the good of all his labour that he taketh under the sun all the days of his life, which God giveth him: for it is his portion.

19 Every man also to whom God hath given riches and wealth, and hath given power to eat thereof, and to take his portion, and to rejoice in his labour, this is the gift of God.

20 For he shall not much remember the days of his life; because God answereth him in the joy of his heart.

Proportion to his estate: he has no other advantage except that he can look over all of it, and say, "This is mine." And this very thing, if he be covetous, is his torment, that he sees so many mouths at eat his cost." (Bp. Patrick.) But the poor labourer sleeps more soundly, whether he have a plentiful or a scanty meal, than the rich man can do; whose cares, fears, suspicions, intemperance, or want of exercise, often spoil his rest, and render his nights as uneasy as his days are insipid.

V. 13—17. It might also be observed in every part of the world, that men bestow great pains to hoard up riches to their own hurt. Their wealth often invites robbers, who alarm or perhaps murder them; or it exposes them to malicious prosecutions. Thus many have been excepted from acts of indemnity, merely because the prevailing party desired to seize their immense possessions. And in various ways riches are often torn from a man with as much anguish as they were got with labour and care; or his children waste them by their extravagance; and he has the vexation to see, that they will he poor notwithstanding all his labour to make them rich. But whether this be the case or not, when a man dies, he can take nothing away with him, and he leaves the world as naked as he came into it; so that he spends his life in labouring for that which he can no more appropriate than the wind; he wears away his days in labour, anxiety, and uneasiness, without any comfort even in his natural enjoyments; he ends his days in sorrow and freewill; and the sickness of his body is attended by the sense of God’s wrath in his soul, and the dread of a future reckoning; and what a sore evil is a life thus spent and ended, and such an entrance into the eternal state!

V. 18—20. (Note, ii. 24—26.) Whosoever he be that God hath blessed, not only with plenty of worldly goods, but with such a noble and generous mind, that he is not the slave, but truly the master of them; being able to enjoy them innocently, with cheerfulness and delight in doing good to others; let him be very thankful to almighty God for so great a happiness. He that is thus favoured, will not think life irksome: but (forgetting all past toils, and taking no care of the future,) spend his time most pleasantly; because God hath given him his darkness, and he hath much sorrow and wrath with his sickness.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—7.

It is no wonder that our outward possessions and enjoyments should be so vain and vexatious; when our depraved hearts generally render even our religious worship useless to ourselves, and dishonourable to God. And if this only source of solid comfort be perverted to vanity, how great must be that vanity! yet, alas! not only mere hypocrisy or ostentatious Pharisees provoke God by their vain show of piety: but we have all cause to be humbled and ashamed on this account. How do our wandering imaginations, our want of reverence, faith, love, gratitude, and spirituality, and the incursions of pride and vanity, render our attendance on divine ordinances little better than a mere lip-labour, or the sacrifice of fools! This should teach us to prepare for the service of God, and to go with cheerful, yet with solemn steps, into his more immediate presence; to be of a teachable spirit; and studious so to learn his will, that we may not be inconsiderately do evil in his sacred worship; to recollect who and where we sinful creatures are, and who that God is, unto whom we speak: that the filial boldness, with which we come to his throne of grace, may not degenerate into an irreverent familiarity. We should also remember, that we do not confess our sins, or our obligations, or make known our requests before the Lord, for his information; but in order to bring our minds in a humble dependent frame, and to render him that honour which belongs unto him. We should therefore watch against rashness and presumption: we should think, before we speak to the Lord, that our words may correspond to our desires, and accord with his promises: we should be very watchful against ostentation in public services, as if, by copiousness and eloquence of words, we meant to attract the attention or admiration of men, or thought we should prevail with God. No unmeaning repetitions, that were ever used in formal worship, can be more offensive to God, than such pompous declamations, even in the use of extempore prayer: the confusion of a dream is not more impertinent, the vain babbling of a fool is not more disgusting to judicious and pious minds, than such an affected multiplicity of words in religious worship. A few broken sentences from a humble heart, spoken in reverence, and with pious affections, whilst the speaker is ashamed of his own poor performance, are more honorable and acceptable to God, than those affected words which are often greatly admired by men, but in reality are a compound of arrogance, ignorance, and hypocrisy. Our words should then be few, except as the heart is fraught with large and manifold desires, which struggle for utterance, and which no words can fully express. We have also great cause to guard against rashness in religious words: and, in those things which are not previously our bounden duty, we should never say without consideration, counsel, and prayer: we should be satisfied that the thing engaged for be lawful, in our own power, no injury to others, and fit for us to perform, however circumstances may vary; otherwise we shall be tempted to delays and evasions, which will manifest our own folly, and provoke the Lord to anger; we shall fall into temptations and snares; and when we should be performing our vows, we shall be seeking excuses, before God or man, or in our own conscience, why we should violate them. But however this may escape human observation, the Lord will not be trifled with, and manifold disappointments and losses in every undertaking may at length make us sensible, that it would have been better for us to have paid what we had vowed. Let us then remember, that we must give an account of every unprofitable word at the day of judgment; and, that when we give an unbounded license to our tongues, we might as well expect a multitude of dreams without any incoherence, as that our discourse should be without wickedness and mischief: and especially let us seek to have our hearts possessed with the fear of God, and delivered from the fear of man or desire of his applause.

V. 8—20.

In this present world we must expect to behold, and perhaps to suffer, the oppression of the wicked, and their violence and perversion of law and equity. But the Lord will carry his people through their troubles, and execute vengeance on their adversaries. "For He that is higher than the highest, regardeth, and there be higher than they." Let us then pity and help the oppressed, as we have power; but neither envy nor fear successful oppressors: may we should pity and pray for them also, as long as there are any hopes of their escaping the damnation of hell. The rich and great are apt to think themselves entitled to every thing, and independent of every one: yet they are not only equally dependent on the Lord for daily bread, with the poorest beggar; but they are more dependent on the labour of the ploughman, than he is on their wealth. The goodness of providence is more equally distributed, than appears to a superficial observer. The most plentiful productions of the earth are in reality most valuable: the king needs them, and the poor share them; and these relish their mean morsel, better than he does his luxuries. Thus far the profit of the field is satisfying, as the proper provision for our bodies; but no riches or abundance can supply the wants, or satisfy the desires of our souls; the attempt must be for ever vain and vexatious: nay, the increase of riches increases cumber and care more than enjoyment; except a man's mind can be filled by his eyes poring upon securities, surveying his acres, or viewing his hoarded gold. And it is evident in fact, that the poor labourer sleeps sweetly without fear or disturbance, whilst the abundance of the rich will not suffer him to sleep. For the more men covet wealth, the greater anxiety must they feel, when they consider its uncertainty. The riches, that have been gathered and hoarded by the toil and penury of many years, are oft swept away by some unforeseen calamity: or a covetous man, by grasping at some still larger advantage, loses all in some ruinous project; nay, whilst his riches perish by such evil travail, he often loses his life attempting to preserve them, or breaks his heart for very vexation at his disappointment; or his children spend all, and become as poor, as if he had neither laboured nor saved. And whether the rich man do, or do not, survive his wealth, a coffin, a shroud, and a grave, all given him at the option of his survivors, will shortly be his whole inventory; and in other respects, as he came, so shall he go, except that he must give an account for all his conduct at the tribunal of God. What a sore evil then is this, for a rational creature to spend his life in incessant toil, care, and uneasiness; and to live in dejection and fretfulness all his life; and then to end his days in sorrow and wrath, as well as with sickness and dying pains! Having therefore food and raiment, let us be therewith content; and let us cheerfully use what God giveth us, as the fruit of our labour, for the ends for which he bestowed it. If he pleases that we should be poor, let us be patient and satisfied; we may be safer and happier in that situation than if we were richer: and if God gives a man riches, let him remember to receive them from his hand, and to use them to his glory, and to rejoice in doing the duties of his station. It is a singular mercy, when God giveth a man wealth, and enableth him to use it in a becoming and useful manner, taking his portion with moderation and thankfulness; avoiding avarice and extravagance, and doing good according to his ability. This wisdom cometh from above; they who desire it must ask it of God, and they who have it will praise him for it. And if God answer a man's prayers and expectations in those better things, which are, and ought to be, the joy of his heart; whether he have much or little, he will not make great account of the shortness and vanity, or the pleasures or pains of this life; or perplex himself about the past, or the future: seeing his heart and treasure are out of the reach of the changes of this lower world, in a kingdom which can never be moved.
of restless desires; the frailty of man; and the emptiness and uncertainty of his enjoyment, 9—12.

THERE is an evil which I have seen under the sun, and it is common among men: 2 A man to whom God hath given riches, wealth, and honour, so that he wanteth nothing for his soul of all that he desireth; yet God giveth him not power to eat thereof, but a stranger eateth it: this is vanity, and it is an evil disease.

3 If a man beget an hundred children, and live many years, so that the days of his years be many, and his soul be not filled with good, and also that he hath no burial; I say, that an untimely birth is better than he.

4 For he cometh in with vanity, and departeth in darkness, and his name shall be covered with darkness.

5 Moreover he hath not seen the sun, nor known any thing: this hath more rest than the other.

6 Yea, though he live a thousand years twice told, yet hath he not seen any good: do all not go to one place?

7 All the labour of man is for his mouth, and yet the appetite is not filled.

8 For what hath the wise more than the fool? what hath the poor, that knoweth to walk before the living?

NOTES.

CHAP. VI. V. 1. The former part of this chapter is a continuation of the subject, with which the preceding chapter concludes; namely, the vanity of riches, without a heart or power to make a proper use of them; which was then, and is still, a very common evil under the sun.

(NOTES, v. 13—20.)

V. 2. "He showeth that it is the plague of God, when a rich man hath not a liberal heart to use his riches."—The expressions by which the rich man's prosperity is described, are very emphatical. "To those two words, riches and wealth, he here adds a third, viz. glory; which is more comprehensive than the other, including all those good things, which may do a man credit, and raise him to a splendid condition." It denotes any thing that hath weight in it, and makes a man to be valued." (Gen. xxxi. 1.) "Yet so great is his ingratitude to God, and his uncharitableness to men; that for these and other sins, God denies him the power to enjoy these gifts of his bounty." (Bp. Patrick.) The passage indeed may be explained of sickness and bodily infirmities, by means of which a man is deprived of all comfort from his wealth and dignity; and his attendants and physicians reap more advantage from his estate than he does. Yet it rather seems to refer to the miser's penuriousness, and to the suspicions and distastes which he imbibes respecting his children and relations; through which he attaches himself to strangers, who devour his substance, either during his life or after his death, to the injury of his children and family. This is a diseased state of the mind, and renders a man very miserable.

V. 3-5. The most flourishing family, and the longest life with increasing prosperity, cannot make that man happy, whose soul is not filled with good? "If he can never have enough, as we see often that the covetous man falleth into crimes that deserve death, or is murdered, or drowned, or hanged himself, or such like, and so lacketh his honour of burial. Nay, if a man have no heart to his abundance, and thus lives uncomfortably; and if he be treated with disrespect at his death, and not buried decently according to his rank, either through the avarice of his heirs, or their contempt of his character; he may justly be deemed more unhappy and dishonoured than even an untimely birth, which seems indeed to come into the world in vain, and leaves it in obscurity and disgrace, and has no name to be remembered on earth; which hath not seen the sun, or enjoyed any pleasure, or known any thing; yet hath this embryo more rest than the other. It had rest in the womb, and now rests in the grave; its pain was transient, its unhappiness a mere negation of pleasure, and it lived not to contract guilt. Whereas the other had little pleasure in life, and endured much vexation, contracted much guilt, and departed with disgrace to give an account of it at God's tribunal.

V. 6. Should the joyless, vexatious life of such a man be lengthened out to above twice the age of Methuselah, it would only prolong his miseries: and he must go down at last to the dust, like the child that died in the womb. The grave is exclusively meant, for in the eternal world there are distinct places for the righteous and the wicked; as Solomon evidently believed, or he would not have said, that "the righteous hath hope in his death." (Bp. Smith.)

V. 7, 8. Though the labour of man as to this present world is chiefly bestowed about the supply of his bodily wants, and the satisfaction of his animal desires; yet the very appetite for food cannot be durably satisfied, but still craving more and more with each returning day; whilst the relish of it continually grows more languid. In this respect the most learned, ingenious or sagacious man, has no advantage above the very idiot; who by one means or other gets food, and relishes it as well as the other. Nay, the poor man, who knows how to suit himself to his station, and to act prudently whilst he continues among the living, has as much comfort as the richest; and in what then is there any real disadvantage? "What hath the poor that knoweth to walk before the living?" Even the same as the rich; namely, a supply of food, &c. to satisfy his natural wants and appetites, which is all that the rich can have, notwithstanding their abundance."
9 Better is the sight of the eyes than the wandering of the desire: this is vanity and vexation of spirit.

10 That which hath been is named already, and it is known that it is man: neither may he contend with him that is mightier than he.

11 Seeing there be many things that increase vanity, what is man the better?

V. 9. The sight of the eyes seems to mean present enjoyment; for it is a pleasant thing for the eyes to behold the light. This is preferable to the restless desires, imaginations, and schemes, that engross men's minds, spoil their present comfort, and create them abundance of vexation.

V. 10. The whole of what man can obtain of wisdom, power, renown, or prosperity, has already been declared; but the word man or Adam, implies his condition in his best estate; as taken from and returning to the dust of the earth, and condemned to spend his days and eat his bread in sorrow, and in the sweat of his brow, till that sentence be executed. And it is in vain to contend with that almighty Judge, who hath passed this sentence upon him, or to endeavour to get it reversed. Although a man grow famous, yet it is known that he is but a man: and he cannot contend with him that is stronger than himself. (Bp. Hall.)

V. 11. Seeing the many things, which men pursue on earth, only form an increase of vanities: what is man the better for all his worldly devices and inventions? Who indeed can so much as tell what is good for man, all the days of his vain life, which passeth as a shadow? Or who can inform him of what will hereafter befall him, or of what will take place after his death, or become of his family?

Those four things, in which men place their happiness, wisdom, pleasure, honour and wealth, draw so many, and so great inconveniences after them, as sufficiently demonstrate, a man is still to seek for the satisfaction of his desires, if he look no further. (Bp. Patrick.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

There are not only many and sore evils and miseries under the sun, but they are common among men; as every careful observer of mankind must know. For it is seen often, that Providence confers on a man a confluence of earthly possessions; so that he wanteth nothing for outward enjoyment, and hath no desire after more substantial good: and yet the Lord leaves him so to his avarice, or his malignant dispositions, that he has no heart to make a comfortable use of them; and by one means or other, they all come into the hands of strangers; and this is vanity and a sore disease. Nay, put the case, that any one have a numerous family, and a good constitution, and live in health and for who can tell a man what shall be after him under the sun?

12 For who knoweth what is good for man in this life, all the days of his vain life which he spendeth as a shadow?

CHAP. VII.

The benefit of a good name; of death above life; and of sorrow and rebuke

B. C. 975.

The earth hath no remembrance, nor the world for evermore; yet shall no name be continued because of the affliction to come. 3 For who knoweth what is good for man in this life, all the days of his vanity, which is vanity? for who can tell a man what shall be after him under the sun?

V. 12. For who knoweth what is good for man in this life, all the days of his vain life which he spendeth as a shadow? (Bp. Knox.)

B. C. 975.

The earth hath no remembrance, nor the world for evermore; yet shall no name be continued because of the affliction to come. 3 For who knoweth what is good for man in this life, all the days of his vanity, which is vanity? for who can tell a man what shall be after him under the sun?
above vain mirth, 1—6. Observations concerning oppression, bribery, pride, anger, and discontent, 7—10. The advantages of wisdom; of accommodating to circumstances, and of avoiding extremes and occasions of offence, 11—22. The dangers to the misser arising from bad women, with Solomon's experience in that respect 23—28. Man created upright, but ruined by his own devices, 29.

A GOOD name is better than much ointment: and the day of death is better than the day of one's birth.

2 It is better to go to the house of mourning, than to go to the house of feasting: for that is the end of all men; and the living will lay it to his heart.

NOTES.

CHAP. VII. V. 1. Solomon now seems to proceed to prescribe the best remedies that can be found, against that vanity to which we are subject; by setting down many wise precepts for our direction, support, and comfort, in a troublesome world. And if we examine the following particulars, we shall find them comprehended in this general direction; the change of our minds, thoughts, and opinions. The doctrines that begin this chapter, are quite opposite to the common opinions of the world. That a good name is to be preferred to precious ointment; and the day of one's death before one's birth-day; mourning before feasting, sadness before laughter; rebukes before commendations; the end of a thing before the beginning of it; a patient suffering spirit, before a stout haughty mind; wisdom before riches, &c. These, and such like, are the maxims of true wisdom and piety, which must be learnt; in order to the settlement of our minds in peace and tranquillity, notwithstanding the vanity that is in all things. (Bp. Patrick.) The beautitudes with which our Lord began his sermon on the mount, are a collection of paradoxes, not wholly dissimilar from those of Solomon, but more complete and comprehensive: on the due understanding and reception of which, the Christian's wisdom, comfort, and usefulness peculiarly depend. (Note, Matt. v. 1—12.)—A reputation for piety and integrity will do far more to render a man agreeable, useful, and comfortable, than the most costly perfumes. (Marg. Ref.) And to a wise and godly man, the day when he leaves this vain world, is happier than that on which he came into it: for the one was the beginning of his sorrows; and the other terminated in the endless felicity. (Note, Prov. xxiv. 1.)

V. 2—6. The day of death is sometimes more useful to a man's survivors, than any day of his life was; as it is more profitable to those houses where there is mourning in for the dead, than to those where feasting and mirth prevail: for death is the end of all men, every one is concerned to consider and prepare for it, and such scenes are calculated to give a serious turn to the mind. So that sorrow may be preferred to laughter: and the dropping countenance which occasions thoughtfulness, though occasioned by sharp trials, and attended by painful conflicts, is a proper medicine for the diseases of the human heart, and is often productive of a happy change. It is therefore a mark of wisdom for a man to go willingly to the house of mourning, at the call of duty, and often to reflect on death and another world; and it is a proof of folly, when nothing is delighted in but mirth and levity. Even rebukes, when wisely given, are far better for the soul than the diversions of ungodly men: for their laughter is a mere transient noise and bustle, which soon expire like the cracking of thorns in the fire, and produces no abiding pleasure or good; but is indeed a mere vanity.

V. 7. A man that is esteemed wise, when he falleth to oppression, becometh like a beast. Thus the tendency of oppressive measures to inflate and bewilder those that use, not those who endure, them, may be meant: and the latter clause may be considered as showing what leads a man, in other respects wise, to oppress his neighbours: namely, a gift or bribe which powerfully corrupts the heart. Yet the former clause is generally understood of the effect produced on the oppressed. It is the more necessary to settle the judgment on right principles; because various events, which must be expected, tend to disturb the mind, and raise tempests in the soul. Thus violent oppression may drive even a man, wise in other respects, to act in the most outrageous manner, as if bereft of understanding. Many have been thus excited to insurrections, and have in consequence been butchered, or executed as rebels: and no human wisdom is sufficient, at all times, to preserve a man in such trying circumstances: nor, even in those cases where a man has, for a time, been thus betrayed into very unwarrantable measures: while, on the other hand, the heritage of a large gift or bribe, unless the heart be established in grace on sound principles, may produce the most fatal effects on those who before seemed well disposed. (Marg. Ref.)
V. 8. 'If noteth their lightness which enterprise a thing, and suddenly leave it off again.'—The conclusion of all things is to be expected, before we judge of them; for whilst they are growing and coming on, they appear with quite a different face, from what they have when they are gone.' (Bp. Patrick.) This may be understood, either of good undertakings, which at first appear unpromising, but in the event, succeed beyond expectation; or of trials, which are grievous for the time, but end well. (Marg. Ref.) 'And better is the low in spirit, than the high in spirit.'—A meek and patient, and a spirited man, that can quietly wait for the end, and event of things, is better than he, that is proud and impatient, who violently rushes on all enterprises, and will needs force his own terms.' (Bp. Hall.) The hardiness of giving up good designs, because of difficulties, as opposed to a steady courageous perseverance, seems also especially intended.

V. 9. 'Anger is an enemy to counsel and advice, and is indeed the property of fools; who out of weakness of mind are familiarly transported with it upon the slightest cause: and not easily appeased again, as wise men are when they happen to be incensed.' (Bp. Patrick.) The same word is sometimes rendered anger, at others distress. Being the excess of grief, as fixing its residence in the heart, and uniting a man for every great and good undertaking, should be guarded against, as well as anger: and with the more care, as it is more plausible and creditable than anger and revenge. A few say, 'I do well to indulge anger; but many say, 'I do well to indulge grief:' and indeed those are often censured, who will not suffer it to settle in their bosoms.

V. 10. We know the evil of former times only by report, but we feel present inconveniences; and therefore are prone to think former times better to live in than the present. But though corrupt nature has shown its malignity in various ways, and has been counteracted by the interposition of God in different degrees, and calamities have been dispensed in greater or less proportion; yet the earth hath always been replenished with iniquity and misery; and it is no proof of wisdom to inquire after the reason of that which probably exists only in men's discomposed imaginations. The sottisage of some speculators concerning a golden age, and the happiness of men in the simple state of nature, are specimens of this unwise method of speaking concerning former times.

V. 11, 12. 'Wisdom is good with an inheritance, as it enables a man to do the more good with it, during his continuance on earth: or wisdom is as good as an inheritance, and more profitable to them that see the sun.' Money may indeed purchase exemption from many trials and dangers: but true wisdom and knowledge alone can deliver a man from destruction, and make him acquainted with the way of life and salvation. (Phil. iii. 8—10.)

V. 13. (Note. i. 15.) Man's wisdom consists in observing, and suitting himself, to God's unalterable appointments. In prosperity he should be joyous, and thankful, and do good: in adversity he should consider, that the righteous Lord is the Author of afflictions, whoever be the instrument; and that sin is the cause of sufferings: he should examine what sin he has committed, that have brought the correction upon him; and how he may obtain support under them, benefit by them, and deliverance from them. He should consider the vanity of the world, and seek a better portion; the evil of sin, and exercise repentance; and the approach of death, and prepare for it. For indeed God hath thus intermingled prosperity and adversity in the lot of man on earth, that he might still feel his dependence on Him, and seek all his happiness from him; without either being lifted up in prosperity, or sinking into despair.

V. 14. By the 'days of his vanity,' Solomon may either mean his life in this vain world, or that part of it when he was seeking happiness in vanity. He had sometimes observed a very upright conscientious man ruined, as to his temporal interests, and even bereft of his life by means of his righteousness; meaning that cruel tyrants put the godly to death, and let the wicked go free: and so a wicked man prolongs his life in his wickedness. Hence he seems to infer that this vain world could not be all, but that a future state of retributions might be expected.
V. 16, 17. Some think that the former of these verses contains the words of an ungodly man; who thinking that sometimes a righteous man is ruined by his righteousness, gravely exhorts men not to be too diligent, exact, and scrupulous, either about the practice or the study of religion; and would probably be prejudicial to their interests, and eventually ruin them. And the latter verse they suppose to be Solomon’s answer to the objector, in which he warns him not to be so daring in his wickedness, lest God should be provoked to cut him off prematurely, and in his sins. But there are many parts or appearances of religion, which may be carried to a pernicious extreme. A man may be over tenacious of insignificant forms, or human inventions: he may pretend to kinds and degrees of righteousness, which the Scriptures do not require, laying much stress on celibacy, fastings, and austerities of various kinds; his boldness and zeal may verge towards rashness and rage; his conscientiousness may degenerate into superstition and scrupulousness; his benevolence into insufficiency; and his candour and good nature into folly; and in affecting to be acquainted with the whole of divine truth, he may become presumptuously curious, and intrude into unrevealed things. Thus many run into extremes, and expose themselves to needless persecution, or to the anger of God. Be not forrigorous in exacting the extremity of justice upon every occasion; neither do thou affect too much semblance and ostentation of more justice than thou hast. Neither do thou arrogate more wisdom to thyself than is in thee. (Bp. Hall.) Some expound the verses of the public administration of justice, which should neither be too severe nor too lenient: but though these extremes may be included among others, yet there is no reason to think they were specially intended. That the affectation or ostentation of extraordinary righteousness or an over-doing in some outward observances, while more essential matters were proportionately neglected, was intended; and not simple, humble, purity and zeal, seems evident from the caution to the reader not to make himself over-wise; that is, “Be not wise in thine own conceit,” or do not intrude into secret things which belong to God. Here affection, or excess, in some particulars, must be meant; and so doubtless in the other clause. It is, however, certain that we cannot love and serve God too much, or be over-righteous in any thing for which we can produce the warrant of his word: and the other extreme, of presumptuous and over-much wickedness, is vastly more common and ruinous.

V. 18. It is profitable to lay hold, and keep hold, of both these counsels, and to avoid all extremes; and he who fears God, will be preserved from these dangers and snares, or extricated out of them.

V. 19, 20. The prudent precautions and contrivances of one wise man may do more towards the preservation of a city, than the power of ten mighty men. Or rather, true wisdom gives a strength and fortitude to the soul, which far surpasses all natural courage, by leading a man to trust in God for protection. And this confidence is warranted, even though there be no righteous man on earth, whose good actions are perfectly free from sin; seeing God deals with all believers according to his covenant of mercy and grace in Jesus Christ.

V. 21, 22. The consideration of which frailty is useful many ways, to teach us gentleness towards those who do us injuries. (Tit. iii. 1-3.) (Bp. Patrick.) These verses are also a most important counsel, how to avoid the vexation of this vain world. When men are in a passion, or actuated by envy, they will speak very provoking things; and they, who notice them, will be continually emboiled, nay, their very servants will be a perpetual vexation to them. On one occasion or other they may speak disrespectfully, utter slanders, or wish evil to some one, and this may be over-heard and reported, and create much confusion, when perhaps it was only a hasty word, without much meaning. For if a man watches his heart, when he is vexed and fretful, he will find in numerous instances a propensity to speak such words, or vent such wishes, respecting others, not excepting even his friends and superiors.
27 Behold, this have I found, saith the Preacher, counting one by one, to find out the account; 28 Which yet my soul seeketh, but I find not; one man among a thousand have I found; but a woman among all those have I not found.

29 Lo, this only have I found, that God hath made man upright; but they have sought out many inventions.

V. 23—28. These practical matters Solomon had proved by wisdom; but he humbly owned, that he had greatly failed of his determined purpose of being wise. Many things he found himself incapable of investigating or comprehending; and in his earnest search into the nature and reason of things, and to discover the wickedness of men's ignorance, carelessness, and impurity, and of their vain mirth and mad intemperance, he had found himself betrayed into much folly; especially he had been miserably deluded by unprincipled women, to the unspeakable anguish of his heart. All imaginable stratagems and artifices were employed by them to ensnare men in wickedness, and all efforts to hold them in bondage. (Notes, &c. 1 Kings xi.) Solomon here speaks very contritely of his own misconduct; and doubtless was delivered out of this snare of Satan. Yet he, and he alone, who habitually aimed to please God, could expect to escape this danger, into which the careless sinner would fall probably to rise no more. Again Solomon observed, with surprise, that, when he looked over his courtiers and his subjects, one by one, as far as their conduct fell under his inspection, in order to make out the number of truly pious and honest persons among them, he could find a few men of this stamp, at least one of a thousand: but a woman among all those (that is, among his thousand wives and concubines) had he not found; not one who was thoroughly chaste, upright, and pious. We are not hence to infer, that Solomon thought there were fewer good women than men: but that he knew that he had not gone the right way to find the virtuous woman, when he deviated so widely from the original law of marriage; and instead of seeking one rational companion, the sole object of his endeared affections, he had collected a vast multitude for magnificence and indulgence. The more valuable part of the sex would willingly form one in such a group: and if any of them were previously well disposed, the jealousies, party-interests, contests, and artifices, which take place in such situations, would tend exceedingly to corrupt them, and render them all nearly of the same character. Solomon therefore here speaks the language of a penitent, warning others against the sins into which he had been betrayed; and not that of a warring satirist, lashing indiscriminately one half of the human species.

V. 29. The royal preacher sums up the whole of his observations on the state and conduct of man, in this verdict. God indeed created man upright, and very good; but Adam having apostatized from him, his posterity have sought out an immense number of inventions, in order to find happiness in the world, and without God, which have only proved so many variations of impurity and iniquity: so that very few pious persons are to be found any where on earth.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—10.

That which is most valuable which is most useful, and enables a man to do the greatest good; a character therefore for probity and discretion is far more desirable, than worldly possessions or pleasures; naught, than the renown of shining talents and splendid performances. But a name in the "book of life" is the only distinction which will prove finally advantageous. If this be our felicity, and our experience and conduct evidence it; we may rejoice in the thoughts of death, as a removal from sorrow and fear, and an entrance upon the full enjoyment of all which we have here loved and thirsted after. Others may be weary of the sufferings of life, and be driven out of the world with a vain hope of terminating their anguish: but the established believer alone is willing to live, though in pain: and willing to die, that he may go to be with Him whom his soul lovest." He finds it profitable to frequent the house of mourning, as it keeps him serious and recollected in the thoughts of his latter end: and he perceives and experiences, that the house of feasting tends to render the mind dissipated, and the conscience either unfeeling or uneasy. Nay, he learns to take more solid pleasure, in sympathizing with and comforting the afflicted, than in scenes of festivity and vain mirth. To be frequently the spectators of affliction, tends also to abate our pride and love of worldly things, and to endear the eternal salvation of the Gospel. Indeed sorrow is more suited than carnal joy to our state in this sinful suffering world: the Redeemer wept; but it is not recorded that he ever laughed, though he rejoiced in spirit. A serious mind is the proper soil for wisdom; consideration is the beginning of repentance and conversion; and that sadness of countenance, which induces consideration, is a suitable medicine to cure the diseases of the heart. By despising these maxims, men detect their own character: for the heart of the wise is in the house of mourning; but the heart of fools is in the house of mirth." He who runs from those scenes in which men may both do and get good, and hurries to places where every thing tends to dissipate reflection, and to keep him from thinking of death till it comes, is likely to live and die without wisdom or hope. And though such rebukes as this of the wise man sound harsh, and give pain, they are far better than the songs, and music, and empty laughter, with which so many waste their lives, as if they were sent into the world to play the fool, to die, and perish. For the whole is like the crackling of thorns under a "pot," a mere shadow of joy, which soon expires, and leaves the soul to darkness and despair. This also is very vanity, and yet the world is full of it! To support the expenses of dissipated and licentious pleasures, wicked men oppress those who are far wiser and better than
and the patience of God, to the increase of wickedness and misery, 9—11. The righteous happy, and the wicked miserable; notwithstanding contrary appearances, 12—15. The unsearchableness of God's counsels and works, 16, 17.

CHAPTER VIII.
A commendation of wisdom, 1. The king must be obeyed, from prudence, and for conscience-sake, 2—5. The misery of men for want of foresight, neglect of opportunities, and the unavoidable stroke of death, 6—8. Men abuse powversity calls us to consideration, repentance, and prayer: and the interchanges of joy and sorrow continually instruct us, that God himself is the only unchangeable Good of his people, and that all else is vanity and uncertainty. Even piety will not exempt us from calamities here: we should therefore count our cost; for in our days of vanity here below, the righteous is gone to his long rest, and the wicked prosper by his wickedness: if, however, we suffer according to the will of God, we are and shall be happy; but we should be careful not to provoke opposition, by unscriptural rigour, by fiery zeal, by severe censure, or dogmatical decisions concerning those who differ from us; and we may leave it to the followers of Antichrist to be zealous for uncommanded austerities and observances. They who are thus righteous over-much, and provoke opposition, do not suffer for righteousness' sake, "but destroy themselves." Let them then be zealous and diligent in the substantial parts of true religion, on which the Scriptures principally insist; and then we shall be in no danger of exceeding: and when we hear men, with profane solemnity, cautioning others against being too bold and active in the service of God; let us caution them not to bring themselves into swift destruction, by their presumptuous crimes. Also, how many die before their time, by the hand of the executioner, and by loathsome diseases, through their own over-much wickedness! The path of truth and duty, however, commonly lies in the middle, at a distance from extremes; and it is good to take hold fast with these cautions: but if we truly fear God, he will conduct us safely on this perilous way, and bring us forth from every snare and the power of every enemy. The wisdom that He giveth is the strength and support of the soul, as it leads the possessors to make "his name their strong Tower;" and though we are such poor polluted sinners, and "there is not a just man on earth, that doeth good, and sinneth not," yet our God will mercifully accept and preserve those who trust in him and desire to do his will. If then he be so bear with us, we ought to bear with each other; but they that take fire at every affront, will be always quarrelling and sinning: and the modern point of honour, tenaciously observed, would be the rule of being always mischievous and always miserable. He that hath most self-knowledge and is most watchful over his own heart, in different circumstances, will make most allowance for others; being conscious that he needs it from them. In proportion as men are careful to approve themselves to God, they will be less anxious to obtain man's approbation: and they who are very desirous of knowing what others say of them, perhaps expecting to hear their own commendations, will generally be disappointed, and hear such things from every quarter as are vexatious and mortifying; for few think so favourably of others, as they do of themselves.

WHO is as the wise man? and who knoweth the interpretation of a thing? a man's wisdom maketh his face to shine, and the boldness of his face shall be changed.

2 I counsel thee to keep the king's commandment, and that in regard of the oath of God.

3 Be not hasty to go out of thy sight: stand not in an evil thing; for he doth whatsoever pleaseth him.

4 Where the word of a king is, there is power: and who may say unto him, What doest thou?

5 Whoso keepeth the commandment shall feel no evil thing: and a wise man's heart discerneth both time and judgment.

6 For he knoweth not which shall be: for who can tell him when it shall be?

V. 23—29.

Various important lessons may be learned in wisdom's school, and will be confirmed by experience: but when we resolve, and even besow, to be wise, we shall often find it far from us. Many things are too deep for us, too fathomable for us to explore. And whilst we apply our hearts to search out wisdom, and the reason of things: our principal study, as sinners, relates to the nature, evil, foolishness, and madness of sin, with its causes, effects, and remedies: but alas! they who should know, those which others, are often themselves led to act very foolishly, and by nothing more than by bad women.

Happy is he whom God preserves from this most fatal error, and all its bitter effects. Would we be so happy, let us seek to walk before God and in his sight, trusting in his grace, and observing all his precepts: for many are left to fall into dreadful evils, to punish them for their pride, hypocrisy, or wickedness in other respects. For such captives of Satan have been delivered by a miracle of mercy, they have more abundant cause for gratitude and thankfulness; and they should be doubly earnest to warn others of their dangers. Many a godly man can with thankfulness acknowledge, that he hath found one prudent and virtuous woman in the wife of his bosom, and aver that he desires no more: but they who have gone as far as they could in Solomon's track, have seldom found one such in all the multitude. This militates against polygamy, as well as every other species of licentiousness: and it is general rule, that they who declare most severely against women, have their chief acquaintance with the most worthless of the sex. In short, the law of God is the rule of our happiness; and the world is miserable, principally because this rule is so universally disregarded and violated. It is most lamentable that so few, either men or women, can be found, who are really the upright servants of God; and that man, whom God made upright, hath found out so many inventions to render himself wicked and miserable. But let us bless God for Jesus Christ, and seek for his special grace, that we may be numbered with his chosen remnant in glory everlasting.

NOTES.

CHAP. VIII. V. 1. Solomon had shown that wisdom is hard to be acquired; that the wisest are in many things mistaken; and that even wisdom is often attended with vexation: yet he here inquires, who is worthy to be compared with the wise man; the man who knows how to interpret the word of God, and to explain the nature and use of surrounding objects; that he may be able properly to direct his conduct as circumstances may require. He observes that wisdom confers a peculiar dignity and comeliness on the possessor, and gives him an ascendency over the minds of men: yes, the boldness of his countenance is doubled, by the consciousness that he understands the subject, or the work, in which he is engaged. Some interpret the last clause to mean, that by wisdom, the security and overbearing confidence of a man's looks are changed into mildness and modesty. The more we know, the more humble we ought to be; and by the cheerfulness and pleasantness of our countenance to invite others to us; and not by our frowning forbid them, or make them afraid to approach us. (Bp. Patrick) Whereas before he was proud and arrogant, he shall become (by wisdom) humble and meek.

V. 2. It hath always been common for subjects, when required to confirm their engagements of loyalty and subjection to the king, with a solemn oath; which should be conscientiously observed. But some think that the words may relate to the limits of a man's obedience: he must obey the king, as far as he can consistently with performing his vows and duties to the King of kings. Take heed to the mouth of the king, and to the word of the oath of God. (Old. Trans.)

V. 3—5. The royal and sacred Teacher here counsels his readers, not to leave the presence of the king under the impulse of anger and passion; or hastily to withdraw from his service; or obstinately to persist in or justify any criminal practices: for a king who has absolute power, need only give the word, and his mandates and menaces would at once be executed; and none would be able or indeed authorized to call him to account, or to say to him, What dost thou? A quiet obedience in all things lawful would best ensure exemption from punishment: and the self-knowledge and experience of a wise man would enable him to discern the proper times and opportunities of remedying abuses, obtaining redress of grievances, and carrying any useful point, by judicious, lenient, and submissive measures; which could not be done by force and violent means, against a superior power.
3 There is no man that hath power over the spirit, to retain the spirit; neither hath he power in the day of death: and there is no discharge in that war; neither shall wickedness deliver those that are given to it.

9 All this have I seen, and applied my heart unto every work that is done under the sun: there is a time when in one man ruleth over another to his own hurt.

10 And so I saw the wicked buried, who had come and gone from the place of the holy, and they were forgotten in the city where they had so done: this is also vanity.

11 Because a sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily; therefore the heart of the sons of men is fully set in them to do evil.

12 Though a sinner do evil an hundred times, and his days be prolonged, yet surely I know that it shall be well with them that fear God, which fear before him:

13 But it shall not be well with the wicked, neither shall he prolong his days which are as a shadow; because he feareth not before God.

V. 6, 7. To accomplish any good design, times must be observed and judgment exercised. But as men, through ignorance or negligence, commonly let opportunities slip, and attempt things unseasonably and injudiciously, they involve themselves in manifold troubles, which might have been avoided: and when the eternal world is taken into the account, it may be said that this is the chief cause of the final misery of mankind. Many things relating to the future cannot be foreknown; nor can any one discover them to us: and about those in which foresight might be of use, men in general are heedless and inattentive. Thus all things seem involved in uncertainty, and no suit-able preparation is made for these events which are coming upon them.

V. 8. The preceding observations are peculiarly applicable to death and its consequences. No foresight can discern the time of a man’s departure: men know, however, that they must die, and yet they seldom prepare for that important season! No man hath power over the spirit, to retain the spirit, or rational soul, when God commands it to quit the body; no authority or bodily strength can stand any man in stead at that hour; no one can decline the conflict with that tremendous enemy, or find any weapon which he may successfully resist him; and the wickedness, by which men set God at defiance, will not by any means defend them from the power of this his messenger and executioner. This is the more common and obvious interpretation: yet some understand the verse in another sense: ‘As good advice to princes, not to abuse their power; but remember, first, That, he hath no dominion over men’s spirits. Next, he cannot command them long; for death will irresistibly seize on him, as well as on the meanest man. Nay, he cannot rule the chances of war; and neither his policy nor his power shall be able to defend him from the vengeance that will be taken of the injustice, cruelty, and impurity, which he exercises in his government.’ (Bp. Patrick.) This is, indeed, one way of applying the text; but the preceding interpretation appears to me more exact and comprehensive.

V. 9, 10. To abate the ambition of some for power, and the envy of others at their success, the wise man here observes, that, in the course of his careful and accurate observations, he had remarked instances, in which one man had exercised absolute authority over others, not only to their hurt, but especially to his own. So that, while he was proceeding in his course of successful tyranny, he came to an unthrifty end; and all his pomp and magnificence ended in a premature death, after which he was soon forgotten, or remembered with contempt and abhorrence. — ‘The place of the holy man,’ may mean the courts of justice, to which the wicked ruler came, and from which he returned, with great state, and surrounded with admiring multitudes; while he professed to administer justice, as the vicegerent of the holy God. But some interpret the clause of the sanctuary, that holy place where sacrifices were offered to God, and where the wicked ruler cloaked his oppression with the appearance of piety. Some understand the latter verse to mean, that wicked rulers often died in peace, and had a splendid funeral; that their wickedness was soon forgotten, even in the place where it had been committed; and that it was indeed a vanity, that an oppressor and tyrant should fare as well as a just and clement prince.

V. 11—13. The denunciations of divine wrath against sinners not being in general executed immediately when the crime is committed, they who perhaps trembled at first, when they committed perjury, robbery, murder, or other crimes, finding no harm come upon them, conclude that they shall escape with impunity, and so grow daring in their iniquity. The wickedness of men abuses the just-suffering of God into an occasion of more desperate crimes, and their hearts are wholly bent to commit evil of every kind. Whereas, if God should cut off every criminal by some tremendous judgment, as soon as ever he had violated his commandments; men would be afraid to run into such excesses, as they now do without fear or shame. But though the ungodly should perpetrate multiplied and aggravated crimes, and their lives should be continued in outward prosperity; yet Solomon assuredly knew that it would be well with those who feared God, and walked before him in his ordinances and commandments, from a reverential awe of his authority, justice, and heart-searching presence: but that it could not be well with the wicked; for they must needs be disquieted with their own passions, and rendered uneasy by remorse and terror: and their most
There is a vanity which is done upon the earth; that there be just men, unto whom it happeneth according to the work of the wicked; again, there be wicked men, to whom it happeneth according to the work of the righteous: I said, that this also is vanity.

Then I commended mirth, because a man hath no better thing under the sun than to eat, and to drink, and to be merry: for that shall abide with him of his labour, all the days of his life, which God giveth him under the sun.

durable prosperity would flee away like a shadow, and expire as a short reprivie: and then just vengeence would come upon them for their contempt of God.

In the course of human affairs upright godly men are often involved in those troubles which are the general effect of vice: being visited with pain, disease, or poverty; or despaired, reviled, and hated: and wicked men prosper and are cared for, as if they were the peculiar favourites of God and man. This observation caused Solomon again to recommend a moderate use of worldly things, with a cheerful and contented mind: this he regarded as the greatest advantage which can be made of all below the sun. Amidst all changes, such a frame of mind, if the result of right principles, might be preserved; and the recompense and solace of all his labours in this evil world.

Solomon records this as the corrupt inference which he drew from the afflictions of the righteous and the prosperity of the wicked; whilst he was a wanderer from God and his service. 'If this be the case,' says he, 'let us indulge ourselves; let us eat, drink, and be merry; for wisdom, and righteousness, have little advantage of folly and madness; and the pleasure of a man hath enjoyed, is the only thing of which he may not be robbed.'

Solomon here records the result of his perplexing researches into the affairs of men, and the purposes and works of God. Examining with great attention into the employments of mankind, he found that many of them scarcely allowed themselves rest or sleep, day or night; and yet their anxiety seemed very unprofitable and vain! And when he inquired with similar diligence into the works of God, he found he could not comprehend or explain them all. He was persuaded that no application or capacity would enable a man to fathom the depths of the divine dispensations, in the government of this lower world. Some think that Solomon meant himself as an anxious inquirer into these subjects, when he mentioned him who 'neither day nor night saw sleep with his eyes,' because he was restless and unwaried in his fruitless investigation.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

None of the rich, the powerful, the honourable, or the accomplished of the sons of men, are equally excellent useful, or happy, with the wise man. For who else can interpret the words of God, or deduce the proper instructions from his truths and dispensations? Wisdom confers the most permanent amiabilities, and engages the most durable esteem; it softens the manners of the severe, and it gives boldness to the timid in the path of duty. May we choose and seek this wisdom, whatever we lose or come short of; and with all our getting, get 'a good understanding, in the way of godliness.' The wise man will obey the king and those in authority, and he will charge others to do the same; he will be conscientious in his subjection, as a part of his obedience to God; and not trifle with oaths or solemn engagements. Common prudence indeed will teach a man to avoid unequal contests with those who are too powerful for him; and to shun exasperating language concerning such as give no account of their conduct. But the wise man will be submissive from higher principles: out of regard to the honour of God and the credit of his profession, he will repress all railing and indecent censures of such as administer public affairs; he will engage in no virulent opposition or hasty measures; he will continue in his place and station; he will not enter upon, much less persist in, any turbulent attempts; nor needlessly expose himself to the anger of the ruler. But if this be wisdom, and the reverse folly; what madness must it be for us weak and dependent creatures, to persist in rebellion against the Almighty, who doth what he pleaseth, who speaketh with power, and giveth no account of his matters! Here especially unreserved subjection is our only wisdom: he that keepeth his commandment, to repent, and to bring forth fruits meet for repentance, shall feel no evil thing: the wise man's heart will discern, that now is the time to seek pardon and peace, and to prepare for the day of final retribution. But, alas, what numbers slip this opportunity; from an erroneous judgment of things present and future, and bring misery upon themselves both in this life and that which is to come! As they cannot foresee, and none can certainly inform them of future events, they think themselves justified in utterly neglecting the preparation for death and judgment, and so these overtake them unawares, and sink them into irreversible misery. "Oh, that men were wise, that they understood these things, that they would consider their latter end!" For death will come shortly, and perhaps suddenly: and no power, prosperity, courage, or prudence can avail a man in that day, when God shall require his soul. The believer alone is prepared CHAP. IX.

Like things happen to good and bad men till death, 1—3. The near approach of death should induce men to use cheerfully the comforts, and perform diligently the duties, of life, 4—10. In all human affairs, probabilities are often strangely crossed, and great calamities befall men unforeseen, 11, 12. Wisdom and usefulness procure little respect or gratitude, notwithstanding the excellency and efficiency of wisdom, 13—18.

FOR all this I considered in my heart even to declare all this, that the righteous, and the wise, and their works, are in the hand of God: "no man knoweth either love or hatred by all that is before them.

2 All things come alike to all: there is one event to the righteous, and to the wicked; to the good and to the clean, and to the unclean; to him that sacrificeth, and to him that sacrificeth not: as the good, so is the sinner; and he that sweareth, as he that feareth an oath.

3 This is an evil among all things that are done under the sun, that there is one event unto all: yea, also the heart of the sons of men is full of evil; and madness is in their heart while they live, and after that they go to the dead.

This alone can establish the heart in this mixed scene, in which the righteous often suffer, and the wicked prosper. But instead of saying with the epicure, "Let us eat, drink, and be merry, for to-morrow we die," or of indulging in vain objections; let us seek for a lively hope, a submissive will, and a contented mind: then leaving the Lord to clear up all difficulties in his own time, we may cheerfully enjoy the comforts, and bear up under the trials of life, for the few days, which we are to pass "under the sun;" whilst peace of conscience, and joy in the Holy Ghost will abide within us, through all outward changes, and even when flesh and heart shall fail. And trusting in the mercy and truth of God in Christ, we should give his credit for his wisdom, justice, and goodness, where we cannot discern them. Thus we shall escape the perplexity and presumption, which must unite with all attempts to unravel the intricacies of his providential government. For the most acute and penetrating minds, using the most unwearyed diligence, must fail of comprehending all his works and ways. Secret things belong to him, and only revealed things to us. Our studies therefore to be wise above what is written must involve us in sin and perplexity, and can never lead to any satisfactory conclusions. But to believe and obey here, will be a preparation for that world hereafter, where "we shall know, even as we also are known."

NOTES.

CHAP. IX. V. 1—3. Though Solomon could not find out the whole work of God; yet his inquiries led him to many useful conclusions, which he declared for the benefit of others. For he was assured, that the righteous and the wise, and their works, were under the special care of God; and that they would be favoured with that measure of success and usefulness which he saw best. Yet the events of human life were so intricately and mysteriously arranged, that no man could decide concerning himself, or another, whether he were the object of God’s special love, or under his wrath, by any outward occurrences. The Lord in his manifold wisdom sometimes afflicts, and sometimes prospers, both the righteous and the wicked, without ECCLESIASTES.

4 For to him that is joined to all the living there is hope: for a living dog is better than a dead lion.

5 For the living know that they shall die: but the dead know not any thing, neither have they any more a reward; for the memory of them is forgotten.

6 Also their love, and their hatred, and their envy, is now perished; neither do they have any more a portion for ever in any thing that is done under the sun.

7 Go thy way, eat thy bread with joy, and drink thy wine with a merry heart; for God now accepteth thy works.

8 Let thy garments be always white; and let thy head lack no ointment.

9 Live joyfully with the wife whom thou lovest, all the days of the life of thy vanity which he hath given thee under the sun, all the days of thy vanity: for that is thy portion in this life, and in thy labour which thou takest under the sun.

10 Whatsoever thy hand findeth to do, do it with thy might; for there is no work, nor device, nor knowledge, nor wisdom, in the grave, whither thou goest.

many exact discrimination: no kind, degree, or continuance of outward affliction can be mentioned, from which a godly man is certainly exempted; or of worldly prosperity, but wicked men have enjoyed it. And yet prosperity is by no means the uniform lot of the wicked, or adversity of the righteous. But matters are so varied and blended together, that all things may be said to come alike to all: and one event to befall the most unjust, selfish, sensual, and voluptuous; and the most upright, kind, pure, and pious, who walk in the ordinances, and reverence the holy name of God, as well as act honestly and blamelessly among men. The difference between them, as to present happiness, arises not from outward causes, but from the inward supports and consolations which the righteous enjoy, and the benefits they derive from these varied trials and mercies; and the inward remorse and terror that wicked men experience, and their growing more daring in impiety under all they meet with. For as this state of things appears grievous, and often proves a temptation to the righteous, it exceedingly forwards the destruction of the wicked. As far as the consciences of men are left to themselves, their hearts are full of evil; and prosperity in sin causes their lusts to rage even to madness: thus they are led to set God himself at defiance by their impieties and daring crimes; and they proceed in this course, till death closes their career, their hope expires with their breath, and they join the company of those that have before perished in their sins.

V. 4-6. Whilst life continues, an afflicted man may expect better days, and the conversion of the vilest sinner may be hoped for. In this view life is very valuable; and the proverb is applicable, that “a living dog is better than a dead lion.” The condition of the meanest or most desppicable living man is preferable to that of the most noble and renowned of those who have died impenitent. For the living, being sure that they must die, may perhaps prepare for that solemn event: but the dead have no further knowledge of any thing here on earth; they have no further recompense of their worldly labours; they are soon forgotten; and the love, hatred, or envy, which they bear to others, and to them, with all their pleasant or painful effects, are done with for ever, as far as this world is concerned: and, however rich and great they were, “they have no longer a portion for ever, in any thing that is done under the sun.” Of this Solomon doubtless is to be understood: his scope is to show the vanity of earthly things, and the madness and folly of a wicked life, of which all the benefits must speedily be relinquished for ever. Nor would either the righteous be perplexed at the transient afflictions they meet with, or the wicked hardened by their fading prosperity; if they recollected how soon all this will end, and that a state of eternal retribution will succeed. (Note, viii. 11-13.)
CHAPTER IX.

11 ‘I returned, and saw under the sun, that the race is not to the swift, nor the battle to the strong, neither yet bread to the wise, not yet riches to men of skill, but time and chance happeneth to them all.

12 For every man also knoweth his own time: as fishes are taken in an evil net, and as birds that are caught in the snare; so are the sons of men snared in an evil time, when it falleth suddenly upon them.

13 ¶ This wisdom have I seen also under the sun, and it seemed great unto me:

14 There was a little city, and few men within it: and there came a great king against it, and besieged it, and built great bulwarks against it:

15 Now there was found in it a poor wise man, and he by his wisdom delivered the city, yet no man remembered that same poor man.

16 Then said I, Wisdom is better than strength: nevertheless the poor man's wisdom is despised, and his words are not heard.

17 The words of wise men are heard in quiet, more than the cry of him that is despised among fools.

18 Wisdom is better than weapons of war, but one sinner destroyeth much good.

V. 10. Man’s wisdom in this dying world, consists in cheerfully using present comforts, and diligently attending to present duties. Whatever any one is convinced ought to be done by him, for the benefit of himself, his family, the church, or the world; according to his rank, station, talents, and opportunities; he ought to set about it without delay, and to pursue it with remissness, and to the utmost of his abilities: he ought not to yield to weariness or discouragement, because of opposition, difficulties, or hardships; and he should redeem his time for such purposes, remembering that he is hastening to the grave; and then all opportunities of this kind will be over, seeing there is no work, nor contrivance, nor knowledge, nor wisdom there. And even in the eternal world there will be no opportunity of glorifying God by doing good to man, as there is now on earth. The original is Shead, the Septuagint Jada, which may as well be understood of the invisible world as of the grave.

V. 11, 12. The wise man next observed another cause of vanity in worldly things. Men’s success seldom corresponds to their probable expectations of it. The swiftest do not always win the race; for they may fall, or be impeded in their course: battles are not determined according to the number, valour, or conduct of the contending parties; knowledge and prudence are so far from ensuring riches to the possessor, that they often fail of procuring him a subsistence; and the most skilful in any trade, science, or profession, are far from sure of being most favoured or employed. But there are favourable or unfavourable times into which men are cast: the former often procure success to far inferior talents and exertions; under the latter, no abilities or efforts can prevent disappointment. There are also various events which cannot be foreseen, that determine a man’s success in any enterprise, and have a decisive effect upon his lot in life. These seem to come by chance; yet they are the appointment of God: but they who do not regard him, charge them on fortune, and exclaim against this imaginary being, as blind, capricious, or partial. These things, however, are thus ordered on purpose, that ungodly men might be left wholly in uncertainty. There is a time allotted to all men, in which to seek and obtain the most ECCLÉSIĀSTES.

CHAP. X.

The care requisite to preserve a reputation.

B. C. 975.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1–10.

We ought not to think that our inquiries into the word or works of God are useless, because we cannot comprehend all mysteries, or explain all difficulties: for if we proceed with modesty and seriousness, we shall come to many satisfactory determinations; and shall continually be learning such things as may be useful to others also. When we have had suitable proof of any important truth, we should never waiver or hesitate on account of objections: for, in every thing that relates to the incomprehensible God, we must expect difficulties which we cannot solve. In the midst of the varied and intricate dispensations in the affairs of men, it is of the greatest consequence to be established in the belief, that the wise and righteous are under the special care of the Almighty. If therefore we first seek his favour, and then regulate all our undertakings according to his revealed will, and put our concerns into his hands, we shall be sure that our great end will be answered, whether we meet with the expected success or not. But we shall neither perplex or deceive ourselves, if we attempt to judge of our acceptance by external events: for this is not the rule which the word of God hath appointed. Forgetful of this, some believers increase their load of trouble, by construing their disappointments and afflictions into evidences of his displeasure, and by concluding that they are not his children, or he would not thus deal with them: and a far greater number of unbelievers mistake outward success, for the token and proof of his love to them. But, in this sense, ... all things come alike to all, and there is one event to the righteous, and to the wicked.” Not that the Lord doth not give a decided preference to the good, and holy, and reverential worshippers above the profane and unrighteous: but because the complex reasons of his conduct, in dispensing adversity or prosperity to individuals, do not lie level with our capacities. He acts by perfectly wise rules, and according to one consistent plan: but its parts are so various and complicated, that to us they must needs appear confused. We are called to walk by faith: and they who have no faith, infer that the righteous will never have any decisive advantage above the wicked; and this occasions much of the evil that is done under the sun. Yet it would not be so, if “the hearts of the sons of men were not full of evil; and if madness were not in them;” so that they are therefore glad of a pretence for indulging their lusts, and neglecting their duty. Thus they live in die betrothed and intoxicated, and are not aware of their madness in revelling against God, till the scenes which open to their view in the eternal world, awfully convince them of it. Let us bless God, that we are yet joined to all the living, where there is hope; and let us consider this as a counterbalance to all our troubles: and as we know that we must die, and that after death is the judgment, let us deem preparation for those solemn events the great business of our lives. Thus, when we leave this world, though we shall have no knowledge of, or portion in, any thing that is done under the sun; though we should be forgotten both by those who loved and those who hated and envied us, and all our competitions and pursuits on earth should vanish as a dream; we shall possess a better and a far more enduring substance. We should then seek acceptance with God for ourselves and our works, before we think of finding satisfaction in outward things: but when we have attained this we may go our ways, and eat our bread with joy, and drink our wine, or even our water, with a merry heart; for the meanest morsel coming from our Father’s love, and in answer to our prayers, will have a peculiar relish. The believer, who is assured of his acceptance, has of all men the best right to be cheerful: peace and joy are his duty, as well as his privilege: nor does his religion debar him from any rational or desirable earthly enjoyment. It requires not celibacy, or solitude, or affected austerities; which are the inventions of Satan and Antichrist, in order to afford men from the yoke of Christ, as if it were intolerably galling. But whilst we cultivate the social affections, and endeavour to be agreeable to our friends and relatives; and take the portion assigned us to defray the charges of our pilgrimage, and so to bear our labours with resignation: let us not forget that our life here is vanity, and a few days of vanity; that all our enjoyments and possessions are passing away; and that we must seek nobler acquisitions, as the portion of our souls in the eternal world. We should then use all these things according to the rule of God’s law, and a subserviency to his glory: and whatever our outward adorning or indulgence be, we should be careful that our spiritual garments be always white, and free from spot or blemish; and that we be continually anointed, adorned, and refreshed, by the influences of the Holy Ghost. Nor may we permit either the comfort or the trials of life to render us inattentive to our various duties. We have each a work to do. Sinners have the salvation of their souls to seek after, and the assurance of that salvation: believers have a great work to do, in order to evidence their faith, adorn the Gospel, glorify God, and serve his generation. Magistrates, ministers, the rich and the poor, the learned and unlearned, in their various situations, may all find some work to do; and they are called to do it with their might, and to the utmost of their abilities. The speedy approach maxims for the prudent conduct of affairs, 4—20.
CHAPTER X.

DEAD flies cause the ointment of the apothecary to send forth a stinking savour: so doth a little folly him that is in reputation for wisdom and honour.

2 A wise man's heart is at his right hand; but a fool's heart is at his left.

V. 11—12.

Whilst we guard against supineness and procrastination; we should also beware of self-dependence in our undertakings; otherwise we shall meet with disappointment and vexation: for every one may observe, in all places under the sun, that no abilities or external advantages can ensure success. Happy then are they whose works are in the hands of God: He will give success to them if that be best; or He will recompense the intention when unsuccessful: He appoints that "time and chance which happen to all men" be enabled to run the race, and then confer the prize: he gives strength and victory, wisdom and favour, opportunity, and understanding to embrace it: grace and glory, and every other good thing to them that walk uprightly. But they who know not his accepted time, and the day of their visitation, who do not seek him whilst he may be found, and so waste their lives in the pursuit of earthly vanities, will be inexcusably entangled in the snare of Satan, and perish suddenly without remedy. Whatever opportunities we may slip, whatever advantages we miss, and whatever calamities befall us, through unforeseen and apparently casual events, or our own impolicy: if we be but careful not to neglect the salvation of our souls, a few days will set all right. But superior talents, and even great success, will be a mere vanity to him, who neglects the one thing needful. Nay, even the good works of wise and pious men often expose them to present vexations. If we would not be rendered uneasy by perpetual disappointments, we must not expect much gratitude from men, for the most disinterested and beneficial services; but learn to do good from a regard to the honour of God, and in hopes of his gracious acceptance. In this way we shall "not be weary of well-doing, assured that in due season we shall reap, if we faint not." Wisdom and grace are indeed far more valuable than wealth, power, weapons of war, or any external accomplishments: yet they are seldom much respected in the poor and obscure. Under urgent distresses indeed, men will sometimes regard the counsels of a poor wise man; and be willing to use his superior skill, to serve a present turn, or promote their own interest. But when such friends are no more wanted, they will rarely be remembered: nay, they may assure themselves that their wisdom will by numbers be despised, and their words disregarded. For men are so attracted by glare and noise, that the magnifici, the forward, and the loquacious, will ever be the favourites of the ignorant unhypocritical multitude with which the world abounds, and their rule among right and the wise must be contended to speak in quiet, and with effect, to the few, who are more desirous to profit, than to be flattered and amused. And this is not only the common case in popular assemblies: but even in those places where men meet together to hear the word of God: they often prefer a smooth doctrine, and are more attentive to the embellishments of the preacher, than to his important message. Thus ministers are tempted to accommodate their discourses to the corrupt taste of the audience; and in this way especially "one sinner destroyeth much good," and disseminates loose doctrines, to the deception of many souls, and the great scandal of the Gospel: whilst "many" follow his pernicious ways, by means of whom the way of truth is evil spoken of." But whilst we lament these ruinous follies and mistakes of mankind; let us watch against ingratitude to our benefactors, especially to any poor man who hath been useful to us; let us learn to judge of men by their wisdom and piety, and not by their wealth or splendour; let us submit to the will, and depend on the power and mercy, of our God; and then none of our labours will be in vain, however now neglected. And seeing that the great Deliverer of sinners from the wrath to come and from the power of Satan, when he became poor for our sakes, was so despised and hated, nay, even now is treated with so much ingratitude and contempt; and seeing we ourselves are so often forgetful of our obligations, and indifferent to his wise and gracious words: we have the less reason to complain, if we meet with similar treatment in this evil world.

NOTES.

CHAP. X. V. 1. When the perfumer has compounded any precious ointment with great skill and attention; if he do not cover it carefully, the flies, attracted by the fragrance, will be entangled in it, and die and putrefy; and this will spoil the perfume, and render the ointment noisome. Thus when a man has acquired, with great care and pains, a high reputation for wisdom, or any other honourable qualification: if he remit his watchfulness, and be heedless, self-indulgent, or imprudent, only in a few instances, and those by no means heinous, they will tarnish his character and sink him into neglect. For in proportion as a person becomes conspicuous, he is the more strictly watched, great things are expected from him, and less allowance made for his infirmities: nay, envy and malevolence become more busy in reducing his character to the ordinary level; and in impeding those useful designs which his credit, if it had not been impaired, might have rendered successful. So that those mistakes which would scarcely have been counted blinches in another man, will be deemed almost inexcusable crimes in him: and numbers will be gratified by detecting and exposing them.
3 Yea also, when he that is a fool walketh by the way, his wisdom faileth him, and he saith to every one that he is a fool.

4 If the spirit of the ruler rise up against thee, leave not thy place; for yielding pacifieth great offences.

5 There is an evil which I have seen under the sun, as an error which proceedeth from the rulers:

6 Folly is set in great dignity, and the rich sit in low places.

7 I have seen servants upon horses, and princes walking as servants upon the earth.

8 He that diggeth a pit shall fall into it; and he that breaketh a hedge shall break his teeth.

9 Whoso removeth stones shall be hurt therewith; and he that cleaveth wood shall be endangered thereby.

10 If the iron be blunt, and he do not whet the edge, then must he put to more strength: but wisdom is profitable to direct.

11 Surely the serpent will bite without enchantment; and a babbling is no better.

12 The words of a wise man's mouth are gracious; but the lips of a fool will swallow up himself.

13 The beginning of the words of his mouth is gracious; but the end of his talk is mischievous madness.

V. 2, 3. A wise man's understanding is employed about the duties of his station, and his heart is in his work; it is his delight, and he does it earnestly, and he therefore learns to do it skilfully, as a man who uses his right hand. But a fool employs no contrivance, because he is heartless as to very good thing; he understands any subject better than his own profession, and any one's duty better than his own. So that he goes about his work, thus to speak, in a left-handed manner, and makes nothing of it. A wise man always takes honest courses; but a fool turns into ways. Nay, such persons discover their ignorance and folly on every occasion: they cannot take a journey, or talk abroad, but they run into such gos and evident errors, or engage in such disputes and projects, as expose them to every body, for they have not wisdom enough to conceal their own emptiness and mischievous disposition.

V. 4. (Note, viii. 3-5.) If the prince have taken place at the conduct of any of his subjects or officers, no wisdom of the person concerned consists in keeping his place, and quietly attending to its duties; not being influenced, either by resentment or fear, to recede, or to excite any commotions in the state. For a submissive acting conduct wins upon and pacifies those princes, who have been greatly and even unjustly displeased; whereas harshness and violence generally end in the ruin of the offending party.

V. 5-7. Solomon allowed that princes often occasioned every evil by their mis-conduct and neglect, which could not be vindicated, though they did not justify the disadvantage. One abuse especially he had remarked, by which rulers were necessary to the crimes of others, and all the mischiefs which they perpetrated. Namely, when, from any ill motive, or from partiality or caprice, they preferred experienced and imprudent men, from low stations, to the highest dignities; which they disgraced by their impudent, mercenary, and rash behaviour: whilst the nobles, have rank, education, and knowledge of affairs, entitled them to consideration, qualified them for such eminences, and rendered them superior to the mean oppressions practiced by ingud usurpation, were degraded, and placed under the command of their inferiors; which is, as slaves rode in state, and princes were required to walk a foot by the sides to do them honour. Indecent naturally gives unbrake, when men of inferior rank, though eminent for abilities, wisdom, and probity, are advanced above the nobles; but much more so, when the talents and dispositions of the favourites are as meagre as their extractions. (Notes, Prov. xix. 10. xxx. 22.)

V. 8-10. The sacred writer appears, in these verses, to continue his discourse; and to caution subjects, when aggrieved by evils which proceed from the ruler, not to seek redress in a precipitate manner, or to yield to the suggestions of resentment and pride. This advice he enforces by apt illustrations. As he that diggeth a pit for another, may probably fall into it himself; so he who violently seeks the ruin of an obnoxious competitor, will probably compass his own destruction. He who breaks a hedge that divides between one man's field and another's, may expect to be bitten by a serpent that lies concealed in it: and thus, the man who attempts to break down the fences of law and authority, on account of some personal offence, may expect a fatal end. He that should attempt to remove the stones which served for landmarks, or that were too heavy for him, would probably be crushed by them: and so will he who attempts to subvert an established government. And if a man intends to cleave a knotty block of wood, he must first procure proper tools, and duly sharpen them, and then proceed cautiously and skillfully; otherwise he will endanger and weary himself to little purpose: thus they that would compass practicable and desirable alterations, should proceed with caution, and procure proper helpers, and use cool deliberation and steady perseverance; and not expect to carry matters by force and violence, which are not sufficient even to cleave a block of wood. In all these matters, wisdom is profitable to direct proper means and occasions, and to prevent mischief, and a man's wearying himself in vain. Without wisdom, whatsoever a man taketh in hand, turneth to his own hurt.
CHAPTER X.

14 A fool also is full of words; a man cannot tell what shall be; and what shall be after him who can tell him?

15 The labour of the foolish wearieth every one of them; because he knoweth not how to go to the city.

16 Woe to thee, O land, when thy king is a child, and thy princes eat in due season, for strength and not for drunkenness!

18 By much slothfulness the building decays; and through idleness of the hands the house droppeth through.

19 A feast is made for laughter, and wine maketh merriment; but money answereth all things.

20 Curse not the king, no, not in thy thought; and curse not the rich in thy bed-chamber; for a bird of the air shall carry the voice, and that which hath wings shall tell the matter.

V. 11—13. The serpent was supposed capable of being charmed by certain incantations, which would prevent its biting; (Note, Psal. viii. 5;) but otherwise it could not safely be meddled with: and those babblers, who by flattery, plausibility, and slander, insinuate themselves into the favour of weak princes, are no better than the serpent. In themselves they may indeed be as despicable as they are poisonous: but they have it in their power to do immense mischief, and must be opposed with great caution. They may be outwardly and supplanted; but it is dangerous to attempt overpowering them, for they do not care whom they destroy, if exasperated. In general the wise man will gain his advantage by speaking with gentleness, candour, and discretion: and in a manner suited to procure him favours. But the lips of the foolish man, as it were, dig a pit in which to swallow up himself. When he first begins to speak, he betrays his ignorance and imperfection: and if he meets with the least check, he is put off his guard, and becomes like a madman, in rage and abuse. It is in vain, therefore, to enter into any contest with him: for he is full of words, and will speak last, though his discourse be so perplexed, that no one can tell what he intends to do, or what he will say next, or how his imperious discourse will end. And in like manner, when he undertakes the management of affairs, he is sure to weary himself to no purpose: for he is so inconsiderate and headstrong, that if he undertook a journey to some great city, he would neither be able to find the way, nor be willing to follow another’s directions! So that nothing can hinder a wise man’s prevailing against such a competitor; except his own indignation give the foolish man an advantage against him to crush him by violence.

V. 16—19. A prince, who is a child in years, or in ignorance, fickleness, and caprice, is a sore judgment from God to any nation: especially, when the nobles, who ought to be able and active statesmen and counsellors, begin and spend their days in sensual indulgence. But the land is especially favoured, and is likely to prosper, where the king is descended from noble progenitors, and inherits their capacity for government: or, as some explain the word, when he is a man of mature years and experience; and when his princes are temperate, and apply themselves to business. For as the sluggard lets his house go to decay for want of repairs, till the roof dropped through, and the whole moulder into ruins: so the kingdom, that is governed by careless and profligate rulers, must come to ruin. For whilst they are making feasts and indulging themselves in wine, as if they had nothing to do, but to laugh and be merry, the public treasure is wasted, the national defence is neglected, heavy taxes must be imposed, the people grow discontented, the enemies are emboldened, and every thing concurs to bring heavy calamities on the state. The money with which such rulers waste in their luxury, and lavish on the companions of their revels and debaucheries, would have answered all the purposes of good government, and provided for every emergency: but, being thrown away, man’o’-war oppressions, disturbances, and miseries must needs ensue, which a few drunken feasts will very ill compensate.

V. 20. Government, and the distinctions in society, are the appointments of God, and are productive of much good to mankind. Kings, magistrates, and great men, therefore, with all their defects, are entitled to respect and honour; and as none ought openly to revile and wish evil to them; so malice should not be indulged in the heart, or ill wishes allowed even in thought, against them, or vented in the most private manner. And men should remember, that secret discourses and combinations of this kind are often detected by means, almost as unlikely, as if a bird of the air should convey the intelligence to the parties concerned. Kings have their spies, where they are not suspected. Their ears are as long as their arms; and God himself often wonderfully brings treason to light.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—10. A reputation for wisdom and honour, is not only more valuable than precious ointment, but more difficult to be preserved from losing its good savour, and becoming offensive. (vii. 1.) Seeing we are never entirely secure against tarnishing our characters by one folly or other, as long as we live, this may be considered as an additional reason, why the day of a wise man’s death is better than that of his birth: for when he dies, his reputation is established, and a sanction given to all that he hath laboured for the good of mankind; whereas the indiscretion of an unguarded hour, or an incidental transgression, may at any time bring all his endeavours and devices into disrepute. Every professed Christian, in proportion as he is zealous for religion, may be considered as in reputation for wisdom and honour, and a little folly will be more offensive in him than in another. The world will watch him more narrowly, and censure him more severely; his profession condemns their principles and conduct, and excites their enmity; and therefore they will make no allowances for him. Every minister of the Gospel is, in a higher sense, “in reputation for wisdom and honour,” he is “a city set upon a hill, that cannot be hid”: his faithful preaching will condemn numbers, and they will watch for matter of accusation against him, that he may appear no better than they. How careful then should we be to avoid all appearance of evil! and how ready to make any sacrifice, rather than give a handle to those who seek to hinder our usefulness, by blasting our characters! In general, retirement is most eligible; for few are much in the way of temptation and observation, without in some degree weakening their own influence. As men arrive at a greater eminence in these respects, they are more noticed, will be more severely judged, and their mistakes will be of more extensively bad consequence.

Alas, how many have we heard of, whose examples have illustrated these observations! Men of eminent reputation for abilities, for zeal, piety, and usefulness; who have sunk into neglect, or even become a disgrace to the cause of truth, by being overcome by temptation, or perhaps unjustly suspected of some crime, for want of a proper attention to appearances! It is in such cases vain to exclaim at the censuriosity of mankind: we all ought to know that the world is censorious, especially towards religious characters; and for that reason to “provide for things honest,” not only in the sight of God, but also before men, and by well-doing, to put to silence the ignorance of foolish men, and to pray without ceasing for grace to enable us “to walk with wisdom towards them that are without.” A man’s wisdom is evinced by his heart being engaged, and his energies exerted, in his proper work; that he may be skillful and successful in it. How necessary then is it that ministers should give themselves wholly to their proper work; that they may be workmen that need not be ashamed, and that their profiting may appear unto all men! Indeed every man, who does not delight in God’s commandments, will at length be proved emphatically a fool. But we meet with great numbers, among every class in society, who prove themselves ignorant and foolish upon every emergency: all their wisdom consists in plausible professions and artifices, which continually fail them; and their words and works betray their real characters to all around them. It is generally our wisdom peaceably to abide in our places in the community; to avoid giving needless offence, especially to our superiors; and, if we have inadvertently offended, to disarm resentment by submissions: for they who rashly engage in opposition to authority, seldom escape without some grievous calamity. In his evil world, we must expect that rulers, as well as others, will mistake and do wrong; and we should be prepared to make proper allowances. But they should be warned of their duties, and apprised of the imprudence and bad consequences of “setting folly in great dignity, and causing the rich to sit in low place.” Yet when such grievances are experienced, without great caution, men will incur far worse consequences in attempting to redress them. In every case resentment and pride are dangerous counsellors; and hasty and violent measures are seldom either equitable or expedient. They who seek the downfall of others, will themselves often fall into mischief, in attempting to break through customary rules and limits, immense dangers are incurred, and wisdom is not only profitable to direct us what ought to be done, but in what manner it may safely be attempted. Times and occasions must be waited for; prudent contrivance will go much further than brutal force; and they who attempt even salutary alterations, without having previously adopted suitable plans, and engaged proper instruments, will seldom succeed.

V. 11—20.

They who would do good, must not despise their opposers, though they be superfluous and worthless. Men may do much mischief with so small a capacity as could never have attained to any thing useful. A vain babbler wants neither power nor inclination to bite like a serpent. Gentle means are commonly most prevalent; and they whose words are soft and dissuading, who use the language of truth, piety, and goodness, will have most influence: whilst the vehemence and endless vociferation, the furious passion, the boilings, railings, menaces, and mischievous madness, which many employ, only prove their own folly, prevent the success of their own purposes, and give their opponents the advantage against them. Such as are most full of words, seldom most abound in sense or prudence: and they who will have the last word in dispute, have seldom truth on their side; great talkers are frequently very defective when they proceed to action; so that they lose themselves in the plainest matters; and, alas, how many foolish men weary themselves with vain labour about religion, and will not know the only way to Zion, the city of our God! When the government of kingdoms devolves on those who are weak and wicked, we should remember that the Lord is displeased, and so use proper means of averting his indignation; and it becomes us to be thankful, when affairs of state are prudently and successfully managed. Alas! how many indulge both, and spend their time in feasting, intemperance, and vain mirth, to the ruin of their families and of their souls! and we need not wonder that the affairs of nations are often ruined in the same way: for though money is not worthy of being idolized, or even hoarded; yet it is too valuable to be wasted in vanity and luxury. It cannot indeed purchase pardon of sin, or spiritual grace and peace: but, in respect of outward concerns, it may be said to answer all things. Besides providing what is needful and convenient for ourselves and families, it will subserv the thousand purposes of base vileness, and even of piety. It may endow alms-houses, hospitals, and CAST thy bread upon the waters, for thou shalt find it after many days.

2 Give a portion to seven, and to eight, for thou knowest not what evil shall be upon the earth.

3 If the clouds be full of rain, they empty themselves upon the earth: and if the tree fall towards the south, or towards the north, in the place where the tree falleth, there it shall be.

4 He that observeth the wind shall not sow; and he that regardeth the clouds shall not reap.

5 As thou knowest not what is the way of the spirit, so nor how the bones do grow in the womb of her that is with child: even so thou knowest not the works of God which he maketh.

6 In the morning sow thy seed, and in the evening withhold not thine hand: for thou knowest not whether shall prosper, either this or that, or whether they both shall be alike good.

7 If the light is sweet, and a pleasant thing it is for the eyes to behold the sun:

O, saith the covetous man again, I know not what will be hereafter; therefore it is best to save whilst I may. No, saith the preacher, for that very reason give. Acts xi. 29—30. For thou knowest not how calamitous the times may shortly be, and then the good thou hast done will stand thee in greater stead than all the goods thou enjoyedst: which perhaps may be taken from thee, or leave thee nothing to do good withal; but make thee an object of other men's charity; which no person hath greater reason to expect than he who, when he had wherewithal, was kind to others in that condition.

When thou thinkest not of it, God will require thee, either in this world, or in the next. (Bp. Patrick.)

V. 3—6. The clouds exhale the water, and it is treasured up in them, on purpose that they may empty themselves in watering the earth, and in diffusing plenty. Thus God enables men to get wealth, that they may do good with it: nor can their riches profit them, if they do not benefit others. Speedily they will be cut down as trees: and as the tree continues where it fell; so will men abide in that state in which death leaves them, and this will be according as they have, or have not, brought forth good fruit. Selfish men object to this duty, from their circumstances, families, or necessary expenses; and especially from the vices and ingratitude of the poor. But the husbandman, who should thus object to the plowing or sowing of his ground or reaping his crop, because the earth was rough, or the clouds threatened rain, could miss his seed-time, and lose his harvest: and so will they who have always an excuse ready when a good work is proposed. Men are ready to say, we cannot tell in what manner we shall be repaid for the trouble and expense of our charity. But can they understand, how the spirit or soul is united to the body? or how the body is fashioned in the womb? And if a man be unable to understand these things, how can it be expected, that he should know the other works of God who made all? Every good action, therefore, which springs from a proper principle, ought to be considered as sowing the seed of a future harvest: true wisdom consists in doing this daily, and in every part of the day, without sparing trouble or expense: and if many endeavours to be useful terminate in disappointment, this should not be a discouragement: none can know which of all their attempts will be most successful, or be certain that it will not succeed.

NOTES.

CHAP. XI. V. 1, 2. Solomon had repeatedly recommended a cheerful use of worldly things, as a remedy against their vanity: and here he adds an exhortation to the liberal use of them in acts of beneficence. The expression, Cast thy bread upon the waters, may perhaps allude to the husbandman's casting his bread-corn, which he could ill spare, upon a marshy soil, or even on the water itself, that it might overflow it; where apparently he had little prospect of a crop. Men should deduct a considerable proportion from their gains, earnings, and expenses, according to their fear of riches, to supply the wants of the needy, and even of the unworthy and ungrateful. This may seem like throwing their provisions into the waters; but it will certainly not be lost, and long afterwards they will reap the benefit of it. They are therefore exhorted to give a portion of their substance, not merely to one or two, but to seven or eight, to as many as occasion requires; and not to object that they have already given to this or the other person. And this they should do, under a conviction of the instability of human affairs; and as sensible that all their other possessions may soon be torn from them, but that this will be safe, and reserved for them, in all possible emergencies. Here again Solomon contra- dicts the vulgar principle upon which covetous wretches move. They think all is lost that is given away in charity: no such matter, saith the preacher, the fruit of it will be found hereafter, beyond what can be imagined!
8 But if a man live many years, and be rejoiced in them all, yet let him remember that darkness; for thou shalt be many. All that cometh is vanity.

9 Rejoice, O young man, in thy youth; and let thy heart cheer thee in the days of thy youth, and walk in the ways of thine heart, and in the sight of thine eyes: but know thou that for all these things God will bring thee into judgment.

10 Therefore remove sorrow from thine heart, and put away evil from thy flesh: for childhood and youth are vanity.

V. 7, 8. Ugodly men expect the comfort of life from wealth and prosperity, which are pleasant to the mind as light is to the eyes, and as the sun cheers us after a gloomy season. But should a man live many years, and enjoy every pleasure of life through them all, let him remember that this season will be soon over; tedious days of sickness and pain may precede death, and if these be his good things, an eternity of darkness and despair will follow. All this outward prosperity then is a mere vanity.

V. 9, 10. This address to young persons is peculiarly animed and affecting. Solomon supposes that they would not be convinced that all was vanity, until they had made the trial; that they would desire liberty and opportunity to pursue every pleasure, and to gratify every inclination, and reign every sense, during the vigour of youth, and that they were sanguine in their expectations of happiness. Well, says he, follow the bent of your desires, whereas ever they lead you; but be assured at the same time, that for all these things God will call you into judgment.

He then exhorts them seriously, to behave so in their youth, as may best remove, or prevent sorrow and disease in future years, and the wrath of God in a future state: or to guard against both the vehement passions of the mind, and the ungovernable appetites of the body: for childhood and youth are vanity. Even in that early period sickness and death may come, youthful pleasures are vain and empty, and even in childhood and youth the heart is very prone to sin and folly.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Nothing tends more to give us a sanctified and comfortable use of outward things, than liberal and well-directed beneficence. Every work and labour of love to others, for the Lord's sake, will prove advantageous to ourselves: the more abundantly we bring forth these fruits of faith and grace, the better shall we be prepared for every evil that can befall us on earth: and which is thus expended, will be better secured, and bear higher interest, than any other part of our property. Unbelievers indeed think it all thrown away, as bread cast upon the waters: but faith knows it to be sown down in well watered land, which, after a time of patient waiting, will yield a plentiful increase.

Unbelief therefore hoards against the evil day: faith lends it to the Lord, to be repaid when he sees it to be wanted. Unbelief, as the parent of avarice, resembles the clouds exhaling and retaining the waters: but faith, working by love, resembles the clouds dispensing their stores, and emptying themselves on the parched earth. The covetous man, however, will not part with his idolized treasures till death tears him from them. Then, as he lived to himself, so is he cut down like a barren tree, and cast into the fire there to remain for ever: but the believer, who hath lived to God, and brought forth fruit as a tree of righteousness, will flourish in the paradise of God for ever.

V. 9. This address to young persons is peculiarly animed and affecting. Solomon supposes that they would not be convinced that all was vanity, until they had made the trial; that they would desire liberty and opportunity to pursue every pleasure, and to gratify every inclination, and reign every sense, during the vigour of youth, and that they were sanguine in their expectations of happiness. Well, says he, follow the bent of your desires, whereas ever they lead you; but be assured at the same time, that for all these things God will call you into judgment.

He then exhorts them seriously, to behave so in their youth, as may best remove, or prevent sorrow and disease in future years, and the wrath of God in a future state: or to guard against both the vehement passions of the mind, and the ungovernable appetites of the body: for childhood and youth are vanity. Even in that early period sickness and death may come, youthful pleasures are vain and empty, and even in childhood and youth the heart is very prone to sin and folly.
An exhortation to early piety; and a description of the infirmities of old age, and the approach and consequences of death, 1-7. A repeated declaration that all is vanity; the preacher’s purpose and care in his instructions; and the solemn conclusion of his subject, in a charge to fear and obey God, as the whole of man, and thus to prepare for judgment, 8-12.

Remember now thy Creator in the days of thy youth, while the evil days come not, nor the years draw nigh, when thou shalt say, I have no pleasure in them.

2 While the sun, or the light, or the moon, or the stars, be not darkened, or the clouds return after the rain;

3 In the day when the keepers of the house shall tremble, and the strong men shall bow themselves, and the grinders cease because they are few, and those that look out of the windows be darkened;

4 And the doors shall be shut in the streets, when the sound of the grinding is low, and he shall arise at the voice of the bird, and all the daughters of music shall be brought low:

5 Also when they shall be afraid of that which is high, and fears shall be in the way, and the almond-tree shall flourish, and the grasshopper shall be a burden, and desire shall fail: because man goeth to his long home, and the mourners go about the streets.

6 Or ever the silver cord be loosed, or the golden bowl be broken, or the pitcher be broken at the fountain, or the wheel broken at the cistern.

7 Then shall the dust return to the earth as it was; and the spirit shall return unto God who gave it.

CHAP. XII. V. 1. The word rendered Creator in this place is plural, and may refer to the expression used at the creation of Adam and Eve. "Let us make man;" (Notes, Gen. 1. 26. Job xxxv. 10.) This exhortation is connected with the close of the preceding chapter. Instead of that vain and vicious conduct which tends to so many future evils, Solomon recommends an early attention to religion. In allusion to man’s natural forlornness of God, he calls upon young persons to "Remember your Creator." They should remember his glorious perfections, as displayed in the work of creation; their own relations and obligations to him, and dependence on him, as their Creator and Lord; the duties thence resulting, and the account that they must render; the value of his favour, and the power of his wrath in whom they live, move, and are. They should remember their sins against their Creator, and repent and seek forgiveness of them; and their duties, and set about performing them, in dependence on his mercy and grace, and with a desire to live to his glory. This should be done, as early as may be, whilst the body is vigorous and the spirits active; and before those evil days or years approach, in which no pleasure can be found, except in communion with God and in the hope of heaven. At that trying season there will be no occasion for the additional anguish of reviewing a mispent life; repentance and conversion will be attended with peculiar and mighty difficulties: and the circumstances of not having renounced sin and worldly vanities, till a man be forced to say, "I have no pleasure in them," will render his sincerity very questionable to his own conscience. The word rendered youth, seems to mean the best and choicest season of life.

V. 2-7. This figurative description of old age and its infirmities, has furnished the critics with much employment, and a fine field for the display of their ingenuity: but such matters must here be handled with great brevity.—In old age, the relish for all pleasures is lost, and men grow indifferent even to those objects which once occasioned the most agreeable sensations; so that the sun, with its pleasant light, and the beautiful moon and stars, are, as it were, obscured to them; or the understanding, imagination, memory, and judgment, the lights of the mind, are so impaired that they seem darkened. One affliction or pain succeeds another, as clouds return after heavy showers in a rainy season. The hands and arms, with which a man defends himself from assaults or accidents, as watchmen keep the house, grow feeble, and tremble when their help is requisite. The legs and thighs which, as strong men, support the body, seem in old age to bend under its weight. The teeth, which used to grind the food, are most of them gone; and the few that remain are become useless. The eyes, by which the soul looked as it were, out at the windows, grow dim. Men become disinclined or incapacitated to open their mouths in public debates, having lost their voice with their teeth: or they have no inclination to eat, as they cannot grind or chew
8 Vanity of vanities, saith the Preacher; all is vanity.

9 And moreover, because the Preacher was wise, he still taught the people knowledge; yea, he gave good heed, and sought out, and set in order, many proverbs.

10 The Preacher sought to find out acceptable words: and that which was written was upright, even words of truth.

11 The words of the wise are as goads, and as nails fastened by the masters of assemblies, which are given from one Shepherd.

12 And further, by these, my son, be admonished: of making many books there is no end; and much study is a weariness of the flesh.

13 Let us hear the conclusion of the whole matter; Fear God, and keep his commandments: for this is the whole duty of man.

14 For God shall bring every work into judgment, with every secret thing, whether it be good, or whether it be evil.

V. 8—10. In the view of this near approach of death, Solomon (who probably wrote this description from his own experience,) again declares that “all is vanity, and vanity of vanities,” (Note, i. 2.) and then he proceeds to close his subject in the most solemn manner. He had been renowned and eminent in all kinds of wisdom: but the best use he could make of it, was by continuing to teach the people knowledge. With great care and labour, he sought out, arranged, and published many proverbs, for their instruction: he had also pains to find out words suited to convey his meaning, in the plainest, most convincing, and agreeable manner to their minds; and what he had written was upright and true, and worthy of their fullest credence and strictest observance.

V. 11—14. The words which prophets and wise men employed in instructing the people, were intended to be as goads, which cause the sluggish ox to mend his pace when drawing in the yoke: they would therefore occasion pain whilst they alarmed the conscience, and showed men their guilt and danger; but they tended to quicken them in fleeing from the wrath to come, and in walking in the way to heaven. The masters of assemblies, the priests or prophets who taught the people when assembled at the temple or in other places; and he who received their instructions from the one great Shepherd of Israel, minded them to be as nails, fastened in their memories, consciences, and judgments, so as not easily to be removed; that they might there remain, for their establishment in the truths and ways of God. Solomon, therefore, with the authority and affection of a father, exhorts every reader to be admonished by the instructions which he hath here given. To write a great many books was an almost endless work, not suited to the shortness of human life; and the study of the writer, and even of the reader, would in that case be a great weariness to the flesh. Nor was it at all necessary: for whatever books were written, or studies pursued, they would all be vanity and vexation; except they led to this, as the conclusion of the whole matter, that “to fear God, and keep his commandments, is the whole of man.” The word duty, is very improperly added in the translation; for it is the whole interest, privilege, honour, and happiness, as well as duty of man, to fear the wrath and seek the favour of God; to reverence his perfections, and to become his spiritual worshippers and servants, walking in all his ordinances and commandments, blameless. For after this vain life is over, another scene will succeed, and CHAPTER XII.

V. 1-7.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

All the wickedness and misery of man spring from his forgetfulness of God, to which he is prone even from his youth. Though every object around us, and our own reason and conscience, and even existence, proclaim his power and Godhead, yet is he scarcely our thoughts, whilst leaving lives and men in general remain ignorant or careless about their Creator and daily Benefactor; and neither fear, love, serve, nor trust him; as his glorious perfections and their infinite obligations to him demand of them. We need, therefore, to be called upon to remember our Creator, that we may perceive our need of a Redeemer and a Sanctifier; and may be excited to return to the Lord, by the way that he hath opened, that being reconciled to him, we may walk with him through this evil world. We should also call upon our children and the thoughtless and inexperienced young persons around us, to attend to these neglected trusts and duties; and remind them of the advantages of beginning this needful work in the dawn of life, and of the folly and hazard of neglecting it. It is a great happiness to be prevented from contract- ing those bad habits and connexions which render a change, in after years, like cutting off a right hand or foot: to avoid that injustice and mischief to others, which often distress the conscience to the end of life; to be secure from the danger of dying in sin, or of living to be hardened by its deceitfulness; or of having the great work of life to begin, when the evil days come, in which pains and infirmities destroy the comfort of every possession; and are a heavy load to bear, without the accumulation of so many sorrows, anxieties, and terrors, as must needs accompany a late repentance, in those few instances in which it takes place. Happy then are they who serve God from their early youth, and are useful through their whole lives; who have divine consolations to refresh them, when other comforts are withdrawn or become insipid; and who know, that "when flesh and heart shall fail, God will be the Strength of their heart, and their Portion for ever." If we are not previously cut off, a few years will terminate all that vigour, activity, or comeliness, about which we are so apt to glory. The decay of our bodies will even obstruct the operations of our mental faculties: our dear friends and relatives will, one after another, be torn from our bleeding side: one pain and disease will succeed another; we shall become feeble and helpless as children; our limbs will totter under the weight of our bodies; every sense and organ will lose its power of giving pleasure; we shall not derive satisfaction from beautiful objects or prospects, from music, from food, or from any of the delights of the sons of men: every undertaking will then excite terror, weariness, or disqui- tude; our sleep will be broken and motion uneasy; and the trials of our patience will probably render us a trial to the patience of those around us. Every circumstance will then remind us, that we are speedily to remove to our long home, and that when the mourners have paid their customary tribute to us, we shall be little more thought of;

V. 8-14.

What a complicated vanity is life and all its pursuits, to that man whose treasure is on earth, and who has every thing to dread in a future world! But as it is a season to groan for eternity, and to do good on earth, life is no vanity; and death to him who thus employs his days has no terrors: here only can we find substantial good. To teach man this knowledge is the work of every preacher: he who carefully attends to this, according to the Scripture, is wise, though his station be obscure and his abilities mean: and the man who possesses superior rank and talents, cannot more honourably employ them, than in copying the example of this wise and royal preacher: in devising proper means, and in seeking out acceptable words, even those of uprightness and truth, set forth in the most convincing and persuasive manner, in order to bring men to seek and serve God. But indeed the pure word of God, however set forth in acceptable language, must disquiet the negligent and disobedient; for it is "quick and powerful, and sharper than a two-edged sword, and it pierces" the sinner's conscience, and hits it with terror and remorse. These are, however, faithful wounds, and intended to urge men forward in the way of salvation: and when they have produced their effect, peace and consolation will follow. All who are employed as masters of assemblies or teachers of the congregation, derive their authority, abilities, and instructions, from the one good Shepherd, who laid down his life for the sheep. Their endeavour should be to fasten divine truths, as nails, in the minds of their hearers, that they may abide with them, and make a durable impression: and the authority of him that sent them ought to be recognized in them and their message. They should, however, keep close to their instructions; for if the plain truths of Scripture do not produce the desired effect, nothing will. There is indeed no end of the volumes which are written and read with immense labour and fatigue: and instead of rendering men wiser, holier, and happier, they often increase their pride and contempt of God's word. But whether we consider honour, riches, pleasures, learning, or abilities: the man, who had them all in the greatest abundance, and tried them at the utmost advantage, pronounces them all to be vanity. Let us then be admonished by his words, and profit by his experience; let us learn from him the conclusion of the whole matter, that to "fear God, and keep his commandments, is the whole of man!" let us then cease "being careful, and troubled about many things," and attend to this "one thing needful, and choose this good part that shall never be taken from us;" let us now come to him as a merciful Saviour, who soon appears as an omnipotent and omniscient Judge; when he will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and manifest the counsels of all hearts, and judge the secrets of men; then shall we all appear before his tribunal, and receive according to the things done in the body, whether they be good or evil. "Let us therefore give all diligence, that we may be found of him in peace, without spot, and blameless."
THE SONG

OF

SOLOMON.

THERE can be no reasonable doubt but that Solomon was the writer of this book, as well as of the two which precede; “and that it was always looked upon as a holy book, treating of some spiritual and divine matter, appears from its being placed among the rest of that kind” (Bp. Patrick).—It is indeed evident, that it was received among the canonical books of the Jews, (probably by Ezra, an inspired writer,) soon after the Babylonish captivity; and that it formed a part of that sacred volume, which, in the time of Christ, was called “the Scriptures,” and “the oracles of God”—It does not indeed appear that it was expressly quoted by any writer of the new Testament; yet the coincidence of its general argument, and of particular sentiments, with many passages in both the old and new Testament, is well worthy of consideration. (Ps. xlv. Is. liv. 5. lxi. 10. lxii. 4, 5. Hos. ii. 16—20. Matt. ix. 15. xxii. 2. xxv. 1—11. John iii. 29. 2 Cor. xi. 2. Eph. v. 23—27. Rev. xix. 7—9. xxi. 2. 9. xxii. 17.) (Compare also i. 4. with John vi. 44.—iv. 7. with Eph. v. 27.—v. 2. with Rev. iii. 20.—vii. 1. with Is. iii. 7. Eph. vi. 15.—viii. 11. with Is. v. 1—7. Matt. xxi. 33. 43.—viii. 14. with Rev. xxii. 20.) This coincidence, joined with the general testimony both of the Jewish and Christian church, through a long succession of ages; (with but few exceptions, and those not peculiarly decided in respect of evangelical truth and piety,) gives the book a very high sanction, not only as genuine, but also as divinely inspired.—It may perhaps also appear to the attentive and serious reader, that the allegory itself is a kind of prophecy; and that particular passages, soberly explained, according to the known rules of interpreting allegories, are prophetic of the coming of Christ in our nature, the abolition of the Mosaic dispensation, the calling of the Gentiles, and the enlargement of the church, (ii. 9. 17. viii. 1. 8. 9;) and more than this cannot be expected from the nature of the composition.—We learn from the sacred historian, that Solomon wrote above a thousand songs; this, however, alone has been preserved as “The song of songs,” the most excellent of songs; and though, as a poetical composition, it is allowed by the best judges to be finished in the highest style of elegance and beauty: yet the poet reader will be apt to think, that it was thus distinguished on another and superior account; namely, the excellency of the subject, and the admirable way in which it is treated. Learned men have bestowed much pains in shewing the occasion on which Solomon wrote this sacred poem: and most of them imagine, that it was composed on his marriage with Pharaoh’s daughter; but this is doubtful, (Note i. 2.) nor is it certain that it was written so early in his reign; for some think that the tower of Lebanon was not built till a considerable time after that event. (vii. 4.) In short, this song is a divine allegory in the form of a pastoral, which represents the reciprocal love betwixt Christ and his church, under figures taken from the relation and affection which subsist betwixt a bridegroom and his espoused bride; an emblem continually employed in Scripture. It hath some reference to the state of the Jewish church, as waiting for the coming of the promised Messiah: but it likewise accords to the fellowship betwixt Christ and true believers in every age. In order properly to understand it, we must consider the Redeemer as loving and beloved of his church. The marriage-contract is already ratified, but the completion of this blessed union is reserved for the heavenly state. Here on earth the believer loves and rejoices in an unseen Saviour, and seeks his happiness from his spiritual presence; Christ manifests himself to him as he doth not unto the world: and these visits are earnest and foretastes of heavenly joy. But they are interrupted, suspended, or varied on many accounts: they are often lost by negligence or other sins, and can only be recovered by humble repentance and renewed diligence: yet the love on both sides remains unchanged, as to its principle, though varied in the expressions of it.
These things are represented in a sort of dialogue; in which the church speaks of Christ, or to him; and he answers, and addresses the church; and the daughters of Jerusalem, (who seem to denote such as are inquiring after this salvation,) are frequently addressed, and reply; thus the varying experiences and correspondent duties, of the believer, are delineated in a very animating and edifying manner. But the book should be read with great abstraction of mind from outward things, and with much prayer: lest the carnal passions should be kindled, instead of the spiritual affections being invigorated. And, as it is impossible for any one to enter profitably into the meaning of the inspired writer, who has no spiritual experience of the subject; so an ungodly man will seldom read it with advantage, or indeed without detriment: nor is it any objection to the excellency and usefulness of this sacred poem, to allow that it is peculiarly capable of becoming "a savour of death unto death," to "those who wrest the Scriptures to their own destruction." The spiritual meaning, that is, the instruction intended to be given by the Holy Spirit speaking by Solomon, should then be principally inquired after; and too minute investigation of the external images, under which it is couched, or of the circumstances and arrangement of the poem, according to the rules of modern criticism, will, I apprehend, be found rather unfavorable to edification, than conducive to it. No doubt many expressions in it are very difficult to us, both as to the literal meaning, and the spiritual instruction intended by them, if such were intended: and some descriptions must not be judged by modern notions of delicacy, which in a very vicious age is apt to be fastidious: but the grand outlines soberly interpreted, in the obvious meaning of the allegory, so accord to the affections and inward experience of the lively Christian, that he will hardly ever read and meditate upon them, in a spirit of humble devotion, without feeling a conviction, that no other poem of the same kind, extant in the world, could without manifest violence, be so explained, as to describe the state of his heart, at different times, and to excite admiring, adoring, grateful love to God our Saviour, as this does.

NOTES.

CHAP. I. V. 1. Solomon wrote many songs, all of which were doubtless finished in the most poetical manner: but this sacred allegory alone hath been preserved, and inserted in holy writ. It is "The Song of songs," not only more excellent than all the rest of the songs of Solomon, but than any of those which had been composed by other writers; as it is wholly taken up with describing the glories and excellencies of the divine Saviour, and the love which subsists betwixt him and his redeemed people; which form the interior, most sublime, and heavenly part of true religion.

V. 2. In commenting on this book, I purposely omit most of that which many expositors have, with great labour and ingenuity, adduced, concerning the marriage of Solomon with Pharaoh's daughter, a marriage-feast of seven or more, days continuance, and various dramatical arrangements, adapted to these views of the subject. It does not appear to me, that a satisfactory proof has been given of any such intention in the writer. Solomon indeed married Pharaoh's daughter, soon after his accession to the throne, (Notes, 1 Kings iii. 1. 2 Chr. viii. 11.) but very little is said in the history concerning this transaction; so that the most of that which is confidently advanced about it is mere conjecture, the fruit of a lively invention. The book itself gives not the smallest intimation about Pharaoh's daughter; for the mention of the horses in Pharaoh's chariot, and the pensive coming up out of the wilderness, (a wilderness lying between Egypt and Canaan,) will hardly be considered as arguments, by impartial reasoners. We might as well insist on it that she came from Syria, or Moab, because the Bridegroom calls her to come from Lebanon and from Hermon. (iv. 8.) No doubt many allusions are made to the customs then in use at marriages; and so there are in some
THE SONG OF SOLOMON.

THERE can be no reasonable doubt but that Solomon was the writer of this book, as well as of the two which precede: and that it was always looked upon as a holy book, treating of some spiritual and divine matter, appears from its being placed among the rest of that kind (Bp. Patrick).—It is indeed evident, that it was received among the canonical books of the Jews, (probably by Ezra, an inspired writer) soon after the Babylonish captivity; and that it formed a part of that sacred volume, which, in the time of Christ, was called “the Scriptures,” and “the oracles of God”—It does not indeed appear that it was expressly quoted by any writer of the new Testament; yet the coincidence of its general argument, and of particular sentiments, with many passages in both the old and new Testament, is well worthy of consideration. (Ps. xlv. Is. liv. 5. lx. 10. lxii. 4, 5. Hos. ii. 16—20. Matt. ix. 15. xxii. 2. xxv. 1—11. John iii. 29. 2 Cor. xi. 2. Eph. v. 23—27. Rev. xix. 7—9. xxi. 2. 9. xxii. 17.) (Compare also i. 4. with John vi. 41.—iv. 7. with Eph. v. 27.—v. 2. with Rev. iii. 20.—vii. 1. with Is. lii. 7. Eph vi. 15.—viii. 11. with Is v. 1—7. Matt. xxxi. 33. 43.—viii. 14. with Rev. xxii. 20.) This coincidence, joined with the general testimony both of the Jewish and Christian church, through a long succession of ages; (with but few exceptions, and those not peculiarly decided in respect of evangelical truth and piety,) gives the book a very high sanction, not only as genuine, but also as divinely inspired.—It may perhaps also appear to the attentive and serious reader, that the allegory itself is a kind of prophecy; and that particular passages, soberly explained, according to the known rules of interpreting allegories, are prophetic of the coming of Christ in our nature, the abolition of the Mosaic dispensation, the calling of the Gentiles, and the enlargement of the church, (ii. 9. 17. vii. 8, 9;) and more than this cannot be expected from the nature of the composition.—We learn from the sacred historian, that Solomon wrote above a thousand songs; this, however, alone has been preserved as “The song of songs,” the most excellent of songs; and though, as a poetical composition, it is allowed by the best judges to be finished in the highest style of elegance and beauty; yet the pious reader will be apt to think, that it was thus distinguished on another and superior account; namely, the excellency of the subject, and the admirable way in which it is treated. Learned men have bestowed much pains in showing the occasion on which Solomon wrote this sacred poem: and most of them imagine, that it was composed on his marriage with Pharaoh’s daughter; but this is doubtful, (Note i. 2.) nor is it certain that it was written so early in his reign; for some think that the tower of Lebanon was not built till a considerable time after that event. (vii. 4.) In short, this song is a divine allegory in the form of a pastoral, which represents the reciprocal love betwixt Christ and his church, under figures taken from the relation and affection which subsist betwixt a bridegroom and his espoused bride; an emblem continually employed in Scripture. It hath some reference to the state of the Jewish church, as waiting for the coming of the promised Messiah: but it likewise accords to the fellowship betwixt Christ and true believers in every age. In order properly to understand it, we must consider the Redeemer as loving and beloved of his church. The marriage-contract is already ratified, but the completion of this blessed union is reserved for the heavenly state. Here on earth the believer loves and rejoices in an unseen Saviour, and seeks his happiness from his spiritual presence; Christ manifests himself to him as he doth not unto the world: and these visits are earnest and foretastes of heavenly joy. But they are interrupted, suspended, or varied on many accounts: they are often lost by negligence or other sins, and can only be recovered by humble repentance and renewed diligence; yet the love on both sides remains unchanged, as to its principle, though varied in the expressions of it.
These things are represented in a sort of dialogue; in which the church speaks of Christ, or to him; and he answers, and addresses the church: and the daughters of Jerusalem, (who seem to denote such as are inquiring after this salvation,) are frequently addressed, and reply; thus the varying experiences and correspondent duties, of the believer, are delineated in a very animating and edifying manner. But the book should be read with great abstraction of mind from outward things, and with much prayer: lest the carnal passions should be kindled, instead of the spiritual affections being invigorated. And, as it is impossible for any one to enter profitably into the meaning of the inspired writer, who has no spiritual experience of the subject; so an ungodly man will seldom read it with advantage, or indeed without detriment: nor is it any objection to the excellency and usefulness of this sacred poem, to allow that it is peculiarly capable of becoming "a savour of death unto death," to "those who wrest the Scriptures to their own destruction." The spiritual meaning, that is, the instruction intended to be given by the Holy Spirit speaking by Solomon, should then be principally inquired after: and too minute investigation of the external images, under which it is couched, or of the circumstances and arrangement of the poem, (according to the rules of modern criticism,) will, I apprehend, be found rather unfavourable to edification, than conducive to it. No doubt many expressions in it are very difficult to us, both as to the literal meaning, and the spiritual instruction intended by them, if such were intended: and some descriptions must not be judged by modern notions of delicacy, which in a very viscous age is apt to be fastidious: but the grand outlines soberly interpreted, in the obvious meaning of the allegory, so accord to the affections and inward experience of the lively Christian, that he will hardly ever read and meditate upon them, in a spirit of humble devotion, without feeling a conviction, that no other poem of the same kind, extant in the world, could without manifest violence, be so explained, as to describe the state of his heart, at different times, and to excite admiring, adoring, grateful love to God our Saviour, as this does.

The title, 1. The church, (or the believer,) desires of Christ the tokens of his love, praises him, and expresses her delight in communion with him; confesses that her comeliness is very defective; complains that she had met with ill treatment, and prays to be directed by Christ, and the restoring place of his people, 2—7. He instructs her to follow the footsteps of his flock, and comforts her with commendations and promises, 8—11. Mutual gratulations, and professions of love betwixt Christ and the church, 12—17.

The *Song of songs, which is *Solomon's.

2 Let *him kiss me with the kisses of his mouth: for *thy *love is better than *wine.

NOTES.

CHAP. I. V. 1. Solomon wrote many songs, all of which were doubtlessly finished in the most poetical manner: but this sacred allegory alone hath been preserved, and inserted in holy writ. It is "The Song of songs," not only more excellent than all the rest of the songs of Solomon, but than any of those which had been composed by other writers; as it is wholly taken up with describing the glories and excellencies of the divine Saviour, and the love which subsists betwixt him and his redeemed people: which form the interior, most sublime, and heavenly part of true religion.

V. 2. In commenting on this book, I purposely omit most of that which many expositors have, with great labour and ingenuity, adduced, concerning the marriage of Solomon with Pharaoh's daughter, a marriage-feast of several, or more, days continuance, and various dramatical arrang saying for some tokens of love, which is expressed under the metaphor of a kiss. But there is no mention at all made of the name, condition, or beauty of the person, whose love is desired; nor any account of the beginning or progress of this desire: but he, (Solomon,) makes her burst out on a sudden, and abruptly, into these words, "Let him kiss me with the kisses of his mouth;" that he might the more artificially describe the nature and force of divine love; which, when it possesses the mind, snatcheth it so from itself, that it is wholly in him that it loves. It thinks of nothing else, wishes nothing, speaks of nothing, but this alone; and imagines that every body else thinks of the same, and knows of whom it speaks." (Lam. iii. 1. John xx. 15.) (Bp. Patrick.) The kisses of his mouth, evidently mean those cheering assurances of reconciliation and endured love with which believers are from time to time favoured, especially when deeply humbled for their sins; in the midst of their fears and distresses they obtain such discoveries of the Redeemer's glory and grace, and of his power and willingness to save, as dispel their sorrows, and fill them "with peace and joy in believing," and cause them "to abound in hope by the power of the Holy Ghost." Of these sweet consolations the spouse here speaks, and longs for their renewal, increase, and continuance. And then addressing herself to him, as if present, of whom she before spake as absent, she adds, "for thy love is better than wine." The assurance, the pledges, the consolations of the love of Christ, producing reciprocal love to him, give higher and more exquisite pleasures, than can flow from the exhilaration of wine, or from any animal indulgence.
3 Because of the savour of thy good ointments, thy name is as ointment poured forth, therefore do the virgins love thee.

4 Draw me, we will run after thee:

V. 3. The glorious excellencies of the Redeemer's person and character; the union of the Holy Spirit without measure; the condescension and love of his grace, taking in behalf of sinners; the suitableness and preciousness of his righteousness, stoning, and mediates, and of all the offices he sustains for our benefit, render his name more pleasant to the believer's heart, than the costliest ancient or perfume could be to his senses. The more the truths concerning Christ are examined or explained by the preaching of the Gospel, or by reading and meditation, the higher delight in his excellencies is excited: even as the fragrance of the ointment is most perceived, when by pouring it forth the house is filled with its odour. On these accounts, all incorrupt and upright souls, (4.) love the Lord Jesus, in proportion to the degree of their purity, simplicity, and entire devotion unto the worship and service of God. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 4. The thoughts of the excellency of Christ, may be supposed here to remind the spouse of her want of conformity to him; and she longs to follow him more nearly, and more like him, and more drawn off from all other objects. But she feels also her inability to this, without his special grace: and therefore entreats him to "draw her", especially by the quickening influences of his Spirit; and then she will "run after him," in the ways of holy obedience. Nay, she says, "we will run after thee," intimating, perhaps, that and should then be enabled to keep up with those believers who now are far before her in love and holiness; or that she should be enabled to induce and encourage others to run in the same blessed course. Such expressions seem not to have much meaning in any literal interpretation. "The whole verse may be understood of this manner: the first words, "Draw me," are the voice of the spouse; the next, "We will run after thee," the words of the chorus of virgins; and then she speaks again: "The king hath brought me into his chambers;" and then they express their joy, "We will be glad and rejoice in thee." (Bp. Patrick.) Some here consider the spouse as the ancient church of Israel, praying for the Saviour's coming; and the virgins, (2) as converts from among the Gentiles; and which would then join themselves in vast numbers to the believers of the Jews, and with great acclivity follow him as his zealous disciples. We learn from the other part of the verse, that the person before spoken of was the king, even that King of Israel, whom Solomon in all his glory feebly represented. The spouse had experienced the comforts of his condescending love and gracious presence; and as she expected to be more endeared and intimate communion with him; and, with all her affections, resolved to rejoice in him, "remembering his love (or loves, the token and expression of his love,) more than wine." Yea, not only we, but all "they who up rightly love thee," will thus rejoice in thee. (Marg. Reading.)

V. 5, 6. The daughters of Jerusalem, may here mean such persons as associate with believers, and favour the cause of the Gospel, but are not yet established or experienced in that faith: though some consider them as part of the Jewish professed church; and others as "foreign congregations," which is not at all probable. The spouse, however, aims to prevent them from being stumbled by what they witnessed of her circumstances. In some respects she was black as the weather-beaten tents of the Arabian shepherds: but in others, she was comely as the magnificent curtains in the palaces of Solomon. The original word signifies dark, as the early dawn. The believer is indeed black by nature: but he is comely, as renewed in part by grace, to the holy image of God: still, however, he is deformed with great remains of sin: but comely, as "accepted in the Beloved," and made the righteousness of God in him. He is contemptible and base in the eyes of men; but honourable and excellent in the judgment of God. He is often poor, unlearned, of mean abilities, and employed in low occupations, for which men despise him: but he is a king and a priest unto God, walks with him, and is his child and the heir of his eternal glory. The visible church also is deformed by a large intermixtion of hypocrites; and by manifold scandals, heresies, divisions, and controversies, which prevail in almost every part of it: yet the invisible church, which consists of the remnant of true believers, forms a holy nation, a peculiar people, zealous of good works. Some of these things may here be implied: but it is more immediately meant, that the afflictions of believers and the persecutions of the church, render them base in man's esteem, but comely in the eyes of the Lord. The spouse therefore advises the daughters of Jerusalem not to look at her, neither to disdain her on account of her infirmities or external meanness and distresses, or to take any prejudice against religion on that account. If they saw her black, it was because "the sun had looked upon her:" that is, she had endured temptation and persecutions for her relation to Christ. Men, brethren, in nature, or hypocritical professors, brethren in name, were enraged at her, because of the favour shown her, and her attachment to her Beloved: and they had compelled her to endure the greatest hardships, and do the most unbearable drudgery; and this, among other painful effects, had proved a temptation to her, to neglect in some measure her own duty and the care of her soul, and thus had tended in every way to mar her comeliness. It would have been very strange for the Pharisees to introduce his favourite queen, speaking in this manner to her attendants. It has indeed been imagined, that Pharaoh's daughter, having early embraced the true religion, was persecuted for her religion by her brothers, and driven to the south of Egypt, where by keeping the vineyards she acquired a tawny colour, so that she neglected her own vineyard, that is, her beauty or her fortune: and that Solomon, hearing of her piety and sufferings, sent for her and married her. A lively intention may easily thus make history, or write novels: but the Scripture is silent. The whole is highly improbable. "Solomon made affinity with Pharaoh and took Pharaoh's daughter." (1 Kings iii. 1.) This looks more like a political transaction between Pharaoh and Solomon, than such a marriage of vehement and disinterested affection, as the supposition implies.

V. 7. The spouse next addresses herself to Christ, as one desirous of distinguishing himself with his holy rest and consolations, and the false peace and confidence of hypocrites. She requests to be instructed in what places he was used to feed his flock, and to shelter them from the noonday sun of persecution, or temptation, that she might seek the same holy refuge: and not be tempted, or, even appear like, to join those companies who follow corrupt teachers and hold erroneous tenets, who indeed profess to... be the companions or friends of Christ, but are rather his rivals, and set up an interest in opposition to him.—
Weary of wandering uncertainly after those who pretend to thy Spirit, but mislead such as are guided by them.(Bp. Patrick.) Whom thou hast called to the dignity of thy pastors, and they set forth their own dreams instead of thy doctrine.

V. 8. It is evidently absurd to suppose this verse to be the language of the attendant virgins, or maidservants conversus; who yet were able to instruct the spouse in her perplexity, and even answer the requests she had addressed to her Beloved. No doubt this Bridegroom is here introduced, as counselling his faithfull spouse with an encouraging commendation of her spiritual beauty, as compared with the rest of Adam's fallen race. If she were at a loss, and feared lest she should mistake some company of hypocrites, or heretics for his chosen children; she could not do better than to consider the examples of the most approved believers in the successive ages of the church, with the doctrines which they maintain: and to follow their steps: without regarding those who pretended to new discoveries, and taught opinions, either unknown in other ages, or condemned as heresy; and to mark such pastors as simply kept the beaten track, the good old way; to attend on their ministry, with her children, or young converts; and to instruct such as were put under her care according to their example. The literal meaning of this, as applied to Pharaoh's daughter, is not especially stated, by those who adhere to that mode of interpretation.

V. 9. Egypt was noted for beautiful and swift horses: those of Pharaoh's chariots would doubtless be the most excellent of the kind; and in their magnificent trappings would appear to the greatest advantage. This allusion therefore may mean, that in the judgment of Christ believers are the excellent of the earth; and that the harmony, which subsists among them, renders them peculiarly pleasant to him, and fitted to be the instruments of promoting his glory. The simile, as applied to a beautiful female, though an instance or two not wholly unlike it may be found in ancient writers, seems not very apt.

The Septuagint renders the words for company of horses in 'the singular, my mare in Pharaoh's chariots'; and some think this is the meaning of the original.

V. 10. The spiritual gifts and graces, which Christ bestows upon his church and every true believer, and which render their professed faith, and their conversation among men, ornamental and becoming, seem to be here described by the external ornaments then in use: and not without reference to the ornaments used in the harnesses of horses, especially in the royal chariots.

V. 11. This verse is generally supposed to be the reply of the attendant virgins, who thus engaged to prepare for the spouse the ornaments with which she was about to be decorated: but as the increase and perfection of the church's spiritual adorning is the gift and work of God; it may be doubted whether this is not to be considered in respect of the new creation, as in some respect similar to the remarkable words of the Creator, when about to form our first parents. (Note, Gen. i. 26.)

V. 12-14. The spouse here again speaks, "Whilst the King sitteth at his table," (or meets his people in those ordinances in which they feast with him,) her spikenard, or precious ointment, sendeth forth its smell; that is, the grace received from his fulness springs forth into lively exercises of faith, love, gratitude, and adoration, which are pleasant and honourable to him. Yet Christ himself, and not his gifts, are most precious to her: and she resolves to lodge him near, or in her heart, as a bundle of myrrh or other fragrant gums are laid in the bosom, all the night, or during the darkness and troubles of life. For Christ was to her far more precious and delightful, than the most valued productions of the field, or vineyard.—The most precious dard cometh from the spikes of a very small contemptible shrub; which may be considered as an emblem of the sweet odour of the Gospel, with which 'such men and despicable persons, as the apostles were in themselves, filled the whole world.' (Bp. Patrick.) It is not certainly known what the word rendered rendereth signifies: but it seems to have been some very costly perfume; and perfumes have always been immensely more in request in those eastern regions, than they are at present in this country. (MARG. Ref.) The original word, however, signifies also an adornment; and some Jewish writers have rendered the clause, 'the man who propitiates all things,' with apparent reference to the Messiah.

V. 15. Here Christ again speaks, commending his beloved, as fair; especially, as having eyes like the dove, which are gentle, loving, and pure. This may imply her spiritual discernment, watchfulness, the purity and simplicity of her affection for him, and her mild and harmless conduct in the world.
16 Behold, thou art fair, my beloved, yea, pleasant: also our bed is green.

V. 16, 17. Here the spouse answers, professing her admiring love and gratitude to the Saviour, and her delight in his union with him. By their bed or carpet being green, may be meant the efficacy of his ordinances, to render believers flourishing in holiness, and to convert sinners: and the beams of cedar and rafters of fir, may mean the stability of the new covenant, and the incorruptible nature of those mansions, in which believers will dwell with their Beloved for ever. The eastern nations generally sleep on carpets, and recline at meals on couches covered with them.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-6.

The things which are most intimately connected with the person and love of the divine Saviour, have super-eminent excellency; for, communion with him in faith and love, is as the marrow of religion. They who have tasted that he is gracious, long for renewed pledges of his kindness; and the more they experience of his grace and joy, the more fervent will be their desires. This sweet experience of his grace, gradually weans them from other objects, and disposers them to renounce all for his sake and at his command. The pleasures which arise from the most exquisite gratifications of every sense, convey to the mind a very faint and inadequate idea of that delight with which the believer, in some favoured moments, contemplates the Redeemer's excellencies, and his love which "passeth knowledge." This renders the preaching of the Gospel, the written word, prayer, praise, meditation, and Christian conversation so agreeable to him: then the name of Christ becomes "as ointment poured forth;" and the more the subject is discussed, the more glorious and lovely he appears. These are "joys which a stranger intermeddeth not;" but every holy creature in heaven and earth loves the incarnate Saviour, in proportion to his love to the Father, and of his righteous service, and the further we are removed from all inordinate love of created objects, the more precious will Christ be to our hearts. But the more clearly we discern his glory, the more deeply sensible shall we be of our inability to follow him in a suitable manner; and at the same time the more desirous of doing it; thus experiencing that "we cannot do the things that we would," our prayers for the effectual drawings of his grace will become more fervent and frequent; and we shall not only desire to run after him ourselves, but to animate others to do the same. Every sweet season of near communion with Christ will endear him more to our souls, and increase our joy and gladness in his favour and worship: we shall recollect with regret the comforts that we do not at present possess, and long and wait for their renewal, even more than sensualists do for the return of their unsatisfying joys. Our honourable thoughts of Christ will ever be productive of lovely thoughts of ourselves, so that nothing will appear estimable or amiable in us, except as interested in his righteousness and partakers of his holiness: and these we shall deem more preferable comeliness, than all the external glory which surrounded king Solomon. It is indeed lamentable that so many things should be visibly destructive in the church; as they had some in prejudices, and are stumbling-blocks to others. Yet it must needs be that offences come; but we be to them by whom they come." We should therefore endeavour so to explain these subjects, as to prevent the effects of undeniable blemishes; and caution inquirers not to look on us, to form their judgment of Christianity, but on the example, precepts, and truths of Jesus, where they may view it uncorrupted. All that supposed deformity of the church, however, which results from want of wealth, learning, or secular power, or from her afflicted and persecuted condition, is in fact her glory and beauty: nay, the Saviour himself hath no form or comeliness to the carnal mind, that it should desire him. But it seldom happens, that we are much tempted or persecuted, without in some measure deviating from our duty; and without interceding with diaspures, or employing not properly belonging to us; thus Satan prevails with us to keep other men's vineyards, and to neglect our own. And how dreadful is it, when those that should be labourers in the Lord's vineyard, are so taken up with worldly employments, as to neglect the care of their own souls, as well as the souls of those committed to them! Indeed even such ministers, as are busy in their proper work, should be very watchful over themselves; or their own vineyard will perhaps be worse tended than those of their hearers.

V. 7-17.

If the Lord Jesus be indeed our Beloved, we shall be greatly afraid of being drawn aside and imposed upon; and have frequent occasions to beseech him, as the great and good Shepherd, to guide us into his fruitful pastures and pleasant resting-places: nay, we shall fear even seeming to belong to those false teachers who beguile unstable souls, and draw away disciples after them; who pretend to be the friends, but in truth are the rivals, of the Bridesgroom. If we seek his direction, in order to follow it, he will express his approbation, and preserve us from delusion; he will guide us in the path, that is beaten with the footsteps of his flock in every age; and satisfy us that we are "followers of them who, through faith and patience, inherit the promises:" he will show such as humbly ask him, who are those pastors that he employs to feed his sheep and lambs: and he will teach them to attend on their instruction, and to bring their families to partake of it also, and to assist their weaker brethren in forming their judgment in these important matters. The more humble and deficient of ourselves we are, the better will the Lord approve of us: he delights in the graces which he confers, and applauds the good that he enables us to do: he will perfect his own good work where it is truly begun; and continually add to the spiritual adorning of those whom he is beautifying with salvation. Communion with Christ transforms us into his image; the lively exercise of spiritual affections has a fragrant of the same kind with "the savour of his good ointments poured forth." But he himself is
CHAP. II.

The glory of Christ, the excellency of the church, and the mutual ings of love between them, 1—7. The church hears the voice of her Beloved, and has discoveries of his glory, 8, 9. His gracious invitations and encouragements; and his command to guard against subtle and mischievous enemies, 10—15. The church glories in her relation to him, and longs for the completion of the sacred union, 16, 17.

AM* the rose of Sharon, and the lily of the valleys.

every thing to flourishing Christians: they desire that Christ may dwell in their heart by faith and love, and prepare them for himself by renewing them fully to his own likeness. The increase of this disposition renders them more and more the objects of his delight: and he especially approves of the meekness, purity, and holy love, which they derive from the dove-like Spirit of God. Thus the sacred flame is fanned and fed; and the soul daily having fellowship with the Father and the Son, by the Spirit, grows in holiness, and enjoys a lively hope of an incorruptible, undefiled, and unfading inheritance in the blessed world above. O Lord, visit our souls more and more with this salvation!

NOTES.

CHAP. II. V. 1, 2. It is most obvious to suppose that the Bridegroom here speaks, and declares his own preciousness and condescending love. The rose is considered as the chief of flowers; and it is probable that Sharon was eminent for roses of beautiful hue and peculiar fragrance. Thus Christ, in his person, character, and mediation, combines every excellency in the highest degree; and is most delightsome and refreshing to the souls of his people.

--The lily, which adorns the lowly valleys, is an apt emblem of his humility in assuming our nature, and his lowliness of heart; and also of his dwelling and communing with the poor of this world, and the poor in spirit, in this vale of sin and sorrow; and likewise of his spotless purity. His church too is as the lily among the thorns. They that believe in Christ partake of his excellencies. (Bp. Patrick.) They cannot resemble him in his majesty or mediatorial excellency; but they do, in a measure, as to his lowliness and purity. Yet in this world they are like a lily surrounded, and crowded, and wounded, by worthless thorns; an emblem of the character of the wicked, their injuries to believers, and of their fitness for the fire of destruction. Christ describes his church under the emblem of a beautiful woman whom he hath espoused, and she describes himself as one of the Sons of men: and the rest of mankind are called "the daughters" and "the sons;" being indeed originally of the same family; but bearing a very different character, and having formed a contrary alliance.

V. 3. The Spouse here speaks. The apple-tree (or citron tree, as some suppose,) is not so stately as the cedar or the fir-tree, but its fruit is peculiarly valuable. Christ appeared in exterior meanness, but that was the most transcendent preciousness; and the fruits of his abasement and sufferings endear him to every believer, far above all the most admired characters in the world. A traveller scorched by the noon-day sun, would gladly shelter himself under the branches of a spreading apple-tree, and refresh himself with its fruit. Thus the believer remembers seasons, when remorse of conscience, and fear of deserved wrath, with the temptations of Satan, and the injuries of the world, have dismayed or distressed him, and left him without any conceivable refuge, except that revealed in Christ Jesus. To this he fled with earnest desires, and under it he sat down, or sheltered himself; while the person and peace that it afforded him were delightful to his heart; and the consolations of the Spirit of adoption, as fruits from this tree of life, were sweet to his taste, in proportion to his former terror, humiliation, and affliction, and to the degree in which he was weaned from earthly objects. Some explain this of the true God, as pre-eminent above all the idols of the heathen; and of the comforts of true religion: but it is only in Christ that the true God is the Refuge and Comforter of sinners; and his simile is vastly more appropriate, if applied to the Lord Jesus, in whom the carnal eye sees "no form or comeliness," but faith discerns everything glorious and precious.

V. 4. The image is here varied. Christ is the Author and Finisher of our faith, as well as the Ransomer for our sins. He brings the soul to seek and enjoy those comforts that are communicated through his ordinances, which are as a banqueting house where his saints feast with him. (Marg. Ref.) The standard being erected and the banner displayed, the soldiers resort to it, and by keeping near it, perform their duty to their leader, and keep themselves safe. The love of Christ, manifested in the humiliation unto death, is the banner that he displays by his word. To this the believer resorts, and by it is directed and encouraged; and thus he obtains the benefit of salvation, is animated to resist every enemy, and finds effectual protection.

V. 5. The spouse, being overcome with love, cries
6 His left hand is under my head, and his right hand doth embrace me.

7 I charge you, O ye daughters of Jerusalem, by the roes, and by the hind of the field, that ye stir not up, nor awake my love, till he please.

8 ¶ The voice of my beloved! behold, he cometh leaping upon the mountains, skipping upon the hills.

9 My beloved is like a roe, or a young hart: behold, he standeth behind our wall, he looketh forth at the windows, and showeth himself through the lattice.

out for refreshments and supports; for cordials, perfumes, or cooling foods. "Stay me with those flagon, comfort me with those apples," or citrons; namely, the flagon in the banqueting house, and the fruit of the tree before mentioned. The word rendered flagon is so translated, with evident propriety, where else it is used in Scripture. (2 Sam. vi. 19. 1 Chr. xvi. 3. Hos. iii. 1.) The love of believers for the unseen Saviour can never be satisfied by anything short of the fruition of him in heaven; this renders the world an uneasy place to them; and when grace is in lively exercise, they become even faint and sick of this love; desiring to be dissolved, and to be with Christ, which is far better. But their hunger and thirst are stayed with foretastes of that felicity, in the fulfilment of the promises, that are as flagon full of rich wine, as apples from the tree of life: and nothing but these cordials and provisions can allay their spiritual appetite; for these therefore they most earnestly seek and pray. (Marg. Rf.)

V. 6. This is a representation of the tenderest affection of a husband for his wife, when he sees her in danger to faint; and being applied to Christ and his Church, sets forth his readiness to succour us in all our needs, by the power of his Spirit. (Bp. Patrick.) Christ, though absent, as to sight and full fruition, is present to the faith of his people; and the spouse here thankfully acknowledges, that he graciously comforted her, when ready to faint with earnest longings after him, or under troubles and temptations.

V. 7. According to our translation, these are the words of the spouse, concerning her Beloved, who had fallen asleep, while employed in supporting and comforting her. In his sense, the verse implies, that she, afraid of terminating his gracious visit by any disturbance, charges the daughters of Jerusalem not to awake him. We grieve the Spirit of God by wrong tempers, and others may ruffle and compose us by their unseasonable intervention. The comforts of communion with God are but short-lived on earth; but care is required not to terminate them prematurely; and every thing should be avoided, which molesteth, or damps the exercise of faith and love. But many suppose the verse is the language of Christ concerning the spouse; and the original, though capable of either sense, seems rather to favour this interpretation.

V. 8. ¶ My beloved spoke, and said unto me, Rise up, my love, my fair one, and come away.

10 For, lo, the winter is past, the rain is over and gone; the flowers appear on the earth; the voice of the turtle is heard in our land:

13 The fig-tree putteth forth her green figs, and the vines with the tender grape give a good smell. Arise, my love, let us go forth to the vineyards; let us see if the vines be flourished, if the fig-tree have blossomed, and the pears of the olive be in flower.

15 ¶ The voice of my beloved! behold, he cometh leaping upon the mountains, skipping upon the hills.

16 My beloved is like a roe, or a young hart; behold, he standeth behind our wall, he looketh forth at the windows, and showeth himself through the lattice.

18 I charge you, O ye daughters of Jerusalem, by the roes, and by the hind of the field, that ye stir not up, nor awake my love, till he please.

19 Again will I lay up my life as a widow; I will defile myself as a woman that is unclean. But the Beloved has withdrawn; but with rapture she hears his voice, and perceives the tokens of his return, leaping upon on over, the mountains, skipping upon the hills. This may apply to the ancient believers' expectation of the promised Saviour coming in the flesh: they heard his voice by the prophets, and every age gave fuller intimations of his approach. Though he seemed to delay, yet he was coming with speed and alacrity: nor could any obstructions prevent or retard his approach; but he would surmount them, as the hart does the mountains and hills. In this sense, the wall behind which he stood, the windows through which he looked, and the lattice through which he showed some glimpses of his glory, represent the types and ceremonies of the law, which concealed him from unbelievers; but through which his eyes were upon believers, and they became acquainted with him. It is equally applicable to his coming at death to receive the believer's soul to glory, and at judgment to complete our salvation: and in this sense, the same expressions represent our communion with him by faith, and through his word and ordinances; and the partial transient views which we have of his glory, compared with those of the saints in light. It may also be explained of his spiritual visits to his people, who are mourning for his absence, and for their sins which occasioned it; and in this sense, the latter verse means, that Christ is near to watch over his people, and to give them some tokens of his favour, when they have not the full joy of his salvation.

V. 10—13. This most poetical description of the approach of spring, in which the spouse speaks of Christ, as inviting her to walk abroad with him, may be variously applied. It may have some reference to the abrogation of the more dark and discouraging dispensation of Moses, for that of Christ; but it seems also to mean the sinner's conversion. Christ invites the new convert, by the discoveries of his love, to arise from sloth and despondency; and to leave sin and worldly vanities, for the sake of his holy fellowship. The winter, that is now past, may either mean the years spent in ignorance and sin, unfruitful and uncomfortable; or the gloomy season, attended with storms and tempests, which followed his conviction of guilt and danger, and preceded his peace and joy in believing. "The flowers" may denote the opening blossoms of holy affection and desires; "the time of the singing of birds" may mean his first grateful songs of praise; "the voice of the turtle," then first heard in the land, may signify, the first comforts of the witnessing, sealing Spirit of God; "the green figs. and tender grapes," or birds, which are pleasant to the smell, represent the first immature fruits of righteousness, which promise a future valuable increase: and all these encouraging tokens and evidences of divine favour, are employed as motives to the soul, to follow Christ more entirely. The passage may also be accommodated to the believer's renewed comforts, after a season of temptations and disconsolations; and the renewed peace of the church, after sore persecutions; and to the completion of his journey in heaven.

G 2

V. 14. Christ is still the speaker. The spouse, conscious of her unworthiness, and ashamed of her former sins and the imperfection of her present services, had hidden herself in the clefts of the rock, or in some retired place, as declining his gracious invitation. "Thou that art ashamed of thy sins, come and show thyself unto me." In this is represented a mixture of humility and unbelief common in the experience of true believers. But Christ speaks to her, as his dove, gentle, harmless, loving and faithful, and entreats her to come forth: for he took great delight in her, as a true penitent; he deemed her countenance comely, and was well pleased to behold it; and her voice sweet, and delighted to hear it, when employed in confession, prayer, and grateful praise. Some, however, understand the verse, of the church (or believers), fleeing from persecution into the most retired places, (as the dove flees into the recesses of the rock from the birds of prey,) yet there encouraged to present her worship, as assured of the tender affection and gracious acceptance of her Beloved, though despised and hated by the world. The faithful and loving dove is an apt emblem of the true church, as espoused to Christ; and by her conformity to him through the sanctification of the Spirit, she is well pleasing in his sight.

V. 15. The new convert had before been represented as a vine with tender grapes: (13) and the foxes, it seems, used to injure the vines and destroy the grapes by trampling on them, as well as the wild beasts by devouring them, foxes, that spoil the vines: for our vines have tender grapes.

16. "My Beloved is mine, and I am his." He fedeth among the lilies. 17. "Until the day break, and the shades flee away, turn, my Beloved, and be thou like a roe, or a young hart, upon the mountains of Bethel.

I require all those, that act by authority from me,—to use their early diligence to discover and confute the sophistry of deceivers, who craftily insinuate their false doctrines into weak and incautious souls, and thereby seduce those who are newly converted; and but inform in the faith." (Bp. Patrick.) False prophets are, by Ezekiel, compared to foxes; and in many particulars, false teachers and heretics resemble this unprofitable creature. Yet the inroads they make on the church, and the destruction they occasion, seem too evident and formidable, to be described by young foxes: and those who consider the verse as exclusively a command of Christ to his servants, to oppose heretics, appear reduced to some difficulty, to exclude the idea of persecution. Perhaps, in general, it is a caution against every thing, however plausible, which tends to hinder the prosperity of the church and the fruitfulness of believers, and against every particular. Whatever wastes time, squanders money, or engrosses a large share of attention, and tends to the neglect of the means of grace, is of this kind. and when the pursuit, or study, (such as music, painting, and many other things of the same nature,) is not directly criminal in itself; it spoils the vine, and mars its tender grapes, with the unsuspected subtility of the fox. The first rising of sinful thoughts and desires, and the beginnings of those trifling pursuits, are like the little foxes, which if not taken will spoil the vine. Trifling visits, which waste much time, incur great expense, put the mind out of frame for devotion; and intrude the hours that should be employed in meditation, self-examination, searching the Scripture, and secret prayer, are peculiarly injurious in this respect: and no good can arise from such unnecessary intercourse with worldly people or with superficial professors, whose company is still more prejudicial. Specious deviations from the truth, which make a little allowance for the pride, avarice, vanity, or indulgence of our hearts, and admit of some measure of conformity to the world; and the course of those who are ever asking, What harm is there in this, or in that? or What need of this or that measure of diligence? are little foxes, which spoil the vine, and which must be taken, and removed out of the way, by private Christians and public teachers, who desire to be, or to see their people, fruitful branches of the living Vine. Even lawful and needful pursuits and recreations, when attended with excess or inexpediency, I choke the word, and it becometh unfruitful; "for our vines have tender grapes." This caution, (whether of the Bridegroom, or the attendants,) must be allowed to come in very abruptly, if our attention be fixed on the external arrangement of a dramatical dialogue.

V. 16, 17. The Spouse here again speaks, as one assured that Christ and all his blessings, are become her's by faith; of which her love to him, and her unrepressed
CHAP. III.

The spouse relates the pains she took to recover the company of her Beloved; his gracious presence, 1—6. Her companions admire his zeal and heavenly affections, 6. All the company unite in admiring the glory of the Beloved, 7—11.

surrender of herself to be his, devoted to his service, in body and soul, formed the sure evidence; and she rejoices, in experiencing that he takes pleasure in visiting and communing with his people, who resemble him in lowliness and purity, and in feeding them in the green pastures of his ordinances; and she begs, that he will continue to favour her with those visits, “till the day break, and the shadows flee away.” This may refer to the shadows of the Jewish dispensation, which were dispelled by the breaking of the Gospel-day, and the rising of the Sun of Righteousness; or to the darkness and shadows of our state on earth, which will shortly be changed for heavenly light and substantial felicity. The word Bether signifies division; and may intimate the removal of every thing, which now divides our souls from him, and from the beatific vision.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—7.

The most distinct and apparently opposite excellencies, centre in our divine Redeemer; and he appears as glorious in his deepest abasement and suffering for us, and in his condescending communion with us, as in his essential majesty and holiness. His people also are excellent, in proportion as they are conformed to him: and the small degree in which the meanest believer on earth resembles Christ, renders him more honourable and amiable than the most accomplished unbeliever; even as the lily is preferable to the prickly thorn. We should, however, remember among whom we dwell, expect to be injured by them, and endeavour to suffer with meekness. The believer, as his judgment matures, will admire the whole of the Redeemer’s character: but he is commonly first attracted by perceiving the suitableness and preciousness of the fruits of his mediation. None of those eminent persons, whose characters and exploits are celebrated by historians, orators, and poets, can pretend to heal a wounded conscience or a broken heart; or to deliver a trembling sinner from the wrath of God and the power of Satan. They may be stately as the cedars of Lebanon; but the lowly Jesus, whose merits and grace bring relief in the hour of deep distress, is unspeakably more lovely in the eyes, and precious to the heart of the true Christian. Every time that he finds deliverance from guilt, fear, temptation, and distress, by faith in his name; and every experience of the sweetness of peace and joy in believing, and of the hope and comfort, which the Spirit of adoption communicates, increases his love to the Author of his eternal salvation. Let us then come, and sit down under his shadow, and abide there: we shall find great delight in so doing, and his fruit will be sweet to our taste: for none despise these joys, but they that never experienced them, and who have no debt to offer them, through their eager pursuit of the vanities of the world. The Lord Jesus hath pur-chasied the feast, and his ordinances are appointed that we may in them partake of it; and the same love which strives and protects us in communicating with him, animates us to venture and suffer for his sake: and with that banner before our eyes, or over our heads, we shall valiantly encounter and surely overcome all our enemies. In proportion as we relish heavenly consolations, our longings after them will increase; and earth would become intolerable to us, were we not stayed with those cordials and first-fruits of glory, until our course be finished. These we should earnestly seek for ourselves and for each other, that we may not faint through the troubles of our way. Even when our consolations do not abound, we have cause to acknowledge, that we have many gracious supports and unmerited mercies from the Lord’s presence with us. Nor should we expect uninterrupted comfort on earth; for the Lord will, when he pleases, leave us to feel how miserable and hopeless we should be without him: but it becomes us to be careful not to bring this trial on ourselves by sins and negligences, or to occasion it to others: for, as a small spire will drive away the timorous hart; so, a little misconduct will grieve the Spirit of God, and interrupt our spiritual consolations. We may therefore rather wonder, that we have so many precious pledges of divine love, than that we so often mourn and are disconsolate, when we reflect on our own want of watchfulness and circumspection.

V. 8—17.

If the Christian so longs for the Lord’s manifested presence and love, and receives every intimation of it with such exultation; and if ancient believers so rejoiced in the prospect of his appearance on earth in our nature: how should we anticipate the complete salvation which will come to our souls at the hour of death, and to our bodies also at the glorious resurrection! For these purposes our Redeemer will come quickly; and we shall soon be with him, and “see him as he is,” and be like him,” and share his glory. In the mean time our mortal flesh, as a wall, intercepts our view of him: but his eye is upon us; and every glimpse we have of him by faith, is intended to render us willing “to be absent from the body, that we may be present with the Lord.” If we have experienced the blessed change which takes place in conversion; if we have obeyed the call of Christ, to arise and follow him, and to leave the world and sin behind, that we may enjoy his love; if we have thus found peace of conscience, and joy in the Holy Ghost; and if the blossoms and fruits, (though but tender and green,) of true holiness, appear in our lives: we need not fear to follow him through any trials and temptations; nor have we any cause to dread his last call by death, to arise, and come away to the full fruition of his love. Even the unripe fruits of holiness are pleasant unto him, whose grace hath produced them; and when we are humble and ashamed of our services, he will approve and commend them. But we should not allow un-
B.C. 1014.

SOLOMON'S SONG.

B. C. 1014.

By night on my bed I sought him whom my soul loveth: I sought him, but I found him not.

I will rise now, and go about the city in the streets, and in the broad ways I will seek him whom my soul loveth; I found him, but I found him not.

The watchmen that go about the city found me: to whom I said, Saw ye him whom my soul loveth?

It was but a little that I passed from them: but I found him whom my soul loveth.

Belief to furnish our self-abasement: our Lord accounts that countenance comely which is pursued with tears of godly sorrow, and those prayers sweet which are the language of a broken heart; and the contrite and penitent are always welcome guests at his table and suppliants at his throne of grace, and should not decline his gracious invitations. Whilst we live here, our desire should be to bring forth plenteously the fruits of righteousness: and careful observers will perceive that the little despised foxes do more harm to the branches of the living vine, than the dreaded wild boars. Plausible errors, trivial omissions, compliances, and indulgences, are more general hindrances to our progress and usefulness, than gross transgressions, or distressing temptations: and Satan and his emissaries do us more harm, as subtle unsuspected deceivers, than as furious persecutors. We should then watch against the first occasions and feeble beginnings of evil, and suppress the first risings of sinful inclinations; destroying the little foxes before they become capable of important mischief. This circumspect conduct conduces greatly to our full assurance of hope: and when it becomes evident that we love Christ, and are his willing people, we shall be sure that he is our loving Saviour. He will also delight in us, as the lilies that he hath planted; and we shall be solaced with his gracious visits, and wait in humble patient hope, till these earthly shadows flee away, and he come swiftly over every separating mountain to take us home unto himself.

NOTES.

CHAP. III. V. 1—5. The circumstances of this narration, (and of one in some respects similar in the fifth chapter,) are so improbable, if applied in the literal meaning, to the newly espoused queen of king Solomon, that, to evade the difficulty, and to maintain the consistency of a dramatic poem on occasion of Solomon's marriage, it has been considered merely as a dream of the spouse. But the narrative gives no infusion of this; so that the supposition only cuts the knot, which it was not found easy to loosen. Some interpreters suppose, that the spouse seeking her Beloved, "by night on her bed," denotes a season of darkness and drowsiness, of dim apprehensions, languid affections, and heartless services. Others accommodate it to a season of affliction. "The church, by night, that is, in troubles, seeketh to Christ, but is not immediately heard." But perhaps solitude and retired meditation are principally intended; as David "remembered God on his bed, and meditated on him in the night-watches," which showed the fervency of his love. Yet the circumstance of the spouse not finding her Beloved, till she sought him in another manner, gives some ground to the opinion, that a degree of slackness and self-indulgence was intended. Being, however, uneasy at her ill success, she was excited to more decided endeavours to recover the communion with him. "The streets and broad ways of the city," seem rather to imply earnestness in all the means of grace, in which the Lord is to be sought; than to mark the distinction between public, social, and private duties. Thus she is represented as seeking her Beloved in every part of the city. But still she did not succeed for a time: for she was further to be humbled, proved, and quickened. She therefore next applied to the watchmen that went about the city, who in this place denote the prophets and faithful ministers who could give proper directions to distressed souls, and earnest inquirers after the Saviour. But upon opening her case to them, and inquiring whether they had seen, and could direct her to her Beloved, she did not receive any immediate satisfaction. This may intimate, that we must not rest in any means, but by faith apply immediately to Christ, if we would succeed with him. At length, however, perhaps through their direction and counsel, she found her Beloved, and then she "held him, and would not let him go," being afraid of losing the comfort of his presence; "until she had brought him into her mother's house, &c." The church at large may be called the Mother of believers; the public ordinances are the chambers, in which they are conceived and born of God: and the Spouse, bringing her Beloved into this house and these chambers, may signify the believer's open profession of his faith, and joining himself to the Lord and his people; with a declaration, expressed or implied, of his intention to walk with them in love and holy obedience. This was done of old, by those who were born Jews and circumcised in infancy, in a constant attention to all their sacrifices and sacred solemnities: and the Lord's Supper especially answers this purpose to Christians. Being now happy in communion with Christ, she renew the charge before given to the daughters of Jerusalem; or Christ renews it respecting the church; for expositors are not agreed on this point. (Note, ii. 7.)

V. 6. These seem to be the words of the daughters of...
CHAPTER III.

7 Behold his bed, which is Solomon's; threescore valiant men are about it, of the valiant of Israel.
8 They all hold swords, being expert in war: every man hath his sword upon his thigh, because of fear in the night.
9 King Solomon made himself a chariot of the wood of Lebanon.
10 He made the pillars thereof of silver, the bottom thereof of gold, the covering of it of purple; the midst thereof being paved with love for the daughters of Jerusalem.
11 Go forth, O daughters of Zion, and behold king Solomon with the crown wherewith his mother crowned him in the day of his espousals, and in the day of the gladness of his heart.

Jerusalem, expressing their admiration at the zeal and fervent love of the Spouse. They inquire "Who this is, that cometh out of the wilderness?" perhaps alluding to the wilderness through which Israel passed, and from which they went up to possess the promised land. But a wilderness is a known emblem of this vain world; the believer comes out of it, when he renounces its friendship, and is delivered from the love of it; and when he leaves its sinful pleasures and pursuits, and refuses compliance with its customs and fashions, that he may seek happiness in communion with God through Jesus Christ. "Pillars of smoke" ascended towards heaven, while the sacrifices were consumed on the altar of burnt-offering; and sweet gums and spices of the merchant were burnt upon the golden altar of incense. This may represent the lively affections, and fervent prayers and praises, and other spiritual sacrifices of believers, ascending to heaven before God, through the atonement and intercession of Christ.—The last clause may be rendered, "more precious, than all the powders of the merchant."

V. 7. 8. The Spouse seems to call on her companions, not to admire her feeble graces and imperfect services, but to Behold her Beloved. As the bed and bedchamber of Solomon were guarded by a number of well armed soldiers, lest he should be disturbed or assaulted in the night: so a guard of angels continually protects the church from the assaults and terrors of her enemies, in the darkest hours, whilst she maintains communion with her Beloved; yea, the Lord himself is her Keeper by day and night. Behold the love which the great King hath to her, having prepared for her all things for her reception into society with himself; of whose royal person and happiness, Solomon himself, in all his glory, is but a figure. Valiant persons encompass him night and day; but not comparable to the power and multitude of that heavenly host, which secure the church in her enjoyments, and take care of her safety. (Bp. Patrick.) This supposes the verse to be a continuation of the admiring language used by the daughters of Jerusalem, concerning the zeal and happiness of the spouse.

V. 9. 10. Here again Solomon is the type of Christ, the King of Israel, and our Prince of Peace. The chariot of cedar, or open carriage, which Solomon had made for himself, may mean the Gospel of Christ; or the everlasting covenant, which he had mediated in our behalf, in which his glory and our felicity are united: the silver pillars, may denote the precious promises and engagements, which are the support and ornament of this covenant; and the security of all believers: the bottom of gold, and the covering of purple, may mean the rich blessings and royal privileges conferred on every believer; and the midst thereof, paved with love, shows that all these blessings spring from the love of God in Christ Jesus to fallen sinners, according to the eternal purpose which he hath purposed in himself, and centre in it. The clause rendered "for the daughters of Jerusalem," may mean "by or from the daughters of Jerusalem." Solomon's carriage was adorned by their needle-work, and the figures, whatever they were, wrought by them, no unapt emblem of Christians adorning the doctrine of God their Saviour in all things.

V. 11. This verse contains the most express allusion to the marriage of Solomon of any in the whole book; but whether to Naamah the Ammonitess, his first wife as far as we know, or to Pharaoh's daughter, or to some other of his wives, is not said. It seems that it was customary in ancient times for the bridegroom, or bride, or both, to wear a nuptial crown: and it may be supposed that Solomon's, on such a joyful occasion, would be very magnificent; and it was put on his head by Bathsheba, O ye daughters of Zion, look upon king Solomon, as he sits solemnly crowned in the day of his greatest royalty and triumph; and compare his highest pomp with the divine magnificence of my Saviour in that day when his blessed marriage shall be fully perfected above, to the eternal rejoicing of himself and his church; and see whether there be any proportion between them. (Bp. Hall.) When the sinner finds peace and joy in believing, and makes an open profession of his faith and love; especially when large multitudes thus join themselves to the Lord, (as was the case on the day of Pentecost;) the happy season may be called the day of the heavenly Bridegroom's espousals, and the day of the gladness of his heart: for espousals are not a secret transaction: but the recognition, before proper witnesses, or publicly, of the mutual consent of the two contracting parties to be united in marriage. The church is the mother of Christ, as to his human nature, that is, he was born within the church; and she crowns him, when through her ordinances believers are thus espoused to him. Then his power and grace are displayed; he sees of the travail of his soul and the purchase of his blood; and these are the trophies and monuments of his glorious victories over the world, sin, Satan, and death. Angels in heaven rejoice over one penitent sinner; saints on earth rejoice and celebrate the Redeemer's praises, when this event is made known to them; she herself rejoices over the redeemed sinner, as in the day of the gladness of his heart: and the daughters of Zion, (every one who is disposed to seek this salvation,) should go forth to behold these things; that they may be encour-BEHOLD, thou art fair, my love; behold, thou art fair; * thou hast doves’ eyes within thy locks: * thy hair raged in believing, and in making profession of their faith, by observing how glorious our King appears in saving sinners.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Our remaining sinfulness, the snares of Satan, and the fascinations of the world, may lull even true believers into comparative negligence: yet if indeed Christ be our Beloved, we shall not utterly intermit our search of him. But if our affections become cold, and our attendance on ordinances remiss and unfrequent, it is salutary for us to lose our assurance, and to be distressed with fears and doubts. This gentle rebuke of our folly and ingratitude, which merit severer punishment, is intended to excite us to seek him more earnestly; nor can a true believer deliberately rest in any thing short of the enjoyment of the love of Christ. When we are stirred up to use diligence, in attending on divine ordinances; if we do not immediately succeed, the delay should not discourage but humble us; and lead us to closer self-examination, and more frequent and earnest prayer: nor can either new converts or returning backsliders expect to find peace and comfort in any other way. They who are troubled in mind, should open their case to the watchmen of the holy city, and desire their assistance in seeking Christ and the joy of his salvation: but such as are not experimentally acquainted with him themselves, cannot point him out to others. We should use, but not depend on, instruments and means: and though the Lord will prove our faith and love; yet he will be found of all who seek him with humble and persevering diligence; and days, weeks, months, or even years of sorrowful waiting, will soon be compensated by the joy of having found him whom our souls love. And not only will that joy, be proportioned to our desire after his favour, and our regret for having forfeited the comfort of it: but our future watchfulness will be increased in the same measure. We should inform all, who fear God, what He hath done for our souls; that they may praise him on our account, and be encouraged by our example: and we should aim by every means to bring others to partake of our privileges and comforts. Our faith ought to be declared by an open confession; and when we find our hearts enlarged in joy and gratitude, we should not delay joining ourselves to the Lord and his people, at his table: that we may have the benefit of Christian communion, and of the prayers and counsels of our brethren. And we should still call upon ourselves and each other, to beware of grieving our holy Comforter, and provoking the departure of our Beloved. Lively Christians leaving the world and sin behind them, and setting their affections on things above; offering the spiritual sacrifices of prayer and praise, with fervent love, joy, and gratitude, through the influence of the Holy Spirit; and presenting every service through the mediation of Christ, are a lovely and edifying sight. Such persons adorn the Gospel, and often convince less earnest professors that there is an excellency and happiness in religion, which cannot be attained without great diligence. But the believer will never think highly of himself; and will always direct those who notice him to look unto Jesus and his glory and grace: and the more we rejoice in his inexhaustible riches, the greater earnestness shall we express in recommending them to others. In this respect our hearts should be without selfishness; as we know that here is sufficient to enrich and felicitate all who come. The protection and security, arising from armed and valiant guards, are a feeble shadow of the peace and safety of those who trust in the Lord: and if our minds were always stayed upon him, and communing with him, we should not fear in the darkest night of temptation, or even in the gloomy hour of death. Blessed be God for the everlasting Gospel of our King of righteousness and peace; for the precious promises and inviolable security of the new covenant; for the rich and royal privileges to which believers are admitted, and taught hereafter to expect; and especially for that unfathomable love from which they proceed. May that “love constrain us to live to Him who died for us and rose again,” and “to love one another with a pure heart fervently.” And blessed be God, that whilst believers may know that he hath loved them with an everlasting love, and will never leave them nor forsake them: sinners are assured, that “every one that seeketh findeth.” No affectation of bridegroom so rejoices over his bride on the day of his espousals, as the Lord Jesus rejoices over the poor sinner who comes to trust in his mercy and salvation. Nor did ever Solomon appear so glorious, when arrayed in royal majesty, with a crown of pure gold upon his head, as our Redeemer doth, when converted sinners acknowledge their obligations to him, and join themselves unto his people. This is the crown which he most values! Poor dejected, trembling sinner, go forth, and behold him, bow he is glorified, and how he rejoices in saving the meanest and the vilest; and be encouraged to hope, that he will be glorious in saving thee also.
4 Thy neck is like the tower of David, built up for an armory, whereon there hang a thousand bucklers, all shields of mighty men.

5 Thy two breasts are like two young roes that are twins, which feed among the lilies.

6 Until the day break, and the shadows flee away, I will get me to the mountain of myrrh, and to the hill of frankincense.

7 Thou art all fair, my love; there is no spot in thee.

8 Woe be with me from Lebanon, my spouse, with me from Lebanon. Look from the top of Amana, from the top of Shenir and Hermon, from the lions' dens, from the mountains of the leopards.

among the lilies, may denote conformity to Christ, who is thus described, (ii. 16.) The believer delights in communion with Christ and his people, as he delights in them. But the two breasts, applied to the body of the church, may also denote the two Testaments, those breasts of consolation which are pleasant as the young roes, and twins in doctrine; whence ministers deduce all their instructions; whence converts, as new-born babes, draw the sincere milk of the word and grow thereby; and established Christians not only deduce continual improvement, but learn those things which they usefully communicate to others: As some of these expressions do not seem aptly descriptive of feminine beauty, I take it for granted, that they have a spiritual meaning, though far from being confident that the exact import of each allusion is pointed out. But these seem the more probable conjectures that have been formed on the subject.

V. 6. The mountain of myrrh and the hill of frankincense, may mean the mountain on which the temple was built, and where the incense was burnt, and where the people at the same time worshipped the Lord. This was his peculiar residence, till the shadows of the legal dispensation were dispersed, by the breaking of the Gospel-day, and the rising of the Sun of Righteousness; and thither believers resorted to meet him in his ordinances. At present he dwelleth in human nature, and is gone into the true holy place, to present the worship of his people before the throne with the incense of his intercession: and though Christ in respect of his human nature is absent from his church on earth, and will continue to be so, till the heavenly day break, and these earthly shadows flee away; yet in heaven he is maintaining our cause, and is spiritually present in his ordinances, and with his people; as he said, when he ascended, "Lo, I am with you always, even unto the end of the world. Amen."
SOLOMON'S SONG.

9 Thou hast ravished my heart, my sister, my spouse; thou hast ravished my heart, with one of thine eyes, with one chain of thy neck.

10 How fair thy lips, my sister, my spouse! how much better is thy sense than wine! and the smell of thy garments than all ointments.

11 Thy lips, O my spouse, drop as the honeycomb; honey and milk are under thy tongue; and the smell of thy garments is like the smell of Lebanon.

12 A garden inclosed is my sister, my spouse; a spring shut up, a fountain sealed.

called his spouse, and never before, though very frequent.

13 Thy plants are an orchard of pomegranates, with pleasant fruits; with cypresses, with spike

14 Spikenard and saffron, calamus, and cinnamon, with all kinds of Lebanon.

15 A fountain of gardens, a well of living waters, and streams from Lebanon.

16 Awake, O north wind, and come, thou south; blow upon my garden, that the spices thereof may flow out.

V. 11. The prayers, praises, thanksgivings, profession, and pious conversation of believers, are pleasant to the gracious Redeemer, as the pure honey that dropeth from the honeycomb: every expression is to him, as if honey and milk were under their tongue, whilst they speak from the abundance of their hearts; and their whole conversation, whilst they rely on his merits and copy his example, is fragrant unto him above the most delightful spots on earth.

V. 12-14. The world is a wilderness: but the Church is a garden enclosed by divine grace, and stored with every valuable plant, which is well cultured and thriving. It has within itself a spring, or fountain, whence every part of it is abundantly watered; i.e. the fertilizing influences of the Holy Spirit. But this spring is shut up, this fountain is sealed. The world knoweth not these wells of salvation: nor can any opposer stop up, or corrupt this fountain, or prevent the course of its healing streams. The effects men may perceive, the cause they cannot discover: for the believer's 'life is hid with Christ in God.' Some by the plants suppose young converts to be intended, and by the enclosing of the garden and spring, the exclusion of the wicked from the sacred ordinances of the Church.

V. 15. These words seem to be spoken by the spouse, rendering to Christ the praise of all the good which he had commended in her. He is the Fountain, which makes these gardens fruitful; even a Well of living waters, from whom all heavenly graces flow, (as streams from the deserts of Lebanon,) to water every part of his church. - 'The church confesseth that all her glory and beauty cometh of Christ, who is the true Fountain of all grace.' Many, however, suppose the verse to be a continuation of the preceding commendation; and to imply, that the church is not only pure and pleasant in herself, but so abundantly replenished with gifts and graces, as to be capable of communicating blessings to all around; (Notes, John iv. 10-14. vii. 37-39.)

V. 16. The spouse considering herself as a garden, well watered, planted, and tended, earnestly desires that her graces may be more lively, her spiceries more fragrant, and her fruits more rich and abundant: and she calls upon the CHAPTER V.  B.C. 1014.

V.

en, expresses his friends to irit in his diversif

t, which are sharp

f fortaining influences

 services might be loved, and ensure

1.)

TIONS.

believer, are not led with a conde-tion; but they usu beauty derived inal judgment, the love and gratitude, the blameless usefulness of real cabasement before defects as others

Christ, and on ld and ordinances

ace; and their acquaintance with parts of the Chris-and pleasing to ow how much he greater watchful-

should also have the d pretend dis

axiety in morals,

t mankind; when ances, and pro-

the diligence, and usefulness of ion of the people

New Testament, practice; the spirit and assembled ascending before ion, who is gone

ese things are a propriety of the ere thought, that mere professors of any description form a part of this chosen generation, this peculiar people. The church of which our Church consists of three persons, who are "washed and sanctified, and justified, in the name of the Lord "Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God:" in whom there is "no spot;" no sin unrepented of, unpardoned, or unsus-ded: no part which is not beautified with salvation, in a measure which continually tends to perfection.

V. 8—16.

The Redeemer calls us to forsake earthly objects, and to set our affections on things above, whither he is gone before, and where he siteth on the right hand of God. For every scene here below is full of trouble and danger: Satan and his emissaries go about as lions and leopards seeking whom they may devour: and a proper sense of our situation will not only lead us to a willingness to count all but loss, that we may win Christ; but will reconcile us to his call to depart hence, that we may go to be with him in heaven, where there are neither sins nor temptations. All our salvaf~~##~s~p~rings~from~the~Lord's~special~compassionate~love~to~us~as~sinners;~but~he~holds~with~complacency~and~delight~to~walk~in~his~ordinances~and~commandments:~he~glories~in~his~relation~to~us~as~our~Brother~and~most~endeared~Friend:~and~surely~we~shall~never~be~ashamed~of~it!~And~if~he~speak~in~such~encouraging~terms~of~our~scanty~measure~of~fruitfulness,~how~should~we~admit~and~extend~his~excellencies,~and~the~savour~of~his~sweet~ointments,~in~his~righteousness,~his~mediation,~and~his~sacred~word?~As~Christians,~we~are~his~ garden,~which~he~hath~enclosed~from~the~wilderness~of~fallen~man,~and~stored~with~precious~plants~from~the~paradise~above;~and~which~he~watered~from~the~Fountain~of~life,~that~"springeth~forth~from~the~throne~of~God,~and~of~the~"Lamb"~that~we~should~be~filled~with~all~"the~fruits~of~"righteousness,~which~are~through~Jesus~Christ~to~his~"praise~and~glory."~This~garden~is~indeed~enclosed,~this~fountain~is~shut~up~and~sealed;~so~that~the~world~can~neither~become~acquainted~with~their~value,~nor~do~them~any~injury~by~though~ungodly~men~cannot~understand~our~ principles,~nor~comprehend~the~way~in~which~our~hearts~are~directed,~influenced,~and~renewed~from~above;~they~can~form~a~judgment~of~our~conduct:~and~we~should~endeavour~ to~convince~them,~that~the~holiness~of~our~lives~is~as~much~superior~to~the~general~practice~of~the~world,~as~we~profess~ to~maintain~nearer~communion~with,~and~to~receive~other~communications~from~the~Lord,~than~they~do.~We~should~ keep~separate~from~them~as~a~garden~enclosed,~and~avoid~ comformity~to~them~and~whilst~we~render~all~the~glory~to~Him,~who~alone~hath~made~us~to~differ;~we~should~ earnestly~pray~that~this~difference~may~be~every~day~rendered~more~evident~and~decided.~These~commendations~of~ tue~believers~may~well~humble~each~of~us~in~a~conscious~aware~how~little~we~are~entitled~to~them;~and~those~are~to~be~ more~fervent~in~seeking~for~the~convincing~and~sanctifying SOLOMON'S SONG.

B. C. 1014.

open to him, 2-6. The hard usage she met with from the watchmen, 7. She charges her companions to inform her Beloved that she was sick of love, 8. They inquire after her Beloved: and she describes his manifold excellencies, 9-16.

I AM come into my garden, my sister, my spouse: I have gathered my myrrh with my spice; I have eaten my honeycomb with my honey; I have drunk my wine with my milk; eat, O friends; drink, * yea, drink abundantly, O beloved.

2 If I sleep, but my heart waketh it is the voice of my Beloved that knocketh, saying, I Open to me, 0 my sister, my love, my dove, my undefiled: for my head is filled with dew, and my locks with the drops of the night.

NOTES.

CHAP. V. V. 1. This verse, which belongs to the former chapter, is the gracious answer of Christ to the petition of the spouse. He had so prepared his garden that he could come into it with delight. The worship presented in his church was pleasant to him, as fragrant gums and spices. He relished the spiritual services of believers, as honey and the honeycomb. He also drank the wine and the milk; the most minute as well as the more costly blemishes being acceptable to him, if it come from an upright heart. He then adds an invitation to his friends and beloved people, to eat and drink abundantly. The ordinances in which they honour him, are means of communicat ing grace to them. The good works, which they perform to adorn his Gospel, evidence the reality of their grace, and make way for their consolation: it is his will, that they should rejoice in the provisions of his grace, whilst they live to his glory: they that would entertain Christ must also entertain his poor disciples: and though their goodness cannot profit him, it may be useful to his beloved people; as a man who has an orchard or garden, which he delights to see stored with every valuable production, and yet he does not use them himself, but disperses them among his friends. The word rendered drink abundantly, signifies be inebriated. Be not drunk with wine, wherein is excess, but be filled with the Spirit. Some think that the matryrs, who laid down their lives from love to Christ, are meant by the myrrh and spice, as peculiarly pleasing and honourable to him: and that the joy of angels and saints in heaven over the conversion of sinners on earth, is intended by the concluding invitation, Rejoice with me; for I have found my sheep that was lost. (Notes, Luke xvi. 1. Marg. Ref.)

V. 2. A new scene here opens; and the spouse relates her conduct on a particular occasion, when she evidently acted improperly and was rebuked for it. To cover over all the improprieties of a literal interpretation concerning Solomon and Pharaoh's daughter, immediately after their espousals; the whole has been most clearly stated to have been a dream; because it is said, I sleep, but my heart waketh. This expression, however, admits of a very different and instructive interpretation, if the spiritual meaning of the allegory be attended to: and there is no other intimation that it was a dream, or reason why it should be considered as such, except to keep up the imaginary consistency of a dramatic poem on the marriage of Solomon with Pharaoh's daughter, which has little of its foundation in Scripture and cannot be clearly made out by internal evidence. (Note, i. 2.) Writing therefore the consideration of the passage, in regard to these external circumstances: we here learn that the spouse, subsequent to the commendations which had been bestowed on her, fell into a drowsy and heartless frame of mind. I sleep, but my heart waketh. She is very dull, yet not utterly inattentive to her spiritual concerns. Her judgment and choice are the same, but her affections are cold, and her services formal: a case which often occurs in the believer's experience. (Matt. xxv. 5.) I take it to be a description of the dulness which is apt to creep upon the most excellent minds. (Bp. Patrick.) In this verse, where she recognizes the voice of her beloved, and hears him knock and request admission. This represents the warnings, reproofs, and invitations to a Christian, when in this drowsy frame; the convictions excited by the Holy Spirit; and the ineffectual desires felt, and the half purposes formed, on such occasions. He perceives that he is faulty and ought to be more earnest; he is gently admonished of his folly and ingratitude; and yet he yields to inactivity, despondency, or lukewarmness. (Rev. iii. 20.) The words of Christ, as here stated, are replete with tender affection, and introduced by the most endearing compliments, without the least anger or reproach; yet he complains, that his head is filled with dew, and his locks "with the drops of the night;" implying the hardships and sufferings that he had endured in coming for the salvation of his people; and that it is very unkind, if they are not ready to admit and entertain him. As if a tender husband, having gone a long and wearisome journey, solely for the benefit of his wife; and having travelled far in the night through the cold or rain, out of love to her company, should at length be shut out of doors, and
CHAPTER V.

I sought him, but I could not find him; I called him, but he gave me no answer.

7 The watchmen that went about the city found me, they smote me, they wounded me; yea the keepers of the walls took away my veil from me.

8 I charge you, O daughters of Jerusalem, if yea find my Beloved, tell that ye tell him, that I am sick of love.

9 What is thy beloved more than another beloved, O thou fairest among women? what is thy Beloved more than another beloved, that thou dost so charge us?

10 I am sick of love.

V. 3. The vain excuses urged by the spouse, denotes the unprepared state of the believer’s heart, when he has remitted his watch, grown negligent of his work, fond of ease and indulgence, and averse to exertion or inconvenience. In such a frame every thing forms a mighty difficulty; and delays and omissions of duty are admitted on the most frivolous pretences. Backwardness to show our love to Christ, by self denying and expensive kindness to his afflicted and suffering friends, may also be intended. Let us learn from hence what mischief sloth and laziness do, and in what troubles and pains they engage us. For the spouse here excuses herself, and not being willing presently to rise to the Bridegroom, is compelled a little while after, not only to rise and to run to the door, but to run through the city, and wander about the streets, and fall among the watchmen, and by them to be wounded; and after all she could scarcely find her Beloved; to whom if she had presently heartened, and obeyed his heavenly call, she had avoided all these inconveniences. (Theodore in Bp. Patrick.)

V. 4. This verse leads us to imagine some private aperture in the door, through which the person without, (being acquainted with it) might put in his hand and unbolt it; or, as some think, make signs of his displeasure. This may represent the effectual influence of the Spirit of Christ upon the heart, exciting sharp convictions and vigorous exercises of faith and grace. This divine influence caused her to be moved for him; that is, it excited fervent desires after Christ and communion with him, attended with poignant sorrow and shame for having before behaved so ungratefully towards him.

V. 5, 6. The spouse rising up to open her Beloved, represents the believer’s renewed exercise of repentance and faith; by which he rises from his drowsiness and self-indulgence, applying by fervent prayer for the consolation of his love, and diligently removing every hindrance to communion with Christ. These acts of the soul are represented by “the hands and fingers dropping with sweet smelling myrrh upon the handles of the lock,” as being in themselves gracious, suited to the circumstances, and acceptable to the Lord; (2 Cor. vii. 9-11.) But notwithstanding this, “her Beloved had withdrawn himself, obliged to continue all night in the street! The night-dew in those countries is very great.

V. 7. The watchmen and keepers of the walls, in this place, seem to represent those nominal ministers, who may indeed guard the outworks of religion, but are destitute of the experimental knowledge of its power. Such persons generally treat those with harshness and contempt, who speak of their inward distresses and conflicts; and call them hypocrites, enthusiasts, or even lunatics. The most violent persecutions have in every age been excited by persons of this description, who, under pretence of guarding the walls of Zion, have treated the most spiritual believers as the vilest of the human species: and have accompanied other injuries by the trial of cruel mockings and reproaches: “Smiling, and wounding them, and taking away their veil,” that they might be considered as infamous and shameless. It may however, also intimate that pious ministers are apt sometimes to mistake the case of perplexed and distressed souls; to treat them with harshness as hypocrites, instead of the tenderness which their case requires.

V. 8. This charge of the spouse to the daughters of Jerusalem seems to mean the distressed believer’s desire of the prayers of the feeblest Christian, or the new convert who has just formed an acquaintance with the Saviour. If they saw her Beloved, they were to be sure to inform him, that her love was so vehement, that it even caused her to sicken from a longing desire of reconciliation, and from sorrow that she had behaved so foolishly; and that as a sick person, she could not relish any other comfort, but must continue to mourn and pine after his presence, till she forgave her and renewed his gracious visits.
10 My beloved is white and ruddy, * the * chiepest among ten thousand.

11 His head is as the most fine gold, his locks are * bushy, and black as a roven.

12 His eyes are as the eyes of doves by the rivers of waters, washed with * milk, and * fitty set.

13 His cheeks are * as a bed of spices, as * sweet flowers: * his lips like lilies, * dropping sweet-smelling myrrh:

V. 9. The daughters of Jerusalem, who are supposed to regard the spouse as one of matchless beauty, perceiving her great earnestness in seeking her Beloved, desire to know more of his distinguished excellencies, above all those whom others love. Some think that they propose this question, by way of derision, to the vehemency of her affection and sorrow; and others, that they mean to alliterate her distress by leading her to expatiate on so pleasing a subject: but these things seem out of character for inquirers in religion, as we suppose the daughters of Jerusalem to be. They are rather to be considered as impressed with a conviction that there must be more preciousness in Christ, and comfort in communion with him, than they had hitherto imagined.

V. 10—16. In this description some reference is supposed to be had by the sacred writer to his father David, who was a "ruddy and of a fair countenance," and who was celebrated as having "slain ten thousands:" (for the word rendered chief among, may signify, lifting up a standard over, &c.) His "head, as fine or wrought "gold," is explained of the crown of gold worn by him, from under which his jetty and bushy hair hung down on his brow and neck. His eyes sparkled, yet with mildness, like those of doves, when highly delighted, at the river's side, (as some think the original means.) The words "wished with milk," are supposed to relate to the doves, which were so white, that they appeared as if washed in milk. The "lovely down upon his cheeks, is no less grateful, rising * there like spices that first appear from their beds, or like * the young buds of aromatic flowers; where the purple lilys are not more beautiful than his lips, from whence * flow words not less precious and more pleasant than the * richest and most fragrant myrrh. (Bp. Patrick.) Purple or red lilys are found in those countries, and highly esteemed.) Some think that by "hands as gold rings," set with the beryl, the ornaments of his fingers and wrists are meant; that "his belly" or body, as bright ivory overlaid with sapphires, refers to the colour of the robe which he wore. Others imagine a reference to the rich garments of the high-priest, and the jewels in his breastplate and on his shoulders as an emblem of the high-priesthood of Christ: but this is very doubtful; and the richness or beauty of garments can hardly be considered as necessarily conveying an idea of pre-eminent personal comeliness and beauty. Similar allusions are supposed to be made to the covering of the legs and thighs, and feet, in the clause, "His legs are as pillars of marble upon sockets of fine gold." "His aspect is no less stately and great than the forest of Lebanon, whose goodly cedars do not more excel all other trees, than he all other men." (Bp. Patrick.) In short, he is altogether lovely or desirable. But what instruction is conveyed under this description of the comeliness and majesty of the Beloved? No doubt the spiritual excellency and glory of Christ, in his person, mediation and kingdom, are intended: but, while in some things the meaning is evident, others must be allowed to be more doubtful. "He is white and ruddy;" this naturally suggests to the mind, his spotless purity and his atoning blood: and it may also denote his mercy to believers, and his terrible vengeance upon his enemies. "He is the chiepest among ten thousand." By him kings reign. He is the King of saints, and of angels; and among ten thousand rivals, he alone is worthy of our affections, and capable of doing us effectual good. "His head as the most fine gold," may denote the perfect righteousness and inestimable benefits of his glorious kingdom, as Head over all to his church: "his locks, bushy, and black as a raven," may denote the vigour of his administration; full and black hair being an emblem of youth, as white hair of old age and wisdom: (Rev. i. 14.) "His eyes, as the eyes of doves, "by the rivers of waters, washed with milk, and fitty set," may denote his infinite knowledge, connected with purity and love, pleasant to his people, whom he watches over continually, and for whom he orders every thing in perfect wisdom and kindness. "His cheeks," that is, those glimpses of his glory which we have by faith, and when he lifts up the light of his countenance upon us, are refreshing as the most fragrant spices or flowers. His gracious words from his lips, are pure and pleasant like the lily, and distil upon the soul like the sweet-smelling myrrh. His hands, whether stretched forth to communicate blessings to us, or to uphold or defend us; or in any of the operations of his power, are "as gold rings, set with the beryl," all well-timed and placed, very precious, beneficial, and regulated in perfect wisdom and love. His belly, or bowels, (the known description of compassion and tenderness,) being "as bright ivory, overlaid with sapphires," may denote the glory of his mercy, which endureth for ever; and the unsearchable riches and invaluable privileges, which are conferred with it on all true believers. "His legs as "pillars of marble set upon sockets of fine gold," such as might form the support and ornament of some magnificent temple, may denote the firmness, power, and majesty, with which he supports his church, and maintains his cause.
CHAPTER VI.

The daughters of Jerusalem purpose to seek Christ: the spouse answers them, in the world, against all the opposition of earth and hell. "His countenance as Lebanon, excellent as the cedars," denotes the unspeakable glory of his person and work, as fully displayed to the blessed inhabitants of heaven, of which whilst on earth we only obtain a few glimpses by faith. "His mouth being most sweet," seems to mean the expressions and pledges of his love, with which his people are favoured; (i. 2.) But indeed, concludes the spouse, "He is altogether lovely." All created and uncreated excellencies are found in Emmanuel's person; no defect or excess; no holy disposition intertrencing on any other; every thing in perfect harmony and exact proportion; and every thing, in his mediatorial character and work, which suits the case of the sinner in the most absolute manner. This glorious and gracious Redeemer is the Beloved of every believer, who is favoured with reciprocal affection, and may be assured of His inviolable friendship and glory. (Merg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—8.

The Lord is ever ready to hear the prayers of his people; and he generously accepts that worship or obedience which they present in humble faith, through the influences of his Holy Spirit, notwithstanding its imperfection. When he is honoured by our fruits of holiness, we shall find them comfortable and profitable to ourselves, and they will do much good to others, especially to the household of faith: and if we do not abundantly feast on the provisions of his grace, the fault lies in ourselves; for his invitations are as liberal and pressing, as the feast is plenteous and magnificent. But alas, very often, when he stands at the door, and knocks for admission, that he may enter in and feast with us, we are half asleep; and even the riches of his condescending love and gracious consolations proconsuetions, through our remaining depravity, to supineness: so that He is not only treated with ungrateful neglect by his enemies, but even by his friends! They are not indeed quite asleep: they hear and know his voice, in his word and providence, and acknowledge him as their beloved: yet they treat his most endearing compellations with inexusable disregard, and notwithstanding his gracious invitations, and admonitions, and gentle reproves, they still give way to sloth; nay, they quench his Holy Spirit, and refuse to comply with his suggestions when he shows them their duty, and their obligations to attend on it. Alas, what frivolous excuses do we often make for neglecting prayer and meditation, for abstaining ourselves from public worship, the preaching of the word, and the Lord's Supper! How we shrink from any duty, which is attended with fatigue, self-denial expense, or reproach! How unprepared are we often for attending to the Lord's commands, and for performing the work of our station in his church! These are the shameful effects of former negligence, and yet we urge them as reasons for our present omissions! And if we were left to our selves, we should gradually grow more secure and carnal till we entirely returned back to sin and the world. But the gracious Saviour will not forsake his people, but will rebuke and chasten them. When he powerfully touches the heart, our drooping graces revive and our spiritual affections are re-kindled: then we have done with delays and excuses, and set ourselves in good earnest to use the means of grace, and to remove all obstacles to communion with him. But though these renewed exercises of repentance, faith, and love are accepted, yet he sometimes sees good to prevent our comfort in them: and they who will fully quench the Holy Spirit, will often be left for a time to use every means of recovering his gracious consolations, without any apparent success, and even to pray without any tokens of being heard and answered. But if they truly believe, they will seek until they find: and the more diligently they persevere under discouragements, the sooner they will in general succeed. They should be reminded, however, that they will often fail of finding help from man: they need not wonder, if many, who appear as the watchmen of Zion, persecute, ridicule, or revile those who are earnest in seeking Jesus who was crucified: nay, should any disconsolate soul, who is waiting for some token of his love to him, meet with rebukes and sharpness even from a pious minister; let him remember that Jesus is far more compassionate than any of his servants, and will not quench the smoking flax, or break the bruised reed. In all our distresses, we should seek an interest in the prayers of God's people, without excepting those of the weakest believer; we should ever be ready to pray for those who are troubled in mind; and they, whose earnest desires after communion with Christ spoil their relish of other pleasures, will find this sickness a considerable step towards the true health of the soul.

V. 9—16.

There are many who deem pious Christians the excellent of the earth, who yet know not how to account for the energy of their language, when they speak of their love to Christ and fervent desires after him: not being duly aware how immensely their Beloved excels all those whom the world admires and idolizes. But did they know the whole of his personal and mediatorial excellency, they would only wonder that the love and gratitude of his most zealous disciples were so cold, and their desires so languid. Words indeed can never do justice to such a subject, or convey suitable ideas of it to the carnal mind: and, at our highest improvements in knowledge and experience, we only "see through a glass darkly." We should, however, endeavour, as we can, to show forth his praises; in hopes that the Lord will stir up others to inquire after and trust in him. For this end we may descant on the perfection of his righteousness, and the preciousness of his blood; his pre-eminence in wisdom, truth, and goodness, to all in heaven and earth; the glory of his kingdom, his power to WHITHER is thy Beloved gone, that we may seek him with thee?
O thou fairest among women, that thou and thy Beloved turned aside!

2 My Beloved is gone down into his garden, to the beds of spices, to feed in the gardens, and to gather lilies.

3 I am my Beloved's, and my Beloved is mine: he feedeth among the lilies.

4 Thou art all fair, O my love, and there is not a blemish in thine issue.

The whole denotes that communion with Christ is only to be sought in the church. He was still in his church and in every part of it, though sometimes they were not sensible of it. For so Theodoret well observes, here is distinct mention of a garden and gardens: i.e. of the catholic church which is but one, and of the several parts of it. For sometimes St. Paul mentions the church in the singular number, and sometimes the several churches even in the same nation. (1 Cor. xiv. 33. Gal. i. 2.) (Bp. Patrick.)

V. 4. The spouse having been suitably humbled, and persevering in the exercise of faith and holy love, Christ again manifests himself to her, and reneweth her communications of her. Tirzah was afterwards the place of the kings of Israel, and was no doubt situated very properly; for its name signifies pleasant or amiable; and Jerusalem was the holy city, the capital of Canaan. This therefore implies, that all the real excellency and holiness on earth centres in the church. She is also said to be "terrible as an army with banners:" a very extraordinary commendation of femininity! But the church of God, when beautified in holiness and united in love, is very terrible to her enemies. Each believer, in his proper place, is the soldier of Christ, enlisted under his banner and a part of his army; by which He goes forth subduing his enemies, and rendering his truth triumphant over error and iniquity: whilst every one of them gains daily victories over the world, the flesh, and the devil. Every part of this verse seems to me a new proof, that Solomon speaks not in this book of one single person, (whom some fancy to be the Shulamite, others Pharaoh's daughter, whom others take for one and the same,) under the name of the spouse; but of a body or society of men: for none else can be fifty compared to cities, nay, to great armies drawn up under their banners. (Bp. Patrick.)

V. 5-7. When the spouse looked on her Beloved, his CHAPTER VI.

8 There are "threescore queens, and fourscore concubines, and virgins without number."

9 "My dove, my undefiled is but one; she is the only one of her mother, she is the choice one of her that bare her: "The daughters saw her, and blessed her; yea, the queens and the concubines, and they praised her.

10 "Who is she that looketh forth as the morning, fair as the moon," clear as the sun, and terrible as an army with banners?

affection was so strong, that he was overcome by it, and could no longer retain any resentment for her late unkindness. When the Lord said to Moses, "Let me alone, that I may destroy this people," it was the greatest conceivable encouragement to continue pleading for them: and this expression is equally animating to the desponding believer, to persevere in "looking unto Jesus," seeing he is thus sure of prevailing. To intimate an entire reconciliation, Christ uses the same expressions for substance, in commending the spouse, as he had before done. (Note, iv. 1—3.)

V. 8, 9. Some think that Solomon here alludes to the wives, concubines, and virgins attending them, which he had at this time in his court; but he seems rather to refer to the general custom of the eastern monarchs, which afterwards he himself imitated, nay, in which he exceeded them all. The language, however, implies, that though the earth abounds with such as are deemed honourable and amiable; yet true believers alone possess the beauty of holiness, with which no other can compare. Being united unto Christ, and born of God as the children of the church; being justified, sanctified, and approved as holy persons; they all form one body and possess one excellency, being of one heart and soul, and grand in the grand concerns of religion: and when their real character is discovered, it must be admired and commended, even by those who seem the most to rival them, or to be eclipsed by them.

V. 10. Either Christ here continues his discourse, as in admiration of the spouse; or this is the commendation mentioned in the preceding verse. As applied to the church, it may be descriptive of the gradual dawning of the Gospel day, from the first promise to fallen Adam, till the rising of the Sun of Righteousness and the calling of the Gentiles, till the fulness of the Gentiles shall come in. On earth the church reflecting the light of Christ, is "fair as the moon;" in heaven, the full view of him and conformity to him, will render her "clear as the sun;" and both in her militant and triumphant state, she is terrible as an army with banners, or as the heavenly hosts, as some explain the word. The believer also, from his first conversion to his complete victory and salvation, may be represented by the same illustrations.

V. 11, 12. Christ here explains to the spouse his departure and return. Being grieved, he had left her: but he went down into his garden of nuts; he was still present in his church, and taking care of his people; especially he was present to note and accept the "fruits of the valley," the good works of the humble and discouraged; and to observe the flourishing of established Christians, and the first budtings of new converts. But his eye was on his spouse, on the offending mourner, whom he had rebuked by his frown and absence; and beholding her insensible and prepared for renewed comfort, he could no longer refrain; but was suddenly, as by instinct of affection, led to return to her, "like the chariots of Amminadib," who probably was noted for driving with great rapidity. The original may signify a willing or noble people. V. 13. The spouse, ashamed of her misconduct, and conscious of her unworthiness, is represented as reluctant to believe that her Beloved is fully reconciled, or as not venturing to him with her former confidence, and as retiring from the company: but the daughters of Jerusalem, with great earnestness call on her to return, that they might behold her. The term, "the Shulamite," may be derived from Solomon the peaceable king, or rather from Salom the city of peace; and it seems to mean the peaceable, or the reconciled one. The spouse then inquires, what Christ, or the companions, can see in her worthy of attention? And the answers, "As it were the company of two armies." This may denote the Old and New Testament-churches; or the church militant and the church triumphant, as two armies: or it may refer to the believer's constant internal conflict betwixt inward depravity and implanted holiness, which by turns prevail in his experience; and be supposed to refer to the spouse's late misconduct and repentance. But the word rendered company, signifies a band or chorus of dancers; or such as exult for joy; and some think the hosts of angels are meant, (with reference to Jacob's vision, Gen. xxxii. 1.) who rejoiced and sang praises at the Saviour's birth, and rejoiced over one sinner that repenteth.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The Lord commonly blesses the cordial praises of his people, to quicken others to desire his salvation, and to inquire how and where they may seek him with them. The experienced believer, even when uncomfortable in his own soul, is both able and willing to direct inquirers to find the Saviour. By faith he apprehends his gracious presence in his church, and in all places where his ordinances

vol. ii. No. 16.
CHAP. VII.

The church commended under various similitudes, 1—5. Christ expresses his love to her, and delight in her company, 6—9. The church expresses her delight in him, and seeks more intimate communion with him, 10—13.

HOW beautiful are thy feet with shoes! O prince's daughter! the joints of thy thighs are like jewels; the work of the hands of a cunning workman.

extort commendations even from prejudiced spectators on some occasions, and at length all nations shall call them blessed. P raised be God, the coming of Christ and the conversion of the Gentiles, have brought forward this day of heaven upon earth; may the universal spread of the Gospel extend the blessings of it to those nations that yet sit in darkness! But what is the fairest light of the moon, to the brightness of the sun? and what is the most glorious time of the church, or the happiest hour of a believer on earth, to the glory and felicity of the heavenly world? Then death will be swallowed up in victory; and every soldier of our Captain's host will triumph in the final perdition of all his foes. In the mean time, though we often mourn the Redeemer's absence from our souls, he will never withdraw from his church; he tends the fruits of his grace which spring in the lowliest valleys, and marks the first buddings in the new convert, or the feeble believer. He will never be so employed about some of his people as to neglect others: and he will return with unspeakable tenderness to those who mourn for the sins which urged his departure from them. But such humble and tender spirits can hardly be persuaded of their own happiness: and they see so much amiss in themselves, that they can hardly think that the Lord delights in them. But he is peculiarly pleased even with this their humility: he marks their constant opposition to their evil propensities: he makes allowances for the force of temptations; and distinguishes between a saint militant and a saint triumphant: and notwithstanding all defects and failures, he as much loves those who are strenuously fighting the good fight of faith, as those who through his grace have already obtained the victory.

NOTES.

CHAP. VII. V. 1. This verse, and those that follow, seem to be the language of the daughters of Jerusalem to the spouse, who was now returned to them. They call her "the Prince's daughter;" as the church is called the "King's daughter," by the Psalmist, (Ps. xlv. 13, 14;) for believers are the children of God, by regeneration, adoption, and union with the Only Begotten of the Father. The word rendered feel, more generally signifies goings, (Old Trans.) or footsteps, implying the spouse's becoming gait or motion. The shoes or sandals, in which she moved so gracefully, are explained by the apostle to mean "the preparation of the Gospel of peace," by which believers are enabled to walk with becoming sincerity in the ways of holy obedience. (Marg. Ref.) Some render the next clause, "the cincture," or girdle, "of thy loins is like jewels," &c. as rather denoting the beautiful garments or girdle worn by the spouse, than her graceful proportion and form of body: and, if we dwell on the external meaning, this may perhaps be requisite; and the believer "having his loins girt about with truth," may be referred to this interpretation. But the language of the apostle in another place, seems to point out the true meaning of the sacred allegory. "The whole body, fitly joined together, and compacted by that which every joint supplieth, according to the effectual working in the measure of every part, maketh increase of the body unto the edifying of itself in love." (Eph. iv. 16.) How greatly the due formation and proportion of "the joints of the thighs," (namely, the knees and the hip joints,) tend to the firmness and gracefulness of motion, every one knows. Thus every part of the church, even the meanest, is beautiful and useful, well-proportioned, and compacted, and fitted to glorify God. And every believer, in proportion to his faith and grace, is prepared to fill up his station in a becoming manner, and to walk in the ways of God with firmness and vigour. For "we are the body of Christ," and "members in particular." (1 Cor. xii. 14-27.)

V. 2. Here again the decorations, rather than the person, of the spouse, are by some thought to be intended; and curious ornaments of embroidered work, in the figure of a round goldlet with or without, or a heap, or sheaves of wheat, surrounded with lilies, carved on them, have been imagined and described. But the original words, in other places, as much mean the navel, and the belly or the womb, as the next words do the two breasts. In fact, the allusion to that part of the body, in which the infant is marvelously fashioned by the power of God, seems intended as an allegorical representation of the believer, through faith in Christ according to the word of the gospel, ripening into holy dispositions and affections, and thus into holy practice, those convictions and desires, which first influenced him to inquire after the Saviour: and also the provision, in the ordinances of the church for the conversion of sinners, and ripening them into established believers, the children of God our Saviour, and of his espoused church. The belly, or bowels, may likewise be explained of the merciful and compassionate disposition of believers, which renders them useful in relieving the distresses of the needy, "as an heap of wheat," and is ornamental to their profession, as if the heap "was set about with lilies." We cannot, however, be certain, as to minute circumstances, in expounding these allegories; though the general meaning is plain. But we should not forget, that many other things in Scripture, as well as this description, do not accord to the refined and perhaps fastidious delicacy of modern times: yet we have every reason to believe that gross vice was much less general in those ages, among the Israelites at least, than it is at present. Nor does it become us to explain away the words of the sacred oracles.

V. 3. (iv. 5.) "The two testimonies, which are thy two full and comely breasts, (by whose wholesome milk thou nourishest all thy faithful children, once born into the light,) are for their excellent and perfect agreement, and their amiable proportion, like two young roes." (Byr. Hall.)

V. 4. Thy neck, sc. (iv. 4.) The word ivory added to the similitude of a tower for defence, may allude to the manifold preciousness of faith, in its various exercises. "Eyes like the fishes in Heshbon," which probably were remarkable for clear and lucid waters, may denote distinct knowledge and penetration, and pure and useful wisdom, especially in the teachers of the church. The "nose as the tower of Lebanon," may denote spiritual sagacity, the result of a holy relish for divine things, and an experimental acquaintance with them. The sense of smelling, as it were, the guardian of the stomach, and decides that this and the other viand is in a state unfit for food; so they, who have their spiritual senses exercised by use to discern good and evil, will distinguish betwixt truth and specious error, betwixt duty and specious transgression. And thus the believer, or the teachers of the church, will perceive at a distance the approaching danger of false doctrine or seducing temptation; as the watchmen from the tower of Lebanon, would see at a distance the enemies who should march that way from Damascus or its environs, where the Syrians, the formidable enemies of Israel, dwelt. "Thy head upon thee," is supposed by some to mean, the covering, or ornament of the head; and the word rendered hair, signifies a fillet or ribband, by which the hair was collected together. Carmel was a very high, pleasant, and fruitful mountain. Some understand "the head upon thee," as that heavenly hope which springs from faith, and towers above earthly objects, and excites increasing vigour in following after holiness: and the hairs which are purple, (the colour of kings and rulers,) may mean the dignity of every action which is influenced by this high and purifying hope. But Christ himself, the Head of the church, and the honour conferred on the meanest believers by their union with him, may perhaps be intended. In short, so pleasant is the church and every member of it, that the King, the Lord of Hosts, is "held in the galleries," or has such delight in the ordinances and assemblies of his saints, that he is not able to withdraw from them. When he walks in his palace, and beholds her beauty, he stands still, and cannot take his eyes off from her, being captivated with it." (Bp. Patrick.)

I 2
tree, and thy breasts to clusters of grapes.

8 I said, I will go up to the palm-tree, I will take hold of the boughs thereof; now also thy breasts shall be as clusters of the vine, and the smell of thy nose like apples;

9 And the roof of thy mouth like the best wine for My Beloved, that goeth down sweetly, causing the lips of those that are asleep to speak.

10 I am my Beloved's, and his desire is toward me.

V. 6-8. The Bridegroom is here supposed to enter and to speak to the spouse, in the language of admiration and affection. 'How beautiful and pleasant art thou, O Love, for me to delight in!' He then proceeds to compare the stature, or person of the spouse, to the lofty and spreading palm; whilst her breasts, her entire love to Christ, and the obedience resulting from it, and the doctrine of the scriptures professed and maintained by her, were like clusters of grapes, the precious fruit of the vine. So that when, according to his promise, he went up to take hold of the branches of his pomegranet-tree, he found them loaded with the most precious fruits, every way delightful to him; or, he engaged by his presence and grace to render her still more fruitful and useful, that he might still more rejoice over her to do her good. (Note, ii. 3.)

V. 9. The roof of the mouth is employed both in distinguishing tastes, and in articulating words; and the verse may mean, that the believer, having a relish for spiritual things, discourses upon them experimentally and pathetically. This is pleasant and refreshing, as the best wine, to those who are beloved of Christ; and he delights in it because they are comforted and edified by it: nay, such conversation tends to enliven aged and infirm believers; and even to awaken sleeping sinners, to inquire after Christ and to show forth his praise. 'The delivery of my word, by the mouths of my ministers, is like to the most excellent and pleasant wine; being both well accepted of that God in whose name it is taught, and most sweetly relished by the receivers; which is of such powerful power, that it is able to put words both of repentance and praise, into the lips of him that lies asleep in his sins.' (Bp. Hall.) 'The word rendered ancrep, may mean old men. The most generous wine, of which when we have tasted, we say, let it be sent to the best of my friends, is not more powerful to make old men brisk, or to enliven those that are at the point of death, than thy words are, &c.' (Bp. Patrick.)

V. 10-13. Here the spouse answers, as one assured of her relation to her Beloved, and of his endeared love to her. 'Seeing such is the desire of my Beloved towards me, that he first loved me when averse to him; he called me when I wandered; he pardoned me when I offended; he studiously conferred benefits on me, and finally he gave himself to me.' 'There seems to be an allusion to Ps. cxxi. 11; unto which, as I take it, Solomon hath respect all along in this poem.' (Bp. Patrick.)

11 Come, my Beloved, let us go forth into the field; let us lodge in the villages.

12 Let us get up early to the vineyards; let us see if the vine flourish, if the tender grape appear, and the pomegranates bud forth: there I will give thee my loves.

13 The mandrakes give a smell, and at our gates are all manner of pleasant fruits, new and old, which I have laid up for thee, O my Beloved.

She therefore desires to go forth with him into the fields, and to lodge in the villages: by which some suppose places newly enlightened by the Gospel to be intended. Assured hope and fervent love influence the believer to be weary of the noise and bustle of a vain world, and to turn to leisure and opportunity for retirement, communion with Christ, and an undisturbed attendance on his ordinances. He would be much employed in examining the growth of grace and fruitfulness in himself; and the interests of religion, the conversion of sinners, and the sanctity of believers are dear to his heart. He wants to know how the vine flourishes; and whether awakened sinners give hopeful proof of becoming fruitful in good works. There with the church of Christ, in his house, at his table, and at the throne of grace, he would profess and manifest his love to Christ, and give himself up without reserve to that holy, reasonable, and pleasant affection. Among such believers, living retired from the world, and in communion with Christ and each other, all kinds of ornamental, pleasant, and useful fruits are produced, from faith and love for his glory and for the benefit of his church: and these are not only the first-fruits, immediately after conversion, which may afterwards be called old; but also new services are performed, and new degrees of grace are exercised, more and more even to the end. It is not certainly known what the mandrakes were: perhaps they were melons. (Note, Gen. xxx. 14.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The Lord Jesus is the true Fountain of honour; and his favour confers nobility, yea, royalty; for what are all the pompous titles of the world compared with this distinction, 'The sons and daughters of the Lord Almighty'! Such honour have all his saints; and having put on Christ, they are equally distinguished by their beautiful and glorious apparel. When their feet are shod with the preparation of the Gospel of peace; and when, supplied with renewed strength from their great Head, through the intervention of ministers and Christians, each stationed in this mystical body with divine skill, they walk with increasing vigour and alacrity in the ways of holiness; every motion is graceful, and they 'adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things.' The holy desires of their hearts are brought to good effect by the supply of the Spirit of CHR. VIII.

The spouse desires to be instructed by her Beloved, and to have near communion with him; and charges the virgins not to disturb him, 1—4. Her dependence on him admired: she owns her obligations, desires to continue in his love; and shows the strength and recompense of love and jealousy, 5—7. The calling of the Gentiles requested, and foretold, 8—10. Solomon's vineyard and its fruits, 11, 12. The concluding words of Christ and the spouse, 13, 14.

Oh that thou wert as my Brother, that sucked the breasts of my mother! when I should find thee with Christ; and their compassion and liberality relieve the wants of the indigent, and abound in many thanksgivings unto God. Faith worketh by love of God and of man, which (like two young roes that are twins,) produce a tenor of conduct, which accords to the example of their Beloved and their Friend. The precious faith and love, abounding in knowledge and all judgment, and regulated by sagacity, the result of experience and a spiritual mind, tend to the assurance of hope, the increase of holiness, and patient continuance in well doing. And the edifying discourse of such consistent believers honours Christ, recommends the gospel,silences gain-sayers, animates other Christians, and tends to convince and awaken sinners; and will surely meet with the gracious commendation of the Lord. Wherever they meet together to worship, and to commemorate his love, Christ will be, as it were, held in the galleries, by his delight in them and their services: and to mark the difference betwixt them and formalists, be even expresses his admiration of the fruits of his own grace in them. They may also assure themselves, that he will be with them in their afflictions; and their resignation and patient hope under sharp sufferings is peculiarly pleasant and honourable to him. But when professors of the gospel do no credit to it in their lives, they drive him from their assemblies, and often deceive their own souls. In proportion as we are sure that Christ is our Beloved, and that we aim and desire to be devoted to him; we may also be sure, that he is our Salvation, and that his desire is towards us. And again, when this assurance is genuine, it will cause us more and more to count all but loss for him; and, as far as it consists with our duty in the community, to go forth with him to some sequestered humble retreat, where we may commune with him and his people, and with our own hearts. It then we have tasted his grace, let us seek his assistance in examining ourselves, to see how the vine flourishes, and to take heed that no subtle foxes spoil the tender grapes: let us show our love to Christ by love to his cause; and whilst we add new fruits of holiness to all those that we have already produced, let us not much regard whether men approve our conduct or not, provided our Beloved accept us and be honoured by us. Let us improve our talents and employ our influence, in observing how believers grow in grace, and young beginners put forth their tender buds, that we may exhort, encourage, warn, and pray for them, as time and occasion may require. And if we be favoured to see that part of the church, where we live, producing abundantly all the fruits of the Spirit, our joy will be more excited, than by any increase of riches, and our thanksgivings will accompany our supplications to the great Author of all our hopes and comforts. A life of this kind more resembles heaven, than any other that we can pass on earth.

NOTES.

CHR. VIII. V. 1, 2. These verses may be understood as the fervent prayer of ancient believers, for the promised incarnation of the divine Saviour. In that mysterious dispensation the Lord of Glory, the Husband of the church, became as her Brother: and, as the man Jesus grew in wisdom, in attending on the ordinances of the Jewish church, he, as it were, sucked the breasts of her "mother." The spouse, (representing ancient believers,) declares her determination, when she found him of whom Moses and the prophets had spoken, without, (that is, come down from heaven, and appearing in these outer courts of the temple,) she would with the utmost confidence express her affection to him and delight in him, without fear of being rejected, or of being despised by men for so doing. She determines also to avow her faith in him, and seek for his presence in his ordinances, that she might be further instructed in the truth; assured that her holy love, spiritual worship, and cheerful obedience, would be more acceptable to him, than the richest and most highly favoured cordials.
6 Set me as a seal upon thine heart, as a seal upon thine arm: for love is strong as death; jealousy is cruel as the grave: the coals thereof are coals of fire, which hath a most vehement flame.

7 Many waters cannot quench love, neither can the floods drown it: if a man would give all the substance of his house for love, it would utterly be condemned.

8 If we have a little sister, or she hath no breasts, what shall we do for our sister, in the day when she shall be spoken for?

9 If she be a wall, we will build upon her a palace of silver: and if she be a door, we will enclose her with boards of cedar.

10 If she be a wall, my breasts shall even be like the towers of ivory, girded with jewels.

V. 5. Who is it, &c. The daughters of Jerusalem seem here to speak concerning the spouse, or the company of established believers, when in the most vigorous exercise of grace. By faith, hope, and love of Christ, they come up from this present evil world; which once, through the enchantments of sin and Satan, appeared to be a paradise; but as the arm is broken, they know it to be a wasteful bowing wilderness. Therefore leave earthly for heavenly things, and mount upward in holy desires, affections, and conversation; leaning upon the power, truth, and love of Christ: and in his strength surmounting difficulties, resisting temptations, hearing afflictions, and walking, without yielding to weariness or fainting, in the ways of holy obedience. In this heavenly course, the established believer appears wonderful to the inexperienced inquirer or feeble Christian, who can scarcely think it possible, that he can be enabled to follow an example so much above his present attainments.

I raised, &c. As the punctuation of the original makes the pronouns masculine, all that unreservedly adhere to its suppose the spouse to speak in this sentence. But it is much more natural to consider it as the language of Christ.

He raises up new converts, and matures his people, through his mediation and by his Spirit, giving efficacy to his word and ordinances. (Note, ii. 3.) Thus they receive their spiritual birth, nourishment, and comfort, in the church, the mother of us all. The word rendered brought thee forth, may mean pledged thee: for the church, especially in the Sacraments, solemnly dedicates all her children to Christ.

V. 6, 7. These verses seem to be the words of the spouse to Christ, entreating him to give her an abiding place in his love and protection by his power; setting her name, as with the deep impression of a seal, on his heart and on his arm; that she might neither lose her interest in love nor the comfort of it. In enforcing this request she represents the energy of holy love: if that were preserved in vigorous exercise, it would prove strong as death, and enable her to suffer every extremity, rather than renounce or dishonour him. But the very suspicion of not being the object of his love, would be cruel to her as the grave, or more dreadful than death in its most tremendous forms. For love resembles fire kindled among coals, or charcoal, made of those kinds of wood which emit the strongest heat and most vehement flame: and it is fire that no floods of water can quench; that is, no temptations or sufferings can prevail against: nay, if a man possess this love, no wealth can hire him to renounce it; nor can any thing purchase it, or compensate for the want of it. The word rendered jealousy, may signify zeal. 'The jealous zeal which I have for thee, and of thy glory, consumes me, even like the grave, and burns me up like the coals of some most vehement and extreme fire.' (Bp. Hall.)—It should be thus translated, 'which are the flames of the fire of the Lord.' So the Hebrew word seems to signify, being compounded of three words, fire, flame, and the Lord; (or Jah, the only time any name of God is used in this book.)—Some translate it, 'Such flames are kindled only by the Lord;' and then, if there be an allusion to the breast-plate of the high-priest in the beginning of the verse, (Marg. Ref.) I fancy the conclusion may allude to 'the fire that went out from before the Lord, (Lec. ix. 21.)' and devoured the sacrifices, as love doth all manner of difficulties. This fire was to burn perpetually upon the altar, and never be suffered to go out, (Lec. vi. 12, 13.) and therefore the best emblem of love that could be found.' (Bp. Patrick.)—'Wild beasts are not terrible to it, nor fire, nor precipices, nor the sea, nor the sword, nor the halter:—but even the most impassable difficulties are got over by it; the hardest things are presently mastered; the most frightful things easily surmounted, it is everywhere confident, overlooks all things, overpowers all things.' (Maximus Tyrius.) (Rom. viii. 35, and 1 Cor. xiii. 7, 2 Cor. v. 14, 15.)

V. 8, 9. The spouse, (or the church that then was,) seems here to intercede for the Gentiles, from among whom God intended to take a person for his name. The spouse therefore calls that future church, 'a little sister, that hath no breasts:' Though a few believers were even then found among the Gentiles, yet they had not the word of God, or the means of grace, and spiritual union with the promised Saviour. But in due time they would be spoken for' by him: and what was the Jewish church do for them at this time as instruments of affecting the gracious purposes of God? To this question Christ answers, 'If she be a wall, we will build upon her a palace of silver.' If the commencement of this work, even the conversion of the Gentiles by the Spirit of Christ, through the preaching of apostles and evangelists, raised up from the nation of Israel, were likened to a wall built upon Him, the precious Foundation and Corner-stone, to become a part of a spiritual temple, they would be so multiplied, and enriched in process of time, that the Gentile church would become as a palace for the great King, built of solid silver, and far more splendid than Solomon's temple. If the first preaching of the Gospel to them was compared to the making of a door, through the wall of partition, that door should be preserved most effectually, as if casued with boards of durable cedar.
like towers: then was I in his eyes as one that found favour.

11 ¶ Solomon had a vineyard at Baal-hammon: he let out the vineyard unto keepers; every one for the fruit thereof was to bring a thousand pieces of silver.

12 My vineyard is mine own vineyard; it is laid up in my列为 before me: 0 thou, O Solomon, must have a thousand, and those that keep the fruit thereof two hundred.

13 Thou that dwellest in the gardens, the companions hearken to thy voice: cause me to hear it.

14 ¶ Make haste, my Beloved, and be thou like to a roe, or a young hart upon the mountains of spices.

V. 10. The ancient church seems here thankfully to reflect on her privileges: she was, before the coming of the Messiah, as a wall built on the precious Foundation, a part of the glorious temple that was to be erected; and the lively oracles and ordinances that she enjoyed were her security, as well as the sustenance and comfort of her children: and she was thus distinguished, because "then," (even when this difference originated,) "she was in his eyes as one that found favour" and peace with him.

V. 11, 12. Solomon, it seems, had a large vineyard, which he did not superintend himself, but let it out to keepers, each of whom paid him a thousand pieces of silver, or shekels, for the fruit, and was supposed to clear two hundred. With allusion to this, the advantages and privileges of the ancient church are considered, according to frequent parables in Scripture, as a vineyard, trusted by its owner to the rulers, teachers, and congregation of Israel: and the spouse, or church, determines to keep this vineyard, under her own immediate care; that it might abound in fruits of righteousness, to the honour of her Beloved, and the rich benefit of all employed in the care of it. (Notes, Is. v. 1—7. Matt. xxi. 32—43.) True believers in Israel understood these obligations, and had the vineyard before them, as their grand concern, and their endeavour was that much fruit might be produced. Thus the Lord received his recompense of praise and the perquisites of Levites, prophets, and others, whose labours, prayers, and examples conducing to this end, were graciously rewarded; and when, (at the coming of Christ,) the stated teachers and rulers neglected their duty; apostles and evangelists were raised from the sound part of the ancient church, by whom the vineyard was successfully cultivated: and so the corrupt part of that church being excluded, the converted Gentiles were made the principal part of the vineyard, admitted to share all its privileges, and even more abundant blessings.

V. 13, 14. These verses close the conference betwixt Christ and the spouse, and imply his personal absence from his people, during their continuance on earth. Christ first addresses her, as "dwell ing in the gardens, or vineyard," (11, 12.) the assemblies and ordinances of his saints. The word companions being masculine, cannot mean the attendants on the spouse, so frequently mentioned, but rather those who were "the friends" and companions of the bridegroom; the spirits of just men made perfect, an innumerable company of angels; and such men as John Baptist, the apostles, and the most eminent instruments of Christ, in establishing his church. "Ask what thou wilt of me, and I tell thee before all thy companions, I will do it for thee." (By. Patrick.) While the church professes her faith and love, and renders her worship, as in the presence of all the friends of her Beloved, the more she abounds in prayers and supplications, with thanksgivings, the greater measure of true prosperity and consolation she will enjoy. Thus our Lord, just before his crucifixion, again and again exhorted his disconsolate disciples, to "ask and receive, that their joy might be full." To this the spouse replies by craving his speedy return, not for a transient visit, but to take her to be wholly with him. The mountains in spices, seem to mean heaven and its exalted worship, of which all the incense and worship at the temple were a faint shadow. (Notes, Is. 17. iv. 6.) Solomon seems here long for the first coming of Christ, as St. John doth for his last, who concludes his book of Revelation in the same manner, Even so, come Lord Jesus. (By. Patrick.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—7.

As the incarnation of the Son of God was the grand object of the believing prayers of the ancient church, so it should be the theme of our grateful joyful praises. Blessed be God, he hath sent forth his Son, made of a woman, and having made a end, the greater measure of true prosperity and consolation he will enjoy. Thus our Lord, just before his crucifixion, again and again exhorted his disconsolate disciples, to "ask and receive, that their joy might be full." To this the spouse replies by craving his speedy return, not for a transient visit, but to take her to be wholly with him. The mountains in spices, seem to mean heaven and its exalted worship, of which all the incense and worship at the temple were a faint shadow. (Notes, Is. 17. iv. 6.) Solomon seems here long for the first coming of Christ, as St. John doth for his last, who concludes his book of Revelation in the same manner, Even so, come Lord Jesus. (By. Patrick.)
solation with him in heaven; and others shall see and admire our indifference about earthly things, compared with "those above, where Jesus sitteth at the right hand of God." Nor should we consider such attainments as out of our reach: let us but improve our privilege of access to the Mercy-seat; and when we have obtained some liberty in pouring out our hearts before him, let us strive to draw nearer and nearer to him, in fervency and importance, wrestling for more and larger blessings; and we shall certainly obtain his effectual help. His love to us sinners was stronger than death; nor could all the floods of ungodly men or evil spirits, or inexpressible sufferings, quench that vehement flame; and all the kingdoms of the world were utterly contemned, when offered as a bribe to induce him to desist from his gracious purpose. Thus should our love to him be vigorous and victorious, that we may be ready to renounce or suffer any thing for his sake, and that we may be armed against the terrors and the friendship of the world. Indeed love is the most powerful principle of activity; and where that prevails, all dangers and difficulties will be disregarded, and every contrary interest utterly contemned. If then we have true faith, it will work by love of Christ, and the effects will soon become manifest in our whole conduct. Sometimes indeed, the fear of coming short of his love, or the temptation to forsake him, may be very painful to us: but we shall earnestly pray to be fixed as a seal on his heart and on his arm, that being kept in his mercy, and by his power, nothing in life or death may separate us from him.

V. 8—14.

The more our hearts grow with love to Christ, the greater will be our pity for those that "sit in darkness, and in the shadow of death." We are assured that he has a numerous people to gather into his fold, from among the Pagans, Jews, and every description of Anti-christians. These have not at present the oracles of God, or the means of grace; or they find them as dry breasts, through ignorance and unbelief. As the Lord then heard the prayers of his ancient church, as well as the intercession of his Son, for us sinners of the Gentiles, and hath begun to build us upon the foundation of his apostles and prophets, Jesus Christ being the chief Corner-stone, that we may be an habitation of God through the Spirit; and as the Gospel, having once been preached in our land, hath wonderfully been continued among us to this present day: so let us lift up our prayers for its spread all over the earth. Let us not imitate the unbelieving Jews who spoke against the poor Gentiles, when the Gospel was sent among them: but let us continue to pray for that unhappy nation, that they may be again grafted into their own olive-tree. Seeing we are in the eyes of the Lord, as those that have found favour, and have his holy word, as our security and consolation, let us learn to give the praise to his distinguishing grace. Let us also remember, that all our external privileges are talents committed to our trust: and we be to all such in our congregations, as do not honour him in their lives in some measure answerable to their advantages. The Lord hath heretofore taken his vineyard from those that rendered not the fruits in their season; and he will not continue it long to any who imitate their corrupt example. Let each of us then place our vineyard before us, and earnestly seek grace, that we may profit by every ordinance and advantage: let every Christian endeavour suitably to perform the duty of his station, that "men may see his good works, and glorify "his heavenly Father!" and let him not forget, that the watchful faithful ministers, under whom his soul thrives, are entitled to a share of his affection and regard. Let ministers also watch over their part of the vineyard, as those who must give account, and who seek their recompense from their gracious Lord alone. All this becomes those who dwell in the gardens; and the fruit that we produce to his glory, will certainly redound to our own advantage. If we are enabled to act in this manner, new inquirers will hearken to our voice, and be instructed and admonished by our prudent counsel, while angels and saints in heaven rejoice over the success of our zealous endeavours, and our most condescending Lord will delight to hear our requests: and whilst we continue in prayer for whatever we want, our thanksgivings also will abound and our joy be full; our souls will be more and more enriched, and we shall be enabled to look forward to death and judgment with satisfaction, saying, "Make haste, my "Beloved, and be thou like to a roe, or to a young hart, "upon the mountains of spices." May the Lord thus prepare the writer and every reader, for his service on earth, and for the felicity of his heavenly kingdom!
THE BOOK

OF THE

PROPHET ISAIAH.

OUR blessed Lord, just before his ascension, said unto his disciples, "All things must be fulfilled, which were written in "the law of Moses, and in the prophets, and in the Psalms, concerning me. Then opened he their understandings, that "they might understand the scriptures." (Luke xxiv. 44, 45.) Hence we learn that the sacred volume of the Old Testament was divided, at that time, nearly in the same manner as at present; though there is some difficulty, and not much importance, in exactly determining which books belonged to the Prophets, and which to the Psalms. The historical books, however, from Joshua to Nehemiah, must have belonged to the prophets, in our Lord's days. Indeed all the sacred writers were prophets: and evident predictions of remote events are found in almost all the preceding books: but then, the prophetical part comes in rather occasionally, in the midst of other subjects; and in many instances, the prophet seems to have been led by the Holy Spirit, to foretell the most important and distant events, while he seemed to himself, or at least might appear to the reader, to be discoursing on another subject. But in the division of the Old Testament on which we now enter, prediction is evidently the principal subject; and other topics are introduced occasionally, on account of some kind of relation which they bore to the predictions: and the prophets knew and avowed, that they were foretelling future events. From Moses to Samuel, few prophets were raised up: "the word of the Lord was precious,"—there was no open vision;” but Samuel established the schools of the prophets, and we read of a succession of them in every age, till the close of the sacred canon. They were in general, extraordinary instructors, sometimes in aid of the priests and Levites; but more commonly to supply their defects, when they neglected their duty. They were bold reformers, and reprovers of idolatry, iniquity, and hypocrisy: they called the attention of the people to the law of Moses, especially the moral law, the standard of true holiness; they showed the inefficacy of ceremonial observances, without the obedience of faith and love; and they kept up, and encouraged the expectation of the promised Messiah, and more fully declared his coming, “his sufferings, and the glory which should follow.” Several of these prophets, nay, some of the most eminent, wrote nothing that we know of: others composed the historical records, that have been considered, (which contain also occasional predictions;) and other books of the same nature, from which extracts only have been preserved for our instruction. But at length some of them were commanded to commit their messages to writing; and these constitute the books on which we now enter. Tradition informs us, that the prophets, having written the message, and delivered it as directed, offered it to the door of the temple, where it continued some time, and was then taken down by the priests, and entered into their registers: but the persecutions which the prophets generally endured, from both priests and people, render this doubtful, nor can we exactly know in what way they were preserved. This, however, is not material; no learned man is anxious to know in what manner Homer’s Iliad, Virgil’s Æneid, or Tully’s Orations, were rescued from the general wreck of ancient writings. They exist, and vouch their own authenticity. How much more, then, do those prophecies, which have been fulfilling for ages, and are fulfilling at this day, demand our attention by their internal evidence! In addition to this, however, the authority of both Jews and Christians, and above all of Christ and his apostles, transmits them to us as the oracles of God. As the prophets did not teach any new doctrines, commands, or ordinances, but appealed to their authenticated records; it was not needful that they should confirm their messages, with that immense weight of public miracles, with which the dispensation of Moses, and the gospel of Christ were introduced: their pretensions to be considered as God’s appointed servants, were demonstrated by the unimpeachable integrity of their characters, by the intrinsic excellence and tendency of their Instructions; and by the disinterested zeal and unshrunked fortitude, with which they persevered in their great designs. These were still further confirmed by the miracles.
ISAIAH.

lous proofs which they gave of divine support, and by the immediate completion of many smaller predictions, which they uttered.

Such were their credentials to their contemporaries: and we, who having lived to witness the second dispensation, can look back to the connexion which subsisted between the two covenants, have received additional evidence of the inspiration of the prophets, in the attestations of our Saviour and his apostles; and in the retrospect of a germinant, and gradually maturing scheme of prophecy, connected in all its parts, and ratified in its great object, the advent of the Messiah. We have still further incontestible proof of their divine appointment, in the numerous prophecies, which in these latter days are fulfilled, and still under our own eyes continue to receive their completion. The language of the prophets, also, is remarkable for its magnificence. Each of the writers is distinguished for peculiar beauty; but their style in general may be characterized as strong, animad, and impressive. Its ornaments are derived, not from accumulation of epithet, or laboured harmony; but from the real grandeur of its images, and the majestic force of its expressions.

It is varied with striking propriety, and enlarged with quick but easy transitions. Its sudden bursts of eloquence, its earnest warmth, its affecting exhortations and appeals, afford very interesting proofs of that lively impression, and of that inspired conviction, under which the prophets rode, and which enabled them, among a people not distinguished for genius, to surpass in every variety of composition, the most admired productions of pagan antiquity. The greatest part of the prophetic books, were written in some kind of measure or verse."—But, "as the Hebrew has been a dead language for nearly two thousand years, we can have no power of ascertaining the pronunciation, or even the number of the syllables. The quantity and rhythm of its verse must therefore have entirely perished, and there can be no mode of discovering the rules by which they were governed." (Gray's Key.)—Much has been written concerning the different degrees of inspiration with which the prophets were endowed: but, I own, I never found satisfaction in any discussion of this subject. Certainly the scriptures intimate some disparity between Moses and other prophets, and several ways in which divine communications were made: and let others determine what credit is due to the rabbinical determinations in this respect. It seems enough to observe, that the credit of scriptural prophecy does not depend on such distinctions, but on internal evidence; and the highest authority, that "holy word of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost." Probably none, except prophets, ever had an idea, how the illusions of the Holy Spirit came into their minds, and beyond doubt enhanced their divine origin. All the prophets were so superintended, both as to the words used by them, and the messages delivered, as to be preserved from error, and to give us the very word of God: and this is enough for our satisfaction. Many things, however, relative to this subject, will come in our way, and an opinion will be given on them, as we proceed. It should be particularly observed, by every diligent student of the sacred scriptures, how constantly the preceding history is assumed for granted, and as certainly known and believed by the people, in every part of the prophetic writings; and in what numerous instances they are quoted as "the scriptures, which cannot be broken," and the oracles of God, in the New Testament. It would carry me much further than this introductory dissertation will admit, to enter into particulars: let the reader consult the marginal references, and doubt if he can, whether the historical books, preceding the time of each prophet, were not extant and deemed authentic, when he wrote: and whether Christ and his apostles did not consider the whole as the word of God. The distinction between the greater and the minor prophets cannot well be passed over in silence, in this place: but it means no more than, that the prophecies transmitted to us of some of them, are more than those of others; but not at all of higher authority.

To encourage men in searches of this kind, (that is of the prophetic writings,) they will find such an harmony and correspondence between the emblems, whereby the prophets point out things to come, that the careful comparing of them with each other will afford the best clue to guide the attentive reader through the most difficult parts of their writings; and is likewise a most surprising proof, that they all wrote by the direction of one and the same Spirit." I confess I can by no means approve of the opinion of some learned men, who are for craving the sense of the prophets, and confining them within so narrow a compass as possible. I must own myself puzzled, to assign a reason, why God should appoint a succession of prophets, to foretell what should come within the compass of about three hundred years, (for within that time most of those prophets lived, whose writings make up this part of the scripture-canon,) and take no notice of any other occurrence, which should happen in succeeding times. I desire it may be considered that the prophecies, which foretell the visibility and universality of Christ's church, accompanied with perfect peace, prosperity, and holiness, cannot with any probability be said to have yet received their accomplishment; as neither have those predictions which foretell the flourishing state of the Jews in the latter times: and to suppose those prophecies to
ISAIAH.

The ancient Jews always acknowledged that the chief design of the prophets was to foretell the times of the Messiah: and when Christ and his apostles explained the prophecies in a spiritual and mystical sense, they interpreted them according to the received notions of the synagogue, and are never taxed, that we find, for misapplying particular texts, as if they did not belong to the times of the Messiah. It does not appear that ever this was called in question, till the Jews came to engage in dispute with the Christians. (Lowth.)—These hints may prepare the reader for that mode of interpreting the prophetic writings, which is adopted in this publication, and throw light on the subject.

The prophet Isaiah, on whose writings we first enter, is remarkable for the eloquence and sublimity of his style and imagery; in which the best judges have decidedly given him the preference to the most admired writers of antiquity. He is equally distinguished by the plain and copious manner in which he speaks of Christ and the times of the gospel: on this account he hath been called The Fifth Evangelist. The book opens with sharp rebukes of the people for their idolatry and iniquity, and denunciations of divine vengeance upon them; but interspersed with encouraging intimations of mercy and predictions of Christ. Afterwards follow various prophecies of judgments about to be executed on several nations, as well as on Judah; through all of which the reader is led to expect future deliverances, and glorious times to the church of God. Then there is inserted an account of Sennacherib’s invasion, and of some particulars relating to Hezekiah, that end in a prediction of the Babylonish captivity. The prophet then copiously enlarges upon the deliverance of his people from that calamitous state, in language peculiarly applicable to the spiritual redemption of Christ: at length he drops in great measure, types and shadows, and speaks in the most emphatical language of his person, sufferings, and glory; and of those things that pertain to the spread of his gospel and the setting up of his kingdom on earth; until he closes with descriptions, which lead the mind to consider the final felicity of the righteous, and the misery of the wicked in another world. We shall find the whole book replete with instruction: especially shall we meet with the most decisive internal evidence of its divine original, and it will reflect light on every part of the sacred volume, on which all our hopes of happiness are founded.

Isaiah is certainly one of the most difficult of all the prophets, though perhaps few are sensible of it but they who try to explain him. The profoundness of his thoughts, the loftiness of his expression, and the extent of his prophecy, have made the commentators hitherto written upon him, fall short of a full explication of his book: and he that will undertake to fathom the depths of this prophecy, is in great danger of going out of his own. The prophet seems to have been favoured with an entire view of the gospel-state, from the very birth of the Messiah, to that glorious period, when “the kingdoms of the world shall become the kingdom of the Lord, and of his Christ.”—In those parts of the exposition, where mention is made of the Jews being restored to their own land, &c.; let the reader not consider what is said on these obscure subjects, as positive assertions, but only as probable conjectures. For in these, and such like abstruse matters,—a modest man should not pretend to be wise above what is plainly and expressly written. (Lowth.)
CHAP. I.

The title. 1. God by his prophet charges Judah and Jerusalem with base ingratitude and horrid wickedness; and describes their deplorable condition, 2—9. He shows his abhorrence of their sacrifices, calls them to repentance, with promises of forgiveness, and warns them against obstinate rebellion, 10—20. He laments Zion’s degeneracy and the iniquity of her princes, denounces severe vengeance; yet intimates the recovery of the nation to purity and prosperity, 21—31.

THE vision of Isaiah the son of Amoz, which he saw concerning Judah and Jerusalem, in the days of Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, kings of Judah.

2. Hear, O heavens, and give ear, O earth; for the Lord hath spoken, I have nourished and brought up children, and they have rebelled against me.

3. The ox knoweth his owner, and the ass his master’s crib: but Israel doth not know, my people doth not consider.

4. Ah, sinful nation, a people laden with iniquity, seed of evil doers, children that are corruptors! They have forsaken the Lord, they have provoked the Holy One of Israel unto anger, they are gone away backward.

5. Why should ye be stricken any more? ye will not revolt more; the whole head is sick, and the whole heart faint.

6. From the sole of the foot even unto the head, there is no soundness in it; but wounds, and bruises, and putrifying sores: they have not been closed, neither bound up, neither mollified with ointment.

7. For the Lord will remove from off thee all the diseases of Egypt, which thou hast known, and the diseases of Egypt will he show thee, neither will he any more exceedingly punish thee in this thing.

8. Yet in this thing shall the Lord of hosts be exalted, and be celebrated in the earth; in Jerusalem, and in Judah, in the uttermost parts of the earth, among the heathen, in all countries where my name is called, saith the Lord of hosts.

NOTES.

CHAP. I. V. 1. The name of the prophet, signifying the salvation of the Lord, was very suitable to the subject on which he so frequently and delightfully expatiated, and which has procured him the title of the ‘evangelical prophet,’ nay, of the ‘fifth Evangelist.’ Tradition reports that he was of noble birth, and that his daughter was married to Manasseh, and that he was slain under the command of that idolatrous prince, to which the apostle is supposed to allude. (Heb. xi. 37.) It must, however, be allowed that these traditions are very uncertain; and some think he did not survive Hezekiah: yet, even in that case, he must have prophesied about sixty years at least. In general, the reader must be referred to the notes on the second book of Kings, from the fifteenth to the twenty-first chapter, inclusive; and to the second book of Chronicles, from the twenty-sixth to the thirty-third chapter inclusive, for the state of Judah and Israel during the term of years in which Isaiah prophesied.

Many of his prophecies, indeed, relate to other kingdoms; but always on account of their connexion, one way or other, with the chosen race. The two usual ways whereby God communicated his will to the prophets, were visions and dreams. (Num. xii. 6.) In vision the inspired person was awake, but his external senses were bound up, and as it were laid asleep in a trance. It is called vision, not from any use of the corporal sight, but because of the clearness and evidence of the things revealed. (2 Cor. xii. 1—4.) It was sometimes accompanied with external representations. (vi. 1—8. Ez. i. x. xi. xvii. Rev. xxi. 10—27.) (Lomth.) This chapter may be considered as an introductory address prefixed to the subsequent prophecies; and the title may belong to the book in general, or to the chapter in particular. It is thought that this was not Isaiah’s first vision, though placed as an introduction to the rest.

V. 2. (Notes. Deut. xxxiii. 1. Ps. lxi. 1—4. c. 1—3.) The Lord, in this as in many other places, appeals to the whole creation, in the controversy betwixt him and his people: he had brought them up with all the tenderness and attention of a parent; but they had ungratefully rebelled against him, and apostatized to worthless idols. The word rendered brought up, generally means exalted: God had greatly exalted Israel, which aggravated the guilt of their rebellion.

V. 3. The most stupid of the domestic animals are observant of the hand by which, and the place where, they are fed, though the owner seeks only his own interest in his care of them: but God’s highly favoured people did not know or understand their immense obligations, nor consider their own true interest, which could only be secured by cleaving to Him. The Israelites, though chosen by the mere favour of God, adopted as sons, promoted to the highest dignity; yet acknowledged not their Lord and their God, but despised his commandments; though in the highest degree equitable and just. (Bochart in Bp. Lomth.)

V. 4. They were not only wicked as their fathers, but totally corrupt, and by their evil examples corrupted others. Every generation of Israel degenerated more and more from the faith and piety of their ancestors: they were not only corrupted in their early years; but the very children were corrupters and tempters of others; a circumstance extremely affecting to those who mark the progress of impiety. In short, almost the whole universe estranged from the Lord, and had turned their backs on him, and on his holy service.
CHAPTER I.

7 Your country is desolate, your cities are burned with fire: your land, strangers devour it in your presence, and it is desolate, as overthrown by strangers.

8 And the daughter of Zion is left as a cottage in a vineyard, as a lodge in a garden of cucumbers, as a besieged city.

9 Except the Lord of hosts had left unto us a very small remnant, we should have been as Sodom, and we should have been like unto Gozarah.

10 Hear the word of the Lord, ye rulers of Sodom; give ear unto the law of our God, ye people of Gozarah:

11 To what purpose is the multitude of your sacrifices unto me? saith the Lord: I am full of burnt-offerings of rams, and the fat of fed beasts; and I delight not in the blood of bullocks, or of lambs, or of he-goats.

12 When ye come to appear before me, who hath required this at your hand, to tread my courts?

13 Bring no more vain oblations: incense is an abomination unto me, the new moons and sabbaths, the calling of assemblies, I cannot away with: it is iniquity, even the solemn meeting.

14 Your new moons and your appointed feasts I hate; they are a trouble unto me; I am weary to bear them.

15 And, when ye spread forth your hands, I will hide mine eyes from you; yea, when ye shall make many prayers I will not hear: your hands are full of blood.

V. 6. The wickedness of the people was become so incorrigible, that it would answer no purpose to inflict any further chastisement, seeing they would "revolt more and more:" and what doth it avail to throw away medicines on the dying patient, when they only exacerbate his disease? They might therefore as well be let alone, till ripe for utter destruction. Or the sentence may mean, that they were so covered with the wounds and bruises of their former smittings, that it might be inquired, where another stroke could be inflicted? Or, why would they persist in those crimes, which ensured further punishment, when they were already in so miserable a situation? The following metaphorical description may relate either to their corrupt state in respect to religion, or to their calamities. In the former sense, even the princes and prophets or priests, (the head and the heart of the body politic and ecclesiastical,) were both sick and faint, at, as the approach of death. Religion and justice were expired; idolatry, impiety, hypocrisy, and every kind of iniquity, were become almost universal; the disease had been so long increasing, and magistrates and ministers had so neglected the proper means of checking its progress, that the whole body was, as it were, ulcerated, putrefying, and tending to one general mortification. The passage may be accommodated as an illustration of the total depravity of human nature, but only by means to be adduced as a proof of the doctrine; which cannot be, except as the depraved state of Judah was a fact that can on no other principles be accounted for.

V. 7–9. The prosperous state of Judah, during the reigns of Uzziah and Joash, do not accord to the description here given: and therefore commentators have generally dated this chapter the beginning of the reign of AAzaz: though it has been thought it might be written in the close of Joatham's reign, (2 Kings xv. 37.) The enemy so desolated the land, that Jerusalem alone was protected from their ravages; and that city was so shut up,improverished, and left alone, that it resembled a hut erected to accommodate the gardeners, who during a few weeks watched their cucumbers and melons from being destroyed by the jackals or foxes, or stolen during the night. Zion, with her children or inhabitants, thus cut off from communication with the neighbouring country, resembled a besieged city, rather than one taken by siege, as some would render. And in general, whilst any instructive sense can be made of the Hebrew text, as it now stands, it behoves us to be very cautious how we sanction the efforts of those who would alter whatever accord not to their views, and thus in fact give us their own opinions, instead of the "word of God." But few passages will be left, that need alteration, if we adhere to this rule: and perhaps it will be better to consider them as trials of our modesty, than by bold conjecture, or on dubious authority, to make out new meanings and sentences, and add them to God's word; (Note, Prov. xxx. 6.) The Lord of hosts, the God of armies, had a small remnant of pious servants at Jerusalem, and for their sakes he preserved a remnant of the nation: otherwise as their crimes had equalled, so their punishment would have resembled, that of Sodom and Gomorrah. V. 10–15. From the mention of Sodom and Gomorrah, the prophet took occasion, with a holy indignation, to address the rulers of Judah, under the title of "the rulers of Sodom," and the citizens of Jerusalem, as "the inhabitants of Gomorrah." Many of them still attended to the ritual observances, in their sacrifices and solemnities: but their oblations were vain, and the incense an abomination: nay, the Lord was not only weary of their solemn feasts, and hated them; but he would pay no regard to their multiplied prayers, though offered with great apparent devotion. And the reason was evident: they were mere hypocrites: they neither regarded the typical intention of the sacrifices and ceremonies, nor used them as means of sanctification: but proudly relied on the 16 Wash you, make you clean; put away the evil of your doings from before mine eyes; cease to do evil; 17 Learn to do well; seek judgment, relieve the oppressed, judge the fatherless, plead for the widow.

18 Come now, and let us reason together, saith the Lord: though your sins be as scarlet, they shall be as white as snow; though they be red like crimson, they shall be as wool.

19 If ye be willing and obedient, ye shall eat the good of the land: 20 But if ye refuse and rebel, ye shall be devoured with the sword; for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it.

21 How is the faithful city become an harlot! it was full of judgment; righteousness lodged in it; but now murderers.

22 Thy silver is become dross, thy wine mixed with water:

23 Thy princes are rebellious, and companions of thieves: every one loveth gifts, and followeth after rewards; they judge not the fatherless, neither doth the cause of the widow come unto them.

24 Therefore saith the Lord, the host of hosts, the mighty One of Israel, Ah, I will ease me of mine adversaries, and avenge me of mine enemies.

25 And I will turn my hand upon thee, and utterly purge away thy dross and take away all thy tins:

V. 21—24. In the time of David, and in the former part of Solomon's reign, Jerusalem was indeed a holy city, a proper type of the true church, the faithful house of Christ: but notwithstanding all her distinguished advantages, this once virtuous matron was become a vile harlot, to the astonishment and regret of all the true servants of Jehovah; and instead of wholly adhering to his worship, she was most grievously defiled with idolatry, and also was become a receptacle of murderers and robbers. Nay, the apparent religion that remained was hypocritical, dross and not silver; or at best, wine mixed with water, by which it had lost its strength and flavour. Therefore the Lord of Hosts, the mighty One who had so often delivered Israel, with most tremendous emphasis declared, that he would "ease him of his adversaries, and avenge him of his enemies." The expressions are taken from the uneastness which men feel, when provoked to anger by multiplied insults, and the relief and pleasure that revenge affords them. All that is discomposing, and the effect of our sinful passions, must be removed from our conception of the divine conduct, as thus delineated: but such language strongly marks God's abhorrence of sin, and his love of justice. He has no pleasure in the sufferings of wicked men; but, as Governor of the universe, he greatly delighteth in honouring his own law, and displaying his own righteous character, and he will therefore avenge himself on all incorrigible transgressors. It is remarkable, that whereas the Greeks and Latins by mixt wine, always meant wine diluted and lowered by water; the Hebrews, on the contrary, mean wine made stronger and more inebriating, by the addition of higher and more powerful ingredients.
CHAPTER I.

V. 25—27. The Lord did not mean so to destroy an hypocrisy and wicked nation, as to leave no remnant: but he foretold, for the encouragement of the pious few, that “he would turn his hand upon Zion” to cleanse her, and on the incorrigible to punish them. (2 Sam. viii. 3. Ps. lxxxi. 14. Zech. xiii. 7. Original.) His most tremendous judgments should be as the fire of a purifying furnace, to separate all dross and alloy of base metal from her silver; to destroy hypocrisies from among her worshippers, and to make believers more holy and spiritual. Then judges and counsellors, like David and other pious persons in her first and best days, should be raised up, under whom so blessed a change should take place, that Jerusalem should be called “The city of righteousness, the faithful metropolis.” For Zion and her worshippers should be redeemed from enemies and abuses; and new covenants should be added to her, by the righteous judgments that had been foretold. When God shall redeem Zion, and restore those that truly turn to him, he will make a remarkable discrimination between the righteous and the wicked. His judgment will be visible in punishing the latter, and his mercy in saving the former. (Lamph.)—The display of the divine justice, as well as mercy, in the way of the sinner’s salvation, may also be intended. The calamities of Abaz, Scybartheri’s invasion, the distress it occasioned, its surprising event, and Hezekiah’s reformation, were accomplishments of this prediction: and so were the Babylonian captivity, the reformation of the captive Jews, and their consequent adherence to the worship of Jehovah. But the redemption of the spiritual Zion, by the righteousness and death of Christ, and his precious gospel, his more powerful grace; her repeated deliverances by his righteous judgments on her enemies; her prosperity and increase under his government; and her comparative purity on earth and perfect purity in heaven, fully accord to the meaning of this enigmatic language. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 28—31. The ruin of apostles and all wicked persons, attends the purity and prosperity of the true church; and will come upon them suddenly, at once, and on all of them together, so that they cannot help each other. The idols, and the groves or gardens, which the Jews preferred to the temple of Jehovah at his temple, would shortly turn to their confusion. (Marg. Ref.) The word rendered oaks, probably means some trees of the ever green species: and it was predicted that the wicked Jews should become as one of them, when being blasted by excessive heat, all its leaves fade at once; and as a garden without water, which in those hot countries must very soon be utterly burnt up. Nay, the most potent of them would become “as tow, and as a garden that hath no water.”

29 For they shall be ashamed of the oaks which ye have desired, and ye shall be confounded for the gardens that ye have chosen.

30 For ye shall be as an oak whose leaf fadeth, and as a garden that hath no water.

31 And the strong shall be as tow, and the maker of it as a spark, and they shall both burn together, and none shall quench them.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—9.

The varied, persevering, and suitable methods, which the Lord employs to check the progress of impiety and iniquity, to bring sinners to repentance, and to retain his people in his worship and service, eventually demonstrate the power of man’s depravity, leave sinners more inexcusable in their crimes, and tend to manifest the justice of God in their punishment. We should therefore seek his grace, to render every means effectual, with earnestness proportioned to the number of our peculiar advantages: else the Gospel of Christ will become a savour of death unto us, and the heavens and the earth will declare his righteousness in our condemnation. Man, each man, owes his reasonable powers and valuable distinctions, to his Maker’s goodness: he is upheld by his power, and feasted by his bounty, and treated as a favourite child: and yet he alone, as a monster of ingratitude, spurns his authority, and treats his gracious Friend and Father with contempt and enmity! The dull ox and ass, (as well as the most sagacious animals), whilst they express a kind of gratitude to the hand that feeds them, judge and condemn the human race, who know not the truths, perfections, or will of their Creator, or who do not consider their folly and criminality in rebelling against him. Where then is he, who can justified himself before God, or even at the bar of his own conscience? If we were appointed to judge ourselves, and had matters fairly stated before us, and no part of the evidence suppressed, we...
CHAP. II.

Predictions of the establishment, extent, and peace of the church, in the days of the Messiah, 1—5: of the rejection of the Jews for their iniquities and idolatry, 6—9: of divine judgments, which would be employed to humble their pride, cure them of idolatry, and cause them to cease from confidence in man, 16—22.

should almost be constrained to take his part against ourselves: no wonder then, that at last "every mouth will be stopped, and all the world become guilty before God." But the rebellion and ingratitude of those who are favoured with his oracles and ordinances, are peculiarly aggravated; and the impiety and wickedness of nations professing Christianity, display a softness and a contempt of God, equally astonishing and detestable. With what justice and propriety, then, might Jeremiah address this favoured land, as he did Judah of old, "Ah, sinful nation! a people laden with iniquity!" Our degeneracy from the faith, zeal, purity, piety, and patience, which marked our national character during the progress of the reformation, into open infidelity, impiety, licentiousness, fraud, and perjury, marks us to be "a people laden with iniquity." The early proficiency of numbers of our youth in vice and irreligion, and in tempting others to wickedness, mark them to be "children that are corrupters." In short, as a nation, we have generally "forsooken the Lord, provoked the Holy One of Israel to anger," and are estranged from him. The patience of God hath indeed hitherto preserved us from proportionate calamities: we hope that it is not because he hath given us up as incorrigible; "seeing we revolt more and more" in the midst both of judgments and mercies. But though it cannot be said, "Your country is desolate, your cities are burned with fire, your land strangers devour it in your presence;" yet were it not for so few honourable exceptions, it might be said, as to our religious character, "The whole head is sick, the whole heart is faint." The malignant distemper also spreads forth in every part, and pervades with dire progress all orders and ranks of men: an impious and infidel contempt of the word and ordinances of God, appears every day more avowed: nay, even they who are maintained in affluence, to promote the cause of true Christianity, often appear in the opposite phalanx, or by their doctrines and examples betray her cause! nor does any one call them to account for so doing! So that the wounds and bruises, under which the religion of the land lies gasping, "have not been closed, nor bound up, nor mollified with ointment," and whilst we seem to prosper in our civil estate, the daughter of Zion, the cause of the Gospel, is left as a cottage in a vineyard, and as a besieged city, against which the hosts of aliens encamp on every side, with proud menaces and boastings, as if they were about to swallow her up! Except the Lord of hosts had left unto us a very small remnant, we should have become like Sodom and Gomorrah, in wickedness and in desolation: and doubtless the inhabitants of those cities will rise up in judgment, and condemn numbers in Britain, who are daring in their iniquity amidst so many superior advantages. How dreadful then must be the depravity of human nature, which grows so exceedingly wicked under the most suitable means of becoming holy! Surely in this respect too it may be said, "The whole head is sick, and the whole heart faint!" This evil nature is in every one of us: and no physician, or medicine, but Jesus and his sanctifying Spirit, can restore us to spiritual health. Let us then put our distempered souls into his hands, that the wounds, bruises, and putrefying sores may be mollified and bound up, and closed by his healing care. Thus alone can our ruin be prevented, and holiness and happiness be restored to our souls. Blessed be God, there is a remnant, (though but a small remnant,) of such believers, for whose sake, and in answer to whose prayers, the Lord hath hitherto spared us; and whose examples and endeavours may yet prevail to revive the power of godliness throughout our land. To them let us cordially attach ourselves, and join our prayers and endeavours with theirs. Nor should we despair, even if we saw the rulers and inhabitants of the land generally like those of Sodom. The cause is not lost, whilst any witnesses for the truth remain, to preach, and write, and protest, and pray against prevailing impiety and licentiousness; or to oppose a holy example to the torrent of iniquity and licentiousness.

V. 10—20.

Many are apt to think that none except infidels and profligates are in danger of impending vengeance: but, in fact, hypocrites are at least as vile as they. Indeed the form of godliness has very generally been thrown aside among us as a useless encumbrance. Yet it may be feared that there are many who attend places of public worship, nay, contribute largely to the expense of building and supporting them; who hear, or even preach, many sermons; who zealously profess and dispute about the capital truths of the gospel; who are found stated communicants at the Lord's table; and even offer many prayers with apparent devotion; to whom the Lord may justly say, 'To what purpose are all these services? I can have no delight in your services, nor you any profit from them.' Who hath required persons of your character and allowed conduct, to appear before me and tread my courts? I am weary with and even loathe your worship, your sacraments, your costly and ostentations services; I affront me no more with your hateful and disgusting devotions, which are merely the cloak of injustice and impenitency. I will hear none of your hypocritical prayers; and your public fasts and solemn meetings are iniquity; for your hands are full of blood, of fraud, oppression, and secret licentiousness. Let us then judge ourselves, that we be not judged of the Lord. Without a contrite and upright heart, God will accept no sacrifice from us; if we allow ourselves in any secret iniquity, or forbidden indulgence; or if we reject the salvation of Christ, our very prayers will become an abomination. Nor can any national regard to the externals of religion avert national judgments, so long as murder and cruel oppression are sanctioned by law, or permitted to be perpatriated with impunity. But, blessed be God, there is a fountain opened for sin and for uncleanness, in which the vilest may wash and be made clean. To this sinners of every order in society are directed by the ministers of religion, with most plain and energetic warnings and exhortations. By the grace of the Gospel, the most enslaved sinner may “put away the evil of his doings from before the eyes of the Lord;” he may be enabled “to cease to do evil, and may learn to do well;” and may also find pardon and acceptance by faith in Jesus Christ. And when his worketh by love of God and man, and he seeks to do judgment, to relieve the oppressed, and to preserve the fatherless and widow, according to his station in society: this change of temper and conduct will prove him interested in all the blessings of a free salvation. Well then may Jehovah call upon us to draw near to him, that he may reason with us; for all his dispensations are most righteous and reasonable. But his censuration in allowing us to reason with us, cannot be expressed: for all our conduct and all our objections, are absurd and unreasonable in the extreme. What can be more rational, than every precept of his holy law? What more reasonable than his call to repent and believe his Gospel? If we be willing and obedient, our sins, though of crimson and scarlet hue, will become as snow, or wool; and every blessing will be communicated: but if we continue to refuse and rebel, we must be consumed by his righteous vengeance: “for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it.”

O Lord, incline every one of our hearts to accept of thy mercy, and to live to thy glory.”

V. 21—31.

Could those, who saw the Christian church, in those pure times, when “great grace was upon all” the multitude of believers; and rulers and teachers were distinguished only by their humility, disinterestedness, simplicity, patience, and purity: could they, I say, arise from the dead, and survey the whole of the professing church of Christ; and observe the ambition, magnificence, avarice, luxury, carnal policy, and sloth, of numbers who appear as its rulers and teachers; surely they would exclaim with grief and astonishment, far greater than that of the prophet, “How is the faithful city become an harlot!” It was full of judgment, righteousness lodged in it, but “now”-Alas! the silver is generally become dross, and us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for out of Zion shall go forth law, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem.

4 And he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people; and they shall beat their swords into plow-shares, and their spears into pruning-hooks: nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.

5 O house of Jacob, come ye, and let us walk in the light of the Lord.

The wine mixed with water, and horrible abuses almost everywhere prevail. For whilst men are seeking “every one his gain from his quarter,” “loving gifts and following after rewards!” no wonder that piety, justice, and mercy are little attended to. But we must leave the impenitent to the judgment of the Almighty. And what shall we say? The church is not found among them: let us rejoice in the prospective assurance that he will purify his church from all her dross and impurity, and furnish her with rulers and teachers, like the holy apostles and martyrs of old, that she may be called “the City of Righteousness, the Faithful City.” Let us pray for the hastening of those blessed times, when Zion shall be redeemed from her spiritual bondage, by the Lord’s righteous judgments on every Anti-Christian oppressor; and enlarged by converts innumerable, interested in the righteousness of Christ, and walking in all holy obedience before him. But believers may expect still more glorious days at the end of the world; when sinners will become, not only as the withered tree and the parched garden, but even the mightiest of them as tow, and their most splendid performances as fire, and “they shall burn together, and none shall quench them.”

NOTES.

CHAP. II. V. 1. This and the two following chapters form one distinct prophecy or message from God to the Jews, which probably was delivered about the close of Uziah’s reign.

V. 2—5. (Mic. iv. 1—5) The last days, or the latter days, signifies, by the common consent of expositors, without excepting even those of the Jews, the times of the Messiah. (Mavg. Ref.) As Solomon’s temple, the centre of Israel’s worship, was placed upon a mountain, to which the people resorted with their sacrifices from distant places; so the church of Christ and its instituted worship are represented as a temple built upon a mountain. The establishment of his religion, by the abrogation of the Mosaic dispensation, and on the ruins of idolatry; and the advancement of his kingdom above all the kingdoms of the earth, are predicted, by the figure of “the mountain of the Lord’s house being established...
B. C. 758.

ISAIAH.

6 If therefore thou hast forsaken thy people, the house of Jacob, because they be replenished from the east, and are soothsayers like the Philistines, and they plea themselves in the children of strangers.

7 Their land also is full of silver and gold, neither is there any end of their treasures; their land is also full of horses, neither is there any end of their chariots.

8 Their land also is full of idols: they worship the work of their own hands, that which their own fingers have made.

9 And the mean man boweth down, and the great man humbleth himself: therefore forgive them not.

10 Enter into the rock, and hide thee in the dust, for fear of the Lord, and for the glory of his majesty.

11 The lofty looks of man shall be humbled, and the haughtiness of men shall be bowed down, and the Lord alone shall be exalted in that day.

12 For the day of the Lord of hosts shall be upon every one that is proud and lofty, and upon every one that is lifted up; and the high shall be brought low.

on the top of the mountains, and exalted above the hills."

The calling of the Gentiles, the success of the Gospel in the Gentiles' days, and that far more extensive propagation of it which is yet to come, are predicted under the image of all nations flowing to this mountain of the Lord's house, as all rivers flow into the ocean. The earnestness of each new convert to bring him with the knowledge of Christ and to a life of holiness, is expressed by the people inviting one another to go up to the house of God to be instructed in his ways. When apostles and evangelists of the Jewish nation went forth to preach the Gospel to the Gentiles, "a lamb went forth out of Zion, and the word "of God from Jerusalem" for Christ is a Prince as well as a Saviour, and his word contains precepts to be obeyed as well as truths to be believed. By the establishment of the Gospel, the Lord becomes Judge among the nations, who willingly submit to his authority, and make him the arbiter of their differences: and by his rebukes and convictions, the lessons he teaches, and the grace he bestows, he promotes peace as well as purity. If all men were consistent Christians, there could be no war; as far as Christianity hath prevailed on earth, wars have been conducted with far greater humanity, than before; as far as it prevails in our hearts it disposes us to peace and love; and we may assuredly expect such a general propagation of the Gospel, as will literally fulfill the terms of this prophecy, in the universal prevalence of peace and industry; and the war shall never more be a science and an occupation.

(Notes, Rev. xx.) There needs no other proof, that the grand accomplishment of this prophecy is reserved for some future period, than the consideration, that nothing in any measure answerable to such forcible expressions has yet occurred on earth. The prophet closes his prediction by exhorting his people to avail themselves of their advantages, and not to reject the Gospel when preached to them: for these prophecies were intended to instruct future ages.

This prophecy will not receive its utmost completion, till the destruction of the four monarchies, (Deut. 35,) and the fulness of Jews and Gentiles are come into the church. (Mic. iv.) Yet both these prophecies may be partly fulfilled, in the several advances which Christ's kingdom makes in the world, who is described as "going forth conquering and to conquer." (Rev. vi. 1.) This seems to have been a maxim in interpreting prophecies, received among the Jews before Christ's time; that wherever they perceived an imperfect completion of prophecy in an historical event, which no way answered the lofty expressions and extensive promises, which the natural sense of the text import; there they supposed the times of the Messiah to be ultimately intended, "in whom all the promises of God are yea, and Amen." To prevent any misunderstanding, it may be likewise proper to take notice, that this mystical sense of the prophecies is new and then, but not so fitly, called a secondary sense; not as if it were less principally intended by the prophets; but rather with respect to the time, because it is the last and ultimate completion of their predictions. (Lomth.) The times of the Lord are the times from his coming to the end of the world.

V. 6-9. The Prophet was led from the view of the glorious times which were at length to arrive, to reflect on the state of religion among the Jews in his days. He foresaw that the Lord was about to reject his people, and speaks to Him of it as if already done: and he proceeds to assign the reasons of the divine conduct. He observes that they were "replenished from the east," with idols or idolaters, or necromancers; with vices, luxuries, heathenish fashions, and every thing that could minister to greed and lust. They imitated the Philistines in divination and witchcraft; they abounded with, and took delight in, the children of strangers, whom they employed and imitated; and with whom they contracted marriages, and perhaps even educated their own children after their manner. Whilst the Lord prospered them in their temporal estate; their grand object was by every method to accumulate treasure, and they multiplied chariots and horses contrary to the law. This account of their prosperity accords very well with the reign of Uzziah: (2 Chr. xxvi.) but he did not sanction idolatry. It seems, however, that the land was also full of idols, which the people, in the lower and meaner walks of life, made and worshipped secretly. In short, their wickedness loudly called for divine judgments; and the prophet says, "Therefore thou wilt not forgive them," as it might more literally be rendered.
CHAPTER II.

lifted up; and he shall be brought low;

13 And upon all the cedars of Lebanon, that are high and lifted up, and upon all the oaks of Bashan,

14 And upon all the high mountains, and upon all the hills that are lifted up,

15 And upon every high tower, and upon every fenced wall,

16 And upon all the ships of Tarshish, and upon all pleasant pictures.

17 And the loftiness of man shall be bowed down, and the haughtiness of men shall be made low: and the Lord alone shall be exalted in that day.

18 And the idols in his nostrils; for wherein is he to be accounted of?

V. 10—18. The people were here solemnly warned to prepare for terrible judgments. Let them then hide themselves in those caverns which were found in the rocks, as dismayed by the display of the majesty of God, who was coming to take vengeance on them, and to exalt his own glory and authority by abusing them for their pride, and especially the most exalted and ambitious of them. For that day of his vengeance would particularly affect the haughty and the eminent, who were advanced above others, as the stately cedars on the lofty summits of Lebanon, or as the oaks in the forests of Bashan, or as the mountains and hills above the lowly valleys. And whilst all their fortifications were levelled, and all that ministered to their pride and luxury was destroyed, their distinctions would vanish, and they would become sensible of their weakness, guilt, and misery; and by this the Lord would utterly cure them of idolatry. But of what day doth the prophet here speak? It may be accommodated to any of those days, when God ariseth to execute vengeance on guilty nations. The desolations of Judah by the Israelites and Syrians, in the reign of Ahaz; (2 Chr. xxviii.) and the ravages of Sennachiba, might form a prelude to the accomplishment of the prediction: but the taking of Jerusalem by the Chaldeans and the Babylonian captivity seem especially intended, when idolatry was indeed entirely abolished among the Jews. The final destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, and the rejection and dispersion of the Jewish nation for their opposition to the Gospel, might also be referred to: and our thoughts are naturally led forward to the destruction of all Anti-christian enemies, which will introduce the glorious period before predicted; and to the final consummation of all things, and the solemnities of the day of judgment. The prophets often take occasion to represent the terrors of the last day, from the particular judgments, which should befall some one nation. Bochart doth probably guess that Tarshish, in its primary signification, was a port in Spain, called afterwards Tartessus. But it likewise appears, (by comparing 1 Kings xi. 48, with 2 Chr. xxvii. 36,) that there was a place of the same name near the rocks, and into the caves of the earth, for fear of the Lord, and for the glory of his majesty, when he ariseth to shake terribly the earth.

20 In that day a man shall cast his idols of silver, and his idols of gold, which they made; each one for himself; to the molten and to the bats;

21 To the clefts of the rocks, and into the tops of the ragged rocks, for fear of the Lord, and for the glory of his majesty, when he ariseth to shake terribly the earth.

22 Cease ye from man, whose breath is in his nostrils; for wherein is he to be accounted of?

Ophir, famous for gold, which Ophir the same learned person places in India. Ships of Tarshish signify in Scripture any trading or merchant ships: accordingly here the Septuagint render the words ships of the sea, as our old English translation does: Ps. xlviii. 7. (Lowth.) (Note, 1 Kings x. 22.)

V. 19—21. When God should arise to shake terribly the land, and the afflictive inhabitants should seek to hide themselves in caves of the earth, they would throw away their idols, though made of gold and silver, as an encumbrance; and leave them in any desert corner to the moles and bats, that they might flee for their lives, and escape the vengeance of the Lord.

V. 22. The Jews were prone to place an idolatrous confidence in their heathen neighbours, with whom they made alliances. Thus they relied on the Egyptians, Syrians, and Assyrians, at different times; but they are here called upon to cease from depending on mortal man, who would not be able to help them when in extreme danger. (Note, Ps. cxlviii. 3.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—9.

The unwearied efforts of Satan and his servants to exalt heresy and iniquity, and to depress truth and righteousness, may for a time succeed; and then infidels and profanites will triumph; but their joy must be short-lived; for the cause of God shall finally prevail, all the nations of the earth shall flow into the church of Christ, and become his worshippers and servants; and all that hath hitherto been done, is only an earnest of what remains to be performed in due season. But whilst we wait and pray for those glorious days, when the kingdoms of the earth shall become the kingdoms of Jesus; and all their inhabitants, being humbled, and changed by his grace, shall live in equity, truth, and love; cultivate the arts of useful industry; study to be quiet and to do their own business, and learn war no more: let us avail ourselves of the light afforded us, and come and walk in it. Let us remember, L 2
FOR, behold, the Lord, the Lord of hosts, doth take away from Jerusalem, and from Judah, the stay and support of the staff, the whole stay of bread, and the whole stay of water,

2 The mighty man, and the man of war, the judge, and the prophet, and the prudent, and the ancient,

3 The captain of fifty, and * the honourable man, and the counsellor, and the cunning artificer, and the eloquent orator,

4 And I will give children to be their * lord, and sons shall rule over them, and they shall not be great among the people, neither shall they be esteemed in the land of Judah.

Lord ariseth to take vengeance on guilty nations! His awful dispensations are levelled against those that are haughty and lofty, to bring them low; their pre-eminence and influence mark them out the most distinguished objects of the rapacious; and they would then gladly compound to redeem their lives with their choicest treasures. But the power and indignation of the Lord are chiefly to be dreaded; and in what secret cavern will men hide themselves from his all-seeing eye? He marks out the proud, as the objects of his jealousy, and hath determined, “that the lofty looks of men shall be humbled; that He alone may be exalted,” either in the submission or the ruin of every daring rival for honour. And if temporary judgments are often so tremendous, what will be the case at the day of judgment, when the heavens and the earth shall pass away, and no place be found for them? Whither will the sinner then flee to hide himself, “for fear of the Lord, and for the glory of his majesty”? Then his idolized gold, silver, and costly furniture, will appear as worthless as the mire in the street; and the account to be given of the acquisition and use of them will burden the sinner’s heart, and his iniquity committed about them will vastly enhance his condemnation. Happy are they who now flee from the wrath to come, who take shelter in Christ, the Rock of Salvation; who are humbled before God in true repentance, and desire that God alone may be exalted in their hearts, and glorified in showing them mercy; who willingly renounce all worldly interests and carnal connexions, and cease from depending upon men; that they may give up themselves to the Lord, to serve him in righteousness all their future days. Such persons will have nothing to fear in those terrible seasons, when the wicked shall in vain call upon the rocks to fall upon them, and hide them from the wrath of their offended Judge. Let us then make this our grand concern, and be ready to renounce all for Christ, and to venture or suffer for his sake: and let us cease from expecting help from man, or making any mortal our oracle, our standard, or our confidence; for he is not only fickle, deceitful, and vain, but his breath is in his nostrils, and death will soon deprive him of all his power to help or to harm us. Wherein then is he to be accounted of, that we should, from a desire of his smile, or fear of his frown and reproach, offend the almighty and eternal God, who alone is able to save or to destroy?
princes, and babes shall rule over them.

5. And the people shall be oppressed, every one by another, and every one by his neighbour; the child shall behave himself proudly against the ancient, and the son against the father.

6. When a man shall take hold of his brother of the house of his father, saying, Thou hast clothing; be thou our ruler, and let this ruin be under thy hand.

7. In that day shall the heavens be *swear, saying, I will not be a covenant-bearer; for in my house is neither bread nor clothing; make me not a ruler of the people.

8. For Jerusalem is ruined, and Judah is fallen: *Because their tongue, and their doings are against the Lord, to provoke the eyes of his glory.

9. The shew of their countenance shall be turned into shame: for it shall be laid desolate, because they have rebelled against the voice of the Lord; for they have chosen the east.

10. Therefore the Lord shall have an offering from the house of Joseph, to offer upon the mountain of Zion, the north-eastern height of Lebanon, and there shall be the glorious habitation of our God.

11. And *Woe unto the wicked! it shall be ill with him: *for the reward of his hands shall be given him.

12. *As for my people, they are their oppressors, and women rule over them. O my people, they which lead thee cause thee to err, and destroy the way of thy paths.

13. The Lord standeth up to plead, and standeth to judge the people.

14. The Lord will enter into judgment with the ancients of his people, and the princes thereof: *for ye have add...
CHAP. III.

A prediction, that Jerusalem and Judah should be deprived of support, and reduced to a state of distress, because of their daring impiety, 1—9. The happiness of the righteous and the miseries of the wicked, 10, 11. A rebuke of the princes and elders for oppression, 12—15. The pride, vanity, and gaudy apparel of the daughters of Zion, and predictions of terrible judgments on them, 16—26.

that when true religion greatly flourisheth, men bestow great diligence, and take much delight in going up to the house of the Lord, and in exciting others to accompany them: they desire and expect that He should teach them his ways, in order that they may walk in them; and they gladly receive his law from mount Zion as their rule of duty; welcome the authority as well as the salvation of the Redeemer, and submit to his rebukes as well as desire his consolations. And let us remember also, that the humble disciple of Christ is, in every age, a harmless and blameless, a benevolent and quiet person, who follows peace and holiness, forbearing and forgiving others, as Christ hath forgiven him: insomuch, that if all were of his temper, wars and furious contentions, public or private, would be annihilated. But whilst we expect more glorious times to the church of God; we cannot but behold with deep regret the present state of the world, and even of the visible church. Alas! we need not wonder that the Lord seems in many places to have forsaken nominal Christians; when we consider to what a degree many parts of the church are replenished with the idolatries, superstitions, vices, luxuries, and ostentatious magnificence of the Gentiles; copy their worst fashions, and form the most unnatural coalitions with the children of strangers. Nay, if we only regard the condition of this protestant land: amidst the splendour and affluence to which we have arrived; have we not been replenished “from the east,” with every species of vice and luxury? Do we not, as a nation, so delight in the children of strangers, that none else can properly prepare our feasts, or our diversions, and administer to our pride or pleasure? And though our land is not full of idols, in the literal sense; yet it is full of idolized riches and possessions: and men are in general so occupied about their gains or indulgences, that the Lord, and his truths, ordinances, and precepts are forgotten, or despised. I will not presume to predict what will be the event as to the land: but assuredly the Lord will not forgive those who persist in abusing themselves by their lusts, and refuse to humble themselves before him.

Lord ariseth to take vengeance on guilty nations! His awful dispensations are leveled against those that are haughty and lofty, to bring them low; their pre-eminence and influence mark them out the most distinguished objects of the rapacious; and they would then gladly compound to redeem their lives with their choicest treasures. But the power and indignation of the Lord are chiefly to be dreaded: and in what secret cavern will men hide themselves from his all-seeing eye? He marks out the proud, as the objects of his jealousy, and hath determined, “that the lofty looks “of men shall be humbled; that He alone may be exalted, “ed,” either in the submission or the ruin of every daring rival for honour. And if temporal judgments are often so tremendous, what will be the case at the day of judgment, when the heavens and the earth shall pass away, and no place be found for them? Whither will the sinner then flee to hide himself, “for fear of the Lord, and for the glory “of his majesty”? Then his idolized gold, silver, and costly furniture, will appear as worthless as the mire in the street; and the account to be given of the acquisition and use of them will burden the sinner’s heart, and his iniquity committed about them will vastly enhance his condemnation. Happy are they who now flee from the wrath to come, who take shelter in Christ, the Rock of Salvation; who are humbled before God in true repentance, and desire that God alone may be exalted in their hearts, and glorified in showing them mercy; who willingly renounce every interest and carnal connection, and cease from dependance upon men; that they may give up themselves to the Lord, to serve him in righteousness all their future days. Such persons will have nothing to fear in those terrible seasons, when the wicked shall in vain call upon the rocks to fall upon them, and hide them from the wrath of their offended Judge. Let us then make this our great concern, and be ready to renounce all for Christ, and to venture or suffer for his sake: and let us cease from expecting help from man, or making any mortal our oracle, our standard, or our confidence; for he is only fickle, deceitful, and vain, but his breath is in his nostrils, and death will soon deprive him of all his power to help or to harm us. Wherein then is he to be accounted of, that we should, from a desire of his smile, or fear of hisrown and Yea proach, offend the almighty and eternal God, who alone is able to save or to destroy?

V. 10—22.

Alas, what can wealth and splendour avail, when the...
PRINCES, AND BABES SHALL RULE OVER THEM.

5. And the people shall be oppressed, every one by another, and every one by his neighbour: the child shall behave himself proudly against the ancient, and the latter against the base of the hand.

6. When a man shall take hold of his brother of the house of his father, saying, I have hasted clothing: he shall rebuke him, and let this rule be under thy hand.

7. In that day shall the habitation of the Lorp be beautiful, even the valley also, and the mountain. And his glory shall be above it.

8. And the Lord shall be King over all the earth: as the visible world is full of light, so shall the whole earth be full of the knowledge of the Lord. Glory be to the Father and to the Son, and to the Holy Ghost. As it was in the beginning, is now, and ever shall be. Amen.

NOTES.

CHAP. III. V. 1—9. These verses continue the subject of the preceding chapter, and describe those calamities which would arise from the haughtiness, the daring, and the folly of idolatry and confidence in men. The gradual approach of the siege and destruction of Jerusalem by the Chaldeans is principally foretold; and the history of that event, with the Prophecy and Lamentation of Jeremiah, form the best comment upon it: but that destruction itself was a sort of type for the final destruction of the city by the Romans. The prophet calls upon all men to behold and observe, for the Lord, their Governor, even the Lord of hosts, or armies, was about to deprive Jerusalem and Judah of every stay and support; as well as to reduce them to extremities for want of bread and water. He would speedily cause them to cease from among them able commanders and valiant soldiers, active magistrates, faithful teachers and prophets, prudent and experienced counselors, honourable rulers, expert artificers, or builders, who might have reared up the city, and eloquent orators who might have influenced the people to unite for their own defence; and their very princes should be mere children in years, and want of experience. This was fulfilled after the death of Josiah, by the succession of his sons and grandson in their early youth, and by their foolish and inattentive counsels. During those feebler reigns, the people had license to oppress each other, and all distinctions in society seemed to be abolished; so that children, and the vilest of the people, treated the most ancient and honourable with insolence and contempt. In such circumstances, offices of trust and honour must become so burdensome, that none would be willing to fill them; whilst every one would see the necessity of some exerting themselves to repress internal distractions, and to provide for the public security. Yet the people would be impoverished, that very few could bear the expense of the magnificence; so that, if any one was decently clothed, that would be deemed a considerable sacrifice.
ISAIAH.

16. 17. The prophet next reproved the women of Jerusalem, especially those in superior stations. It might indeed have been expected that the daughters of Zion would be sober, decent, and modest in their attire, and adorned with holiness; but they resembled the wanton courtiers, instead of imitating those holy women of old who trusted in God. They walked with stretched-forth necks, to show themselves, to gaze, and to be gazed on; and with wanton eyes, set off with artificial painting of the eye-lids, inviting the beholders to accost them. Pride and affected delicacy were shown in all their motions; whilst, after the fashion of their heathen neighbours, they wore little bells in their shoes, the tinkling of which announced their approach. But the Lord was determined to disgrace and expose them for this vanity and wantonness: some loathsome disease should be sent to spoil their comeliness; and being taken captive, stripped, and sold for slaves, they should experience the most shocking and distressing treatment from their inhuman conquerors.

V. 12—15. It was time for the Lord to interpose; for even children and women ruled over his people, (either weak and effeminate persons; or bad women, by their influence with those that administered public affairs;) may, their teachers led them astray, and by their false doctrines and opposition to the true prophets, they obstructed and spoiled the way in which men ought to have walked. The Lord was therefore determined to stand up and plead his own cause, and to enter into judgment with the people, especially with their elders and princes, who were notorious for robbery and oppression. For what could they mean, who ought to have been the support of justice, and the guardians of the poor, to enslave, and cruelly to beat, and almost to starve them; so that their very countenances showed how they were crushed, and almost ground to powder by their exactions? 1 The words, (translated "childress are their oppressors,"") may be rendered their oppressors glem them; i.e. take from the poor the remainder of their substance, which the former calamities had left. The word is used Deut. xxiv. 21. 2 For they that lead thee, the margin reads, they that calleth thee blessed; i.e. the false prophets, who soothed thee in thy sins, and forestalled nothing but peace and prosperity.

26. And her gates shall lament, and mourn; and she shall be desolate, and sit upon the ground.

Morg. Ref.)

V. 18—26. The prophet here proceeds to enumerate the various ornaments in which his country women prided themselves, but of which they would shortly be deprived. It is not necessary to attempt the explanation of the terms, and indeed little satisfactory can be advanced on many articles of this very singular inventory; and nothing interesting, without a disproportionate degree of labour, in a matter merely of curiosity. The fashions of those ages doubtless varied much from those of our times: but human nature was the same. The Lord was so displeased with the pride and ostentation of the females, that he joined it with the impiety and oppression of the princes, as a reason for his judgments on the land: and he declared that he would so punish them, that a loathsome smell, through di-ease and squallid neglect, should be substituted in the place of their costly and excellent raiment and tattered garments instead of their beautiful girdles; sackcloth instead of their fine linen; and a skin scorched and even blistered by the burning sun, instead of that beauty of which they were so vain: for the forces of the Jews being utterly vanquished, Jerusalem would be levelled with the ground; which event is represented under the idea of a desolate female seated upon the earth. Jerusalem is here described as a woman bereaved of her children, and lamenting over them in this melancholy posture; and thus she was represented in a medal coined by "census," the Roman's order, after the destruction of that city by the Romans. (Longf.) The prophet, indeed, more immediately
CHAPTER IV.

Predictions, that the women would irre-aturally seek to be married, as few men would be left, 1: and that glorious times, for holiness, peace, and security, should follow, 2—6.

V. 12—26.

Our righteous Lord hath always good reasons for his severest judgments, as will be made manifest in due time.
Rulers, nobles, and teachers also, not unfrequently, are ring-leaders in ungodliness, and the great promoters of wickedness in church and state: and when authority falls into bad hands, and the instructors of the people are blind guides, who oppose and pervert the right ways of the Lord, it may be expected that he will stand up to execute judgment. But he knoweth how to distinguish between the righteous and the wicked, the tempted and the tempters, and the different degrees of guilt in men’s conduct: he will judge impartially, as well as punish severely; and he will call men to a strict account for all their wealth and power, and the use which they made of them. Many, indeed, who eat up the vineyard of the poor, and embellish their splendid palaces with ill-gotten goods, clave human justice.
But what do professors of Christ’s men, to beat and persecute God’s people, and oppress and grind the faces of the poor? Do they intend to bring on themselves the fierce wrath of the Lord, who is the Patron and Advocate of the afflicted and oppressed?—Nor let it be thought that the Lord disregards the conduct of those females, who are chiefly remarkable for their vanity and dissipation. He watches over, and registers, all their thoughts and words, and every wanton look; and all their affected and ostentatious delicacy, the expression of their pride and self-admiration. Especially he notes with abhorrence such wantonness and baugliness in the daughters of Zion, in women professing the Gospel. He does not deem these indifferent or trivial matters; but, as it were, keeps an inventory of all their ornaments; and by his prophets and servants, protests against that fondness for external show, and that desire of being admired and flattered, and of becoming temtrations to others, which are the sources of this vanity. The profuse expense also of precious time and of money, to the neglect of piety, charity, and even justice; to the ruin of families, and the subversion of all distinction of rank in society, meet his most decided disapprobation. The occasion, which such vanities afford for temptations to still further crimes, in order to support the expense of them; the violation of his holy day that it occasions, and the abominable practice of coming to places of worship, as to a theatre, in which to exhibit their vain decorations; whilst those, who should be worshipping, or hearing the word of God, are employed in admiring, envying, or making remarks on their finery: all these, and innumerable more evils arise from this contagious folly, which is too generally tolerated in our congregations; but which will eventually eat out the life of godliness, where not opposed and protested against, as inconsistent with the word of God.
Without all doubt, the more care people take to have their souls beautified with salvation, and to do good to their poor brethren, the less time and money will they waste in this manner. And if indeed Christians are bound to redeem their time, improve their talents, reform conformity to the world, and do all things to the glory of God; surely some regard should be paid to the scriptural examples and exhortations on this subject. (Marg. Ref.) And women professing godliness should be an entire contrast to those wanton daughters of Zion, in their deportment and apparel. If they will despise or be offended by admonitions of this kind, perhaps the Lord may in this world visit them with such disease, poverty, and calamity, as may convince them of their sin and folly. Death, however, will soon strip the poor body of all its ornaments, and bereave it of all its comeliness: then, indeed, there will be stint instead of a perfume; and all that taste and elegance, which have been for a moment admired, will be changed for the cold grave, for putrefaction, and for the consuming worm. And what will such ornaments and distinctions avail at the resurrection and the day of judgment: when every one, without respect of rank or sex, must give an account of the things done in the body, whether good or evil? May every reader henceforth renounce such childish vanities, and seek that beauty and that adorning, which will endure, brighten, and adorn for ever; which, at the hour of death, will render the soul meet for the company of holy angels; and will ensure to the body a glorious resurrection in the image and likeness of our exalted Redeemer, to be with him for ever in his heavenly kingdom.

NOTES.

CHAP. IV. V. 1. This verse should not have been separated from the preceding chapter, as it evidently relates to the same subject. When Jerusalem was besieged by the Chaldeans, and after it was taken, (for those times seem to be intended,) the men were generally destroyed, (iii. 25;) but the women survived in very disproportionate numbers, and had little prospect of being married: and, as the unmarried state was generally deemed reproachful among the Jews, it is foretold that in those circumstances they would disregard the ordinary rules of decorum, and many of them together inopportune solicited the same man to take them in marriage, that they might bear his name and be exempted from their reproach; and that the expense might not be an objection, they would undertake to maintain themselves. All this is so contrary to female modesty, and the natural aversion which women feel to share a husband's affections with several rivals; that it strongly marks both the peculiarity of their circumstances, and the impropriety of their department. (Magg. Ref.)

V. 2. The Lord did not intend to destroy either the family of David, or the seed of Israel; but that they should again shout forth and prosper. Either Zerubbabel of Da-vid's line, or Jesus of Aaron's line, might be called the "branch of the Lord;" and the plenty produced by the land for the returning Jews may be referred to: but these can only be as types and feeble shadows; for the expressions are so peculiar, that they must be applied to the Messiah, and the Christian dispensation. He is repeatedly called "the Branch," and this Branch of the Lord is altogether beautiful and glorious, his human nature is the most excellent and comely production of the earth; or, "the fruit of the earth," may mean, the blessed fruits of his mediation, which belong to the remnant of true believers. (Magg. Ref.) Yet not only the establishment of his kingdom in the times of the apostles; but its enlargement also, by the gathering of the dispersed Jews into the church, seem here predicted. Then they will see, that the Branch that they despised, is indeed beautiful and glorious; and his fruit, that they neglected, indeed excellent and comely for them. We shall have frequent opportunities of showing that the prophets use the expression "in that day," with a latitude thus large; for "with the Lord a thousand years are but as one day." (Isa. 2. 10.) For the same reason, "not the same time with that, which is last mentioned," and "an extraordinary blessedness remarkable for some signal events of Providence;—just as in that day denotes the day of judgment, in the New Testament." (2 Thes. 2. 8.) Grogin acknowledges, (in his notes on xiv. 21.) that it is usual for the prophets to pass from the threatenings that relate to their own times, to the promises which belong to the times of the Gospel. "This may be partly understood of those who were converted by the preaching of Christ and his apostles, and thereby escaped the vengeance which involved the rest of the nation. (Acts 2. 40.) But I apprehend it is chiefly meant of those Jews which shall be converted at the end of the world, (when the obstinate and incorrigible shall be destroyed, and shall return home from their several dispersions.) (Magg. Ref.) The words plainly point at the conversion of the Jews in the latter times of the world, and the flourishing state of the church, which should follow it. (Lowth.)"
V. 3, 4. The Jews relapsed no more into idolatry after the captivity, and they were greatly reformed, and had much true religion among them. The daughters of Zion also, who had thought themselves very delicate when the Lord saw them to be very filthy, were purified by the captivity: and the innocent blood that had been shed was purged out of Jerusalem by those desolating judgments. Yet this was only a shadow of more glorious blessings. That remnant, according to the election of grace, which forms the true church, is an holy people, and they are written or enrolled as the living citizens of Jerusalem, whose names are written in the book of life, among God's elect, to whom the promises to God's people particularly belong. The phrase alludes to the registers which were kept of the Jewish families. (Lomh.) The Jews who embraced the Gospel, in the apostles' days, were, and the descendants of that nation who shall hereafter be restored to their place in the church, shall be, washed from the guilt and pollution of their sins; and especially from their blood-guiltiness in murdering the prophets, and in crucifying the Lord of glory. And this effect is produced, not so much by outward calamities, as by the Holy Ghost, "as a Spirit of judgment, and a Spirit of burning," that is, as convincing and humbling the sinner, leading him to judge and condemn himself, and to hate and oppose his sins, and thus, like purifying fire, consuming the dross, and transforming the soul into his own holy likeness.

V. 5, 6. The pillar of cloud and fire was Israel's protection, guide, and honour, in passing through the wilderness; and it is here predicted, that God would equally take care of all the habitations of his people, as well as all their assemblies for public worship. When he puts his glory on them, he places them under his special protection; as the splendid curtains of the tabernacle were covered by those of goats' hair, and those of badgers' skins. (Marg. Ref.) Thus he defends them from temptation and persecution, and from all perils in life and death. As this is a prophecy of the church at large, it will hereafter receive its full accomplishment.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

It frequently happens, that such as suffer for their sins, are more careful to avoid outward inconveniences than to obtain forgiveness: and instead of being ashamed of their crimes, are more solicitous to avoid the reproach which arises from unavoidable misfortunes, than the infamy which results from voluntary and open wickedness. But such conduct tends to indelible disgrace and increasing misery. The Lord will not contend for ever with his church: and though it seem cut down as a tree, it will shoot forth again, and its branches shall be beautiful and glorious; yet all its excellency is derived from "the Branch of the Lord," "the Only-begotten of the Father," who is full of grace and truth, and is the perfection of beauty and glory: and the fruits of his incarnation and mediation are expressively excellent and desirable, in the judgment of all those who have begun to experience deliverance from wrath, and from the power of Satan. These are the citizens of Zion, whose names are registered in the book of life; and every one of them partakes of the Spirit of Christ, and is daily renewed into his holy image; they wash away all their guilt and pollution, in the fountain that he hath opened; every affliction serves as a furnace to purify them from their dross; and the efficacious influences of the Holy Ghost, (with which they are baptized as with fire) gradually exalt their lusts, invigorate their spiritual affections, and render them holy as he is holy. In proportion as the Lord thus sanctifies believers, or any part of his professing church, he will vouchsafe them the tokens of his favour and the comforts of his presence, in their habitations and in their assemblies; and he will assure them of his guidance and protection, through the perils of the wilderness, "as the light of a flaming fire by night, and as a tabernacle for a shadow from the heat by day." For if we be made glorious by the renewal of his image on our souls, "on all this glory shall be a defence," during the trials of life, in the hour of death, and in the day of judgment. Let us then seek earnestly to be washed from sin and made holy; and then we must be safe and happy. Let us assure ourselves that the Lord will take care of his own cause, in all possible emergencies; let us seek his presence in our families, and his protection of our habitations, by constantly worshipping him in them; and his blessing upon our assemblies, that his ordinances may be honourable and useful: and let us anticipate with joy those blessed times, when the purity, extent, peace, glory, and security of the church will fully explain the import of these predictions.

NOTES.

CHAP. V. V. 1. This chapter contains a detached prophecy, which probably was delivered about the same time with that in the preceding chapters. It begins with M
2 And he fenced it, and gathered out the stones thereof, and planted it with the choicest vine, and built a tower in the midst of it, and also made a wine-press therein: and he looked that it should bring forth grapes, and it brought forth wild grapes.

3 And now, O inhabitants of Jerusalem, and men of Judah, I will tell you what I will do to my vineyard: I will take away the hedge thereof, and it shall be eaten up; and break down the wall thereof, and it shall be trodden down:

4 And I will lay it waste: it shall not be pruned, nor digged; but there shall come up briers and thorns: I will also command the clouds that they rain no rain upon it.

5 And the vineyard shall yield its fruit, and the ground shall yield its increase, and the people shall be blessed: for they shall come and take of the increase of the sea and of the wealth of the Gentiles, and their name shall be remembered for ever, and they shall be camped upon the weighers of the seas, and shall run into the gates of Jerusalem.

6 And I will cause to cease from them the voice of mirth, and the voice of joy, the voice of the bridegroom, and the voice of the bride: for the vineyard shall yield no fruit, and the ground shall not yield its increase, and it shall be a desolation for ever.

7 And I will visit upon her the days of the old woman, whom she despised, and upon her shall return her work; for she said, I will not be afflicted.

8 And the people shall be righteous, and shall inherit the land together: for I will command the rain thereof, that there be no more barrenness nor lack in the land.

9 And the历代圣贤皆被称为‘Beloved’，他被称作神的‘Beloved’，但神的‘Beloved’是他唯一所生的独子，是神最宝贵的，也是神的‘Beloved’，并且是所有人的‘Beloved’。神的‘Beloved’在耶稣基督的生命中得到了充分的彰显。

10 And the Lord God said, ‘Now will I set my Beloved in the midst of the land, and he shall feed them, and they shall be no more hurt; for I will be their God, and he shall be their God.

11 And it shall come to pass, that every one that is of the children of Israel, that go out into the land, shall know that I am the Lord God.’

12 And it shall come to pass, that in that day there shall be a fountain of the house of David, and a fountain of Salvation, in the midst of the land. And he shall say, ‘Hear ye the word of the Lord, ye inhabitants of Jerusalem; ye shall weep no more: he shall be very pitiful unto you, and he will be very tender toward you.’

13 And he shall bring you waters out of the rock, and streams out of the midst of the Valley. He shall provide bread for the乏食者, and flesh for them that are fatigued.”

14 And it shall come to pass, that every eye shall see him, and they shall say, ‘Lo, this is our God, in whom is salvation.’ And the Lord shall be their God.”

poisonous berries with some resemblance of grapes; that is, hypocrisy and impiety, instead of righteousness and true holiness. (Notes, Dnti xxxii. 32, 33. 2 Kings iv. 39.)

V. 3. 4. Perhaps the Jews murmured at the judgments denounced against them; but the Lord hereoffered to make them judges in his controversy with his vineyard, as a judge, before he passes sentence, asks the criminal, what he can urge why he should not be condemned? With the manifold advantages, and encouragements to holiness that they enjoyed, and the promises of special salvation contained in their scriptures, they ought to have been a peculiar people zealous of good works: nor could they mention any thing, which ought to be done for them, that God had not done, or was not ready to do, whenever they asked him. So that they could assign no reason for their wickedness, but the desperate depravity of their own hearts. From this, among many other texts of Scripture, we may conclude, that those may have sufficient means of grace afforded them, who nevertheless are not actually or effectually converted. (Lohn.)

This is clear and satisfactory; but the sufficient grace, which yet proves insufficient, is not very intelligible. Sufficient means leave no insurmountable obstacle, were the heart properly disposed: but sufficient grace properly disposes it. Neither force, however, can be to a winner a matter of debt, but wholly of grace. “What was there more to be done to,” &c. This seems the literal translation: not that God had done all that was in his power, and so was disappointed when he failed of success: but that he had done all that was proper, or could reasonably have been expected.

V. 5. 6. The Lord next passed sentence on the vineyard, and informed the people what he meant to do with it. He would withdraw his protection; give up the land, city, and temple to be ravaged by their enemies; deprive them of the means of grace, and leave many of them to mingle with the heathen: may, he would “command the clouds to rain no rain upon them;” he would awfully withhold the sanctifying influences of his Spirit. This was, in part and for a time, fulfilled during the Babylonish captivity; but far more exactly in the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, their exclusion from the church, their long-continued dispersion without priests to perform, and without heavenly influences on any means of grace to render them effective. (Note, Hos. iv. 4, 5.)
CHAPTER V.

V. 7. The parable related to the whole people of Israel, but especially to Judah, who had been peculiarly favoured and delighted in: but the Jews were so degenerated from the piety of their ancestors, that instead of judgment and righteousness, the land was full of oppression and the cries of the oppressed. "The living members of the church are called 'the branch of God's planting,' (Isa. 5.) 'The Jews should have been such.' (Lomith.)"

V. 8-10. The prophet next declared, in plain language, that the vengeance of God was coming on the Jews for their various transgressions: but he so expressed himself, that he included with them all persons, of every age and nation, who are guilty of the same crimes. He first denounced a wo upon the avaricious and rapacious, who were content by every means on increasing their estates: caring not who was turned dextre, provided they could add house to house and field to field; that they might be placed alone in the midst of the land, as sole proprietors, attended only by their vassals and dependents. But the Lord had told the prophet in his ears, privately; that ere long many of their magnificent houses would be left uninhabited; and that their estates should be almost wholly unoccupied, so that ten acres of vineyard should only produce a few gallons of wine, and their corn-fields yield one tenth of the seed generally sown upon them: that is, the land would be desolate, and their estates would become of no value. (Note, Lev. xxvi. 16.) A bath, in liquids, and an ephah in solids, were measures of equal size; and the tenth part of a homer, which contained a hundred omers.

feasts: but they regard not the work of the Lord, neither consider the operation of his hands.

13 Therefore my people are gone into captivity, because they have no knowledge: and their honourable men are fled, and their multitude is ashamed and their multitude is dried up with thirst.

14 Therefore he hath enlarged himself, and opened her mouth without measure: and their glory, and their multitude, and their pomp, and he that rejoiceth, shall descend into it.

15 And the mean man shall be brought down, and the mighty man shall be humbled, and the eyes of the lofty shall be humbled:

16 But the Lord of hosts shall be exalted in judgment, and God that is holy shall be sanctified in righteousness.

17 Then shall the lambs feed after their manner, and the waste places of the fat shall strangers eat.

V. 11-17. The next wo is denounced against the dissolute and intemperate, who were so intent upon their excesses, that they rose early to begin them, and continued till night, infaming their passions with wine. They likewise employed all kinds of music to render their pleasures more exquisite; but God and his works were not in all their thoughts; they only regarded second causes, in their prosperity; and they despised the predictions of wrath, as well as the promises of mercy, which he sent them by his prophets, as if He were unable to accomplish either the one or the other. The prophet therefore speaks of the approaching judgments, as if already come: the people were gone into captivity for their wilful ignorance and folly: the nobles were dying with hunger, the common people with thirst; nay, (either the grave, or the place of torment, to which the souls of such transgressors must descend,) is introduced as a voracious monster, opening wide his inimiable jaws, and gorging his prey without measure; whilst all their glory, and multitude, and pomp, with the most joyful and sensual of them, would at once be swallowed up by it. Thus even the meanest would be brought still lower; and the mightiest abased and humbled, as to their condition and lolly looks; and God alone would be exalted and glorified, in the righteous judgments that he executed, and be adored and magnified for that display of his holiness and justice. Then the whole land would be either left to be occupied by the cattle alone; or be devoured by strangers, who would seize upon the waste places where lately the wealthy Jews inhabited. Some expositors suppose, that by lambs are meant the poor, in M 2 18 Woe unto them that draw iniquity with cords of vanity, and sin as it were with a cart-ropes:
19 That say, Let him make speed, and hasten his work, that we may see it; and let the counsel of the Holy One of Israel draw nigh and come, that we may know it!
20 Woe unto them that call evil good, and good evil; that put darkness for light, and light for darkness; that put bitter for sweet, and sweet for bitter!
21 Woe unto them that are wise in their own eyes, and prudent in their own sight!

offensive, and humble believers among them; who were rescued from oppression and provided for, when their wealthy oppressors were utterly ruined. Good men shall want nothing that is necessary for their support. God is often represented as a Shepherd, and his care of the righteous described by their feeding securely in rich pastures. (Isa. 40:10. Ps. xiii, 3.)

22 Woe unto them that are mighty to drink wine, and men of strength to mingle strong drink;
23 Which justify the wicked for reward, and take away the righteousness of the righteous from him!
24 Therefore, as the fire devourth the stubble, and the flame consumeth the chaff; so their root shall be as rottenness, and their blossom shall go up as dust: because they have cast away the law of the Lord of hosts, and despised the word of the Holy One of Israel.
25 Therefore is the anger of the Lordkindled against his people, and hath stretched out his hand against them, and shall raise up them against one another, and will cut them off in their land; and the remnant also among them shall I give into the hand of a worse enemy than they: for the land is filled with the guilt of blood, and with the noise of violence.

impunity, and revenge, are considered proofs of a noble spirit; whilst piety and conscientiousness are called enthusiasm, hypocrisy, preciseness, and affectation. Thus men often speak, as if it were of no consequence what doctrines they believed; or as if the conjectures of persons who are equally worthy of regard with the authenticated testimony of God; as if ignorance in divine things were of no bad consequence, and knowledge in them of no value; or as if those theories which contradict the Scriptures were the effect of peculiar illumination; and that which corresponds with them ignorance and darkness; and as if sweetness were only to be found in the bitter ways of ungodliness, and nothing but bitterness could be found in obedience to God's commandments.

They who commend wicked men, wicked works, anti-scriptural principles, and a worldly life, and run down truth, holiness, and pious persons in this manner, evidently act from the corrupt relish of a carnal heart, and from the state of their own souls; and because they want an excuse for their own conduct, and a quietus to their consciences.

21. They who prefer their own reasonings to divine revelation, and their own devices to the admonitions and commands of God; who esteem it prudent and politic to retain lucrative sins, and to neglect self-denying duties; who despise or reject the mysteries of the Gospel, and deride those who believe and preach them; or who are vain of their formal knowledge of them, and do not reduce them to practice, are evidently wise in their own eyes, and prudent in their own sight. They think themselves too wise to need any instruction, and therefore despise the admonitions of God's prophets. (Lomth.)

22, 23. Some it seems, even among the rulers and magistrates in Judah, shamefully prided themselves in being able to drink much strong liquor without being intoxicated, and in mingling wine with intoxicating ingredients: but the wrath of God is here denounced against them. To defray the expenses of intemperance, as well as to gratify avarice and avarice the guilty, and to condemn the righteous; thus depriving him of the benefit of his righteousness, and treating him as a criminal.
kindled against his people, and he hath 24 stretched forth his hand against them, stretched and sitten them: and the hills thereof did tremble, and their carcasses were * torn in the midst of the streets. * For all this his anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still.

26 ¶ And he will lift up an ensign 27 against the nations from far, and will * hiss unto them from the end of the earth: and, behold, they shall come with speed swiftly:

27 None shall be weary nor stumble among them; none shall slumber nor sleep; * neither shall the girdle of their 28 loins be loosed, nor the latchet of their shoes be broken.

28 Whose arrows are sharp, and all their bows bent; * their horses' 29 hoofs shall be counted like flint, and their 30 wheels like a whirlwind:

29 Their * roaring shall be like a lion, they shall roar like young lions: yea, 30 they shall roar, and lay hold of the prey, and shall carry it away safe, and none shall deliver it.

30 And in that day they shall roar against them, * like the roaring of the sea: and * if one look unto the land, behold darkness and * sorrow, and the light is darkened in the heavens thereof.

1 Or, distress —— Or, when it is light it shall be dark in the destructions thereof.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1.-7.

Whilst they, who truly love our God and Saviour, endeavour by every proper means to do good, they primarily seek his glory; and they discern and adore his justice in those dispensations, which disgrace and afflict those with whom they are most intimately connected. Such are favoured with the word and ordinances of God and the encouragements of his Gospel, stand in a peculiar relation to him. The tendency of these advantages is to render them fruitful in good works: this the Lord requires of them, and nothing else will satisfy him; and when they only hear the wild grapes of hypocrisy, impurity, and iniquity, they are nigh unto destruction. Indeed the case is so plain, that if the fact were so stated in a parable that self-love could be precluded, sinners must be induced to give judgment against themselves; and at the day of judgment, when sentence shall be given upon all the workers of iniquity, the criminals will universally perceive that it is in vain to attempt to justify their conduct. Those excuses, by which many now quiet their consciences, will then appear futile and desperate; as they charge the blame of man's wickedness on God, and vindicate all the crimes that can possibly be committed. But as all things pertaining to life and godliness are proposed to us by the Gospel, and we are commanded to ask what we will that it may be given to us; the sinner's persevering wickedness will be found to arise from his enmity to God, aversion to his service, and contempt of spiritual blessings; and it will appear that he would on no account consent to the mortification of his lusts by the special grace of God. So that it may with propriety be inquired, What more could have been done for them, that has not been done? Indeed the Lord is not bound to afford his rebellious creatures so many advantages: but if He graciously vouchsafe them, and men will rebel against the light, or take encouragement to sin from the truths of the Gospel, their guilt will be peculiarly aggravated, and they may expect to be doomed to everlasting unhappiness and misery. (Mark xi. 14, 21. Rev. xxvi. 11.) Nations or churches also, who abuse their privileges, may expect to be deprived of them: the Lord will "take away the hedge" of their unholy vineyard, "and it shall be eaten up." "He will lay it "waste that it shall not be pruned or digged; there shall "come up briers and thorns, and he will even command "the clouds that they rain no rain upon it." Whatever "delight he hath taken in any company of Christians; if they or their posterity degenerate from that faith and purity which once distinguished them, and become addicted to covetousness, oppression, or any vice: we may shortly expect to hear woes denounced against them, or judgments executed upon them. Few, if any, of the descriptions of professed Christians in our land, are unconcerned in this observation: may we all be zealous and repent, and do our first works, that the awful sentence may not be awarded against us.
He receives a commission, showing the event of his prophetic labours, in the obscurity and ruin of the people; with an intimation of a remnant to be spared, and a holy seed to spring from them, 8—13.

V. 8—30.

Men are commonly deemed happy, who grow rich with rapidity, and add one possession to another, as if they would appropriate the whole earth. But covetousness is idolatry; and it is generally attended by fraud and oppression of the poor, which God abhors: and whilst many envy the prosperous wretch, the Lord denounces an awful wo upon him. Providence may, perhaps, deprive him of his wealth or render it a burden to him: God, however, will speedily require his soul, and then whose will all his riches be? Nor are the luxurious and intemperate less obnoxious to divine vengeance: how many are there who inflame themselves with excessive indulgence, and gratify every sense, as if their only business on earth were to pamper the body, and there were no other use to be made of their time and substance! Such men regard not the works of the Lord, nor consider the operation of his hands: the wonders of creation, providence, and redemption, are alike unnoticed by them; may, they observe not his terrible judgments, and expect not his threatened vengeance. The prevalence of such impiety and vice brings desolating judgments on kingdoms, which reduce all ranks to the most abject misery: and no tongue can express what numbers, both of the honourable from their pompous feasts, and of the mean from their licentious revels, descend into hell, "which enlargeth herself, and openeth her mouth "without measure," to swallow up the multitudes that continually become her prey. In that dreadful place there will not be so much as a drop of water to cool the burning tongue of those, who here fared sumptuously every day. But whilst the impious profligates are exposed to the lowest misery and contempt, "the Lord of Hosts will be exalt ed in judgment, and God that is holy will be sanctified "in righteousness." In every case he will also provide for the meek and humble, and feed both the bodies and souls of his people. But it is lamentable to observe what pains men bestow in pursuing the vanities of the world, and in gratifying their lusts, and in drawing down the judgments of God upon them: and what prodigious excesses of impurity and iniquity men gradually arrive at. Every sin needs some other to conceal it, to secure the success of it, or to defray its expense. Youthful lusts lead to depravity, lying, perjury, perhaps to murder; corrupt practices lead to invidious, whimsical, and thus men sin away their shame, shame, and remorse, till they set God at defiance by their blasphemies: and they can only be convinced of the truth of his word, by his hastening his threatened vengeance; and then too late they will know it, and become sensible of their own madness and folly. In the mean time, they continue to "call good evil, and evil good, to put "darkness for light, and light for darkness, and bitter for "sweet, and sweet for bitter," the tendency of this discourse and writings evidently is, to confound the most important distinctions, and to prejudice men's minds against the truths, precepts, and ways of the Lord; and their self-sufficiency, and the arrogant and supercilious manner, in which they believe to believers, mark them out, as exposed to the additional wo, denounced on those, "who are wise "in their own eyes and prudent in their own sight." Whilst many, in this respect, glory in their shame; others, of a different description of rebels, can pride themselves in being mighty to drink wine, and men of strength to mingle strong drink: as if their ability, through habit or constitution, to waste the gifts of God, to inveigle others to drunkenness, and to take that opportunity of cheating them, would plead an excuse for their excess! Wo be unto such men, and woe to that nation in which they obtain authority; for it cannot be expected that they should submit to commit the most flagrant injustice, when their own purer requires it. But whilst men thus "cast away "the law of the Lord, and despise his holy word," they become fuel for the fire of his indignation, and destroy the very root of all their own prosperity: and after he hath smitten them, and their carcasses are torn in the streets, or lodged in the grave, "his anger will not be turned away, "but his hand will be stretched out still," to "destroy "both body and soul in hell." And the earth will indeed tremble and flee away, when he shall summon its inhabitants before his tremendous judgment-seat. Even in this world he will never be at a loss for instruments of his vengeance. At his signal they will come from the ends of the earth with unabated force and speed: when he gives commission, all resistance is vain: and as we know not how soon all earthly comforts and confidence may fail us, and sorrow and despair may overwhelm us; let us diligently seek the well-grounded assurance, that when flesh "and heart shall fail, God himself will be the Strength of "our heart, and our Portion for ever."

and said, "Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of hosts: fill the whole earth with thy glory." 3 And "the posts of the door moved at the voice of him that cried, and the house was filled with smoke. 4 And the vision was after this: I saw "two children, "and one cried unto another, "and said, "Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of hosts: fill the whole earth with thy glory." 5 And the vision of the fourth was after this vision: I saw "two children, "and said, "I, Woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips: for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts." 6 And it came to pass, when I had seen, while I searched by vision, that "two children cried unto another, "and said, "Holy, holy, holy, is the Lord of hosts." 7 And he said, "Woe is me! for I am undone; because I am a man of unclean lips, and I dwell in the midst of a people of unclean lips: for mine eyes have seen the King, the Lord of hosts. 8 And I heard the voice of the Lord, saying, "Whom shall I send, and who will go for us?" Then said I, "Here am I; send me."
6 Then flew one of the seraphims unto me, * having a live coal in his hand, which he had taken with the tongs from off the altar: 7 And he * laid it upon my mouth, and said, Lo, this hath touched thy lips; and * thine iniquity is taken away, and thy sin purged.

8 Also * I heard the voice of the Lord, saying, * Whom shall I send, and who will go for us? * Then said I, * Here am I; send me.

9 And he said, * Go, and tell this people, * Hear ye, indeed, but understand not; and see ye indeed, but perceive not:

10 Make the heart of this people fat, and make * their ears heavy, and shut their eyes, lest they see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their heart, and convert, and be healed.

11 Then said I, * Lord, how long? And he answered me, * Until the cities be wasted without inhabitant, and the houses without man, and the land be utterly desolate; 12 And * the Lord has removed men far away, and there be * a great forsaking in the midst of the land.

and from the cold reception he was like to meet with among the Israelites. (Lomte.) It, however, appears to me, that the prophet expressed consciousness of guilt, as to the past, even in his worship and ministry, as well as apprehensions respecting the future.

V. 6, 7. The Lord was pleased to encourage his dismayed servant by a symbolical action of a seraph, who flew to him with a live coal from off the altar. The sacred fire from the altar of burnt offering represents the sacrifice of Christ and its effects; and the live coal applied to the prophet’s lips, may denote the assurance given him of pardon and acceptance in his work, through the atonement of Christ; and the communication of divine grace, to cleanse away pollution, to kindle the flame of divine love in his heart, and to fit him for the execution of his office with zeal and fervency. (Notes. Acts ii. 3.)

V. 8. The Lord would not send his message to the people by the seraphim, but by a prophet like themselves; and he openly inquired whom he should send, that was willing to undertake the service? The expression “who will go for us?” corresponds with several that have been already noticed. So God speaks in the plural number, (Gen. i. 26.) which is justly thought to imply a plurality of divine persons. For it cannot be said with any probability, that God is described in Genesis as advising with, or communicating his purposes to the angels, which is the fancy of the Rabbins: because the history of the creation takes notice of angels; and consequently there is no ground for interpreting any text in that chapter with relation to them. (Lomte.) And now the prophet, who was before struck dumb, being assured of assistance and acceptance, and filled with zeal for the glory of God, readily answered, “Here I am, send me.” He would go on any message, to any person, or any whither, without hardship, difficulty, and peril attended it.

V. 9, 10. This awful passage is quoted, or referred to, six times in the New Testament; (Marg. Ref.) which shows that the vision had relation to the rejection of Christ by the Jews, and their consequent calamities; as to the men of that generation, to whom the prophet was sent. Where the word of God is not made effectual, through the regeneration of the Spirit, it often was occasion to those very evils, which are most contrary to its genuine tendency: by opposing the pride, prejudices, and lusts of men, they become more outrageous; and by producing convictions which are violently resisted, the conscience grows callous: the unbelief thus excited drives men into excess, infidelity, or furious enmity, for shelter; and when they are once engaged in open opposition, obstinacy and regard to carnal interests and credit among proud and ungodly men, push them forward to the most desperate extremes. Thus the gospel is heard, but not understood: something of its nature is seen, but the glory and excellency of it are not perceived: and men become more and more insensible to both promises and warnings, so that their hearts are made fat, their ears become heavy, they shut their eyes, and the whole tends to their deeper guilt and condemnation. God frequently leaves men to this judicial blindness and hardness for their other sins, especially for resisting the convictions of their own consciences, and the strivings of His Spirit. This was the awful case of numbers in the days of Isaiah, and in those of Christ and his apostles: and the Lord foreseeing this effect, and intending to leave them to this obduracy, “lest they should “see with their eyes, and hear with their ears, and understand with their hearts, and convert, and be healed,” or saved, commissioned the Prophet to go for this express purpose. The prophets are said to do things, when they declare God’s purpose of doing them. (Jer. ix. 10. Ez. xliii. 3.) So here Isaiah is said to harden the people’s hearts, &c. i. e. to declare it to be the event of his preaching; which prophecy should be more signal accomplished, when the Jews should reject the preaching both of Christ and his apostles. —

Make the heart of this people fat. (Note. Ps. cxix. 76.)

This St. John expresses by hardening their heart. God is said to harden men’s hearts, by those very means of grace, which are in themselves proper to produce a contrary effect: but withal he foresees, that meeting with a perverse and refractory temper, they will in the event render them more obdurate; and he is to requite, for great and wise reasons, not to hinder it. (Lomte.)

V. 11, 12. The Prophet did not object to the service assigned him; or question the justice and goodness of God
CHAPTER VI.

13 But yet in it shall be a tenth, and it shall return, and shall be eaten; and the inhabitants carried into captivity; and this forsaking of the whole land would continue for a long time. This was verified in the Babylonian captivity; but much more emphatically in the final desolations of the Temple and of Jerusalem by the Romans, and the dispersed and forsaken state of the Jewish nation, now above seventeen hundred years.

V. 13. The Lord meant to preserve a remnant, like the tenth or tithe, that were holy to him. These would return from captivity, and be converted to the truth and devoted to him, as those holy things that were eaten in his courts by the priests. Nay, the nation of Israel, in its lowest state, would be like an oak, or elm, or any other tree, that is stripped of its leaves, lopped, or cut down; yet the trunk or root still remains and has life in it, and will again shoot forth. Thus the remnant of believers, during and after the captivity, were a holy seed, the substance of the nation, which shot forth again and flourished: thus Christ especially, and with him the Jews who embraced Christianity, and incorporated with the Gentiles converts when the nation was rejected, were the holy seed, and thus the Jews, who shall in due time become his disciples, are the holy seed; the substance of the tree, that hath been lopped and cut down, but which will at length revive and flourish again more than ever.

"Though there be a tenth part remaining in it, even this shall undergo a repeated restoration. Yet, &c." This passage, though somewhat obscure, has been made so clear by the accomplishment, that there remains little room to doubt the sense of it. When Nebuchadnezzar had carried away the greater and better part of the people into captivity; there was yet a tenth remaining in the land, the poorer sort, left to be vine-dressers and husbandmen under Gedaliah. Yet even these, fleeing in Egypt after the death of Gedaliah, miserably perished there. (Jer. xl—xlv.) And in the subsequent and more remarkable completion of the prophecy, in the destruction of Jerusalem, and the dissolution of the commonwealth, by the Romans, when the Jews, after the loss of above a million of men, had become again numerous in their own country, Hadrian slew above half a million more of them, and a second time almost extirpated the nation. Yet after these, and so many other repeated exterminations and massacres of them, we see, with astonishment, that the stock still remains, from which God, according to his promise frequently given by his prophets, will cause his people to shoot forth again, and to flourish. (Bp. Lowth.) Let the reader reflect that this prophecy hath been extant two thousand and five hundred years, by the acknowledgment of the Jews themselves; and, comparing it with the state of that remarkable people, in every subsequent age, and at this day; let him ask himself whether it does not prove, beyond doubt, that Isaia spake by inspiration of God? Indeed the condition of the Jews through revolving ages, so different from that of any other nation, compared with the prophecies concerning them, both in the Old and New Testament, is a complete moral demonstration, that the Scriptures are the oracles of God; which is the only kind of demonstration the subject is capable of.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—2.

The discovery of the glory of God prepares the heart for the exercise of every grace and the practice of every duty. Indeed all external symbols must be inadequate fully to represent the Lord's essential majesty and excellency: yet they may suit our present state, in which we see through a glass darkly. Though the throne is high and lifted up; yet in and through Jesus Christ, he is seated on a throne of grace, and the way into the holiest is now laid open. Whilst his full glory is displayed in his temple above, his train filleth the outer sanctuary: yea, he dwells in every broken heart, as in a temple in which he delighteth. Every rational creature worships God in humility and reverential fear, proportioned to the degree of his holiness and wisdom; and this is attended with an adequate measure of fervent love, gratitude, zeal, and delight in obedience. The cherubim and seraphim before the throne are so occupied in admiring and adoring the ineffable glories of Jehovah, that they have no leisure or inclination to admire themselves or commend one another. Satisfied with his approbation, they want no other praise: and they know that they cannot but possess each other’s love, whilst they bear the image and concur in the worship of the Lord; for all the self-admiration, ambition, and mutual adulation of as sinful creatures, originate from ignorance and pride, and would be annihilated by clear and abiding views of the divine glory. The essential holiness of God reflects honour on all his natural attributes; whether he pardon or punish, he hath so arranged his plan, that his hatred of sin and love of justice will be displayed and adored; in the cross of Christ, and by the Gospel and its effects, the whole earth is or will be filled with his glory: and these form the most exalted and favourite themes even of the adoration of angels, who sing “Glory to God in the highest, peace on earth, and good will to men.” Nay, there is one among them, who does not think it an honour to worship him who was crucified on Mount Calvary, even Him, whom infidels pride themselves in degrading and opposing! Nay, these blessed spirits vie with each other, who shall most fervently adore the trine God of our salvation. Even to witness their holy strains and active obedience would be more than we sinners could endure: yet, they count all beneath his worth and undeserving of his notice. But such scenes are too dazzling for our constant contemplation: a few glimpses suffice to convince us, that we are all as an unclean thing, and all our righteousnesses N of Uzziah, the king of Judah, that Rezin the king of Syria, and Pekah, the son of Remaliah, king of Israel, went up towards Jerusalem to war against it, but could not prevail against it.

2 And it was told the house of David, saying, Syria is confederate with Ephraim. And his heart was moved, and the heart of his people, as the trees of the wood are moved with the wind.

3 Then said the Lord unto Isaiah, Go forth now to meet Ahaz, thou and Shear-jashub thy son, at the end of the conduit of the upper pool, in the high-way of the fuller's field;

6 And it came to pass in the days of Ahaz, the son of Jotham, the son

"as filthy rags." Nor is there a man on earth, who would not be ashamed of his most admired performances, and sink into habitual self-abhorrence, if he had a clear view of the divine glory, and of the worship of heaven: nay, this would be attended with despair; and he would no more dare to speak to the Lord with his polluted lips, if he saw the justice, holiness, and majesty of God, as not to deserve also his glorious mercy and grace in Jesus Christ. But when the atonement is understood, and by faith applied to the heart; the iniquity of our holy things is taken away, and the conscience purged from dead works to serve the living God; and when by the Holy Spirit the love of his name is shed abroad in the heart, then the humbled sinner takes encouragement, and feels an ardent desire to glorify the Lord. And thus we become ready for any service in which he pleases to employ us: and neither the sense of our own unworthiness and insufficiency; nor a view of the importance and difficulty of the work: nor a prospect of hardships and injuries in it, will deter us from any attempt, to which we judge ourselves to be called in his providence; but we are ready to say, "Here I am, send me."
The love of Christ constrains us, and encourages and prepares us for labouring with diligence, suffering with patience, and bearing injuries with persevering meekness.

NOTES.

CHAP. VII. V. 1. The Syrians and Israelites repeatedly vanquished the Jews with most terrible slaughter; but they could not take Jerusalem, or dethrone the family of David. (Notes, 2 Kings xvi. 5. 2 Chron. xxvii. 6-8.)

2. Ahaz, though a very wicked man, was preserved, because he was a descendant of David, and of that family from which the Messiah was to arise. Perhaps his enemies had formed their plan of dethroning him and destroying his family, in contemptuous opposition to the promises and prophecies of God, respecting David and his seed. It is probable that this report was brought to him and his people, after the slaughter before-mentioned, and related to a second assault by the united forces of Syria and Ephraim. The terror which was excited by this information, is illustrated in a most striking simile: nor can it much be wondered at, when the success of the Syrians, and the dreadful blow already given by Ephraim alone, are considered; and when it is recollected that Ahaz and most of his subjects were entirely destitute of faith and well-grounded confidence in God.

V. 3. Isaiah seems to have been very little noticed by Ahaz, if at all, and perhaps could not have access to him in his palace: but he was ordered to meet him in a place that was pointed out to him; probably because Ahaz and his nobles assembled there, to concert measures for their defence. (Marg. Ref.) He was also commanded
CHAPTER VII.

4 And say unto him, Take heed and be quiet; * fear not, * neither be faint-hearted for the two tails of these smoking fire-brands, for the fierce anger of Rezin with Syria, and of the son of Remaliah.

5 Because * Syria, Ephraim, and the son of Remaliah, have taken evil counsel against thee, saying,

6 Let us go up against Judah, and vex it, and let us make a breach therein for us, and set a king in the midst of it, even the son of Tabeal:

7 Thus saith the Lord God, * It shall not stand, neither shall it come to pass:

8 For * the head of Syria is Damascus, and the head of Damascus is Rezin: and * within three scores and five years shall Ephraim be broken, 2 that it be not a nation.

9 And * the head of Ephraim is Samaria, and the head of Samaria is Remaliah's son. * If ye * will not believe, surely ye shall not be established.

10 □ Moreover the Lord spake again unto Ahaz, saying,

11 Ask thee * a sign of the Lorp thy God; * ask it either in the depth, or in the height above.

12 But Ahaz said, * I will not ask, neither will I tempt the Lorp.

13 And he said, Hear ye now, * O house of David! * Is it a small thing for you * to weary men; but * you will weary my God also?

14 Therefore the Lorp himself shall give you a sign, * Behold, a virgin shall conceive, and bear a son, and shall call his name * Immanuel.

15 Nevertheless the land shall be desolate by reason of theumo of the sea, and by reason of the fleece white as snow:

16 And it shall come to pass in that day, * that the Lord shall raise up a shield for David his servant, and a horn shall come forth for the house of Jacob.

17 And the Lord shall deliver Jacob his servant, and Israel his chosen, out of the hand of the king of the north, and out of the hand of the king of the south, and out of such as vex them.

18 But they shall not enter into the land of Egypt; for I will pour out my wrath upon the inhabitants thereof, beingcome against thee.

19 Then said they unto him, What shall be the sign that we shall go in the Lord's way? What shall be the token that we have gone according to the Lorp's word?

20 And Ahaz said, Ask it. And he said, I will ask it. And he said, Thou shalt not9 ask it. 21 And it shall come to pass, as Soon as thou shalt have made an offering, that I will give the spoils thine hand, for mine offering, saith the Lord.

22 Then said Isaiah, Take an heart, and take for thine heart a ephah of barley meal, and take it to the gate of the Lord's house, and give it to the porter of the Lord's house.

23 And say, Thus saith the Lord God of hosts, Even I will break the yoke of Egypt from off thee, as I have broken the yoke of Assyria from off thee.

24 And I will make thee free out of the hand of the king of the north, when he and his servants shall come to hunt for the lambs and the goats, saying, We will come to thee.

25 And it shall come to pass, before the offering shall come in, that he shall say, Lo, all these have been broken unto me; in a time it shall be consummated.

26 ¶ Moreover the captain of the Lord's host shall utter a sign, saying, Thus saith the Lord; I will rush to mine enemies, and will execute vengeance, and I will turn again to mine own.'
15 "Butter and honey shall be eaten in that land: and he shall know to refuse the evil, and choose the good.

16 For before the child shall know to refuse the evil, and choose the good, the land that thou abhorrest shall be forsaken of both her kings.

V. 14. The Hebrew word here used, most properly signifies a virgin, and so it is translated by all the ancient interpreters; and it is never once used in Scripture in any other sense, as several learned men have proved, against the pretensions of the modern Jews. The primary signification of the word is concealed; because of the custom of the eastern countries to keep their virgins concealed from the view of men. (Lomth.) That the reader may judge of this for himself, I shall point out all the texts in which this word is used in Scripture. (Gen. xxiv. 43. Ex. ii. 8. Ps. cxviii. 25. Prov. xxx. 19. Cant. i. 3. vi. 8.) Christ is called "the Seed of the woman," (Gen. iii. 15.) as not to be born in the way of ordinary generation. (Lomth.) The prophecy is introduced in so solemn a manner; the sign is so marked, as a sign selected and given by God himself: the terms of the prophecy are so peculiar, and the name of the child so expressive, containing in them much more than the circumstances of common child required, or even admitted; that we may easily suppose, that in minds prepared by the expectation of a great Deliverer to spring from the house of David, they raised hope far beyond what the present occasion suggested; especially when it was found that in the subsequent prophecy this child, called Immanuel, is treated as the lord and prince of the land of Judah, (viii. 3.) Who could this be other than the heir of the throne of David? Under which character a great and even a divine person had been promised. St. Matthew, therefore, in applying this to the birth of Christ, takes it in its strictest, clearest, and most important sense; and applies it according to the original design and principal intention of the prophet. (Rp. Lomth.) Would it not be very unnatural to suppose, that the prophets have been entirely silent concerning this remarkable sign of the Messiah, (viz. his being born of a virgin) insomuch that an evangelist should be obliged to accommodate to this singular circumstance a passage which originally had no reference to the Messiah? (Graville Sharp.) "God with us;" which name can agree to none but to him who is both God and man. (Thun.) Thus are we to understand the Messiah’s being called Immanuel, i.e. as being really what that name imports, God with us, being both properly and truly God, and also living and dwelling with us men. (Lomth.) Indeed the conceptions of birth and of a child, in the ordinary course of things, could scarcely have been called a sign, whatever name should be given him. The passage cannot be made to accord to any events of those times, as if it meant, that one that was at that time a virgin, should be married, and bear a son, &c. The application of the name Immanuel to one who was the governor of the land (viii. 8.) can comport with none but the reigning king, or the heir-apparent; but Hezekiah was born before his father Ahaz came to the throne; so that he cannot be meant; and to whom else can the several particulars be made to accord? We can therefore admit of no interpretation, (or even accommodation,) of the prophecy, except that given by the evangelist, (Matt. i. 23.) "that a virgin of the house of David should miraculously conceive, and bear a son, who should be known to the church in all succeeding ages, as Immanuel, God with us," God manifested in the flesh, and become our Brother and Saviour. He would be called by this name, as Solomon was called Jedediah; not that he should have no other name, or be commonly addressed by that name; but as it would properly belong to him, and he would be what that name signified. This sign was given to faith, and would encourage only believers; for it would assure them, that no designs formed to destroy the family of David could be successful, as such a blessing was in it. (Notes, Ex. iii. 12. Mic. v. 3.)

V. 15. Though this child should be miraculously conceived, and be properly called Immanuel; yet he would grow up like other children, by the use of the ordinary comforts in those countries, till, or even when, his faculties were unfolded, and he became of age to distinguish between good and evil; and then, unlike other children, he would uniformly “refuse the evil and choose the good.” —I confess that I am singular, or nearly so, in supposing this language to mean any thing more, than the capacity of distinguishing between good and evil: but, as all other children, when left to themselves, are disposed to choose the evil and refuse the good, decidedly preferring sin to holiness; and as Immanuel, that holy child, no sooner exercised the rational faculties of his human nature; but he, (and he alone) perfectly used them in a holy manner; I must be of opinion, that this singular case was intended by the sacred writer, or by the Holy Spirit, who inspired him to use these peculiar expressions. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 16. There is very great difficulty in making out the connexion betwixt this and the preceding verses; which is the case in some of the most remarkable predictions of Scripture: for the Lord seems purposely to cast an obscurity on them, as a trial of our humility, and to prove, whether we will receive and profit by what is obvious, though we cannot satisfactorily solve every difficulty; or whether we will proudly reject the whole on that account. Some suppose, that by this child, the prophet meant his own son Shear jashub, who stood by him: but this is not very natural; and it may be questioned, whether the expression, “shall know to refuse the evil, and choose the good,” could properly be applied to him. Others think that the prophet meant, that in less time than would be required, after the birth of the Virgin’s Son, for his attaining to this capacity, (that is, within two or three years,) the dreaded enemies of Judah would perish. The land of Israel must, in this interpretation, be exclusively meant as the land which Abaz dreaded and abhorred, for one land alone is spoken of; and both, her kings must denote Pekah and his ally, Rezin, king 17 ¶ The Lord shall bring upon thee, and upon thy people, and upon thy father's house, days that have not come, from the day that Ephraim departed from Judah; even the king of Assyria.

18 And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall hiss for the fly that is in the uttermost part of the rivers of Egypt, and for the bee that is in the land of Assyria.

19 And they shall come and shall rest all of them in the desolate valleys, and in the holes of the rocks, and upon all thorns, and upon all *bushes.

20 In the same day shall the Lord shew with a razor that is hired, namely, by them beyond the river, by the king of Assyria, the head, and the hair of the feet: and it shall also consume the beard.

21 And it shall come to pass in that day, that a man shall nourish a young cow, and two sheep;

22 And it shall come to pass, for the abundance of milk that they shall give, that he shall eat butter: for butter and honey shall every one eat that is left in the land.

23 And it shall come to pass in that day, that every place shall be wherein there were one thousand vines at a thousand silverlings, it shall even be for briers and thorns.

24 With arrows and with bows shall men come thither; because all the experienced since the days of Rehoboam. These would be brought on them especially by the king of Assyria, whom Ahaz placed an improper dependence; (Notes, 2 Kings xvi.) but the Egyptians would also concur in them. Probably Egypt abounded with troublesome and noisome swarms of flies: and Assyria might be remarkable for bees, which give great pain by their stings, and collect honey from every quarter. In allusion to these insects, the Lord intimated his design of giving the signal to those nations, to come in vast multitudes, and possess every part of the land. (Marg. Ref.) Judea lay between the kingdoms of Egypt and Assyria, and was continually harassed by those contending powers. The Assyrians weakened Ahaz, instead of helping him; Sennacherib exceedingly impoverished the land in Hezekiah's reign. The Assyrian king took Manasseh captive, and made the land tributary: and the kings of Babylon, who destroyed Jerusalem and desolated the land, ruled over many of the same countries. Pharaoh-necho, king of Egypt, slew good Josiah, and carried Jehohaz prisoner into Egypt, and thus hastened the ruin of Judah. The uttermost part of the rivers of Egypt, may mean those parts of the land which bordered upon the seven mouths of the river Nile; or which lay beyond them. Archibishop Usher supposes, that the conquest of Egypt (xxv.) happened before the siege of Jerusalem by Sennacherib; (it should have been the invasion of the land, for he was not permitted to besiege the capital (xxxviii. 32.) 'and that a great many Egyptians were his auxiliaries in that expedition.' (Lowth.)

V. 20. The Lord intended to employ the king of Assyria, whom Ahaz had hired, as his servant, in executing judgment on the land, and to give him the spoil of it for his wages: and he would destroy both the priests, princes, and the poor of the land in such a manner, that the desolation would resemble the razor clearing away the hair from the head, the feet, and the beard, without any discrimination. This gives an idea of much more terrible depredation and destruction by the Assyrian invasion, than we are apt to receive from a cursory reading of the history.
land shall become briers and thorns.

25 And on all hills that shall be digged with the mattock, there shall not come thither the fear of briers and thorns: but it shall be for the sending forth of oxen, and for the treading of lesser cattle.

CHAP. VIII.

By the name given the prophet’s son, the speedy ruin of Syria and Israel, and the invasion of Judah by the king of Assy-rnia, are predicted, 1—8. The conederacy against Judah would be defeated, 9, 10. The Jews exhorited to fear and trust God, and not to few man; as the way to safety, when numbers would be snared and destroyed, 11—15. The prophet, (as a type of Christ,) with his disciples, are signs to the people, 16—18. He warns them against diviners; directs them to the word of God; and predicts the blasphemy and despair of the rebellions, 19—22.

V. 21—25. Through the scarcity of inhabitants and of cattle after these desolations, the pastures would be so luxuriant, that a young cow and two ewes would plentifully supply a man’s family with milk and butter, which, with honey, would be almost the only remaining productions of the land. Vineyards, that had been let at high rents, (as a thousand vines for a thousand pieces of silver yearly,) would then be overgrown with briers and thorns, and would become the covert of wild beasts, or the resort of robbers, which the inhabitants should come with bows and arrows to destroy. Nay, the mattock and plough would be generally disused, of which the thorns and briers are figuratively represented as afraid; or the expression may mean, that those places, which were so well cultivated, that no one would have feared their being covered by briers and thorns, would then be over-run with them: in short, ardiculture would cease, and the whole land would either become a forest, or a pasture for cattle. (Marg. Ref.)
The promise made to the Jews, just before the destruction of Sennacherib’s army, may intimate, that the land had, during the preceding desolations, been generally left uncultivated, so as to become a forest or pasture land; and could not, till after some time, be converted into corn fields and vineyards. (xxxvii. 30. Note, 2 Kings xix. 29.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—9.

Ungodly men are often punished by others as bad as themselves. “In the fear of the Lord is strong confidence,” but who despise him, not only meet with great afflictions, but are destitute of solid support under them; and the most daring rebels against God are frequently most terrified by perils from their fellow-creatures; so that their “hearts are moved, as the trees of the wood are shaken by the wind.” But whatever men devise, “the counsel of the Lord shall stand,” and regard to his own glory, and to his faithful word, frequently induces him to interpose in our favour, when there is nothing else to move him to it. When ungodly men are in distress or ter-or, they devise many expedients for safety; but they seldom think of humbling themselves before God, and seeking help from him; nay, if left to the bent of their own evil inclinations, they will rather venture any extremity of danger and misery than submit to it. Our God will, however, proceed with his own plan; and not leave sinners any excuse either through want of warning or encouragement.

V. 10—25.

The Lord is ever ready to satisfy the humble inquirer, who desires to believe his truth, yet is perplexed with difficulties and objections; but no evidence can convince such as hate the light, because they are enemies to God, through pride of heart and love of sin: and infidelity is equally provoking, whether it haughtily despise the evidence which the Lord vouchsafes, or whether it presumptuously demand such proof as the case does not require or admit.
But ungodly men always vixen their crimes with some specious colouring, even when their rebellion is most daring: and many pretend a fear of tempting God, when in fact they are determined not to trust or serve him. It is, comparatively, but a small thing for men to grieve and weary the faithful and pious servants of God, that honestly seek their good: alas! sinners also weary the Lord himself, and daily urge him to execute vengeance upon them.
But he will encourage humble believers, whilst he leaves hardened infidels to their own delusions: and the recollection of those promises, which will surely be fulfilled in their season, tends greatly to invigorate true faith, in the most trying circumstances. If the prospect of the coming of the divine Saviour was a never-failing support to the hopes of ancient believers: what cause have we to rejoice and be thankful, that “the virgin shall conceive and bear a son, and called him Immanuel;” that “the Word was made flesh;” and that in our nature he passed through the several stages of childhood, youth, and mas-hood, to fulfil all righteousness, as our Surety, and to set us an example through all, of “refusing the evil and MOREOVER the Lord said unto me, Take thee a great roll, and write in it with a man's pen, concerning 4 Maher-shalal-hash-baz. 2 And I took unto me faithful witnesses to record, 8 Uriah the priest, and 7 Zechariah the son of Jehberechiah. 3 And I went unto 8 the prophetesses; and 6 she conceived and bare a son. Then said the Lord to me, Call his name 9 Maher-shalal-hash-baz.

4 For before the child shall have knowledge to cry, My father, and my mother, 8 the riches of Damascus, and the spoil of Samaria shall be taken away before the king of Assyria.

5 ¶ The Lord spake also unto me again, saying, 6 Forasmuch as this people refused to keep my words, therefore will I bring upon them the waters of 8 Shiloah, that go softly, and rejoice in Rezin and Remaliah's son; 7 Now therefore, behold, 3 the Lord bringeth upon them of the waters of the river, "strong and many, even the king of Assyria, and all his glory: and 1 he shall come up over all his channels, and go over all his banks:

8 And 4 he shall pass through Judah; he shall overthrow and go over, 8 he shall reach even to the neck; and 3 the stretching out of his wings shall fill the breadth of thy land, 7 O Immanuel.

NOTES.

CHAP. VIII. V. 1—4. This chapter begins a new message, which some think is concluded at the seventh verse of the ninth chapter, but others suppose to be contained in the beginning of the twelfth chapter. The Lord commanded his prophet to take a large roll, sufficient to contain in legible characters the prophecy to be delivered; and "to write in it with a man's pen," that is, in the plainest manner. Some render the word translated a roll, a plate of polished brass, such as were used for mirrors; and by a man's pen, an engraving tool, as distinguished from an instrument used by women which was called by the same name; that being written in this manner, it might be publicly exhibited. (Note, Hab. ii. 2.) The prophecy was "concerning Maher-shalal-hash-baz," which signifies, to hasten the spoil, to take quickly the prey. It is probable that this title was affixed to the prophecy, and it was thus intimated that the Assyrians would speedily and rapidly execute the predicted vengeance. The prophet "took faithful witnesses to record," that they might be ready to testify, if required, that he wrote the prophecy at the time mentioned, and prior to the events foretold. And his wife, (called the prophetesses, either on account of her relation to him, or because she too was endued with the spirit of prophecy,) being pregnant at that time, or lately delivered, was ordered to give the same name to the child, as a memorial of the prediction, and a token of its accomplishment. For before this child should know how to cry "My father and my mother," which children soon learn, (Note, vii. 16.) the king of Assyria would seize and carry away the immense riches of Damascus, and all the spoil of Samaria. So that this message was delivered soon after the preceding. Some expositors think, that the witnesses and the record imply, that Isaiah on this occasion married another wife; though it is not said that the mother of Shear-jashub was dead, (vii. 3:) but others suppose, that these witnesses (who were persons of rank, though Uriah was a man of very bad character,) (Marg. Ref.) were called on to attend the circumcision of the prophet's son, and to attest the name by which he was called, as well as the prophecy confirmed or illustrated by that name. And I took unto me faithful witnesses, both of this act that I did, in fastening this roll upon the doors of the Temple, and the name given to my said son, in his circumcision: for my wife, the prophetess, had conceived and borne a son, and the Lord had appointed me to call him by this name. (By. Halt.)—It has been thought, that these scenes were only acted in vision; but this seems a dangerous liberty in explaining Scripture. (Note, Hos. iii. 1—3.)

V. 6—8. Perhaps there was a party in Judah disaffected to the family of David, that secretly favoured the confederates; and this part of the prophecy might be addressed to them, as well as the people of Israel who had revolted from that family. Shiloah was a rivulet of Jerusalem, from which the pool of Siloam, probably, was supplied, of which the very name had a typical meaning. (John ix. 7.) The gentleness of this small current repre-
9 'Associate yourselves, O ye people, and ye shall be broken in pieces; and give ear, all ye of far countries: gird yourselves, and ye shall be broken in pieces; gird yourselves, and ye shall be broken in pieces.

10 Take counsel together, and it shall come to nought; speak the word, and it shall not stand: for God is with us.

11 For the Lord spake thus to me with a strong hand, and instructed me, that I should not walk in the way of this people, saying, 12 Say ye not, 'A confederacy, to all them to whom this people shall say, A confederacy; neither fear ye their fear, nor be afraid.

13 Sanctify the Lord of hosts himself; and let him be your fear, and let him be your dread.

14 And he shall be for a sanctuary; but for a Stone of stumbling, and for a Rock of offence to both the houses of Israel, for a gin and for a snare to the inhabitants of Jerusalem.

15 And many among them shall stumble, and fall, and be broken, and be snared, and be taken.

sentenced the mildness and equity of the government of David and his posterity, compared with that of other neighbouring princes. The Israelites, and many Jews also, unceasingly forgot their obligations to the house of David, and, through unbelief, despised the still greater blessing which was to descend from it: so that, contending in its enforced condition, they were ready to concurs with Rezin and Pekah in their attempts to destroy it. As a gentle brook is an apt emblem of a mild government; so a large impetuous overflowing river aptly represents a mighty conqueror and a powerful tyrant; and God was about to bring the waters of a torrent to punish the people for rejecting David's family, and for their multiplied sins. Sennacherib, the king of Assyria, at the head of numerous and veteran troops, glorifying in his conquests, and grasping after new acquisitions, was like a mighty river overflowing all his banks, and rolling his impetuous streams through the adjacent lands. The kingdom of Judah was represented as a human body. The inundation reached even to the neck; but the head, the capital city, Jerusalem, still remained above water. The success of the Assyrians was also described by the similitude of a monstrous bird of prey, which stretched forth its wings over the whole land. Yet the prophet, in predicting these dreadful scenes, addressed himself to Immanuel, in person, as the proprietor of this land, promised Messiah, in the form of God, was then Lord of that land especially: there, in the fulness of time, he would surely assume human nature, and appear in the form of a servant; and he would therefore certainly deliver his land from Sennacherib's invasion, for his own sake and for the sake of his promise to David his servant. The prophet never calls Immanuel his son: and here he speaks of him as a distinct person from both the children above mentioned, and in such a style, as he who has none but him that was to be, in an eminent manner, both the Son of David and king of Israel. (Lohm.)

V. 9, 10. These verses are a bold challenge to all the enemies of God's people. (xxxvii. 35.) Let as many of them as would combine together; let them strengthen themselves, and prepare for the attempt by every means which they could devise; let them concert their operations with the utmost confidence; and give their orders with the greatest decision: their efforts would be frustrated, and themselves broken to pieces. This he repeated three times, to show his confidence that God certainly be, for says he, "God is with us." The word is "Immanuel," referring to the virgin's son before promised; as this blessing was ensured to them, no counsel or confederacy which interfered with it could prosper. This prediction has been fulfilled in the ruin of Syria and Israel: in the destruction of Sennacherib's powerful armies from various countries; and in that of Babylon and its dependencies; and it is equally applicable to every combination against the church of Christ, and will be fulfilling till the last enemy shall be put under his feet. The Prophet next declared the instruction, which the Lord had powerfully impressed upon his mind, by no means to walk in the way of that people. The Lord spoke to him, (as if, in a most encouraging manner, he had taken him by the hand while he taught him,) "saying, Say ye not a confederacy," &c. This was a caution to them not to give credit to every report of combinations formed against them, and not to yield to despairing fears. The word rendered confederacy, is commonly used in a bad sense, for an unlawful conspiracy; and the combination of Rezin and Pekah was an impious attempt to defeat the promises of God to the house of David. It was also the effect of unbelief in the Jews, to be so alarmed at the confederacy, that they were sure to be defeated; and their propensity to form alliances with heathen princes arose from distrust of God, and disregard to his commandments. Many of the Jews were secret friends to Rezin and Pekah, and this circumstance increased the fears of that invasion; because it was given out that they had a strong party among the people of Judea. (Lohm.) This was a conspiracy in the criminal sense of the word. Instead of this sinful fear of man, they were called on to "sanctify the Lord of hosts himself, and let him be their fear, &c." That is, they were required to honour his glorious name, and his wrath, to revere his authority, to cleave to his worship and service, and to trust in his mercy, truth, and power. For he would be a Sanctuary, a holy Refuge to such as thus sanctified him: but at the same time, he would be "for a Stone of stumbling, and an occasion of falling, a trap, and a snare," to both Jews and Israelites who did Bind up the testimony, seal the law among my disciples.

And I will wait upon the Lord, that hideth his face from the house of Jacob, and I will look for him.

Behold I, and the children whom the Lord hath given me, are for signs and wonders in Israel, from the Lord of hosts himself.

not. In the time of Sennacherib's invasion, and during the siege of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar, and the consequent captivity, and at many other times; whilst true believers found the Lord a sanctuary to them, multitudes of unbelieving Jews were emboldened in their presumption; trusty confidence, by their external relation to God, and by their privileges: and this unwarranted dependence, whilst they continued in sin, proved a snare to them, and accelerated their ruin. But the references made to this and similar passages, in the New Testament, point out its grand accomplishment, and show whom the apostles understood to be the "Lord of hosts himself." (Marg. Ref.) For whilst Christ and his cross were a sanctuary to the remnant of believers, they proved a stumbling-block to the Jewish nation in general; and their erroneous explication of their scriptures, and false confidence that God would protect them, ensnared them to their ruin, which was attended with unheard of circumstances of horror. This text is directly spoken of God by the prophet, but applied to Christ in the New Testament. A plain proof that Christ is God, and is described as such by the prophet. (Lomh.)

V. 16. The prophet delivered the testimony, or message and command, of God to the people; but they, being generally blinded by their prejudices and sins, did not understand his words; so that they were bound up and sealed among his disciples, or those who cordially attended on his instructions. Nay, they were in a great measure closed and sealed up from believers, as they related to future events: yet the prophet was ordered to preserve his predictions as a sacred deposit for future ages. (Notes, Dan. xii. 4.) Thus the doctrines, promises, predictions, and commandments of Christ, were sealed among his disciples: others disregarded them, and the Jews in particular have the veil upon their hearts to this day, when the word of Christ relates to future and remote events, it is sealed up even from his disciples, until its accomplishment.

V. 17. The prophet foresaw that the Lord would hide his face, and withdraw the tokens of his special favour from the house of Jacob; but he would wait on him, and look for his return to favour to them. This might refer to preceding calamities, and to the Babylonish captivity, and the re-toration of the Jews to their own land: but it seems also to mark out their present rejected and dispersed state, and to imply a promise of their future admission into the church.

V. 18. The Prophet had called the two children, "which God had given him," by very significant names: (vii. 3. viii. 3.) and every time they were mentioned, they would bring his predictions of judgment and of mercy to of hosts, which dwelleth in mount Zion.

And when they shall say unto you, Seek unto them that have familiar spirits and unto wizards that peep, and to that matter: should not a people seek unto their God? for the living to the dead!

20 To the law and to the testimony: if they speak not according to this word, it is because there is no light in them.

remembrance. Some of the people would be astonished, that the prophet should give them such remarkable names: and others would derive both him and them with the entire scorn and contempt. So that "he and his children were for signs and wonders in Israel, from the Lord," who had ordered him thus to call them. For though they were not miraculous signs confirming to the senses the certainty of the predictions; yet they were memorials from God concerning them, suited to excite attention and expectation. St. Paul has quoted this passage in a demonstrative discourse, and applied it in such a manner, as proves, that Immanuel himself, and his people whom he condescends to own both as brethren and children, were primarily intended: (Heb. ii. 13.) He was a sign, that "should be spoken against." (Luke ii. 34.) and they have ever been beheld with wonder and derision, or detestation, because of their conformity to him, and their zealous attachment to his cause, doctrines, and precepts. This is, among many others, a clear instance, by the apocalypse, of a twofold fulfillment of prophecies: one more immediate, but less important or adequate, the other more remote, but more fully answering to the emphatical language of the inspired writer.

V. 19. The unbelieving Jews were prone to seek information, counsel, and help from diviners and wizards of different descriptions, which was expressly forbidden in the law, and was in fact worshipping the devil. These persons, it seems, used strange fantastic gestures in their incantations, such as peeping out of the corners of their eyes, and muttering as if they spoke out of their belly; with other ceremonies suited to their abominable practices. But when the Jews were persuaded to seek unto such persons, they were instructed to inquire, whether a person should not seek to their God? And whether it were right or reasonable to leave the living to consult the dead; the living God, to consult dead idols, or the spirits of dead men, whom these witches and wizards pretended to bring up to them? A strong expression of indignant abhorrence. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 20. The law of God is the standard of duty: his sure testimony, the standard of truth; his promise, the firm ground of hope. If, therefore, the people wanted instruction, counsel, or encouragement, let them go to the law, truths, and promises of God's word. If they would not receive the prophet's message, or doubted its authenticity, let them recur to the law of Moses and other preceding parts of revelation. Let them prove all their principles and practices by this standard. But if any were so perverse as to reject and contradict this rule, it was plain they 21 And they shall pass through it, hard-22 And they shall look unto the thingly bested and hungry: and it shall come earth; and behold trouble and darkness, to pass, that when they shall be hungry, and the sinfulness of anguish; and they shall be they shall fret themselves, and curse their driven to darkness.
king and their God, and look upward.

were devoid of spiritual understanding, for no hope or comfort could be found in any other way. They have no knowledge, but are blind leaders of the blind. Philosophical illuminators and enthusiastic pretenders to new revelations, not to be judged of by the law and the testimony, are alike concerned in this description. Its effect, however, is counteracted, in some cases, by acritical difficulty, supported by high authority; as if our translation could not convey the true meaning; because the root of the word rendered light signifies to make dark. But the same noun is used for the morning, or day-break, (when a little light diminishes the darkness,) in the following passages, among many others, (Gen. xxviii. 24. Josh. vi. 15. 1 Sam. xxiv. 20. Ps. xxxix. 12. Prov. xxviii. 9.) though it certainly has another meaning in some places. So that the last clause, I apprehend, with deference to so high authority, may be fairly translated: if they speak not according to this word, it is because no morning or dawn of light is in him; i.e. in any one of them.

V. 21, 22. Inevitable and intolerable evils were coming on each of those who rejected the testimony and law of God, to trust in diviners or casual confidences. None of them would by any means escape the approaching calamities, and all would pass through them in the utmost distress and penury. And when ready to perish with hunger, they would increase their own anguish by impatience; they would curse their king or rulers, for their ruinous measures, and even blaspheme God, while in vain they looked upward for help. Nor could any assistance or relief be got from man: but on which side soever they looked, they would behold troubles, dismay, and increasing anguish; till hardened in impiety and impenitent rage and blasphemy, they would be driven into final despair and misery. This may predict the miseries of many individuals in Sennacherib’s invasion; and the dreadful calamities during the siege and sack of the city by the Chaldeans. It most exactly corresponds to the account given by Josephus of the siege of Jerusalem by the Romans, and the miseries connected with that awful event.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—10.

We have continual reason to bless God for causing his revealed will to be written for our instruction, “with a man’s pen,” in language level to our feeble capacities; and for giving us, in his providence, a faithful translation of the Scriptures into our own tongue. They who treat on divine matters, should study plainness, that men in general may understand them; even though it should interfere with the display of their eloquence and erudition, and with their reputation among the learned and judicious few. The accomplishment of the prophecies forms so conclusive an evidence of the divine original of the Scriptures, that too much care cannot be taken to ascertain, that they were written on the occasions mentioned in them: and the testimony of the Jews, who have ever been faithful witnesses to record that the books of the Old Testament have been handed down, through succeeding ages, from the persons whose names they bear, is very valuable and useful, as a conclusive argument in our controversy with the enemies of our holy faith. We should endeavour that every surrounding object may remind us of the words of God, whether of judgment or of mercy; and that those treasures which men idolize or abuse, will speedily be torn from them. They who reject the salvation and authority of Christ, and refuse his peace and consolation, that they may rejoice in worldly confidences and pleasures, will soon find their licentious liberty to be the basest slavery, their joys to terminate in anguish, and their security in desperation. But happy are the subjects of Immanuel who live in his land; for he will take care of his church in the most urgent circumstances. The enemies of his cause may often circumvent, by an imitation, from some mighty men, or by overlooking all its lanks; they may sweep to destruction numbers of mere professors, and occasion many troubles to believers; but the church will hold her head above water, in the worst of times, and may bid defiance to all the hosts of her enemies. Let persecuting kings and nobles conspire against her with combined power; let wealth and nobility unite with learning, genius, and philosophy, to run down the despised doctrine of the cross; let men of every nation associate, and gird themselves; let them take counsel, give laws, menace, boast, speak, write, triumph: yet, as Jesus is “Immanuel, God with us,” we may boldly say, “the Lord of hosts is with us, the God of Jacob is our Refuge.” Their counsel shall come to nought, their word shall not stand; and the present and future enemies of the church shall share the fate of those who formerly have been broken to pieces; and be constrained to say, “Thou hast overcome, O Nazarene.”

V. 11—22.

It requires the powerful influences of divine grace to preserve even pious men from conforming in some respects to the way of mere professors of Christianity; and from either desponding, or employing carnal weapons, in perilous times. When Christians see persecuting powers or boasting scholars, combing against the people or truths of Christ, they are ready to give up all for lost. But let us not be thus dismayed: the cause of God is in no danger; but the ruin will fall either upon open opposers or hypocritical friends. They who sanctify the Lord of hosts himself, and fear and trust in him as dwelling in human nature; who value nothing in comparison with his grace, and fear nothing so much as coming short of it, or disdaining his name, shall find him a Sanctuary, and be kept by his power through faith unto salvation. But the crucified Immanuel, who was, and is, a stumbling-stone and a rock of offence to unbelieving Jews; is no less so to thousands who are called Christians. The preaching of the
CHAPTER IX.

Predictions, of deliverance and joy to the people of God, through the incarnation, salvation, and kingdom of Christ, 1—7. Of dreadful vengeance on Israel, for their pride, hypocrisy, and impenitent wickedness, and through the success of their enemies, and their own furious contentions, 8—21.

NEVERTHELESS * the dimness shall not be such as was in her vexcross is foolishness in their esteem: his doctrines and precepts; and the reproach of his cause offend them; and yet they rely on a name, a form, or a notion, and are buoyed up in vain-confidence, till they are snared and taken captive by Satan at his will. Even to this day, the truths and commands of Christ are sealed from the generality of his nominal disciples; so that they do not perceive the nature or glory of them. It is given to believers only, to know the mysteries of the kingdom of God: but to them that are without, all is enveloped in parables; (vi. 9, 10) "The secret of the kingdom is with them that fear him," and they are all taught of God: yet their knowledge will not be complete, till the mystery of God be finished, and till they see him face to face. In the mean time, they wait on him and look for him, even when he hideth his face from them, and is pleased to leave his church in trouble: and they will not wait or look in vain. He will come at death to receive their souls; he will come ere long to render his truth universally victorious; and he will come at length to raise the dead, and to judge the world. As the divine Redeemer was contradicted and blasphemed, and treated with the utmost scorn and enmity, even by Israel; and as he is not ashamed to call us his brethren and children:
surely we should not be worse treated by the world, and even by professed Christians, as he was, and as prophets and apostles were in their days. But let us aim to be a memorial and an example to them: and let parents so deduce their children, and ministers so watch over their people, as that they may have a good hope of being able to say, in the great day of account, "Behold I, and the children whom the Lord hath given me," and then will their salvation be completed "from the Lord of hosts, which dwelleth in Zion." Let us then keep close to his word and ordinances, and not listen to deceivers, of whatever name, who would excite our attention by unscriptural and unauthenticated pretensions to intercourse with the world of spirits; who use whimsical and unaccountable observations, by way of ornaments and incalculations, in order to obtain supernatural help and information. Should not God's people trust in him, and seek assistance from him alone? and should they use any suspicious or unwarranted means of obtaining relief? And would not this be, to go from the living God to seek help from the dying or the dead? Let us go to the law of God, where all such practices are condemned; and to his testimony, where all needful or desirable help is promised, in the use of appointed or allowed means. Let us try all doctrines and practices by that unerring rule; and so trust his promises, as to obey his precepts. In all this is neither obscurity, nor any thing dubious: but they who speak contrary to this word, and attempt to establish aught in opposition to this rule, are evidently infatuated and blinded by the spirit of this world. And all the miseries which ever were felt or witnessed on earth, are as nothing, compared with that anguish, despair, and blasphemy, which will shortly overwhelm them. Then will they fret themselves, and curse those who have led them into their delusions; and looking round on every side for help but in vain, they shall be driven into the blackness of darkness for ever. May the Lord preserve us from such condemnation!

NOTES.

CHAP. IX. V. 1. The connexion of this verse with those that precede it, is attended with great difficulty; and its meaning, as it stands in our translation, very perplexed. It probably should be rendered, "But there shall not hereafter be darkness in the land that was distressed:
in the former times He debased, or made vile the land of Zebulon, &c.; but in the latter time he hath made it glorious: even the way of the sea, beyond Jordan, Galilee of the Gentiles." (Bp. Lowth.) The kings of Asyria first ravaged those countries which lay on the banks of the sea of Tiberias, and on the northern part of Jordan, called Galilee of the Gentiles, as bordering on the Gentiles, or long occupied by them; and that region was first favoured and honoured with the preaching of the Gospel by Christ and his apostles. (Marg. Ref.) The word rendered "more grievously afflicted," may mean, and indeed more properly signifies, "made glorious," and this gives a clear sense to the passage. Whatever afflictions came upon unbelievers, mercy was reserved for Israel, which would be first communicated to those parts of the land which had been first ruined. And this event seems to have been exclusively predicted, according to St. Matthew's interpretation of it.

2. When Israel forsaketh the law and testimony of God, the nation was left in darkness and ignorance, wickedness and misery; as "in the land the shadow of death," a shadow of the state of the wicked in another world. But when Christ came, "a great light shined upon them," to show them the path of truth, comfort, and holiness. (Marg. Ref.)

O 2
V. 3. The nation of Israel was innumerable multiplied, notwithstanding all their calamities: yet in general their joy was not increased, because of their sins. But when this light arose, believers rejoiced before God with holy joy, as men rejoice when they reap the harvest after the toil of cultivation, or when they divide the spoil after the perils of the battle. When thou shalt thus graciously visit thy people, howsoever the nation shall not be greater than it now is, yet the joy of it shall be more: as now contrariwise, the people are more, but the joy is not more.'

\[\text{Ps.} 68:18\] Some manuscripts read, (as the margin of the Hebrew also does,) 'Thou hast visited it (or to the nation, 'to Israel'), increased joy: which seems to denote, that the events predicted would be the source of greater joy to all true Israelites, than any of their former deliverances, though at the same time unbelievers would be driven into darkness.

V. 4. 5. The Jews were successively delivered from the yoke of the Assyrians, Chaldeans, Persians, and Macedonians: but this was only a shadow of deliverance from the yoke of Satan. And this redemption seems here especially predicted, as it already accomplished. By the Gospel of Christ and the pouring out of his Spirit, the Lord breathed the life from off his people, and delivered them from the heavy burden, hard drudgery, and cruel treatment of that insolent oppressor; as in the day when he delivered Israel from the Midianites by Gideon: (Note, Judg. vii. 7–25.) Those battles, by which successful warriors rescued nations from oppression, were attended "with confused noise, and "garments rolled in blood," but the redemption predicted would be "with burning, and fuel of fire." the influences of the Spirit are like purifying fire: sharp afflictions as a fiery trial, refine believers as gold in the furnace: and the predicted events were attended with most tremendous vengeance upon the unbelieving Jews. (Marg. Ref.) The latter verse is obscure; and some explain it of the burning of the weapons of war, the accoutrements of warriors, and the garments rolled in blood, under the reign of the Prince of peace. (Ps. xlii. 9. \text{Ex.} xxxix. 8–10.)

\[\text{V. 6, 7.}\] The connexion of this illustrious prophecy with the preceding verse assures us, that the immediate scope of the Holy Spirit in the whole, was to point out the coming and kingdom of Christ. The prophet spake of the predicted blessings, as if already communicated, "Unto us," says he, "a child is born." Angels say, " Unto you!" (Luke ii. 11;) but this child was born for the benefit of us men, of us sinners, of us believers, of all believers from the beginning to the end of the world. "Unto us a Son is given." The only-begotten Son of God was given to and for us, to become the Son of man: that he might be our Surety, Sacrifice, Advocate, and Salvation: he was given by the Father, and he gave himself. —And the government shall be upon his shoulder. The Redeemer rules not only over his people, but over all worlds as Mediator, for their benefit; and he is able to support the weight of this universal and absolute authority. This name shall be called Wonderful. He is wonderful in his person, as \textbf{Immanuel} God and man; in his love and mercy; in his hatred of sin and righteousness toward the holy law; in his compassion to the vilest of sinners; in his majesty and humiliation; in his perfect righteousness and willing sufferings; and in the method which he took to baffle Satan, overcome death, reconcile divine justice and mercy, and establish his kingdom by dying on the cross. In every part of his character and work, he may justly be called Wonderful; and also, in that his glory is incomprehensible, "for no man knoweth the Son but the Father." (Note, Judg. viii. 18–22.) He is also the "Counselor;" "the Word and Wisdom of God came forth from him, to make known his perfections, truths, and will; and to be our infallible Counselor to be made wisdom to us; and to be our infallible Counselor in all difficulties and perplexities; so that they who depend on his guidance, and pray for his Spirit, are least in the midst of the path of judgment. For this child born is indeed "the mighty God," one with, and equal to the Father, according to the sacred mystery of the Trinity in Unity: he possesses all divine attributes, and exercises them through his human nature: and this is he "mighty" to save his people, and to vanquish and destroy all enemies. He is also "the everlasting Father;" "the second Adam, the Lord from heaven," "the everlasting Father" of the whole church, which derives its spiritual being and life from him, as the whole race of men derive their existence from the first Adam: "the Author of eternal salvation." "The Author of eternity, by whom the church and every member of it, shall have immortal life." And as he hath loved his church with an everlasting love; so he will...
Israel with an open mouth. For all this his anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still.

13 For the people turneth not unto him to shew them mercy; neither doth he ask of them, "What hast thou against me, Israel?" Therefore the Lord will cut off from Israel head and tail, branch and rush, in one day.

15 The ancient and honourable, he is the head; and the prophet that teacheth lies, he is the tail.

16 For so the leaders of this people enjoin, saying, "Be not humble, for we have done all things well."

For ever live to bless it, as "the Prince of peace;" the great Author of reconciliation to God; the Giver of peace in the heart and conscience; the Prince, who commands all his subjects to live at peace with each other, and inclines them to follow peace with all men." Of the "end." When his kingdom is truly set up in the heart, the efficacy of it shall endure and increase for ever: as it is set up on earth, it shall continue to diffuse its influence, till his authority be universally submitted to, and produce universal harmony; so that men shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation; neither shall they learn war any more;" yet even this shall increase, and be perfecting in heaven. He shall reign upon the throne of David, to order it and establish it from henceforth for ever." He rules in perfect wisdom and equity; he requires righteousness of his subjects, and teaches them to do judgment: he justifies and sanctifies them, and at length will present them faultless before his Father's throne. And though his mediatorial kingdom, as he reigns in human nature over all worlds, to fulfill his gracious undertakings, will then terminate, "that God may be all in all;" yet his special relation to his people, as their Lord and King, will endure for ever.

These predictions implied so stupendous interpositions of the Lord, in the behalf of his people; and the performance of them would be connected with immense difficulties: yet the zeal of the Lord, for the glory of his own justice, truth, and love, and of his holy law and service, would ensure the performance of them; and his power as the Lord of hosts would render the whole perfectly easy. The exact coincidence of this prophecy with the doctrine of the New Testament, in the literal interpretation of each, shows evidently, that Jewish prophets and Christian teachers had precisely the same view of the person and salvation of the Messiah; and not only tends to demonstrate the divine authority of the Scriptures, in opposition to avowed infidels of every name; but to assure us of the doctrines intended to be taught by them, that we may be fortified against the subtle attempts of more covert enemies to explain them away.

V. 8—12. 'This whole passage,' (to the fourth verse of the next chapter,) 'reduced to its proper and entire form, and healed of the dislocation, which it suffers, by the absurd division of the chapters, makes a distinct prophecy and just poem, remarkable for the regularity of its disposition, and the elegance of its plan. It has no relation to the preceding or the following prophecy; though the parts, violently torn asunder, have been in the one side or the other, patched on to them. Those relate principally to the kingdom of Judah; this is addressed exclusively to the kingdom of Israel.' (Bp. Lowth.) The Lord had, in the law of Moses and by the ministry of the prophets, denounced dreadful threatenings on those of the seed of Jacob who renounced his worship; and this word lighted, or was about to have its full effect, on the people of Israel. Then the Ephraimites, (the kingdom of the ten tribes,) and the citizens of Samaria, would know the truth of God's word, and the power of his wrath. 'With briers and thorns Gideon taught the men of Succoth; (Judg. viii. 13.) or as the margin reads, made them to know what they had deserved.' (Lowth.) For under more gentle rebukes, by the first inroads of the Assyrian kings, they continued proud and stout hearted, and despised the judgments of God; boasting that they would rebuild their ruined cities and palaces in a more magnificent manner, and with more splendid materials. But indeed He was about to visit them with more dreadful vengeance: for the king of Assyria, the adversary of Rezin, would shortly subjugate Syria; and then under the command of the conqueror, the Syrians would appear as enemies to Israel: and whilst these combined forces met them from the east, the Philistines would also attack them from the west, and cut off those who attempted to flee. Thus they would devour Israel with open mouth, as the wolf does the helpless lamb, or in every corner, as it may be rendered: yet even this would not appease the Lord's anger, or prevent his continuing to execute vengeance upon them. Some expositors, by a change in the text, on the authority of several manuscripts, suppose that the princes, not the enemies, of Rezin are meant: but in fact the desolations of Israel were principally made by the Assyrians, after they had subverted the kingdom of Syria; and we do not any where read, that either Rezin or his princes invaded the kingdom of Israel.
17 Therefore shall the Lord have no joy in their young men; neither shall he take mercy upon the fatherless and widows: for every one is hypocritical and an evildoer; and every mouth speaketh folly. For all this his anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still.

18 For the wickedness of their wickedness that burneth as the fire: it shall devour the briars and thorns, and  vide shall kindle in the thicket of the forest, and they shall

19 Mount up like the lifting up of smoke; and like the smoke they shall be consumed out of their places, in an instant. Through the wrath of the Lord of hosts is the land darkened, and the people shall be as the fuel of the fire: no man shall spare his brother.

20 And all shall snap at the tail, and be hungry; and he shall devour on the left hand, and they shall not be satisfied; yea, every one shall devour the flesh of his own arm:

21 Manasseh, Ephraim; and Ephraim, Manasseh: and they together shall be against Judah. For all this his anger is not turned away, but his hand is stretched out still.

V. 19-21. The wickedness of the nation, like a fire for a time smothered up, would at length break forth into an universal conflagration, causing all their glory to vanish, as the clouds or smoke ascend and dissipate. For their sins would render them fuel for the wrath of God, and this would darken all their hopes and prosperity; and whilst his judgments and their enemies straitened them on every side, they would be so infatuated as to destroy each other without mercy. In their extreme necessity they would plunder one another; snapping on every side for sustenance, yet consumed by unsatisfied hunger, till they were ready to tear their own flesh, or to destroy their nearest relations, as both Manasseh and Ephraim were descended from Joseph. The more they were wasted, the more furious would their contentions be; and yet, if occasion offered, the most enraged parties would unite to harass the kingdom of Judah. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-7.

The Lord sometimes visits with his choicest mercies those places that have experienced his severest vengeance: and the Gospel, faithfully preached, is an abundant counterbalance for all the temporal vexations to which any nation hath been exposed. Wretched is the state of fallen man without this blessed word of salvation. Men walk on still in darkness, yes, in the way to final darkness. Such must have been the dreary condition of the whole human race, ever since the entrance of sin, had it not been for the promised Saviour, who in the fulness of time, and by a light into the world, to lighten the Gentiles, and to be the Glory of his people. Blessed be God, this Sun of righteousness hath risen on our land, and still shines around us with glorious splendour: yet numbers prefer darkness, and choose to continue in the land of the shadow of death, that they may have no disturbance in their sinful pursuits. Yes, many who glory in this enlightened age, and even of being its luminaries, hate this heavenly light, and prefer to it their own proud imaginations and vane conjectures! But let us remember that his light is intended "to guide our feet into the ways of peace:" and let us earnestly pray, that it may shine into our hearts, and make us wise unto salvation. Then into the multiplying of believers will increase our joy in the Lord. This will far exceed the joy of harvest, or of those who divide the spoil; and abundantly recompense us for all our godly sorrow, self-denial, diligence, losses, and persecutions for the Lord's sake; for if he hath delivered us from the slavery of sin and Satan, he will at length rescue us from the yoke and scourge of every oppressor. Our chief conflict must be with our own sins; and in this warfare we may hope to obtain more splendid victories than any conqueror ever did in his bloody contests; for the influences of divine grace will daily weaken our lusts; even fiery trials and afflictions shall concur in securing our victory; and every advantage will be an earnest of our eternal triumphs, when made "more than conquerors through him who loved us." But all our hopes and joys originate from the incarnate Redeemer: for us and our salvation he became "a Child born, a Son given," that he might be the propitiation for our sins: for us he obeyed, suffered, and died; for us he arose, ascended, reigns, and intercedes, in our behalf: "all power is given to him in heaven and earth." Let us adore the wondrous of his person, character, and love; and learn in every CHAP. X.

Woes denounced against the rulers for their iniquitous laws and decrees, 1—4. God commissions the Assyrian to punish the Jews; he describes and rebukes their insouciance and impiety, and predicts the ruin of him and his army, 5—19. He promises mercy to a remnant, attended with righteous judgments on the nation, 20—23. The people encouraged not to fear the Assyrians; and a prophetic description of Semachthor's progress, and the sudden ruin of his army, 24—34.

Woe unto them that decree unrighteous decrees, and that thing to seek and follow his counsel, as well as to obey his command. We may indeed safely intrust our souls in his hand, for he is “the mighty God,” and if, from him as from the everlasting Father, we receive spiritual life, and bear his image, and are counted to him for a generation, we shall certainly enjoy that peace which he purchased and bestowed; and shall learn, as the subjects of the Prince of peace, to be peaceable and peace-makers, and to seek the peace of the church and of the world. Let us then pray without ceasing, that his government and peace may increase in our hearts and in the world, until they prevail against all opposition, and make all things subject unto them. And no doubt this will be the case: for the zeal of the Lord of hosts will surely perform whatever relates to the execution of his purposes, the ruin of his enemies, the prevalence of his cause, and the salvation of his people.

V. 2—91.

The words of terror which God hath spoken, will assuredly be performed as those of his love; and they often light with dreadful efficacy upon his professing people: for they who will not trust and serve him as a God of mercy, must know him as a God to whom vengeance belongeth. That pride and stoutness of heart, which render numbers fearless of consequences, and induce them to despise rebukes and warnings, and to flatter themselves and each other with the hopes of impunity and prosperity in sin, will hasten and aggravate their destruction: and unless the afflicted turn to him that smiteth them, and humbly seek his mercy, his anger will not be turned away, but his hand will be “stretched out still;” and temporal calamities will only prove an earnest of eternal misery. Even the ancient and honorable will thus perish, if they continue in sin: but the false teachers, who for filthy lucre’s sake promise them peace, will be marked with peculiar contempt and detestation. Yet how common is it for the leaders of the people to cause them to err, and for the blind to lead the blind, till they fall together into the pit of destruction! The righteous Lord can take no pleasure in the workers of iniquity; however they may be distinguished: if they, who are young in years, be old in wickedness, they may expect the more speedy punishment: nor will be spared the impenitent, however otherwise entitled to commiseration. Hypocrisy or impious modesty connecteth with dishonesty and secret insinuation; and when these become general, they mark a people ripe for destruction. For this is a fire which will consume all before it. The vengeance of God is frequently executed on men by means of their own iniquities: and in times of public calamity, the rich and noble are only distinguished from the poor, as the lofty cedars are from the briers and thorns, when the whole forest is destroyed by one general conflagration. But all that can be suffered on earth from the anger of the Lord is but a shadow of the wrath to come: and the enraged and furious expression to which men have sometimes been given up when suffering for their sins, to the increase of their own and each other’s torment, suggests to the mind a horrid idea of the misery of the wicked in another world; when, bereft of all hope and comfort, and enduring the fiery wrath of God, every one will be tormented by his own conscience, and express without restraint all his malignant passions; and so enhance the anguish and vexation of his fellow-sufferers. Blessed be God for Jesus Christ, who delivereth us from the wrath to come!

NOTES.

CHAP. X. V. 1—4. These verses belong to the subject of the preceding chapter: yet they are so expressed as to include the rulers and magistrates of the Jews, as well as those in Israel; and indeed those of every nation who thus abuse their authority. The persons intended enacted laws which authorized grievous oppression, and decided causes in the most iniquitous manner: and their edicts and decrees were enrolled by the scribes and writers, and prescribed for rules and precedents in the inferior courts. Thus the poor were robbed, and the orphans and widows plundered of their little property, under colour of law and justice. The Lord, indeed, still acknowledged the Israelites as his people. He had yet a small remnant, especially among the poor, who were peculiarly exposed to these oppressions. But he was about to send the Assyrians from afar to execute his vengeance, and what would 5 ¶ O Assyrian, the rod of mine anger, and the staff in their hand is mine indignation.

6 I will send him against an hypocritical nation, and against the people of my wrath will I give him a charge, to take the spoil, and to take the prey, and to tread them down like the mire of the streets.

7 Howbeit he meaneth not so, neither doth his heart think so: but it is in his heart to destroy and cut off nations a few years.

8 For he saith, Are not my princes altogether kings?

9 Is not Calno as Carchemish? is not Hamath as Arpad? is not Damascus as Samaria?

10 As my hand hath found the kingdoms of the idols, and whose graven images did excel them of Jerusalem, and of Samaria;

11 Shall I not, as I have done unto Samaria and her idols, do so to Jerusalem, and her idols?

12 Wherefore it shall come to pass, that when the Lord hath performed his whole work upon mount Zion and on Jerusalem, I will punish the fruit of the stout heart of the king of Assyria, and the glory of his high looks.

13 For he saith, By the strength of my hand I have done it, and by my wisdom; for I am prudent: and I have removed the bounds of the people, and have robbed their treasures, and I have put down the inhabitants like a valiant man:

14 And *my hand hath found as a nest the riches of the people: and as one gathereth eggs that are left, have I gathered all the earth; and there was none that moved the wing, or opened the mouth, or peeped.

15 Shall the axe boast itself against him that heweth therewith? or shall the saw magnify itself against him that shaketh yet Sennacherib would not do it, because the Lord commanded him, or as his willing servant. He had no intention or inclination of that kind: but was actuated entirely by enormous ambition, rapacity, and cruelty. Here is declared the difference of the work of God, and of the wicked, in one very thing and act, for God's intention is to chastise them for their amendment; and the Assyrian, to destroy them, and enrich themselves: thus, in respect of God's judgment, it is God's work; but, in respect of their malice, it is the work of the devil. (Note, Gen. 1: 20.)

V. 5, 6. The prophet here enters upon another subject: and some think that this prediction was delivered after the ruin of Samaria, in the reign of Hezekiah; because Sennacherib is introduced, boasting of what he had done to that city. But it is more probable that this also was spoken prophetically, as what the Lord foreknew he would say, when marching against Jerusalem: and perhaps this prophecy was delivered, when Ahaz was depending on the assistance of the king of Assyria; both to warn the people of their danger from that quarter, and to encourage them to place their confidence in God. He here pointed out the Assyrian king, as the rod with which he meant to correct his offending people; and his righteous indignation was the staff with which that prince would beat and bruise them. For God would send that fierce and inhumane conqueror against a nation, professedly his worshippers, but generally ungodly, and which in general would comply with Hezekiah's reformation, in a hypocritical manner. And he would commission him to take the spoil and prey, and to devour and trample upon them as if they were the mire of the streets.

V. 7. Though the Lord would give Sennacherib power and success, and use him as his instrument in the work;
The remnant shall be they, even the remnant of Jacob, unto the mighty God.

22 For though thy people Israel be as the sand of the sea, yet a remnant of them shall return: the consumption decreed shall overflow with righteousness.

23 For the Lord God of hosts shall make a consumption, even determined in the midst of all the land.

24 ¶ Therefore thus saith the Lord God of hosts, O my people that dwellest in Zion, be not afraid of the Assyrians: he shall smite thee with a rod, and shall lift his staff against thee, after the manner of Egypt.

25 For yet a very little while, and the indignation shall cease, and mine anger, in their destruction.

26 And the Lord of hosts shall stir up a scourge for him, according to the slaughter of Midian at the rock of Oreb, and as his rod was upon the sea, so shall he lift it up after the manner of Egypt.

V. 15. These animated interrogations have a peculiar energy. Jehovah as much employed the power given to Sennacherib, for certain purposes, as a man does a tool that he hath formed for that use. But could an axe be conceived to glory over him that hewed with it? or a saw to menace him that moved it? or a rod that corrected another with it? or a staff, as if it were not mere wood, to strike him that used it? The absurdity in these instances would not be greater, than it was for Sennacherib to vaunt himself against Jehovah; on whom he was far more dependent, and to whom he was vastly more inferior, than the axe or the saw to him who used them. Yet, ignorant of him by whom he was moved, and forgetful of his own weakness, he defied the God of Israel, and expected to overcome him!

V. 16—19. To convince the proud worm of his madness, and to promote his own glory, the Lord determined to enfeebles his overgrown power and prosperity, and to confound his stoutest commanders and forces, and all that in which he gloried. For the holy Protector and Light of Israel, would be a fire to destroy his army, as briers and thorns; and he would level them to the ground, as a conflagration does the forest and the crop of corn; yea, he would destroy them, both soul and body, absolutely and finally; and the desolations would be, as "when a standard-bearer faileth," and all who followed his standard are put to confusion, and cut in pieces. So that the few men that should remain of that army, which had been numerous as the trees in a vast forest, might be numbered and registered even by a child. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 20. The Jews and Israelites were wont to rely on the assistance of the neighbouring nations, and they were corrected by them one after another. Under Ahaz they sought the protection of the Assyrians, who were employed to smite them. But a remnant of those who escaped Sennacherib's ravages, by the miraculous interposition of God, could be cured of this propensity, and learn in truth to rely on the Holy One of Israel; for they would not only return to their habitations, from which the invaders had driven them, but to the worship and service of God.

V. 21—23. The origin of "a remnant shall return," is Shear-Jashub, the name given to one of Isaiah's sons, in confirmation of the perpetuity of God's promises. (Note, vii. 3.) The descendants of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, according to the promises of God, were indeed numerous as the sand of the sea: yet in general they had forsaken him, and no more than a remnant, even on this great occasion, would return to him. Not only did Sennacherib execute vengeance on many of the people; but further judgments were decreed and predicted, which in strict and awful justice would make them desolate for their sins; for the Lord had determined to make a consumption of the people throughout the land. The use which the apostle makes of this passage, shows that the Holy Spirit intended also to foretell more important events; even the conversion of a remnant of the Jews to Christ, and the execution of righteous vengeance upon the bulk of the nation that rejected him. (Notes, xxviii. 21, 22. Dan. ix. 24—27. Rom. ix. 27, 28.)

V. 24—26. The promises of deliverance from Sennacherib's invasion are made only to the inhabitants of Jerusalem. (xxviii. 32, 33.) A type of the elect among the 27 And it shall come to pass in that day, that his burden shall be taken away from off his shoulder, and his yoke from off thine neck, and the yoke shall be destroyed because of the anointing. 28 He is come to Aiath, he is passed over to Migron; at Michmash he hath laid up his carriages. 29 They are gone over the passage, they have taken up their lodging at Geba; Ramah is afraid; Gibeah of Saul is fled. 30 Lift up thy voice, O daughter of Gallim; cause it to be heard unto Laish, O poor Anathoth. 31 Madmenah is removed; the inhabitants of Gebim gather themselves to flee. 32 As yet shall he remain at Nob that day: he shall shake his hand against the mount of the daughter of Zion, the hill of Jerusalem. 33 Behold, the Lord, the Lord of hosts, shall lop the bough with terror: and the high ones of stature shall be hewn down, and the haughty shall be humbled. 34 And he shall cut down the thickets of the forests with iron, and Lebanon shall fall by a mighty one.

Practical Observations. V. 1—19.

Injustice and oppression are most atrocious when sanctioned or prescribed by law; and a tremendous wo is denounced against all those who enact iniquitous statutes, or decree injustice from the seat of the magistrates. The more indigent and destitute the poor are, who are thus robbed, the deeper is the guilt of their oppressors; and when persecution for righteousness sake is added, it speedily hurls up the measure of national guilt. Even in temporal calamities tyrants and persecutors will not know how to secure that power, pomp, or influence, which they account their glory; or even their own lives: and if the Lord withdraw his protection, the most despotic instruments will execute deserved vengeance on them. But what will sinners do? Whither will they flee? and what will their glory avail them in the approaching day of judgment?—When the Lord intends to desolate nations, or to chastise his people, he sometimes arms with power and renders successful, the vilest of men; and commissions them to smite those who have provoked his anger. He means to destroy the most criminal, and to excite others to repentance: but the instruments seek not his glory but their own, and count it their pleasure to destroy, and to cut off nations not a few. The lust of dominion renders them callous to the feelings of humanity, and forgetful that they are the creatures and subjects of the Almighty; authority, power, and success inflame their minds with increasing arrogance; and whilst they ascribe all their achievements to their own prowess and conduct, they suppose that nothing can stop their progress; nay, they can be so insatiable, as to "exalt themselves above all that is called God and is worshipped," and to suppose themselves able to overcome the deities, as well as the kings, of opposing nations! How lamentable was it, that Jerusalem, which was single and unrivalled in her relation to Jerubbaal, should have set up graven images, in which she was excelled by the heathen cities! and it is equally foolish for Christians to emulate the people of the world in those vices in which they will always be eclipsed. The Lord allots to every man his part, in fulfilling his grand designs. When any one serves him humbly and willingly, He graciously recompens his faith and obedience: but they who unintentionally perform his purposes, are influenced by corrupt motives, and will be punished for their sins. Men's words and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge, and of the fear of the Lord.

3 And I shall make him of quick understanding in the fear of the Lord; and he shall not judge after the sight of his eyes, neither reprove after the hearing of his ears:

4 But I shall smite the earth with the rod of his mouth, and with the breath of his lips shall he slay the wicked.

And there shall come forth a Rod out of the stem of Jesse, and a Branch shall grow out of his roots:

And the Spirit of the Lord shall rest upon him, the Spirit of wisdom and understanding, the Spirit of counsel and might, the Spirit of knowledge, and of the fear of the Lord.

And in the days of these kings shall the Israelites be subject to a foreign king:

And this shall be the sign unto you, saith the Lord, that I will make the house of your brethren as it were the dust of the earth, and the mountains shall be filled with the dead bodies.

And thou shalt say unto the king of thy brother, Behold the head of the king's son.

And surely I am he that comforteth Israel.

And the glory of the Lord shall rest upon him, and the spirit of the Lord shall dwell in him, and the spirit of wisdom and understanding, the spirit of counsel and might, the spirit of knowledge, and of the fear of the Lord.

And in the days of these kings shall the Israelites be subject to a foreign king:
girdle of his loins, and faithfulness the girdle of his reins.

6 The wolf also shall dwell with the lamb, and the leopard shall lie down with the kid; and the calf and the young lion, and the fatling together; and a little child shall lead them.

7 And the cow and the bear shall feed; their young ones shall lie down together: and the lion shall eat straw like the ox.

8 And the sucking child shall play on the hole of the asp, and the weaned child shall put his hand on the cockatrice's den.

9 They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain: for the earth shall be full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea.

10 ¶ And in that day there shall be a root of Jesse, which shall stand for an ensign of the people; to it shall the Gentiles seek: and his rest shall be glorious.

11 And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall set his hand again the second time to recover the remnant of his people, which shall be left from Assyria, and from Egypt, and from Pathros, and from Cush, and from the land of Gomer, and from Eleutheria, and from the coasts of the sea.

V. 2—5. As the human nature of Christ was formed by the operation of the Holy Spirit, in the womb of the virgin; so all his power, wisdom, and holiness, as man, are in the New Testament ascribed to the same divine influence; for the Holy Spirit was not given by measure "unto him." The varied expressions here used denote the manifold endowments of the human nature of Christ for the work which he had undertaken, and the fulness treasured up in him for his people. Every kind of divine knowledge and sagacity, of wisdom and prudence, of piety and boldness, of all affections and spiritual riches for heavenly things, of vigour and strength of mind for obedience; and suffering with unabated courage, zeal, and patience; whatever was requisite for the exercise of his personal ministry attended with singular miracles on earth, or for that of his mediatorial kingdom in Heaven, to the end of time, are comprised in the expressions before us. So perfect would be his knowledge, wisdom, and justice, that he would be in no case judge by appearances or report; but would distinguish characters and decide causes with the most exact discernment and impartiality. He would be the Protector of his poor and humble people, and plead for them against oppressors; and whilst he saved all those who submitted to him, he would destroy the enemies of his kingdom, by denouncing and executing vengeance upon them: as if an iron rod proceeded from his mouth to dash them in pieces, or as if his breath were a flame of fire to devour them: and his most perfect righteousness and faithfulness would both establish him on the throne, prepare him for it, and be the ornament and glory of it. (Notes, Ps. lxxii. Marg. Ref.)

V. 6—9. (Notes, Is. 9. 7.) The effects of divine grace on the minds of men, in the times of the Messiah, are here represented with much beauty under the most significant emblems. Persons of the most dissimilar dispositions and pursuits, and addicted to various kinds of wickedness, would be so changed by the grace of the Gospel, that they would become of "one heart and one way." The selfish, the penurious, the rapacious, the contentious, the ambitious, the savage, the subtle, and the malicious, would lose their peculiar base dispositions, and become harmless, sincere, peaceable, benevolent, and affectionate; they would live together in harmony, hearken to instruction, and be guided by gentle persuasions and entreaties. So that the change would be as evident, and surpassing, as if the wolf, the tiger, the lion, the bear, and other fierce carnivorous animals, should learn to be as gentle and harmless as the lamb, the kid, the calf, or the cow; to associate with them, to graze the pasture as they do, or to feed on straw or hay; and should be so tractable that a little child could lead them. Or, as in the asp or the cockatrice should no longer be disposed to bite with envenomed teeth; but should be so inoffensive, that infants might safely play by their holes: for there would be no more a disposition in the inhabitants of Zion, the true church of Christ, to hurt or destroy; the knowledge of the Lord, with all its sanctifying effects, should at length cover the whole earth, even as the waters cover the sea. The tables and imaginations of the Gentiles, of a golden age, and the return of it in the latter days, seem to have been taken from the scriptural account of Adam in paradise, and from the predictions of the Messiah's happy reign. To suppose that the Holy Spirit, by this decisive language, foretold events no way answerable to their exact meaning; and that they are merely highly wrought figures of speech, like those of unimpeachable poets; and suited to raise expectations in simple hearted believers, which must be eternally disappointed, savours too much of infidelity, por the real phrenology, to deserve a serious refutation. The earth has never yet been "full of the knowledge of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea;" and therefore the grand accomplishment of the prophecy has not yet taken place.

V. 10. When the Gospel began to be publicly preached and embraced, the divine Saviour, as springing from the root of Jesse, and as crucified for sinners, ascended into heaven, and exalted into the mediatorial throne, stood as an ensign to which the people of God resorted. (Marg. Ref.) The Gentiles sought to him as their Lord and Saviour; and the rest of soul, which they found in trusting him, was connected with the glory and beauty of holiness, and an earnest of the glory of heaven. (Rom. xvi. 12.) Or, rather, the Saviour would rest with full complacency in his redeemed people, chiefly from the Gentiles, in whom his name would be exceedingly glorified. (Ps. xxxii. 8. 13.) from Elam, and from Shinar, and from Hamath, and from the islands of the sea.

12 And he shall set up an ensign for the nations, and shall assemble the outcasts of Israel, and gather together the dispersed of Judah from the four corners of the earth.

13 The envy also of Ephraim shall depart, and the adversaries of Judah shall be cut off: Ephraim shall not envy Judah, and Judah shall not vex Ephraim.

14 But they shall fly upon the shoulders of the Philistines towards the west; and they shall spoil them of the east together: they shall lay their hand upon Edom and Moab; and the children of Ammon shall obey them.

15 And the Lord shall utterly destroy the tongue of the Egyptian sea; and with his mighty wind shall he shake his hand over the river, and shall smite it in the seven streams, and make men go over dry shod.

16 And there shall be an highway for the remnant of his people, which shall be left from Assyria; like as it was to Israel in the day that he came up out of the land of Egypt.

V. 11—16. The Lord recovered a remnant of his people from Assyria and Babylon, by the same power with which he had brought the whole nation out of Egypt: and it is here predicted, that he would "set his hand again a second time," to gather those that were left of them from all nations whither they were scattered; and several of the adjacent countries, and some very distant ones, were specified. The crucified Saviour, doublets, as held forth in the preached Gospel, is that ensign to which he will assemble the outcasts of Israel and the dispersed of Judah, from the four corners of the earth. United in dependence on, and obedience to, the Prince of Peace, that enmity, competition, and enmity, which so long kept the Jews and Israelites at variance, shall be finally terminated, their adversaries shall be cut off, and many of their former enemies shall become tributary and obedient to them. For the Lord will then remove all obstacles by the same powerful interposition, that he vouchsafed in behalf of Israel, when he separated the Tigris of the Egyptian, or Red Sea, and destroyed that hindrance to their departure: and with a mighty wind he will so separate the waters of the river, (Euphrates,) in all its streams, that men may pass over dry shod. Thus an easy way shall be made for Israel's return, as there was for their ancestors to pass from Egypt unto Canaan. This part of the chapter contains a prophecy, which certainly remains yet to be accomplished. (Luth.) This chapter contains a general prophecy of the advancement Christ's kingdom should make in the world. And I take this part of the chapter to foretell those glorious times of the Church, which shall be ushered in by the restoration of the Jewish nation; when they shall embrace the Gospel, and be restored to their own country from the several dispersions where they are scattered. This remarkable scene of Providence is plainly foretold by most of the prophets of the Old Testament, and by St. Paul. (Luth.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—9.

The descent from the summit of earthly grandeur to the abyss of misery is common. But heavenly honour and prosperity advance gradually from small beginnings, and will increase for ever; and the cause of God is not rendered triumphant by human power, but by the Spirit of the Lord. Thus the great Head of the Church sprang up as a tender shoot; and was scarcely conceived at first, but observed to be disdained: but through his external graces, in the form of a servant, a divine glory shone forth. His holy life, his stupendous miracles, his boundless knowledge and heavenly wisdom, and all his works and words, proclaimed that the Spirit of the Lord rested upon him, for all the purposes predicted by his holy prophet. And now in human nature he reigns upon a glorious throne, the Lord and Judge of his church and of the world; and all the treasures of wisdom and knowledge, of grace and truth, of power and might, yea, all the fulness of the Godhead dwell in him. Thus gloriously exalted, and furnished for his station, he is the Patron of the poor and oppressed; for the lowly and broken-hearted alone truly submit to him and value his salvation: whilst he pleads their cause, he will execute his severest threathenings on all the workers of iniquity; but with exact discrimination and strict justice, for righteousness is the girdle of his loins, and faithfulness of his reins. From his fulness all his people receive, and grace for grace: So that the same Spirit is communicated to each of them in their measure: and thus they learn sound wisdom and discretion; they become acquainted with God and themselves, with his truths and their own duty, interests, dangers, and security; they are rendered prudent to shun, or strong to resist, the temptations of Satan; they learn to fear and love the Lord; and with increasing experience and spirituality, they become of quick understanding in discerning good and evil; they are formed to the same judgment with him, whose Spirit they receive; they learn to follow his example of goodness, truth, and purity; and in a subordinate sense, righteousness and faithfulness become their girdle also. Let us seek diligently for more and more of this heavenly wisdom and good understanding, and be contented to want that knowledge and discernment which the world admires and idolizes. As far as we are taught by the Spirit of Christ, the predominant obliquities of our natural disposition will be corrected; and those hateful and mischievous vices, by which men resem-
CHAP. XII.

A Hymn of praise for the church, on the accomplishment of the preceding prophecies, 1–6.

A ND in that day shalt thou say, O Lord, I will praise thee; though thou wast angry with me, thine anger is turned away, and thou comfortedst me.

2 Behold, God is my Salvation; I will trust, and not be afraid; for the Lord Jehovah is my Strength and my Song; he also is become my Salvation.

3 Therefore with joy shall ye draw water out of the wells of salvation.

And whilst we expect the Lord to set his hand again, to gather his ancient people from their dispersion, and to bring them home to his church; and also to bring in the fulness of the Gentiles, when all parties will cease their envy and strife, and be united in holy love: let us trust in his glorious power to remove out of the way all the hinderances to our complete salvation; let us trust in the high-way of holiness which he hath made for his redeemed; let us wait for the mercies of the Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life; and let us expect that the Lord will prepare our way through death, that river which separates this from the eternal world, that we may pass over dry shod; even as he dried up the Red Sea and Jordan, when "heled forth his people with joy, and his chosen with gladness, 'to give them the land of Canaan for their inheritance.'"

NOTES.

CHAP. XII. V. 1. Whatever accommodations may be made of this sacred hymn, as it is immediately connected with the prophecy in the former chapter, it evidently predicts, that the converted nation of Israel, reflecting upon their past condition for so long a time, because of the anger of God against them for their obstinate rejection of their Messiah; and exulting in the glorious change, that had taken place, shall break out in the language of the prophet, "O Lord I will praise thee, &c."

"I will give thanks unto thee, O Jehovah, for thou hast been angry with me, thine anger is turned away, and thou hast comforted me." (Bp. Luth.)

V. 2. The deliverance of Israel from oppression and misery, was a shadow of the redemption of the church from sin and Satan. This whole salvation results from the infinite love and mercy of God the Father; was contrived by his infinite wisdom, and rests on his infinite power and truth. It is altogether communicated through the person and mediation of Immanuel. And it is applied by the new-creating power of God the Spirit. So that in every sense God is the Salvation of his church. Thus Jehovah, the eternal God, is in Christ the Supporter, Protector, and Friend of the Church and of every believer; and is become his Salvation, from the moment when he is enabled to receive, and rely on him, as such.

V. 3. The purifying, fertilizing, and consolatory influences of the Holy Spirit, are commonly denoted under the emblem of springing water; (Marg. Ref.) This water flows through the mediatory work of Christ, and is conveyed to our souls by means of the ordinances of God's worship. When the Gospel is preached in any place, a well of salvation is opened, which communicates with the Fountain of life in Christ; and in the predicted times, this Fountain of life and these wells of salvation, though long CHAPTER XIII.

God musters the armies of his indignation, 1—5. The terrible destruction of Babylon by the Medes, 6—18. The final devastation of Babylon, 19—22.

THE burden of Babylon, which Isaiah the son of Amoz did see.

[22-26. 1. II. Dan. v. 6-51, i.e. Rev. xvi. xviii.—c. l.]

CHAPTER XIII. V. 1. The word rendered burden, (though some translate it the oracle,) seems to denote the heavy vengeance predicted; which was seen in vision by the prophet, as if already falling upon Babylon. (Note, Jer. xxiii. 33—40.) These two chapters, (striking off the last verses of the latter,) contain one entire prophecy, foretelling the destruction of Babylon by the Medes and Persians, delivered probably in the reign of Ahas, about two hundred years before the completion of it. The captivity itself of the Jews at Babylon, (which the prophet does not expressly foretell, but supposes, in the spirit of prophecy, as what was actually to be effected;) did not fully take place till about one hundred and thirty years after the delivery of this prophecy: and the Medes, who are expressly mentioned (17), as the principal agents in the overthrow of the Babylonish monarchy, by which the Jews were released from that captivity, were at this time an inconsiderable people; having been in a state of anarchy ever since the fall of
ISAIAH

2. Lift ye up a banner upon the high mountain, exalt the voice unto them, shake the hand, that they may go into the gates of the nobles.

3. I have commanded my sanctified ones, I have also called my mighty ones for mine anger, even them that rejoice in my highness.

4. The noise of a multitude in the mountains, like as of a great people; a tumultuous noise of the kingdoms of nations gathered together: * the Lord is out of Sion, he shall judge the people in the great congregation, and destroy the whole land.

5. They come from a far country, and from the end of heaven, even the Lord, and his Holiness; his mighty ones, shall come, and do not tarry.

6. Howl ye: for the day of the Lord is at hand it shall come as a destruction from the Almighty.

7. Therefore shall all hands be faint, and every man’s heart shall melt:

8. And they shall be afraid: * pangs shall come upon him that lies in the dust, upon all the inhabitants of the world.

9. And son of man, the great Assyrian empire, of which they had made a part under Sardanapalus; and did not become a people under Deioces till about the seventeenth of Hezekiah. (Lut.) The Jews had hitherto had little acquaintance with the Chaldeans; that empire was, at the time when this prophecy was uttered, inferior to that of the Assyrians, if it did not constitute a part of it; and it was several years after, that the kings of Babylon obtained the ascendancy, and their empire supplanted and swallowed up that of the Assyrians. Some intimations, however, had been given the Jews of their danger from that quarter; and indeed all the predictions of the prophets, concerning foreign nations, were given with some reference to the state of the Jews, and with an especial regard to their advantage. Babylon was a type or figure of Antichrist, the great oppressor of God’s church in after times.— These prophecies have an aspect beyond the taking of Babylon by Cyrus; inasmuch as the prophets describe this judgment as a decisive stroke, that should thoroughly vindicate the cause of oppressed truth and innocence: and put a final period to idolatry, and to all the miseries and oppressions of God’s people. (Lut.) (Marg. Ref.)

V. 2–5. The Lord, by his prophet, addressed himself to the rulers of the Medes and Persians, as if present, commanding them, by every means, to collect forces, and to go and take possession of Babylon, and of the stately palaces of her nobles. He called them, “his sanctified ones,” those whom I have appointed and set apart for that service. (Lut.) He had selected them and endued them with power to execute his indignation; and he knew, that they would rejoice in doing those things, by which his name would even finally be magnified. (Note, Ezra i.) When the Lord should thus muster the host for the battle, vast multitudes from distant nations would soon be collected, with tumultuous noise, to destroy the whole kingdom of the Babylonians. This exactly accords to the account given by historians of the various nations which constituted the army of Cyrus.

V. 6. The Almighty: * Whose power and purposes none is able to resist. (Lut.)

V. 8. As flames. That is, pale, and liied, as terror renders man; for this is the colour of the flame: not red, as with anger, which is the colour of the fire, from which the flame proceeds. (Marg. Ref.) After many defeats in the open field, the king of Babylon retired with his forces within the walls of his capital: and Cyrus formed the siege of that city, and beyond all expectation took it, by draining off the waters of the Euphrates, and marching his army into the city by the channel of that river. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 10. The prophets, under these figures, describe the subversion of governments, when kings, nobles, and rulers are degraded or destroyed; and that confusion, horror, and dismay, which attend such violent convulsions. The grandeur of the images, and the sublimity of the language, in these chapters, have greatly excited the admiration of the most competent judges.

V. 11. The world. The Babylonish empire, at one time the largest in the universe, was, it seems, called the world; as the Roman empire was in after ages. (Luke ii. 1.)

V. 12. Such havoc would be made of the men capable of bearing arms, that they would become as scarce as the finest gold, and not to be procured for it. (Note, iv. 1.) hosts; and in the day of his fierce anger.

14 And it shall be as the chased roe, and as a sleep that no man taketh up: they shall every man turn to his own people, and flee every one into his own land.

15 Every one that is found shall be thrust through; and every one that is joined unto them shall fall by the sword.

16 Their children also shall be dashed to pieces in pieces before their eyes; their houses shall be spoiled, and their wives ravished.

17 Behold, I will stir up the Medes against them, which shall not regard silver; and as for gold, they shall not delight in it.

18 Their bows also shall dash the young men to pieces; and they shall have no pity on the fruit of the womb;

19 their eye shall not spare children, the utter decay of its ruins: but when God is pleased to destroy, nothing can withstand his power. (Notes, Rev. xviii.) It is uncertain what creatures are meant by several of these Hebrew words; particularly what the word sercin signifies, which we render satyrs. The word originally signifies goats: and it is supposed, that evil spirits of old time appeared in the shape of goats, upon which account it is sometimes translated devils. (Note, Lev. xvii. 3-7.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The threatenings of Scripture press with incumbent weight upon the head of the wicked, and are a sore burden too heavy for them to bear: and at the appointed time they will sink the most flourishing cities and nations into ruin, as well as the souls of sinners into eternal misery. But the believer sees this tremendous vengeance ready to fall on those who are not aware of their own danger: and whilst he would affectionately warn them to escape from it, he becomes the object of their derision, and their indignation. The Lord selects and sets apart the weapons of his wrath, who are of themselves disposed to the work in which he purposes to employ them; and whilst they rejoice in gratifying their selfish passions, they unintentionally perform his righteous judgments. He invests them with power, affords them favourable opportunities, gives them helpers, and endues them with intrepidity; and thus “the Lord of hosts musterceth the hosts of the battle!” with furious tumult they march from the ends of the earth, to assault their enemies, and they are not aware that they are only the weapons of his indignation. He also gives them success; and when his day of taking vengeance arrives, the most valiant warriors become feeble, numerous armies melt away, and all resistance is heartless and useless. But the compass of nature cannot furnish images fully to illustrate the horror and dismay, the amazement and despair, which will come upon the wicked, when the day of the 3 And it shall come to pass in the day that the Lord shall give thee rest from thy sorrow, and from thy fear, and from the hard bondage wherein thou wast made to serve, 4 That thou shalt take up this proverb against the king of Babylon, and say, 5 How hath the oppressor ceased! the golden city is broken! 6 The Lord hath broken the staff of wickedness, and the sceptre of rulers. 7 He who smote the people in wrath with a continual stroke, he that ruled the nations in anger, 8 Yea, the fir-trees rejoice at thee, and the cedars of Lebanon the saying, Since thou art laid among us, no feller is come up against us.

NOTES.

CHAP. XIV. V. 1, 2. The ruin of Babylon was immediately connected with mercy to the Jews; and the victory of Cyrus made way for their restoration from captivity. The terms, Jacob and Israel, may imply that mercy was intended to a remnant from all the twelve tribes. Probably several proselytes were made to the Jewish religion, when they were restored to their own soil: but we do not read that they ever ruled over the Chaldeans, or had any number of them for slaves. It may therefore be inferred, that still more important events were predicted: and in general all the prophecies, relating to the destruction of Babylon, have, no doubt, a typical reference to the destruction of the great Antichrist as foretold by St. John. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 3—6. The deliverance of Judah from captivity introduces, with the greatest ease, the triumphant song on that subject. A chorus of Jews is introduced, expressing their astonishment at the sudden downfall of Babylon, and the great reverse of fortune which had befallen the tyrant, who had oppressed his own, and harassed the neighbouring kingdoms. (Sp. Louth.) Babylon may be called "the golden city," with reference to her immense riches, or "the exegesis of gold," from the rapacity of her kings. (Marg. Ref.)
CHAPTER XIV.

9 * Hell * from beneath * is moved for thee to meet thee at thy coming: it stretcheth up the dead for thee, even all the chief ones of the earth: it hath raised up from their thrones all the kings of the nations.

10 All they shall speak and say unto thee, Art thou also become weak as we, or art thou become like unto us?

11 Thy * pomp is brought down to the grave, and the noise of thy viols: * the worm is spread under thee, and the worms cover thee.

12 How art thou fallen from heaven, O Lucifer, son of the morning! * how art thou cut down to the ground, which didst * weaken the nations!

13 For * thou hast said in thine heart, I will ascend into heaven, I will exalt my throne above the stars of God; I will sit also upon the mount of the congregation, in the sides of the north: * I will ascend above the heights of the clouds; * I will be like the Most High.

15 Yet * thou shalt be brought down to hell, to the sides of the pit.

16 They that see thee shall narrowly look upon thee, and consider thee, saying, Is this the man that made the earth to tremble, that did shake kingdoms?

17 That * made the world as a wilderness, and destroyed the cities thereof, that opened not the house of his prisoners?

18 All the kings of the nations, even all of them, lie in glory, every one in his own * house.

19 But * thou art cast out of the land, like an abominable branch, and given to the raiment of those that are slain, to the company of the Gentiles: * and they shall chatter over thee, * they shall exult because of the洋洋 of the dead: * and all the earth shall drear over thy, and all the inhabitants of the earth shall go down from the height of the skies.

20 Thou shalt not be joined with them in burial, because thou hast destroyed... the rebels of the old world, who perished in the deluge, were especially intended.

V. 12—15. The Jews here resume the discourse, and address the king of Babylon, by the title of “Lucifer,” i.e., “the morning star,” He had been as the morning star, the first in dignity among the princes of the earth, but he was now fallen from heaven and utterly deposed. This language may refer to the fall of Satan and his angels, as the king of Babylon greatly resembled that arch-antipate in his character and fate. The Jews, exulting in his astonishing fall, upbraid him with his vain ambition and enmity against God. He said in his heart, that he would ascend into heaven, and exalt his throne above the stars of God; he would eclipse all earthly princes, and even val the God of heaven; no, he would fix his throne on mount Zion, where God’s worshippers used to assemble (Marg. Ref); and there receive the adoration of his subjects and vanquished foes: for he would aspire to divine honours, and ascend above the height of the clouds, and be like the Most High.” But indeed his soul was about to sink into hell, and his body to be thrown into the pit without the accustomed rites of burial. The fall of the apostate angels is not directly recorded in the Old Testament: but it is implied in the distinction the holy writers make between good and evil spirits; and is sometimes alluded to by the prophets, when they threaten destruction to proud and insolent tyrants, who, in imitation of the pride of the devil, exalt themselves against God and his truth; and are the instruments of Satan in promoting idolatry and wickedness in the world. These expressions, as they allude to the rebellion of Satan, who affected to be equal with God; so they contain an exact description of Antichrist,—as represented by St. Paul, (2 Thes. ii. 4.) (Lomth.)
V. 16—20. The subject is here diversified by another scene. The dead body of the king of Babylon is found, narrowly examined, and recognized, by some that had known him in his prosperity; and they express their surprise and contempt by the subsequent interrogations. Among their cruelties, they mention his severity to his captives, whom he kept in bondage and in prison without mercy, as a reason of the dreadful judgments executed upon him. Belshazzar performed no exploits answerable to the lofty terms here used; and we may thence infer, that the race of kings, which centred and terminated in him, is also meant; for this is common in prophecy.—Other kings had been buried according to their dignity, and lay quietly in their tombs: but he was deprived of burial, as an abominable branch from a detested stock; as the polluted remnant of those slain in battle, when not being worth preserving, it is crumbled into the hole with their dead bodies; or as a carcass, that is trampled under foot in contempt. His cruelty to his people, beyond the example of his predecessors, merited this treatment; and neither such evil doers, nor their posterity, would be exempted from infamy and misery.

V. 21—23. God himself here speaks and commands the extermination of the royal family of Babylon; that they might no more arise to possess the earth, and build cities to perpetuate their memory as they had done. For he would destroy both that family and their name, and Babylon also, from off the earth; yes, he would "swipe it with the besom of destruction." An expression incomparably emphatical: yet it has been fulfilled in the most extraordinary manner! The word rendered nephem, properly signifies grandam. Belshazzar was the grandson of Nebuchadnezzar; and after his death, it may well be supposed that the posterity of that great conqueror was extinguished. And when Cyrus had taken Babylon, the waters of the Euphrates were not properly reduced to their channel; so that they gradually changed the adjacent country into a marsh, or fen, full of pools of water, and an habitation for bitterns or other creatures which content these situations: for the import of the original word is not certainly known. There is no poem of its kind, extant in any language, in which the subject is so well laid out, and so happily conducted, with such a richness of invention, such a variety of images, persons, and distinct actions, with such rapidity and ease of transition, and in so small a compass, as in this ode of Isaiah. (Rp. Lomith.)

V. 24—27. The destruction of the Assyrian army in the land of Judah, and the consequent deliverance of the Jews from Sennacherib's oppression, were a pledge of the performance of the preceding prophecy. Some think, that the destruction of Gog and Magog, who shall "fall on the mountains of Israel," about the same time with the New Testament-Babylon, is also predicted. (Er. xxxviii. xxxix.)

V. 29—32. These verses form a distinct prophecy, which probably was delivered at another time. (Isaiah had vanquished the Philistines; 2 Chr. xxxvi. 6, 7;) but... when he died, and the Jews were afterwards greatly en-sebled during the reign of Ahaz, and left in great difficulties at his death, the whole land of Philistia, and all con-ected with it, rejoiced. But it was predicted, that Hezekiah would be more terrible to them than Uzziah had been; as if a less destructive serpent should produce a cockatrice, or a fiery flying serpent. At that time the very poorest of the Jews would be sustained in plenty and live in safety; whilst the Lord would destroy the root of the Philistines' prosperity by famine, and employ Hezekiah to slay their remnant. Instead of rejoicing, therefore, howling would be more seasonable; for the whole land would be ruined: a smoke or cloud of dust from the north would give notice of the approach of the army of Judah from the north-west to waste them; from whom none would struggle or desert, when that appointed time arrived. And if any nation should send ambassadors to make peace with the Jews, or to inquire concerning their deliverances, they might answer, that 'Jehovah himself had chosen and established Zion, as the place of his special presence and worship; in order that his people, when afflicted and distressed, might betake themselves thither for refuge; and thus putting themselves under his protection, they might be taken care of by him, though poor and destitute in themselves.'

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.
V. 1-29.

The whole plan of Providence is arranged for the good of the chosen people of God, on whom he will be a saviour: so that even revolutions in kingdoms conducde to the true interests of his church. His judgments on some ungodly men are made instrumental to the conversion of others, who join themselves to his people, and cleave to them in all circumstances; and the consolations of his service abundantly compensate their losses and sufferings. The Israel of God will certainly obtain a complete ascendency over all opposers, with rest from sorrow, and fear, and hard bondage; whilst all their oppressors will be reduced to the most abject slavery and contempt. The Lord now glorifies his patience in bearing with his rebellious creatures; but he will shortly glorify his power and justice in their punishment: and men shall behold with astonishment the sudden and tremendous ruin of oppressive rulers and cities, that are full of the gains of iniquity. There always have been men who gloried in using power, to gratify their rage, ambition, and cruelty, and in continued oppression.
But when they are run down by others more powerful and successful than themselves, their ruin excites a general rejoicing. Speedily the most mighty and terrible of the scourges of mankind will be broken; and having here resembled in disposition the inhabitants of hell, they will there be made like them in impotency and misery: and their only distinction will then be, a degree of wrath proportioned to their abused talents, their enormous crimes, and extensive mischievousness; whilst their mutual revil-ings and taunts will enhance their misery. What then will all their present pomp and sensual mirth avail them?
The vaster the ambition, and the higher the exaltation, of the wicked have been, the more tremendous will be their downfall. As our first parents ruined themselves by aspiring to be as gods; so the same propensity hath infected their posterity; and many proud worms have defied God, and claimed divine adoration: as if it were not sufficient to be exalted above all earthly potentates; but they really thought that they could ascend into heaven and be like the Most High! But the more of this inebriating poison they gorge, the greater is their resemblance to Satan, and the more their fall into hell will accord to the fall of that Lucifer, the son of the morning. For a while they weaken the nations, make the earth to tremble, shake kingdoms, and change the world into a wilderness, a slaughter-house, or a dungeon for the few whom they leave alive. But soon death weakens and removes them: and whilst their souls are in torment, perhaps great honour is rendered to their breathless remains: they lie in state, are sumptuously interred, and mouldered in a magnificent sepulchre; whilst some mercenary wretch celebrates their exploits with infamous panegyrics! But sometimes the Lord disgraces the remains of such monsters of iniquity: and the contempt shown to those who once were renowned on earth, causes such narrowly observe them to say, 'Is this the 'man, who—!' But whether honourably interred, or left as a carcass trodden under feet, such men are abominable and contemptible, and entail misery and disgrace on their posterity; for whom slaughter is prepared for the iniquity of their fathers. When God arises against the wicked, he will so crush them, that they shall rise up no more; and will sweep them from the earth 'with the 'breath of destruction;' and deserts, seas, and pools of water, in the places where once proud cities stood, form affecting monuments of the power of his wrath, and the truth of his word.

V. 24-32.

According to the thoughts and purposes of God, every event must take place; for who can annul his purpose, or turn back his out-stretched arm? Woe then be to those against whom 'he swears in his wrath that they shall 'not enter into his rest.' When one instrument of his vengeance is removed, he soon raises up another more terrible; and he easily destroys the root, as well as tops off the branches, of his enemies. They have therefore no cause to rejoice, but rather to weep and howl: for the appointed time of their complete destruction speedily and certainly approacheth. But the Lord hath founded Zion, for a refuge to poor sinners, who flee from the wrath to come, and trust in his mercy through Jesus Christ. None that humbly apply for admission into this city of our God, are excluded. There they are protected and provided for, even the poorest and vilest of them; and he hath not only ensured their salvation by his promise, but confirmed it with an oath; that they might enjoy 'strong consolation,' who 'have fled for refuge to lay hold on this hope set before
THE burden of Moab. Because in the night Ar of Moab is laid waste, and brought to silence; because in the night Kir of Moab is laid waste, and brought to silence:

2 He is gone up to Bajith, and to Dibon, the high places, to weep: `Moab shall howl over Nebo, and over Medeba; on all their heads shall be baldness, and every beard cut off.

3 In their streets they shall gird themselves with sackcloth; on the tops of their houses, and in their streets, every one shall howl, weeping abundantly.

4 And Heshbon shall cry, and Elealeh: their voice shall be heard even unto Jahaz; therefore the armed soldiers of Moab shall cry out; his voice shall be grievous unto him.

5 My heart shall cry out for Moab; my soul for Kir: because it is a spread abroad to the divers countries of the Moabites, and the heifers of Eglaim shall fall.

6 For the waters of Nisim shall be dry: the grass is withereth away, the grass faileth, there is no green thing.

7 Therefore the abundance they have gotten and that which they have laid up shall be carried away to the brooks of the willows.

8 For the cry is gone round about Moab; the howling thereunto Eglaim, and the howling thereunto Beer-elim.

9 For the waters of Dimon shall be full of blood: for I will bring upon Dimon, lions upon him that escapeth of Moab, and upon the remnant of the land.

NOTES.

CHAP. XV. V. 1. (Notes, Jer. xlviii.) This and the following chapter, taken together, make one entire prophecy. The time of the delivery, and consequently the completion of it, which was to be in three years from that time, is uncertain, the former not being marked in the prophecy itself, nor the latter recorded in history. But the most probable account is, that it was delivered in the first year of Hezekiah, and accomplished in his fourth year, when Shalmaneser invaded the kingdom of Israel. (Bp. Louth.) "Surely Ar was destroyed, and brought to silence in a night," (Old. Trans.) That is, suddenly, in a very short time, and not after a long siege, and with every circumstance and aggravation of terror.

V. 2. Either the king of Moab is here introduced, or the people are spoken of collectively, in the person of their progenitor, who is represented as mourning over his ruined prosperity. Bajith may mean an Idol temple at Dibon, to which the people resorted with their lamentations and devotions, in their terror and distress. Indeed we know little of the places here mentioned, except the names. (Marg. Ref.) The speedy performance of the prediction would confirm the credit of Isaiah as a prophet, and tend to excite the attention of his contemporaries to his prophecies concerning them.

V. 4. Armed, &c. Even the soldiers shall lose their courage, and cry as women! (Louth.) Even the men of war, which should by their courage cheer up others, shall be in despair of success and lament; and their life shall be but a grief and burden to them; for they are in a sad expectation of death. (Bp. Hall.) V. 5. If we understand the prophet, as speaking in his own person, it implies that the calamities of Moab are so great, as to extort pity even from an enemy. (Louth.) (Marg. Ref.) Heifer. That is, the Moabites would imitate in their howlings the deep howling of a full grown heifer, which is observed to be more noisy than the bullock.

V. 7. Brook, &c. Or, the valley of the Arabians. Either the Moabites would intrust their property with the Arabians, or it would be plundered and carried away by them. Some, however, think that Babylon is meant, by the valley of willows.

V. 9. Dimon is derived from the Hebrew word which signifies blood. I will bring more and more calamities; and they that flee to escape the present evils, shall fall into worse disasters; as if a man that fled from his enemy should meet with a lion to devour him. (Louth.) (Marg. Ref.) Perhaps lions and other beasts of prey infested the desolate countries, and devoured the remnant of the inhabitants.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Whilst wicked men are asleep or drunken in the night, their enemies are watchful and active; and death often breaks their golden dreams, or silences their tumultuous revels. But let us be sober and vigilant, lest that day should come upon us unawares. The ungodly, when in danger or trouble, may well be alarmed and inconstable; for they CHAP. XVI.

Moab is counselled to submit to the kings of Judah, and show kindness to the Lord's distressed people, 1—5. Further predictions of the miseries of Moab for his pride and wickedness, 6—14.

Send ye the lamb to the ruler of the land, from the wilderness unto the mount of the daughter of Zion. 2 For it shall be, that as a wandering bird cast out of the nest, so the daughters of Moab shall be at the fords of Arnon. 3 Take counsel, execute judgment; make thy shadow as the night in the midst of the noon-day; hide the outcasts, bewray not him that wandereth.

4 Let mine outcasts dwell with thee, Moab; be thou a covert to them from the face of the spoiler: for the spoiler is at an end, the spoiler ceaseth, the oppressors are consumed out of the land.

5 And in mercy shall the throne be established, and he shall sit upon it in truth, in the tabernacle of David, judging, and seeking judgment, and hastening righteousness.

6 We have heard the pride of the Moab; he is very proud: even of his haughtiness, and his pride, and his wrath: but his lies shall not be so.

NOTES.

CHAP. XVI. V. 1, 2. The Moabites had paid tribute to the kings of David's race, out of their flocks, but when Judah was reduced they revolted; and the prophet seems here to call on them to send again the tributary lamb to Hezekiah, from one end of the land to the other, and to the daughter of Zion, the place of God's worship; as a token of their submission to him, and their desire of deprecating his indignation, by furnishing sacrifices at his Temple. For otherwise the invaders would desolate the land, and drive the daughters of Moab before them, destitute and defenceless, to pass the fords of Arnon, like birds that wander from their nest.

V. 3—5. The Moabites were concerned to take counsel how to escape the judgments that impended over them: and if they would be advised, let them begin by reforming, and doing justice and protecting the oppressed. Many of the Jews had been driven from their habitations, during the disturbances of the preceding years; let Moab shelter them as the people of God, and conceal them from their spoilers. For though Israel had been grievously wasted, they would not always continue in that distressed condition. Their ravagers were about to be cut off: God would mercifully establish Hezekiah on the throne, and in the tabernacle of David, as one that would tread in the steps of that prince; maintaining the truth and worship of God impartially executing justice, seeking diligently to find out the right in every cause, and making haste to reform the nation, and promote righteousness: and then they would again prosper. Bishop Lowth applies the counsel of the prophet to the Jews, and supposes that he exhorted them to entertain the Moabish outcasts. But though this doubtless was a proper conduct; yet it is more likely that the exhortations were addressed to the same persons against whom the predictions were uttered. Some think that the counsel given to Moab was ironical. In the days of Ahaz, and especially after the victory of Pekah over Judah, the Jews, in great distress, perhaps sought shelter among the Moabites: but the Moabites are supposed to have repelled and betrayed them. Had they at that time acted according to the reasonable advice here given, they might have escaped the ruin that now awaited them: but by their cruelty to the people of God, they provoked his vengeance; Pekah, Remaliah, and other oppressors, had been cut off; Ahaz, the wicked king of Judah, was dead; and Judah no longer needed the assistance of Moab, for Hezekiah's throne was established in mercy, &c. He would govern his people with an equal mixture of justice and mercy; and therein prefigure the Messiah, in whom all the promises made to the house of David shall be finally accomplished. “The tabernacle of David,” both here, and in Amos (ix. 11.), “the only two places in which the phrase is used, mystically denotes the church.” (Lowth.)

V. 6. The excessive pride of the Moabites, and their inordinate against God's people, were generally reported, and well known; but their deceitful designs would not prosper. Some explain the last clause thus: “His wrath is greater than his strength.” His power is not equal to his vain boasts.
7 Therefore shall Moab howl for Moab, every one shall howl: for the foundations of Kir-hareseth shall be mourned; surely they are stricken.

8 For the fields of Heshbon languish, and the vine of Sibmah: for the lords of the heathen have broken down the principal plants thereof, they are come even unto Jazer, they wandered through the wilderness; her branches were stretched out, they are gone over the sea.

9 Therefore I will bewail with the weeping of Jazer, the vine of Sibmah: I will water thee with my tears, O Heshbon, and Elealeh; for the bellowing for thy summer-fruits, and for thy harvest, is fallen.

10 And gladness is taken away, and joy out of the plentiful field; and in the vineyards there shall be no singing, neither shall there be shouting: the treader shall tread out no wine in their presses;

V. 8-11. The vines of Sibmah seem to have been had in great repute, and to have been thence propagated in very distant regions: but the lords, or conquerors, of the nations would soon destroy them, with all other productions of the land: and then their shouting and singing for the vintage or harvest would utterly cease. The prospect of these calamities greatly affected the Prophet; he could not refrain from weeping, and his inward commotion was such, that he compared it to the tremendous sound of a harp.

12 The king and nobles of Moab, in terror and distress, would weary themselves in sacrificing upon one high place after another, and would then resort to their sanctuary, the chief temple of their god Chemosh, but this would avail nothing to preservation.

13, 14. The Lord had made the approaching ruin of Moab known to his prophets, some time before; but now he fixed the precise date of it; namely, after three exact years, such as hirelings serve. (Notes, Jer. xlviii.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The most awful denunciations of divine wrath are connected with the discovery of a way of escape, to those who take warning. Submission and tribute are due to such as God hath made rulers of the land; and it is a valuable privilege to obey those who govern according to his word. From one end of the earth to the other, there is no salvation for sinners, but by submitting to the Son of David, and devoting themselves and their substance to him; and they who refuse this, will be reduced to extreme misery, without regard to rank or sex. It behoves all therefore to take counsel: but every device will be in vain; it is a cross they rechoose their sins, and learn to do justice, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with God. These are the genuine fruits of faith which worketh by love; and all who love Christ, will be kind to his poor people, and use their influence to provide for and protect them in distress. Extortioners and oppressors may for a time be permitted to afflict them, but they will witness the destruction of every enemy, and such as will not countenance them in their suffering, shall not share their felicity. The Redeemer's throne is established in mercy and in righteousness; his subjects, who share his mercy, rely on his truth, and obey his just commands, are a holy nation; and those rulers who copy his example, may expect to prosper. The pride and enmity of men's hearts commonly render them deaf to the most pressing exhortations. And many, especially the prosperous, the wise, and the learned of the world, are very proud, and apt to be exasperated by the counsel of Christ, and to prefer to their own lying unprofitable devices. If the Lord has taught us to value what such men despise, let us be thankful; and let us not envy or covet their transient enjoyments for we may foresee a season when they will terminate in weeping and howling. If that mind be in us which was in Christ, our bowls of compassion will be moved for them: we shall weep in the prospect of these miseries that are coming upon our most stubborn enemies; and we shall persist in our endeavours to do good, "if peradventure God may give them repentance." But numbers, when driven by distress to their devotions, weary themselves to no purpose: whilst every one goes to his sanctuary to pray; but neglects the mercy-seat, and the great High Priest of Israel, or only pays an hypocritical regard to them. When the Lord hath spoken, and his appointed time arrives; all the glory and prosperity, and multitude of the wicked shall be contemned and perish: for "Who can stay his hand, or say unto him, What dost thou?"
racl, 1—11. The destruction of Senacharib's army foretold, 12—14.

The burden of Damascus. Behold, Damascus is taken away from being a city, and it shall be a ruinous heap. 2 The cities of Aror are foreseen: they shall be for flocks, which shall lie down, and none shall make them afraid. 3 The fortress also shall cease from Ephraim, and the kingdom from Damascus, and the remnant of the children of Israel: they shall be as the glory of the children of Israel, saith the Lord of hosts. 4 And in that day shall it come to pass, that the glory of Jacob shall be made thin, and the fatness of his flesh shall wax lean. 5 And it shall be as when the harvestman gathereth the corn, and reapeth the ears with his arm; and it shall be as he that gathereth ears in the valley of Rephaim. 6 Yet gleaning grapes shall be left in it, as the shaking of an olive tree, two or three berries in the top of the uppermost branch.

NOTES.

CHAP. XVII. V. 1. This prophecy must have been delivered at the time when the kings of Syria and Israel confederated against Judah. It is called "the burden of Damascus," as foretelling the desolations of that city by the Assyrians; but it was at least equally directed against Israel. Damascus was afterwards invaded and destroyed; and, after many changes, continues to this day. It was for a season "taken away from being a city, and made a ruinous heap," but it was not "swpt with the besom of destruction." V. 2. Aror. Aror was a city on the river Arnon, formerly belonging to Moab: but it might at this time be in the hands of the Syrians. It is, however, much more probable, that there was a district of Syria of the same name, in which several cities were placed. Such coincidences in names are common in all parts of the Orient. V. 3. As Syria and Israel had combined in attempting the ruin of Judah and of the house of David, they should be visited with similar judgments. Samaria, the fortress of Israel, would be destroyed, and the kingdom cease from Damascus; nor would the remnant of Syria, which survived the taking of Damascus, any more be established as a kingdom; but, losing all their glory, they would decline like the Israelites, as mingled among other nations, and subject to foreign princes. Accordingly, Syria was first subject to the Assyrians, and successively to the Chaldeans, the Persians, the Macedonians, the Romans and others, even to this day, when it belongs to the Ottoman empire; so exactly has this prophecy been accomplished! Vol. III.—No. 18.

most bough, four or five in the utmost fruitful branches thereof, saith the Lord of God of Israel. 7 At that day shall a man look to his Maker, and his eyes shall have respect to the Holy One of Israel. 8 And he shall not look to the altars, the work of his hands, neither shall he respect that which his fingers have made, either the groves or the images. 9 In that day shall his strong cities be as a forsaken bough, and an uppermost branch, which they left because of the children of Israel: and there shall be desolation. 10 Because thou hast forgotten the God of thy salvation, and hast not been mindful of the Rock of thy strength, therefore shalt thou plant pleasant plants, and shalt set it with strange slips. 11 In that day shall the thyne make thy seed to flourish: but the harvest shall be an heap in the day of grief, and of desperate sorrow.

V. 4—5. The glory and prosperity of Israel would more and more decline, like a man in a consumption; and their enemies would wage them, as the husbandman reaps the harvest, and as the gleaner after him collects the scattered ears. Yet a few individuals would be preserved; as a few grapes or olive berries are, when the rest are gathered, being situated out of the gatherer's reach. And these would renounce idolatry, and return to the worship and service of the Lord, looking to him for help, and having respect to his commandments, as the Holy One of Israel: so shall the altars erected to their idols, the work of their own hands, after the ravages of Tiglath-pileser, several of the Israelites joined themselves to the Jews in celebrating the passover, and in destroying idolatry. (2 Chr. xxx. xxxi.) Afterwards many were incorporated with the Jews; (especially after the Babylonish captivity,) and finally renounced their gross idolatry.

V. 9. This obscure verse probably means, that the cities of Israel would be as entirely desolated, as those of the Canaanites were in the conquest of the land by Joshua. The Septuagint render it, "Thy cities shall be forsaken; as when the Hivites and Amorites forsook, (that is, their cities), because of the children of Israel; and they shall be desert." Either this is a mere paraphrase and exposition, or the text from which it was translated differed from that of the present Hebrew Bible.

V. 10. 11. The pleasant plants and shoots from a foreign soil are allegorical expressions for strange and idolatrous worship; for vicious and abominable practices connected with it; for reliance on human aid, and a-12 Woe to the multitude of many people, which make a noise like the rushing of nations; and to the rushing of the sea, and to the commotion of the waves of the mighty waters!

13 The nations shall rush like the rushing of many waters: but God shall rebuke them, and they shall flee far off, and shall be chased as the chaff of the mountains before the whirlwind, and ascribe to a rolling thing before the whirlwind.

14 And behold, at evening-tide trouble; and before the morning he is not. This is of the portion of them that spoil us, and of the lot of them that rob.

Christ entered into with the neighbouring nations. (LXX.-) The Israelites bestowed many pains about such plants; but when they expected an harvest from them, it proved a ruinous heap; and instead of rejoicing in possessing the prosperity they were thus seeking, they felt intense grief and desperate sorrow as their reward.

V. 12-14. These verses form a detached subject, and describe with great energy the march and ruin of Sennacherib’s army. A wo is denounced against his numerous forces collected from many nations. Their noise, and blasphemous rage, and impetuous force, resembled the mighty waters of the sea; but when He, (that is, the God of Israel) should rebuke them, they would flee like the chaff or thistledown before the whirlwind. (Masp.) In the evening Jerusalem would be in consternation and distress, because of the powerful invaders: but before morning almost his whole army would be cut off, and he would flee with the rest, as fast as possible.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

"Though hand join in hand, the wicked shall not be unpunished;" and if the people of God associate with his avowed enemies, they must expect to share in their heavy judgments. His powerful wrath speedily desolates flourishing cities, and wastes all human glory, as a man’s vigour, comeliness, and cheerfulness, decline by an incurable disease: and when sinners are ripe for destruction, the Lord will employ some of his instruments to reap and glean them, till he make a full end of them. But though no impenitent sinner can escape the wrath of God; yet in the worst state of the visible Church, or any part of it, he hath always reserved to himself a few humble believers; these he will place out of the reach of the instruments of his vengeance. Public calamities likewise are often the means of bringing men to renounce their idols and iniquities, to look to the Lord for help, and to have respect to his promises and precepts. But if professed Israelites forget the God of their salvation, and are not mindful of the Rock of their Strength; they will seek help, peace, and prosperity in vain, from every quarter; their labour will be lost, and their harvest an heap, in the day of grief and desperate sorrow. But happy are those who remember God as their Saviour, and rely on his power and grace: their enemies may rage, and rise upon them with dreadful force and fury; but God shall rebuke them, and they shall flee away as a rolling thing before the whirlwind. The trouble and their enemies’ prosperity, will be equally transient; their joy will endure for ever, like the destruction of those who hate and spoil them.

NOTES.

CHAP. XVIII. V. 1. This is allowed to be one of the most obscure prophecies in scripture to us; though doubtless well understood by those for whom it was intended. The land shadowing with wings, marks out Egypt as connected with Ethiopia; and it may be so called on account of the ridges of mountains which shadowed it on each side; or rather, because the Egyptians pretended to shadow the Jews under their protection, as with wings, against the incursions of the Assyrians. Some, however, on apparently good ground, suppose the original word to denote a musical instrument of a remarkable form, which was peculiar to Egypt, except as others might have derived the use of it from that country. The land was beyond, or on each side “the rivers of Cush.” The river Nile flowing through Ethiopia and Egypt, is divided into seven streams, or rivers, before it reaches the sea. The word translated “wo,” may be merely a call on them to attend to the message of Jehovah.

V. 2. The land intended was remarkable for sending ambassadors, or messengers, upon the seas and rivers, in vessels of bulrushes, or formed of the papyrus; and this was peculiar to the Egyptians, who made vessels of that plant for this purpose. To this country the messengers were ordered to be sent: that is, the message of the Lord ought assiduously to be conveyed into every part of it; for to them it appertained. The nation is described as “scattered and peeled,” or, as it may be rendered, “stretched out and smoothed;” and this may refer to the length of the CHAPTER XIX.

All ye inhabitants of the world, and dwellers on the earth, see ye, when he lifteth up an ensign on the mountains, and when he bloweth a trumpet, hear ye.

For so the Lord said unto me, I will take my rest, and I will consider in my dwelling-place like a clear heat upon herbs, and like a cloud of dew in the heat of harvest.

For afore the harvest, when the bud is perfect, and the sour grape is ripening in the flower, he shall both cut off the sprigs with pruning-hooks, and take away and cut down the branches.

They shall be left together unto the fowls of the mountains, and to the beasts of the earth: and the fowls shall summer upon them, and all the beasts of the earth shall winter upon them.

In that time shall the present be brought unto the Lord of hosts, of a people scattered and peeled, and from a people terrible from their beginning hitherto; a nation meted out and trodden under foot, whose land the rivers have spoiled, to the place of the name of the Lord of hosts, the mount Zion.

CHAP. XIX.

Predictions of terrible judgments, which God was about to inflict on Egypt, 17. That the Egyptians would worship land of Egypt from north to south, being a vale on each side of the Nile about seven hundred miles long; Ethiopia extends to a considerable length on the south of it; and the whole was smoothed, or made level, by the constant inundations of the Nile. It was also a nation terrible from the beginning hitherto, which is characteristic of Egypt: a nation meted out, and trodden down; alluding to the frequent demeasurement of their lands, which was rendered necessary by the inundations of the river, by which their land-marks were destroyed; and to the method of throwing the seed upon their mud, when the water subsided, and treading it in, by turning their cattle into the fields. Whose land the rivers have spoiled, or nourished, as some think the original word may mean; and indeed it is so anomalous, that we can only conjecture from what root it is derived.

V. 3. We suppose that this prophecy was published before, but related to that time, when Sennacherib had routed the army of Tirhakah, king of Ethiopia, and was preparing to besiege Jerusalem; intending afterwards to prosecute his advantages against Egypt and Ethiopia. But the Lord seems to have called on them and all the inhabitants of the earth, to attend; and when they saw this proud people lift up his ensign on the mountains, and blow the trumpet for the assault of Jerusalem, to expect God's extraordinary interposition in behalf of his people.

V. 4-8. God had assured his prophet, that he would rest securely in Zion, continuing the assault of the Assyrians: and he would show his regard to his dwelling place and worshippers, like a clear heat after rain, or like a cloud of dew in the heat of harvest; that is, as their protection and consolation in their extreme distress. For whilst the enemy deemed his schemes maturing, as the harvest or vintage; and before the perfect bud and opening flower were ripened into the sour grape, before the critical season of executing his design was arrived: the Lord would cut off all the branches of his vineyard; and his army, and the carcasses of his numerous host would be plentiful provision for the wild beasts and birds of prey, for a very long time.

V. 7. The nation before described, hearing of this surprising catastrophe, would send oblations to be offered at the temple of the Lord of hosts upon mount Zion, giving glory to his name, and presents to Hezekiah. This and similar passages were doubtless intimations, at least, of the conversion of the nations to the God of Israel. (2 Chr. xxxii. 24.) The Egyptians, for the present, would be delivered from the Assyrians, by the power of the God of the Jews; and not the Jews by their assistance: and the doom of that proud tyrant was intended as a warning to them, to renounce their idols and iniquities.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We should endeavour to call the attention of mankind to the works of God for his people: for wherever they live or however they are distinguished, whether they have been prosperous and terrible, or obscure and trampled upon, they are greatly concerned in them: and the warnings of his providence, as well as the oracles of his word, are intended for their conviction. When the arrogant opposers of the truth and the servants of Christ lift up the standard and blow the trumpet of war, and openly assault the church, with full confidence of success; let the inhabitants of the earth attend, and wait for the event. The Lord, undisputed by their puffy efforts, will still delight in Zion, and protect his dwelling place; nor shall the policy or power of hell prevail against his church, as built on this Rock, that Jesus is the Christ, the Son of the living God. He will protect and comfort his people in all their persecutions and tribulations, and render their souls most flourishing in holiness, when their afflictions most abound. But he will blast the ripening schemes of his presumptuous foes, when they deem their success certain; and their future contempt and misery will be proportioned to their present haughtiness and arrogance. Thus shall the nations of the earth be convinced that Jehovah is God, and Israel his people, and shall concur in presenting their spiritual sacrifices to his glory. And happy are they, who take warning by his judgments on others, and make haste to join themselves to him and to his people.
the Lord, and share the blessings of his salvation, 19—25.

THE burden of Egypt. Behold, the Lord rideth upon a swift cloud, and shall come into Egypt; and the idols of Egypt shall be moved at his presence, and the heart of Egypt shall melt in the midst of it.

2 And he will set the Egyptians against the Egyptians; and they shall fight every one against his brother, and every one against his neighbour; city against city, and kingdom against kingdom.

3 And the spirit of Egypt shall fail in the midst thereof; and I will destroy the counsel thereof; and they shall seek to the idols, and to the charmers, and to them that have familiar spirits, and to the wizards.

4 And the Egyptians will I give over into the hand of a cruel lord; and a fierce king shall rule over them, saith the Lord, the Lord of hosts.

5 And the waters shall fail from the river, and the river shall be wasted and dried up.

6 And they shall turn the rivers far away; and the brooks of defence shall be emptied and dried up, the reeds and flags shall wither.

7 The paper-reeds by the brooks, by the mouth of the brooks, and every thing sown by the brooks shall wither; and they shall be driven away, and be no more.

8 The fishesh shall also mourn, and all they that cast angles into the brooks shall lament, and they that spread nets upon the waters shall languish.

9 Moreover, they that work in fine flax, and they that weave net-work, shall be confounded.

10 And they shall be broken in the midst thereof, and all that make sluices and ponds for fish.

11 Surely the princes of Zoan are fools, the counsel of the wise counsellors of Pharaoh is become brutish; how ye say unto Pharaoh, I am the son of the wise, the son of ancient kings?

12 Where are they? where are thy wise men? and let them tell thee now, who successively tyrannized over Egypt. But some consider Cambyses, the son of Cyrus, and Belus, the cruel Lord and fierce king, particularly intended, who are both branded in history for cruel tyrants and monsters of men. (Rip. Newton.) The old translation renders it, "a mighty king." Indeed the word admits of that meaning; and then Alexander, the powerful deliverer of Egypt from the oppression of the Persian kings, under whom and his successors, the Egyptians were greatly favoured, may be pointed out; till I will shut up the Egyptians in the hands of the severe lords, I will shut up the Egyptians in the hands of the severe lords, and a mighty king shall rule over them.

5—10. The inundations of the Nile failing, the communication of the interior parts of the country with other nations by the sea, might be cut off; the remaining waters would become putrid; the brooks, which were the fountains of the fields, or of the cities, would be dried up; even the papyrus, and other aquatic plants, which were a considerable article in the commerce of the Egyptians, would wither; the corn sown by the brooks, as well as the productions of the higher grounds, would be destroyed: and their gainful fisheries and manufactures would be ruined for want of materials, or purchasers. (v. 15.) This may be understood literally of a dreadful famine; or figuratively, of the decay of their prosperity, and the drying up of all the sources of their wealth, through their civil distractions. The Septuagint render the last clause, "All they who make barley-wine shall be grievous in soul." The Egyptians had few vines; and the use of fermented liquor from barley, or other grain, was very general among them. and let them know what the Lord of hosts hath purposed upon Egypt.

13 The princes of Zoon are become fools, the princes of Noph are deceived; they have also seduced Egypt, even they that are the stay of the tribes thereof.

14 The Lord hath mingled a‡ perverse spirit in the midst thereof: and they have caused Egypt to err in every work thereof, as a drunken man staggereth in his vomit.

15 Neither shall there be any work for Egypt, which the head or tail, branch or rush, may do.

16 In that day shall Egypt be as like unto women: and it shall be afraid and fear because of the shaking of the land of the Lord of hosts, which he shaketh over it.

17 And the land of Judah shall be a terror unto Egypt, every one that maketh mention thereof shall be afraid in himself, because of the counsel of the Lord of hosts, which he hath determined against it.

18 ¶ In that day shall five cities in the land of Egypt speake the language of Canaan, and swear to the Lord of hosts; one shall be called, The city of destruction.
19 In that day shall there be an altar to the Lord, in the midst of the land of Egypt, and a pillar at the border thereof to the Lord.

20 And it shall be for a sign and for a witness unto the Lord of hosts in the land of Egypt: for they shall cry unto the Lord, because of the oppressors, and he shall send them a Saviour, and a great one, and he shall deliver them.

21 And the Lord shall be known in Egypt, and the Egyptians shall know the Lord in that day, and shall do sacrifice and oblation; yea, they shall vow a vow unto the Lord, and perform it.

22 And the Lord shall smite Egypt: he shall smite and heal it: and he shall return even to the Lord, and he shall be intreated of him, and shall be healed.

23 In that day shall there be a highway out of Egypt to Assyria, and the Assyrian shall come into Egypt, and the Egyptian into Assyria, and the Egyptians shall serve with the Assyrians.

24 In that day shall Israel be third with Egypt and with Assyria, even a blessing in the midst of the land:

25 Whom the Lord of hosts shall bless, saying, Blessed be Egypt my people, and Assyria the work of my hands, and Israel mine inheritance.

V. 19-22. It is a judicious observation of Calvin, that the prophets, when they speak of the Gentiles coming into the church, express their being the true God, by such acts of devotion as were most in use in their own time. (Lomth.) (Note, Ex. xii. 1.) These verses, therefore, seem typically to describe the effects which followed when the Egyptians were converted to Christianity; and not merely the proselytizing of some of them previously to the worship of the true God. The altar may denote the covenant of Christ, and access to God through him. (Heb. xii. 13.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

When ungodly men escape danger, they are apt to think themselves secure; but "evil pursueth sinners," and will speedily overtake them: and when the Lord cometh to execute judgment, every false confidence will fail, and every sinner's heart will melt within him. To punish a guilty nation, the inhabitants need only be left to themselves, and they will soon be set against one another, every one against his brother, or his neighbour: city against city, province against province. Thus the righteous Lord weakens and destroys the counsel of offending nations: and their foolish expedients for deliverance involve them in still deeper guilt and misery. When collective bodies are thus divided among themselves, and either struggling for power, or aiming to preserve or recover their liberties, without regard to God, he often gives them into the hands of some foreign power, which rules over them as a cruel lord, and as a fierce king: so that the true friends of civil liberty should begin by seeking the Lord's favour, and liberty from the bondage of sin. He can soon cut off those sources of national wealth and prosperity, which are looked upon as most certain: and whilst kings and nobles are forming and executing their infatuated projects, to aggrandize themselves; the poor are often deprived of employment and subsistence. Indeed the comfort of the lower orders in society is seldom, if ever, regarded by ambitious men: yet, where this is neglected, the counsel of the wisest is brutish, and tends to deceive and seduce, whilst it flatters those who depend upon it: and they become the ruin, who should be the stay of the tribes of the land: and all the wisdom, in which men glory, who know not God and regard not his holy will, will at length appear to be the most destructive folly. But he leaves CHAP. XX.

The Prophet goes uncovered and barefoot, as a sign of the captivity of Egypt and Ethiopia by the Assyrians, 1—4. He predicts the terror of those who had expected help from them, 5, 6.

In the year that * Taran came unto * Ashod, (when Sargon the king of Assyria sent him,) and fought against * Ashod, c and took it;

2 At the same time spake the Lord by * Isaiah the son of Amoz, saying, Go, and loose * the sackcloth from off thy loins, and put off thy shoe from thy foot. And he did so, walking * naked and barefoot.

3 And the Lord said, Like as my servant Isaiah hath walked naked and barefoot * three years, for a sign and wonder upon Egypt and upon Ethiopia;

4 So shall the king of Assyria lead away the † Egyptians prisoners, and the Ethiopians captives, young and old, naked and barefoot, even * with their buttocks uncovered, to the shame of Egypt.

5 And they shall be afraid and ashamed of Ethiopia their expectation, and of Egypt * their glory.

rulers to be actuated by a perverse spirit, and to bring public affairs to the utmost confusion and contempt, in order to punish the lower orders also for their transgressions; and every view of this subject proves, that "righteousness exalteth a nation, but that sin is the reproach of any people;" and that invasions, civil wars, and the decay of trade, and the want of employment for the poor, are calls from God to national repentance and reformation. When he shaketh his hand, and showeth tokens of indignation, the most courageous become as women; and he rendereth sinners afraid of them, whom before they despised or oppressed. The counsel of the Lord of hosts, which he hath determined against all the workers of iniquity, will make them a terror to themselves and to each other; and every surrounding object a terror to them. But his severest temporal judgments combine with designs of mercy and revelations in mighty kingdoms make way for the success of his Gospel. Already numbers have learned to "speak the language of Canaan, and to swear to the Lord of hosts;" to erect altars to his name, and to offer him spiritual sacrifices, in those places which were the most addicted to idolatry: and every event of this kind is a proof of the divine original of that blessed book, in which so many prophecies to this effect are contained. The Lord hath indeed sent a Saviour and a great one, to deliver those who were oppressed by Satan; all that cry unto him for that recompense, are made partakers of it; and ere long he will open a way for his Gospel into the remotest nations of the earth. Then hostile nations shall amicably accord in serving him; shall know, trust, and worship him as the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ; and he will acknowledge them as his people, the work of his hands, and his chosen inheritance: and it shall then be known, that Israel, which hath been so despised and hated on earth, was indeed blessed of God, and a blessing in the midst of every land.

But let us also observe, what a change the saving grace of God effects upon men's dispositions, conversation, and behaviour. Believing his truth and attending on his ordinances, they learn to speak a new language, sincere, pure, pious, heavenly, and instructive; they become just, harmless, kind and peaceable; and they live in harmony and do good, and aim to be a blessing to their neighbours, and even to their enemies. Finally, let the broken hearted and afflicted, whom the Lord hath wounded and thus taught to return to him and call upon him, take courage; for he will be entreated, and heal their souls, and turn their sorrowing supplications into joyful praises.

NOTES.

CHAP. XX. V. 1. Tartan was one of Sennacherib's captains, who seems to be here called Sargon. Tartan was sent by him to form the siege of Ashdod, a very strong city in Philistia, which afterwards held out against a king of Egypt for twenty-nine years. (Notes, 2 Kings xviii. 17, xix. 9.) The inhabitants of Ashdod expected help from the Egyptians and Ethiopians; and many of the Jews did the same: but the prophet was ordered to predict Sennacherib's victory over those confederated nations. Some think that Ashdod was at this time in the hands of Hezekiah.

V. 2—4. As multitudes of prisoners, taken by the Assyrians, and reserved for sale as slaves, would be driven before them barefoot and uncovered, save with a short garment, that scarcely sufficed to hide their nakedness: the prophet was ordered to walk abroad in the same manner. As a mourner for the sins and miseries of his people, and as mortified to the world, he was used, it was seen, to wear sackcloth constantly; but on this occasion, he was to lay that aside, and to appear exactly as the captives were exposed. This would subject him to ridicule and reproach, and be uneasy both to his body and mind: yet he promptly obeyed. It is not probable that he continued to appear in this manner for three years: but rather it was a sign of what would take place after three years; and the wonder excited by seeing the prophet walking publicly in this manner, would render his prediction the more noticed. If he once walked out thus, it might answer this end: but it is most likely he continued to do so for three days. Sennacherib is computed by some to have been absent about three years, from the time that he first laid Hezekiah under contributions, till he came back to besiege Jerusalem. During this time he gained many advantages over the Egyptians; and just before his return, he obtained a complete victory over Tirhakah, king of Ethiopia, when it is probable this prediction was literally fulfilled.

V. 5. The Ashdodites, who had hitherto held out against the Assyrians, expecting help from the Ethiopi-
And the inhabitant of this Isle shall say in that day, Behold, such is our expectation, whither we flee for help to be delivered from the king of Assyria: and how shall we escape?

CHAP. XXI.

The burden of the desert of the sea: As whirlwinds in the south pass through; so it cometh from the desert, from a terrible land.

and glorying in their alliance with Egypt; would, on this event, despair of help, and surrender to the besiegers.

V. 6. This isle. Or country. The Jews would also despair of help from that quarter, and be ready to give up all for lost: but God would deliver them by his own power, and not by heathen allies.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We should by no means habituate ourselves to indulgence, sloth, or delicacy; for we know not how soon we may be called to endure hardship, reproach, and contempt for the Lord’s sake. We ought not indeed to do any thing of our own minds, which may appear absurd or ridiculous; but the world will often deem us foolish or mad, when we are singular in obedience to God; and we must at all times refuse conformity to its vain fashions, and be mortified to its pleasures. The attire and demeanour of ministers should be such, as may best give emphasis to their message, and call men’s attention to them as the servants of God; and in order to be a sign and an example to others, we must be such men as the world wonders at. True faith will produce implicit obedience: and the minister cannot reasonably expect that his hearers should regard his doctrine, unless he demonstrate his own belief of it by his practice. The Lord will effectually support his servants under the most painful and mortifying effects of their obedience: and what we are called to suffer for his sake, is commonly very trivial or transient, compared with what numbers groan under from year to year, through the cruelty of conquerors, or lordly oppressors, who hold them in bondage. All men’s expectations from, and glorying in created helpers, will end in terror and shame: they who flee for succour to such deceitful refuges, will often be reduced to despair: and if God’s people have recourse to these carnal confidences, they will infallibly tend to discourage their hope and comfort; but they, who trust in the Lord, shall never be confounded.

2 A grievous vision is declared unto me; * the treacherous dealer dealeth treacherously, and the spoiler spoileth. Go up, O Elam: besiege, O Media; all the sighing thereof have I made to cease.

3 Therefore are my loins filled with pain:1 pangs have taken hold upon me, as the pangs of a woman that travaileth: I was bowed down at the hearing of it; I was dismayed at the seeing of it.

4 My heart panted, fearfulness affrighted me: the night of my pleasure hath he turned into fear unto me.

5 Prepare the table, watch in the watch-tower, eat, drink; arise, ye princes, and anoint the shield.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXI. V. 1. Babylon and the adjacent country, is here called “the desert of the sea,” because it was shortly to become a desert, and a marsh full of pools of water; as if converted into a lake, or inland sea; (v. 23;) or because it stood in a large plain which was often overflowed by the Euphrates and the Tigris. The whirlwinds in the South of Arabia often come with destructive fury: this ruin would irreversibly come upon Babylon from Media and Persia, whose armies were very terrible; and through the deserts, which intervened between those countries and Babylon. * The prophet renews his threatenings against Babylon, as afterwards, (xlvii.) to convince the Jews, by the repetition, of the certainty of the event: and thereby to support them under their captivity when it should come. *(Lomh.)

V. 2. The grievous calamities, coming on Babylon, were revealed in vision to the prophet. “There is made known to me an oppressor of the oppressor, and spoiler of the spoiler.” — It is now come to the king of Babylon’s turn to feel that oppression and revenge himself, which he had before brought on others. *(Lomh.) * For the Lord had called Elam or Persia, and Media, to go up and besiege Babylon, and so to terminate the sighing of the captive Jews and others who had been oppressed by Babylon.

V. 3—5. About a hundred years before the time, the prophet here seems to personate Belshazzar, on the night when Babylon was taken, and he was slain: *(Notes, Dan. v.) * We are introduced, as it were, into the banqueting room of that prince, and witness his astonishment: he declares to us his dismay, when he saw the hand that wrote, and the writing, on the wall; and how he was bowed down when Daniel read and explained it to him; how his heart panted, and fearfulness affrighted him; and the night, in which he had set apart for pleasure, was thus turned into terror unto him. For whilst he had given orders to prepare the feast and to set the watch; and whilst he and his princes ate and drank; Cyrus had commanded his captains, to burnish their arms, and prepare for the assault: or Belshazzar’s princes were called to arms from their riotous feasting.
6 For thus hath the Lord said unto me, Go, set a watchman, let him declare what he seeth.

7 And he saw a chariot with a couple of horsemen, a chariot of asses, and a chariot of camels; and he hearkened diligently with much heed:

8 And he cried, A lion: My lord, I stand continually upon the watch-tower in the day-time, and in the midst of my ward I watch all night:

9 And, behold, here cometh a chariot of men, with a couple of horsemen. And he answered and said, Babylon is fallen, is fallen; and all the graven images of her gods he hath broken unto the ground.

10 O my throning, and the horn of my floor; that which I have heard of the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, have I declared unto you.

11 The burden of Dummah. He calleth to me out of Seir, Watchman, what of the night? watchman, what of the night?

12 The watchman said, The morning cometh, and also the night: if ye will inquire, inquire ye; return, come.

13 The burden upon Arabia. In the forest of Arabia shall ye lodge, O ye travelling companies of Dedan.

14 The inhabitants of the land of Tema brought water to him that was thirsty; they prevented with their bread him that fled.

15 For they fled from the swords, from the drawn sword, and from the bent bow, and from the grievousness of war.

16 For thus hath the Lord said unto me, Within a year, according to the years of an hireling, and all the glory of Kedar shall fail:

17 And the residue of the number of archers, the mighty men of the children of Kedar, shall be diminished: for the Lord God of Israel hath spoken it.

V. 6-9. The prophet here speaks in his own person. The Lord commanded him to set a watchman, who was to make observations, and give notice of them: and he informed the prophet, that he saw a chariot, with a couple of horsemen! If this may mean the chariots of war and the united cavalry of the Medes and Persians; and the chariot of asses, and that of camels, may mean the carriages loaded with their baggage, drawn by these animals.

It, however, meant the march of Cyrus's army, furnished with every thing requisite for forming the siege of Babylon. Having hearkened diligently with much heed, he further cried, a lion: that is, the destroyers of Babylon march forward with great boldness and fury: or, according to the margin, he cried as a lion, that is, very vehemently.

'The particle as is frequently understood.' (Lowth.)

Though the watchman had been used to watch day and night, without being drowsy or deceived, he had never before observed such things: for the chariots and horsemen arrived at once, and instantaneously it was proclaimed that Babylon, with all her graven images, was destroyed, and thrown to the ground. (Notes. Rev. xviii.) All this seems to have passed before the prophet's mind in vision; and was descriptive of his own office and duty, as a prophet and watchman to the house of Israel. Nor does this rapid succession of events accord with the warning of the king of Babylon's watchmen, nor indeed to anything which could really exist: for it comprises the transactions of many years; nay, it is probable that the ruin of the New Testament Babylon also was intended to be predicted.

V. 10. 'O my people, who, for your punishment shall make subject to the Babyloniens, to try and to prove you, and to separate the chaff, (or the straw,) from the corn, the bad from the good among you; hear this for your consolation: your slavery and oppression will have an end in the destruction of your oppressors. (By. Lowth.)

V. 11, 12. This is a distinct, brief, obscure, and almost enigmatical prophecy. Dummah is Idumea, or the land of the Edomites. Some one of that nation, in vision, called to the prophet, as the watchman who was awake, when others slept, to inquire, what time of the night it was? or what were the news of the night? This may either mean an earnest inquiry of the Edomites concerning the fate of their own country: or perhaps an insulting inquiry, concerning the duration of the afflictions of the Jews, in the Babylonish captivity. (Ps. cxxxvii. 7.) To this the watchman answered, 'The morning cometh, and also the night': this may mean, that the deliverance of the Jews would come in its appointed time; yet the day of prosperity would be succeeded by a dark night of adversity: or that, after a short continuance of approaching prosperity to the Edomites, a dreadful ruin would come on them, of which the prophet saw no end. But 'if ye will inquire indeed, and ask questions in earnest; inquire of God first, ask his mercy, and afterward come again; and ye shall have a more favourable answer.' (Lowth.)

V. 13-17. This is a short prophecy concerning calamities, which were coming upon the Arameans. The travelling companies of the Dedanites, a tribe of the Arameans, would shelter themselves in the forests from their hostile invaders: and let other tribes, who were not molested, meet them with provisions, that they might not perish; (it may be translated as a command,) for indeed they fled from the most imminent danger of death. These desolations were to take place in an exact year from the publishing of this prophecy: and probably it was accomplished by Sennacherib when he first marched his army into Judah. (Marg. Ref.)
PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The history of mankind is little more than a detail of the treachery, rapine, and cruelty, which they have committed, and of the miseries which they have endured: and an insight into futurity would be attended with many grievous discoveries, respecting ourselves, our families, and those with whom we should sympathize. But “sufficient for the day is the evil thereof.”—What anguish and horror must seize the enemies of God, when he shall arise to execute vengeance upon them; and when all they see, hear, remember, or expect, shall tend to increase their terror? This some perceive to be their wretched case, at the approach of death: and all the ungodly will know it in another world. But words can never express, nor can imagination reach to an adequate conception of their dismay and despair. And what numbers will there delfully exclaim, “The night of my pleasure hath turned into fear unto me!” Whilst sinners are saying, let us eat, drink, and be merry; and let others watch for our souls if they will; perhaps the Lord is about to say, “Thou fool, this night is thy soul required of thee.” He hath set ministers, as watchmen, to declare what they see: let every one, therefore, to whom this office is committed, hearken diligently, with much heed to his instructions, and continue day and night upon his watch-tower; and give sinners warning of their approaching danger; that at least he may deliver his own soul. (Ezek. xxxii. 1—9.) And let him declare the whole counsel of God, as far as he can learn it, whether it relate to mercies or judgments. And let all who love their souls attend to the warnings of such ministers, as may truly say, “that which “I have heard of the Lord, have I declared unto you.” For all the enemies of God will as surely be destroyed, as Babylon and her graven images are fallen: but every trial shall tend to purify true believers, that they may be gathered as wheat into the garner. There are many who make curious inquiries of the watchmen; they would willingly have many nice questions resolved, and abstract prophecies interpreted; and they want to know exactly where we are in the series of predicted events: but they do not inquire into the state of their own souls: or about the way of salvation, the path of duty, or how to grow in grace. These are mere Edomith inquirers: and though we should be ready, as far as we can, to answer any proper question; yet we ought to warn such men to look to themselves, and to repent, and return to God by faith and prayer, before they amuse themselves with such discussions. Whilst they forget their time of life, and are growing old in their sins; it little concerns them to inquire what time of the night it is with the church: for though the morning of her deliverance cometh, yet the midnight of their final misery approacheth with equal speed. Calamities must go round, in this sinful world: and it behoves us to relieve the distresses of our brethren, knowing that our turn may come shortly. But happy are they only, whose riches and glory are placed out of the reach of hostile invaders; all other prosperity will speedily pass away, for the Lord God of Israel hath spoken it.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXII. V. 1. Jerusalem, as seated in the midst of surrounding hills, and favoured with the revelation of God’s truth and will, is here called “The valley of vision.” The prophet saw, in it, all the inhabitants of that city gone up to the flat roofs of their houses, on a sudden alarm, and to make observations: and he inquired what was the matter. Their houses in general were without windows towards the street.

V. 2. 3. Jerusalem had been full of the hurry and tumult of business and pleasure: but now their stir and tumult was of another nature. Being invested by their invaders, numbers died, not by the sword of war, but by famine and pestilence, or terror: their rulers agreed to flee together; but they were overtaken and bound as prisoners by the archers: and even they that had fled from afar to take shelter within the walls of the city, were brought together with the rest of the inhabitants. (Note, 2 Kings xxv. 4—7.)

V. 4. He showeth what is the duty of the godly, and especially of the ministers, when God’s plagues hang over the church.

V. 5. Of crying, &c. One crying to another to flee to the adjacent mountains, to escape destruction.
V. 6, 7. Elam and Kir, or the Persians and Medes, might serve in Sennacherib’s army as subjects to Assyria. Yet this part of the prophecy seems to accord best to the demolition of Jerusalem by Nebuchadnezzar. For it does not appear, that any destructive pestilence or famine raged in the city, when Sennacherib invaded the land; or that the rulers fled, or were taken and bound; or that the walls were broken down. By “chariots of men,” we may understand those in which men rode and fought; for the word translated chariots, is used for carriages employed in other uses.

V. 8–14. The preceding verses, though they chiefly relate to subsequent events, might have also some reference to previous calamities; but these evidently predict Sennacherib’s invasion, and the behaviour of the Jews on that occasion. He surprised many of their fortified cities, which had been the covering or protection of Judah; and he threatened the siege of Jerusalem. This put Hezekiah and his princes upon examining the state of their armours and fortifications; and upon making various preparations for defending the city. (Notes, 2 Chr. xxxix. 4.) But numbers of the people had no proper regard to the Lord, who had constituted Jerusalem to be the place of his own worship, and had long before fashioned every thing respecting it as subservient to that end. Notwithstanding the pious labours of Hezekiah and others, most of the people were destitute of faith and piety: and instead of uniting in fasting and prayer, when every token of God’s sorrow and humiliation, to which the Lord evidently called them, they were generally indulging themselves in riot and feasting, and that from the most atheistical principles; as if the apparently near approach of death urged them to seize the present fleeting moment for sensual gratification. (Marg. Ref.) The Lord was so provoked by this profane contempt of his uplifted sanction, that he determined to accept of no expiatory sacrifices for it; but to punish it by the death of the criminals: though for his own name’s sake he would, for that time, spare the city. ‘There were two pools, in or near Jerusalem, supplied by springs: the upper pool, or the old pool, supplied by the spring Gihon, towards the higher part of the city, near Zion:—and the lower pool, probably supplied by Siloam.’ (Bp. Lowth.) ‘The ditch was a channel to carry the waters from the upper to the lower pool.’ (Lowth.)

V. 15. This prophecy concerning Sheba seems to have been delivered about the same time with the preceding; and perhaps he was one of the ringleaders in the unseasonable and profane riot. Some think that he had been preferred by Ahaz to be treasurer and steward of the household; and that he outwardly complied with Hezekiah’s reformation, to keep his peace, though a proud and backed man. (Marg. Ref.) If this were the Sheba, of whom we read in the history of Sennacherib’s invasion, the prophecy had not its full accomplishment till some years after. Some think he was deprived of his office as treasurer, but still continued scribe or secretary. (xxxvi. 3.) But more probably another person of the same name is there meant.

V. 16. It is thought that Sheba was a foreigner, that, instead of being prime minister to Hezekiah, he had not the right to associate with the Jews at all, and that his connexion and inflations led him to favour their enemies. He, however, deemed himself established in authority till death; and had prepared himself a magnificent sepulchre in a lofty situation, according to the custom of monarchs; and durable, as if given out of a rock, to perpetuate his memory and grandeur after his decease. The latter part of the verse may be more properly rendered, ‘O thou that buildest thy sepulchre on high, &c.’ away with a mighty captivity, and will surely cover thee.

18 He will surely violently turn and toss thee, like a ball into a large country: there shall thou die, and there the chariots of thy glory shall be the shame of thy lord's house.

19 And I will drive thee from thy station, and from thy state shall he pull thee down.

20 And it shall come to pass in that day, that I will call my servant Eliaim, the son of Hilkiah:

21 And I will clothe him with thy robe, and strengthen him with thy girdle, and he shall commit thy government into his hand: and he shall be a father to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and to the house of Judah.

V. 17—19. notwithstanding Sheba's ostentatious confidence, his ruin was at hand. He would be degraded from his dignity; violently forced into captivity; covered with infamy, as the condemned criminal's face was covered for execution; driven from place to place, in a strange country like a ball, when driven with great force in an open field, where no wall or fence obstructs its course: and at length he would die in misery and disgrace: whilst the remains of his magnificence would shameful that family, which had preferred so ostentatious and vile a man. Doubtless this sentence was speedily and exactly executed, though we know not in what manner.

V. 20—25. God appointed Eliaim, his servant, to succeed Sheba: he knew that Hezekiah would be obedient to his word; and this probably occasioned Sheba's disgrace. Eliaim was to have the robe and girdle, which were worn by those in office; and he would fill his high station with the prudence and affection of a father to the Jews. The key also was a token of authority in those days, as the seals are now: being an emblem, that much was intrusted to a man's care, and at his disposal; and that he could admit to, or exclude from, manifold privileges or advantages. Probably either a real key, or the figure of one, was worn upon the shoulder: and as Christ applies this to himself, we may look upon Eliaim as a type of him. (Marg. Ref.) As nails are also fixed in the walls, on which to hang such things as might be wanted: thus Eliaim would be established in authority, and act so honourably, that his advancement would be like raising his father's house to a glorious throne; and all the reputation and interest of every branch of the family would be secure in his hands: for he would be able and willing to use the care of them, whether more or less considerable: whilst such as had depended on wicked Sheba, would be ruined by his fall. (Marg. Ref.) 'Keys in old times were long, and made like a hook, and then laid on the shoulder, and worn as the badge of an office.' (Lomth.) 'They, (the Asiatics,) fix the nails in the brick-work, when they are building. They are large nails, with square heads like dice, well made; their ends being bent so as to make them cram iron.' (Chardin.) These nails were of necessary and common use, and of so small importance, in all their apartments. (Bp. Lomth.) (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—14.

No burden will be more heavy than that which falls on the valley of vision, and weighs down those who abuse the means of grace. They that have been most secure and prosperous, and those cities that have been most full of the tumultuous hurry of business, pleasure, and ambitious contests, are liable above all others to be surprised with unexpected calamities, and to be left without redress under them. The Lord hath so many ways of destroying his enemies, that it is as vain to attempt fleeing from, as standing, the power of his wrath. The servants of God, who clearly foresee, and awfully warn sinners of, their approaching miseries, are most affected by the prospect. They sometimes weep bitterly, and refuse to be comforted, because of the trouble, perplexity, and ruin, which are coming on their beloved relatives and countrymen: yet, whilst their hearts thus melt with tender compassion, they are counted cruel and morose; because they insist upon it, that God will execute this threatened vengeance on all the ungodly. But all the horrors of a city taken by storm, and given up to indiscriminate rapes, murders, and plunder, are scarcely a shadow of the terrors of "the day of wrath," and revelation of the righteous judgment of God. Yet the invasion of a fertile country, when the most cattle are full of hostile armies, and the gates of cities beset with merciless besiegers, must be impressively distressing to the inhabitants. Often the approach of danger discovers that weakness which before was unnoticed: yes, and detects that hypocrisy which had not been suspected; and then the further men examine, the more they discover their exposed and perilous situation. But too generally they CHAPTER XXIII.

CHAPTER XXIII.

A prediction of the ruin of Tyre, and the consternation occasioned by it, 1—14; of the restoration of Tyre's prosperity, and the conversion of the Tyrians, 15—18.

look only to externals, and rest in a superficial amendment; without duly respecting the Creator of the world and the Head of the church, who fashioned both long ago, for his own glory, and the good of his people: nor can the most pious rulers or teachers cure men of inidelity, impiety, or hypocrisie; except as the Lord worketh by them. It is no new thing even in Israel for men not to know the signs of the times; and when the Lord calls to repentance, fasting, and prayer, nay, when kings, as well as ministers, obey the call and warn others to do so; numbers continue to indulge their lusts, and add to their sins, and increase the fierce wrath of God against them; as if "let us eat, and drink, for to-morrow we die," were indeed a sentiment worthy of a rational creature! And whether this inidelity work by presumption, or desperation, it produces the same contempt and defiance of God; and is a lamentable token, that a man is given up to judicial hardness of heart, and will perish in his impiency.

V. 15—25.

The impiety of the lower orders in society is often an upspring of their superiors. Too often they, who ought not to find admission into the visible church, (having nothing there,) are at the head of her affairs: and though no human wisdom and piety can always prevent this: yet generally the ostentation, ambition, and avarice of such men, are a scandal to those who employ them, and even to their families. But what a vanity is all earthly grandeur, which death will so soon terminate! And what will it avail, whether we be laid in a magnificent monument, or covered with a sod? Surely the forfeitures of death are the vaineest of all vanities! Yet they who most value them, are often deprived of them: and no stability can ensure the continuance of prosperity. When the Lord is displeased, he soon drives men with violence from their places, and hurries them from one vexation to another, till they die in disgrace and misery. But it is happy for nations, when the removal of wicked men makes way for the true servants of God into authority. They will act as his stewards, and as the deputies of the Son of David; and in the insignia of their dignities, they will read their duties, and thence learn righteousness, faithfulness, and goodness, and will study to be fathers to the people, especially to the remnant of true Christians. When extensive authority is lodged in such hands, it will be used for the benefit of mankind: and such rulers are indeed a credit to their families, and will promote their interests in subserviency to the public good: but all dependence placed on the ungodly, will soon be thrown down with them into perdition. Indeed no expectations can properly be formed of advantage even from pious men, except as the instruments of God for our good. But the Father hath lodged all authority in heaven and earth in the hands of his beloved Son, who for our sakes became also his righteous servant. To him he hath intrusted all the concerns of his own glory and the honour of his law, to all eternity: and if we submit to his authority, we may confidently hang all our hopes and interests, and those of our families, upon him: and in every thing rely on his wisdom, power, truth, and love. Such are great concerns to us; though compared with the other, they are trivial: but great or small, they are perfectly safe in his hands. He hath opened our way of access into the presence of our reconciled Father; he will set before us an open door, which no man can shut, both whilst we live and when we die, and bring both soul and body to his eternal glory. But they, who neglect so great salvation, will find, that when he shutteth, none can open: and his hands will shut them out of heaven, and shut them up in hell for ever.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXIII. V. 1. It is generally agreed, that this prophecy foretells the destruction of Tyre by Nebuchadnezzar. (Marg. Ref.) The ships and mariners, by whom the commerce between Africa and Europe in general, or Carthage and Spain in particular, with Tyre, was carried on, are called on to mourn and howl at her ruin. - Tyre was one of the most famous marts in the world in those times; and the destruction of it must be a great loss to all merchants, and adventurers. - Every house or warehouse in Tyre is shut up. (Lowth.) - The Tyrians, when they saw no other means of escaping, fled in their ships, and took refuge in Carthage, and in the islands of the Egean and Ionian seas: from whence the news would soon spread, and reach Tarshish, or Tar-tessus. (Bp. Lowth.) Thus the ruin of Tyre was revealed to them, (the inhabitants of Tarshish,) from the isles of Chittim, or the countries bordering on the Mediterranean.

V. 2. Silence is a mark of grief and consternation, and that entire failure of commerce, which a close siege would effect, silenced the noise of the busy multitudes, which before was heard in this merchant-city. There were two distinct cities, called old and new Tyre, the former a sea-port on the continent, the latter on an island at a small distance, and dependent upon the other. The Zidonians built Tyre, which is therefore called the daughter of Zion; (Marg. Ref.) and it was replenished with all its riches by the trade which it originally derived from the mother-city: but it soon acquired a vast pre-eminence above it. Nebuchadnezzar took old Tyre after a siege of thirteen years; but the inhabitants had previously removed their most
And by great waters the seed of Sihor, the harvest of the river, is her revenue; and she is a mart of nations.

4 Be thou ashamed, O Zion; for the sea hath spoken, even the strength of the sea, saying, I travailed not, nor brought forth children, neither do I nourish up young men, nor bring up virgins.

5 As at the report concerning Egypt, so shall they be sorely pained at the report of Tyre.

6 Pass ye over to Tarshish; howl, ye inhabitants of the isle.

7 Is this your joyous city, whose antiquity is of ancient days? her own feet shall carry her afar off to sojourn.

8 Who hath taken this counsel against Tyre, the crowning city, valuable effects either to a new Tyre on the island, or to places beyond the sea. At a time new Tyre became a very flourishing city; but it was besieged and taken by Alexander the Great.

V. 3. Sihor means the river Nile. (Merg. Ref.) The Tyrians traded largely with the Egyptians for the corn, which their lands, watered by the Nile, yielded them in vast abundance: and thus the harvest of the river, springing from the seed sow when its great waters subsided, yielded an immense revenue to Tyre. That river also opened a communication to the Tyrians into the interior parts of Egypt; and the rich commodities there purchased tended greatly to enrich that merchant-city.

V. 4. The Zidonians, when their city was taken by the king of Aracron, betook themselves to their ships, and landed and built Tyre. (Justin.) Zidon therefore gloried in being the founder of Tyre, that strength of the sea, and, as it were, the sole proprietor of it: but she might justly be ashamed; for her daughter complained that she was depopulated, and instead of sending colonies to other cities, she had now no children brought forth, or growing up to replenish herself. New Tyre, indeed, continued for many ages a flourishing city: but from the time that Alexandria in Egypt was built, her trade began to decrease, and at length Tyre was utterly desolated: and there are at this day no remains of that renowned city, except a few huts for fishermen. Let us not forget these are standing miracles to demonstrate the divine original of the sacred Scriptures.

V. 5. As the nations were alarmed at the desolations of Egypt, by the power of God, in the days of Moses: so the report of the ruin of Tyre would fill them with equal consternation. Or, When the tidings shall reach Egypt, they shall be seized with anguish at the report of Tyre, because the Egyptians exported their corn to Tyre, and made a gainful trade of it. This sense the Septuagint follows. (Lowth.)

V. 6, 7. The Tyrians gloried in the great antiquity of their city, and indeed it seems to have been a flourishing city in the time of Joshua. (Josh. xix. 20.) Through its extraordinary wealth, it was replete with every thing conducive to festive indulgence; and the inhabitants were very jovial and luxurious. But now they would leave home with howlings and anguish of spirit; and numbers of them would be forced to seek a habitation in distant countries, either as captives or refugees. The Septuagint, instead of Tarshish, reads Carthage, which was a colony from Tyre. — The prophet speaks of Tyre, as a delicate woman not used to hardships, who yet should be forced to travel on tedious journeys into foreign countries. (Lowth.)

V. 8, 9. The Tyrians seem to have boasted of being able to dispose of crowns and kingdoms as they pleased; and therefore the Lord had counselled to tarnish the pride of all human glory, by ruining that renowned and haughty city, whose merchants were princes, whose traffickers were the honourable of the earth. (Note, ii. 11.)

V. 10. The inhabitants of Tyre, when the city should be close pressed by the Chaldeans, would steal away, silently and speedily, to leave the country, with no longer any strength or defence; as a river, quickly, yet almost imperceptibly, glides through a plain. — Tyre may be called the daughter of Tarshish; because her grandeur was greatly the effect of her trade with that city; and because of the close connexion which subsisted between the two cities, and the dependence of the Tyrians on Tarshish, after Tyre was taken. — Pass through thy land to the daughter of Tarshish. (Old Trans.) Some think the expression relates to the ships of Tarshish, with which Tyre carried on her commerce and acquired her greatness. (14 Notes, Kings x. 22.)

V. 11. Either Nebuchadnezzar, or Alexander the Great, may here be intended; or God himself, as employing them. Each of them was a mighty conqueror, as it were, stretched his hand over the sea, and shook the kingdoms; and each of them besieged and took Tyre. But they had their commission from God, to destroy the strongholds of that merchant-city: Or, "of Canaan." (Merg. Ref.) Tyre was the principal stronghold in the land of Canaan; the word, however, signifies a merchant.
CHAPTER XXIII.

B. C. 718.

to Chittim; there also shalt thou have no rest.
13 Behold the land of the Chaldeans; this people was not, till the Assyrian founded it, for them that dwell in the wilderness: they set up the towers thereof, they raised up the palaces thereof; no; and he brought it to ruin.
14 Howl, ye ships of Tarshish: for your strength is laid waste.
15 And it shall come to pass in that day, that Tyre shall be forgotten seventy years, according to the days of one king; after the end of seventy years shall Tyre sing as an harlot.
16 Take an harp; go about the city, thou harlot that hast been forgotten; make sweet melody; sing many songs that thou mayest be remembered.
17 And it shall come to pass after the end of seventy years, that the Lord will visit Tyre, and she shall turn her hire, and shall commit fornication with all the kingdoms of the world, upon the face of the earth.

18 And her merchandise and her hire shall be holiness to the Lord: it shall not be treasured nor laid up; for her merchandise shall be for them that dwell before the Lord, to eat sufficient, and for durable clothing.

V. 12. Zidon seems to have been one of the oldest cities in the world; (Marg. Ref.) it is mentioned by Homer, but Tyre is not; Tyre was called "the daughter of Zidon;" as built by the Zidonians. The prophet calls Tyre an oppressed virgin, because she was conquered, and as it were ravished, by her enemies. Where as those cities, which never came into a conqueror's hands, are called virgins. (Lowe.) The Assyrians besieged Tyre, but could not take it; and Nebuchadnezzar with his nine, and the inhabitants, no longer able to resist, passed over in great numbers into the countries bordering on the Mediterranean: but the colonies of Tyrians in Greece, Sicily, Spain, or Africa, had not rest. Carthage was a colony from Tyre, and her unsuccessful and ruinous contest with the Romans is well known; and the others were greatly disquieted and at length reduced by the same power.

V. 13. The Chaldeans, Chasdin, are supposed to have taken their name from Cheazed, the son of Nachor— the brother of Abraham. (Gen. xxii. 22.) Moses calls Ur in Mesopotamia, Ur of the Chaldees. Jeremiah calls them an ancient people. Yet this people was not known. They were of no account, they were not reckoned among the great and potent nations of the world; a barbarous people, without laws or settled habitations; and addicted to rapine. (Job i. 17.) till Assur, some powerful king of Assyria, gathered them together, and settled them in Babylon and the neighbouring country. (Bp. Lowth.) The Assyrians were at that time, (when this prophecy was delivered,) the great monarchs of the east; the Chaldeans were their slaves and subjects; and therefore it is the more extraordinary that the prophet should foresee the conquests of the Chaldeans. (Bp. Newton.) This obscure people were appointed by the Lord to destroy, renounced and haughty Tyre.

V. 14. (Note 1. Ez. xxvi. 15—18.)
15—18. From the first year of Nebuchadnezzar, who in some respects was the founder of the Babylonian monarchy, to the ruin of it by Cyrus, were exactly seventy years. And for a term equal to the days of this one king or kingdom, Tyre continued in obscurity and neglect. Learned men have shown, that it was just seventy years from the taking of Tyre by Nebuchadnezzar, to the time when Darius Hystaspis, by granting some immunities to that city, made way for the recovery of its trade and prosperity. But as covetousness is idolatry, and idolatry is spiritual whoredom; the arts of this commercial city to re-establish her trade were represented by those which harlots then used to draw the attention of their lovers. For seventy years Tyre had been as a neglected harlot; but she again employed her former arts to regain her trade; and was rendered prosperous by divine providence. But in consequence she corrupted all kingdoms with her pride, avarice, and luxury. In due time the Lord intended to plant the Gospel there: then numbers of the Tyrians, being converted to Christ, would use that wealth, which had been acquired by commerce, and about which men generally commit much wickedness, to maintain the ministry of the gospel, to feed the poor, and to spread the Christian religion: being able, through their influence, to provide sufficiently for these expenses, which poorer churches could scarcely defray. And then the wealth of Tyre, which had been as the hire of an harlot, would become holiness to the Lord. (Marg. Ref.)—We read of those about Tyre and Zidon attending upon Christ in their religion.

A church was early formed in Tyre, which became a kind of mother-church to several others that were connected with it; so that Christianity was established at Tyre, till the Saracens took the city; and from that time it gradually decayed, till it was at length almost entirely desolated. (Notes, Ez. xxvi. xxvii. xxviii.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Every advantage may become an occasion of mischief to us, through the depravity of our hearts: and therefore commerce, which might be, and sometimes has been, subservient to the noblest purposes, too commonly proves a source of luxury, pride, ostentation, and impiety; and is connected with avarice, fraud, oppression, and cruelty. As those cities, which have successively tyrannized over the nations of the earth, have successively been made monuments of the divine vengeance: so have those likewise, that have been the mart of the world. It behooves the inhabitants of the great commercial capital of Britain to be CHAP. XXIV.

Terrible judgments denounced against the whole land of Israel, 1—12. A remnant of Israel would escape, and join the Gentiles in glorifying God, 13—15.

His vengeance would overtake the rest, even the mightiest of them, 16—21. A day of visitation in mercy, and a glorious event to the church, 22, 23.

BEHOLD, the Lord shall make the earth empty, and maketh it waste, and scattereth abroad the inhabitants thereof.

And it shall be, as with the people, so with the priest; as with the servant, so with his master; as with the maid, so with her mistress; as with the buyer, so with the seller; as with the lender, so with the borrower; as with the taker of usury, so with the giver of usury to him.

The land shall be utterly emptied, and utterly spoiled; for the Lord hath spoken this word.

The earth mourneth and fadeth away, the world languisheth and fadeth away, the haughty people of the earth do languish.

BEHOLD, the Lord shall make the earth empty, and maketh it waste, and scattereth abroad the inhabitants thereof.

And it shall be, as with the people, so with the priest; as with the servant, so with his master; as with the maid, so with her mistress; as with the buyer, so with the seller; as with the lender, so with the borrower; as with the taker of usury, so with the giver of usury to him.

The land shall be utterly emptied, and utterly spoiled; for the Lord hath spoken this word.

The earth mourneth and fadeth away, the world languisheth and fadeth away, the haughty people of the earth do languish.

The Lord also is defiled under the inhabitants thereof; because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant.

Therefore hath the curse devoured the earth, and they that dwell therein are desolate: therefore the inhabitants of the earth are burned, and few men left.

The new wine mourneth, the vine languisheth, all the merry hearted do sigh.

The vine of Sodom, the fruit thereof is bitter, the cluster thereof is rotten, and all the tender boughs thereof are withered, in the streets of the cities, and in all the plain, do all the Industry thereof.

The Lord is broken up; and they that were made whole are broken up: for I have broken the staff of your bread, the vine thereof is withered.

The earth mourneth and fadeth away, the world languisheth and fadeth away, the haughty people of the earth do languish.

A day of visitation in mercy, and a glorious event to the church, 22, 23.

Still for a short space, and to contemplate the fate of Tyre, Like that ancient centre of commerce, this city and nation are replenished by the trade of the whole earth; claim the sovereignty of the ocean, and receive revenues from its distant seas and rivers, not less abundant than the harvest of our fertile plains: and London is as least as joyous a city, as ever Tyre was, though it does not boast of so great an antiquity. But Tyre is now lost, and there is no house nor entering in: silence and solitude have erected their empire where this busy merchant-city stood; and her inhabitants are all either extinct or removed to other lands! Yet when this prediction was delivered, probably its wealthy inhabitants could not have believed it possible that such a change should ensue. This report may well cause our wealthy but ungodly citizens, (of whom there are not a few,) to be sorely pained and alarmed: her merchants were, and ours are, princes, and the honour of the earth. But they gloried and trusted in, and abused, their prosperity: and the Lord took his counsel against them on purpose "to stain the pride of all glory, and to "bring into contempt all the honourable of the earth," that they who had forgotten him should feel his superiority and noveness; that the vanity of all earthly prosperity might be manifested; and to show how soon infamy must over whelm all those that do not seek the honour which cometh from God. He is able to raise up enemies against us also from the most obscure nations, and to bring them from the remotest corners of the earth: and at his commandment some savage conqueror may arise to execute his righteous purposes; nor can any distant country give rest to those of whom God hath said, there is no rest for them. The ac-

The Lord also is defiled under the inhabitants thereof; because they have transgressed the laws, changed the ordinance, broken the everlasting covenant.

Therefore hath the curse devoured the earth, and they that dwell therein are desolate: therefore the inhabitants of the earth are burned, and few men left.

The new wine mourneth, the vine languisheth, all the merry hearted do sigh.

The vine of Sodom, the fruit thereof is bitter, the cluster thereof is rotten, and all the tender boughs thereof are withered, in the streets of the cities, and in all the plain, do all the Industry thereof.
they shall sing for the majesty of the Lord, they shall cry aloud from the sea.

15 Wherefore  bless ye the LORD in the fire, even the name of the LORD of Israel.

16 From the uttermost part of the earth have we heard songs, even to the righteous.  But I said, If my leaness, my leanness, were unto me; the treacherous dealers have dealt treacherously; yea, the treacherous dealers have dealt very treacherously.

for ages, by rejecting the promised Messiah, through whom it had been rained: and thus they were deprived of all their covenant privileges. Then the curse of God desoured and desolated this land; his wrath, like fire, burned up the inhabitants, till very few in comparison were left of that devoted nation. Then their abused plenty and sensu-mith ceased; nay, the temple music, and sacred stonomy, and solemn feasts, were put an end to; or rather were turned into lamentations, howlings, and bitterness of soul. The city, having become a scene of confusion, by the intestine discords of its inhabitants, and having experienced all the horrors of famine and pestilence in the extremes, was broken down by the Romans, and the Jews were excluded from all access to it. In vain did they then cry out for some cordial to support them under their extreme distress: all joy was darkened, and the mirth of the land was gone. The city was left desolate, the gate was smitten with destruction.

V. 13—15.  The great distresses, brought upon Israel and Judah, drove the people away, and dispersed them all over the neighbouring country. They fled to Egypt, Asia Minor, to the islands, and the coasts of Greece.
They were greatly instrumental in propagating the knowledge of the true God among these heathen nations, and preparing them for the reception of Christianity. (Bp. Lownh.)

The word, rendered the sea, is sometimes translated, the west; because the Mediterranean sea was the western border of Canaan. (Hos. xi. 10.)—The chief accomplishment of this prophecy seems to have been after the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans. At that season there was a small company, like the gleanings of the vine or the olive, which had embraced Christianity: and wherever they were dispersed among the nations and in the isles of the sea, they lifted up their voice in songs of praise, whilst they beheld the majesty of God displayed in accomplishing these predictions; and mingled thanksgivings with their sorrows; nay, they cried out another to glory in God, in the fiery trial of persecution, and though banished to the remotest regions. (Marg. Ref.) The destruction of Jerusalem was exceedingly conducive to the establishment of the Christian church; and in this respect was the subject of joy and praise to the primitive Christians.

V. 16. This verse seems an intimation of the calling of the gentiles, as the consequence of the rejection of the Jews. Whilst the former, from the uttermost parts of the

NOTES.

CHAP. XXIV. V. 1—12. Various opinions have prevailed concerning the events predicted in this chapter, which begins a new subject that is continued to the end of the twenty-seventh chapter. Some think that it is a general denunciation of vengeance from God on sinful nations and on the whole earth: and, like many other prophetic, it is couched in such terms as may apply to many similar events, and can scarcely have its full complishment, except in the consummation of all things. But it seems more immediately to contain a series of prophecy related to the nation of Israel and to the church, which is yet fulfilling, but not accomplished. The desolation of the kingdom of Israel by the Assyrians, and that of Judah by the Chaldeans; and the ravages afterwards committed by Antiochus Epiphanes, may be adverted to; but the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, and the dispersion of the Jews into all nations, with those events connected with, and resulting from, that awful dispensation, seem principally intended; till the close of the chapter, when a transition appears to be made to other important matters.—The same original word is rendered the earth and the land: and generally means the land of Israel. When the Chaldeans and afterwards the Romans took Jerusalem, then "the LORD emptied and wasted that land, and turned it upside down, that none of its inhabitants might continue in it; and, in the latter dispensation, instead of sending them to some specified place, for a limited term of years, as before, they scattered them abroad over the face of the land, and their dispersion continued to the present day.
The distinction between priests and people was soon lost with their genealogies; and all ranks and orders of men were involved in indiscriminate ruin. Thus the land being emplained and plundered, as it were, mourneth and fadeth away, and is become at this day as barren, as it formerly was fruitful.—By the world, may be meant the whole of the Jewish commonwealth; the Mosaic dispensation and the civil establishment of Israel as a nation, which waxed old, languished, and expired, together with the destruction of all the haughty despisers of their lovely Messiah. For the land had been long polluted by the crimes, especially the profanation and hypocrisy of the people, who not only transgressed God's laws, but made them of none effect by their traditions; they not only changed his ordinances, but they expressly broke the national covenant, which had endured
Vol. III. — No. 18.
17 ¶ Fear, and the pit, and the snare, are upon thee, O inhabitant of the earth.
18 And it shall come to pass, that he who fleeth from the noise of the fear shall fall into the pit; and he that cometh up out of the midst of the pit shall be taken in the snare: for the windows from on high are open, and the foundations of the earth do shake.
19 The earth is utterly broken down, the earth is clean dissolved, the earth is moved exceedingly.

20 The earth shall reel to and fro like a drunkard, and shall be removed like a cottage; and the transgression thereof shall be heavy upon it; and it shall fall and not arise again.

ISAIAH.

earth, were ascribing glory to the righteous Lord: the prophet, personating the Jewish nation, lamented his lassitude: that is, the small number of believers found in Israel, the corrupted state of the church, and the miseries that had come upon the nation; whilst the Jews were cruelly abused by their treacherous and violent enemies, according to their own hypocrisy and enormous wickedness.

V. 17-20. In taking wild beasts the hunters used to terrify them, that in their fright they might run into their pits, or be taken in their snares. Thus terror would drive the Jews into those very places in which destruction was prepared for them, and every thing would concur in preventing their escape. For the flood-gates of divine vengeance being opened from above, the foundations of the earth would shake, as if the end of the world were come.

16 God's wrath and vengeance should be over and under them, so that they should not any more escape than at Noah's flood. (Marg. Ref.) There were many great earthquakes about the time of the siege of Jerusalem: and Christ predicted the destruction of that city in terms very similar, and which may also be interpreted of the consumption of all things. Indeed the transgression of that land, especially in crucifying the Lord of glory, was heavy upon it; and thus it fell, and hath never risen again to this day as it did after the Babylonish captivity. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 21, 22. Here a transition seems to be made from the ruin of the Jewish nation for opposing the Gospel, to that of the anti-Christian powers, which will introduce a general prevalence of true religion; and such transitions are common in the prophets. But the subversion of the idolatrous Roman empire, (after it had executed God's judgments on Jerusalem,) to make way for the firmer establishment of Christianity in the primitive ages, may also be intended, as a shadow of the other more decisive events. However, all the hosts of the high ones and the kings of the earth that oppose the Gospel, will be gathered as prisoners into a dungeon, deprived of power to do further mischief, and at last produced to take their trial, and receive their sentence. Some commentators, by "the host of the 'high ones," understand the devil and his angels. (King) used to confine the chief commanders of their enemies, whom they took prisoners, and reserve them to some extraordinary day of triumph, and then bring them out to public punishment. "—I cannot find any explication so agreeable to the natural sense of the words, as that of a late learned writer on the revelation, who explains it of the kings of the earth who made war with Christ and his saints, at Armageddon: and being there discomfited, lay languishing under the sentence of condemnation, till after the battle of Gog and Magog, when they were, with Satan their leader, punished with everlasting destruction. (Lomth.) (Notes, Ez. xxxviii. xxxix. Rev. xvi. xix. 11—21. xx.)

V. 23. When this victory hath been won, the Millennium will begin: the Lord will set up his kingdom in its fullest glory on earth; and its splendour shall eclipse and put to shame not only the borrowed light of the moon, but that of the sun also; that is, all the majesty of the mightiest kingdoms, as well as that of the subordinate ones. He will then reign as Lord of hosts, upon his mercy-seat, and among his ancient people, or the elders or ministers of his church, in unrivalled and unclouded glory and majesty.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—12.

They, whose treasures and felicity are laid up on earth, will soon be reduced to indigence and misery: for the Lord will make the whole of it waste and empty; nay, he will turn it upside down, and shake all its inhabitants out of it. Even in great national convulsions, the superior orders are often first exposed to pillage and ruin: and in the great day of God, the ungodly priest, or prince, or wealthy man, will have more to answer for and will receive deeper condemnation than his inferiors; and this will be his only distinction. But the Lord hath spoken the word, and the earth, which has been defiled by man's sin, must wax old and vanish away; and all the proud and haughty inhabitants of it must perish. All the miseries which in the very age have been experienced, are the effect of that curse, which is incurred by transgressing the law of God, and vio-
LORD, thou art my God; I will exalt thee, I will praise thy name; for thou hast done wonderful things; thy counsels of old are faithfulness and truth.

2 For thou hast made a city an heap; of a defended city a ruin: a palace of strangers to be no city; it shall never be built.

3 Therefore shall the strong people glorify thee, the city of the terrible nations shall fear thee.

O LORD, thou art my God; I will exalt thee, I will praise thy name; for thou hast done wonderful things; thy counsels of old are faithfulness and truth.

2 For thou hast made a city an heap; of a defended city a ruin: a palace of strangers to be no city; it shall never be built.

3 Therefore shall the strong people glorify thee, the city of the terrible nations shall fear thee.

V. 13-23.

There hath in every age been a remnant which have escaped the contagion of impiety and wickedness, and have been preserved from general destruction; but, alas! they have hitherto been only as a gleam. They, however, can sing God's praises and glorify his name, in the hottest fires of persecution, and in all places whither they can be driven. They see and adore the majesty of God, in those dispensations which overwhelm the wicked; and they should excite each other to abound more and more in his pleasant service. Let us bless God, that we have heard songs, ascribing glory to the Lord our Righteousness, in this isle of the seas, this uttermost part of the earth: but we have also reason to lament, that the number of true Christians among us is so small, and that our own graces and holy duties are so feeble and defective. These things should humble us, and form our chief trouble, being the causes of all our other sorrows. The difference, however, between the weakest believer and every unbeliever is essential: the former shall surely be preserved, the latter cannot possibly escape the perdition of ungodly men, when the windows of heaven shall be opened to pour down vengeance, and the foundations of the earth shall shake, and it shall sink under the weight of man's transgressions, to rise no more. Happy are they who take warning by the sentences denounced against or executed on others; for as surely as the predictions against the unbelieving Jews took effect, and were exactly fulfilled; so will every impenitent sinner sink under the weight of his transgressions, and rise no more. But the mystery of providence is not yet finished: many kings with their armies must fall before the power of the divine Redeemer: the ruin of his enemies must make way for the universal establishment of his kingdom: then the Sun of Righteousness will appear in his meridian glory; and all other real or pretended luminaries will be eclipsed and confounded, and all kings shall bow down before him, all nations shall do him service.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXV. V. 1. The prophet here praises God, not only for mercies already received, but in the prospect of the accomplishment of the prophecies which he had just delivered: for the vengeance to be executed on the Jews and other opposers of true religion, was intended for the benefit of the church, to which every believer is more nearly related, than to any man or body of men after the flesh. Rejoicing in Jehovah as his portion, as well as his Governor, and penetrating into the most distant futurity; the holy prophet conceived the most exalted ideas of the divine perfections, and determined to exalt them in the loftiest strains of praise. His wonderful works to Israel in former times, and those far more glorious works which Isaiah viewed as already performed, accorded to God's counsels of old, which had been revealed in prophecies and promises to his church, and were essentially faithfulness and truth.

V. 2. Egypt had been desolated in order to Israel's deliverance; the cities of Canaan had been destroyed, that they might possess their inheritance; Babylon and Tyre, those defenced cities, full of palaces, inhabited by strangers to God and his worship, would be made a desolation, and never be rebuilt; and even Jerusalem ceased to be the holy city, and became a palace of strangers, after the Jews had rejected Christ, and it was made a ruinous heap. Rome also is doomed to be destroyed, to make way for the universal spread of Christianity. These, and other similar events, seem to have been present to the prophet's mind, when he wrote these words. 'By strangers, are meant heathens, aliens from the commonwealth of Israel, and enemies to it.' (Lomth.)
For thou hast been a Strength to the poor, a Strength to the needy in his distress, a Refuge from the storm, a Shadow from the heat, when the blast of the terrible ones is as a storm against the wall.

Thou shalt bring down the noise of strangers, as the heat in a dry place; even the heat with the shadow of a cloud: the branch of the terrible ones shall be brought low.

And in this mountain shall the Lord of hosts make unto all people a feast of fat things, a feast of wines on the lees, of fat things full of marrow, of wines on the lees well refined.

And he will destroy in this mountain the covering cast over all people, and the veil that is spread over all nations.

He will swallow up death in victory; he will swallow up the sea from under the heavens. And the Lord alone will be exalted in that day, and he will be the thing of praise in the land.

V. 3-5. These wonderful displays of divine power and justice, will induce many potent or fierce and terrible nations to stand in awe of God, and render glory to him. The accomplishment of some of the prophecies against Babylon had this effect on the Persian kings: (Ezra i. vii.) and this was a shadow of the future conversion of the nations unto Christ. It will then appear most evident, that the Lord hath from age to age protected his Church of humble, poor, and despised believers, in all their distresses, and against every persecutor. When the fury of their enemies menaced their destruction, as the violent hail storm drives against the wall; his power preserved them, as in a strong tower, both safe and undismayed, till the tumult of their foes was silenced in destruction. And when temptations resembled the sultry heat of the sun, in the sandy desert, he interposed his protection, as the shadow of a cloud, till the heat was abated: and the flourishing prosperity of their most terrible assailants was at length brought low.

V. 6-9. These verses evidently contain a prophecy of the destruction of the Gentiles, and the preaching of the Gospel, from the coming of Christ to the end of the world. The Lord of hosts would make a feast; (Marg. Ref.) in the mountain of the Lord’s house, on mount Zion, the type of the true church. This feast would be provided for all people, Gentiles as well as Jews, and would consist of the choicest viands, in great variety and plenty, and of the richest wines, well refined by continuing long upon the lees. Under these emblems all spiritual blessings, as conferred through his atonement and mediation, are shadowed forth. At Jerusalem, the partition-wall between Jews and Gentiles was broken down by the crucifixion of Christ: and the Gospel was diffused through the nations of the earth; and the Lord God will wipe away tears from all faces; and the rebuke of his people shall be taken away from all the earth: for the Lord hath spoken it.

9 And it shall be said in that day, Lo, this is our God; we have waited for him, and he will save us: this is the Lord; we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation.

10 For in this mountain shall the hand of the Lord rest, and Moab shall be trodden down under him, even as straw is trodden down for the dunghill. And he shall spread forth his hands in the midst of them, as he that swimmeth spreadeth forth his hands to swim: and he shall bring down their pride, together with the spoils of their hands.

12 And the fortress of the high fortress of thy wall shall he bring down, lay low, even to the ground; and the height of his builders shall he lay low with the dust.

Thus the ignorance and idolatry, which, like a veil or covering, were spread all over the nations, would be removed, torn, and at length destroyed. This was begun by the conversion of the Gentiles in the days of the apostles, and hath been in some degree carried on by the propagation of the Gospel, dispelling heathen darkness, to this present day: and at length the knowledge of God shall cover the earth, as the waters do the sea. This will continue to the day of judgment; when by the glorious resurrection of all believers to eternal life, and the final conquest of sin and misery to hell, “death will be swallowed up in victory;” or, “to eternity.” (1 Cor. xv. 54. Rev. xx. 14.) Then all tears will be wiped away, from the faces of all his people; every reproach will be removed from his character; and an end will be put to all correction and rebuke; and from the whole earth they shall be gathered into his kingdom.

V. 9. When Immanuel appeared on earth, those who waited for him, welcomed him as their God and Saviour, as others became acquainted with them, they were ready, with Thomas, to confess him, “My Lord, and my God,” and rejoice in his salvation. The church yet waits for him to come and set up his kingdom, and to turn all her mourning into joy; being prepared to welcome that event with triumphant praise, “honouring him, even as the Father that sent him.” Every believer expects his final appearance, as “the great God, and our Saviour.” (Tit. ii. 13.) And when he shall come, and all the nations of the earth shall wait because of him; these words may express the very heart of every one of his redeemed people; as about to receive the completion of his salvation, and the fruition in body and soul of his expected felicity.
CHAPTER XXVI.

A song of praise, with exhortations to trust in God, who gives his people peace, and victory over their haughty foes, 1-6. The conduct of the righteous and the wicked, under divine judgments, 7-11. Recollections of past mercies to Israel, 12.

V. 10-12. Every enemy of the church, like Moab, shall be trodden down as the straw upon the dunghill; (a most energetic simile to show the contempt that will be poured upon them,) and the Lord shall extend his powerful hands, on every side, to crush his foes; as the swimmer stretcheth forth his hands to their utmost extent, to support himself on the water. Thus he will abuse their pride, and spoil them of their prosperity; and reduce to the dust all their strong holds, and their most determined opposition.—Perhaps an allusion to Christ, as lifted up on the cross, with his hands extended and nailed to it, might be intended, under the figure of the Lord’s stretching forth his hands in the midst of his enemies. Then and there he spoiled and triumphed over the powers of darkness, and secured the victory over every enemy for himself and his church. (Col. ii. 14, 15.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

True faith simply credits the testimony of God, and relies on his immutable truth to perform his promises; and thus the believer anticipates, and praises the Lord for future blessings as if already in possession. This faith influences every one, who has it, to holy obedience and spiritual worship; and if we can on this ground be confident that the Lord is our God and Portion for ever, this will animate us with the desire of exalting and praising him amongst our fellow-sinners.—All his wonderful works of creation, providence, and redemption, accord to his eternal counsels. He hath already shown many of these counsels, which he revealed to his servants the prophets, to be faithfulness and truth; and in due time all the rest will be evidently accomplished. Frequently he has reduced powerful cities and splendid palaces into ruinous heaps, never to be rebuilt; because of their oppression of his people Israel. But since that nation crucified their Messiah, these interpositions in their favour have ceased; for ages they have been oppressed with apparent impunity; Jerusalem itself has been made a heap; and the Lord’s care has been transferred from them to the Christian Church: and at the predicted time, He will again make of the defenced city a ruin; that the strong people may glorify him, and reverence his holy name.—The Lord ever was, and ever will be, the Refuge of poor and distressed believers; and having provided them a shelter from the storm of his righteous judgments, and taught them to flee to it: all the powers of earth and hell may in vain unite their force and fury: their tumult shall be silenced, their fury disappointed, and their pride and terrible power shall be brought low: whilst the poor servants of God shall enjoy inward consolation in the midst of trouble, and at length a triumphant delivernce.—When the Father loved us, and gave his Son to be the propitiation for our sins, he prepared a feast for our souls: the believer finds that “the flesh of Christ is meat indeed, and his blood drink indeed,” and deriving from him pardon, peace, and a joyful hope, his soul is satisfied as with marrow and fatness, and exhilarated as with the richest wine.

Yet this is only an antepost of that eternal feast which is intended him; and there is no sinner of any nation who should not be invited to this feast, and assured of a hearty welcome, if he come for it in the appointed way. Blessed be God, the Gospel has already rent in many places a thick covering, which has spread over the nations, and one land is favoured with a glorious light: may all the inhabitants of it walk in the light, and be the children of light; and may the Lord destroy entirely the remains of this veil from every part of the Christian church, from the hearts of unbelieving Jews, and from the Mahometan and Pagan nations. This will at length be effected, and the Sun of Righteousness shall illuminate every corner of the earth. At length the Lord will come to judgment, the dead shall be raised, the books shall be opened, believers shall be welcomed as the children of God to their eternal inheritance, “death will be swallowed up in victory,” God shall wipe away all their tears and rubies, and they shall shine forth as the sun in the kingdom of their Father. In the day when they shall arise from the grave, and see their divine Redeemer come to perfect their felicity, with what energy of gratitude, love, and joy, will they exclaim: “Lo this is our God, we have waited for him, and he will save us: this is Jehovah, we have waited for him, we will be glad and rejoice in his salvation!”—But the same mighty arm, which is engaged to save his Church, is stretched forth to destroy all his despisers. He will then tread them under foot, with the utmost disdain and abhorrence. Those hands, which once were extended on the cross, to make way for our salvation, will be extended to destroy all impenitent sinners. Then his victory over the devil and all his proud and potent servants, will be completed, every strong hold will be levelled, and the last enemy put under the Redeemer’s feet. “Therefore, my beloved brethren, be ye steadfast, unmoved, always abounding in the work of the Lord: forasmuch as ye know that your labour is not in vain in the Lord.”
OPEN the gates, that the righteous nation which keepeth the truth may enter in.

Thou wilt keep him in perfect peace, whose mind is stayed on thee; because he trusteth in thee.

Trust ye in the Lord for ever: for in the Lord Jehovah is everlasting strength.

For he bringeth down them to hell: the lofty city he layeth low; he layeth it low, even to the ground; he bringeth it even to the dust.

The foot shall tread it down, even the foot of the proud.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXVI. V. 1. The prophet seems still to keep in view the whole series of predicted events which had been witnessed. The preservation of Jerusalem from the Assyrians, the return of the Jews from Babylon, and their deliverance from the persecutions of Antiochus Epiphanes, if at all meant, could only be regarded as types or earnest of more spiritual and glorious events. For the day here especially intended, seems to be that future season when the New Testament Babylon should be laid low and levelled with the ground. Then this song shall be sung in the land of Judah, by the converted Jews, or in the church of God: We have a strong city, the Jerusalem from above, which is far stronger than Babylon or Rome; for salvation hath God appointed for our walls and bulwarks, the power, truth, and love of God, in Jesus Christ, render his church an impregnable fortress.

V. 2. The decisive victory obtained over antichristian powers will prepare the way for the immense enlargement of the church. They who embrace and hold fast the truth, as it is in Jesus Christ, become a righteous nation, incorporated under his government, united among themselves, obedient to his laws, and safe under his protection. (Marg. Ref.) Every new convert is enrolled as a citizen of this strong city, and ministers and Christians should open the gates: that he may be admitted to dwell in it and share its franchises—The calling of the Gentiles, in the primitive times, was a partial accomplishment of this prediction: but it will be more fully performed, when the Jews shall be converted to the Saviour, and the fulness of the Gentiles shall come in.

V. 3. 4. Thou hast preserved continued peace to the mind that trusteth on thee, &c. This is to be taken for a man who with his whole thought and soul confidently leans on God, through Jesus Christ, as it is explained at the end of the verse. He stays and rests his hope on the Lord's wisdom, power, truth, and mercy, in all his undertakings, difficulties, and periils; and refers his concerns to him, expecting direction, assistance, success, and comfort from him. And thus the Lord keeps him in peace, or in peace, peace. In every kind of peace, peace of conscience, tranquillity, resignation, and cheerful expectation, proportioned to the degree in which the heart is thus stayed on God. Therefore an exhortation is annexed to trust in the Lord for ever, or perpetually and for eternity: for in Jah Jehovah, the self-existent and changeless God, is everlasting strength.

He is the Rock of ages, or of eternity, (Note, Deut. xxxii. 4.)—This seems addressed to the church, to encourage her to wait patiently under her persecutions, in full expectation of the glorious times predicted.

V. 5, 6. As the fall of Babylon was connected with the restoration of the Jews, so the total ruin of antichristian powers and of Rome, will make way for the established peace and prosperity of the church. This the Lord will speedily accomplish: the poor and needy will soon trample upon the ruins of the strongholds of antichrist, and the most despised instruments, the witnesses who prophesy in sackcloth, and their despised followers, shall be able to exhibit the Lord's purposes.

V. 7. Whilst the ungodly know not at what they stumble, the righteous Lord makes the way of his upright servants plain and level; he removes obstructions and stumbling-blocks; he proportions their strength to their trials; he watches over their steps, and guides them in the way of uprightness. (Marg. Ref.) Thou wilt make equal the path of the righteous.

V. 8, 9. The prophet here declares how the servants of God behaved under their difficulties. They waited the performance of his promises, in the way of his commandments, or while enduring his chastisements. (Marg. Ref.) Their chief desire was to know and glorify his name, and to see him glorified, to keep his perfections and works in remembrance, and to act as his immediate presence. Each of them could say before God, that, in their retirements, and in the darkest seasons of adversity, they had sought him and his favour, with their inmost souls and as their great concern: and they had witnessed or expected the desolating judgments, that had wasted, or would waste, the nations, in hope that the inhabitants would learn righteousness by means of them. Even in the night sea-
10 Let favour be shewed to the wicked, yet will he not learn righteousness: in the land of uprightness will he deal unjustly, and will not behold the majesty of the Lord.

11 Lord, when thy hand is lifted up, they will not see: but they shall see, and be ashamed of their envy at the people; yea, the fire of thine enemies shall devour them.

12 ¶ Lord, thou wilt ordain peace for us: for thou also hast wrought all our works in us.

13 O Lord our God, other lords beside thee have had dominion over us: but by thee only will we make mention of thy name.

14 They are dead, they shall not live; they are deceased, they shall not rise: therefore hast thou visited and destroyed them, and made all their memory to perish.

15 Thou hast increased the nation, O Lord, thou hast increased the nation: thou art glorified: thy hand did remove it far unto all the ends of the earth.

16 Lord, in trouble have they visited thee; they poured out a prayer when thy chastening was upon them.

17 Like a woman with child, that draweth near the time of her delivery, is in pain, and crieth out in her pangs; so have we been in thy sight, O Lord.

18 We have been with child, we were in pain, we have as it were brought forth wind; we have not brought any deliverance in the earth; neither have the inhabitants of the world fallen.

19 Thy dead men shall live, together with them that sleep in the dust of the earth: and their wages shall be with thee, when thou shalt rest in the dust with thy fathers.
V. 19. (Notes, Ez. xxxvii. 11-11.) The conversion of the Jews; the spiritual resurrection elsewhere predicted; (Rev. xx. 4.) the flourishing of the church that had seemed dead through the corruptions of popery; and the prevalence of infidelity, seem here especially foreshadowed. We may consider Christ himself as the speaker, and addressing the church: his resurrection from the dead was the earnest of all the future deliverances that were predicted; and they are the continuation of that power which was then exerted. But the church is generally considered as addressing God. Her cause is his also: the name is put to death for his righteousness sake are his dead men, and shall live: he will recover her, as a dead body laid in the grave is miraculously raised to life again; by fully restoring her prosperity. For the power of his grace, like the dew, or rain, that causes the herbs that seem dead to revive, would be effectual to raise her from the lowest state of depression. The Hebrew runs thus, "My dead body shall arise." The noun is singular.—the verb plural.—The two sentences are equivalent; they are called the church's dead, as members of that mystical body; and Christ's dead, from the interest he hath in them, and because he hath promised to raise them up at the last day. (Louth.) In this figurative resurrection the deceased saints arise, but not the deceased persecutors. (14. Note, Rev. xx. 5, 6.) The last clause may be rendered, "the land of tyrants shall thou cause to fall," or, shall cause her to fall; that is, the church shall prevail against all oppressors, and cast them down. The original word is often translated giants. It appears from hence, the doctrine of the resurrection of the dead was at that time a popular and common doctrine for an image which is assumed, to express or represent any thing in the way of allegory or metaphor, whether poetical or prophetical, must be an image commonly known and understood; otherwise it will not answer the purpose for which it is assumed. (Lp. Louth.)

V. 20, 21. The Lord, by his prophet, exorts his people, through successive ages, when under persecutions, to wait with cheerful expectation for these glorious events. Let them retire from the world, and by faith and prayer, take refuge in him, and patiently wait the event. Thus, as Noah in the ark, as the Israelites in Egypt eating the passover, or as one sheltered in a secret chamber, they would be safe and uninterupted amid the heaviest storms: and in a very little time, the vindictive wrath of their enemies and the corrections of their Father, would terminate. For the Lord was about to remove from his mercy seat, (his place in Israel) to the righteous tribunal, in order to pass sentence and inflict punishment on the wicked; but especially upon the murderers of his people: and then the immense quantities of blood, that had been shed in war, persecution, and oppression, would be disclosed, and the murderers receive condign punishment. Let any one carefully compare this chapter with the latter part of the Revelation, from the sixteenth to the twentieth chapter inclusive; let him especially consider the vengeance to be executed on those "who were drunk with the blood of the martyrs of Jesus," and then let him determine whether the prophet Isaiah, and the apostle John, do not predict precisely the same events.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-11.

The citizens of the heavenly Jerusalem, whose names are written in the book of life, are kept by the power of God through faith unto salvation. The inmutable promise and oath of the Lord, securing the everlasting covenant, and all his infinite perfections engaged for its accomplishment, are the impregnable walls and bulwarks of this strong city, which will still stand secure, when the earth and all its works shall be burnt up. He himself has given orders, that the gates of this city should be open to every one that keepeth the truth, and by repentance and faith becomes one of the righteous and holy nation, which is governed by our incarnate Emmanuel, whatever his former character or kindred have been: and his ministers should take care that every hinderance to the establishment of the humble believer may be removed, and that sinners may be encouraged to join themselves to the Lord. Blessed indeed are they who trust in God! Proportioned to our holy confidence in him, shall be our unspeakable peace: and he deems himself bound in honour to answer the expectations of all who renounce other dependencies, to rely on his faithful word. Let us then acknowledge him in all our ways, rely on him in all our difficulties, and fear no enemies: for if the Lord Jehovah, in whom is everlasting Strength, be for us, who can be against us? By him, the poor of his people shall set their feet upon the necks of their most insulting enemies: and in prospect of that victory, we should triumph in his praises during our sharpest conflicts. But he to whom these privileges belong, walks in the even path of uprightness. Our righteousness God ahoara hypocricy; and, as in perfect faithfulness he directs the path of the just, so he weighs and detects that of the deceiver, and appoints him his portion with the unbelievers. They that trust in the Lord, must also wait on and for him in his ordinances, expecting his promised blessings at the appointed time; and if his favours and the discoveries of his glory be desired as our felicity, they will solace us in solitude and affliction; nay, we shall these especially seek the CHAP. XXVII.

God's judgment on Leviathan, and care of his church, 1-6. He chastises his people in measure, and for their reformation, 8, 9. Desolations threatened, because the people had no understanding, 10, 11. The Lord will gather his dispersed, to worship him in his holy mount, 12, 13.

V. 12-21.

If the Lord work in us a penitent, teachable, believing, obedient disposition; he will ordain peace for us, and cause all to work together for our final good. For we have all been under the domination of other lords, and have willingly served them: but the true Christian relies on grace alone, renounces all his former masters, and purposes henceforth to serve the Lord and him only: and he will as surely be made victorious over every domineering lust, as the church will triumph over every usurping tyrant; and at length rejoice, that they are all extinguished, never more to revive, or give him any further disturbance. But in this life the believer hath much trouble from the remaining power of sin, and is often exposed to painful correction; yet this puts vigour into his prayers, and keeps him a constant supplicant at the throne of grace. Sometimes, however, he is ready to conclude, that all his efforts are vain, and that no deliverance hath been or can be effected. But let him persevere in watching, praying, and steady resistance to temptation, though again and again foiled. The power of God will revive his drooping graces, and destroy his strongest enemies: soon death will terminate the conflict, the soul will then join the assembly of just men made perfect; the body shall at length be raised from the dust, no longer corruptible, subject to disease, or contaminated by sin; but spiritual, holy, and glorious, and bearing the image of the second Adam the Lord from heaven. Thus the church also shall at length be victorious in her long continued conflict with successive generations of implacable foes; and they will all be overwhelmed with infamy, or sink into oblivion. The prayers of ancient believers have been answered, the church has been vastly increased, and God hath been glorified in enlarging her boundaries to the ends of the earth. Yet they were sometimes apt to conclude that their hopes and prayers were in vain. At present the church continues in troubles, through the prevalence of impiety and iniquity: but numbers are pouring out their prayers, under divine rebukes, for more complete deliverance. Let us never fear lest these prevailing pains should produce nothing but wind and confusion, though the kingdoms of the earth be not yet become the kingdoms of Christ. The hopes of the disciples of old seemed to be buried in the Redeemer's grave: but beyond expectation, he revived, and their hopes revived with them. The same power will perform every remaining promise and prophecy, till death be swallowed up in victory. The grace of our God can soon render this barren wilderness like the garden of Eden: his providence can readily remove every obstruction: and nothing can be impossible to him, whose voice shall at length be heard by all that are in the graves, and they shall come forth to everlasting life, or everlasting damnation. Let us then keep close to him, and separate from the world; let us give ourselves unto prayer, and seek our comfort in secret devotion: thus we shall be safe from indignant foes, and may cheerfully expect the blessings promised in the word of God. Thus even the grave will form a chamber to hide us from the power of the enemy, until the indignation be past, and our full redemption come. But let the ungodly tremble at these words: the Lord is at hand to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity: he will then detect every secret wickedness, and no heart can conceive the discoveries which shall be made, when the earth shall disclose her blood, and shall no more cover her stain.” Let then sinners flee from the wrath to come, whilst the Judge is upon the mercy-seat, dispensing pardons: speedily he will remove to his awful judgment-seat, from which he will denounced and execute deserved punishment upon all unbelievers: but especially on those who have shed the blood of his saints and martyrs, from emnity to his holy image and holy religion.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXVII. V. 1. "This chapter treats of the same subject with the two former, and describes the happy state of the church, when Satan and his agents shall be subdued, the church shall be enlarged and purged from idolatry, and the Jews shall be restored: all which are circumstances attending those glorious days which the prophets often foretold, shall come to pass at or near the end of the world.” (Lomth.)—In the day when God shall come forth from his place, to punish the wicked,

U
2 In that day shall be singing ye unto her, A vineyard of red wine.

3 "I the Lord do keep it; I will water it every moment: lest any hurt it,

4 that he may make peace with me; 7 and she shall make peace with me.

6 He shall cause them that come of Jacob to take root: Israel shall blossom and bud, and fill the face of the world with fruit.

7 "I Hath he smitten him, 7 as he smote those that smote him? 7 or is he slain according to the slaughter of them that are slain by him?

8 In measure, when it shooteth up, 7 in height, after the growth of the tendrils, 7 the sword of the Lord 7 shall be filled 7 round about with fatness.

and especially the persecutors of his church; he would also inflict vengeance on Leviathan. (Rev. xix. 17-20. xx. 1, 2.) Persecuting tyrants, ambitious conquerors and oppressors, and idolatrous kings, are often represented in scripture, under the emblem of destructive animals, especially as leviathans and dragons; and precedingdeliverances of the church by the destruction of her oppressors may be alluded to. (Marg. Ref.) Yet the punishment of Satan, rather than that of any of his agents, at the crisis before mentioned, seems more immediately predicted. From the repetition of the word leviathan, it appears not improbable that more than one terrible animal was called by that name; (Notes, Job xii.) and the word rendered dragon is translated elsewhere sea-monster. (Lam. iv. 3.) Many people and nations are meant by the sea, and Satan the old dragon gave his power to the beast which the apostle saw rise out of the sea. (Rev. xii. 7-12. xiiii. 1. 4. xvii. 15.) This great enemy of God and his church is the most terrible and destructive of creatures. Immense subtility, malice, and power unite in him. He has long fatally deceived all the nations of the earth, except the remnant, "whose names are written in the book of life of the Lamb "from the foundation of the world," (Rev. xvii. 9. xiiii. 8.) so that he hath dwelt among them and reigned over them as their god and prince: and his chief seat, as spoken of in these prophecies, has long been fixed in that great city, which, one way or other, has been affected to rule over the nations. (Rev. xvi. 13.) He prophesied here of the destruction of Sodom and his kingdom, under the name of Leviathan. But God will at length make the sword of his almighty vengeance, which is exceedingly sharp, so great and strong, as to reach unto him. Then the old serpent will be bound and cast into the bottomless pit, and his power cease, his obstinate servants will be cut off, and his earth be overspread with truth and righteousness.

forth, 7 thou wilt debate with it: 7 he stayeth 7 his rough wind in the day of the east wind.

9 By this therefore shall the iniquity of Jacob be purged; and this is all the fruit to take away his sin; 7 when he maketh all the stones of the altar as chalk-stones that are beaten in sunder, 7 the groves and 7 images shall not stand up.

10 Yet the desolate city shall be desolate, and the habitation forsaken, and left like a wilderness: 7 there shall be no calf fed, and there shall be lie down, and consume the branches thereof.

11 When the boughs thereof are withered, they shall be broken off: the women come, and set them on fire: 7 for it is a people of no understanding:

12 therefore he that made them will not have mercy on them, and he that formed them will show them no favour.

V. 2-6. When these events begin to take place, let believers sing unto, or concerning, the church. 7 A vineyard of red wine, that is, of the most valued wine. The visible church will not then bear wild grapes, but excellent fruit in abundance. (Notes, v. 1-7.) The Lord will guard it night and day from harm, and water it every moment with the influences of his Spirit. He never was angry with his church in the same way that he is with his enemies, and too his anger will be turned away from her, (Note xiiii. 1.) his severest judgments are not intended against the vines, but against thorns and briers; the hypocrites within and the enemies around the visible church, who set themselves in battle against him. These are fuel for the fire of his vengeance, and he will go through and burn them up together with the utmost ease. (Marg. Ref.) But if any one fears this destruction, let him by faith and prayer, arrest, as it were, the uplifted arm of God's strength, and seek forgiveness and reconciliation and protection; and he shall surely find them. But whatever becomes of individuals, the nation of Israel will certainly take root, and blossom, and bud, and cover the face of the world with fruit. Probably the fall of antichrist, forming a remarkable fulfillment of the prophecies, will be a means of the conversion of the Jews; and this event will prepare the way for the universal spread of the Gospel. Then all nations will be grafted into that olive tree, of which Abraham, or Israel, was the root, and thus this prophecy will have its exact accomplishment. (Marg. Ref.)—* These words are a description of the flourishing state of the Jews after their conversion, which shall be as life from the dead," as St. Paul expresses it, and shall occasion the fulness of the Gentiles coming into the church, (Lowlch.) (Notes, Rom. xi. 12-36.)—What event has yet occurred, that can be thought a fulfillment of this prophecy in its plain and full meaning?
12 And it shall come to pass in that day, that the Lord shall beat off from the channel of the river unto the stream of Egypt, and ye shall be gathered one by one, O ye children of Israel.

13 And it shall come to pass in that day, that the great trumpet shall be blown, and they shall come which were ready to perish in the land of Assyria, and the outcasts in the land of Egypt, and shall worship the Lord in the holy mount at Jerusalem.

V. 7—11. The punishments of Israel, though dreadful, have not been like those of their oppressors. Amalek has been utterly destroyed. The Egyptian, Assyrian, Babylonian, Mededonian, and Roman empires, which successively harassed and oppressed them, have been in succession subverted, and the conquered people lost among the conquerors. But the Jews yet continue a distinct and numerous nation; an unparalleled instance of a people surviving so many ages all their conquerors. They are evidently preserved as monuments of the truth of their own scriptures, as well as of the New Testament; and in order to the performance of the ancient prophecies concerning them. So that, after all the massacres that have been made of them, they have not been slain according to the slaughter of them that slew them. When the Lord sent forth the afflictive stroke on Israel, he did it in measure, and debated with them under their sufferings: when he caused the rough and chilling east wind to blow, he stayed it; that is, he would not suffer any national judgments to extirpate them: may, their calamities were intended for their reformation; these national punishments in some sense expiated their guilt as a collective body, and they would be made effectual to purge away the pollution of their sins. Thus when the Chaldeans took away the brass of their altar, and burnt the stones of it with the temple and city, as it were, to lime, their groves and images were also destroyed, and their idolatry was finally abolished. This was the effect of their calamities, as graciously over-ruled for the good of the survivors; and not the condition of their pardon, as some explain it. The Lord, however, had determined that Jerusalem must be desolated, and the land be left all together uncultivated. This dispensation would resemble the pruning of a vine; when the worthless branches are either devoured green by the cattle, or gathered up for burning after they are withered. (Note, John xv. 6.) The wicked Jeresians, in vast numbers, be devoured by their enemies, and consumed by the fiery indignation of God. For, being wilfully destitute of understanding, and refusing to profit, either by the warnings, judgments, or mercies of God, they would be exposed to the utmost severity of his justice; without any compassion being shown them, on account of their relation to him, either as his creatures or as his professed worshippers. This has been far more awfully verified in the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, and in its long continued consequences, than it was by the Babylonish captivity.

V. 12, 13. These verses predict the restoration of the Jews after the captivity; and under that typical event, their recovery from their present dispersion. At Cyrus's proclamation, they, "whose hearts the Lord stirred up," "from the channel of the river Euphrates, to the river "of Egypt," (Note, Gen. xv. 18—21.) (that is, from all the different places, in which they were scattered,) were gathered one by one, as fruit is beat off from the tree; and thus they, who had been in the most abject servitude, in the land of Assyria, or Chaldea, and the poorest of them especially, with many of those of the ten tribes, and some of the outcasts who had taken refuge in Egypt, returned to rebuild the temple, and worship God at Jerusalem. But the preaching of the Gospel seems especially to be intended by the "blowing of the great trumpet." (Note, Num. x. 1—10.) By this, the Lord will collect the abject and outcast Jews, from their present dispersions, into his church, number them with his accepted worshippers, and probably restate them in their own land.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The sword of avenging justice in the hand of omnipotence will readily reach, penetrate, and execute condign punishment on the stoutest and most sagacious enemies of God; and every offender's misery will be proportioned to the talents and power which he abused, and to his malice, enmity, and extensive or durable mischiefousness: and as the devil and his angels will assuredly be tormented for ever in the lake of fire, let none of his servants expect to escape the same doom, if they continue in their sins. When Satan shall be restrained, and his determined factors cut off, the people of God shall flourish, and believers will abound in joyful songs of praise. The Lord will always value his true church, on account of the precious plants with which he hath stored it, and the precious fruit that it produceth to his glory. May our souls, as belonging to it, be continually watered and kept, that we may abide in "the fruits of the Spirit, in all goodness, righteousness, and "truth" The Lord never punishes unreasonably or excessively, as men do in a fury or passion: His anger is removed from every believer, and he waits to be gracious to all who repent, and seek his face. But briars and thorns are as able to resist the devouring fire, as the hypocrite or infidel is to stand in judgment before him, or out-brave his vengeance. Flight, concealment, or resistance are in this case alike unavailing; nor can the sinner escape, but by drawing near to his offended Lord, humbly confessing his sin, and casting himself wholly upon his mercy through Jesus Christ: thus he disarms his resentment, effects a reconciliation, and engages omnipotence on his side. If we are ingrained into the living vine, we should expect and pray for that time, when the progeny of Jacob shall again take root in a fruitful soil, and shall "bud, and blossom, and fill the face of the world with fruit." Indeed we may in some sense be said to be bound in gratitude to pray for the conversion of the poor Jews, and to promote it, by kind usage, argument, and earnest persuasion. Through that nation we have received the lively oracles of God; the condition of it for many ages past, forms the most incom-
The speedy ruin on Israel for pride and excess, is denounced, 1-4. God will be the glory and strength of the residuum, 5-6. They also are severely reproved for drunkenness, unfaithfulness, and carnal security, 7-15. Christ the sure Foundation is promised, 16. The security of scorners will end in destruction, 17-22. The wisdom of Providence is illustrated by the discretion of the husbandman, 23-29.

WOE to the crown of pride, to the drunkards of Ephraim, whose glorious beauty is fading flower, which are on the head of the fat valleys of them that are overthrown with wine!

2 Behold, the Lord hath a mighty and strong one, which as a tempest of hail and a destroying storm, as a flood of mighty waters overflowing, shall cast down to the earth with the hand.

3 The crown of pride, the drunkards

Testable proof of their divine original; and the Jews live among us as a continued warning and instruction. No people have ever so suffered, and been so preserved; but there is yet a blessing in the root, and their conversion will be as life from the dead to all the nations of the world. Then the great trumpet shall every where sound; unnumbered multitudes of perishing sinners shall be gathered to Christ, through converting grace, and shall worship the Lord in spirit and in truth. Whilst we expect these happy times, let us recollect, that the Lord does not deal with his professed worshippers as he doth with his sworn enemies. He so moderates every storm of persecution or affliction, that the church shall weather it out. The affections also of each believer shall be so appointed in measure, and be attended with such instructions and a blessing, that they will tend to purge away iniquity and to promote his sanctification: thus the fruitful branches are made more fruitful, while hypocrites are broken off and cast into the fire; and when death shall utterly demolish the poor body, sin shall be finally extirpated from the true Christian, and the body shall be raised, to share with the soul eternal holiness and felicity. But in this world we must have tribulation, no man can fince out trouble; and they whose troubles are not subervient to sanctification, will find them terminate in eternal misery. Now the Lord is upon a mercy-seat, and they only have understanding, who seize the present opportunity of reconciliation to him; for when he shall remove to his tribunal, he will have no mercy on, and show no favour to, any of his creatures, who would not in this life know and consider the day of their visitation.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXVIII. V. 1-4. This chapter begins a new subject, principally relating to the Assyrian kings, and the devastations of Israel and Judah by them. Ephraim was the chief of the ten tribes of the kingdom of Israel: their rich valleys were full of fruitful vineyards; Samaria was situated on a hill at the head of them; and its strength and beauty were as a crown and a glory, of which the people were very proud. — There seems to be an allusion to the garlands of flowers, with which the drunkards used to be crowned and adorned at their revels, in which they were overcome and stupefied by wine. Shalmaneser was the mighty and strong one, whom the Lord had prepared to cast them down by his hand, like a hail-storm or inundation. Then their crown of pride and their drunkards would be trodden together under feet: their honour and beauty would be as a fading flower, and they would be exceedingly denounced as the first ripe fig, which being discerned when no other fruit is to be had, is hastily seized and eaten up immediately.

V. 5-6. At the very time when Israel was finally ruined, Judah had a transient return of prosperity under the government of Hezekiah. He trusted in God, and aimed to reform his people. The Lord of hosts was the crown, and honour, and beauty, of Hezekiah and of the residue of believers in Judah: and for their sakes he endowed their magistrates and counsellors with the spirit of discernment and equity, and gave courage and conduct to their captains, who led forth their troopers out of the gate of Jerusalem, or to attack the gates of their enemies.

V. 7, 8. Even in Judah, and after Hezekiah's refor-9 Whom shall he teach knowledge? and whom shall he make to understand * doctrine? * them that are * weaned from the milk, and drawn from the breasts.

10 For a precept must * be upon precept, precept upon precept; line upon line, line upon line; here a little, and there a little:

11 For * with a stammering lips, and another tongue, they will not speak to this people:

12 To whom he said, a This is the rest wherewith ye may cause the weary to rest, and this is the refreshing; * yet they would not hear.

13 But the word of the Lord was unto them * precept upon precept, precept upon precept; line upon line, line upon line, mation, iniquity was very prevalent. The Jews too were addicted to intemperance; and not only the common people, but likewise both the priests and prophets, were given up to drunkenness. (Note, Lev. x. 3—11.) This swallowed up their judgment and conscience, so that they taught false doctrine, fell into most atrocious errors, and decreed unnatural righteousness: and through their example, the nation was generally led to wallow in drunkenness, their tables were everywhere polluted with it, and scarcely any place was clean from it. There was, however, a remnant of another character, and for their sakes the city was spared.

V. 9—11. The pious king of Judah, Josiah, and other prophets, were very desirous of instructing the people: but they were so hardened in vice, and so early initiated into it, that there were scarcely any who would give them a hearing; except they could teach the infants that were hanging upon their mothers’ breasts. Or the people were so intent upon their pleasures, that they must be torn from them to receive instruction, as the infant from the breast; and they would no more understand what was taught them than children. It was also necessary to use much repetition, to dwell long upon every topic, and to teach the people a little on one occasion, and a little on another, as they were able to bear it; because of their ignorance and unteachableness. But this disgusted many of them, who seem to have turned the instructions of the prophets into ridicule; and having caught up some detached expressions, such as these here used, and which have a remarkable alliteration in the original; they, contemptuously mimicked their language and manner, and entertained one another by repeating them off. Therefore the Lord determined to teach the Assyrians and Chaldeans, who might indeed stammer out insults and menaces in the Hebrew tongue, but would in other things speak a language which they could not understand; for he would use these strangers to scourge such as refused to hear his word. (Notes, Deut. xxviii. 49. 1 Cor. xiv. 21, 22.)

V. 12, 13. The prophets had pointed out to the people the true way of finding rest and comfort, and amidst their troubles, and by trusting and waiting on God; but they refused to hearken: and therefore, the constant and frequent instructions which they treated with contempt, hastened and aggravated their condemnation; causing them to depart still further from God; till they were broken by their enemies, snared in their own policy, and taken in Satan’s net. (Marg. Ref. Notes, viii. 11—15.)

V. 14, 15. When the prophets denounced the vengeance of God against the people, they seem to have made a jest of it; especially the scornful rulers of Jerusalem, and the priests and prophets before mentioned. They boasted that they were in league with death and hell, (Marg. Ref.) and should be safe, even when the judgments of God desolated the land. For they had formed such confederacies, and devised such politic schemes, as would secure them; though the prophets called them refuges of lies and falsehood; though they were grounded in deceit and hypocrisy. Perhaps this may refer to some league, which they were attempting to make with Egypt to assist them against the Assyrians. (Marg. Ref.) Our arts of cunning and falsehood will secure us, in the most difficult times. They are not supposed to have said thus much in express words, but this was their true meaning.” (Lowth.)

V. 16. This gracious promise, introducing the subsequent denunciations of approaching judgments, was well suited to encourage the pious remnant, that the Assyrians should not prevail against Judah, as they had done against Israel. (Note, vii. 14.) This prophecy cannot belong to any but Christ, to whom it is often applied in the New Testament. But it may import thus much, as * expect to the time wherein Isaiah lived; that he should never be disappointed who believed in God, whose dwelling was in Zion; and had made peculiar promises to the Jewish church and kingdom, which would be eminently fulfilled at the coming of the Messiah.” (Lowth.)—The person and salvation of Christ are, in this remarkable prediction, represented under the figure of a Foundation, on which some magnificent structure was about to be erected. For the spiritual temple is built on him, with the whole plan... and purpose of God for glorifying his great name, in the salvation of sinners: as well as every human hope of future happiness. This Foundation was laid in Zion, where the Lord dwelt upon his mercy seat amidst his chosen people. Jehovah himself laid it, according to his eternal counsels and predictions from the beginning: by the incarnation of Christ, by carrying him through his work, by exalting him in nature human to the throne, and by sending the Gospel to the nations. This Foundation is a Stone of such stability and excellency, as to support the immense and glorious edifice, which is to endure to all eternity. It is a tried Stone, approved of God and of all his saints and servants. It is a Corner stone, compacting together the whole building; a precious Corner stone, in the sight of the Lord, and of every believer: and a most sure Foundation; so that every one who in any age or nation believes this testimony, and rests all his hopes and his immortal soul on Christ, shall never be put to flight or confusion, as one that is in haste to escape impending danger: for he shall be safe, and know himself safe, and shall quietly wait the salvation of the Lord. (Notes, Rom. ix. 33. Eph. ii. 19—22. 1 Pet. ii. 4—8.) The Septuagint renders the last clause, “shall not be ashamed,” and it is thus translated in the New Testament. He that believes shall rest himself content with this all-sufficient means of his comfort and salvation; and shall not either hasten to look out for other helps, nor be ashamed of trusting to this.” (Bp. Hall.)

V. 17—19. The judgments, coming on the scornful rulers and people, are here contrasted with the safety and well-grounded confidence of every believer. For the Lord was about to execute impartial justice on the wicked, according to his strict and holy law: as the builder carries on his work by the line and the plummet. Then the storm of his indignation would sweep away every false confidence: the presumption of the corners would end in despair; they would be trodden down by the instruments of his vengeance; destruction would march forth against them, and come nearer and nearer by day and by night: and the very report of their miseries would be a vexation and terror to all who heard of them. The calamities and alarms occasioned by Sennacherib’s invasion, and his gradual approach to besiege Jerusalem, might be a partial accomplishment of these predictions. But neither that event, nor even the Babylonish captivity, nor any of their calamities till the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, after their obstinate rejection of Christ, the Corner-stone, fully answers the import of these verses.

V. 20. A proverbial saying; meaning, that they will find all means of defence and protection insufficient to secure them, and cover them from the evils coming upon them. The beds were only mattresses laid on the floor; and the coverlet a sheet, or in the winter a carpet, laid over it, in which the person wrapped himself. (Bp. Lowth.) Neither the confederacy of the Jews with Egypt, nor any of their policies, could defend them against the Assyrians or Chaldeans: neither their temple, altar, sacrifices, nor Pharisaical righteousness, could recommend them to God’s favour, when they rejected Christ: nor could their numbers and fortifications defend them against the Romans, when God forsaketh them and become their enemy. V. 21, 22. The destruction of the Philistines is compared to a breach of waters: the same resemblance which is here used! (Marg. Ref.) These extraordinary manifestations of God’s power at Perazim and Gibeon, were for the deliverance of his people, and the destruction of their enemies—but now God will act contrary to his usual proceeding of grace and mercy, and employ his power in destroying his own people. (Lowth.) Perhaps his most extraordinary interposition, in cutting off the army of Sennacherib, in answer to Hezekiah’s faith and prayer, and after the hopes of unbelievers had failed, may be here alluded to. But his strange work, which the Jews took it for granted he never would do, was the rejection of them from being his people, numbering them among his enemies, and rising up for their destruction by the Romans, as he had done against the Canaanites and Philistines. The prophet therefore warns the people to cease from deriding the word of God, lest they should be bound in strong bands unto the execution of his righteous indignation; for he had certainly heard from the Lord of hosts, that he had determined a consumption upon the whole land. The Babylonish captivity was here predicted, but not that event alone: for the prophets addressed by
CHAPTER XXVIII.

23 Give ye ear, and hear my voice: hearken, and hear my speech.
24 Doth the plowman plow all day to sow? doth he not cast abroad the fitches, and scatter the cummin, and cast * in the principal wheat, and the appointed barley, and the + rye in their + place? 25 When he hath made plain the face thereof, doth he not cast abroad the fitches, and scatter the cummin, and cast * in the principal wheat, and the appointed barley, and the + rye in their + place? 26 For his God doth instruct him to discretion, and doth teach him.

27 For the fitches are not + threshed with a threshing instrument, neither is a cart-wheel turned about upon the cummin; but + the fitches are beaten out with a staff, and the cummin with a rod +. 28 + Bread-corn is bruised; because he will not ever be threshing it, nor break it with the wheel of his cart, nor bruise it with his horsemen.

29 This also + cometh forth from the Lord of hosts, which is wonderful in counsel, and excellent in working.

their writings those of succeeding generations, as well as those to whom they were more immediately sent. (Acts xiii. 40, 41.)

V. 29—29. The dealings of God with Israel and Judah, and with different descriptions of men, are here illustrated by apt similitudes, to which the prophet demanded their earnest attention. The plowman varies his work as the case requires, not plowing every day: he prepares the ground for the seed, and sows it with different kinds of pulse or grain, each in its appointed spot, the wheat in the principal place, as being most valuable. And when he hath gathered in his harvest, he knows how to separate the corn from the straw and the chaff, according to the methods of the time and place in which he lives; and to the nature of the grain, that he may not injure it, but prepare it for his use. Thus the Lord, who hath given man this wisdom and discretion, must himself be wonderful in counsel and excellent in operation. As the season and occasion requires, he threatens, corrects, spares, shows mercy, or executes vengeance. He distinguishes between one character and another with the greatest exactness; and orders everything according to the counsel of his own will, and for his own glory: he appoints his various dispensations, for the due correction of his people, and their separation from his enemies and their sins: he will take care that no trials shall eventually injure his servants, but he will utterly destroy his enemies, when the proper time arrives.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—13.

All that glory and beauty, of which men are proud, will prove a mere fading flower: and that affluence, which is considered as a crown and ornament, frequently proves to excess, and thus disgraces its possessor. They who are overcome by wine, are overcome by Satan; for all drunkards are his slaves, and must sink under the final wrath of God, except they repent. The Lord will abate all the proud: but they who pride themselves in wickedness will be rendered peculiarly contemptible. When vengeance is to be executed on the ungodly, God has many mighty instruments at his command, who readily bear down and devour all before them. Happy then are they alone, who glory in the Lord of hosts himself. His favour and image, communion with him, and communications from him, suffice to enrich the poorest and ennable the meanest; they form a crown of glory and diadem of beauty, superior to any distinctions and decorations of earthly monarchs and conquerors; and thence his people derive wisdom, strength, and courage for every service and for every conflict. Thus some are qualified for the ministry, and others for the magistrate; and others to defend their country, or lay down their lives in the cause of God. (Note, vii. 1—5.) Whilst the Sovereign of the world leaves some guilty nations to fill up the measure of their iniquities, and gives them up to ruin: he raises up eminent reformers, and preserves a remnant of believers in other nations, whose prayers and labours prolong their tranquillity. Yet every attempt to promote true religion has hitherto been attended with vast discouragement. Even under the most scriptural means of grace, multitudes have continued ungodly, and have copied the example of the open enemies of God, rather than that of his most honoured servants. And, alas! the ministers of religion have frequently been the ringleaders in impiety and scandalous intemperance: and when they are swallowed up of wine, no wonder that they wander out of the way, teach false doctrine, stumble in judgment, become blind guides, and go before those to the pit of destruction, whom they have misled by their erroneous teaching, and hardened by their flagitious example. Thus excess and riot become common, till no place be clean from filthiness; men's ears are turned away from the truth, and are turned unto fables; and the few who are able and willing to teach the people knowledge, and to cause them to understand doctrine, find them alienated from them and entirely unteachable; having the incapacity, levity, and heedlessness of children, without their simplicity, in such circumstances the most scriptural and rational method of inculcating divine truth, by repeated plain instructions and particular cautions, warnings, and exhortations, will excite disgust: and they who are too much engaged in excess or dissipation, to bestow any pains to understand the word of God, absurdist set up for critics, and censure or ridicule the ablest ministers, who give themselves wholly to their work! To keep themselves in countenance, they watch for something in the language or gestures of the minister, which they can distort and deride; and thus they quiet their consciences in despising the message of God. Such men ripen space for destruction: the Lord will teach them by other methods: 'for judgments are prepared for scorning- ers, and stripes for the back of fools.' Indeed evil is before all who refuse to hearken to the proposals of mercy in the Gospel, and to seek the holy rest and consolations, which God hath provided for the weary and heavy laden sinner. It is very painful for the minister of Christ to reflect, when he is endeavouring to instruct, convince, warn, persuade, alarm, or encourage his hearers; that numbers of them will thence take occasion "to go and fall backward, and be broken, and snared, and taken." He must, however, go on, even though scorners he found among rulers; being satisfied that he speaks according to the word of God.
CHAP. XXIX.

V. 14—29.

When we declare the vengeance of the Lord against such as trust in refuges of lies, we should expect to hear loud clamours against our bigotry and want of charity; and scornful inferences will divert themselves and each other, even with the most scriptural denunciations of hell and damnation! They have no fears in that respect, and deride those that have, as men of narrow, weak, and superstitious minds; and they speak and act as if indeed they had "made a covenant with death, and were at agreement with hell," and were secured against the vengeance of God; having made those things their refuge which are sure lies and falsehoods, as certainly as that the Bible is the truth of God. He hath laid one Foundation, and no man can lay any other: this is tried, approved, and precious; and he that believeth shall never be confounded. But let men contrive and endeavour whatever they please: if they do not build on this Foundation, and be not interested in the incarnate God and Saviour; if his person, character, and offices, be not precious to their souls, their hopes will be found delusion and presumption; the storm of death and judgment will sweep away their refuges of lies, and overthrow their hiding-place; their covenant with death shall be disannulled; and the execution of the righteous sentence of God, according to his holy law, will be so dreadful, that the very report of it is sometimes, even now, intolerably vexatious to them. For whatever men trust to for justification, except the righteousness of Christ; or for wisdom, strength, and holiness, except the influences of the Holy Spirit; or for happiness, except the favour of almighty God, will be found "a bed that is shorter, than that a man can stretch himself on it, and a covering that is narrower, than that a man can wrap himself in it." Let sinners then fear becoming mockers, lest they be bound in the strong cords of their own iniquity; for the Lord hath decreed the destruction of all ungodly men, throughout the whole earth. But men presume because God spares them from day to day; not knowing that he hath his method and seasons of operation; and knoweth how to deal with all his creatures, as may best answer the purposes of his glory. For he who giveth natural wisdom to the husbandman, (as well as spiritual wisdom to the believer,) is himself wonderful in counsel, and excellent in working. He hath not yet made all ready for the great day of account: and the sinner hath not yet filled up the measure of his crimes, nor performed his part in God's universal plan; and therefore he is spared. His people are not yet fully purified from their sins, and have not yet sufficiently shown the power of his grace; and therefore they are kept in tribulation. But he knoweth how to deliver the godly out of temptation, and to reserve the wicked to the day of judgment to be punished." The visible Church is his husbandry, and the professors are the corn of his field mingled with the straw and chaff: but he knoweth how to make a separation by means of trials and persecutions; he will so moderate these that they shall do his people no harm; when their end is answered they shall cease; his wheat shall be gathered into his garner, but the chaff shall be burnt with unquenchable fire.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXIX. V. 1, 2. Jerusalem is here called Ariel, which signifies the lion of God; and some think that it refers to the standard of Judah, which was a lion, or to Christ the Lion of that tribe, or to the strength of the city. But probably it relates to the altar of burnt offering, which consumed the sacrifices as a lion devours his prey. Perhaps the Jews sometimes called the city by this name; and trusted that it would prevail against every assailing, because of the sacrifices there offered. But though David had taken it from the Jebusites, fixed his residence there, and removed the ark of the covenant thither; yet God denounced a woe against it. And though the people continued from year to year to observe the their solemn feasts, and to multiply their sacrifices; yet the Lord would surely distress the city, and fill it with trouble and sorrow, and it should be unto him as Ariel. As the altar, flaming with the sacred fire, consuming the oblations, and surrounded with the blood and carcasses of the sacrifices, was a discovery of divine justice in the punishment of sin; so should Jerusalem be, when filled with slain men and consumed by fire. This doth not allow us to interpret this chapter exclusively of Sennacherib's invasion. He distressed Jerusalem, but did not render her like the altar of burnt-offering. 'The heath of the altar, which Ezekiel plainly calls by the same name.' (Ez. xliii. 15, 16.) 'Go on year after year, keep your solemn feasts; yet know that God will punish you for your hypocritical worship.' It shall be all on flame, as it was when taken by the Chaldeans; or covered with carcasses and blood, as when taken by the Romans; an imitation of which more dis-
3 And I will d camp against thee round about, and will lay siege against thee with a mount, and I will raise forts against thee.

4 And * thou shalt be brought down, and shalt speak out of the ground, and thy speech shall be low out of the dust, and thy voice shall be, as of one that hath a familiar spirit out of the ground, and thy speech shall * whisper out of the dust.

5 Moreover, the multitude of thy strangers shall be as small dust, and the multitude of the terrible ones shall be as chaff that passeth away: yea, it shall be as at an instant, suddenly.

6 Thou shalt be * visited of the Lord of hosts with thunder, and with earthquake, and great noise, with storm and tempest, and the flame of devouring fire.

7 And the multitude of all the nations that fight against Ariel, even all that fight against her and her munition, and * that distress her, shall be as a dream of a night-vision.

8 It shall even be a as when an hungry man dreameth, and, behold, he eateth; but he waketh, and his soul is empty: or as when a thirsty man dreameth, and, behold, he drinketh; but he waketh, and, behold, he is faint, and his soul hath appetised: so shall the multitude of all the nations be, that fight against mount Zion.

9 ¶ Stay yourselves, and wonder; * cry ye out, and cry: they are drunken, but not with wine; they stagger, but not with strong drink.

10 For the Lord hath poured out upon you the spirit of deep sleep, and and qualified sense of the distresses occasioned by those invaders. Sennacherib’s army, composed of various nations, all strangers to God and Israel, terrible for courage and ferocity, and insolent through success, seemed immovable as the dust: yet they would be driven away suddenly as the chaff, and vanish by a single blow. Their approach to Jerusalem was, however, a visitation from God, and occasioned terror and alarm, like thunders, earthquakes, storms, and tempests, and was destructive as a devouring fire. Or the Assyrian army may be meant, (before called thy strangers;) and the sudden and dreadful slaughter of a hundred and eighty-five thousand men at once by the angel, may be predicted. (xxx. 30—32.) Perhaps there is also an intimation that the Jews, not profiting suitably by their delivery from the Assyrians, would afterwards be destroyed in this manner. The last siege and taking of Jerusalem was attended by dreadful thunders, earthquakes, &c.

V. 7, 9. The transient joy and speedy ruin of the enemies of the Jews and of the church, are here represented by a very beautiful simile. A man, who, being hungry or thirsty, falls asleep and dreams that he is eating or drinking, seems to enjoy much pleasure from the visionary gratification: but it soon vanishes, and he grows weary and faintness continues when he awakes, his disappointment aggravates his uneasiness. Thus the multitude of the nations, who through succeeding generations fight against Mount Zion, where God’s altar or worship is established, have their enmity gratified by transient successes; and, as it were, dream with pleasure of effecting the destruction of the church: but the delusion soon vanishes, and leaves them disappointed and miserable. Not only was Sennacherib’s army destroyed, and his sanguine hopes frustrated; but the Assyrian, Babylonian, Macedonian, and Roman empires successively declined and came to ruin, after they had fought against Mount Zion; and thus it must be with every nation and individual, that engages in that unequal contest.
The people threatened for confiding in Egypt, and for despising God and his word, 1—17. Promises of returning mercies and glorious times to the church.

delusions; and if they continue till death, they will then lift up their eyes in hell, and not find one drop of water to cool their tongue. But the disappointment and misery of those who fight against the Church, and exult in the expectation of destroying it, will be most aggravated. And every nation, that involves itself in the guilt of persecution, lays the axe to the root of its own peace and prosperity.

V. 9—16.

The wickedness of professed Christians may well excite our attention, astonishment, and lamentations. Pride, ambition, avarice, lust, or any headstrong passions, produce a perfect intoxication of the soul: and so do erroneous principles in religion: hence originates the most inconsiderate and infatuated conduct, by which men rush on their own destruction. This should caution them not to sin against conviction, not to scoff at divine truth, and not to lean to their own understandings or hearts, and so despise his teaching and salvation; for thus God is provoked to pour on numbers the spirit of deep sleep, or strong delusion: then they grope at noon day, as if it were mid-night; and the most learned and sagacious, without excepting priests, rulers, and teachers, are covered with impenetrable error and ignorance. To such persons the Bible becomes absolutely a sealed book: and when the learned find that they cannot understand it, and make it accord to their conjectures, they impute it to its want of correctness and consistency: and either wholly reject or neglect it, or pervert it by preposterous alterations and unnatural comments: and the unlearned are glad of such a sanction to their ignorance and impiety. Instead of despising the poor Jews, who have long been left in this situation, we ought to look to ourselves, and take warning by their example. And let us remember that the Bible is in some measure a sealed book to every man, learned or unlearned, till he begins to study it with child-like simplicity and docility; daily praying that the Lord would "open his understanding, that he may understand the scriptures." Also, what multitudes in this Christian country fall even below the hypocritical Jews in religion! They do not so much as draw near to God with their mouths, or honour him with their lips: nay, the authority of laws, or royal proclamations, fails of inducing them to pay a little decent respect to the name and the day of God. And of those who are not openly profane, it is to be feared that numbers are mere formalists, whos in and the world possess their hearts; and their religion is only a compliance with established customs, and regulated in subserviency to reputation and interest. Yet, let it be observed, that those wanderings of mind, and that defect of reverence and devotion, which are the believer's burden, are very different from the alienation of heart from God, here so severely reproved: for the former consists with sincerity, though it is a lamentable proof of imperfection. As sinners grow hardened in hypocrisy, impiety, or infidelity, their presumption increases. And hypocrites especially cannot be convinced, that God intends to do so marvellous a work, as to punish them for their wickedness. Those wise and prudent men, who have not the wisdom which comes from him, are often strangely infatuated, and fall into practical, and even into speculative, atheism; and speak and act as if they could hide their sins, their intentions, or their true character, from God, or frustrate his counsels. But they will find themselves in his hand, as clay in the hand of the potter: and as they can have no fence against his power; so their rebellion against his authority, and contempt of his truth, will tend to the display of his justice in their condemnation. By such conduct many professing churches, as well as the Jews, have provoked God to bereave them of their advantages; and the blessings of salvation have been communicated to others.

V. 17—24.

When the Lord teaches, the deaf hear his word, and the blind see out of obscurity. When he comforts, he relieves and quickens the poor and persecuted increase their joy in him; and that holiness of his character, which sinners hate and dread, inspires believers in their happiest hours with confidence and exultation. When his power terrible persecutors and presumptuous scorner are cut off, the church enjoys peace. And let such as watch for inquiry, and scrutinize the actions of Christians and ministers with malicious severity, in order to find matter of accusation; who wait to catch at some word from their lips, for which they may make them offenders; who lay snares for those that boldly and honestly reprove sin without respect of persons; and who revile and persecute the righteous on every trivial occasion: let such men recollect that they copy the example of these scornful Jews, and of those who crucified Christ, persecuted his disciples, and brought upon themselves swift destruction. But the Lord will replenish his Church, and never suffer any of his redeemed servants to be ashamed, or to wax pale, by witnessing the permanent triumphs of his enemies. Numbers of children are hereby raised up to Abraham, from among the Gentiles: may we be found of the number, and experience his new-creating power! May we see increasing numbers sanctify the Holy One of Israel, and fear his name! And may they now err in spirit, and murmur against his truth, come to understand and learn doctrine, till the whole earth be filled with the glory of our God and Saviour!
CHAPTER XXX.

2 That walk to go down into Egypt, and have not asked at my mouth; to strengthen themselves in the strength of Pharaoh, and to trust in the shadow of Egypt!

3 Therefore shall the strength of Pharaoh be your shame, and the trust in the shadow of Egypt your confusion.

4 For his princes were at Zoan, and his ambassadors came to Hanes.

5 They were all ashamed of a shame that could not profit them, nor an help nor profit, but a shame, and also a reproach.

6 The burden of the beasts of the south: into the land of trouble and anguish, from whence come the young and old lion, the viper and fiery flying serpent, they will carry their riches upon the shoulders of young asses, and their treasures upon the bunches of camels, to a people that shall not profit them.

7 For the Egyptians shall help in vain, and to no purpose: therefore have I cried concerning this: Their strength is to sit still.

8 If now go, write it before them in a table, and note it in a book, that it may or Tehaphnes, to attend on the Egyptian monarch, and concluded a treaty with him: but the Egyptians gave him no effectual assistance, and he and all his people were put to the same condition as a people in a nation that could not profit them, but were a reproach to them; for this alliance eventually hastened their ruin. And thus, the prophet intimated, it would be reproach and ruin to Judah, if they proceeded to copy their example. Most expositors take it for granted, that Hezekiah's ambassadors are meant: but Judah is not particularly mentioned; nothing is elsewhere recorded of a treaty actually entered into by Hezekiah with Pharaoh; Hezekiah's character, as trusting in the Lord more than all before him, seems not to admit of the supposition; and it was very natural to place the example of Hoshea and Israel, with their Egyptian alliance and its consequences, before the Jews when eager to seek help from the same quarter. The previous steps taken by the princes were sufficient to give occasion for Sennacherib's taunt on the subject: but Hezekiah's confidence most certainly was placed in God, not in Pharaoh: and if the Egyptians and Ethiopians interrupted the progress of the Assyrians, it does not thence follow, that Hezekiah made and persisted in an alliance with Egypt, in opposition to the warnings of the prophet.

V. 6, 7. "The burden of the beasts of the south" means the loads of treasure, which the Israelites, or Jews, or both, carried on camels and asses, southward into Egypt to purchase the assistance of that people. These were sent into "a land of trouble and anguish," in which their ancestors had been greatly oppressed, which was like to occasion much trouble and anguish to them; or which was doomed itself to endure much trouble and anguish. This country abounded with ravenous beasts and venomous creatures; and it is well known that Egypt was remarkable in this respect. The people impoverished themselves to obtain the alliance of that people, which could not profit them; for every effort of the Egyptians would be in vain. Therefore the prophet proclaimed concerning this, (the projected treaty of Judah with Egypt,) that their strength would be to sit still, it would be their wisdom and security to drop the design, and to remain quietly at home trusting in the Lord, and only using lawful means for their safety. But the word here translated strength is Rahab, a name for Egypt, and some think that the prophet meant, that Egypt would sit still, or that it would be more for her interest so to do.
14 And he shall break it as the breaking of the potter's vessel, that is broken in pieces: he shall not spare: so that there shall not be found in the bursting of it a sherd to take fire from the hearth, or to take water withal out of the pit.

15 For thus saith the Lord God, the Holy One of Israel; In returning and rest shall ye be saved; in quietness and in confidence shall be your strength:

16 But ye said, No: we will flee upon horses; therefore shall ye flee: and, We will ride upon the swift; therefore shall they that pursue you be swift.

17 One thousand shall fall at the rebuke of one; at the rebuke of five shall ye flee: even till ye be left as a beacon upon the top of a mountain, and as an ensign on an hill.

V. 8-11. This solemn command of God to the prophet, to write what follows in a tablet to be hung up, and in a book to be preserved to the latest posterity, implies, that the prophecy related to future generations; though the Assyrian invasion gave occasion to it; the same spirit of rebellion, hypocrisy, and falsehood, which then possessed the Jews, would increase in after ages; and they would more and more refuse obedience to the law of God. They were disposed to suppress the testimony of those prophets, who spoke right things, reproving their iniquities, alarming their consciences, and disquieting them in their sins: and they used menaces and reproaches, or bribes and blandishments, to induce them to speak smooth things, and proffer deceits, which might feed their pride and presumption, and lull their consciences into a false peace. Thus they endeavoured to turn the prophets aside from the path of duty, or to deter them from molesting them whilst they went on in the paths of iniquity. And they especially desired them to desist from mentioning Jehovah as the Holy One of Israel. Perhaps they objected to the expression, and pretended to be disgusted with the frequent use of it; but in fact they did not like to hear of his holy character and commandments, his holy hatred of sin and his determination to punish it. They desired that "the Holy One of Israel might cease from before them," and that they might no more be reminded of his justice.

V. 15-17. Notwithstanding the heinousness of their sins, and the power of their enemies, the Lord assured the Jews, that in returning and adhering to him and his worship, and quietly confiding in his protection, they should be preserved: or the ambassadors may be addressed, who were called upon to return from Egypt and quietly trust in God, who would protect them without the aid of Pharaoh. It is probable, that Hezekiah and a remnant did so, and for their sake the city was spared; but many would not take this counsel; they were resolved, if possible, to have swift horses from Egypt, that in case of danger they might flee away: and God declared that they should flee away and be pursued by swift enemies; and be so terrified, that a single assailant should put to flight a thousand of them, and five would suffice to rout their whole army; till only here and there one was left as a sort of prodigy, and like a beacon or ensign placed for a signal on the top of a mountain, or on a high tower. It may be supposed that Sennacherib's army destroyed numbers of those, who would not wait the event in Jerusalem, but attempted to flee elsewhere for safety.
18 ¶ And therefore will the Lord wait, that he may be gracious unto you; and therefore he will be exalted, that he may have mercy upon you: for the Lord is a God of judgment: blessed are all they that wait for him.

19 For the people shall dwell in Zion at Jerusalem; thou shalt weep no more: he will be very gracious unto thee at the voice of thy cry; when he shall hear it, he will answer thee.

20 And though the Lord give thee bread of adversity, and water of affliction, yet shall not thy teachers be removed into a corner any more, but thine eyes shall see thy teachers: 21 And thine ears shall hear a word behind thee, saying, This is the way, walk ye in it; when ye turn to the right hand, and when ye turn to the left.

22 Ye shall cast away the covering of thy graven images of silver, and the ornament of thy molten images of gold: thou shalt cast them away as a menstruous cloth; thou shalt say unto it, Get thee hence.

23 I will hence give the rain of thy seed, that thou shalt sow the ground with joy; and bread of the increase of the earth, and it shall be fat and plenteous: in that day shall thy cattle feed in large pastures.

24 The oxen likewise and the young as well as the sheep shall eat straw together; every one the hay that he shall prepare shall eat.

25 And there shall be upon every high hill and upon every lofty mountain, Palms, and橄榄 "mountain, and upon every high hill."
ISAIAH.

V. 23—25. Rain to water the ground when sown, and an abundant increase of every valuable production, are here predicted; with large and luxuriant pastures for the cattle, clean provender for such as laboured in plowing the land, and rivers of water even on the tops of the high mountains. We may suppose, that after the immense slaughter of the Assyrians, when their overgrown power, which resembled that of fortified towers, fell to the ground, the land of Judah was favoured with extraordinary fertility: but more sublime and spiritual blessings are evidently predicted. The word of God is the good seed, which being sown in the heart, and watered by the Holy Spirit, springs up in the conversion and sanctification of sinners. When this seed is extensively sown and abundantly prospered, the increase is "fat and plentiful." The Gospel is the "ministration of the Spirit," and after the pouring out of the Spirit on the day of Pentecost, the word of God was preached far more extensively and successfully than ever before: yet to this day a vast proportion of mankind are, in one form or other, servants to sin and Satan: and happier times are evidently foretold. When a country is well cultivated the cattle may feed in rich, yet not generally in large, pastures; (vii. 22—25.) but the emblem aptly denotes the enlargement of the church, as well as the abundant fruitfulness of Christians. The clean provender for the labouring oxen, &c. may imply the suitable provision made for those who "labour in the word and doctrine," in the predicted season, (1 Cor. ix. 7—11.) or that they will feast on those truths and consolations which they preach to others; and that they will be able to separate the pure doctrines of scripture from every corrupt and worthless mixture. Rivers and streams of water are not commonly found on the tops of high mountains: but the emblem implies, that abundant means of grace, accompanied by the influences of the Holy Spirit, would be vouchsafed to those places, which had been most destitute of them, and where they were least expected; and to every one of them. (Marg. Ref.) The subversion of the Jewish state, and the destruction of Jerusalem and the temple, with the slaughter of immense multitudes of Jews, were connected with the calling of the Gentiles, and the extensive propagation of the Gospel. The subversion of the pagan Roman empire, and the slaughter made by the northern nations, made way for its further establishment. But the destruction of all anti-Christian powers, the slaughter of the determined enemies of Christ, and the subversion of Satan's towers or strong holds, making way for the universal promulgation of Christianity, can alone fully answer the import of the passage. This shall be remarkably fulfilled at the time, when there shall be a terrible destruction of God's enemies, (Rev. xiv.

V. 26. This verse must be explained as an emblematical prediction of spiritual blessings; and nothing previous to the coming of Christ can well be considered as in any respect a fulfilment of it. But then the church, "fair as the moon," shining by the reflected beams of "the Sun of Righteousness," began more to resemble him. The Sun, now above the horizon, shone with sevenfold light, diffusing more abundantly and extensively knowledge, holiness, and comfort on mankind; and the Lord began to heal the breaches of the preceding ages. But when at length the church shall be purified from heresy, superstition, and every corruption; when her divisions shall be healed, every scandal removed, and every part replenished with truth, and holiness, and joy: when the Jews shall be converted, the fulness of the Gentiles brought in, all persecution terminated, and the great deceiver cast into the bottomless pit; then this prophecy will receive its entire accomplishment, and not before. The millennium, and not the heavenly state, seems to be predicted.

V. 27, 28. The destruction of Senachereb's army is here immediately foretold: yet the ruin of all the anti-Christian powers, in order to the final triumph of the gospel, seems likewise to be intended. We suppose the Assyrian army drawing near to Jerusalem, and the king exulting in confidence of wreaking his vengeance on it; while the inhabitants were either filled with consternation, or engaged in prayer. Then "the name," or glorious power, of "the Lord came from far," or unexpectedly, to defend his holy city; "burning with his anger," against the blasphemous invader; and about to fall on him, with a weight sufficient to crush him. The sentence which God had denounced when "his lips were full of indignation," was suddenly executed, as if "his tongue had been a devouring sword; and his breath as an overflowing stream" of vengeance, reaching to the neck, destroying the mighty army of invaders, and just suffering her head, or commander, to escape for the present. (Marg. Ref.) Thus the Lord "sifted the nations," of which Senachereb's troops were composed, "with the sieve of vanity," and so brought them to nothing: he put "a bridle in their jaws," forcibly turning them aside, that they might miss their aim. Since God's love and hatred naturally result from his wisdom, which approves or disapproves things, according as they agree or disagree with his own infinite perfections; it must follow, that although God be not subject to that turbulency and inconstancy, (excess or deshall the Assyrian be beaten down, which smote with a rod.

32 And in every place where the ground shall pass, which the LORD shall lay upon him, "it shall be with tabrets and harps; and in battles of shaking will he fight with it.

33 For Tophet is ordained of old; yea, for the king it is prepared: he hath made it deep and large; the pit thereof is fire and much wood; the breath of the LORD, like a stream of brimstone, doth kindle it.

V. 29—32. The Jews were here encouraged to prepare songs of praise, such as these were accustomed to sing in the night preceding or following their solemn festivals; or when they marched in companies, attended with music, to the temple; and assured that they would soon have abundant reason thus to rejoice and praise God. For he would "cause his glorious voice to be heard," commanding the slaughter of their enemies; the power of his arm lighting upon them would be manifested; and his indignation like fire, tempest, and hail stones, would destroy them. Thus the Assyrian, who had smitten the Jews as the Lord's correcting rod, would be beaten to the earth: and in all those places through which this staff of his indignation, which seemed to be grounded or established in Providence, was about to pass, and cause great distress to the Jews; there his destruction would be celebrated with tabrets and pipes. For God would fight with him "in battles of shaking," laying hold of him, and powerfully shaking him to pieces. "The grounded staff," signifies such a rod, or stroke, as sinks deep, and makes lasting marks in the flesh. The expression alludes to the rod with which the "Assyrian smote or corrected God's people." (Lowth.) It does not, however, appear that the original word is often, if ever, used in this sense. Bishop Lowth, on the authority of two manuscripts, renders it, "the rod of correction;" but alterations in the text, where versions and manuscripts, with few exceptions, establish the present reading, are very dangerous; and the difference between grounded and correction, made by changing one letter to another, which is very much like it, shows how the meaning of Scripture might be quite explained away by these apparently trivial alterations. Bishop Lowth seems also to apply the words to the stroke which God was about to inflict on the Assyrians, "The rod of correction, which Jehovah shall lift up very heavily upon him;" but how could the vengeance inflicted on the Assyrians and their king be called "the rod of correction," when their entire ruin, not their discipline and reformation, were intended? V. 33. Tophet was a valley near Jerusalem, where children were frequently burnt in the fire to Molech. (Marg. Ref.) It was called also the valley of the sons of Hinnom, or Gehenna. It is therefore used for a place of punishment by fire; and by our blessed Saviour in the Gospel for hellfire. Here the place where the Assyrian army was destroyed, is called Tophet by a metonomy for the Assyrian army was destroyed probably at a great distance from Jerusalem, and quite on the opposite side of it; for Nob is mentioned as the last station, from which the king of Assyria should threaten Jerusalem. (x. 32.) (BP. Lowth.) It is also said expressly to be prepared for the king: yet Sennacherib was not slain in his army, though his power and glory then vanished. The certainty and dreadfulness of the destruction, rather than the place of it, seems intended. The large and deep valley, prepared long before for this purpose, supplied with a vast pile of wood and other combustibles, and kindled by the breath of God, as by a stream of burning sulphur, when the blaspheming monarch and his vast army were brought down into it; forms an awful emblem of "the everlasting fire prepared for the devil and his angels," and for all the enemies of God.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—17.

All they who will not ask and follow the counsel of God, are children of rebellion; and so are they who attempt to secure themselves against impending dangers, without obeying his commandments, or relying on his mercy and protection: nor is there any way of avoiding the dreadful consequences of "adding sin to sin," but by making the Saviour's righteousness our covering, and seeking the sanctification of the Holy Spirit. But men have always been prone to depend on an arm of flesh, and to "lean to their own understandings," rather than to ask counsel of God, and trust in him: yet the event continually shows their wisdom to be folly; their strength weakness; and their confidence a refuge of lies; and that shame and misery are faith in Jesus Christ. It is his most glorious prerogative to show mercy; he knows how, when, and on whom, to confer his special favours; and happy are they who wait for him. His people, who dwell in his church below, often weep for their sins and sorrows; but they will soon arrive at the Zion above, and then they will weep no more for ever. Even now he is very gracious to them, and ready to hear their fervent prayers, and grant their largest desires; and they would have more comfort, as well as holiness, if they were more instant and constant in prayer. They who know the value of spiritual blessings, will be reconciled to bread of affliction and water of affliction, should this be their lot; especially if their teachers be not removed into corners, and they be not favoured with unrestrained access to the public means of grace. Many of us have the blessing here promised: may we be thankful for it, and duly improve it; and let those that are poor, sick, or in pain, use the means of grace afforded them; and consolation proportioned to their need shall not be withheld. They who drive the ministers of Christ into corners, are answerable for all the heresies and iniquities which in consequence inundate the church and the world. But let us remember that we need the teaching of the Holy Spirit, as well as that of the word of God: and they who simply depend on his promises, and beg to be guided in the ways of truth and holiness, shall, by means of an enlightened understanding, a spiritual taste, and a tender well-informed conscience, hear, as it were, "a voice behind them, saying, this is the way, walk ye in it," "when they are about to turn to the right hand or the left." And this will appear to be no delusion; as they will learn to hate the most gainful iniquities, and to renounce every idol and sin with determined abhorrence. All temporal good shall be added to those who first seek heavenly blessings, and who desire, above all other things, that the good seed of the word may be sown and flourish in their hearts, and produce a large increase; and whose prayer is, that it may be more and more fat and plentiful, and that they may be enabled to live up to the full enjoyment of their largest privileges. If this be our happiness, let us continue to pray for the accomplishment of these extensive and glorious predictions; that rivers of gospel-grace may water all the nations, which have hitherto proved inaccessible to it; that Satan's towers may fall, and his cause on earth be ruined; that the church may shine more resplendent with the glorious light of Christ the Sun of Righteousness; that he may shine with inexpressible splendour through all the regions of the earth; and that every breach of his people may be closed, and every wound healed. This approaching period will be as terrible to the enemies of God, as delightful to his people. Then his glorious name, and heavy indignation, and powerful arm executing his threatened vengeance, will suddenly come upon them, as a devouring fire or an overwhelming inundation; will reach them in the most distant regions and closest recesses, and cover them with disappointment, vexation, and anguish; WOE to them that go down to Egypt for help; and horses, and trust in chariots, because they and in horsemen, because they not look unto the Holy One of Israel, the LORD.
The folly and misery of those who depend

2 Yet  he also is wise, and will bring evil, and  will not  call back his words; but raise against the house of the evil-doers, and against the help of them work iniquity.

3 Now  the Egyptians are men, and not God; and  their horses flesh, and  not spirit. When the LORD shall stretch out his hand,  both he that helpeth shall fall, and he that holpeth shall fall down, and they all shall fall together.

4 For thus hath the LORD spoken unto me,  Like as the lion and the young lion roaring on his prey, when a multitude of shepherds is called forth against him,  he will not be afraid of their voice, nor abase himself for the noise of them:

5 So shall the LORD of hosts come down to fight for mount Zion, and for the hill thereof.

6 As  birds flying, so will the LORD hosts defend Jerusalem;  defending also he will deliver it; and  passing over he will preserve it.

7  Turn ye unto him from whom the children of Israel have  deeply re-volled.

8 For  in that day every man shall cast away his idols of silver, and  his ids of gold, which your own hands have made unto you  for a sin.

9 Then  shall the Assyrian fall with the sword, not of a mighty man; and the sword, not of a man, shall devour him; but  he shall fly  from the sword, and his young men shall be discouraged.

9 And  shall pass over to his stronghold for fear, and his princes shall be afraid of the  ensign, saith the LORD whose fire is in Zion, and his furnace j in Jerusalem.

V. 2. 3. The Israelites relied on the wisdom and policy of the Egyptians, as well as on their forces: but they should have remembered, that the Lord also was wise, and having denounced their destruction for their iniquity, he would not call back his word, and would easily find means to effect his purpose. For the Egyptians were but feeble men, and their horses mere animals: they could not therefore resist him and his ministering spirits; but would fall down and fail along with those whom they endeavoured to help.

V. 4. 5. The Lord himself would undertake to defend Zion against the Assyrians; so that the Jews would have no occasion for help from Egypt. He would no more regard the number or clout of the Assyrians, than a young lion does the noise of the shepherds that would drive him from his prey: and as birds defend their young by hovering over their nests, so would Jehovah defend and deliver Jerusalem. (Marg. Ref.) Notwithstanding the sins of the Jews, he would pass over them, or step between them and the evil that threatened them, and not allow the destroying angel to smite them with the Assyrians; even as he protected the houses of Israel, when he destroyed the first-born of Egypt.

V. 6. 7. The whole race of Israel had revolted from God, with many and great aggravations. The ten tribes were doomed to destruction: but the Jews, being yet spared, were exorted to return unto him: and it was also predicted, that their preservation from the Assyrians would be attended with zeal against idolatry, and contempt of their idols, even those of silver or gold.

V. 8. 9. The power and army of the Assyrian conqueror fell, not by the sword of the powerful Egyptian, or CHAP. XXXII.

A prophecy of Christ and his kingdom, 1-8: of desolating judgments on the Jews, 9-14: of the pouring out of the Spirit, and the happy change which would then take place, 15-20.

BEHOLD, a king shall reign in righteousness, and princes shall rule in judgment. 2 And a Man shall be as an hiding place from the wind, and a covert from the tempest; as rivers of water in a dry place, as the shadow of a great rock in a weary land.

3 And the eyes of them that see shall not be dim; and the ears of them that hear shall be enlarged. 4 The heart also of the rash shall understand knowledge, and the tongue of the stammerers shall be ready to speak plainly.

5 The vile person shall be no more called liberal, nor the churl said to be bountiful.

Practical Observations.

Those possessions, connexions, or dependencies, which prevent men from seeking help and happiness from God, will expose them to indignation and woe. Our proneness to expect assistance or comfort from creatures, shows that we are not duly sensible of their vanity and insufficiency, and of the all-sufficiency of God; and that we do not fully believe, that he will fulfill both his promises and threatenings. But he will assuredly arise against the house of evildoers, and against the help of those that work iniquity; and they will all fall together before his outstretched arm. The Lion of the tribe of Judah will appear for the defence of his church, and he will not be afraid for the noise of those numbers who encourage each other against him: but no emblems can fully express his terrible majesty and his tender mercy in caring for his people. Let sinners then take warning by the dooms, and not follow the steps of those that have perished in their sins: let us give him our whole heart and renounce all our idols, and he will abundantly compensate all our losses. But terror and destruction pursue and will overtake all the wretched; and those dispensations and persecutions of God, which ensure the sanctification of believers, will convince all unbelievers as in a furnace of fire.

Notes.

Chap. XXXII. V. 1, 2. This chapter seems to be a detached prophecy, delivered at the close of the reign of Ahaz, and referring to the prosperous reign of pious Hezekiah: though some think, that it was delivered about the time of Sennacherib's invasion. Ahaz and his princes had ruled very wickedly; but a king was about to mount the throne, who would reign in righteousness, employ upright magistrates, and protect the people both from internal oppression by his equitable administration, and from external invaders by his faith and prayers. But this interpretation falls far short of the expressive language employed by the prophet. Christ, our righteous King, and those of his true disciples who exercise authority under him, in church or state, are evidently intended. He alone is the "Man," who shelters sinners from the wrath of God, the temptations of Satan, and the rage of the world; having sustained the storm himself. The Consolations and graces of his Spirit are as rivers of water in this dry land: and as the over-hanging rock affords the most complete and refreshing shade from the noon-day sun, to the traveller wearied in the sultry desert; so his power, truth, and love, yield the believer the most complete protection and refreshment in this weary land, through which he is travelling to heaven.

V. 3-4. Hezekiah's care to have his people duly instructed, would render those, who had any spiritual discernment, clear-sighted: whereas, before, they were enveloped in uncertainty, through the prevalence of ignorance and error. The deliverance from the Assyrians would render the people more attentive to instruction, and their minds more capable of receiving it. Even the inconsiderate and imprudent, would apply their hearts to understand divine knowledge: and they that before could scarcely lie a broken sentence on such subjects, would learn to speak of them fluently and pertinently. But the superior knowledge, and spiritual gifts and graces of Christ's kingdom, are chiefly intended; and not without reference to his miracles and those of his apostles. God shall plentifully afford 'men the light of truth, and give them grace to make a good use of instruction.' Those that are weak in faith shall come to more perfect degrees of knowledge. The most rude and illiterate, such as could not speak so as to be understood, shall discourse clearly and intelligibly of God and of their duty. That this prophecy chiefly relates to the times of the Gospel, will appear, by comparing it with xxix. 13, xxxv. 5. If it be objected that other prophecies foretell the binding of the Jews under the Gospel, we may answer, with St. Paul, that "the children of the promise are accounted" for the true seed of Israel.—The text may be fairly expounded of the conversion of barbarous nations, and their giving praises to God in their several languages. (Lowth.)

V. 5. 'There shall be so right a discerning of all
6 For the vile person will speak villany, and his heart will work iniquity, to practise hypocrisy, and to utter error against the Lord, to make empty the soul of the hungry, and he will cause the drink of the thirsty to fail.

7 The instruments also of the churl are evil: he devises wicked devices to destroy the poor with lying words, even when the needy speaketh right.

8 But the liberal deviseth liberal things; and by liberal things shall he stand.

9 ¶ Rise up, ye women that are at ease; hear my voice, ye careless daughters; give ear unto my speech.

10 ¶ Many days and years shall ye prolong your habitation in the land of your enemies, and ye shall not prolong your days in the land of your enemies.

things that virtues shall not pass for vices, nor vices be mistaken for virtues; but men shall be esteemed as they are. (Bp. Hall.) (Note, v. 20.) — "The fool shall no longer be called honourable." (Bp. Lomith.) Under wicked monarchs, base men are often preferred and panegyrized by hireling flatterers; but under wise and pious princes they are disgraced and exposed. This was no doubt the case in some degree, under good Hezekiah; but the subjects of Christ are taught to form the most accurate estimate of characters and actions, without regard to outward rank or distinction.

V. 6-8. A man of a vile and selfish temper will speak such things as tend to deceive and corrupt others: his thoughts will be employed to contrive the iniquity that his heart desires; and to cover it with hypocrisy, or to excuse it, principles subversive of the divine law, and destructive of duty. Perhaps perjury is meant by "error against, or to the Lord." (Notes, 1 Kings xxii. 14.) — Thus, instead of relieving the poor, he will devise ways still further to distress them, either to enrich himself by oppression, or for the pleasure of domineering. When such churls get into authority, they will employ instruments and listen to counsellors like themselves; and the magistrates delegated by them will crush the poor by false pretences, even when they have evident reason and equity on their side. Probably this applied to Ahaz and his princes, as what follows did to Hezekiah and his judges: the latter, being of a liberal and equitable disposition, and influenced by the grace of God, devised liberal things for the relief of the poor, and this tended to his own establishment. But the character of Christ and of true Christians, and the use which He teacheth them to make of authority or wealth, as opposed to the conduct of avuncurious oppressors, best illustrate the passage.

V. 9-14. These verses are commonly interpreted of the troubles which came upon Judah by the Assyrian invasion; yet some do allow that they also refer to the Babylonish captivity, though out of the time of order: and it is plain, that they speak of more entire and durable desolations, than Sennacherib occasioned. But if we suppose that Hezekiah's reign was predicted, as typical of the kingdom of Christ; we naturally conclude, that the consequences of the Jews neglecting profit by it were also typical of those, which followed from that nation's rejection of the Redeemer. Thus the transition from the preceding part of the chapter is easy; and we consider these verses as predicting all the troubles of Judah terminating in the Babylonish captivity, and as typical of all the miseries of that nation from the days of Christ, till the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, and their consequent dispersion. It seems that the women of Jerusalem, in those days, were peculiarly vain, luxurious, dissipated and wanton, and regardless of all religion. The prophet therefore especially addressed them, and assured them that many days, and even years, of trouble awaited them: for the provision for their mirth and indulgence would cease: these afflictions would deprive them of their ornaments, and constrain them to gird themselves with the meanest attire; and it would be their wisdom previously to gird themselves as penitents with sackcloth, in preparation for the storm, or, if possible, to avert it. For they would have to lament the loss of their milk, corn, and cattle, as well as wine: the whole land would be over-run with thorns and briers; nay, the places devoted to festivity in Jerusalem, (now rather a joyous than a holy city,) would be thus desolated: yea, the palaces, forts, and towers, being forsaken of their multitude, would for ages become dens for wild beasts, the pleasant abode for wild asses, and a pasture for flocks. The word rendered "they shall lament," is masculine; and probably refers among other things to the weeping of the infants, when their mothers, pinched by famine, and bowed down with distress, could no longer give them suck. — Ophel, (the word translated fort) was a part of mount Zion, rising higher than the rest, at the eastern extremity, near to the temple, a little to the south of it. (Mic. iv. 5. Hdb.) — "It was naturally strong by its situation, and had a wall.
ISAIAH.

15 Until the Spirit be poured upon us from on high, and the wilderness be a fruitful field, and the fruitful field be accounted for a forest.

16 Then judgment shall dwell in the wilderness, and righteousness remain in the fruitful field.

17 And the work of righteousness shall be peace; and the effect of righteousness quietness and assurance forever.

18 And my people shall dwell in a peaceable habitation, and in sure dwellings, and in quiet resting places.

19 When it shall hail, down upon the forest; and the city shall be low in a low place.

20 Blessed are ye that sow beside all waters, that send forth thither the feet of the ox and the ass.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1–8.

The character, laws, and administration of Christ, our righteous and merciful King, and their blessed effects on the state of the world, and upon the conduct and happiness of all his subjects, show what kings and princes ought to be, and how they should aim to promote the honour of God and the happiness of mankind, by their use of authority and influence. This, if generally attended to, would conduci to a more general and clear discernment of the principles of religion; good instructions would be more regarded; the careless and profligate would be led to apply their hearts unto wisdom; the works and word of God would be more generally and plainly discourse upon; characters and actions would be ascertained with greater precision, and wise and folly be judged, instead of being flattered and caressed. But alas! too commonly, vile men push themselves into authority, urged on by restless ambition, and unrestrained by conscientious scruples; and the expectation, or possession, of such dangerous pre-eminence too often corrupts those who were otherwise more respectable. When bad men obtain power, they speak according to the deceit, selfishness, and villany of their hearts; and their wickedness connects with hypocrisy, impurity, and infidelity, as it best suits their purposes. Nor will they ever want counsellors and agents iniquity or oppression; and thus the poor labourer, the orphan, or the widow, is grievously injured and defrauded, perhaps under colour of law, though in defiance of truth and justice. In the mean time they prepare ruin for themselves; for "He that is higher than the highest regardeth it, and will call them to a strict account. But disinterested liberal men, who love their poor brethren for the Lord's sake and after his example, who employ their thoughts in devising, and,
The doom of Sennacherib, 1. The prayers of the pious Jews, 2. The haughty invader, when scattering the nations, becomes a spoil to the invaded, 3, 4. God exalted, and Jerusalem reformed and established, by means of Hezekiah's wisdom and piety, 5, 6. The Jews dismayed and distressed by the ravages and menaces of the invaders; whom God determines to destroy, that all men may according to their ability, in executing plans of liberality, shall be established for ever; and by liberal things shall they stand. Such are the genuine disciples and subjects of the Lord Jesus, who reigns in righteousness: and all they who use authority as his deputies, will rule in judgment. But He alone can be our Hiding-place from the wind and Covet from the tempest; he alone can give us to drink of the Fountain of the water of life; he alone can afford us protection and refreshment amongst the unavoidable evils of life, and in the approaching hour of death. To him let the trembling sinner flee for refuge from the wrath to come: to him let the tempted persecutor believer have recourse in every trial: from him let us all seek wisdom, strength, grace, and consolation: keeping close under his shadow, and drinking from his fulness, as we journey forward through this weary land. And as we trace his steps through the desert, let us remember how he suffered himself, that we might have pardon, peace, security, and strong consolation. Let us also be thankful for our abundant means of knowledge and wisdom: and that he hath opened our eyes to behold his glory: and let us still wait on him to enlarge and clear up our views; and to open our ears more entirely to instruction, that our foolish hearts may understand knowledge, and our stammering tongues may be loosed to speak plainly to his praise. We ought also to judge of ourselves and others by the rule of his word, to avoid flutter as well as slander, and not to call evil good and good evil. We should seek to have our hearts more divested of selfishness, that our words may be pure, affectionate, sincere, and pious; that we may avoid injustice, hypocrisy, heresy, hardness of heart, and contempt of God's commandments; and that we may show whose subjects we are, by liberally communicating to the necessities of our brethren, and doing all the good we can in the world.

V. 9–20.

Alas, how many careless ones are there, even among professed Christians, who support excessive self indulgence by shameful niggardliness! Who spend more on their own vanity and luxury in a day, than many large families have to subsist on through the week or month; and who do not contribute to their relief, in any proportion to their other lavish expenses! We must call upon such thoughtless persons, who are at ease in Zion, to attend to the word of God: we must declare unto them his whole counsel, without respect of rank or sex; we must, without cerewhen thou shalt make an end to deal treacherously, they shall deal treacherously with thee.

2 O Lord, be gracious unto us; we have waited for thee: be thou their arm every morning, our salvation also in the time of trouble.

3 At the noise of the tumult the people fled; at the lifting up of thyself the nations were scattered.

4 And thy spoil shall be gathered like the gathering of the caterpillar: as he runneth to and fro of locusts shall he run upon them.

5 The Lord is exalted: for he dwelleth on high: he hath filled Zion with judgment and righteousness.

6 And wisdom and knowledge shall be the stability of thy times, and strength of salvation:

7 Behold, their valiant ones shall cry without: the ambassadors of peace shall weep bitterly.

8 The high-ways lie waste, the wayfaring man ceased: he hath broken the covenant, he hath despised the cities, he regardeth no man.

9 The earth mourneth and languisheth: Lebanon is ashamed and hewn down: Sharon is like a wilderness; and Bashan and Carmel shake off their fruits.

10 Now will I rise, saith the Lord; now will I be exalted: now will I lift myself up.

11 Ye shall conceive chaff, ye shall bring forth stubble; your breath, as fire, shall devour you.

12 And the Lord shall give up Zebal to the Assyrian, and Sennacherib shall destroy his high places; and his altars shall he burn with the fire, and grind his images to powder, and he shall make his land desolate, until it dieth out.

13 This shall be the sign unto you, saith the Lord, as this is, that it will be no more, even to all generations:

14 Shall a man make gods, which are no gods? there shall not be among you aught of the work of your hands: for I, saith the Lord, have spoken it.

15land and people shall come together, and shall learn together; and shall be brought to the same place, to the mountain of the Lord, and to the house of the God of the whole earth.

16 And ye shall bring every man under your neighbour, and every woman under her neighbour, and shall help the strangers, to lodge in your houses, and shall make others naked, and shall cover all nakedness, and shall make your houses places of refuge, and shall not regard an eye for an eye, or a tooth for a tooth.

17 And ye shall know that I am in the midst of all the earth, saith the Lord: and it shall come to pass in that day that the sword shall not pass through Judah; and Jerusalem shall be put away out of evil.

18 And it shall come to pass in that day, that out of every branch of my people which is left shall grow up an husbandry for the Lord of hosts.

19 And the remnant of Judah shall be among the Gentiles, among all nations, a chosen seed, a light of the Gentiles, to shew forth the glory of the Lord, and to be a sign that the Lord is in the midst of all the earth.
12 And the people shall be as the burnings of lime: as thorns cut up shall they be burned in the fire.

13 ¶ The sinners in Zion are afraid; fearfulness hath surprized the hypocrises. Who among us shall dwell with everlasting burnings?

14 ¶ He walketh righteously, and speaketh uprightly: he despiseth the gain of oppressions, a that he keepeth his hands from holding of bribes, that stoppeth his ears from hearing of blood, and shutteth his eyes from seeing evil.

15 ¶ He shall dwell on high: his place of defence shall be the munitions of rocks: bread shall be given him; and his water shall be sure.

16 ¶ Then is the Lord within his temple.}

V. 10.—13. In this extremity the Lord declared all the schemes of the invaders abortive; their transient success would only fit them as fuel for the fire, and their own breath, or their blasphemies against him, would kindle the fire, that would burn them as stones are burned to lime, or thorns to ashes. So that the event would be so remarkable, that the nations, far and near, might be called upon to notice it, as an undeniable proof of the almighty power of Israel's God.

17 ¶ Thine eyes shall see the king in his beauty: they shall behold the land that is very far off.

18 ¶ Thine heart shall meditate terror.

19 ¶ Thou shalt see a fierce people, a people of e a deeper speech than thou canst perceive; of a stammering tongue, that thou canst not understand.

20 ¶ Look upon Zion, the city of our solemnities: thine eyes shall see Jerusalem a a quiet habitation, a tabernacle that shall not be taken down; a not one of the stakes thereof shall ever be removed, neither slain by any of the cords thereof be broken.

21 ¶ But there the glorious Lord will be unto us a place of broad rivers and evergreen streams; wherein shall go no galley with oars, neither shall gallant ship pass thereby.

22 ¶ For the Lord is our Judge, the Lord is our Lawgiver, the Lord is our King; he will save us.

V. 17.—19. The pious Jews had grieved to see their king in sackcloth and greatly abased: but they would soon see him in his royal robes, and honoured by God and all the people. They were shut up in Jerusalem; but they would soon be allowed to visit the most remote corners of the land in entire security. And then they would meditate with satisfaction on those events which had so greatly alarmed them. The officers of the Assyrian monarch, who mustered the troops, dispensed their provisions, raised contributions, or weighed the gold and silver which they had taken, or made observations on the towers of Jerusalem, would suddenly disappear and be no more: or the secretaries, tax-gatherers, and engineers, (as we say,) of Hezekiah, who had bestowed much pains to preserve a siege, would appear to have been totally useless; as the Lord had not employed them, but an angel, to destroy the Assyrian army. (1 Cor. i. 20.) And they would no longer see their fierce enemies, whose very language, not being understood, had rendered them more formidable and implacable.
ISAIAH.

23 * Thy tinklings are loosed; they could not well strengthen their mast; they could not spread the sail; then is the prey of a great spoil divided; the lame take the prey. 24 And the inhabitants shall not say, I am sick; the people that dwell therein shall be forgiven their iniquity.

centre of his worship, and in which the Jews observed all their solemnities, was, it is probable, when this prophecy was delivered, threatened with an immediate siege; but it would soon become a quiet habitation. The Assyrians thought they could as easily take and destroy it, as a man removes a tent; but it would not suffer the least injury. For the glorious Jehovah, the acknowledged Judge, Lawgiver, and King of Israel, would be the almighty Destroyer of his temple and his worshippers; surrounding them by his powerful presence as with large rivers and winding streams, into which no galley, or ship of war, belonging to their enemies should enter. (Note, Ps. xlv. 4, 5.)—

He shall give Jerusalem protection without danger. In other cities and countries, where they have the com- modity of large rivers and inlets from the sea, there may be some peril of advantage to an enemy; but here shall be no such matter. (Rpt. Hall.) The security and privilege of the Gospel church, especially in those glorious times predicted, seem here principally intended: for Jerusalem was never, after that, long together preserved from hostile invasions, and it has been repeatedly taken down as a tent.

V. 23, 24. The mention of gallant ships led the prophet to consider the ruin of the Assyrian army, as a vessel wrecked in a storm. Their tinklings were all driven away; the mast was blown down, and could not be properly strengthened; their efforts were vain, their ruin unavoidable, and, being cast upon the hostile strand, their cargo became plunder for the inhabitants. On this occasion even the lame would hobble out to appropriate something of the spoil; and no sickness would prevent the people in general from coming to share the booty. In short, God had pardoned the sin of his people, and all blessings were consequent upon it. This last verse leads our thoughts, not only to the most glorious state of the church on earth, but to heaven itself: whether no sickness or trouble shall find admission.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1–13.

Unprovoked rape and treachery are peculiarly hateful to God, who will punish those that are guilty of them with worked severity. When the wicked have filled up the measure of their sins, they frequently are spoilt of their treasures, and cheated to their ruin, by others as vile as themselves. They are in a more perilous case, whose con-

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1–13.
CHAPTER XXXIV.

PREDICTIONS OF DREADFUL VENGEANCE, AND PERPETUAL DESOLATIONS AGAINST THE ENEMIES OF THE CHURCH.

COME near, ye nations, to hear; and hearken, ye people, let the earth hear, and all that is therein; the world, and all things that come forth of it.

For the indignation of the Lord is upon all nations, and his fury upon all their armies: he hath utterly destroyed them, he hath delivered them to slaughter.

Their slain shall also be cast out, and their stink shall come up out of their carcasses, and the mountains shall be melted with their blood.

And all the host of heaven shall be dissolved, and the heavens shall be rolled together as a scroll: and all their host shall fall down, as the leaf falleth off from the vine, and as a falling fig from the fig-tree.

For his sword shall be bathed in heaven; behold, it shall come down upon Idumea, and upon all the people of my curse to judgment.

The sword of the Lord is filled with blood, it is made fat with fatness, and with the blood of lambs and goats, with the fat of the kidneys of rams; for the Lord hath a sacrifice in Bozrah, and a great slaughter in the land of Idumea.

And the unicorns shall come down with them, and the bullocks with the bulls; and their land shall be soaked with blood, and their dust made fat with fatness.

But the Lord himself shall be for them a glory, and a blossom, and a heart of boldness to them; and the Lord will be in their strength, and be the exalted glory in their land.

He will destroy the sea with his subtilness, and will break down the throne of the strong: the heavens shall be as clay, and the earth as a dragon, and the earth shall be covered with confusion.

The mouths of the mountains shall be filled, and the cities of the earth shall be left desolate.

The Lord shall judge all the nations, and shall fight against all the people: and he shall destroy their sword and spear, and burn their chariots with fire.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXIV. V. 1. This chapter and the next form one prophecy; and the whole of this is most tremendously descriptive of the greatest carnage and desolation, that can be conceived or expressed. Some interpreters suppose it to be a general and poetical declaration of God's vengeance upon sinners, at the day of judgment and in the eternal world: and, as is frequently the case, there are some images applicable to those events. But the connexion between these tremendous scenes and the flourishing state of religion next predicted, as well as many things in the prophecy itself, determines us to another interpretation. —The solemn and repeated call to all nations, and to the earth and every thing in it, to attend, shows that events of great importance to all the world are predicted.

V. 2. All nations. That is, all nations and their armies, considered as enlisted under the standard of Satan to war against the church of God. (Marg. Ref.) This may fitly be applied to the battle of the great day of the Almighty. (Rev. xvi. 14-16.) (Lomth.) God hath determined in his counsel, and hath given sentence for their destruction.

V. 3-7. (Notes, Ez. xxxix. Rev. xix.) The description of vast multitudes slain, and left unburied till they become intolerably offensive; and of human blood shed in such prodigious quantities, as to authorize the strong hyperboles of the mountains being melted, and the land soaked with it, whilst the dust of the earth is saturated with the fat and flesh of men, suggests most tremendous visions of these divine judgments: and it impresses the mind with a view of that general and obstinate resistance which will be made by the nations, at the instigation of Satan, to the setting up of the kingdom of Christ; and of the dreadful judgments with which that event will at length be ushered in. The dissolving of the hosts of heaven, represents the surprising revolutions, which will every where take place, in the constitution of kingdoms and states. (Rev. vi. 13.)

The Lord's "sword bathed in heaven," may allude to some method then in use of burnishing or tempering armour; and it implies, that the vengeance would be executed according to the Wise and righteous purposes of God, 8 For it is the day of the Lord's vengeance, and the year of recompenses for the controversy of Zion.
9 And th'streams thereof shall be turned into pitch, and the dust thereof into brimstone, and the land thereof shall become burning pitch.
10 It shall not be quenched night nor day; the smoke thereof shall go up for ever from generation to generation, and the land thereof shall lie waste; none shall pass through it for ever and ever.
11 But the cormorant and the bittern shall possess it; the owl also and the raven shall nest there, and they shall stretch out upon it the line of confusion, and the stones of emptiness.
12 They shall call the nobles thereof to the kingdom, but none shall be there, and all her princes shall be nothing.
13 And thorns shall come up in her palaces, nettles and brambles in the fortresses thereof; and it shall be an habitation of dragons, and a court for owls.
14 The wild beasts of the desert shall also meet with the wild beasts of the island, and the satyrs shall cry to his fellow: the screech-owl also shall rest there, and find for herself a place of rest.
15 There shall the great owl make her nest, and lay, and hatch, and gather under her shadow: there shall the vultures also be gathered, every one with her mate.
16 'I Seek ye out of the book of the law, and, read: no one of these shall fail, none shall want her mate: for my mouth I hath commanded, and his Spirit it hath gathered them.
17 And he hath cast the lot for them, and his hand hath divided it unto them by line: they shall possess it for ever, from generation to generation, shall they dwell therein.'
CHAPTER XXXV.

Great prosperity predicted to the church, 1, 2. The weak to be encouraged in hope, 3, 4. The miracles of Christ and the effects of his Gospel, foretold; with the peace, holiness, and triumphant joy of his people, 5—10.

The wilderness and the solitary place shall be glad for them; and the desert shall rejoice, and blossom as the rose. 2 It shall blossom abundantly, and rejoice even with joy and singing: the glory of Lebanon shall be given unto it, the excellency of Carmel and Sharon; they shall see the glory of the Lord, and the excellency of our God. 3 Strengthen ye the weak hands, and confirm the feeble knees. 4 Say to them that are of a fearful heart, Behold, your God will come with vengeance, even God with a recompence; he will come and save you. 5 Judg. vii. 11. Job iv. 3, 4. xvi. 5. Luke xxi. 20. Acts xviii. 22. Heb. xii. 12—13. 6 Heb. iv. 13. xiv. 9. xv. 1. 7 Ps. cxvii. 1. 8 Is. xxi. 9. Jer. xxxi. 10. 9 Jer. xiii. 13. Hos. xii. 12. 10 Jer. xiii. 13. Jer. xi. 23. 11 Zeph. x. 7. Rom. x. 15. 16 x. 10.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXV. V. 1, 2. This chapter may have some allusion to the prosperity of Judah, in the days of Hezekiah, at the time when IDumea was ravaged; or to the return of the Jews from the Babylonish captivity: but without doubt the kingdom of Christ was the grand subject intended by the Holy Spirit. When the Gospel was embraced by the Gentiles, and vast multitudes of spiritual and holy worshippers of God were raised up among them; the wilderness and solitary place rejoiced, and blossomed as the rose. Yet a vast proportion of the earth is still a desert; and neither means of grace, nor spiritual worshippers, nor fruits of holiness, are to be found in it. But when the events predicted in the foregoing chapter shall take place, all these countries shall rejoice because of them. The destruction of the antichristian powers will make way for the most rapid and extensive success of the Gospel: the poor benighted Jews will be converted, and the Gentile world will then blossom abundantly in every part of it, and be filled with joy and grateful praise to God our Saviour. The glory and excellency of the most favoured and fruitful spots, through all preceding ages, shall be conferred on all the dark and barren regions of the earth: as if the productions of Lebanon, Sharon, and Carmel, were transplanted into the parched desert, and made to flourish there. For they shall behold the glory and excellency of the Lord our God in the face of Jesus Christ, and shall learn to fear, love, trust, worship, obey, and imitate him, in righteousness, goodness, and truth.

(Marg. Ref.)
5 Then the eyes of the blind shall be opened, and the ears of the deaf shall be unstopped.

6 Then shall the lame man leap as an hart, and the tongue of the dumb shall sing; for in the wilderness shall waters break out, and streams in the desert.

7 And the parched ground shall become a pool, and the thirsty land springs of water in the habitations of dragons, where each lay, shall be grass with reeds and rushes.

8 And an highway shall be there, and a way, and it shall be called, The way of holiness; the unclean shall not pass over it; but it shall be for those: the wayfaring men, though fools, shall not err therein.

9 No lion shall be there, nor any ravenous beast shall go up thereon, it shall not be found there; but the redeemed shall walk there.

10 And the ransomed of the Lord shall return, and come to Zion with songs, and everlasting joy upon their heads: they shall obtain joy and gladness, and sorrow and sighing shall flee away.

The blessings of the Gospel, preached with the Holy sand, both in Hebrew and Arabic.—The glowing sandy plains, in the hot countries, has the appearance of water as to the unbelievers, their works are like a vapour in a plain, which the thirsty traveller thinketh to be water, until, when he cometh thereto, he findeth it to be nothing. (Koran, Bp. Lowth.)

V. 8—10. The knowledge of the truth and will of God, when made very plain and clear to any people, is like casting up an highway through a country that was before impassable. The Gentile world was a desert, in this as well as other respects; no highway to God and heaven was to be there met with. This advantage began to be vouchsafed, when the Gospel was sent to the nations: yet an immense proportion of the earth is still destitute of it. But it may be said of China, Japan, the interior regions of Africa, and every other part of the earth, where Christ hath scarcely been named, that "an highway shall be there." Christ shall be clearly made known; and the way of duty shall be plainly marked out. This authorized way shall be called "the way of holiness," as it leads to a holy God and a holy heaven, and no uncleav or unconverted sinner, passes over it: but it is appropriated to those, before-mentioned, who have experienced the power of the Saviour's grace. These are wayfaring men, who really desire to walk in this way: and though they may be men of weak capacities, unlearned, and apt to mistake, they shall be preserved from missing the path. No tempter or persecutor can injure those who walk in it; and at the period chiefly predicted, the great enemy of souls shall be chained up, and the persecutors of the church be cut off: so that none of them shall be found there, even to affright the pilgrims. Then sinners, ransomed by the blood, and rescued by the power, of their Redeemer the Lord of Hosts, shall return, join themselves to the Lord in his holy ordinances, and go on their way abounding in joy and praise; till they arrive at the heavenly Zion, and have for ever done with sorrow and sighing, and be crowned with everlasting joy and felicity.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.
CHAPTER XXXVI.

Sennacherib invades Judah, 1—3. He sends a blasphemous message by Rabshakeh, who persuades the Jews to revolt, 4—20. Hezekiah's servants return him no answer, but report his words to the king, 21, 22.

NOW it came to pass in the fourteenth year of king Hezekiah, that Sennacherib king of Assyria came up against all the defenced cities of Judah, and took them. And the king of Assyria sent Rabshakeh from Lachish to Jerusalem unto king Hezekiah with a great army. And he stood by the conduit of the upper pool in the high-way of the fuller's field.

Ghost sent down from heaven, are of all others the most valuable, and conduce the most to our unmingled consolation: whilst blossoms of heavenly fragrancy are produced in this desert land, may our souls blossom and bring forth fruit abundantly, and rejoice with joy and singing! may the peculiar excellency and glory of believers in every age be communicated to us, by the transforming knowledge of the glory and excellency of our God and Saviour! Hitherto many real Christians have been weak in faith, and ready to faint amidst their many trials and enemies. But we should take courage in the midst of our tribulations; that the joy of the Lord may give strength to our souls, in our work, race, and warfare. They that trust in the Lord’s mercy, and desire to walk in his ways, ought not to be of a fearful heart; for he will not cast them off, or suffer their enemies to prevail against them: they should therefore be strong, and not fear. Let the enemies of God and his church have terror for their portion, but let his servants rejoice: for the Lord will shortly come to execute vengeance on the one, and to complete the other’s salvation. That power that once opened the eyes of the blind, and unstopped the deaf ears, is sufficient to illuminate the humble, and sanctify the most benighted, stout, and polluted sinner: to make the feeble believer victorious, and to comfort the most destitute. Let us then apply to him thus to renew and rejoice our hearts: and let us supplicate him in behalf of our blinded, hardened, and enslaved relatives and neighbours, and for a world that lieth in wickedness. May the Lord make bare his holy arm, as when the apostles preached his Gospel: that all the desert lands may be replenished with wells of salvation and with fruits of righteousness, and favoured with highways to God and holiness! As this way of holiness is cast up in our land, may we walk in it, and thus approve ourselves to be the redeemed of the Lord. But no unholy person can find this way, however ingenious, learned, or wise he may be in this world. It is only found by wayfaring men, who leave the paths of vice and folly, to pursue eternal life and happiness; who seek direction from the word and Spirit of God, and walk by faith in Christ in the paths of holy obedience. These, though esteemed fools by the world, and though they often are of very slender talents, shall be found wise unto eternal salvation. We do not indeed live in those favoured days, when no lion or ravenous beast shall be found in the believer’s path; yet even at present every lion is chained, and every traveller divinely protected. Let us then go forward with alacrity, and rejoice in praising our gracious Lord: we shall soon arrive at the heavenly Zion; all our sorrows will flee away, and our everlasting joy and triumph be perfected: for he, who will render his church on earth victorious over every persecutor, will make each believer more than conqueror over every foe, till death be swallowed up in victory.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXVI. V. 1. As many of Isaiah’s predictions related to the events here recorded: it was proper that the history should be inserted; but as it hath before been fully considered, it will not be necessary to add more than a few hints in this place. (Notes, &c. 2 Kings xviii. xix.) —‘We may probably conjecture, that this was part of that history of Hezekiah’s reign which Isaiah wrote, as we read 2 Chr. xxxii. 32.’ (Lowth.)

V. 2. Three verses, found in Kings, are here omitted. Hezekiah submitted, and gave Sennacherib all his treasures as the price of peace: but soon after, probably the next year, Sennacherib sent Rabshakeh, as here recorded. (Notes, 2 Kings xviii. 14—16. xx. 1.) It is also added in the parallel passage, that Rabshakeh and his companions “called to the king,” or demanded an audience of him. V. 3. Shebaniah. This declaré, that there were but few godly to be found in the king’s house, when he was driven to send this wicked man in so weighty a matter. (Notes, xxii. 19—25.) in the Lord our God: * is it not he, whose high places and whose altars Hezekiah hath taken away, and said to Judah and to Jerusalem, Ye shall worship before this altar? * 8 Now therefore give * pledges, I pray thee, to my master the king of Assyria, * and I will give thee two thousand horsemen, if thou be able on thy part to set riders upon them. * 9 How then wilt thou turn away the face of one captain of the least of my master's servants, * and put thy trust in Egypt for chariots and for horsemen? * 10 And * am I now come up without the Lord against this land to destroy it? The Lord said unto me, Go up against this land, and destroy it. * 11 Then said Eliakim and Shebna and Joah unto Rabshakeh, Speak, I pray thee, unto thy servants in the Syrian language; for we understand it: and speak not to us in the Jews' language, in the ears of the people that are on the wall. * 12 But Rabshakeh said, Hath my master sent me to thy master and to thee to speak these words? hath he not sent me to the men that sit upon the wall, that they may eat their own dung, and drink their own pith with you? * 13 Then Rabshakeh stood, and * cried with a loud voice in the Jews' language, and said, * Hear ye the words of the great king, the king of Assyria. * 14 Thus saith the king, * Let not Hezekiah deceive you: for he shall not be able to deliver you. * 15 Neither let Hezekiah * make you trust in the Lord, saying, The Lord will surely deliver us: this city shall not be delivered into the hand of the king of Assyria. * 16 Hearken not to Hezekiah: for thus saith the king of Assyria, * Make an agreement with me by a present, and * come out to me: and * eat ye every one of his vine, and every one of his fig-tree, and drink ye every one the waters of his own cistern; * 17 Until * I come and take you away to a land like your own land, a land of corn and wine, a land of bread and vineyards. * 18 Beware * lest Hezekiah persuade you, saying, The Lord will deliver us. * Hath any of the gods of the nations delivered his land out of the hand of the king of Assyria? * 19 Where are the gods of Hamath, and Arpad? where are the gods of Sepharvaim, and have they delivered Samaria out of my hand? * 20 Who are they among all the gods of these lands, that have delivered their land out of my hand, that the Lord should deliver Jerusalem out of my hand? * 21 But * they held their peace, and answered him not a word: for the king's commandment was, saying, Answer him not. * 22 Then came * Eliakim, the son of Hilkiah, that was over the household, and Shebna, the scribe, and Joah, the son of Asaph, the recorder, to Hezekiah with * their clothes rent, and told him the words of Rabshakeh. *

CHAP. XXXVII.

Hezekiah sends to Isaiah to pray for the nation, 1—5. Isaiah encourages him, believers on an invisible protection; but their own self-confidence will terminate in shame; when the hope that rests on the word of God shall be found to praise and honour and glory. The afflicted servant of God will generally find it best to leave ungodly men to revile, boast, insult, and menace, without making any reply: for humiliation, faith, and prayer are our proper employment, in seasons of personal or public distress. And, however men attempt to discourage or exasperate us, they will not do us any real harm; unless they can prevail with us to neglect the commandments of our Lord and Master.
6, 7. Sennacherib, going to meet the Ethiopian king, sends a blasphemous letter to Hezekiah, who spreads it before God with fervent prayer, 7—20. Isaiah describes the arrogant impiety, and predicts the ruin, of Sennacherib, 21—35. An angel slays the Assyrians, and Sennacherib is murdered in Nineveh by his sons, 36—38.

AND it came to pass, when king Hezekiah heard it, that he rent his clothes, and covered himself with sackcloth," and went into the house of the Lord.

2 And he sent Eliakim, who was over the household, and Shebna the scribe, and the elders of the priests, covered with sackcloth, unto Isaiah the prophet the son of Amoz.

3 And they said unto him, Thus saith Hezekiah, "This day is a day of trouble, and of rebuke, and of blasphemy; for the children are come to the birth, and there is no strength to bring forth.

4 It may be the Lord thy God will hear the words of Rabshakeh, whom the king of Assyria his master hath sent to reproach the living God, and will reprove the words of the Lord thy God hath heard: wherefore lift up thy prayer for the remnant that is left.

5 So the servants of king Hezekiah came to Isaiah.

And Isaiah said unto them, Thus shall ye say unto your master, Thus saith the Lord, Be not afraid of the words that thou hast heard, wherewith the servants of the king of Assyria have blasphemed me.

7 Behold, I will send a blast upon him, and he shall hear a rumour, and return to his own land; and I will cause him to fall by the sword in his own land.

8 So Rabshakeh returned, and found the king of Assyria warring against Libnah: for he had heard that he was departed from Lachish.

9 And he heard say concerning Tirhakah king of Ethiopia, He is come forth to make war with thee. And when he heard it, he sent messengers to Hezekiah, saying,

10 Thus shall ye speak to Hezekiah, king of Judah, saying, 'Let not thy God whom thou trustest deceive thee, saying, Jerusalem shall not be given into the hand of the king of Assyria.'

11 Behold, thou hast heard what the kings of Assyria have done to all lands, destroying them utterly; and shalt thou be delivered?

12 Have the gods of the nations delivered them which my fathers have destroyed, as Gozan, and Haran, and Rezeph, and the children of Eden which were in Telassar?

13 Where is the king of Hamath, and the king of Arpad, and the king of the city of Sepharvaim, Hena, and Ivvah?

14 And Hezekiah received the letter from the hand of the messengers, and read it: and Hezekiah went up into the house of the Lord, and spread it before the Lord.

15 And Hezekiah prayed unto the Lord, saying,

16 O Lord of hosts, God of Israel, that dwellest between the cherubims, that hast made heaven and earth, that art the God, even thou alone, of all the kingdoms of the earth: thou hast made heaven and earth.

17 Incline thine ear, O Lord, and hear; open thine eyes, O Lord, and see; and hear all the words of Sennacherib, which hath sent to reproach the living God.

18 Of a truth, Lord, the kings of Assyria have laid waste all the nations, and their countries.

19 And have cast their gods into the fire: for they were no gods, but the work of men's hands, wood and stone: therefore they have destroyed them.

20 Now therefore, O Lord our God, save us from his hand, that all the kingdoms of the earth may know that thou art the Lord, even thou only.

21 ¶ Then Isaiah the son of Amoz sent unto Hezekiah, saying: Thus saith the Lord God of Israel, Whereas thou hast prayed before me against Sennacherib king of Assyria:

22 This is the word which the Lord hath spoken concerning him: The virgin, the daughter of Zion, hath despised thee, and laughed thee to scorn; the daughter of Jerusalem hath shaken her head at thee.

23 Whom hast thou reproached and blasphemed; and against whom hast thou exalted thy voice, and lifted up thine eyes on high even against the Holy One of Israel.

24 By thy servants hast thou reproached the Lord, and hast said, By the multitude of my chariots am I come up to the height of the mountains, to the sides of Lebanon: and I will cut down the tall cedars thereof, and the choice fir-trees thereof: and I will enter into the height of his border, and the forest of Carmel.

25 I have digged, and drunk water; and with the sole of my feet have I dried up all the rivers of besieged places.

26 Hast thou not heard long ago, how I have done it; and of ancient times, that I have formed it? now have I brought it to pass, that thou shouldest be to lay waste fenced cities into ruinous heaps.

27 Therefore their inhabitants were of small power, they were dismayed and confounded; they were as the grass of the field, and as the green herb, as the grass on the house-tops, and as corn blasted before it be grown up.

28 But I know thy abode, and thy going out, and thy coming in, and thy rage against me.

29 Because thy rage against me, and thy tumult, is come up into mine ears; therefore will I put my hook in thy nose, and my bridle in thy lips, and I will turn thee back by the way by which thou camest.

30 And this shall be a sign unto thee, Ye shall eat this year such as groweth of itself; and the second year that which springeth of the same: and in the third year sow ye, and reap, and plant vineyards, and eat the fruit thereof.

31 And the remnant that is escaped of the house of Judah shall again take root downward, and bear fruit upward.

32 For out of Jerusalem shall go forth a remnant, and they that escape out of mount Zion: the zeal of the Lord of hosts shall do this.

33 Therefore thus saith the Lord concerning the king of Assyria, He shall not come into this city, nor shoot an arrow there, nor come before it with shields, nor cast a bank against it.

34 By the way that he came, by the same shall he return, and shall not come into this city, saith the Lord.

35 For I will defend this city, to save it for mine own sake, and for my servant David's sake.

36 ¶ Then the angel of the Lord went forth, and smote in the camp of the Assyrians a hundred and fourscore and five thousand: and when they arose early in the morning, behold, they were all dead corpses.

37 ¶ Sennacherib king of Assyria departed, and went and returned, and dwelt at Nineveh.

38 And it came to pass, as he was worshipping in the house of Nisroch his god, that Adrammelech and Sharezer his sons smote him with the sword; and they escaped into the land of Armenia: and Esarhaddon his son reigned in his stead.
CHAPTER XXXVIII.

Hezekiah, being sick unto death, prayeth; and has his life prolonged, with a promise of deliverance from the Assyrians, 1—6 The sun goeth back ten degrees, as a sign to him, 7, 8. His recollection of his thoughts and prayer when sick, and thanksgivings for recovery, 9—20. The means appointed for that end, 21, 22.

In those days was Hezekiah sick unto death. And Isaiah the prophet, the son of Amoz, came unto him, and said unto him, Thus saith the Lord, Set thine house in order; for thou shalt die, and not live. 2 Then Hezekiah turned his face toward the wall, and prayed unto the Lord. 3 And said, Remember now, O Lord, how I have walked before thee in truth and with a perfect heart, and have done that which is good in thy sight. And Hezekiah wept sore. 4 Then came the word of the Lord unto Isaiah, saying, 5 Go, and say to Hezekiah, Thus saith the Lord, the God of David thy father, I have heard thy prayer, I have added unto thy days fifteen years.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Our tempters and persecutors effectually subserve our interests, when their endeavours to terrify us or seduce us from God, make us more simple in our dependence, and fervent in our prayers: and when they revile us for the Lord's sake, they engage him on our side, and ensure our victory. Those exploit is in which powerful and wicked men glory, form a counterpart of the conduct of the devil, their father: and when their course is run, some unexpected event sends them to their own place. But the Lord will defend his church, for his own sake, and that of his anointed King: and all, who fix their hopes and love on him, shall witness the destruction of all their enemies, and triumph in the full answer of their latest prayers.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXVIII. V. 1. (Note, 2 Kings xx. 1—3.)

V. 3. One reason of his great concern is supposed to be, because he should leave his kingdom in great distraction, under the terrors of a foreign invasion; and without any heir to take the government upon him: for Manasseh was not born till three years after this. (Lowth.)

V. 6. Hence it appears, that Hezekiah's sickness was before the destruction of Sennacherib's army, though it be not mentioned till afterward. (Lowth.) Certainly this language does not well accord to a remote danger; which a new attack from the Assyrians after the destruction of their army must have been.

V. 8. It is here expressly said, that the sun returned, and not merely that the shadow went backward. (Note, Jos. x. 12—14.)

V. 9—13. Hezekiah recorded his thoughts during his sickness, both as condemning himself for his despondency, and as magnifying the power of God in his unexpected recovery. By the premature cutting off of his days before he was forty years old, he was, as he supposed, about to go down to the gates of the grave, and to be deprived of the residue of those years in which he had hoped to be very useful to his people. In his attendance on the worship of the Lord at the temple, he had enjoyed many discoveries of his glory and much experience of his love, which he supposed would now be terminated; and that he was to be excluded from beholding men any more, with the inhabitants of this world. He observed, that his remaining years of life were departed, as a shepherd's tent is removed: His work was finished as a weaver's web, when it is cut.
14 Like a crane or a swallow, so did 1 chatter: I did mourn as a dove; mine eyes fail of looking upward: O Lorn, I am oppressed; undertake for me.

15 What shall I say? for I have been speaken unto me, and myself hath done it: I shall go softly all my days in the bitterness of my soul.

16 O Lorn, by these things men live, and in all these things is the life of my spirit; so wilt thou recover me, and make me to live.

17 Behold, for peace I had great bitterness; but thou hast delivered it from the pit of corruption: for thou hast cast all my sins behind thy back.

out of the loom; for the Lord would finish his web of life in the course of a day; that is, he would make it very short: and by pining sickness, he would soon make an end of him. So that in the evening he reckoned, that by morning at the furthest, the Lord would terminate his days, as a lion crushes the bones of his prey.

V. 14, 15. Hezekiah's disease seems to have been very painful; and perhaps his mind also was discomposed by temptation, so that on recollection, he was conscious he had wanted firmness and patience; his prayers had been mixed with fretfulness or despondency; and his complaints had been unmeaning, like the chattering of a crane or swallow, and excessive, like the mourning of the dove for his mate. And whilst he looked to the Lord for relief, and it did not come, his eyes were weary, and his faith ready to fail. But whilst he was thus bowed down with trouble, and like a debtor that is about to be cast into prison; he still looked to the Lord to be his Surety, and to undertake for him that he might be set at liberty: but at this crisis, he was assured by the prophet that he should recover, and the gracious promise was soon accomplished. He therefore wanted words to express his gratitude for so unexpected and welcome a deliverance; and he hoped that he should walk humbly and circumspectly during the rest of his life, recollecting the bitterness of soul from which he had been rescued. "I will, so long as I live, remember the bitterness of my soul." "The remembrance of the misery I endured, shall continually excite me to renew my thankfulness." (Lomf.)

V. 16. "All men's lives are thy gift, so I shall always acknowledge the preservation of mine to be owing to thy goodness in promising, and faithfulness in making good thy promises." (Lomf.) By these the souls of men also are saved; and Hezekiah seems to have meant, that he trusted in the promises and faithfulness of God, for the eternal life of his soul, as well as the continuance of his temporal life.

V. 17—20. Hezekiah had enjoyed much peace, but it was at once turned into extreme bitterness. Yet the Lord out of love to him had spared his life, and delivered his body from the pit of corruption; nay, had cast his sins behind his back, being determined not to punish him for them. For death and the grave terminate man's opportunities of prizing God on earth, and of dependence on his promises. But the living might thus glorify him, and both spread the knowledge of his truth and will among contemporaries, and also load it down to posterity. "Thy wonderful mercy towards me shall be recorded to after ages; and fathers shall mention it to their children, as an instance of thy faithfulness." (Lomf.) Hezekiah purposed without delay to celebrate publicly the praises of the Lord, who had thus shown his readiness to hear his prayers, and save him from death: and to continue so to do as long as he lived. Perhaps this hymn was constantly sung in the house of the Lord, during the remainder of Hezekiah's life.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Afflictions, and intimations of approaching death, should excite us to serious self-examination and fervent prayer, and remind us to settle all our concerns: and, as the testimony of our conscience to the simplicity of our faith and obedience, must form one chief support in a dying hour; we should endeavour so to live, that death may not surprise us when this evidence is dubious. Whatever may be inferred from second causes, we shall actually live till our measure of services is accomplished: but it is just cause of regret and humiliation, when sloth or impudence has induced us to neglect what we might otherwise have performed. It is good for us to recollect, and in some cases to record, the circumstances, which relate to the frame of our minds under heavy calamities. The review will supply cause for humiliation and gratitude: we shall commonly find, that our faith, hope, and submission, were greatly alloyed with distrust, dejection, and impatience. Sometimes we inordinately desired life, at others we were CHAPTER XXXIX.

The king of Babylon sends ambassadors to Hezekiah, who shows them all his treasures, 1, 2. Isaiah, hearing thereof, foretells the Babylonish captivity, 3—7. Hezekiah submits to the sentence, 8.

At that time Merodach-baladan, the son of Baladan, king of Babylon, sent letters and a present to Hezekiah: for he had heard that he had been sick, and was recovered.

2 And Hezekiah was glad of them, and showed them the house of his precious things, the silver, and the gold, and the spices, and the precious ointment, and all the house of his armour, and all that was found in his treasures: there was nothing in his house, nor in all his dominions, that Hezekiah showed them not.

3 Then came Isaiah the prophet unto king Hezekiah, and said unto him, What said these men? and from whence came they unto thee? And Hezekiah said, "Babylonian captivity, 3—7. Hezekiah submits to the sentence, 8."

sinfully reluctant to live: and when the Lord hath corrected us for our good, we have been tempted to conclude that he meant to destroy us. But if indeed our lives should be prematurely cut off, and we deprived of the residue of our years, and no longer allowed to meet the Lord and his saints in his earthly sanctuary; yet, if we be Christians, we shall remove to a more glorious assembly, behold his glory more fully, and praise him in more exalted strains; even when our bodies go down to the gates of the grave. We should always remember, that we now dwell in an earthly tabernacle, that must shortly be taken down; and instead of being anxious to provide for or indulge it, we should be seeking a house not made with hands eternal in the heavens. Let us then daily endeavour to exercise repentance, faith, love, and good works: and then, whether the Lord cut us off by pining sickness, or crush us by sudden death, we shall have no cause to complain or to mourn.

—In tedious suffering our hearts may be ready to fail us, when expecting help from the Lord; and our immense debt, as well as our potent enemies, may alarm us; but our Sureshy hath undertaken for us; and as he paid our ransom, he will rescue our souls from the pit of destruction, and cast all our sins behind his back, and into the depths of the sea. Let us believe his promises, and wait upon him to make them good: let us walk watchfully through our remaining years, remembering the bitter convictions and corrections which his hand occasioned, and the gracious deliverances that the Lord hath vouchsafed us. Thus the grace, truth, and power of our God will be the life of our souls: after a few more interchanges of peace and bitterness, our sorrows will terminate, and our consolations will be perfected. But as we cannot praise God in the grave, let us embrace the present season of serving him among our fellow-sinners; hoping in his word, exulting in his perfections, blessing him for his mercies, and obeying his precepts. Let us endeavour to make known his righteousness and salvation to all around us, and to those who are to follow us: bringing our children with us to the house of our God, and instructing them from his word; discoursing with them on all his wondrous works, showing them how ready he is to save and bless those that call upon him, and leading them to walk with us before him, in all his ordinances and commandments; that when we are removed, they may be capable of filling up our places to greater advantage, and may hand down to their children and to posterity those truths and instructions which they have received from us.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXIX. V. 1. Merodach was the name of an idol worshipped by the Babylonians. (Jer. 1. 2.) "Babylonian captivity, 3—7. Hezekiah submits to the sentence, 8.

—It was usual for the Babylonian kings to take their "Babylonian captivity, 3—7. Hezekiah submits to the sentence, 8."

—Nebo was another idol, whence Nabonassar, Nebuchadnezzar, and several other kings of Babylon took their names. One reason of sending this embassy was, to satisfy himself about the prodigy of the sun's going backward upon the king's recovery. The Babylonians were famous for astronomy, which made their king the "Babylonian captivity, 3—7. Hezekiah submits to the sentence, 8."

—One of the most extraordinary and phenomenon." (Lowth.) (Notes, 2 Kings xx. 6—13. 2 Chr. xxxii. 31.)

V. 2. Rejoiced. In the parallel passage it is said "he "Babylonian captivity, 3—7. Hezekiah submits to the sentence, 8."

—hearkened to them," that is, with too much satisfaction.

(2 Chr. xxxii. 25, 26.)

V. 3—9. (Notes, 2 Kings xx. 14—18.)
CHAP. XL.

God sends comfort to his people by the remission of their sins, 1-2. The ministry of John Baptist foretold, 3-8. The glad tidings of the gospel, by the preaching of the apostles, &c. 9-11. A sublime representation of the majesty of God, contrasted with the insignificance and vanity of the human race, shaming the folly of likening any to him, 12-26. A gentle rebuke of God's people, for desponding in trouble, and encouraging thoughts suggested to them, 27-31.

COMFORT ye, comfort ye my people, saith your God.
2 Speak comfortably to Jerusalem, and cry unto her, that her warfare is accomplished, that her iniquity is pardoned: for she hath received of the Lord's hand double for all her sins.

3 ¶ The voice of him that crieth in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make straight in the desert a high-way for our God.

4 Every valley shall be exalted, and every mountain and hill shall be made low: and the crooked shall be made straight, and the rough places plain.

5 And the glory of the Lord shall be revealed, and all flesh shall see it together: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

E'en eminent believers are apt to forget the mercies of God, and to be proud when they ought to be thankful: and they sometimes value too highly the friendly notice of ungodly men, in exalted stations. But such coalitions with the world ensure painful consequences; and the Lord will rebuke, and correct, those whom he loves. Their submission, however, to distressing appointments, shows that grace has regained the ascendancy; and truth and peace shall yet be with them through time and to eternity.

NOTES.

CHAP. XL. V. 1, 2. We now enter upon the latter part of this prophecy; in which the name of the prophet is not mentioned: but it proceeds as in one continued discourse, is full of consolatory topics, and treats almost entirely and most clearly of Christ and evangelical subjects. The whole seems to have been written after the deliverance of the Jews from the Assyrian invasion, and towards the close of the prophet's life: and the style and imagery are elegant, rich, and often most sublime: so that it cannot be read without great delight, by one that relishes such beauties: even should he be ignorant of the spiritual and predictive meaning of the sacred writer. The narration in the preceding chapter, (which perhaps was here inserted, as introductory to these predictions,) had mentioned the Babylonish captivity in express terms: and the prophet was here employed to prepare comfort for the Church in expectation of that affliction, and when groaning under it. But though some reference is made in many places to the return of the Jews from Babylon: yet the prophet is so carried above all temporal deliverances, in the foresight of the great redemption of Christ; that it would often be absurd and vain to seek for any allusion to inferior events, in the language employed by him. The command here given to the prophets and teachers of the Church, (the Septuagint adds the word priests,) to comfort the people of God and Jerusalem, with the assurance of the termination of their conflicts in victory and triumph, and of the pardon of their sins, may be considered as an introduction to the whole remaining prophecy, which extends to the consummation of all things. The sufferings of the Jewish nation had abundantly vindicated the honour of the law and justice of God, seeing he thus punished his chosen people for their sins: and the sacrifice of Christ displayed the honour of his holiness and righteous government far more, than even the final condemnation of every transgressor could have done. As the Jewish church was to be comforted with the assurance of the Messiah's coming: so are Christians to be encouraged with the assurance of the final victory of his cause on earth; and of the Church militant, and every member of it, soon becoming triumphant in heaven.

V. 5. It is generally supposed that the prophet here refers to the proclamation of Cyrus, and to the return of the Jews to Jerusalem; as their fathers had come out of Egypt to Canaan, through a vast wilderness: and it is considered as a command to make all things ready for their safe and commodious passage. But the Lord's coming to his people, not their return to Jerusalem, is predicted; and though his protecting presence with them on that occasion may be alluded to; yet this forms a feeble interpretation, compared with that of the Holy Spirit in the New Testament. (Morg. Ref.) John Baptist, in the desert part of the land, (an apt emblem of the barrenness of the Jewish church at that time,) was a herald sent to proclaim the approach of Christ, as Jehovah their God.
CHAPTER XI.

6. The voice said, Cry. And he said, What shall I cry? All flesh is grass, and all the goodness thereof is as the flower of the field:

7. The grass withereth, the flower fadeth; because the Spirit of the Lord bloweth upon it: surely the people is grass.

8. The grass withereth, the flower fadeth: but the word of our God shall stand for ever.

9. ¶ O Zion, that bringest good tidings, get thee up into the high mountain; O Jerusalem, that bringest good tidings to Jerusalem.

When great princes, at the head of their armies, march through countries, where highways are not previously cast up, they are used to send pioneers before them, to level the country, to cut ways through impervious mountains and defiles, to make bridges over rivers, and roads to cast up roads through morasses and deep valleys, and to make their march as straight and unobstructed as they can. A spiritual preparation of a similar nature was to be made for the coming of Christ, and the setting up of his kingdom. Thus John Baptist's ministry was calculated to excite the attention of the people; to convince, alarm, and humble them; to subvert their self-confident prejudices and carnal expectations; to show them their need of a spiritual redemption, and to raise their expectations of those blessings, which the Messiah was actually to bestow on them. This tended to prepare the way of the Lord, and to make all straight and level for his reception, and the setting up of his kingdom. And the first Jewish converts to Christianity seem to have been in general prepared by John's ministry for that of Christ and his apostles. Thus the glory of the Lord was revealed to them, and through them to the Gentiles; this light hath hitherto been continued to many nations, and at length "all flesh shall see it together, for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it." The Septuagint here reads, "All flesh shall see the salvation of our God," and this is quoted by St. Luke (iii. 6.). The Jewish church was at that time in a barren and desert condition, unfit without reformation for the reception of her King. It was in this desert country, at that time "desolate of all religious instruction, in true piety and 'good works unfruitful, that John was sent to prepare the way of the Lord by preaching repentance." (Bp. Lom.)

V. 9-11. The former part of this paragraph is rendered by some, "O thou, that bringest good tidings to Zion," &c. And as it is in the feminine gender, it is supposed to allude to the custom of women leading companies, with songs and dances, to celebrate great deliverances; as in the cases of Miriam, and Jephthah's daughter. But as Zion and Jerusalem evidently mean the inhabitants of Zion, and as the glad tidings are ordered to be declared to the cities of Judah; the alteration seems by no means advisable. When any of the inhabitants of Zion brought glad tidings from the court of Persia; they were strenuously to publish them to the cities of Judah, encouraging them with the assurance of the presence and help of Israel's God. But this is but a shadow of the real meaning. The glad tidings of the advent of Christ was not only brought to Zion; but was from thence sent into the cities of Judah, and to all the ends of the earth. The glad tidings of the Gospel, after the day of Pentecost, published their glad tidings with all boldness, beginning at Jerusalem, proceeding to the cities of Judah, and then to the Gentiles. The church, the true Zion, should from age to age strenuously disseminate the glad tidings of salvation; and the most distinguished Christians should animate those that are less eminent and more timid. The Jews were...
12 Who hath measured the waters in the hollow of his hand, and meted out heaven with a span, and comprehended the dust of the earth in a measure, and weighed the mountains in scales, and the hills in a balance?

13 Who hath directed the Spirit of the Lord, or being his counsellor, hath taught him?

14 With whom took he counsel, and who instructed him, and taught him in the path of judgment, and taught him knowledge, and shewed him the way of understanding?

15 Behold, the nations are as a drop of a bucket, and are counted as the small dust of the balance: behold, he taketh up the isles as a very little thing.

16 And Lebanon is not sufficient to burn, nor the beasts thereof sufficient for a burnt-offering.

17 All nations before him are nothing; and they are counted to him less than nothing, and vanity.
18 To whom then will ye liken God? or what likeness will ye compare unto him?

19 The workman melteth a graven image, and the goldsmith spreadeth it over with gold, and casteth silver chains.

20 He that is so impoverished that he hath no oblation, that chooseth a tree that will not rot; he seeketh unto him a cunning workman to prepare a graven image that shall not be moved.

21 Have ye not known? have ye not heard? hath it not been told you from the beginning? have ye not understood from the foundations of the earth?

22 It is he that sitteth upon the circle of the earth, and upon the inhabitants thereof; he stretcheth out the heavens as a curtain, and spreadeth them out as a tent to dwell in:

23 That he bringeth the princes to nothing; he maketh the judges of the earth as vanity.

24 Yea, they shall not be planted; yea, they shall not be sown; yea, their meanness shall not be increased.

V. 18—20. In the view of the divine glory above given, how abominable and absurd must idolatry appear! what similitude can be made of God, that is not infinitely dishonourable to him? Yet how general has this absurd and impious conduct been among men! (Notes, Ex. xx. 4, 5.)

The more wealthy of the Gentiles cast their images of inferior metal, and then employed the goldsmith to plate it with gold, and both to adorn and fasten it with silver chains; and this was intended as the likeness of their god, and the object of their worship! Nay, the poor man, who could scarcely afford an oblation, must have an idol, though it was but a block of durable wood, skilfully carved, and fixed up in his house! and even the Jews, though better instructed, were prone to the same stupidity; because they disliked the character and service of Jehovah. But as they had no reason to fear either idols or idolaters, when God came to effect their promised deliverances; so nothing could so much provoke God to jealousy, and bring ruin upon them, as this iniquity.

Hereby he armeth them against the idolatry, wherewith they should be tempted at Babylon.

V. 21—24. "Will ye not know? Will ye not hear? " If hast it not been declared to you," &c. (Sp. Lorrh.)

This is more literal than our version. Would not the people after all understand? Would they not hear to the word of God, which approved itself so fully to their minds and consciences? Had not the Jews known, and heard from the beginning? Nay, had not the Gentiles sufficient information from the foundations of the earth, and in the things created, concerning the eternal power and Godhead of the Creator. (Marg. Ref.)

The words run thus in the original, " Have ye not understood," or considered "the foundations of the earth," "that is, by whom they were laid, even by Him that sitteth," &c. (Lorrh.)

He sitteth upon the circle of the earth, which environ the earth as a circle: thence he beholds the puny efforts of all its inhabitants, like those of insignificant grasshoppers.

He had veiled himself with the vast expanse of the firmament, with a curtain; and dwells beyond it, in invisible glory, as a pavilion. And, disdaining the ambition and rebellion of wicked princes, he brings them and their devices to nothing: so that they cannot establish their posterity, as they purpose; for he will not suffer them to be planted, nor sown, nor to take root; but in anger he blows on them, and they wither, and are driven away as the stubble by the whirlwind. The revolutions in the great empires of the world are intended, especially the subversion of the Babylonish empire by Cyrus, which made way for the restoration of the Jews. Nebuchadnezzar and his successors had attempted to perpetuate the grandeur of their family; but the Lord blew upon it, and it all came to nothing.

V. 25, 26. Nothing else could be mentioned which might be likened to Jehovah, except the sun, moon, and stars. But who had created these splendid luminaries? They were his host, numbered, marshalled, and commanded by him, as if he spake to them by name: and because of the exceeding greatness of his mighty power, not one of them failed to fulfill his will, and shine in its appointed season, from age to age.
30 Even the youths shall faint and be weary, and the young men shall utterly fall:

31 But they that wait upon the Lord shall renew their strength; they shall mount up with wings as eagles; they shall run, and not be weary; and they shall walk, and not faint.

V. 27—31. Jacob is here introduced as in great affliction, as the Jews were in captivity, and the church under antichristian persecution. Every external appearance was discouraging; and they were apt to forget or distrust, the power and promise of God, through long delays, many disappointments, and unbelief; and to conclude that the Lord either disregarded them, or knew not how to relieve them; and that he had neglected to judge between them and their oppressors. But why should they harbour such thoughts? Had they never heard, or known, that the everlasting God, Jehovah, the Creator of the world, was incapable of being wearied out, or of fainting, or leaving his work unfinished? There was no searching out of his understanding: and therefore he could not be disconcerted by unforeseen obstructions, nor for want of resources to obviate difficulties. When his wisdom should see the proper season to be arrived, he would certainly effect their deliverance: by his help, the most feeble and intimidated instruments would acquire great and increasing strength and courage. And whilst men of great abilities and resolution, who confided in their own vigour, (as young men are apt to do,) would faint and be wearied out, in their attempts to save themselves, or effect their purposes, they who waited on the Lord for wisdom and support, should repair the decays of their spiritual strength after every conflict, and make continual accessions to it, till they mounted aloft, as on eagles' wings, out of the reach of their enemies; nor would they grow weary in their race, or faint in their walk, till they reached the glorious goal, and received the conqueror's crown.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—11.

They who walk with God need comforting, especially when iniquity abounds, and the church is in tribulation: accordingly he hath commanded his ministers to encourage the broken-hearted, as well as to warn the unruly: and should the servant neglect or mistake his duty, the Lord himself will speak comfortably to them. All our deliverances follow the pardon of iniquity; and in the great solemnity of the death of Christ, the mercy of God is exercised to the exceeding glory of his justice. This is the fountain of all our consolation, and ensures a happy event to the warfare of the church and every believer. Even in this desert world, where nothing but noxious creatures and productions, through man's apostasy, would otherwise have been found, a voice is heard calling on us to prepare the way of the Lord; for he cometh "to bless us, in turning "every one of us from our iniquities." May he prepare our hearts by the instructions of his word and the convictions of his Spirit, cordially to welcome his salvation, and submit to his authority; that, every prejudice being done away, every proud and ambitious thought brought down, every grovelling passion subdued, the desire of things truly excellent and honourable implanted, our crooked and rugged temper softened, and every obstruction removed: the glory of the Lord may be revealed to our souls; and we may be made ready for his whole will on earth, and meet for his heavenly kingdom. And may his power remove all hindrances to the establishment of his kingdom throughout the earth; that his glory may be so revealed, that all flesh may see it together! The Lord alone is worthy of unreserved confidence and fear. And what are all the connexions, possessions, distinctions, attainments, or performances of fallen man, but as the grass and the flower of the grass? When the Lord bloweth upon it with the breath of his displeasure, how soon it withers and fades! And what will the envied and admired titles and accomplishments of a dying sinner avail him, when they leave him under condemnation, and "a vessel of wrath fitted for destruction?" But they who rely on the word of God, which endeth not, for ever, shall possess unchanging and eternal distinctions and treasures, however poor and despised they are hereon earth. These are the glad tidings brought unto us by Zion's harbingers: may we gladly receive the word, and diligently diffuse it around! All, who know this joyful sound, should thus endeavour, by their bold and open profession of the truth, their holy examples, their fervent prayers, and all their influence, to communicate the blessing to others. And let ministers especially cry aloud and not spare, and point out to all who inquire after salvation, the divine Redeemer, saying, "Behold your God!" Behold the Lord Jehovah hath come in the flesh to destroy the works of the devil: he hath finished the work on earth; he hath ascended his mediatorial throne in heaven; all power is in his hands, and his Arm shall rule for him, his reward is with him, and his work before him. Whilst he crushes his obstinate foes under his feet, he feeds his purchased flock with inexpressible tenderness and care; and he is ever ready to gather in the weary, to cherish the feeble, the tempted, and afflicted, and to proportion the strength of every one to the trials allotted him. May we know our Shepherd's voice, and follow him, and by our gentle harmless conduct prove ourselves the sheep of his pasture: may he gather our children and relations, as his lambs with his Arm, and carry them in his bosom: and may continually numbers of those, who are as sheep going astray, be brought back to this Shepherd and Bishop of our souls! For who is he, but Israel's Shepherd, "that measured the "waters in the hollow of his hand"? This is the support of all our hopes, that, with the Father and the blessed Spirit, our Jesus is Jehovah, God over all blessed for evermore.

V. 12—31.

As we cannot comprehend the mysterious nature and the majesty of the Lord our God; let us learn to admire and adore those displays of his perfections, which are made in his works and in his word. Let us abase ourselves before Chapter XLI.

JEHOVAH calls on the nations to consider his works for Israel, and describes the zeal of the idolaters about their idols, 1—7. He gives many promises and predictions of assistance, victory, and prosperity to his people; and of the conversion of the Gentiles, 8—20. He challenges the idols of the nations to foretell future events and accomplish them, as he did; and predicts the conquests of Cyrus, and the deliverance of the Jews from captivity, 21—29.

KEEP silence before me, O islands; and let the people renew their strength: let them come near; then let them speak: let us come near together to judgment.

1 Who raised up the righteous man from the east, called him to his foot, gave the nations before him, and made him rule over kings? he gave them unto the dust of his sword, and as driven stubble to his bow.

2 He pursued them, and passed safely; even by the way that he had not gone with his feet.

3 Who hath wrought and done it, calling the generations from the beginning? I the LORD, the First, and with the Last; I am He.

execute judgment for them. When the everlasting God hath begun his work of grace, he will never faint, nor be weary, nor withdraw his hand, till he have perfected it. But we should confide in his unsearchable wisdom, to perform his promises to us and to his church in his own time and manner; neither discouraged by the sense of our own weakness, nor by a view of the power of our enemies: as the Lord giveth power to the faint, nay, to those who have no might he causeth strength to abound. Let us then watch against unbelief, pride, and self-confidence: for if we go forth in our own strength, we shall faint, and utterly fall, however strong we may think ourselves. But if we wait on the Lord, out of weakness we shall be made strong; and having our hearts and hopes in heaven, we shall be carried above all difficulties, and be enabled to press forward, and lay hold of the prize of our high calling in Christ Jesus.

NOTES.

Chapter XLI. V. 1. JEHOVAH speaks through the whole of this chapter. He here calls on the most distant nations in reverent silence to hearken to the proofs which he is about to give, that he is the only true God, and that all their idols are nothing: and when they had attentively considered the subject, let them collect all their resolution, and draw near to plead their cause; that the controversy might at length be finally decided, whether JEHOVAH or their idols ought to be worshipped.

V. 2—4. Some eminent expositors suppose Cyrus to be here meant: but it is not likely that he should be called the righteous man, or righteousness, as in the original; nor could the success of that monarch give any general alarm to idolaters: and indeed this does not comport with that scheme of interpretation which seems most satisfactory. JEHOVAH is pointing out to idolaters the evidences of his being the only true God, and is about to predict those events which will terminate in the extermination of idolatry: but he previously calls the attention of the people to the victories, that had already been obtained by his worshippers over idolaters. The calling of Abraham, from the eastern country of Mesopotamia, was the first remarkable check, which God gave to idolatry after the flood, when it

2 B 2
5 The isles saw it, and feared; the ends of the earth were afraid, drew near, and came.

6 They helped every one his neighbour; and every one said to his brother, Be of good courage.

7 So the carpenter encouraged the goldsmith, and he that smootheth with the hammer; I that smote the anvil, saying, It is ready for the sodering: and he fastened it with nails, that it should not be moved.

8 But thou, Israel, art my servant, Jacob whom I have chosen, the seed of Abraham my friend.

9 Thou whom I have taken from the ends of the earth, and called thee from the chief men thereof, and said unto thee, Thou art my servant; I have chosen thee, that I may not cast thee away.

10 Fear thou not; for I am with thee: be not dismayed; for I am thy God: I will strengthen thee; yea, I will help thee; yea, I will uphold thee with the right hand of my righteousness.

11 Behold, all they that were incensed against thee shall be ashamed and confounded: they shall be as nothing; and they that strive with thee shall perish.

12 Thou shalt seek them, and shalt not find them, even them that contended with thee: they that war against thee shall be as nothing, and as a thing of nought.

13 For I the Lord thy God will hold thy right hand, saying unto thee, Fear not; I will help thee.

14 Fear not, thou worm Jacob, and ye descendants of Israel; I will help thee, saith the Lord, and thy Redeemer, the Holy One of Israel.

was about to become universal; and the opening of that grand design, by which the whole empire of Satan was in due time to be subdivided. As the pattern of all future believers, both in the manner of his justification and the effects of his faith, Abraham was properly distinguished as the righteous man. The Lord called him to his "foot," that is, to follow him in the most implicit and unreserved confidence and obedience. And though he was not generally a warrior, yet, relying on the power of Jehovah, he once marched forth at the head of a small company of his servants, against four victorious nations, and their armies; and God gave them before him, and made him master of them; so that they became dust, or stubble driven by the wind, before his sword and bow: and he pursued them with entire safety, through those parts of the land, into which he had never before travelled. (Notes, Gen. xxxiv.) This, and other interpositions of God in his favour, gave him a great ascendency over kings and nations: and were earnest of the victories which were promised to his posterity, and in due time granted. The king and people of Egypt first fell before the God of Israel; and then Arad, Sihon, Og, and their subjects, and the nations of Canaan: and thus Abraham, in his seed, ruled over many kings and nations. These events were notorious, and caused great alarm in the adjacent regions. Now, who effected these victories of Israel over the idolaters? even He, that bad predicted them, and had from the beginning called the generations of Israel from among the rest of the nations, speaking of them as already existing. And as Jehovah, the self-existent and eternal God, had been present with his people at first, so he would be to the last, to support them, and render them triumphant. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 5-7. The success that attended the servants of Jehovah, is here represented as exciting the apprehensions of the most distant nations, lest the cause of idolatry should be ruined. So that, being instigated by that ambitious spirit, who is worshipped by idolaters as the god of this world, they combine together, and encourage each other to support their idolatry, and render it prevalent against the cause of God and Israel. This was the case when Israel conquered Canaan; and in their wars with the Philistines, &c. (Marg. Ref.) It was still more remarkably so, when Christianity was established on the ruins of Pagan idolatry: and we have reason to expect a similar scene when antichristian idolatry shall be extirpated. The word rendered carpenter, is in the former chapter translated workman, and joined with meliteth, (19.) Probably some of the images were carved of wood, and covered with plates of gold.

V. 8, 9. The Lord in disdain leaves the idolaters to weary themselves in forming their idols, and strengthening their cause; and addresses himself to his people, to encourage them with assurances of support and victory. Israel was the servant and worshipper of Jehovah, through his gracious choice of him, and as the seed of Abraham, whom he had favoured and honoured with the peculiar name and privileges of his friend. Abraham had been called out of Mesopotamia, and the Israelites out of Egypt, from among the chief men of the earth; and the Lord still adhered to his choice; for though he had corrected and proved them by many adversities, yet he had not cast them off. But in these respects Israel was a type of the chosen seed, who are brought from every part of the earth into this Church, made the servants, the friends, and children of God, who will never reject them, or leave them to perish, (Marg. Ref.)

The word translated taken, seems equivalent to that used by St. Paul, concerning his own conversion: "for which also I am apprehended of Christ Jesus." (Phil. iii. 12.)
CHAPTER XLI.

15 Behold, "I will make thee a new sharp threshing instrument having teeth: thou shalt thresh the mountains, and beat them small, and shalt make the hills as chaff.

16 Thou shalt fan them, and the wind shall carry them away, and the whirlwind shall scatter them: and the Lord shall rejoice in the Lord, and shall glory in the Holy One of Israel.

17 When the poor and needy seek water, and there is none, and their tongue faieth for thirst, "I the Lord will hear them.

V. 10—14. "Fear not— for I have strengthened thee, "I have assisted thee, I have supported thee with my "rightful hand." (Bp. Lowth.) Past deliverances are mentioned, to encourage the expectation of future protection and support. The security and victories of the Church are, however, here predicted and promised: and the prophecy is couched in such terms, as can only be answered by the most complete triumph of true religion over idolatry and iniquity; yet at the same time it consists of promises, suited to the encouragement of believers through successive ages. They know themselves to be feeble, and see the cause of godliness destitute of external defence: but they are assured, that the Lord is with His Church; and every true member of it; therefore they ought not to be dismayed by the number, or power of their enemies. Jehovah himself will strengthen, assist and uphold his people, with his powerful arm performing his faithful promises, and maintaining his righteous cause. The powerful monarchies, that have been incensed against the Church, and have contended with her, have been put to shame, and brought to nothing: and this prediction hath already been fulfilled, in the ruine of the Egyptian, Assyrian, Chaldaean, Macedonian, and Roman empires, which we now may seek for in vain; for no vestiges of the three former, and scarcely any of the last, can be found, whilst the Church still subsists! In like manner all that now do, or hereafter shall contend with her, shall perish. For Jehovah leads his people by the right hand to the conflict; and both inspires them with courage and strength, and fights for them: and though they are as worms, in the contempt pored upon them, in their own humble sense of their weakness and inleness, and in their low and abject condition, and few in comparison with their enemies: yet their Redeemer, the Holy One of Israel, will render them victorious.—God's truth shall last prevail against all opposition; and the kingdom of Christ shall subdue and break in pieces all its adversaries." (Lowth.)

V. 15, 16. Deep rooted idolatrous empires, and systems of superstition and imposture, are like impassable mountains, and form obstructions to the propagation of the Gospel, insuperable to man; but the Lord will furnish his Church, from time to time, with proper instruments to destroy, or move out of the way, and even to disperse all remains of them. Something of this kind was done, in the ruin of the Chaldean monarchy, in order to Israel's deliverance from captivity. Much more in the subversion of the Pagan Roman empire, in order to the establishment of Christianity: but future events will more signalize the propriety of the metaphors here employed, which are taken from the methods of threshing and winnowing corn, which were then in use. (Notes, xxviii. 23—29.)

V. 17—20. The care taken to water and protect the poor Jews, when they returned from Babylon, as their fathers were provided for in the wilderness; and the re-establishment of their Church and state, in the desolated land of Judah, form but feeble accomplishments of this remarkable prophecy. We have met with repeated predictions of the conversion of the Gentiles under similar allusions. (Marg. Ref.) The provision that is made for the consolation of the poor and humble people of God, in all their distresses and persecutions from age to age, may be implied: but perhaps some intimation may also be given of the method in which he will accomplish his promises of spreading the Gospel. By the poor and needy, who seek "water and find none," the Lord seems to describe the case of people destitute of the means of grace, yet brought under a subjection of some indistinct and anxious desires of instruction and spiritual blessings. Cornelius and his friends, (the first Gentile convert,) were thus prepared to receive the Gospel, before it was sent to them: and Paul was called into Europe by a vision of a man of Macedonia, who begged him to come over and help them. Indeed we know not in what degree the Lord may facilitate the spread of Christianity in due time, by exciting anxious desires of instruction and salvation in the minds of those who have not hitherto heard the Gospel. Such desires will dictate earnest prayers, and the Lord will hear them, and not leave the suppliants destitute. Thus rivers, fountains, and wells of salvation, shall be opened in the most unlikely places; and trees of righteousness, both ornamental and fruitful, shall flourish in abundance, throughout the barren desert of the Gentile world. As these predictions shall be more and more accomplished, the power, truth, and love of God, will be seen, known, and considered more generally; and the progress of the Gospel will be with accelerated motion, as the stone falls to the earth with increasing rapidity. "I will "plant in the wilderness the cedar," &c.; "and it were on pure "pose for my people in their return home from the scorching 21 Produce your cause, saith the Lord; bring forth your strong reasons, saith the King of Jacob.

22 Let them bring them forth, and show us what shall happen: let them shew the former things, what they be, that we may consider them, and know the latter end of them: or declare us things for to come.

23 Show the things that are to come hereafter, that we may know that ye are gods: yea, do good, or do evil, that we may be dismayed, and behold it together.

24 Behold, ye are nothing, and your work of nought: an abomination is he that chooseth you.

25 I have raised up one from the north, and he shall come: from the rising of the sun shall he call upon my name; and he shall come upon princes as upon the mortar, and as the potter treadeth clay.

26 Who hath declared from the beginning, that we may know? and before time, that we may say, He is righteous? Yea, there is none that sheweth; yea, there is none that declareth; yea, there is none that heareth your words.

27 The first shall say to Zion, Behold, behold them: and I will give to Pharaoh, saith the Lord, in the name of the Lord, King of hosts.

V. 21-24. In these prophecies Jehovah speaks to mankind through all generations; and as his predictions are accomplished, his arguments gather force. Let the nations, in the mean time, plead for their idols, and produce their most cogent arguments. Let them bring forth some ancient indigenous oracles, that had already received as signal an accomplishment as the prophecies made to Abraham or to Israel; nay, let them give some satisfactory account of the creation of the world, and the transactions of former times, which might stand in competition with that given by Moses; and foretell the event of them. Or let them now utter some prophecies, like those of Jehovah's prophet, which, coming to pass, might justify their claim to be worshipped as gods: nay, let them interpose to inflict miraculous judgments upon their despisers, or to effect miraculous deliverances for their worshippers: that the people of God might evidently behold it together, and be dismayed; as the Egyptians, Canaanites, and Assyrians had been, at the wonderful works of God. But indeed the idols and their works were alike nothing, and they who chose them in preference to the true God, were an abomination to him. Let those of your idols, which ye think most powerful, approach. (Jerom.) I prefer this to all other interpretations of this place. The false gods are called upon to come forth and appear in person, and to give evident proofs of their foreknowledge and power by foretelling future events, and exerting their power in doing good or evil. (Bp. Louth.)

V. 25. Jehovah here predicts the victories of Cyrus over the Chaldeans and their allies, at least a hundred and fifty years before that expedition was undertaken; as one instance of his foreknowledge and invincible power. Media lay north of Babylon, and Persia eastward, and Cyrus commanded the forces of these two nations. The Lord raised him up to great power, and formed him a man of extraordinary courage and capacity. Though we do not read that he renounced idolatry to become the worshipper of God only; yet his decree proves, that he paid some honour and worship to his name, and thus may be said to have called on him; (Ezra i. 1, 2.) and by his wonderful success he trampled down mighty monarchs, as mortar, or as the potter treads the clay. We shall perceive as we go on that the deliverance of the Jews was a typical event; and consequently Cyrus was a typical person.
Jerusalem one that bringeth good tidings.

28 For I beheld, and there was no man; even among them, and there was no counsellor, that, when

V. 27—29. JEHOVAH, the First and the Last. (4;) first gave notice to Zion of future deliverers, the Medes and Persians: and he sent his prophets to announce the glad tidings of their redemption, before the commencement of their captivity. Now which of the idols of the Gentiles could do the like? The more the case was examined, the plainer did it appear that they could give no counsel to their worshippers, or answer to such inquiries; for they were all vanity, wind, and confusion.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.
V. 1—7.

When the religion of the Bible, and the ground on which it rests, are reverently and carefully investigated, they are found to have undoubted reason and argument on their side. But the enmity of men’s hearts, against the humblest holy truths and precepts of this precious book, disposes them rather to strengthen themselves, and collect together every apparent argument and objection that they can devise against it, than impartially to examine with a disposition to be convinced and governed by them. Yet the question must be decided at length: and however men now plead in behalf of error, infidelity, or impurity, they will have nothing to say, when they draw near together to meet the Lord upon his judge seat. Every work of God, in performing the prophecies and promises of his word, irrepressibly proves his right to our confidence and obedience: and it is worth our while to consider all that he hath done, from the beginning to this day, in fulfilling the antecedent revelations of his word. We should begin from the calling of righteous Abraham, and consider his care of that patriarch, and of Isaac, Jacob, and Joseph: we should review his wonders in Egypt, at the Red Sea, in the wilderness, and in Canaan: we should meditate on the wars of the Lord under Joshua, the Judges, Samuel and David, and on the wonders performed for Israel during the reigns of Asa, Jehoshaphat and Hezekiah: and remember, that the authenticity of these histories is fully ascertained by the concurring prophecies fulfilling to this day. We should next reflect on the return of the captive Jews from Babylon, and their preservation during the prevalence of successive conquerors and oppressors, until the birth of the promised Seed of the woman, the Seed of Abraham and Son of David. We should compare with these ancient prophecies the history of his character, miracles, doctrine, life, death, resurrection, and kingdom; the establishment of his religion in the world, and its continuance hitherto; notwithstanding the opposition against it from without, and the various methods within, that have been employed to corrupt it. We should also turn aside to contemplate the desolations of Nineveh, Babylon, and Tyre; and also those of Jerusalem, when the Saviour was rejected by his professed people; and whilst the New Testament authenticates all these predictions, we may behold its divine authority demonstrated, in the dispersion and preservation of the Jews as a distinct people; in the long continued corruptions of popery; and in a variety of other events, which cannot here be particularized. Now, who hath wrought and done all these things, according to these ancient predictions, but the everlasting God, who hath also predicted the ruin of idolaters, and unbelievers, and the full salvation of his people? Well may determined infidels and idolaters be dismayed, at hearing and seeing such things: for all their efforts to uphold their tottering cause will be in vain; it will shortly be ruined, and every remaining prediction will also be performed.

V. 8—20.

Happy are the chosen and righteous servants of the Lord, whom he hath called to be his friends, and to walk with him by faith, and in holy obedience. If we have thus been favoured, let us not yield to fear in the prospect of danger or enemies: our God will be our Guide and Strength, in every service and difficulty: our conflict may be sharp, but our victory will be sure; all, who hate, oppose, or harass us, shall be as nothing; and we shall shortly be out of their reach, and see them no more for ever. Why then do we hesitate to pass through scenes of tribulation or persecution; or even through the gloomy valley of death, when the Lord God will hold our right hand, and both inspire courage and consolation? And though we be weak and vile as worms, and the church consist hitherto of but a few despised men, struggling with difficulties like the strong mountains: yet our God will carry us above them all: he will provide for the subverting of every empire on earth, which supports the great empire of Satan, and they shall all be reduced to nothing, or driven away as chaff by the whirlwind; that we may rejoice in the Lord, and glory in the Holy One of Israel. These are the blessings reserved for the poor in spirit, and such as hunger and thirst after righteousness; who are become acquainted with the truth of their own character, situation, wants, and best interests, and who long for divine illumination, pardon, holiness, and spiritual consolation. Wherever they are placed, or how longsoever the desired blessings are delayed, and they seek water, and find none, and their tongue faileth for thirst; or however, through conscious guilt, or weakness of faith, they may think that the Lord will leave them destitute; yet he will hear their prayers, and answer them, and not forsake them. In his infinite truth, power, wisdom, and mercy, and in the unsearchable riches of Christ, they have a never-failing resource: and the Lord will supply all their wants, by means as unexpected as if rivers should be opened on the tops of mountains, and fountains in the valleys. And as he hath planted trees of righteousness in the barren Gentile lands; so will he render our barren souls fruitful in all the precious, ornamental, and pleasant fruits of his Spirit; that all, who behold, "may consider, and understand together, that the hand of the Lord hath done it, and the Holy One of Israel hath created it."
BEHOLD my Servant, whom I uphold; mine Elect, in whom I delight.

V. 21-29.

Let the advocates for other doctrines than that of God our Saviour, now produce their cause, and bring forth their strong arguments: can they show such effects from their soothing and self-flattering systems? Or can the infidel answer the arguments from prophecy for the divine original of the Scriptures? Can he match them with equal predictions from the oracles of reason? Or satisfactorily explain the appearances in the natural and moral world? Can he prescribe an effectual cure for human depravity? Or give proof to a reflecting mind, that he can establish any system of equal value with that which he labours to degrade? Until he evidently does these things, we must aver, that his cavils spring from pride and enmity to God and holiness, and are as irrational as they are impious; that they are worse than nothing, and vanity; and those that choose them are an abomination. But a deliverer is raised up for us of nobler name and greater power, than the deliverer of the captive Jews: he will trample all his powerful enemies under his feet, when he who from the beginning hath declared these things shall fulfil them, all may acknowledge that he is righteous. He alone sends those, who bring good tidings unto Zion; and all they that are not employed by him, can give no good counsel or instruction, solve the difficulties of distressed sinners, or speak one word to the purpose. May we then receive his salvation, cast away all our idols, and turn away our ears from hearing, and our eyes from beholding vanity; may we be numbered amongst his obedient servants and faithful friends, and rejoice in his holy consolations, in life, in death, and through eternal ages!

NOTES.

CHAP. XLII. V. 1-4. When spiritual blessings are predicted under the veil of temporal deliverances, some passages will accord best to the type, and others to the antitype: thus Cyrus and the redemption of the Jews are in this place last night of, that the Messiah and his salvation may be brought into full view. The natural import of the words, as well as the authority of the New Testament, do plainly determine this and many other texts, here and in the following chapters, to an evangelical sense. The soul delighteth; I have put my Spirit upon him: he shall bring forth judgment unto the Gentiles.

2 He shall not cry, nor lift up, nor cause his voice to be heard in the street.

3 A bruised reed shall he not break, and the smoking flax shall he not quench: he shall bring forth judgment unto truth.

4 He shall not fail nor be discouraged, till he have set judgment in the earth: and the isles shall wait for his law.

Holy Spirit taking occasion from the deliverance of the Jews, to give the prophet a view of a more glorious redemption, which should be accomplished by the Messiah.

(Lonth.) St. Matthew has applied it to Christ; nor can it, with justice or propriety, he applied to any other person or character whatever. (Bp. Louth.) (Matt. xii. 17-21.) He was "in the form of God, and took upon him the form of a servant." Being upheld by the divine power in his human nature, he finished the work that was given him to do: he is the first Elect of God, for his own sake, and to be the Head of the Church; and all others are elect in him: in his person, righteousness, and mediation, the Father is well pleased and greatly delighted: the Holy Spirit rests upon him, and is through him communicated to the Church; and he brings forth judgment to the Gentiles, or makes known unto them the truths, precepts, and ordinances of God, that they may become accepted believers, obedient servants, and spiritual worshippers of him. He did not appear with ostentations pomp, attraction and external honour; or to establish his kingdom by the violence and tumult of war and contention: but he was outwardly mild and behaved with humility, gentleness, and kindness; and acquired his peaceful victories by beneficent miracles, convincing instructions, a holy example, patient sufferings, and divine influences. He is peculiarly tender to the broken-hearted believer, and those whom temptations and afflictions had almost crushed, like the bruised reed; and will by no means break them: he encourages the first beginning of holy desires in the young convert; and revives the almost expiring spark in the baffled and backslidding believer; though it were only as the Offensive smoke from the stales of the flax, when it doth not break forth into a flame: and he will bring forth every man's judgment, with most perfect agreement to the truth of his case and character. In his personal ministry, and in that of his servants, he met with vast difficulties and great opposition; and both he and they were treated with great contempt, enmity, and cruelty: but nothing could induce him to leave his work unfinished, or to be discouraged in it, till he had established judgment, (or the truth, righteousness, and worship of Jehovah, in the earth; and the most distant
5 Thus saith God the Lord; he that created the heavens, and stretched them out; he that spreadeth forth the earth, and that which cometh out of it; he that giveth breath unto the people upon it, and spirit to them that walk therein:

6 I the Lord have called thee in righteousness, and will hold thine hand, and will keep thee, and give thee for a covenant of the people, for a Light of the Gentiles;

7 To open the blind eyes, to bring out the prisoners from the prison, and them that sit in darkness out of the pris- on-house.

8 I am the Lord; that is my name: and my glory will I not give to another, nor my praise to graven images. 9 Behold, the former things are come to pass, and new things do I declare: before they spring forth I tell it unto you. 10 Sing unto the Lord a new song, and his praise from the end of the earth, ye that go down to the sea, and all that is therein; ye isles, and the inhabitants thereof.

11 Let the wilderness and the cities thereof lift up their voice, the villages that take no part. 12 Let them shout from the mount tops, and from the hills, from every city, and in all the coasts of the sea, and the dwellers in the islands.

13 Kedar doth inhabit; let the inhabitants of the rock sing, let them shout from the top of the mountains.

12 Let them give glory unto the Lord, and declare his praise in the islands.

13 The Lord shall go forth as a mighty man, he shall stir up jealousy like a man of war: he shall cry, yea, roar; he shall prevail against his enemies.

14 I have a long time held my peace; I have been still, and refrained myself: now will I cry like a travailing woman; I will destroy, and deviser at once.

15 I will make waste mountains and hills, and dry up all their herbs; and I will make the rivers islands, and I will dry up the pools.

16 And I will bring the blind by a way that they knew not; I will lead them in paths that they have not known: I will make darkness light before them, and crooked things straight. These things will I do unto thee, and not forsake thee.

17 They shall be turned back, they shall be greatly ashamed, that trust in graven images, that say to the molten images, Ye are our gods.

18 Thus saith the Lord, who formed the heavens and stretched them out, who giveth breath unto the people upon the earth, and spirit to them that walk in it.
18 "Hear, ye deaf; and look, ye blind, that ye may see.
19 Who is blind, but my servant? and who is deaf, as my messenger that I sent? who is blind, as he that is perfect, and who is deaf, as the Lord's servant?
20 Seeing many things, but thou observest not; opening the ears, but he heareth not.

21 The Lord is well pleased for his sake, and shall cause him to rest in Jerusalem and see his posterity. This is my servant, in whom there is no unrighteousness.

22 But this is the covenant that I will make with them after those days, saith the Lord; I will put my laws into their mind, and write them in their hearts; and I will be to them a God, and they shall be to me a people:
23 And they shall teach no more every man his neighbour, saying, Go, and bear witness; for they shall not learn to dwell together as one.

24 And that generation shall not come to honour; and men shall not look for everlasting days.

25 Then said I, How long? and he answered, Until the city be fourscore years old. Then saith he, See! I will break his proud strength; and the city shall not be inhabited.

26 And it shall be on that day, that Jacob shall be saved, and he that is left shall be holy: and the house of Jacob shall be a God's home, and a place of the assembly of scholar's of Israel.

27_18. To 20. The Lord here calls the Gentiles, that had been deaf to his voice and blind to his glory, to hear and see; not without reference to the miracles of Christ. Or, as some think, he upbraids the Jews with their blindness and obstinate unbelief. The nation gloried in being the servants and worshippers of Jehovah; yet not only others, but the priests, prophets, and scribes, who were his messengers to the people, were become more blind and deaf than even the Gentiles: and whilst they deemed them selves so perfect, so wise and righteous, that they needed no instructor, and no repentance, and despised others, they were given up to judicial blindness and obduracy.

They saw indeed numerous miracles to prove Christ's mission; yet they did not observe them to any good purpose: and though they attended on his ministry, as opening their ears to his word; yet they neither believed nor obeyed him. (Marg. Ref.) "The word," (rendered he that is perfect) is meluhah in the Hebrew; whence the Arabian mussulman is derived, a tidge the Mahometans give to themselves. (Lowth.)

V. 21. This verse is variously interpreted. Some explain it of the willingness that the Lord had always shown to fulfil his covenant and promises to Israel, for the sake of showing himself faithful and just; and thus to magnify and honour his word. The Lord took delight in this people for his righteousness' sake; he hath given them an excellent law, and thereby made them honourable. (Lowth.) But these interpretations seem foreign to the subject of the prophecy, which is allowed to refer to the Messias and the conduct of the Jews in rejecting him: and if there be any eclipses to be supplied, as in the above translation, the verse may be thus rendered, "The Lord is well pleased, because of his, (the Messias') righteousness."

He (the Messias) "will magnify the law, and render it honourable."—He "brought in an everlasting righteousness," believers are "made the righteousness of God in him;" "His name is the Lord our righteousness;" and thus the holy law of God is established in honour and authority, both as to its precept and sanction. In him, the righteous Servant, the Chosen of God, "his soul delighteth:" (Note 1—4.) "This is my beloved Son, in whom I am well pleased;" for "he al ways did those things which pleased" the Father. This accords entirely with the New Testament, as well as with the scope of the prophecy. The Messias is the grand subject of the chapter; and seems here intended, though not expressly named, (1 John iii. 16. Greek.) While the Jewish rulers and teachers blindly rejected and crucified him, as an oppressor and violator of the divine law, God was well pleased on account of his righteousness, because he magnified the law, by his infinitely valuable obedience unto death, as well as by his holy doctrine: so that, for the sake of his righteousness and atonement, salvation was freely preached to the Jews first, and then to the Gentiles. And when the Jews put it from them, God took pleasure for his righteousness' sake, to magnify and honour his law, by inflicting on them deserved punishment. This connects the verse with those which follow, and shows the whole chapter to be a regular and connected prediction of the coming of Christ, and the events which followed, in the conversion of the Gentiles and the rejection of the Jews, without any direct reference to other events.

V. 22-25. These verses evidently predict the punishment inflicted on the Jewish nation for their obstinate en 24 Who gave Jacob for a spoil, and Israel to the robbers? did not the Lord, against whom we have sinned? for they would not walk in his ways, neither were they obedient unto his law.

25 Therefore hath he poured upon him the fury of his anger, and the strength of battle: and it hath set him on fire round about, yet he knew not; and it burned him, yet he laid it not to heart.

CHAPTER XLII.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

All the deliverers of God's people, and all his servants, have been types or subjects of his beloved Son and elect Servant, whom he upholdeth, and in whom he delighteth. Would we make our calling and election sure, and have the Father delight over us for good; we must behold and hear, believe and obey Christ: we must come through his mediation, receive from his fulness, and be directed by him in the ways of truth and righteousness. May he, without failure or delay, place judgment in the earth, and bring all the nations under the sun to welcome his salvation, and wait for his law. Whilst his long-suffering and compassion cheer our drooping hearts, and animate our feeble efforts to serve him, with the assurance that he will accept, assist, and comfort the feeblest and most distrest of those that believe in him; we should copy his example, and avoid all harshness and ostentation; we should learn to pity the tempted, to strengthen the weak hands, comfort the feeble knees, and comfort those that are of a fearful heart; not be discouraged, or led to give up useful designs because of obstacles and ill-treatment; "not weary of well doing, "for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not." How gracious was the Lord, the eternal Creator and Governor of the world, when instead of sending a powerful avenger among his rebellious creatures, he commissioned his beloved Son to be our Surety, and to mediate a new covenant of peace for all those that believe in him; and to bring poor blinded and enslaved sinners of the Gentiles, into the glorious liberty and marvellous light of his Gospel! How great is his wisdom in rendering this meritorious salvation honourable to his justice, and subservient to the cause of holiness on earth! may his Spirit attend his word to open the eyes of sinners in every place, and to turn them from Satan to God and righteousness: and surely we should consider our abilities, wealth, or influence, to be best laid out, in promoting that blessed cause for which the Redeemer shed his precious blood; that God in all things may be glorified, and that idolatry and impiety may be suppressed and exterminated. We should not now expect more prophecies; but we enjoy the benefit of that accumulated evidence, which arises from the completion of former prophecies from age to age. Let us then abound in songs of praise, even in this isle of the sea, whose extensive navigation never brought over so rich a freight, as when it landed the preachers of the Gospel on our shores; for at that time this country was more devoid of spiritual knowledge and grace, than the scorched plains of Kedar ever were of vegetable treasures. Let then the Redeemer's name resound through our cities, villages, plains, and mountains; and let our merchants and sailors give glory to the Lord, and declare his praise.

V. 13—25.

Alas! iniquity and infidelity still abound; and Satan is permitted to deceive the nations of the earth. For a long time Jehovah hath held his peace; and his enemies think, that they shall triumph over his Gospel; but their consternation will equal their anguish, when he shall appear to confound and destroy them, and to desolate whole nations, that have sinned in defiance of his word. All his saints in heaven and on earth will acknowledge, that he "brought them when blind in a way that they knew not." He met them with his word, when they were not seeking after him: he sent his ministers to their neighbourhood, perhaps against their will; and at length conquered their prejudices and opened their eyes: then he led them in paths of truth and peace, and sometimes of trial and temptation, to which they were utter strangers: but he still made darkness light before them, and crooked things straight: he cleared up their doubts, obviated their perplexities, helped them to surmount obstacles, and did them good by all their troubles: and thus gave them daily proof, that he would never leave nor forsake them, either in temptation, in death, or judgment; when all the worshippers of idols and workers of iniquity shall be confounded together. But, alas! how many professing Christians and nominal ministers are more blind, than even the heathen heathens, so that, whilst the voice of God causeth the deaf to hear and the blind to see; they, who think they do see, and are proud of their knowledge and skill, are given up to judicial blindness and obstinacy; and all instruction and arguments tend to increase their enmity and guilt! Whilst the Lord is well pleased in saving sinners, through the righteousness of Christ; he will also take pleasure in glorifying his justice, by punishing such proud de-CHAP. XLIII.

Promises to Israel of support, deliverance out of trouble, and abundant honour and increase, 1—7. A challenge to idolaters and idols to equal these prophecies, or the miracles wrought by Jehovah for his people, 8—13. Predictions of deliverance from Babylon attended with its ruin, and of spiritual redemption, 14—21. Heavy charges against Israel, contrasted with the freeness of God's pardoning mercy to them, 22—28.

BUT now thus saith the Lord that created thee, O Jacob, and he that formed thee, O Israel, Fear not; for I have redeemed thee, I have called thee by thy name; thou art mine.

2 When thou passest through the waters, I will be with thee; and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee: when thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burned; neither shall the flame kindle upon thee.

3 For I am the Lord thy God, the Holy One of Israel, thy Saviour: I have given Egypt for thy ransom, Ethiopia and Seba for thee.

4 Since thou wast precious in my sight, thou hast been honourable, and I have loved thee: therefore will I give men for thee, and people for thy life.

5 Fear not; for I am with thee: I will bring thy seed from the east, and gather thee from the west:

6 I will say to the north, Give up; and to the south, Keep not back: bring my sons from far, and my daughters from the ends of the earth;

7 Even every one that is called by my name, for I have created him; for my glory, I have formed him; yea, I have made him.

8 I will surely bring upon thee the days of the fastings, of the assembly, and of the carrying away of vessels, in the times of my vengeance; and they shall come to thee with weeping and with supplications; I will place them to sing and to make melody; I will multiply them that are planted, and I will increase thy fruit from one to another.

9 For I will interlard thee with wheat, and with barley shall I fill thee; and I will cause the daughter of Zion to eat of thy substance.

10 I will make thee an ved and a seat of pride, in every place where thou wast not esteemed, I will make thee a name and praise thee in every land where thou wast not known before, because of the multitude of riches and honour that I will give thee. I will make thee a name, and thou shalt be a joy to the whole earth. For I will destroy the voice of mourning and the voice of weeping from thee for ever; and will give thee an everlasting joy, and everlasting praise.

11 I will be very to thee; therefore will I take up thy goods into captivity, and all thy riches I will give for spoil to all that spoil thee; I will forgive thee for all that thou hast done, saith the Lord thy Redeemer. For I will take up thy goods into captivity, and all thy riches I will give for spoil to all that spoil thee, saith the Lord thy Redeemer. For I will take up thy goods into captivity, and all thy riches I will give for spoil to all that spoil thee, saith the Lord thy Redeemer.

NOTES.

CHAP. XLIII. V. 1, 2. From the conclusion of the preceding chapter, the pious remnant might have concluded, that the Lord was about finally to cast off the whole nation. But he here assures them, that having created them, formed them into a people, redeemed them from their enemies, and called them by the name of Israel, (a prince of God,) to his own inheritance; he would still shew them special favours: even as, if, by his powerful presence with them, they should pass over seas and rivers; nay, through raging fires, without burn or harm. (Marg. Ref.) Accordingly, the nation being preserved through all the ravages of the Chaldean invasion and through the captivity, was again restored to prosperity; even the desolations which attended and followed the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, did not consume it; but the Jews have been kept distinct from other nations to this day, notwithstanding their dispersions, and the massacres and oppressions to which they have been continually exposed. This is as marvellous an effect of God's power, as if they had passed through vehement flames unscorched, or dry shod through rivers and seas. This seems to be the prophetic meaning; as a promise it ensures the preservation of true believers, through all possible trials and temptations. — God's elect are called " the work of his hands," (xix. 23. ix. 21;) and these God will never utterly forsake, (Ps. cxxxvii. 8.) 'It is probably, that many of the promises, here and in the following chapters, relate to the general restoration of the Jews.' (Lornth.) V. 3, 4. When Egypt was desolated, that Israel might be liberated, that nation was given for their ransom. Sennacherib was taken off from besieging Jerusalem, by successful wars against the Egyptians and Ethiopians: and these nations, when vanquished by Cyrus, might be considered as a ransom paid him for the release of the Jews. Or, in general, when the preservation of Israel required the ruin of any person or nation, the Lord readily gave it up for their sakes. Before he testified his special regard for them, they were base and contemptible, but his favour rendered them honourable among the nations; and he would persevere in his love, and continue to give the same proofs of it, as heretofore. 'I will not spare any nation rather than thou shouldst perish; for God more esteemeth one of his faithful, than all the wicked in the world.' "I will give man for thee," (or Adam, in the singular number.) The clause is thus literally rendered in the old version: "The second Man," (or Adam,) "is the Lord from heaven;" and "God spared not his own Son, but delivered him up for us all." V. 5—7. The Jews were scattered by the Chaldeans into different regions; they were industriously the sons and daughters of the Lord, and called by his name; and they were gradually gathered from their captivity to Jerusalem and Judah. Yet it does not appear that many of them were brought from the west or the south, on that occasion; or that they were generally new created to holiness, and prepared to glorify God, as it is here implied. But a conversion of sinners in every quarter of the globe, to be through Christ the children of God; and the future conversion of the dispersed Jews to Christianity, seem to be CHAPTER XLIII.

8 ¶ Bring forth the blind people that have eyes, and the deaf that have ears.

9 Let all the nations be gathered together, and let the people be assembled: who among them can declare this, and shew us former things? let them bring forth their witnesses, that they may be justified; or let them hear, and say, It is truth.

10 Ye are my witnesses, saith the Lord, and my servant whom I have chosen: that ye may know and believe me, and understand that I am he: before me there was no god formed, neither shall there be after me.

11 I, even I, am the Lord; and beside me there is no Saviour.

12 I have declared, and have saved, and have shewed, when there was no strange god among you: therefore ye are my witnesses, saith the Lord, that I am the Lord.

13 Ye still before the day was, I am He; and there is none that can deliver out of my hand: I will work, and who shall lift it up?

14 ¶ Thus saith the Lord, your Redeemer, the Holy One of Israel, for your sake I have sent to Babylon, and have brought down all their nobles, and the Chaldeans, whose cry is in the ships.

15 I am the Lord, your Holy One, the Creator of Israel, your King.

16 Thus saith the Lord, which maketh a way in the sea, and a path in the mighty waters:

17 Which bringeth forth the chariot and horse, the army, and the power: they shall lie down together, they shall not rise: they are extinct, they are quenched as tow.

18 Remember ye not the former things, neither consider the things of old.

19 Behold, I will do a new thing; now it shall spring forth; shall ye not know it? I will even make a way in the wilderness, and rivers in the desert.

20 The beast of the field shall honour me, the dragons and the owls; because I gave waters in the wilderness, and rivers in the desert, to drink to my people, whom I soosen.

21 This people have I formed for myself; they shall shew forth my praise.
ISAIAH.

22 But thou hast not called upon me, O Jacob; but thou hast been weary of me, O Israel.

23 Thou hast not brought me the small cattle of thy burnt offerings, neither hast thou honoured me with thy sacrifice. I have not caused thee to serve with an offering, nor wearied thee with thine iniquities.

24 Thou hast bought me no sweet cane with money; neither hast thou filled me with the fat of thy sacrifices: but thou hast made me to serve with thy sins, thou hast wearied me with thine iniquities.

25 I, even I, am he that blotteth out thy transgressions for mine own sake, and will not remember thy sins.

26 Put me in remembrance: let us plead together: declare thou, that thou mayest be justified.

27 Thy first father hath sinned, and thy thy teachers have transgressed against me.

28 Therefore I have profaned the princes of the sanctuary, and have given Jacob to the curse, and Israel to reproaches.

29 The deliverance from Babylon is here primarily predicted: but the language soon becomes so elevated and energetic, that it must refer to still greater events. Israel's holy Redeemer, out of love to them, sent the Medes and Persians to take Babylon, and to abase their nobles, (or to destroy the bars of their gates,) and those who gloried and confided in their ships. Babylon was well situated for navigation, till the channel of the Euphrates was purposely obstructed after Cyrus had taken that city. -Jeremiah had long ago divided the sea, and destroyed the power of Egypt to deliver Israel; but these former deliverances should not be worthy of remembrance, compared with what he was about to do for them. The deliverance from Egypt was, however, attended with far greater wonders, than the reduction of the Jews from Babylon: but the redemption of Christ, the conversion of the Gentiles, and the recall of the Jews into the Church, may well be considered as far more glorious events. The emblems here used had already been explained; (Notes, xxx. 25. xxxv. 17-19.) The image is highly poetical. God will give such abundant miraculous supplies of water, that the wild beasts, &c. which haunt those desert regions, shall break forth into thanksgiving. (Bp. Lowth.) -As the Lord forms believers by his grace to show forth his praise; so the Jewish nation seems to have been constituted on purpose, that he might manifest his justice, power, truth, and mercy, in his dealings with them through every age, to the world. -"This people have I purchased, (or made peculiarly mine,) that they may show forth my praises." (Sept.) This language so much resembles that of St. Peter, that it is evident he referred to it in these words, "A peculiar people, that ye should show forth the praises of him, who hath called you out of darkness into his marvellous light." (1 Pet. ii. 9, 10, Greek;) and this shows, that true believers are the Israel to whom these promises are especially addressed.

V. 22-25. The Israelites were always disposed to formal worship of Jehovah as weary of his service: the lambs, kids, and other cattle which he claimed for sacrifice, were either withheld, or offered in a dishonest manner. He had not laid on them such injunctions as could injure them: nor would he have insisted on their offering frankincense, if they had not been able to pay them. But instead of expending their wealth in purchasing spices, sweet ointments, and oblations for the house of God, they made his kind providence to subserve their iniquities, and even wearied his patience out by their rebellion. So that all the mercies that they had received, and that complete forgiveness which he revealed and promised, (blotting out their sins as a cancelled debt, and making no more mention of them than if he had quite forgotten them,) must be allowed to be wholly unmerited; the fruit of his abundant grace, for his own glory, and not any thing due to them for their good behaviour, but notwithstanding their aggravated provocations. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 26-28. If the Jews could deny this charge, let them remind God of their good works, and plead with him, declaring on what ground they expected to be continued in his favour, and to be justified before him. But indeed their remote ancestors from Adam to that time, and their high priests, chief rulers, and teachers had combined in transgression: and therefore God had treated them as if they were heathens, notwithstanding their external relation to him and his sanctuary; and had given up the nation as accursed, to be every where reproached, and treated with contempt. I have suffered the Babylonians to profane the sanctuary, to abuse the chief priests, and pollute whatever is sacred. (Lowth.) Their king, also, the anointed of the Lord, of David's line, might be intended. (Marg. Ref.) The prophecy, however, had its moral signal fulfilment in the combination of the high priest, chief priests, scribes, and rulers against Christ; and in the rejected and disgraced state of the nation, with its rulers and teachers, to this day. But as of mere mercy, their national guilt was pardoned, and they were brought back from Babylon: so the Lord, of the same abounding grace, will bring them to repentance and faith in Christ, and glorify himself in blotting out all their transgressions.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-13.

If we are not only called by the name of the Lord our Creator and Redeemer, but are really partakers of his member these things; and promises forgiveness, and many blessings, especially deliverance by Cyrus from the Babylonish captivity, 21—28.

Yet now hear, O Jacob, my servant; and Israel, whom I have chosen:

true God and eternal life; he saves his people by himself, and needs no created aid; and the help he sends in answer to their prayers, enables them to testify that he never fails those that trust in him.

V. 14—28.

As none can deliver the enemies of God out of his hand; so none can hinder him from effecting the deliverance of his friends. It is as easy for him to divide rivers and seas, and to destroy unnumbered legions that obstruct their path, as to quench the fire in tow. But external miracles are as nothing compared with that great work and mystery of godliness, God manifested in the flesh, purchasing the Church with his own blood. These things the angels desire to look down into. And all that remains to be done, to bring the believer to glory, to rescue sinners from the bondage of Satan, and to cause the heathen to rejoice in and glorify God our Saviour, is little, compared with that work of incomprehensible love and power. Let us then bless God for the waters which spring forth for us, in this barren wilderness, and let us endeavour to answer the end of our creation and redemption, by showing forth his praises. But, too many professed Christians love a cheap and easy religion; and are negligent or weary of every duty, and grudge all expense or trouble; nay, they weary God by their iniquities and rebellions. Indeed he may well expostulate with each of us. We allow his service to be perfect freedom; that he hath a right to all we have and are; and that he requires of us nothing, but for our own and each other's profit: yet often we neglect to call upon him, or seem weary of his ordinances; we are scanty in our measure of services as if we grudged him our time; we often grieve his Spirit, and weary out his patience with our relapses into sin, and our ingratitude and folly: so that, from first to last, he blotteth out our transgressions for his own sake, and not because we have any claim to such a benefit. If any man imagine himself an exception to this rule, let him draw near and plead his cause, and declare on what grounds he rests his hope of being justified. Alas! the attempt is desperate: our first father transgressed the covenant, and we all, teachers and rulers, as well as others, have copied his example of rebellion; and if we should all be left under his curse, and to everlasting reproach and misery, we could have nothing to answer or plead in our own behalf. But "where sin hath abounded grace did much more abound;" yet let none "sin on that grace may abound;" we have no reason to expect pardon, except we seek it by faith in Christ; and this is always attended by deep repentance, and followed by newness of life, from hatred of sin and love to God our Saviour.
2 Thus saith the Lord, that made thee, and formed thee from the womb, which will help thee; Fear not, O Jacob, my servant; and thou Jesurun, whom I have chosen.

3 For I will pour water upon him that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground: I will pour my Spirit upon thy seed, and my blessing upon thine offspring;

4 And they shall spring up as among the grass, as willows by the watercourses.

5 One shall say, I am the Lord's; and another shall call himself by the name of Jacob, and another shall subscribe with his hand unto the Lord, and surna.me himself by the name of Israel.

6 Thus saith the Lord, the King of Israel, and his Redeemer the Lord of hosts, I am the First, and I am the Last; and beside me there is no God.

7 And who, as I, that shall call, and shall declare it, and set it in order for me, since I appointed the ancient people? and the things that are coming, and shall come, let them shew unto them.

8 Fear ye not, neither be afraid: have not I told thee from that time, and have declared it? ye are even my witnesses. Is there a god beside me? yea, there is no god; I know not any.

9 They that make a graven image are all of them vanity; and their work is all vanity. They worship that cannot see or know; therefore they are their own witnesses.

10 Who hath formed a god, or molten a graven image that is profitable for nothing?

11 Behold, all his fellows shall be ashamed: and the workmen, they are of the men: let them all be gathered together, let them stand up, yet shall they fear, and they shall be ashamed together.

V. 2. Jesurun. (Note, Deut. xxxii. 16.)

V. 3-5. Water is the emblem of the Holy Spirit: as water refreshes, enlivens, cleanses, and fructifies the earth; so do his influences the soul, which without them would remain destitute of good and of all true consolation. When any descendants of Israel, through revolving ages, thirst for spiritual blessings, this promise is ready in their Scriptures for their direction and encouragement. As a prediction, it hath been accomplished as often, as true religion hath been revived: but it seems particularly to predict the pouring out of the Spirit on and after the day of Pentecost; and a still more glorious completion may yet be expected, both in respect of Jews and Gentiles. —When desires are excited and fervent prayers offered, for the pouring out of the Spirit on any place, where the power of godliness has been little experienced, the blessing may be expected, and converts will spring up as grass in well watered meadows, or as willows on the banks of rivers and brooks; and these will dedicate themselves to the Lord, as his servants and worshippers, setting their hands and seals to the new covenant of his grace, and joining themselves to his people to walk in holy fellowship with them. Some think, that the phrase, to subscribe with his hand unto the Lord, signifies bearing his name, as belonging to him: as soldiers are said to have been marked in the body with the name of their leader, slaves with that of their owner, and idolaters with that of their idol. (Rev. xiii. 16-18.)

V. 6-8. Israel's Redeemer and King, the everlasting Jehovah, and the only true God, here again challenges the idols and their worshippers to call forth, and to declare in order before him, a series of predictions similar to that which he had given and been accomplishing, since he appointed to the ancient inhabitants of the earth their several abodes; and to show the things that should come to pass immediately, or in distant periods. By the ancient people, or the people of eternity, Israel seems to be meant, as the type of the elect, whom God hath from the beginning chosen unto eternal salvation. He chose Abraham and his family to be his peculiar people: over whom he hath all along exercised a particular providence: and hath from time to time foreshowed what should befall them, which accordingly has come to pass. (Lomth.) Indeed a compendious history of that nation from the calling of Abraham to this day, (that is, for three thousand seven hundred years,) might be drawn up, without very material alterations, from the various prophecies concerning them contained in the Scriptures. (Marg. Ref.) As then Israel had such proof, that their God alone could do such wonders, they ought not either to worship idols or to fear idolaters. They were witnesses for God, that he had from ancient times declared the events, which had come to pass: and he appealed to them, whether there were any god beside him, or any other rock, or protector, who could defend them: for he, who knew all things, knew not any. —Let any serious mind compare this decisive language with the tenour of the New Testament concerning Christ; and he will perceive that it is necessary to admit the mystery of distinct persons in the Godhead, in order to reconcile them. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 9-11. The subsequent passage contains the most keen reproof of idolatry, and even invective against it, 12 The smith with the tongs both worketh in the coals, and fashioneth with hammers, and worketh it with the strength of his arms: yea, he is hungry, and his strength faileth: he drinketh no water, and is faint.

13 The carpenter stretcheth out his rule, he maketh it out with a line; he fitteth it with planes, and he marketh it out with the compass, and maketh it after the figure of a man, according to the beauty of a man; that it may remain in the house.

14 He heweth him down cedars, and taketh the cypress and the oak, which he strengtheneth for himself among the trees of the forest: he planteth an ash, and the rain doth nourish it.

15 Then shall it be for a man to burn: for he will take thereof and warm himself; yea, he kindleth it, and baketh bread; yea, he maketh a god, and worshippeth it; he maketh it a graven image, and faileth down thereto.

16 He burneth part thereof in the fire; with part thereof he eateth flesh; he roasteth roast, and is satisfied: yea, he warmeth himself, and saith, Aha, I am warm; I have seen the fire.

17 And the residue thereof he maketh a god, even his graven image: he faileth down unto it, and worshippeth it, and prayseth unto it, and saith, Deliver me; for thou art my god!

18 They have not known nor understood: they shut their eyes, that they cannot see; and their hearts, that they cannot understand.

19 And none considereth in his heart, neither is there knowledge nor understanding...
24 Thus saith the Lord, thy Redeemer, and he that formed thee from the womb, I am the Lord that maketh all things; that stretcheth forth the heavens alone; that spreadeth abroad the earth by myself;

25 That frustrateth the tokens of the liars, and maketh diviners mad; that turneth wise men backward, and maketh their knowledge foolish;

26 That confirmeth the word of his servant, and performeth the counsel of his messengers; that saith to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be inhabited; and to the cities of Judah, Ye shall be built; and I will raise up the decayed places thereof:

27 That saith to the deep, Be dry, and I will dry up thy rivers:

28 That saith of Cyrus, He is my shepherd, and shall perform all my pleasure: even saith saying to Jerusalem, Thou shalt be built; and to the temple, Thy foundation shall be laid.

V. 20. Ashes. Not only to be nauseous and destitute of nourishment, if eaten as bread, but very prejudicial: thus idolatry, used as religion for the sustenance of the flesh, is not only useless, but ruinous; and whether men seek happiness in worldly things, or run into infidelity, superstition, pharisianism, enthusiasm, or any false system of religion, the case is similar; as they seek support to their souls from things that indeed will prove the cause of their destruction. A heart, deceived by pride, love of sin, and alienation from God, turns men thus aside from him: and whilst the affections are depraved, a man cannot detect his own error, nor deliver his own soul; but he holds the lie fast in his right hand, as his peculiar treasure.

V. 22. God. When their transgressions impeded over them, as a threatening storm, apparently about to burst in vengeance on their heads, he had scattered them as the wind disperses the black clouds: and therefore they should be encouraged to return to him as their Redeemer. This seems especially to refer to the case of the Jews, during the captivity, and in their present dispersion; and it implies a promise of pardon and deliverance, as well as an exhortation to repentance. In that redemption, of which the deliverances of Israel were types, provision is made for the free pardon of all that believe; and the proclamation of this by the Gospel excites and encourages sinners to return to God. But it would be absurd to argue from the arrangement of a single sentence, contrary to the whole tenor of Scripture, that forgiveness precedes repentance.

V. 23. An apostrophe to the whole creation, to join in praising God for his wonderful mercies; which shows that they are such, as all the world are some way concerned in: and such only are the mercies of the Gospel, for which the earth ought to rejoice; because the blessings are extended to all mankind; and the angels in heaven will sympathize with men below, because they joy in the conversion and salvation of mankind, and in their being reunited to that blessed society, of which Christ is the Head. (Lomth.) (Marg. Ref.)

V. 24. By myself. The apostle says that "God created all things by Jesus Christ, and by whom also he made the world." For "He and the Father are one." V. 25—28. The God of Israel had often confounded the magicians and wise counsellors of his enemies; and in this case he determined to frustrate the expectations of all the Chaldean soothsayers and diviners; to prove them liars, and absolutely to inanify them. He would expose the folly of all their wise men, when they could not read the hand-writing to Belshazzar, nor detect Cyrus' device to take Babylon; and he would equally shame the politicians, when it was proved that they had used no suitable or effectual means of defence against the besiegers. At the same time he confirmed the word of his servant Isaiah, and performed every thing according to the information given by his messengers, the prophets, in bringing these events to pass. When this prophecy was delivered, Jerusalem and Judah were inhabited and at peace. But it was intimated that the city and temple would be destroyed to the foundations; (this took place about a hundred and twenty years afterwards;) and that they should be rebuilt by orders from Cyrus, which happened about a hundred and seventy years after. Cyrus, (who is the only man, except Josiah,
B. C. 708.

CHAPTER XLV.

CHAP. XLV.

God promises Cyrus success, that he might liberate the Jews; declares his eternal Deity, as the Creator of all things; promises glorious success to his church, and rebukes those that quarreled with his appointments, 1—14. The prophet adores his deep counsels, pronounces the confusion of idolaters, and assures Israel of salvation, 15—20. Jehovah reveals himself as a just God and a Saviour; and swears by himself, that all should bow to him, and that Israel should be justified and glory in him, 21—25.

that was predicted by name much above a hundred years before his birth,) was appointed to act as shepherd over the Lord's scattered flock. The promise that Jerusalem should be inhabited was to be fulfilled, by Cyrus giving orders for its being rebuilt, and the foundations of the temple laid: and the foundations were indeed laid in his time, but it was not built till some time afterwards! The manner in which Babylon was taken was also foretold: the wide and deep river Euphrates, which ran through the city, was emptied into a vast lake prepared to receive its superfluous waters, and Cyrus marshed his army into the city by the channel of the river.—Probably this prophecy, shown by Daniel to Cyrus, hastened the deliverance of the Jews.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—5.

When the greater part of any Church is become totally corrupt and ripe for divine vengeance, there may yet be a few of another character: warnings and calamities may bring a remnant to repentance; and encouragement must be given to them. For however the Lord may deal with atrocious offenders, he will always have a company of chosen servants, that will hear his call and obey his voice. Having formed them to be upright in heart, he unites towards them the love of a Creator and a Redeemer; and he would have them discard those dejecting fears, which are often excited by his denunciations of wrath against hypocrites. Whithersoever his providence may lead them, his grace shall refresh their thirsty souls, and cause them to flourish as a watered garden. The blessed influences of the Spirit render the barren desert and the dry ground a fruitful field. May our souls, our families, our congregations, our land, and all the nations of the earth be abundantly replenished with it! Then shall we abound in the fruits of righteousness; and believers will be daily added to the Lord.—He is ever ready to receive the sinner to mercy, and into his service; and nothing can hinder our being his people, and he our God, except our own proud and carnal unwillingness. But when his Spirit is poured out upon any congregation, that was before formal and lifeless; one and another continually springs up and comes forth, to profess his acceptance of the Saviour and subjection to him; this tends to enliven others, and a blessed change is soon perceived.—It behooves those who have learned to hope in the Lord's mercy, and to love his pleasant ways, to make an open profession of their faith and intended devot- edness to his service; solemnly to ratify the new covenant of his grace, and to avow their purpose of cleaving to him steadfastly; to join themselves to his people; to put themselves under the care of such as watch for their souls, and to seek the benefit of brotherly inspection and admo-
THUS saith the LORD to his anointed, to Cyrus, whom he hath made strong for his purpose, to subdue nations before him, and to loose the loins of kings; to open before him the two-leaved gates; and the gates shall not be shut:

2 I will go before thee, and will make the crooked places straight: I will break in pieces the gates of brass, and cut in sunder the bars of iron:

3 And I will give thee the treasures of darkness, and hidden riches of secret places, that thou mayest know that I, the LORD, which call thee by thy name, am the God of Israel.

4 For Jacob my servant's sake, and Israel mine elect, have I even called thee by thy name: I have surnamed thee, thou though thou hast not known me.

5 I am the LORD, and there is none else, there is no god besides me: I girded thee, though thou hast not known me.

6 That they may know from the rising of the sun, and from the west, that there is none besides me: I am the LORD, and there is none else.

NOTES.
CHAP. XLV. V. 1—5. The Lord here addressed Cyrus as if present; he was the anointed of God, as he was set apart for this work, and as he was a type of Christ our Redeemer. Cyrus, being made strong by the right hand, and strengthened by the Lord, would certainly be victorious. Jerovah subdued many other nations before him, previously to his conquest of Babylon; and he degraded or enfeebled many kings by him: Belshazzar especially was thus intimidated before he was destroyed. (Marg. Ref.) All the streets of Babylon, that led down on each side to the river, were secured by two leaved brazen gates, which used to be shut every night: and when Cyrus marched his army into the channel of the river, he could not, without great danger and difficulty, have taken the city, had not the Babylonians, engaged that night in feasting and mirth, and dispersing his efforts, left these gates open. Thus God opened before him the two-leaved gates; or what was equivalent, he took care that they should not be shut: and so he met with no hinderance, till he surprised the king in his palace, and by his death ended the contest at once. Indeed the Lord went before him, through his whole expedition, to remove every obstacle to his success: he broke before him the gates of brass and bars of iron, which obstructed his entrance into the various cities that he besieged; and he gave him immense treasures, that had long been deposited in dark and secret places, so that his spoil is said to have amounted to above a hundred and twenty millions sterling.—The exact fulfilment of these prophecies was intended to convince Cyrus, that the God of Israel, who had called him by name, surnamed him his shepherd and his anointed, and girded him with strength, when he was an entire stranger to him, was indeed the only true God. (Ezek. 1:2.) This was for the sake of Israel, his chosen servant, and in order to effect their release, and to make-known to the most distant regions, that there was no other God but Jehovah.—The word mystery with the potsherds of the earth. Shall the clay say to him that fashioneth it, What maketh thou? or thy work, He hath no hands?

10 Woe unto him that saith unto his father, What begettest thou? or to the woman, What hast thou brought forth?

Thus saith the Lord, the Holy One of Israel, and his Maker, Ask me of things to come concerning my sons, and concerning the work of my hands and command ye me.

and the earth, where he took his human nature in which he magnified the law, satisfied justice, and finished his work, brought forth salvation. When, after his exaltation in heaven, the Holy Spirit was poured out, and by his influence numbers of sinners were converted, saved, and made fruitful in all good works; then the skies poured down righteousness, the earth received the blessed communication, and brought forth salvation and righteousness together; and the whole was the work of the wisdom, power, holiness, truth, and mercy of God our Creator.—Justice and salvation, mercy and truth, righteousness and peace and glory, dwelling in the land, cannot with any sort of propriety, be interpreted as the consequences of that event, (the return of the Jews from Babylon;) they must mean the blessings of the great redemption by the Messiah. (Bp. Lomth.)

V. 9, 10. This seems to be more immediately addressed to those Jews, that quarrelled with the divine conduct; as if they would accuse God of injustice, unfaithfulness, or unkindness. But by this they could only bring ruin on themselves. Whilst men contend with each other, they are equally matched; and like potsherds dashed one against the other, they break and are broken in their turn; but they cannot hope to obtain so much as a temporary advantage in contending with the Almighty; either by rebelling against his authority, or disputing against his appointments. Such a conduct is as absurd, as if the clay should quarrel with the shape into which the potter had thought good to form it: or as if any work should charge the maker with want of skill, averring that he had no hands, or else he would have made it otherwise. It is as ungrateful and foolish, as if a child should revile his parents, because his shape is not more comely, or his constitution more vigorous, or that he is not of an angelic nature. But it is especially perverse and presumptuous for men to arrange the dispensations of God; because the whole is the result of infinite wisdom, justice, truth, and goodness. (Rom. xi. 15—21.)

V. 11. Ask, &c. Or, "Do ye ask me? &c. Do ye question me, or call me to account, concerning my future dealings with my children; and give me orders how I am to behave in my own creation! The verse seems to be an application of those which go before, and a reproclamation of those Jews who disputed against the prophecies respecting them. They supposed themselves to be exclusively the children of God, and to have a special right to his peculiar favour which could not be forfeited: yet He 12 I have made the earth, and created man upon it: I, even my hands, have stretched out the heavens, and all their host have I commanded.

13 I have raised him up in righteousness, and I will direct all his ways: and he shall build my city, and he shall let go my captives, not for price nor reward, saith the Lord of hosts.

14 Thus saith the Lord, The labour of Egypt, and the merchandise of Ethiopia, and of the Sabæans, men of stature, shall come over unto thee, and they shall be thine: they shall come over to thee in chains: they shall fall down unto thee; they shall be laid upon the ground at thy feet. (Isaiah 41:12-14) had given intimations, that he would severely punish them, cast them off and call the Gentiles into his Church: and this excited their murmurs and presumptuous inquiries and objections. Some, however, take the words in a quite a different sense, especially induced by the introduction, “Thus saith the Holy One of Israel and his Maker,” which generally usher in a gracious promise. Instead of murmuring, humble yourselves, and ask what ye will for the consolation of your children; and ye shall be sure of it, as ye are of those things which are at your commandment. Although God be not obliged to render an account of his proceedings, yet he is graciously pleased to resolve any questions that are proposed to him, concerning the issue of his people’s captivity. Nay, he represents himself as ready to serve them, and do every thing that can be desired in favour of his elect, those whom he calls here his sons and the work of his hands. (Luther.) The word command, in such a connexion, is, I think, found no where else in Scripture: and neither of the verbs are imperative.

V. 12, 13. By the same power which had created the heavens and the earth, and for the most righteous purposes of judgment on the Chaldeans, of truth to his people, and of promoting true religion, the Lord had raised Cyrus to his eminent station and great power: and he would direct and prosper him in all his ways; in order that he might rebuild Jerusalem and liberate the captive Jews, without price or reward, to which he would influence his mind, though contrary to the political maxims adopted by princes in general. Cyrus only gave order for the building of the temple: but the consequence of that would be the rebuilding of the city, as being the Metropolis of the king’s dominion, and the place to which the whole nation were to repair at their solemn feasts. (Luther.)

V. 14. When these prophecies were performed, many Egyptians, Ethiopians, and Sabæans, (who were noted for their height of stature,) would be proselyted, and present their riches as oblations at the temple: and being thus subdued and led captive, they would submissively desire admission into the Church, convinced that God was in the midst of her; and that there was no other god, no other object of worship, save the God of Israel. But the conversion and subjection of the Gentiles to Christ are also predicted: by which the most renowned, powerful, and wealthy nations of the earth, renouncing all their idols, become the worshippers of the God of the formerly despised Israelites: and thus are attached to them in the closest bonds, and give them the greatest honour imaginably, by acknowledging that they alone are the people of God, and by supplicating to be incorporated among them, that they may share their privileges. The words may be supposed in some degree verified, in Cyrus’ devoting the tribute coming out of those rich provinces, to the building and service of God’s temple. I conceive the place principally meant of the Church, when the Gentile world should come into it, as the only seat and temple of truth. (Luther.)

V. 15—17. Truly the God and Saviour of Israel hides himself and his gracious counsels and designs, under an impenetrable veil; so that it cannot be known what his intentions are, until the event declare them: seeing the Babylonish captivity, and other most calamitous dispensations, were designed to make way for the enlargement of the Church, and the increase of her purity and honour. It should therefore at length appear, that all idolaters would be confounded together, and all the true Israel of God be saved with an everlasting salvation, by means of their union with the everlasting Jehovah; and that they would never be ashamed of their confidence, through all generations and to all eternity. The reader cannot but observe the sudden transition from the solemn adoration of the secret and mysterious nature of God’s counsels, in regard of his people, to the spirited denunciation of the confusion of idolaters, and the final destruction of idolatry, contrasted with the salvation of Israel, not from temporal captivity, but the eternal salvation of the Messiah, strongly marked by the repetition and augmentation of the phrase, to the ages of eternity. (Bp. Lowth.) Israel must here mean the whole body of believers, as in Christ Jesus, who of God is made to them wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption. (Marg.)

Ref. John xiv. 20.)
established it, he created it not in vain, he formed it to be inhabited: I am the Lord; and there is none else.

19 I have not spoken in secret, in a dark place of the earth: I said not unto the seed of Jacob, Seek ye me in vain: I the Lord speak righteousness, I declare things that are right.

20 ¶ Assemble yourselves and come: draw near together ye that are escaped of the nations: they have no knowledge that set up the word of their graven image, and pray unto a god that cannot save.

21 ¶ Tell ye, and bring them near; yea, let them take counsel together: who hath declared this from ancient times? who hath told it from that time? have not I the Lord; and there is none else.

V. 18, 19. The Lord did not form the heavens or the earth in vain, but in order to be occupied by their respective inhabitants: and in like manner none of his works are wrought in vain. He had not chosen Israel merely to cast him off again: he had not formed and accomplished his plan of redemption, without a purpose of replenishing his Church with converts, and his heavenly mansions with inhabitants: he did not intend that Judah and Jerusalem should always continue desolate. And as he hath almighty power, he can effectually ensure his purposes, and perform his predictions. These were not spoken in secret; (as the heathen oracles were uttered from some dark cavern or retired recess, and in ambiguous language which shrank from investigation:) but they were open for every one to read, and obvious to every understanding. Nor ought it to be inferred from the miseries above to come on the Jewish nation, that God had commanded his people to seek him in vain, as the idolaters called on their idols to no purpose; for no Israelites ever walked in the steps of their believing progenitors, who failed of obtaining the covenanted blessings. Indeed, however men may object, the Lord speaks righteousness, and gives sentence according to truth and equity; and his promises, decrees, threatened, and judgments are entirely consistent; as it will appear at the day of judgment.

V. 20—22. Jehovah here addressed himself to the Gentiles, and exhorted those of the several nations, that had escaped his judgments and the sword of Cyrus, to draw near unto him; that they might be instructed, and convinced of the folly and wickedness of praying to idols, which could not save them. They were required to tell one another of these events, to draw near to examine the predictions and their accomplishment; and to consult together, whether Jehovah alone had not declared these things from ancient times; that they might be convinced that there was no God besides him; a just Avenger of his enemies and rebellious subjects, and a merciful and powerful god else besides me; a just God, and a Saviour; there is none besides me.

22 Look unto me, and be ye saved all the ends of the earth: for I am God, and there is none else.

23 I have sworn by myself, the word is gone out of my mouth in righteousness, and shall not return, that unto me every knee shall bow, every tongue shall swear.

24 Surely, shall one say, in the Lord have I righteousness and strength; even to him shall men come; and all that are incensed against him shall be ashamed.

25 In the Lord shall all the seed of Israel be justified, and shall glory.
great expense, not to be compared with God, who declares his purposes before he executeth them, especially the deliverance of the Jews by Cyrus, 5—11. The stout hearted far from righteousness, but salvation near to Israel, 12, 13.

St. Paul also applies it to the future judgment; (Rom. xiv. 9—12.) when every man must give an account of himself to God, by appearing before the tribunal of Christ. Then all will allow his right to be their King and Judge; his enemies will be put to shame and perish; his people shall be declared righteous, and shall glory in him as their God and Saviour for ever. Bishop Lowth translates the words, rendered in our version, “a just God and a Saviour.” Yet he assigns no reason for deviating so materially from the literal, general, and almost universal, meaning of the words, “A just God and a Saviour.” A God, infinite in justice and infinite in mercy, is the God of revelation, the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ; and by this especially he is distinguished, not only from the idols of the heathen, but also from the imaginary supreme being of infidel philosophers of every description. It may be questioned whether the word ἀδικία never signifies simply uttertruth; though it sometimes means faithfulness, or performing engagements, which were originally entered into for free grace, for the fulfilling of an engagement is an act of justice; whatever induced the person to make it; and justice seems ultimately in all cases the meaning of the original word. Here God confers by an oath the truth of what was foretold in the twenty second verse; and the time should certainly come, when all the world shall give glory to him, by paying him solemn worship—and by swearing or professing allegiance to him. What the prophet speaks in the person of God is applied by St. Paul to Christ, that is, to the second person of the blessed Trinity.

Many more such instances may be given; and all of them are plain proofs of the divinity of Christ; and that the prophets of the Old Testament had all along an eye to the times of the New, and spoke of the Messiah as God. This likewise (84.) is very applicable to Christ, who is called “the Lord our Righteousness” and is made unto us Righteousness. To be justified is a term taken from the forms of law, and signifies to be acquitted, or pronounced innocent, and to come off victorious in a cause. (Lowth.) It seems indeed, in the Scripture, to mean still more; namely, to be accounted and dealt with not only as innocent, which only exempts from punishment; but as righteous, and entitled to the reward of righteousness. Adam was innocent, on the day of his creation; but he never attained to righteousness, that is, in himself, because he did not fulfill the commands of God, during the probation allotted him.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—14.

The Lord disposes as he pleases of the authority, wealth, and honour of the world; he gives every man that capacity and success that he sees good; and he assigns to each his part in the execution of his vast, his universal plan. He frequently employs such as know him not, to accomplish those ends which require extensive dominion, and are attended with great bloodshed: for he knows that obscure situations are more advantageous to the souls, and peaceful employments are more agreeable to the minds, of his true people. The Lord does all things for the elect’s sake, and to promote their comfort and salvation: and we should improve our talents for the same purpose. It is the express design of the prophecies, which are fulfilling from age to age by those who know not God, to attract the attention of men, from the rising to the setting of the sun, to inquire after the Lord, by whose inspiration the Bible was penned: we should therefore study them, mark their accomplishment, and point them out to others for the same important ends. Whether peace, or prosperity, or evil and adversity, be allotted us, we should recollect that the Lord creates all these things, that all creatures are his instruments, and that nothing can exceed the limits that he assigns them. From God, the Father of lights, cometh every good and perfect gift; and even the evil that he permits, is over-ruled for greater good to all his faithful servants, and to the greater glory of his name. But, whilst we submit to his will in those troubles, which come upon us through the wickedness of men; and give him the glory of all the good that is wrought in us or done by us: let us take all the blame of our sins unto ourselves; for God cannot be tempted of evil, neither tempteth he any man. Let us turn his promises into prayers, and beseech him, that the heavens may pour down righteousness and grace upon the earth, rendering it exceedingly fruitful; and that salvation, with all its sanctifying effects may spring forth and abound in every land; that our God in all things may be glorified. We should carefully watch ourselves, and repress any risings of our hearts against the Lord’s decrees, with our sensations, and precepts. It is madness in the extreme for us frail creatures to contend with the Almighty, whilst we see such numbers perish by their contests with mortals like themselves! Jehovah dies and abhors our impotent arrogance and perverseness, when we dare to object to his sovereign appointments. It is our wisdom to reverence the depths that we cannot fathom, and to silence our presumption by considering our own ignorance and weakness, and his infinite perfections; and by taking it for granted, that the Judge of all the earth will do right. We may inquire of the Holy One of Israel, concerning the things that he freely giveth to his children, and of what he requireth of his creatures: and we may ask what we will of him in humble prayer, and he will do it for us if it be for our good. But it is intolerable insolence in any man, to demand an account of the Lord’s dealings, as if he had authority to interfere, and give orders to him how he ought to dispose of his own works. Yet nothing is more common, than objections and decisions, that imply this horrid
BEL boweth down, Nebu stoopen; their idols were upon the beasts, and upon the cattle; your carriages were heavy laden; they are a burden to the weary beast.

2 They stoop, they bow down together; they could not deliver the burden, but * they themselves are gone into captivity.

BLASPHEMY. But let us endeavour to get acquainted with our own character and place; and to wait the performance of the Lord's promises, in the way of his precepts; and in due time he will answer all objections, and clear up all difficulties.—Our offended Creator, when he might have left us captives to sin and Satan, to whom we were sold for our crimes, hath raised up a mighty Redeemer for us, even our own Son; who, having satisfied the divine justice with the sacrifice of himself, sets the souls of believers at liberty, without price or reward, and makes them citizens of that holy city, which he hath builded for his own eternal residence. As this greatest of all promises hath already been accomplished, we may be assured that all the rest shall be in due season. He will bring all the potent and mighty nations of the earth to join themselves to his despised people, and make them heirs in Christ Jesus; and they shall all know, that God honours and dwells in his Church, and that none else can bless them. Many have thus yielded themselves to Christ and to his people, and have supplicated admission to their communion and privileges; others will continue to come into them, till they have gained the entire ascendency: and, all that truly join themselves to the Lord and his people, are constrained by love, to devote their labour and substance to promote his honour and cause, and to count his service perfect freedom.

V. 15—25.

Our divine Saviour often hides his tender compassions behind frowning dispensations; and requires us to walk by faith, and to give him credit for his wisdom, justice, truth, and mercy, when we cannot see them; for “what he doeth we know not now, but we shall know hereafter.”

If then he hides his face from us, let us humbly wait for him: for whilst the most prosperous sinners and self-confident hypocrites will soon go into confusion together; they that trust in the Lord, and partake of his grace, will be saved in and by him with an everlasting salvation, and shall not be ashamed or confounded for ever. Neither his works nor his word are in vain: as he created the world to be inhabited: so he gave Israel his oracles that they should be proclaimed, and his promises that they should be believed.

He would not have this light put in a secret or dark place, but diffused far and wide; and he never said to the seed of wrestling Jacob and prevailing Israel, that they should seek his face in vain. For the Lord speaks in truth and righteousness: and though to our proud carnal hearts, his words appear obscure: yet they are all plain to the humble soul, as well as sincere and to be entirely depended on.

Let sinners then renounce their iniquities and superstitions, and cease to pray to mediators or idols that cannot save; and let them with one consent draw near to him, who is a just God and a Saviour, and who glorifies his righteousness in pardoning the vilest transgressors, that rely on the merits of Jesus Christ. He, that once was lifted up on the cross, now calls from his glorious throne, and bids all the ends of the earth look to him for salvation: He is the true God and eternal life; and besides him, there is no other able to save from the wrath to come. In one way or other must come before him, and submit unto him: for he hath irrevocably confirmed it with an oath, that every knee shall bow, and every tongue shall swear unto him. As we then must all appear before his judgment-seat; and all his virulent enemies, yea, all that will not have him to reign over them, must be covered with shame and confusion: may we now come to him as the Lord our Righteousness, and trust in him for acceptance, sanctification, and victory over every enemy: that we may here be justified and rejoiced in his salvation, and walk worthy of it; and at last be presented faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy.”

NOTES.

CHAP. XLVI. V. 1, 2. Bel, a contraction probably of Bashi, and Nebu, were the two principal idols of Babylon. When that city was taken by the Persians, they were seized on by the victors, and broken down: for the Persians were generally Magians, who did not worship idols, but the sun under the symbol of fire. They would therefore load their beasts and cattle with the metals of which the images were formed, and carry them into captivity. When the Philistines took the ark of God, it became a burden to them, and they were glad to send it back: but the idols of Babylon would only prove a burden to the weary beasts that carried them away; as they could neither deliver themselves, nor those that had the charge of them: as the word rendered burden seems to mean.—"Their soul;" (Marg.) He derideth their idols, which had neither soul or sense.

V. 3, 4. The continued care, which the Lord had shown towards Israel, and all his powerful works in their behalf, are here contrasted with the impotency of the gods of Babylon. The latter had been carried off by the weary beasts: the former had always carried Israel, in the arms of his love and power, as the nurse carries and tends the new-born infant. JEHOVAH had done this from the time when they were called out of Egypt, which was as the birth of their Church and nation, to their deliverance from Babylon, when become, as it were, helpless through old age. And thus he would always do, whilst they continued his people.
V. 5-9. The Jews were always prone to make images representing God, as well as to worship the idols of other nations. But He called their attention to the expense to which the idolaters put themselves, in making a living image, that was only a trouble and burden to them. It was rather a likeness of a dead corpse, than of a living God: when they had with much labour fixed it in its place, they would be sure to find it there, except it should happen to be thrown down or stolen: for it could not move itself; and therefore it was not able to answer their prayers, or deliver them out of their trouble. Let then the Jews remember these things, and show themselves men, acting like reasonable creatures, and avoiding such an absurd abomination. Let those, that had thus apostatized, review their conduct and retract their error; considering the former works of God to his people, by which he showed himself exclusively entitled to their adoration.—Some think that the folly of idolaters is thus repeatedly exposed, to prevent the captive Jews in Babylon from conforming to the idolatry of their conquerors: and indeed they seem to have kept far more free from that crime, when living among idolaters, than they had done in their own land.

V. 10, 11. From the beginning of the world God had declared what would come to pass to the end of time; (Note Gen. iii. 15;) and from ancient times he had predicted the things, that were not then accomplished. And as he had declared his determinations, so no power in the universe could defeat them; but "his counsel shall stand, and he will do all his pleasure."—especially he would call Cyrus, like an eagle or bird of prey, from a far country to Cyrus, like an eagle or bird of prey, from a far country to his purpose of delivering the Jews. —The standard of Cyrus was a golden eagle, and the rapidity of his conquests answered to the emblem. —Bishop Lowth translates the clause "far from righteousness," "far from deliverance;" but this greatly obscures the meaning of the text; and it may be questioned, whether the word be ever used in that sense. It is a substantive from the same root, with that adjective, which he renders speaking truth, in the clause, (as it stands in our version), "A just God and a Saviour." (Note xlv. 20-22.)

V. 12, 13. Obstinate, presumptuous, and impenitent sinners, both of the Jews and Gentiles, were here addressed. Such were far from both the righteousness of the law, and that of faith; yet they were summoned to hearken to the word of the Lord. He would speedily perform his righteous engagements to his people, execute his just vengeance on his enemies, and establish his righteousness in the earth. He would deliver the Jews from Babylon, again make Zion his peculiar residence, and there reveal his salvation: and there it should be stationed for the benefit of Israel, in whom he glorified, and in and by whom he would be glorified.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The things from which ungodly men expect safety and happiness, will soon be torn from them, and be incapable of saving them from death and hell; even at present they occasion much more trouble than comfort; and they commonly become an incumbrance and a snare to those, to whom they afterwards devolve. But happy is the man, that trusts in God, and expects felicity from him! As his providence seems especially to watch over the helpless infant, and those that are decrepid through age; so his gracious care is peculiarly employed about the new-born babies of his family, and those who are grown hoary in his service. The history of the life of an individual, from the womb to the grave, is a kind of abstract of the history of Israel, through its successive generations: and notwithstanding all our iniquity and rebellions, we have each of us experienced numberless instances of Jehovah's careful protection and tender care over us. If then we have learned to trust and love him, we need not be anxious about our remaining years or days; he will attend over us, and proportion our strength and comfort to our trials; he will bear with, carry, and deliver us, both as the cre-
CHAPTER XLVII.

Predictions of terrible judgments upon the inhabitants of Babylon, for their pride, luxury, and cruelty to the Jews, 1—12. Their diviners and counsellors shall not help them, 13—15.

COME, down, and sit in the dust, O virgin daughter of Babylon, sit on the ground: there is no throne, O daughter of the Chaldeans: for thou shalt no more be called tender and delicate.

2 Take the mill-stones, and grind meal: uncover thy locks, make bare the leg, uncover the thigh, pass over the rivers.

3 Thy nakedness shall be uncovered, yea, thy shame shall be seen: I will take vengeance, and I will not meet thee as a man.

4 As for our Redeemer, the Lord of hosts is his name, the Holy One of Israel.

5 Sit thou silent, and get thee into darkness, O daughter of the Chaldeans: for thou shalt no more be called, The lady of kingdoms.

6 I was wroth with my people, I have polluted mine inheritance, and given them into thine hand: thou didst shew them no mercy; upon the ancient hast thou very heavily laid thy yoke.

7 They spake against me with their tongue: they watched against me: they regarded me as an enemy, they took not my counsel.

8 They put my judgment before their gods: they contemn my law: they break my appointed times, and have not kept them: therefore they came now unto the evil.

9 Return ye to me, ye transgressors, saith the Lord: for I come to take vengeance, I come to execute judgment on the earth.

10 For the enemy shall not captive you: nor shall strangers possess your land: for I am the Lord, the God of all the earth.

11 For I will call for my bow of a covenant, even my sword of vengeance, and my vengeance will I lighten; and I will repay vengeance.

12 And I will burn them with the fire of my jealousy, even I will recompense my people according to their doings.

NOTES.

CHAP. XLVII. V. 1—3. Babylon, (as the capital of the Chaldean empire, which succeeded to the Assyrian,) had never been subdued before Cyrus took it. The city is therefore represented under the emblem of a fair virgin in great distress, who is called the daughter of Babylon or of the Chaldeans. Instead of being seated, as heretofore, upon a throne, ruling over other cities and nations, and being called tender and delicate, as exempted from hardships and calamities; she was now to come down, and sit upon the bare ground, and as an abject slave to grind corn with those hand-mills, that were in use before the invention of water-mills and wind-mills; which was the lowest and most laborious of menial services. Nay, she must be driven bare-headed, with dishevelled locks, and almost naked before the victor, in order to ford the rivers, through which the captives were driven like herds of cattle; and be entirely uncovered to be examined for sale, after the indecent and inhuman manner, in which negroes are now exposed like cattle, in the places where the slave-trade is carried on.

For the Lord would not meet her with the compassion or the weakness of a man, who might be resisted or appeased, but to take righteous vengeance on her as the Almighty God. Or, "I will not admit man to intercede for her;" as some explain the clause, which is rather obscure. What is spoken of Babylon, under the emblem of a woman, must be understood of the calamities, that would overtake numbers of her inhabitants, in the different ravages to which that devoted city would be exposed. (Notes, c. xiv. V. 4. The prophet, representing the believing Jews, in prospect of these events, interrupts his prediction by thus exulting in the Lord of Hosts, as the Redeemer and Holy One of Israel.

V. 5. "Silence and darkness are opposed to that noise and gayety, which is seen in rich and populous cities," (Lamb.)

V. 6. "I have laid open my inheritance to the insults of idolaters, and suffered them to profane the city and sanctuary, which was called by my name." (Lamb.)

The Chaldeans, intent on gratifying their own ambition, rapacity, and indigent revenge, and perhaps enmity to the God of Israel, most cruelly treated the Jews, when they put them into their power; not knowing or regarding the design of God, in thus giving his worshippers into their hand; so that, while they accomplished his righteous purposes, without intending it, they brought down deserved judgments on themselves. (Margin. Ref.)
7 And thou shalt say, I shall be a lady for ever: so that thou didst not lay these things to thy heart, neither didst thou remember the latter end of it.

8 Therefore hear now this, thou that art given to pleasures, that dwellest carelessly, that sayest in thine heart, I am, and none else besides me; I shall not sit as a widow, neither shall I know the loss of children:

9 But these two things shall come upon thee in a moment of the children, and widowhood: they shall come upon thee in their perfection, for the multitude of thy sorceries, and for the great abundance of thine enchantments.

10 For thou hast trusted in thy wickedness: thou hast said, None seeth me. Thy wisdom and thy knowledge, it hath perverted thee; and thou hast said in thine heart, I am, and none else besides me.

11 Therefore shall evil come upon thee, whence it shall not depart, till thou say, It is I; besides me there is no God.

V. 7–10. Notwithstanding these predictions against Babylon, the king and his nobles deemed their dominion and prosperity firmly and permanently established; they laid neither their own crimes, nor the words of God to heart, nor considered what the end of their greatness would be. The inhabitants were given up to pleasures and dissipation; and arrogantly concluded that no city or empire ever had been, was, or would be, like their own; and they expressed this sentiment in language similar to that by which Jeremiah declared his own national Deity. (xl. 5, 6.) The loss of empire, and the destruction of the inhabitants, are to ruling cities like widowhood, and loss of children. Babylon thought herself perfectly secure from these afflictions: but the Lord declared, that they would come upon her in one day, in a moment, most suddenly, and in their perfection; for or notwithstanding, the multitude of her sorceries and enchantments. The Chaldeans trusted much to these practices, and disregarded the all-seeing eye of Israel’s God; but the permanent prosperity, with which she was thus flattered, would not be vouchsafed her.

V. 11. Neither the politicians nor sorcerers of Babylon could discover from what quarter evil would come upon them; nor when it approached could they retard it; and, at last, it would come upon them suddenly, when they had no apprehension of it. Cyrus surprised the city, when the inhabitants were all asleep, or in their drunken revels, and entirely without fear of the impending ruin.

13 The Lord here challenged the Chaldeans to oppose their enchantments to the execution of his predictions: let them persist in them, and do their utmost, and see whether they could prevail in the contest. Babylon, from the time it became a city, was renowned for these arts, and the Chaldeans diligently studied and practised them. Even their wise men and counsellors were chiefly diviners and astrologers. They pretended to obtain information and direction from the motions of the heavenly bodies; and supposed the stars to have great influence on the affairs of men, which they could discover by making observations on them: and they seem to have published every month their prognostications, as some almanac-makers now do their yearly predictions about the weather, &c. But the Lord declared, that they should all weary themselves in vain, in their counsels to secure Babylon; nay, themselves should be as stubble to the fire of his indignation, by which they should be totally consumed without any remains. And in this catastrophe, all those, who had before engaged with them for such information; or the merchants and hired soldiers from other countries, that had traded with and helped them, would desert them, to their respective habitations, and leave them to shift for themselves. All these predictions concerning Babylon relate also to the New Testament Babylon, the chief seat of Antichrist. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The Lord invariably abases the proud in proportion as they exalt themselves. They, who are most delicate and luxurious, and given up to self-indulgence and dissipation, are commonly most unfeeling towards such as are subjected HEAR ye this, O house of Jacob,
* which are called by the name of Israel, and are * come forth out of the waters of Judah, * which swear by the name of the Lord, and make mention of the God of Israel, but * not in truth, nor in righteousness.

2 For * they call themselves the holy city, * and stay themselves upon the God of Israel, * The Lord of hosts is his name.

3 I have * declared the former things from the beginning: and they went forth out of my mouth, * and I shewed them: I * have exhibited my wonders in the old times.

4 The God who made me has appeared to my fathers, the God of Jacob,
* the Rock of our salvation.

5 He is the Rock, he is our high tower; * an our shield to save us.

6 For at tribulation and mourning * shall he be the place of the sanctuary.

7 For the everlasting Lord * shall be your everlasting foundation, and your Rock for ever. 8 He shall give salvation to his people, he shall be the glory of his anointed, * the Lord who is mighty in salvation.

9 He shall give them the glory of his anointed, * he shall be bright as the horizon, which overspreadeth the heavens.

10 But when he shall have rose up to shew mercy, he shall visit the transgressions of his people; * and he shall remember his covenant for ever, * all the days of his anger.

11 For a small flower he shall bring forth the tree, * and a little grass he shall make a strong plant.

12 He that is the hope of Jacob shall come forth out of the north,
* he shall possess the south.

13 God shall come from Sion, * he who shall sanctify * that shall come forth out of Sion.

14 He shall appease the face of the Lord, * and shall be our righteousness, * the Lord our Redeemer.

15 But they that turn away * from the Lord shall be cast into the everlasting fiery furnace.

16 O house of Jacob, let my God be * your hope, * and let your fear of him be your confidence.

17 For he is * our God; and we will wait for him:
* he will work salvation upon earth, * he will work his righteousness upon heaven.

18 Let the Assyrian that comes against you fear of you:
* he that is a mighty young man shall tremble before you.

19 You shall eat the spoils of him who boasts of his strength,
* and you shall padlock the spoils of his tents, * and you shall take up his spoils as spoil, * and you shall lay waste his cities.

NOTES.

CHAP. XLVIII. V. 1, 2. The Jews gloried in their descent from Jacob, and in the name of Israel which God had in honour conferred on him; they boasted also of springing from Jethro, (as waters from the fountain,) to whom the sceptre belonged, and from whom the Messiah was to descend. They were likewise accustomed to use the name of Jeshurun in solemn oaths, and to mention him as their God; they prided themselves upon their relation to that holy city, where his temple was built and his worship conducted: and on these accounts they were very confident that God would render them successful, and deliver them from all their enemies. Yet there was neither sincerity in their religion, nor holiness in their lives; they were deceitful and dishonest in their dealings; and they concealed their frauds by perjury and hypocrisy. It appears from the prophecies of Jeremiah, Amos, and Micah, that this was the general disposition of the people, just before the captivity. (Marg. Ref.)
I did them suddenly, and they came to pass.

4 Because I knew that thou art obstinate, and thy neck is an iron sinew, and thy brow brass;

5 I have even from the beginning declared it to thee; before it came to pass I shewed it thee: lest thou shouldst say, Mine idol hath done them, and my graven image, and my molten image hath commanded them.

6 Thou hast heard, see all this; and will not ye declare it? I have shewed thee new things from this time, even hidden things, and thou didst not know them.

7 They are created now, and not from the beginning; even before the day when thou heardest them not: lest thou shouldst say, Behold, I knew them.

8 Yea, thou hearest not; yea, thou knowest not; from that time that thine ear was not opened: for I knew that thou wouldst deal very treacherously, and wast call a transgressor from the womb.

9 For my name's sake will I defer mine anger, and for my praise will I refrain for thee, that I cut thee not off.

10 Behold, I have refined thee, and not with silver; I have chosen thee in the furnace of affliction.

11 For mine own sake, even for mine own sake, will I do it: for how should my name be polluted? and I will not give my glory unto another.

12 Hearken unto me, O Jacob, and Israel, my called; I am he; I am the First, also am I the Last.

13 Mine hand also hath laid the foundation of the earth, and my right hand did divide the dry land.

V. 3—5. In order to lead the people to be more earnest in their religion, the Lord again reminded them of the evidences, which prophecy afforded them of its divine authority. Nothing material had occurred, since the original of their nation, that had not been predicted. God had previously informed them what he meant to do; and then he had suddenly performed his word, when they had no expectation of it. He adopted this method, because he knew that they would be obstinate and untractable, even as if the sinews of their necks were made of iron; and bold and impudent in their objections and self-vindication, as if their brow were of brass: and being alienated from true religion and attached to idolatry, they would absurdly and ungratefully have ascribed their deliverances to their idols, had not Jeshova by his prophecies precluded them from such a pretence. 'The former things may point to the former prophecies, relating to the two confederate kings, (viii.) and to Berosus; as the new things relate to Babylonian captivity, and their return from thence, as they were figures of the Gospel-times.' Suddenly, punctually at the time foretold, even when there was no like libation of such an effect being produced. (Lowth.)

V. 6—8. The Jews had already heard the prophecies concerning them: let them therefore mark, and see the exact accomplishment of them: and would they not at length declare this to be a demonstration, that Jeshova alone deserved their worship: and publish his wonderful works, according to his word, to other nations and succeeding ages? From the time that former predictions had been accomplished, in their deliverances from the Syrians and Assyrians, the Lord showed them new things, hidden from all creatures, of which no tokens appeared, and of which they knew nothing. His word, as in creation, gave them as it were their first existence: before he spake of them, the Jews had never heard of them, and therefore they could not ascribe the discovery either to their idols or to their own sagacity. Yet, after all, the Lord foresaw that they would prove unbelieving and disobedient; and even shut their ears to instruction, however plainly set before them. For their ear had not been opened from the beginning: they had always been unteachable and self-willed: and they would continue to despise the name of transgressor, apostate, or rebel, which he had given them in the infancy of their nation, when they first came out of Egypt. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 9—11. The Lord saw nothing in the Jewish nation to induce him to deliver it from captivity: but the honour of his own great name was concerned. If the idolaters should finally prevail against his worshippers, their gods would seem to triumph over the God of Israel: it behooved him to perform his engagements to Abraham and to David, and to maintain his worship in the world. For his own sake, therefore, he would defer his anger, and not cast off the Jews till after the coming of the Messiah: for his own glory he would refrain from pouring out his indignation, and utterly destroying them. By various calamities he refined them, as metal in a furnace; and though they were not fully purified as refined silver, but still had a great mixture of base metal among them; yet he would soon remove those amidst the afflictions of Babylon, as he had their fathers in the iron furnace of Egypt. This he would do, not for their sakes, but that his name might not be profaned, or his glory given to idols; (Marg. Ref.)—I had respect to thy weakness and infirmity: for in silver there is some pureness, but in us there is nothing but dross.† If the furnace of affliction had not been moderated, they must have been consumed. (Ps. cxxi. 3. Matt. xxiv. 22.)

† God jointed the salvation of his people with his own honour: so that they cannot perish, but his glory should be diminished.
hand hath spanned the heavens: when I call unto them, they stand up together.

14 All ye, assemble yourselves, and hear; which among them hath declared these things? The Lord hath loved him: he will do his pleasure on Babylon, and his arm shall be on the Chaldeans.

15 I, even I, have spoken; yea, I have called him: I have brought him, and he shall make his way prosperous.

16 Come ye near unto me, hear ye this; I have not spoken in secret from the beginning; from the time that it was, there am I: and now the Lord God and his Spirit hath sent me.

17 Thus saith the Lord, thy Redeemer, the Holy One of Israel; I am the Lord thy God which teacheth thee to profit, which leadeth thee by the way that thou shouldest go.

V. 12-15. The eternal and unchangeable God of Israel here calls upon his people to hearken to his words. The same almighty power that had created the earth, meted out the heavens with a span, and issued orders to their hosts, which were implicitly obeyed, was also pledged to perform the predictions concerning the deliverance of the Jews from captivity. Let then all of them assemble, consider, and ask themselves, whether Jehovah or some of their idols, had foretold these things? that they might ascribe the accomplishment unto him. He meant to show especial favour to Cyrus (as a type of Christ,) in assigning him the honourable work of liberating his people. So that this prince would execute the Lord's pleasure, and be as his arm in taking Babylon and subduing the Chaldean monarchy: for God would call him to this arduous undertaking, and prosper him in it. Some indeed interpret the expression, my called, as referring to the call of Abraham, and the nation of Israel in him, which was a type or emblem of the effective calling of the elect people of God: and others explain it of the Israelites being called by the name of God, as a people peculiarly belonging to him.

V. 16. There is some difficulty in ascertaining the speaker in this verse: but if the prophet be supposed to speak, it must be as a type of the Eleventh servant of God before predicted. (xlii. 1.) From the opening of his ministry Isaiah had publicly spoken of these things that were coming to pass, and events had accurred to his predictions; he had from the first been at hand to declare the will of the Lord: and now the Lord God and his Spirit had sent him to predict the captivity, with their deliverance from it; and he beheld them to come near and attend to his words. But this seems not by any means to come up to the energy and full meaning of the passage. The Word, that "was in the beginning with God, and was God," and by whom the mind and will of God have ever been declared to men, evidently speaks in this place. He had ever addressed the nation in the most open manner, from the time that he appeared to Moses in the bush, and called himself, I AM THAT I AM: and he was ever present with Israel as their Lord and Redeemer. And now the Father and his Spirit had sent him to effect their predicted deliverance: or the Lord God had sent him and his Spirit: for so the words may be read, and the language accords better to the ordinary style of Scripture. The deliverance from Babylon seems to be primarily intended: yet as shadowing forth the incarnation of Christ, and the pouring out of the Spirit, to apply his purchased redemption to the souls of men. The foregoing part of the verse shows, that the words are spoken by God: and since it is affirmed, that the Lord God hath sent him; we can understand the words of none other, but the second Person of the sacred Trinity; who was sent into the world by his Father, and was anointed to his prophetic office by the Holy Spirit. (Lomth.) Who is it that saith in Isaiah, "And now the Lord hath sent me and his Spirit"? in which as the expression is ambiguous, it is the Father and the Holy Spirit, which have sent Jesus; or the Father who hath sent both Christ and the Holy Spirit. (Orig in Rp. Lomth.)

V. 17—19. Jehovah, the Redeemer and Holy One of Israel, continues to speak to his people as growing in captivity. He had taught them profitable things, and had pointed out to them the way in which they should have gone; and he was ever ready to afford his effectual teaching to such, as desired to profit by his word. This would have been more agreeable to his holy will, than their rebellions and calamities; so that, speaking after the manner of men, he, as it were, wished that they would have hearkened to his commandments: for then their peace would have flowed with an even uninterrupted course, like a river whose waters fail not: and he would have shown them how to obtain a righteousness vast as the ocean, and a permanent and inexhaustible source of blessings to their souls: their seed would then have been innumerable as the sand, and their name would never have been cut off, or cast out. Whereas for their sins they were reduced to a remnant, and to great distress and contempt. (Marg. Ref.)
V. 20—22. The Lord here addressed the people as if the time of the decree of Cyrus had been already come. They were summoned to go forth from Babylon, and flee from its devoted inhabitants, singing praises to the Lord, and publishing his truth, power, and love to the ends of the earth. When the Israelites passed through the wilderness from Egypt to Canaan, the waters gushed from the smitten rock to satisfy their thirst: and the Lord intimated that he would equally take care of the Jews in returning from Babylon to Jerusalem. But as the language is too strong to have received a full accomplishment in any of the events attending that deliverance; we may be assured that the Holy Ghost intended the spiritual blessings of redemption; and the wonderful interpositions, with which the rescue of the Church from Antichristian tyranny shall be accompanied, and the converted Jews conveyed back to the promised land. Whatever revolutions should take place, the Lord warned impenitent sinners, that no good would accrue to them; for all that inward anguish and outward tribulation, which spring from guilt and from the wrath of God, must inevitably be their portion, throughout every period of their endless existence.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—11.

Men may have a sound creed, make an open profession of true religions, and with apparent devotion make mention of the name of God, value themselves on their relation to his people, and join with them in the most religious ordinances; and yet be mere hypocrites and destitute of common honesty in their dealings with their neighbours! Nay, men may have strong confidence in the Lord, and verily think that all the blessings of salvation belong to them: when they are entirely deceived by Satan and their own hearts, and have no more than a worthless form of godliness! Let us then be careful not to over-value external distinctions, privileges, or observances: and not to lay our souls on any relation to families, or churches, eminent for piety: let us examine whether we be indeed sincere in our professed faith, and devotedness to God; and whether they produce truth and equity in all our dealings with men: let us remember that confidence without conscientiousness is presumption; and that they who cheat their neighbours, and yawn it over with a profession of godliness, will receive the greater damnation. May the Lord then search and prove us, and render us doers of the word, and not hearers only, deceiving our own selves. Our religion is abundantly demonstrated to us, in the coincidence observable between the prophecies of the Bible, and the dispensations of Providence; so that infidelity, impiety, and hypocrisy will be left without plea or excuse: and this arrangement is purposely intended to leave every one without cloak for their sins. For the Lord knoweth how obstinate and daring men are in rebellion against his authority, and opposition to his truths. Indeed we are all by nature self-willed and presumptuous: we are ready to ascribe success to our own sagacity or good management, or even to that conduct which God abhors; and when calamities overtake us, we deem them the result of chance, or lay the blame on the ill behaviour of others. Thus we studiously forget God, and aim to exclude him from the government of the world. But the whole scheme of prophecy is a standing condemnation of this preposterous system; as things hidden from every created mind, and which appear utterly improbable, have for ages been foretold in the sacred Scriptures, and are continually coming to pass accordingly. Yet how little is this attended to! how little are men disposed to receive instruction, and yield obedience to God! But hence arises another demonstration of the truth of the Scripture, which every man possesses in his own conscience. Contrary to our self-pleasing, the Scripture declares, that every man dealseth very treacherously, and is a transgressor from the womb. And is not this witness true? Has not each of us violated our obligations to God? And were not our first thoughts, words, and works rebellious and unholy? We have then nothing in ourselves to depend on, or to plead with God, as a reason why he should have mercy on us. Had he not deferred and restrained his anger, we should have been cut off and destroyed long ago. But he hath formed a plan, in which, for his own sake and for the glory of his grace, he saveth all that come to him for salvation. Thus sinners are encouraged to hope for his mercy. And he that “hath fled for refuge to lay hold on this hope set before him,” hath the honour of God pledged for his security, that he shall never be cast off, or perish; for then would His name be polluted, and his glory tarnished. He will indeed refine his people in the furnace of affliction: but notwithstanding the alloy that remains after every trial, he will yet confirm his choice of them; and frequently he first brings sinners acquainted with his grace, by casting them into this painful but salutary furnace.

V. 12—22.

The same power that upholds the world, supports the cause of truth and righteousness; and it is a peculiar honour to be employed as instruments in this good work. Yet even this, (as well as many other instances of the loving-kindness of God,) hath been sometimes vouchsafed
LISTEN, O isles, unto me; and hearken, ye people, from far; The Lord hath called me from the womb; from the bowels of my mother hath he made mention of my name.
2 And he hath made my mouth like a sharp sword; in the shadow of his hand hath he hid me, and made me a polished shaft; in his quiver hath he hid me;
3 And said unto me, Thou art my servant, O Israel, in whom I will be glorified.
4 Then I said, I have laboured in vain, I have spent my strength for nought, and in vain: yet surely his judgment is with the Lord, and his work with my God.
5 And now, saith the Lord, that is faithful, and the Holy One of Israel, and shall be glorious in the eyes of the Lord, and my God shall be my strength.

6 And he said, It is a light thing, that thou shouldest be my servant to raise up the tribes of Jacob, and to restore the preserved of Israel: I will also give thee for a Light to the Gentiles; that thou mayst be my salvation unto the end of the earth.

7 Thus saith the Lord, the Redeemer of Israel, and his Holy One, to him whom man despiseth, to him whom the nation abhorreth, to a servant of rulers; kings shall see and arise, princes also shall worship, because of the Lord, and his goodness, and for the Lord'sdelicate heritages;

8 That thou mayest say to the prisoners, Go forth; to them that are in darkness, Shew yourselves: they shall feed in the ways, and their pastures shall be in all high places.

9 They shall not hunger nor thirst; neither shall the heat nor sun smite them: for he that hath mercy on them shall lead them, even by the springs of water shall he guide them.

be desired; namely, by rendering it effectual for the salvation of multitudes of sinners. This is spoken to the distant nations: it represents the Redeemer's undertaking, after the manner of men, as the result of a stipulation between the Father and the Son: and this serves as an interesting introduction to a prediction of the calling of the Gentiles, that they might enjoy the blessings which the Jewish nation refused: for otherwise no adequate benefit would result from the coming of the promised Messiah.

V. 5. 6. Jehovah, in the person of the Father, here addresses the Son, as become incarnate, (that is, in the divine purpose and prescience.) The primary object of his undertaking was to bring Jacob again to the true service and worship of God. Accordingly the personal ministry of Christ, and the first labours of his apostles, were confined to the Jews; and their national rejection of Christ was the occasion of the apostles at length turning to the Gentiles.

So that it was the settled plan of God, made known ages before, that though Israel were not gathered to the promised Messiah, as his subjects and disciples; yet should be glorious in the eyes of the Lord, and be glorified by him; and God would be his Strength to render his Gospel successful.

Thus when Christ was about to ascend into heaven, he said to his disciples, "All power is given unto me in heaven and earth. Go ye, preach the Gospel to all nations." So that compared with the full effects of his mediatorial work, the conversion of a small remnant of the Jews, who were preserved from their national unbelief, would be a small matter; nay, the conversion of the whole nation would have been a light thing; for he was given to be the great and all-sufficient Source of spiritual knowledge and illumination, and the Author of eternal salvation to the nations of the earth in general.

V. 7, 8. The Father is "the Lord, the Redeemer of Israel," as sending the Son to be the Redeemer: he created the worlds, and he reigned the Church, by the Son, and without him was not any thing created or redeemed; (Tit. iii. 4-6.) The Father here addresses the incarnate Son, as he, "whom man despised," and the Jewish nation abhorred; and whom their rulers, as well as Pontius Pilate and Herod, treated as a slave. This decisively marked out the person intended, when he appeared on earth; as every one must perceive, who compared these expressions with the history of our Lord's humiliation, by the general demand of the Jewish nation and their rulers, and with every circumstance of scorn and abhorrence. This humiliation was, so to speak, the stipulated price of that glory which was to follow. For certainly kings would behold his glory, and rise up to acknowledge his supreme authority: nay, they would fall down before him, submitting to him as their king, yes, worshipping him as their God!

The faithfulness of Jehovah was engaged to accomplish this promise; and the Holy One of Israel, being well pleased in him, as his beloved Son and righteous Servant, would choose him to be his King upon his holy hill of Zion: (Notes, Ps. ii.) When the Roman emperors embraced Christianity, this began to be accomplished: it hath been verified in many instances already, and will be more significantly hereafter. When he undertook our cause, his requests were presented "in an acceptable time, and in a day of salvation," and the Father readily acceded to them.

The prayers that he offered with strong crying and tears, in the days of his flesh, were also accepted, and answered by his resurrection and exaltation; and his intercession is always presented in an acceptable time; and every thing is granted that he intercedeth for. (Note, 2 Cor. vi. 1. 2.) Being thus preserved, and raised to the mediatorial throne, he was given as the Surety of the new covenant to sinners all over the earth, to establish it in the knowledge of God and true religion: and to cause sinners to inherit that inheritance from which they had been expelled; and which lay desolate, as the land of Judah did during the captivity, until the restoration of the Jews established the land and caused them to inherit their desolate heritages.
CHAPTER XLIX.

11 And I will make all my mountains a way, and my high ways shall be exalted.

12 Behold, these shall come from far: and, lo, these from the north and from the west; and these from the land of Sinim.

13 Sing, O heavens; and be joyful, O earth; and break forth into singing, O mountains: for the Lord hath comforted his people; and will have mercy upon his afflicted.

14 ¶ But Zion said, The Lord hath forsaken me, and my Lord hath forgotten me.

15 Can a woman forget her sucking child, that she should not have compassion on the son of her womb? yea, they may forget, yet will I not forget thee.

16 Behold, I have graven thee upon the palms of my hands; thy walls are continually before me.

17 Thy children shall make haste; thy destroyers and they that made thee waste, shall go forth of thee.

V. 9—13. The conversion of the nations is here promised, under images taken from the deliverance of the captive Jews, and their return to Jerusalem. At the word of Christ, the prisoners of Satan, who were confined in the dark dungeons of ignorance, idolatry and vice, would be set at liberty, come forth, and show themselves among his redeemed subjects. His ordinances comfortably feed the souls of these his sheep, all their journey through life; no place is found so mountainous, as not to yield pasture for them; or their pastures are situated on high places, inaccessible to their enemies: they are not imprisoned by hunger or thirst; nor left to endure persecution, temptation, or affliction, without shelter, support and consolation; for their merciful Redeemer conducts them, where the waters of life abound for their refreshment and consolation: (Note, Rev. vii. 13—17.) Even the loftiest mountains are made a highway, and a caseway or pavement is prepared over the low places, that nothing may discourage or obstruct them in their journey. The Lord then speaks, as if companies of converts flocking into the Church were in sight; and points them out to the spectators, some of them coming from the north, others from the west, and others from the land of Sinim; by which some province in Egypt, or some district in Arabia, seems to be meant.—All this denotes the clear instructions, unimpassioned invitations, encouraging promises, and abundant outpouring of the Spirit, which would combine in rendering the Gospel successful, especially in the primitive ages; as they will again when the fulness of the Gentiles shall be brought in. In the prospect of events so merciful and comfortable to God's afflicted people, the heavens, and the earth, and their respective inhabitants are called upon to break forth into songs of joy and praise! (Marg. Ref.) —The Hebrew word mesillath, (translated high-ways,) signifies such ways as are raised with stone in low and marshy grounds. (So the sense is exactly parallel with that, (Ex. 4:27)) Even the valley shall be exalted, and every mountain shall be brought low. (Lomth.) That, however, relates to the change wrought in men's dispositions, preparing them to welcome the salvation of Christ; this, to the preparations made in the Gospel, for the believers' passing safely and comfortably through this evil world to heaven.

V. 14—16. The Jewish Church during the captivity, or the Christian Church as groaning under Antichristian superstition and tyranny, is here introduced, as ready to forsake me, and my Lord hath forgotten me.

16 Can a woman forget her sucking child, that she should not have compassion on the son of her womb? yea, they may forget, yet will I not forget thee.

17 Thy children shall make haste; thy destroyers and they that made thee waste, shall go forth of thee.

V. 9—13. The conversion of the nations is here promised, under images taken from the deliverance of the captive Jews, and their return to Jerusalem. At the word of Christ, the prisoners of Satan, who were confined in the dark dungeons of ignorance, idolatry and vice, would be set at liberty, come forth, and show themselves among his redeemed subjects. His ordinances comfortably feed the souls of these his sheep, all their journey through life; no place is found so mountainous, as not to yield pasture for them; or their pastures are situated on high places, inaccessible to their enemies: they are not imprisoned by hunger or thirst; nor left to endure persecution, temptation or affliction, without shelter, support and consolation; for their merciful Redeemer conducts them, where the waters of life abound for their refreshment and consolation: (Note, Rev. vii. 13—17.) Even the loftiest mountains are made a highway, and a caseway or pavement is prepared over the low places, that nothing may discourage or obstruct them in their journey. The Lord then speaks, as if companies of converts flocking into the Church were in sight; and points them out to the spectators, some of them coming from the north, others from the west, and others from the land of Sinim; by which some province in Egypt, or some district in Arabia, seems to be meant.—All this denotes the clear instructions, unimpassioned invitations, encouraging promises, and abundant outpouring of the Spirit, which would combine in rendering the Gospel successful, especially in the primitive ages; as they will again when the fulness of the Gentiles shall be brought in. In the prospect of events so merciful and comfortable to God's afflicted people, the heavens, and the earth, and their respective inhabitants are called upon to break forth into songs of joy and praise! (Marg. Ref.) —The Hebrew word mesillath, (translated high-ways,) signifies such ways as are raised with stone in low and marshy grounds. (So the sense is exactly parallel with that, (Ex. 4:27)) Even the valley shall be exalted, and every mountain shall be brought low. (Lomth.) That, however, relates to the change wrought in men's dispositions, preparing them to welcome the salvation of Christ; this, to the preparations made in the Gospel, for the believers' passing safely and comfortably through this evil world to heaven.

V. 14—16. The Jewish Church during the captivity, or the Christian Church as groaning under Antichristian superstition and tyranny, is here introduced, as ready to forsake me, and my Lord hath forgotten me.
universal prevalence of true religion, are doubtless especially intended.

V. 18-21. Zion is here addressed in the character of an afflicted widow, bereaved also of her children. She is directed to look up, and behold numbers approaching her from every quarter; and the Lord most solemnly assures her, that they come in order to be a comfort and honour to her: and that instead of the disconsolate attitude and appearance, which had hitherto beftitted her condition, this great accession to her family should render her adored and cheerful as a bride. The desert and waste places of the land also would soon be replenished, that there would not be room for all the inhabitants; who would no more be an object of terror or alarm by those enemies, who had before awed them up. So that, after Zion's former desolations, her children should be so numerous that they would earnestly demand more room. The destruction of the Jews by the Chaldeans, and afterwards by the Romans, and the rejection of the Jewish nation for their unbelief, were to that Church as the loss of children: the state of the Jewish Church during the captivity, and that of the Christian Church during the reign of antichrist; and especially that of the Jewish nation for above seventeen hundred years, has resembled a desolate widow in captivity, wandering from place to place, without prospect of having or bringing up children: and the replenishing of the Church after these desolations, might seem as the resurrection of her children from the dead, or their return to her after they had been supposed dead; or it was like the case of a poor forlorn widow to whom many show the respect and affection of children, for whom she had suffered no pain, and bestowed no labour; and she could not imagine whence these children came, or where they had been during her destitute and wandering condition. After the captivity, the Jews were vastly increased; they not only filled the land of Judah, but multitudes inhabited the adjacent cities and countries: and many were proselyted to their religion, and became Zion's adopted children. Yet, the context and the expressions lead us rather to interpret the passage of the enlargement of the Church, by breaking down the partition wall, and by the conversion of the Gentiles to Christ, which has already diffused the worship of the true God far more widely than of old; and which, after the return of the Jews into the Church, shall at length fill the whole earth with the knowledge of his glory.

V. 22-23. Jehovah here further explains how this increase of Zion's family would be effected. By the death of Christ and the preaching of the Gospel, his hand was lifted up to summon the nations, and his standard erected for them to resort to. The numerous converts made from among the Gentiles are represented under the idea of many nations at once bringing Zion's sons and daughters home to her, with the greatest care and tenderness; especially as they employed their ability to promote the cause of the Gospel. Even kings would become foster-fathers, and queens nursing-mothers to the children of Zion, according to their honour and privilege to use their influence and authority to promote the success of the Gospel; rendering the most profound respect to the Church; not attempting to have dominion over her faith, but subservining her comfort and prosperity, and showing her honour for the Lord's sake, proportioned to the contempt and indignity with which she had been treated. Then would it appear more than ever, that the immutable truth, power, and love of Jehovah were engaged in behalf of his people; and that they who wait for him shall never be put to shame. Arafkeres, and other Persian monarchs, showed signal favour to the Jews; and Esther saved the nation from utter destruction: but the prophecy was more remarkably fulfilled, when Constantine and other Christian princes and princes, showed favour to the Church. (Lowth.) There can, however, be no dispute, but the grand accomplishment of these predictions is yet future.
shall be delivered: for I will contend with him that contendeth with thee, and thou shalt see that I will save thy children.

26 And I will feed them that oppress thee with their own flesh; and they shall be drunken with their own blood as with sweet wine: and all flesh shall know that I the Lord am thy Saviour and thy Redeemer, the mighty One of Jacob.

The sharp sword of his mouth, his quick and penetrating word, is employed in slaying the lusus, as well as the enemies of those that trust in him; but it will cut off all those that persist in their enmity and disobedience. His sharp arrows wound the conscience; but when the sinner submits and supplicates mercy, he heals the wounds that he had inflicted, and the transient pain makes way for durable joy; but these arrows will rankle for ever in the consciences of those who will not be his subjects. It will not in the event appear a light thing, which he hath effected on earth: innumerable multitudes of the tribes of Jacob and of the Gentiles, have been raised up from the depths of guilt and misery; and through them, their Light and Salvation, have now arrived in the realms of bliss, and before the throne are celebrating his praises. Numbers are continually enlightened and saved by him, in the most remote regions, whence daily accessions are made to the Church triumphant: and he will be more and more the Light and Salvation of the Gentiles, till "all kings shall fall down before him, and all nations shall do his service;" because "of the Lord that is faithful, and the Holy One of Israel who chooseth him." These considerations may encourage and instruct his ministers. We should not despise, because of the contempt, reproach, or ill success, with which we meet. We should rather be made more instant in prayer, and more diligent in using every means by which we may be rendered as polished shafts, and suitable instruments, for his work. If we seem to labour and spend our strength for nothing, we should remember that comparatively our labours are of small value, and easily overpaid: that they may prove more useful than we suppose; and that "our judgment is with the Lord, and our work with our God." And if there should be no gathering of sinners to Christ through our ministry; yet the Lord will honour those that honour him, and welcome them at length with "Well done, good and faithful servants." He will also be our Strength and our sure Protector: and if he employ us in rescuing a few souls from destruction, and in leading them to Christ for light and salvation; we ought to count it a great thing, though we should labour and pray to be made more usefully useful.

Even the Redeemer, who spake as never man spake, seemed often, in his personal ministry, to labour in vain, and to spend his strength for nought: and his sufferings and death will eventually increase the condemnation of numbers that hear his Gospel. He was, and still is, despised and abhorred by the nation to which he was sent, and by mankind in general: and many rulers have opposed, and modelled his Gospel, and made his truths and ordinances subservient to their political purposes; as if He were indeed their Servant, instead of their Lord. Yet is he glorious,
The Lord Christ shows that the Jews were rejected through their obstinate wickedness and unbelief: declares his power and fitness for his work; and speaks of his voluntary humiliation and patient sufferings, as assured of being delivered, justified, and rendered victorious over all enemies, 1—9. He encourages afflicted and shall be glorified: all judgment is administered by Him, and all power is in his Hand to fulfil his great designs. The Father "heareth him in an acceptable time, and "in a day of salvation;" and He hath said, "Ask of me," "and I will give thee the heathen for thine inheritance," "and the uttermost parts of the earth for thy possession:" and whilst some are broken to pieces with his iron rod, others, even kings and princes, shall arise to behold him, and fall down to worship him, as given "for a Covenant "to the people, and to establish the earth." We also, whom he employs as "workers together with him; while "we beseech our fellow-sinners not to receive the grace "of God in vain," giving no offence in any thing, that our ministry may not be blamed; may assure them that now, (when the Gospel is preached to them,) is the accepted time and the "day of salvation;" seeing we speak in his name, who ever liveth to intercede effectually for all, that come through him to the mercy-seat of our forgiving God. In the persevering use of these means, we may hope at length to have our prayers answered; and that the Lord Jesus will himself speak to the prisoners of Satan, and say, "Go forth, show yourselves;" and that many of them will appear in the way to Zion, and learn to feed as they go, upon the spiritual provisions of his Gospel. Then our business will be, carefully to prepare food for them, by the faithful preaching of the word, and administering his ordinances; and to cast up, and make plain his high-ways, and remove all stumbling blocks out of them. But let those, that are setting out in this heavenly pilgrimage, remember, that Christ himself will both feed and guide them by the springs of grace and consolation: and then they will neither hunger, nor thirst, nor miss their road, nor be tempted above what they are able; but arrive safe at their journey's end. And whilst heaven resounds with joy over sinners from every quarter, brought to repentance and faith in Christ, surely we on earth also should join in their songs of praise, anticipating in the midst of our afflictions, the comforts prepared by our merciful God for his Church and people!

V. 16—26.

Alas! through sin and unbelief, and by means of some conflicts, temptations, and distresses, we are often disposed to complain and despise, both respecting our own concerns and those of religion at large. This is both dishonorable to God and uncomfortable to ourselves, and we do very wrong in yielding to it. The strongest love of the and tempted believers, and denounces the ruin of presumptuous transgressors, 10, 11.

Thus saith the Lord, Where is the bill of your mother's divorce? whom I have put away? or which of my creditors is it to whom I have sold you? Behold, for your iniquities have ye sold yourselves, and for your transgression is your mother put away.

The most indulgent mother bears no comparison to the everlasting love of Christ to his Church, which he hath purchased with the travail of his soul, and to whom he gives his "flesh to be meat indeed, and his blood to be drink in- deed." As far as we have scriptural evidence, that we belong to this ransomed flock, we may be as sure that he will never forsake us, as that he will never forget his Zion. Our names are engraven on his hands and on his heart; and he hath not only assured us, that the gates of hell shall not prevail against his Church, but that none shall ever pluck his sheep out of his almighty hands. Let us then "give diligence to make our calling and election sure," and rejoice in the hope of the glory of God. And let us wait and pray for the performance of all these glorious prophecies. By faith, we may lift up our eyes, and behold multitudes from every land, gathering together to re-plenish and adorn the Church. We may view the whole of those nations, in which Christianity is professed, (which at present are in many places very desolate, and a land of destruction,) filled with true believers: we may behold these bounds of the Redeemer's kingdom broken down, in answer to the prayers of Zion's children, complaining that the place is too strait for them: we may observe the despised and forlorn condition of the Church exchanged for such liberty, prosperity, light, holiness, and honour, as baffle description. We may hear the signals given, the ensign erected, the sons and daughters of the Church brought in from every quarter; and kings, and queens, and all the nobles of the earth, fying with each other, who shall show most honour to true godliness, and do most service to the cause of Christ their Lord. We may view Satan, that mighty and terrible one, deprived of his prey, seized, bound, cast into the bottomless pit, and not allowed to deceive the nations any more: and all those powers, that have combined to enslave, corrupt, and persecute the Church, made to feed on their own flesh, and to be drunken with their own blood, by his power, who will contend with all that contend with his people, and avenge them upon their enemies; that all the earth may know, that our Saviour and Redeemer is Jehovah, the mighty One of Jacob. Let us then seek for ourselves complete redemption from the power of Satan, the god of this world: and then we may rejoice both in the hope of our own final salvation, and also of the final victory on earth of that cause which we favour. And we may consider every effort that we make to rescue our fellow-sinners, as, in a small and remote degree, helping to bring forward that great revolution, which will cause increasing joy in heaven to holy angels, and to the spirits of just men made perfect.
2 Wherefore, when I came, was there no man? when I called, was there none to answer? Is my hand shortened at all, that it cannot redeem? or have I no power to deliver? behold, at my rebuke I dry up the sea; I make the rivers a wilderness: their fish stinketh, because there is no water, and dieth for thirst.

3 I clothe the heavens with blackness, and I make sackcloth their covering.

4 The Lord hath given me the tongue of the learned, that I should know how to speak a word in season to him that is weary: he wakeneth morning by morning, he wakeneth mine ear to hear as the learned.

5 The Lord God hath opened mine ear, and I was not rebellious, neither turned away back.

6 I gave my back to the smiters, and my cheeks to them that plucked off the hair: I hid not my face from shame and spitting.

NOTES.

CHAP. L. V. 1—3. The preceding chapter concluded with predictions, that refer to the recovery of the Jews from their present dispersions, as well as to the deliverance of the Church from antichristian tyranny. This relates to the cause of that dispersion. The Lord had espoused the Church of Israel, (the mother of individuality of that nation,) by the covenant ratified with her at Mount Sinai; but since her rejection of Christ, she has been like a divorced woman. The law required him that put away his wife, to give her a bill of divorce, assigning the causes of her dismission, which frequently were very frivolous. But if the Jews should produce the bill of their mother's divorce; it would appear, that she was not put away on trivial pretences, but for her violation of the covenant, for her idolatries and iniquities, especially for the crucifying the promised Messiah, and obstinately opposing his Gospel. It was also customary on some other occasions for children to be sold into slavery, by the parent's consent to satisfy his creditors, or by a judicial sentence. (Marg. Ref.) Thus the Jews were sold into the hands of the Romans, and have been enslaved and oppressed ever since: but it cannot be pretended that the Lord had sold them on any such account: indeed they were punished as criminals for their iniquities, and had none to blame but themselves for their miseries. For when the Lord came, exalted the eternal "Word, who from the beginning was with God and was God," to his own people, "his own received him not:" when he called them to follow him, they answered him not. And wherefore were they thus regardless and disobedient? they expected a mighty temporal prince and conqueror; and he appeared in the form of a servant, to be their spiritual Redeemer: and they concluded, that he was not able to deliver them, or to defend them against the Romans. But could they behold his unparalleled miracles, and think that his hand was so shortened that it could not redeem? or that he had no power to deliver? These proved him to be the same, and to possess the same power, that had formerly dried up the Red Sea and desolated the rivers of Egypt, turning their waters into blood, and causing the fish to die and putrid: the same power, that caused the tremendous plague of hail and the more tremendous plague of darkness; and which was able at any time to repeat or vary these miracles, and to clothe the heavens with darkness, and make sackcloth their covering. This may refer to the darkness that covered the land, during Christ's crucifixion; as that was an apt emblem of his dreadful vengeance, about to be poured out on his critics. The power which rebuked the tempestuous winds and waves, extorted obedience from legions of unclean spirits, and called the dead out of their graves, was evidently adequate to effect any deliverance, and to exceed all that had been done for Israel by the Lord, from the beginning to that day.

V. 6. How far Isaiah, as the type of Christ, was exposed to these indignities, we cannot tell: but the history of Jesus compels us to explain the whole of him exclusively. Splitting in any one's presence has, in the east, been always considered as an intolerable expression of contempt; how much more to spit in a man's face! before the high priest, chief priests, and rulers, the servants and others repeatedly spat in the face of our adorable Redeemer. (Marg. Ref.) The perfect holiness of the Saviour disposed him to open his ears to every commandment of the Father, and to render absolute obedience, through difficulties, temptations, and sufferings, even to the death upon the cross. (Note, Ps. xl. 6—8.) So that he turned not 7 For the Lord God will help me; therefore shall I not be confounded: and though I bow myself in bonds, then will I be in prosperity. 8 The Lord is my strength, and he shall prosper my way. 9 Surely he will render to every man according to his works. 10 Prove to me now with thy servant, if I have vexed thee at all, or whether there be any other fault in me. 11 As the stubble is before the fire, so shall the wicked man fall before the judge. 12 The Lord help those who wait for him, the poor also, who seek his face. Amen.
chap. li.

The Lord encourages his Church, by the example of Abraham, to trust in him, and promises comfort, 1–4. He contrasts the certainty and perpetuity of his salvation, with the short continuance of the visible creation, and the feebleness of persecutors; and warns his people against the dread of reproach, 5–8. The Church calls on God to renew his wonderful works in her behalf; and receives assurances of comfort and prosperity, with a rebuke for her unbelief and fear of man, 9–16. The Jews, in their past and present distresses, are assured of deliverance, and of the punishment of their oppressors, 17–23.

Hand that he cannot redeem, or deprived him of power to deliver; and cannot he, who shall shortly raise the dead, burn the world, and destroy the wicked with everlasting perdition, make up to us all we can lose, and support us under all we can suffer for his sake? His mercy and condescension are equal to his power and majesty. He received from the Father those encouraging words which he once spoke in person, and now delivers to us by his ministers. Still he calls the weary and heavy-laden to come to him, that they may find rest to their souls; his words afford seasonable cordials for the mourner, the tempted, and the discouraged; he knows how to apply them to their hearts by his comforting Spirit; and he is ready, from day to day, to hear their prayers and alleviate their distresses. In many of these things, he is the pattern for his ministers to follow. They should seek to the Lord God to give them the tongue of the learned, that they may know how to speak seasonably to the afflicted and broken hearted: they must awake morning by morning, that they may study and learn, and the word of God, and become “workmen that need not be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth.” Their ear also must be opened to hear, and their heart prepared to obey, the commandments of God, that they may become examples to the flock. And as the incarnate Son of God was not rebellious, and shrank not back from obedience in his arduous undertaking, which required him to endure pain, shame, and agonies unknown: surely we should be willing to endure hardship as his soldiers, and not deem any obedience too denying, or any suffering too sharp, to which he calls us. Let us then go forth with him out of the camp, bearing his reproach: and if we trust in his righteousness, copy his example, and suffer for his sake, the Lord God will help us too; and we may set our faces as a flint, assured that God will justify and deliver us, and confound all our adversaries and persecutors. Let then the Christian, “who feareth the Lord,” and obeyeth the voice of his beloved Son, take courage, even “if he walk in darkness, and have no light;” let him confide in God to conduct him through every gloomy vale of affliction, temptation, and disconsolation; and through the vale of death to the everlasting light and joy of heaven. But as for those, who oppose, neglect, despise, or abuse this great salvation; their prosperity, confidence, and joy will be only as the expiring blaze and the vanishing sparks of a fire of thorns: and their boasted illuminations will only light them down to the regions of darkness and despair.

Chapter li. v. 1–3. This is evidently a continuation of the former chapter. Christ here again returns to speak a word in season to his discouraged people. Some suppose the captives at Babylon to be intended: but the scene appears to be laid in after times, and that capacity merely to have given occasion to the address, and their deliverance to have been a shadow of more extensive and important blessings. The desolations of Jerusalem by the Romans, the massacres of the Jews that attended and succeeded it, and the rejection of that nation, must needs cause great heaviness to others of the Jewish converts, as well as to St. Paul; and they might conclude, that the Lord’s choice of Israel was finally vacated. The ten persecutions in the first three centuries were very trying to the faith and patience of the primitive Christians: the long continued oppressions that the Church hath laboured under from Antichristian persecutors, and the prevalence of superstition, idolatry, impurity, impiety, and every kind of iniquity to this day, amongst professing Christians, have been, and are, very discouraging to all who love truth and holiness: and there is a time coming, when the dispersed Jews will need some ground in their Scriptures to encourage their hope of re-admission into the Church: and consolatory topics, suited to these several purposes, are suggested. They who follow after righteousness and “seek the Lord,” are here addressed; they have begun to desire and seek for the knowledge of God, and expect happiness in his favour; and they are using the appointed means of obtaining righteousness, that is, of being justified and sanctified, in order thereto. They are called upon to hearken to the voice of God, and to recollect the rock and the quarry, so to speak, where the first stones of the spiritual building of the Jewish Church were taken. God called Abraham, an idolater, when advanced in years, with only Sarah his wife to attend him: and when it was become contrary to the ordinary course of nature for him to have children by her, the Lord, according to his promise, blessed and increased them into an innumerable multitude. So that he could, and certainly would, recover his Church from the lowest condition: he would comfort the remnant of believers, by reviving true religion in those places that had been waste and desert; and by planting them, like the garden of Eden, with every beautiful, excellent, and useful production: and this would cause joy and gladness, and thanksgiving songs of praise to abound. The conversion of the Gentiles, to fill up the places in Zion that were desolated by the rejection of the Jews: the revival of evangelical religion, after it had lain long buried under the rubbish of popery; the restoration of the Jews into the Church, and her subsequent purity and enlargement, may all be predicted under these images.

V. 7, 8. There seems to be here an advance in describing the character of the persons addressed: perhaps intimating, that they "who follow righteousness, and seek the Lord," will "know righteousness," and be assured, that "being justified by faith, they have peace with God," and enjoy his favour: having his law written in their hearts, loving it and delighting to obey it. This confidence would be necessary in order to their victory over the fear of man, especially in times of persecution; and they are encouraged not to fear the reproaches or revilings of those who spake all manner of evil against them falsely for Christ's sake, and then made their calamities the pretext for their cruelties. For all their persecutors would soon decay, and perish like a moth-eaten garment: but the righteousness and salvation of the Lord would maintain their ground on earth through all generations; as well as continue for ever the felicity of the believer, who here suffered for adhering to them.

V. 9—11. The Church, encouraged by these assurances, calls upon her great Redeemer to awake and exert himself for her deliverance. She calls him "the Arm of the Lord" or his power; (and Christ in the Power, as well as the Word and Wisdom, of God; Marg. Ref.) she entreats him to put on strength, as in ancient days: for he was not the same almighty King who had destroyed Egypt and Pharaoh, and weakened that formidable power of which the dragon was an emblem? (Note, Ps. lxxiv. 13, 14:) Was not he the same who had divided the Red Sea, that his redeemed people might pass over? In this confidence the Church rests assured, that the people, whom he had 12 I, even I, am he that comforteth you: who art thou, that thou shouldest be afraid of a man that shall die, and of the son of man, which shall be made as grass;

13 And forgettest the Lord thy Maker, who hath stretched forth the heavens, and laid the foundations of the earth; and hast feared continually every day because of the fury of the oppressor, as if he were ready to destroy? and where is the fury of the oppressor?

14 The captive exile hasteth that he may be loosed, and he should not die in the pit, nor that his bread should fail.

15 But I am the Lord thy God, that divided the sea, whose waves roared:

The Lord of hosts is his name.

16 And I have put my words in thy mouth, and I have covered thee in the shadow of mine hand, that I may plant the heavens, and lay the foundations of the earth, and say unto Zion, Thou art my people.

17 Awake, awake, stand up, O Jerusalem, which hast drunk at the hand of the Lord the cup of his fury; thou hast drunken the dregs of the cup of trembling, and wrung them out.

18 There is none to guide her among all the sons whom she hath brought forth; neither is there any that taketh her by the hand, of all the sons that she hath brought up.

19 These two things shall come unto thee; desolation, and destruction; and famine, and the sword: by whom shall I comfort thee?

20 Thy sons have faintened, they lie at the head of all the streets, as a wild goat in a net: they are full of the fury of the Lord, the rebuke of thy God.

Now redeemed with his blood as well as by his power, will obtain a joyful deliverance from every enemy. As the Jews of old returned from Babylon to Zion with songs of joy and praise; so will that nation be again received into the Christian Church; which shall long rejoice and prosper, freed from those enemies, oppressions, and corruptions that have so long harassed her: and enjoy such peace, purity, light, and felicity, as shall render her earthly state most like heaven, where alone these expressions can be fully answered. (Note, xxxv. 10.)

V. 12-14. The Lord here engages to be the Comforter of his Church; and in that case what occasion had she to fear wretched, dying men, who are cut down and wither as the grass? It must therefore be the effect of an unbelief, forgetfulness of the Lord her Maker, and of the power engaged on her side, as she was continually terriﬁed by the fury of oppressors, even when they were about entirely to destroy her; whereas their fury would speedily vanish and be no more found. But she complained and was alarmed, like a person who is exiled or captivity, and was in great haste to be set at liberty, lest she should perish in the dungeon, or by famine. “He marcheth on with a speed, who cometh to set free the captive,” &c. (Cyrus.) “if understood of the temporal redemption from Babel: be: in the spiritual sense the Messiah.” (Bp. Lowth.) “The captive exile shall be quickly delivered: he shall not die in the pit; neither shall his bread fail” (Lowth.).

Either of these renderings contains an encouragement, and not a proof: but the context rather leads us to think, that the persons concerned, while earnestly waiting and seeking for deliverance, were in a measure impatient, and weak in faith, and ready to conclude that the blessing so long delayed, would never be vouchsafed; though express promised in the sacred Scriptures. Thus pious Christians, who have always grieved over the corruptions of the Church, and longed for deliverance from the spiritual captivity of antichrist, and for the predicted millennium; have been tempted, by the failure of many zealous attempts, to which they forebode full success, and by the delay of an answer to their earnest prayers, to conclude that such a time would never arrive; and that superstition, ignorance, false doctrine, and wickedness, would prevail to the end of the world. “The captive must starve and die: in his dungeon, if not hastily liberated.”

V. 15, 16. The Church or the prophet had called on the Lord, that he had divided the Red Sea; and he here answers to that call. He was still the same omnipotent Protector of his people, as when he brought Israel out of Egypt. But the latter verse must be addressed, either to Isaiah, or to the Messiah whom he predicted, and in some respects, typiﬁed. The Lord had put words in the prophet’s mouth, which he delivered to the Church, to encourage her to faith and direct her prayers; and he had preserved him, as under the shadow of his hand, that, with the convert made by his ministry, he might plant the heavens, as with trees of righteousness, and establish the earth, or the land, which had been greatly shaken in the reign of Ahaz. It is, however, obvious, that this interpretation falls vastly short of the energetic language here employed; which nothing can fully answer, but the glorious effects of the Messiah’s coming into the world, being carried through his labours and sufferings, advanced to the mediatorial throne, and sending his Gospel to all nations, with the Holy Spirit to render it successful; thus replenishing heaven with holy inhabitants, establishing the moral state of the earth, and owning the despised Church, as a people near and dear to him. (Notes, xlix. 1-3.)

V. 17-20. The Lord here seems to address the Jews.
21 Therefore hear now this, thou afflicted, and drunken, but not with wine:

22 Thus saith thy Lord the Lord, and thy God that pleadeth the cause of his people, Behold, I have taken out of thine hand the cup of trembling, even the dregs of the cup of my fury; thou shalt no more drink it again.

23 But I will put it into the hand of them that afflict thee; which have said, to thy soul, Bow down, that we may go over: and thou hast laid thy body as it were upon the ground, and as the street, to them that went over.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—6.

The consolations of the Gospel are proposed to men, not by name, but by character: and from the first dawns of divine life in the soul, till its completion in glory, the true believer, and he alone, "follows after righteousness and seeks the Lord." As it is probable to consider from what small and unpromising beginnings the blessing of God hath increased and enlarged the Church hitherto, and revived pure religion when it appeared almost expiring; so it is very useful for believers to consider frequently, "the rock whence they were hewn, and the hole of the pit whence they were digged." We should seriously reflect upon our natural depravity, guilt, and misery: upon the enmity and hardness of our hearts, the rebellion of our wills, the pollution of our imaginations and desires, and the crimes of our lives past: we should recollect the bad habits we had contracted, through an early entrance on a long continuance in sin; the ungodly connexions we had formed, the prejudices we had imbibed, and all the circumstances peculiar to us, which tended to aggravate our guilt, and to render our conversion improbable: and we should consider how we struggled against conviction, and would gladly have quieted our consciences without parting with our sins, or without accepting the salvation of Christ. These review powerfully tend to keep the heart humble, and the conscience awake and tender: they repress boastings and complaints, and excite thankfulness to him that hath made us to differ; they are suited to satisfy the discouraged believer, that a saving change hath taken place, and to animate his hopes and prayers for all that yet remains to be done in and for him; they make Christ more precious to our souls; and give energy to our attempts and prayers for the conversion of ungodly relatives, and for that of sinners all around us. Let us then frequently make such reviews, that we may renew our repentance, our joyful praises, and our earnest supplications; that our souls may become like the garden of the Lord, being filled with all the "fruits of righteousness, which are through Jesus Christ, to the glory of God," and that we may be, as it were in miniature, what the Church on earth will shortly become; and possess an internal evidence of the power of our God to effect that glorious change in the state of the visible Church and of the world; as well as an earnest of that further change which must yet take place in our bodies and souls, previous to our full enjoyment of that Paradise of God, where only joy and gladness shall be found, thanksgiving and the voice of melody; and from which sorrow and mourning shall flee away. Our meditation should also be extended to the former state of this CHAPTER LII.

A call to the captive church to assert her liberty, accompanied with promises of deliverance, 1—6. The joy occasioned by the Gospel, and the knowledge, peace, and purity of the Christian church; with suitable exhortations, 7—12. The ha-our most favoured nation: blessed be God, that the Gospel of Christ hath come, and doth rest, amongst us for the light of our souls; "his righteousness is brought nigh, his salvation is gone forth" in the midst of us: he is revealed as our Lawgiver and Judge, and he is become the Righteousness and Salvation of those that trust in and wait for him. Let us then rely on his merits, his grace, and power, and receive the law from his hands, as the rule of our obedience: and thus we shall be safe and happy, when the earth and all its works shall be worn out and burnt up; for "his salvation shall be for ever, and his righteous-ness shall not be abolished." But if we should expect that solemn season with comfort, and have confidence in death and judgment, we must press forward in the ways of God, that having his law in our hearts, we may know his interest in his righteousness. Then we need fear no enemy or catastrophe: our reverential fear of God, and our gracious dread and abhorrence of sin, will arm us against the ensnaring fear of man; and it is our infirmity and fault, if we fear the revilings or rage of any man or set of men, who despise and hate us for the sake of Christ and his righteousness: seeing He is our ever-present and all-sufficient Protector. We can indeed expect no other than reproach in this wicked world: but our persecutors will soon die and perish. Should we be cut off by their rage, or die before them, we shall soon be out of their reach; and if we are spared, they will soon lose their power of molesting us. The cause of Christ survives one generation of opposers after another: and the believer will survive all his revilers, and enjoy his portion whilst they are in outer darkness. Let us then combat our fears, and give up ourselves unto prayer: and let us take courage in viewing the wonders God performed for his Church of old.

V. 9—23.

We Christians may not only plead with God, that He divided the Red Sea, and destroyed the Egyptians to deliver Israel; but we may advert to the more glorious triumphs of his grace, at the day of Pentecost, and afterwards in the conversion of unnumbered multitudes to Him, whom they just before had crucified, and who, being risen again and ascended into heaven, poured out his Spirit to work the astonishing change. Compared with those glorious days, the Arm of the Lord seems now to sleep; but he only waits to be awakened by our fervent prayers. He will yet put on strength as in ancient days; He will destroy the power of Antichrist, and bind up the old dragon that hath hitherto deceived nations. Then the redeemed of the Lord shall be delivered from captivity, Zion shall resound with songs of praise, and their gladness on earth shall form a sweet antepast to the everlasting joy of heaven. Though our lot is not cast in this happy period, yet the Lord is our Comforter, if indeed we be Christians: and should we then think ourselves so defenceless as to fear a man that shall die? Surely this must arise from our unbelief, and forgetfulness of the Lord our Maker, who hath stretched forth the heavens, and laid the foundations of the earth; and we are very reprehensible for being solicitous continually every day, because of the prevalence of infidelity and impiety, as if the enemies of godliness were ready to complete its ruin. The case is far otherwise: they are compassing their own perdition, and ere long their place shall know them no more. Let us then make haste to escape the confines of sin, and to return from our state of distance and banishment from God: but let us wait patiently our time of deliverance from oppression and calamities, assured that the Lord will hasten it in due season. If we be saved by Jesus from the pit of hell, He will not let us perish in any other pit; and our bread cannot fail if we have learned to feed upon the Bread of life: our bondage and exile on earth will soon end; our souls be rescued from the prison of our sinful bodies, and our bodies at length redeemed from the bondage of corruption, and so shall we be ever with the Lord. Let us then rest our souls on his words; that having been planted as trees of righteousness in his courts below, we shall at length be transplanted to heaven, there to flourish for ever in that garden of the Lord. Nor should they despair, who have here drunk the deepest of the cup of the Lord's indignation; for his severest judgments often introduce his tenderest compassions. Yet as long as men are hardened, stu-pified, or rendered outrageous or desperate by afflictions; there is little appearance of a happy event to them. When the wrath of God rests upon transgressors, no children or friends can comfort them; and all their efforts to extricate themselves, involve them in deeper guilt and misery. Let sinners then remember these things, and learn by their sufferings to submit to God, to confess their crimes, to acknowledge his justice, and to seek his mercy. Let us all recollect, that our rebellious murmurs tend only to increase and prolong our sorrows; let us look on the poor Jews with compassion, and endeavour to minister to their comfort, and not add to their miseries; and more all, let us pray for and seek their conversion. And let those powerful tyrants, who lord it over that people or any others; who enslave their bodies, or usurp authority over their consciences, remember, that the Lord will plead their cause, and punish their impenitent oppressors, with equal or greater misery and contempt, either in this world, or in that which is to come.

2. Shake thyself from the dust; arise, and sit down, O Jerusalem:" loose thyself from the bands of thy neck, O captive daughter of Zion.

3. For thus saith the Lord, Ye have sold yourselves for nought; and ye shall be redeemed without money.

4. For thus saith the Lord God, my people went down aforetime into Egypt to sojourn there; and the Assyrian oppressed them, without cause.

5. Now therefore, what have I here, saith the Lord, that my people is taken away for nought? They that rule over them make them to howl, saith the Lord; and my name continually every day is blasphemed.

6. Therefore my people shall know my name: therefore they shall know in that day that I am he that doth speak behold, it is I.

7. How beautiful upon the mountains are the footing hills, O baseness good tidings, that publisheth peace; that publisheth good tidings of good, that publisheth salvation.
CHAPTER LII.

eth salvation; that saith unto Zion, 'Thy God reigneth.'

8 Thy * watchmen shall lift up the voice together, and they shall sing: for they shall see eye to eye, when the LORD shall bring again Zion.*

9 Break forth into joy, sing together, ye waste places of Jerusalem: for the LORD hath comforted his people, he hath redeemed Jerusalem.

10 The LORD hath made bare his holy arm in the eyes of all the nations; and all the ends of the earth shall see the salvation of our God.

11 Depart ye, depart ye, go ye out from hence, touch no unclean thing; go ye out of the midst of her;* be ye pure.

12 For ye shall not go out with haste, nor go by flight: for the LORD shall be before you; and the God of Israel will be your rearward.

13 Behold, my servant shall deal prudently, he shall be exalted and extolled, and be very high.*

14 As many were astonished at thee; (his visage was so marred more than any man, and his form more than the sons of men:)

15 So shall he sprinkle many nations; they shall shall shut their mouths at him: for that which had not been told them shall they see: and that which they had not heard they shall consider.

V. 7, 8. The proclamations of Cyrus circulated by messengers into every place, and notified by signals on the tops of the mountains, was but a feeble emblem of that grand event to which the apostle appropriates this passage; namely, the preaching of the Gospel to the nations of the earth. When men know their own situation and that of the world, the feel of those who bring these good tidings appear beautiful; that is, the meanest of them: it may also intimate their holy walk and conversation. They bring good news from heaven of pardon, peace, and salvation; and say to Zion, thy God reigneth. He rules the world with invincible power, who is Zion's God and Saviour. The watchmen may be the same, as the messengers of glad tidings; evangelists, or such as wait to receive and circulate the joyful sound. Whilst they cry aloud, that all may hear, they join glad hallelujahs with their invitations: the divine light then shines so clear, that they see eye to eye, with open face, as of one mind and judgment, and very distinctly. I apprehend this is not to be restricted to any particular period, but is a general declaration of the means, by which all the predicted events, as far as they relate to spiritual redemption, are to be accomplished. In proportion as the faithful preaching of the Gospel is vouchsafed, true religion will be diffused and flourished. 'The ideas are, in their full extent, evangelical: and accordingly St. Paul has, with the utmost propriety, applied this passage to the preaching of the Gospel.' The tidings here to be "proclaimed, "Thy God, O Zion, reigneth," are the same as "that John Baptist, and that Christ himself published:—"The kingdom of heaven is at hand." (Bp. Lowth.) (Marg. Ref.)

V. 9, 10. The incorporation of the Gentile converts with the believing Jews, in the primitive times, replenished the waste places of Jerusalem, and caused great joy to all the faithful servants of God. Thus the Lord made bare his holy arm, in the eyes of the nations, to subject the worshippers of idols to himself: but when the whole Visible Church shall be full of true religion, the emphasis of this passage will be more fully answered, and this will make way, literally, for "all the ends of the earth to see "the salvation of our God." (Marg. Ref.)

V. 11, 12. Here the return of the Jews from Babylon is alluded to; but greater things are evidently prefigured. When leave was given them to return, the Lord commanded their departure; and that no attachment to any object, in that unclean and devoted city, should stay them: and they who carried back the sacred vessels, were to be peculiarly careful not to contract ritual or moral uncleanness. They must not needlessly delay their departure; yet neither should they improperly hasten it, as if they were arising from their enemies: for they would have full liberty to return home, and the Lord would guide and protect them on every side, through the whole journey. St. Paul applies part of this to the separation of sinners from idolatry and worldly lusts and connexions: (1 Cor. vi. 14-18) and a similar command and caution are given to believers to come out from the New Testament-Babylon. (Rev. xviii. 4.)

V. 13-15. These verses introduce another subject, and properly belong to the next chapter. 'The deliverance of the Jews from Babylon; that of the Gentiles from their miserable state of ignorance and idolatry; and of mankind from the captivity of sin and death, have a close connexion with each other; and the two latter are shadowed out under the image of the former.—They are covered by it as a veil, which, however, is transparent, and suffers them to appear through it.—The restoration of the Jews, the call of the Gentiles, the redemption by Messiah, have hitherto been handled interchangeably and alternately: but here Babylon is at once dropped, and hardly ever comes in sight again.—The prophet's views are almost wholly engrossed by the superior part of his subject.' (Bp. Lowth.) The Lord here speaks of his servant the Messiah, the Alpha and Omega, in all these transactions, and in every thing else. He would fulfill his whole undertaking with consummate wisdom; and his exaltation in heaven, and his glory on earth also, would be very high. Yet his previous abasement would be proportionable: many would behold his sufferings with astonishment, and be offended by them.
His visage would be marred by sorrow and shame, with wounds and blood, by being spit upon, and crowned with thorns, and treated with indignity more than any man's ever was; and he would appear more base than any of the human species; yet he would in consequence "sprinkle many nations," alluding to the ceremonial law, with his atoning blood, and by the pouring out of his Spirit, as purifying water, of which baptism would be the outward and visible sign. (Marg. Ref.) Opposing kings would at length be silenced by fear and astonishment, or won over to the faith; for they would see and consider such things, as before they had not heard of, or been acquainted with.
"This is the King Messiah, who shall be exalted above Abraham, and exalted above Moses, and be high above the angels of the ministry." (Mishchah-Tenach, an ancient Jewish gloss on this passage.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—6.

The promises of God should invigorate our efforts, to obtain the proposed blessings; and to promote the purity, peace, and enlargement of the Church, which they teach us to expect. Whilst we call on the Lord to awake and put on strength, for our help and salvation; we should at least to his exhortation to bestir ourselves in doing our duty.
At his call the sinner awakes from the fatal sleep of sin and delusive dreams of earthly felicity, and discovers his abject, wretched, and enslaved condition; by his help he arises from the dust, shakes off his sloth and dejection, breaks off his fetters, puts off the old corrupt nature, and puts on Christ for righteousness and sanctification. Then he appears before God in his beautiful garments; his holy conversation shows him to men also, a new creature; and being thus delivered from the bondage of corruption, sin shall no more have dominion over him. Multitudes of the uncircumcised in heart and unclean in life, are within the visible Church; but none such are citizens of the heavenly Jerusalem, or can find admission into the holy city of our God above. We should therefore be diligent in "cleansing ourselves from all filthiness of flesh and spirit, and in perfecting holiness in the fear of God." The freeness of his salvation gives us abundant encouragement in pursuing this path; and when we consider how unprofitable, yes, how pernicious to our temporal comfort, those sins are, by which men incur condemnation and enslave their souls; we shall the more value that redemption, which Several circumstances attending his death, burial, resurrection, and glory; and his success in justifying and saving sinners, 8—10. As a recompense of his sufferings, and the fruit of his intercession, he should rescue a numerous people from Satan's bondage, and rule over them as his willing subjects. 11, 12.

Christ hath made, "not by corruptible things, as silvet and gold, but by his own most precious blood." We should also seek complete victory over every sin, recollec-ting, that the glory of God as much requires the sanctification of every Christian, as it doth the deliverance of his harmless people from those oppressors, that harass them and blaspheme his holy name. And when the Lord's promises are performed to us, we obtain an additional assurance, that he indeed spake them, and an experimental knowledge of his mercy and truth, and all his glorious attributes.

V. 7—15.

All blessings come to us sinners, by means of the Gospel; we should therefore value and be thankful for that distinguishing advantage, above any temporal good. The meanest faithful minister, who brings the joyful tidings of peace and salvation, should be welcomed and respected; his footsteps should be marked and followed, and his doctine attended to. Ministers should proclaim in the most open manner their joyful message; and endeavour so to walk, as to show the holy tendency of their doctrine.
As those that watch for men's souls, they should cry aloud, and be very earnest in circulating the Gospel of salvation; and their contented thankful frame of mind, ever disposed to praise and rejoice in God, should make it plain, that they are happy, and want to render their neighbours happy with them. They should also pray continually for a more abundant supply of the Spirit of wisdom and love, that they may all "see eye to eye," and that unnatural divisions, and acrimonious disputations, may no longer disgrace the Gospel of peace. It behoves all of us to pray continually, that many such messengers of salvation may be sent forth, and welcomed by the nations of the earth; that Zion's God, who reigneth on a throne of grace, may be made known and served by them; that the waste places of Jerusalem may rejoice, and the Church be redeemed from thraldom; that so "the Lord may make bare his holy arm in the eyes of all the nations; and that all the ends of the earth may see his salvation." In the mean time, they, who are favoured with the Gospel, are called to depart from sin, to separate from the world, to renounce every kind of idolatriy and superstition, and to such unclean thing; and they who minister in sacred things should be peculiarly watchful against all appearance of evil. This should not be thought impracticable, for no power on earth or in hell can obstruct our escape from the dominion of sin and Satan, if we desire to return to God, and to become his redeemed servants. He will be our Guide and Guard, and our way will be safe, and made plain before us.
Yet we must expect to meet with some of the difficulties, CHAPTER LIII.

WHO hath believed our* report? and to whom is the arm of the LORD revealed?

2 For he shall grow up before him as a tender plant, and as a root out of a dry ground: *he hath no form nor comeliness; and when we shall see him, there is no beauty that we should desire him.

3 He is despised and rejected of men; *a man of sorrows, and acquainted with grief: and we hid as it were our faces from him; he was despised, and we esteemed him not.

4 Surely he hath borne our griefs, and carried our sorrows; *yet we did esteem him stricken, smitten of God, and afflicted.

5 But he was wounded for our transgressions, *he was bruised for our iniquities: *the chastisement of our peace was upon him; and with his stripes we are healed.

6 All we like sheep have gone astray; *we have turned every one to his own way; and the LORD hath laid on him the iniquity of us all.

*Isa. 53:1-6

NOTES.

CHAP. LIII. V. I. *This chapter declares the circumstances of our Saviour's sufferings so exactly, that it forms rather a history of his passion, than a prophecy.

*And *is so undeniable a proof of the truth of Christianity, that the bare reading of it, comparing it with the Gospel history, hath converted some infidels. (Lowth.)

The prophecet goes on, from mentioning the great success of the Gospel among the Gentiles at the close of the preceding chapter, to predict the unbelief of the Jews. Apostles and evangelists, in the primitive times, may be considered as complaining of their ill success, or wondering at it: or the prophet, as a Jew, and speaking in his own name and that of the other prophets, anticipated with astonishment and sorrow, this conduct of his nation. When John Baptist, Christ himself, his apostles, and others proclaimed the interesting report, that the long expected Messiah was come; though he most exactly answered to the types and prophecies of the Old Testament, and authenticated his mission by his most stupendous miracles; yet few in comparison believed the report, and they were generally of the lowest and most despised persons in the nation. For this "Arm of the Lord," that was employed to redeem his people, was not revealed to them, even when he lived among them: because they were blinded by prejudice, and because they were for their sins judicially left destitute of that powerful operation of God's Spirit upon their minds, by which believers were enabled to see the Saviour's glory.

Vol. III.—No. 19.

B. C. 706.
7 He was oppressed, and he was afflicted; yet he opened not his mouth: he is brought as a lamb to the slaughter, and as a sheep before her shearers. And he made his generation the sin of his people; for he was cut off out of the land of the living: for the transgression of my people was he stricken.

9 And he made his grave with the wicked, and with the rich in his death; though he had done no violence, neither was any deceit in his mouth.

10 Yet it pleased the Lord to bruise him; he hath put him to grief: when thou shalt make his soul an offering for sin, he shall see his seed, and the pleasure of the Lord shall prosper in his hand.

V. 4-6. The prophet, in the name of all believers in every age, breaks forth in admiration of the love of Christ, and of the mystery of his vicarious sufferings. As every kind of disease and misery spring from sin; so when Christ endured his sufferings in alleviating these miseries, it might properly be considered as a fulfilment of this prophecy, and a part of his general design. (Notes, Matt. viii. 17.) He endured our griefs and sorrows, becoming a sufferer to redeem us from eternal sufferings: and this, which should for ever endure to mankind, caused the Jews to mistake his character, and to suppose that he was amiss and Christ as so formidable a sinner; as Job's friends construed his calamities as a proof of his undetected guilt. He was indeed wounded, but it was not for his own, but for our transgressions: he was crushed with most intense agonies of body and soul, but it was for our iniquities. To purchase our peace with God, he was Holy and beloved, consented to bear our punishment, as if it had been a personal chastisement: and his stripes avail for the pardon and healing, or sanctification, of our souls. All the elect people of God are brought to confess, that they had wandered from God, as sheep from the fold, and must have been devoured by Satan the roaring lion, if the good Shepherd had not come to seek them: every one of them had turned into that devious path which was congenial to his depraved inclination; but all had added the guilt of rebellion, to the folly of forsaking their only Protector. So that the justice of God must be satisfied, before the criminals could be again received into his favour and under his care: and therefore judgment was laid upon the earth, upon Christ the surety, not the punishment only, but the iniquity of them all, imputing it to him, and requiring of him satisfaction for it. (MARG. Ref.)

V. 7. More literally, it was exacted, and he answered "ed." Our debt was exacted of our Surety, and he became answerable for it. And therefore he opened not his mouth to plead for himself, but stood speechless before man's tribunal, that he might have a prevailing plea before that of God. He was led patient, gentle, and innocent, like a lamb to be slaughtered for the food, or sacrificed for the offences of others; and like a sheep when deprived of its fleece, others may be clothed with it. (Note, Acts viii. 32-35.)

V. 8. The chief priests and scribes did not cast our Lord into prison, and then after a time give him a fair trial, according to law and custom: but without delay they delivered him to Pilate, and urged his immediate execution.
 chapter lll.

11 He shall see of the travail of his soul, and shall be satisfied: by his knowledge shall my righteous servant justify many; for he shall bear their iniquities.

12 Therefore will I divide him a portion with the great, and he shall divide the spoil with the strong; because he hath poured out his soul unto death; and he was numbered with the transgressors: and he bare the sin of many, and made intercession for the transgressors.
ISAIAH.

CHAP. LIV.

Predictions that the Church shall be enlarged by the conversion of the Gentiles, with promises of her great honour and happiness, as espoused to God, 1-5. Encouraging assurances of deliverance from affliction, perpetual mercy, prosperity, and victory over every enemy, to the Church and to every servant of God, 6-17.

SING, * O barren, thou that didst not bear; break forth into singing, and cry aloud, thou that didst not travail with child: for more are the children of the desolate, than the children of the married wife, saith the LORD.

2 Enlarge the place of thy tent, and let them stretch forth the curtains of thy habitation: spare not, lengthen thy cords, and strengthen thy stakes; peculiar objects of the divine abhorrence; let us remember him, "that endured the contradiction of sinners against himself, lest we be weary and faint in our minds." Let us often retire in contemplation to Gethsemane and Golgotha: and whilst we survey the sufferings of the Son of God, let us review our long catalogue of former and latter transgressions, and consider him as scourged, wounded, bruised, insulted, and crucified; as agonizing, bleeding, and dying, under the load of our guilt. Thus shall we learn to hate and to mortify sin; we shall understand our obligations to our gracious Friend, and be constrained by love to live to his glory. In this we are all concerned; for we have all gone astray from God, though in different ways; and we must all have perished, had not the good Shepherd come to seek and save us, and willingly borne the load of our iniquity, which would have been too heavy for us to bear. Our debt was exacted of him, and he paid the uttermost farthing; and in doing this, he was led as a lamb to the slaughter: and shall we, who deserve the final wrath of God, be impatient, like a wild bull in a net, under our light afflictions? Let us then, prove that we rely on his atonement alone, by copying his example of meekness and submission, however we may be chastised of God, or oppressed by men.

3 For thou shalt break forth on the right hand and on the left; and thy seed shall inherit the Gentiles, and make the desolate cities to be inhabited.

which the tender mother eyes her new-born infant, the fruit and recompense of all her anguish; He then "sees of " the travails of his soul and is satisfied." These are the trophies of his victory, the purchase of his blood, the monuments of his grace; for this he poured out his soul unto death, and was numbered with transgressors: for this he continually intercedeth and prevaileth; thus he destroyeth the works of the devil, and rescueth the prey from the hands of that mighty one. Let us bless the Lord for the knowledge of Christ, by which numbers in every age are justified: let us pray and endeavour, that it may be extended to all our fellow sinners: and let us think no labour, hardship, or expense too great, by which we may promote that cause, for which the Redeemer shed his blood. Thus we shall prove ourselves partakers of his salvation, and make an acceptable return of gratitude for his unspeakable love.

NOTES.

CHAP. LIV. V. 1. The connexion and language of this chapter lead our thoughts to Gospel times, with very little reference to previous deliverances. The Jewish Church is here represented as a married woman, who, (like Sarah,) had long continued barren. Comparatively few real believers, the children of God and of the Church, had been raised up among the Jews. And about the time of Christ's coming, Pharisaical formality, Sadducean infidelity, or open impiety, were become almost universal. This was a matter of grief to the small remnant of believers: but the coming of Christ would introduce better times. Though the nation in general rejected him, and were cast off; yet many children were born unto the Church, the Gentile converts were adopted into her family: and those nations that had been destitute of ordinances, and strangers to the covenants of promise, produced a larger increase of true believers, than the Jewish nation, that had been married to the Lord by their national covenant and distinguished advantages. As these were all the true children of the Church, she was to break forth into loud songs of joyful praise; notwithstanding the unbelief and rejection of that nation, of which her family had hitherto chiefly consisted. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Gal. iv. 21-31.)

V. 2, 3. The Church is still addressed as a matron, who with her small family resided in a tent: but this would soon be found incapable of containing all her children. She must therefore prepare to occupy more room, Fear not; for thou shalt not be ashamed: neither be thou confounded; for thou shalt not be put to shame: for thou shalt forget the shame of thy youth, and shalt not remember the reproach of thy widowhood any more.

For thy Maker is thine Husband; and thy Redeemer the Holy One of Israel, is The God of the whole earth shall he be called.

For the Lord hath called thee an outcast, a woman forsaken, and grieved in spirit, and a wife of youth, whom thou hast refused, saith thy God.

For a small moment have I forsaken thee; but with great mercies will I gather thee.

In a little wrath I hid my face from thee for a moment, but with everlasting kindness will I have mercy on thee, saith the Lord thy Redeemer.

For this is as the waters of Noah unto me: for as I have sworn that the waters of Noah should no more go over the earth; so have I sworn that I would not be wroth with thee, nor rebuke thee.

For the mountains shall depart, and the hills be removed; but my kindness shall not depart from thee, neither shall the covenant of my peace be removed, saith the Lord that bath mercy on thee.

If thou afflicted, tossed with tempest, and not comforted, behold, I will lay thee stones with fair colours, and lay thy foundations with sapphires.

And I will make thy windows of agates, and thy gates of carbuncles, and all thy borders of pleasant stones.

And all thy children shall be taught of the Lord; and great shall be the peace of thy children.

In righteousness shalt thou be established; thou shalt be far from oppression; for thou shalt not fear: and from terror; for it shall not come near thee.

and make larger curtains and longer cords: and as perpetuity, as well as enlargement, was to distinguish the Christian dispensation, she must also strengthen the stakes on which the curtains were suspended. And she need not fear making too large preparations: for vast accessions were to be expected; and her family would be so increased, that it would diffuse itself on every side, and at length occupy the countries and cities, that had been devoted to idolatry, and strangers to the name and worship of Jehovah.

The Church, in her youth, had been basely enslaved in Egypt; afterwards she had been greatly defiled by idolatries and debased by grievous oppressions; she also lay under the reproach of barrenness, and had been put away, as if rejected for her unfaithfulness; but by the introduction of the Gospel-dispensation, and by that purity and prosperity that were intended, these reproaches would all be wiped off and forgotten; and she need no more fear being confounded by the reproach of being left forlorn and destitute as a widow. (Lam. i. 1.) For the Lord of Hosts, the Creator of the world and of the Church, would avow his relation to her as her Husband; and afford her all the protection, and show her all the kindness, which that endeared relation implies. He had all along been spoken of as the Redeemer and the Holy One of Israel; but he would at length be acknowledged and worshipped, as the God of the whole earth. Christ is the Redeemer, and the Bridegroom of the Church; and he is her Creator, and the God of the whole earth. (Merg. Ref.)

The Church had been in the condition of a woman forsaken by her husband and grieved in spirit; having been espoused in her youth, and afterwards rejected with dislike for her misconduct: but the Lord was about to recall her into a state of more comfortable and intimate communion with him. The corruptions of the Jewish Church, the low state of religion among them, and the repeated triumphs of their enemies, as if God had quite cast them off; and the grief that these things occasioned to believers, are here intended: perhaps not without some reference to the calamities of the Christian Church during the reign of Antichrist, and that of the Jewish nation unto this day. But the frown and hiding of God’s countenance, and the consequent affliction of the Church, would be only momentary compared with the duration of her peace and prosperity: his little wrath would soon be pacified; and he would gather her and her increasing number of children, with everlasting kindness and great mercies. His engagements to this effect were as irrevocable, as the covenant made with Noah, and confirmed with an oath that he would never more drown the world; for he had also sworn by himself never to be wroth with and rebuke his Church, as in times past, or so as to cast her off: his covenant of peace, the result of his tender mercies, would be no more durable than the mountains, and abide in force when they should move and be seen no more.
15 Behold, * they shall surely gather together, but not by me: whosoever shall gather together against thee, * shall fall for thy sake.

16 Behold, * I have created the smith that bloweth the coals in the fire, and that bringeth forth an instrument for his work; and I have created the waster to destroy.

Well. Instead of her mean uncomfortable tent, the Lord promises to build her a most glorious city or palace, whose foundations, windows, walls, and towers, should be formed of precious stones, most beautiful and durable. These are emblems of the light, purity, and prosperity, which the Church on earth shall at length enjoy, resembling those of heaven. (Re. xxi. 18—22.) Numbers of the children of the Church had been un instructed or ill-instructed; but it is promised, that all her children shall be taught of the Lord, by His Spirit, and according to his word. This may be understood of the true Israel, as distinguished from Israel according to the flesh; yet it seems to relate especially to those glorious times, which are to succeed the tribulations of the Church. (Marg. Ref.) Then her children will have great peace, both outward and inward; she shall be established in righteousness, and be delivered from oppression, and even from the fear of it.

V. 15—17. This may be considered as a general promise to the Church, through successive ages. Many assailants would combine against her; but, the Lord being on her side, they would be destroyed for her sake; or, as some understand the clause, “shall come over to thy side.” He is the Creator of those that forge weapons of war, and of the great destroyers of mankind; both are in his hands, and employed or restrained at his pleasure; and he would take care, that no weapons formed against his Church should prosper, and that all her accusers and enemies should be condemned. This security and final victory are to be considered as the heritage of each of the faithful servants of the Lord: while the righteousness, in which they are justified, and the grace by which they are sanctified, are both the gift of God, and the effect of his special love.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—5.

All that love God and man will rejoice and be thankful, when sinners are converted; for then the prayers of the Church are answered, and the sufferings of Christ are made effectual, to his glory in the salvation of souls. Frequently those places and congregations, where means and appearances of religion abound, are wretchedly destitute of the Life and power of it: the Lord hath many more children in places comparatively desolate; and the Gospel is commonly most successful where it hath newly been sent. When sinners repent and believe, they are numbered among the children of God and of the Church, and should be received by us as brethren, even though they belong not to our sect or party. Though vast multitudes have accepted of the invitations of the Gospel, there is yet room for more in the kingdom of Christ; and we should expect large accessions to the Church under the Christian dispensation, and be instant in prayer, that her seed may inherit the nations, and replenish all the dark and desolate places of the earth. Much hath already been done according to these predictions, for which we should praise the Lord: but we are still called on to enlarge the place of Zion’s tabernacle. To stretch forth her curtains, and, with vast expectations, to lengthen her cords and strengthen her stakes: assured that she shall yet break forth on the right hand and on the left, till the earth be filled with truth and righteousness.

Ministers, magistrates, merchants, wealthy persons, and every description of men, may find much to do in this important concern, if they improve their talents and watch their opportunities: and we need not fear, but the Lord will accept our prayers and second our endeavours, when they are regulated by his precepts and promises. The believer also should discard those fears, which originate from reflecting on his evil nature or from reviewing the shame of his youth, or those former instances of unfaithfulness of which he now humbly repents. The Lord will blot out his transgressions, and wipe away his reproach, and be neverforsaken any that trust in his mercy: may, he will receive them into the most honourable and happy relation to himself: their Maker, the Lord of Hosts, the God of the whole earth, will become their Husband and Redeemer. We never can sufficiently admire this condescension, or estimate this privilege: we cannot expect too much from his love, confide too entirely in his protection, glory too much in this honour, or take too much delight in communion with this our loving friend. To form this union and to encourage our confidence, He dwells in human nature, and is called Immanuel. He shed his blood for our ransom, and endows us with all his unsearchable riches; he will cleanse us from all our sins, and adorn us with suitable decorations, and shortly take us to himself, to rejoice for ever with him in this sacred union. Let us then walk in simplicity of heart with him, centering all our affections on him, and expecting all our happiness from him.

V. 6—17.

Even real Christians often give cause of jealousy to their gracious Lord; and then he frowns, hides his face, and seems as if he would reject them according to their deservings. Then they fear being forsaken, and are grieved in spirit: but when duly humbled they seek his face, he recalls them into his presence and renew the tokens of his love. And to all, who really love and trust in him, his absence and frown are momentary; but his mercies and kindness are infinite and everlasting. He hath promised never to leave nor forsake his people: he hath formed that promise into a covenant of peace, and ratified and sealed it; and
CHAPTER LV.

Invitations to partake freely of spiritual blessings, with expostulations and promises, 1–3. Christ proposed to mankind, as he whom the nations would obey, 4, 5. A call to repentance, with a promise of abundant mercy; for God's ways are not like man's, 6–9. The success of the gospel, the joy of believers, and the happy change which would thus take place, 10–13.

HO, every one that thirsteth, come ye to the waters, and he that hath no money; come ye, buy and eat; yea, come, buy wine and milk without money, and without price.

2 Wherefore do ye *spend money he hath confirmed it with an oath for our more complete satisfaction. He will indeed correct and rebuke his people, but he will no more cast them off; than he will again drown the world for the sins of men; and the experience of more than four thousand years evinces, that their crimes cannot provoke him to violate that irrevocable engagement. Let this encourage us to give diligence to make our calling and election sure; that when we are afflicted and tempted, we may know and be comforted by our interest in these promises; and be assured that our "light and momentary afflictions are working for us a far more exceeding and eternal weight of glory." But let us not forget, that all the genuine children of the Church, are "taught of the Lord," they desire, seek, and depend on that teaching, and they are taught by him to hate sin, to believe in Christ, and obey him; and thus they find rest and great peace to their souls. The more assured they are, that their labour will not be in vain in the Lord, the more steadfast and immovable they are in his work. Such as are thus taught of God need fear no enemies (except as to watch, and pray against temptation.) Many may attempt to injure them, but God is their Protector; many may reproach them, but God is their Justifier. They are his servants and his children; and he is not only their Lord and their Father, but their Husband, and who can rise up against them with impunity? Let us then seek that "righteousness of God, which is unto, and upon all that believe," let us beseech him to sanctify our souls, and employ us in his service: and thus we may disregard both the wasters that destroy the nations, and the weapons that are formed against the Church; and enjoy the present privileges, and expect the future heritage, of the redeemed servants of the Lord.

NOTES.

CHAP. LV. V. 1–3. The sufferings and glory of the Redeemer, and the security and happiness of his Church, have been fully declared; here follows an invitation to the sons of men to come and share these invaluable blessings. The prophet seems to personate the first preachers of the gospel, when they went forth in the name of the Lord to compel men to come into the marriage supper, even from the highways and hedges; and that Christ himself then spake and still speaks, the same things by his word and ministers: (Marg. Ref.) The blessings before mentioned were the heritage of the servants of the Lord: but here men in general are called on, by proclamation, to approach and partake of them, as men come to the waters to draw for themselves. All that thirst for pardon, grace, and salvation, are invited to come to God through Christ for them; nay, all that thirst for happiness are exhorted to seek it for themselves. The blessings that he bestows are abundant like the water; but they are precious, pleasant, and exhilarating, as wine and milk, or the most nutrimental and delicious food; and though freely bestowed, without money or price, to accommodate those that desire them, but who are conscious that they have not wherewith to purchase them; yet they are too valuable to be bought with money: at the sametime they cannot be secured but by parting with whatever comes in competition with them. The Lord then expostulates with the sons of men, who waste their lives, mis-employ their powers, and cannot satisfy; who bestow immense pains, and sacrifice every valuable consideration, for the sake of such acquisitions, as can neither add to their present comfort, prolong their lives, or save their souls. This equally applies to the votaries of this vain and vexatious world; and to those who devise, and are very earnest about false and worthless schemes of religion. If nothing better could be had, such men might have some show of reason for their conduct; but as the Lord invites them to come, and partake of substantial good and satisfying happiness, in his favour and service; they are as unreasonable as criminal, in their wicked courses. They are therefore exhorted diligently to hearken to the Lord, to attend to his doctrine, and embrace his salvation: and thus the everlasting covenant of grace will be ratified with them; and all the mercies promised to David, and to his Seed and Antitype the Messiah, be ensured to their souls. (Marg. Ref.)
Holy One of Israel: 'for he hath glorified thee.

9 For as the heavens are higher than the earth, so are my ways higher than your ways, and my thoughts than your thoughts.

10 For as the rain cometh down, and the snow from heaven, and returneth not thither, but watereth the earth, and maketh it bring forth and bud, that it may give seed to the sower, and bread to the eater:

11 So shall my word be that goeth forth out of my mouth: it shall not return unto me void, but it shall accomplish that which I please, and it shall prosper in the thing whereunto I sent it.'
12 For ye shall go out with joy, and be led forth with peace; the mountains and the hills shall break forth before you into singing, and all the trees of the field shall clap their hands.

13 Instead of the thorn shall come up the fir-tree, and instead of the brier shall come up the myrtle-tree: and it shall be to the Lord for a name, for an everlasting sign that shall not be cut off.

V. 10, 11. The Lord sends the rain and snow to water the earth, and make the seed sown in it to vegetate, and thus to produce food for man and seed to sow again for a future crop: and he does not with-hold or recall his bounty, because many abuse it; nor can their perverseness prevent this change of the weather and course of the seasons. Thus the unbelief and opposition of the Jews should not prevent the success of the Gospel: he would perform his promises and purposes: he would accompany the Gospel with the Holy Spirit, and thus cause the seed to grow for the benefit of that and every futureage. In short, his word should not return void, but accomplish his great designs, in defiance of all opposition.

V. 12, 13. Here may be some allusion to the return of the Jews from Babylon; but greater events are evidently intended. The poor prisoners of Satan set at liberty from their n潢seome dungeon, through the Redeemer's grace, by means of the Gospel preached to them, would go out with joy, and be led forth with peace in the way to heaven. (Note, xlix. 9—11.) Joyful praises would on that account resound on every side; as if the mountains, hills, and forests were animated to unite with angels in heaven and saints on earth, in exulting thanksgivings. When idolaters and the vilest of sinners became Christians, holy persons, worshippers of God, and useful to mankind; then the stately and useful fir-tree came in the place of the worthless thorn, and the beautiful fragrant myrtle in that of the entangling brier. These blessed effects of the Gospel are honourable to the name of God; the continuance of Christianity on earth to the end of time, and the happiness of the believer in heaven for ever, form an everlasting monument or trophy of his power and love. The conversion of the Gentiles is evidently predicted by these emblems; and likewise that of the dispersed Jews.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.
V. 1—5.

All are welcome to the blessings of salvation, to whom those blessings are welcome. Sinners should therefore be loudly and earnestly invited to come to Christ, and exhorted to use the means of grace: that they who thirst for these waters of life, but fear lest such vile wretches should be excluded, may be encouraged; and that the proud, the sensual, and scornful may be left without excuse. We cannot too highly recommend the rich provisions made for our starving souls: it is our interest in any terms to make them our own; but where shall we, whose best services merit condemnation, find money or price with which to pay such invaluable blessings? Sin and misery are all we can call our own: our bodies and souls always were the world's just due, and every service that we can possibly perform. We already owe an immense debt, and cannot pay one farthing; our inheritance is forfeited, and we have incurred condemnation; our wants are innumerable, and we have nothing wherewith to supply them. But the Lord Jesus has purchased for us every blessing; he freely bestows on every believer whatever can contribute to his present comfort or everlasting felicity; and on all those who come to ask them, with the additional favour that he would take them as his servants, and make them what he would have them to be. But though none, except those that hunger and thirst for spiritual blessings, will thus come, buy, and eat, without money and without price: yet all should be invited; because God in this way excites such desires in the hearts of men. All seek to be happy; yet most men spend money for that which is not bread, and labour for that which satisfieth not; with such we may expostulate; and whilst we show them the folly of their present conduct, we may exhort them diligently to hearken to the Saviour's voice; we may persuade them to read and meditate on his sacred word, and to seek the teaching of his Holy Spirit; to observe his directions, to accede to his invitations, and to make trial of his easy yoke. Then, and not before, they will find rest to their souls; thus, and in no other way, they "will eat that which is good, and their souls will delight themselves in fatness." Inclining our care to his instructions and coming to him for salvation, we obtain life and the blessings of the everlasting covenant, through the blood of its great and gracious Surety: he then becomes our Teacher, Leader, and Ruler; by him we commune with the Father, and through him our services are accepted, and our happiness is secured. He calls those that hitherto have been strangers; through grace they obey his call, and run to him to share the privileges of his redeemed people; and in their conversion and holy conversation he is glorified, and the Father is glorified in him.

V. 6—12.

Whilst the word of God proposes to us eternal salvation, "the Lord is near us, and may be found":' let all therefore who read or hear of this salvation, seek him and call upon him without delay; and let none trifle with, or abuse his plenteous mercy: but let the wicked call on him to help them, that in his strength they may forsake their ungodly ways, and exclude their polluting thoughts and desires; and let them return to the Lord by penitent faith and prayer, that they may obtain an interest in his abundant mercy and multiplied pardons. And let not any of us limit him by our rules, as if there were any sinners too hardened to be converted, or too vile to be forgiven; or as if any of them might properly be left without refuge and hope. Let the discouraged penitent remember, that "where sin hath abounded, grace much more abounds;" and let ministers and Christians observe, that the things "that are impossible with man, are possible with God." We should therefore use every means to reclaim the CHAP. LVI.

An exhortation to justice and piety, in the prospect of the near approach of God's salvation, 1, 2. Encouragement to strangers and eunuchs to expect spiritual blessings, in the way of faith and obedience, 3, 8. A severe reproof of blind and wicked teachers and rulers, 9, 12.

THUS saith the Lord, * Keep ye judgment, and do justice: for my salvation is near to come, and my righteousness to be revealed.

2 * Blessed is the man that doeth this, and the son of man that doeth my will, and keepeth his hand from doing any evil.

3 Neither let the son of the stranger that hath joined himself to the Lord, most desperate offenders, and to do good to those that are most distant from us, or have been most injurious to us: for the Lord's thoughts and ways are not as ours. But far above them, and more excellent than they. Assuredly the word of God, when faithfully preached, will answer the ends that he hath purposed, and will in some instances be blessed to bring sinners to repentance; and who can describe the happy change which then takes place in their state and character? Delivered from the wrath to come, and from the bondage of sin and Satan; justified by faith and reconciled unto God, the converted sinner begins to experience sweet peace in his conscience, hope animates and gratitude enlarges his heart, and love constrains him to devote himself to the service of his merciful Redeemer. Instead of a profane, contentious, selfish, or sensual wretch, the grief or temptation of all; behold him now patient, meek, humble, blameless, upright, benevolent, and peaceable; a kind relation, a faithful friend, a compassionate neighbour, a spiritual worshipper, a follower of Christ, an example to others, a useful member of society, and an instrument of God's glory. to diffuse the knowledge of his salvation among him, and to transmit it to the next generation! In such converts the Lord will be eternally glorified, and many will be unspeakably blessed by them. Well then may there be joy in heaven and in earth, when one sinner thus repenteth. How should the hopes of being instrumental in so good a work, animate our endeavours to spread the Gospel of salvation: and our prayers that such trophies of the Redeemer's victories may everywhere be multiplied! And how should we endeavour to be living demonstrations, that this is the genuine tendency of the Gospel; and to let our light shine before men, that they may see our good works, and glorify our heavenly Father!"

NOTES.

CHAP. LVI. V. 1, 2. The prophet doubtless was guided so to write his predictions, as might render them useful to the Jews, in his own and in after times, and to the Church in every age. We may therefore consider this as an exhortation to the Jews in Babylon, or in any other of their calamities, to wait and prepare for deliverance, by attending to the precepts and ordinances of God. But as it here stands, it seems to be equivalent to the call of John Baptist: "Repent ye, for the kingdom of heaven is at hand." The attention of the Jews, about the time of Christ, was almost entirely taken up with trivial observances, to the neglect of the weightier matters of the law; and their formality, hypocrisy, iniquity, and presumptuous confidence in external privileges, led them to reject his salvation, of which they neither perceived the necessity, nor understood the nature. The sermon of Christ upon the mount, and the general tenour of his preaching, were very similar to this address; and, by showing the spiritual nature of true religion, both tended to discover to them their need of mercy and grace, and to lead them to follow after holiness. In like manner, the Lord here assures the Jews, that his salvation approached, his promises were about to be fulfilled, and his righteousness revealed, by their expected Messiah. But as these were spiritual blessings, they would not be welcome to the carnal hearts of men: and therefore it behoved them to prepare for the reception of them, by repentance, attention to justice and equity, and attendance on his ordinances. For though such as trust in their supposed good works are far from the kingdom of heaven; yet all that believe the Scriptures, and wait for salvation according to the promises of God, repent, and do works meet for repentance; they do justice, and have consciences in their various duties. And happy is he that doeth this, laying hold of it as a man in earnest, keeping holy the Sabbath day, and withholding his hand from doing any evil; for such are not far from the kingdom of God; and the Lord will show them his salvation, as he hath taught them thus to wait for it. (Note, Mark xii. 29-34.)
CHAPTER LXVI.

V. 3-7. Strangers and enunchs lay under several disadvantages, according to the Mosiac Dispensation, (Deut. xxiii. 1-3.) and it was deemed a peculiar misfortune, and even disgrace, among the Jews, to be childless. But the Gospel abolishes all these distinctions; and such declarations as this implied that the shadows of the old dispensation were about to vanish, and that a brighter day was dawning. The Gentle could not in any case be admitted to the full privilege of an Israelite, without circumcision and an exact observance of the ritual law; and in some cases he would after all lie under several disqualifications. But, without mentioning these externals, the Lord assured strangers, that came to join themselves to him, to love his name and be his servants, to hallow his sabbath, and take hold of his covenant of grace and mercy; (v. 3.) that he would introduce them as spiritual worshippers upon his holy mountain, make them joyful in his courts, and accept their sacrifices equally with those of the Jews: for he in tended his temple to be a house of prayer for all people. (Marg. Ref.) This was an encouragement to the Gentiles to come and worship God at his temple; and it implied that the spiritual sacrifices of praise and prayer, springing from faith and love, were the most acceptable to him: but it especially and most expressly predicted the conversion of the Gentiles to Christ, and their admission into the Christian Church, which were typified by Mount Zion and the Temple. "The prophet uses such expressions with relation to the Gospel times as are taken from the usages of his own time." (Culver.) "This is a good rule of explaining the idioms of the prophetic writings." (Lomth.) The Lord also assured the enunchs, who laid hold of his covenant, and were obedient to his word, that he would admit them into his family, and give them an everlasting name and place in heaven, far preferable to the feeble satisfaction, which men enjoy from the hope of being remembered after death, in the children which they leave behind them. The repeated mention of keeping the sabbath, in this place, which evidently gives a decided preference to spiritual worship and holiness of life, above all external observances, and refers to the time when the ceremonial law would be abrogated; strongly implies the obligation of the Christian sabbath.

V. 8. Jehovah, who gathered the outcasts of Israel, here promises to gather more unto him, than had already been gathered. This predicts the conversion of the Gentiles to Christianity in far greater numbers, than they ever had been proselyted to Judaism; but it may also look forward to the future gathering of the outcast Jews into the Church, and the consequent bringing in of the fulness of the Gentiles.

V. 9-12. Under the terms watchmen and Shepherds, both the priests and scribes, and civil magistrates seem to have been intended; the teachers and rulers of Israel, especially the former: but this severe rebuke was probably expressed in general terms, that it might equally apply to such characters in other ages and places. There might be many such in the prophet's time whose likeness he delineated, and still more before the captivity who resembled them: but it was most generally and exactly verified in the character of the chief priests, scribes, and elders, in the days of Christ, and just before the destruction of the city and temple by the Romans. The nation in general was given up to wickedness; but the chief blame belonged to those corrupt teachers and rulers. Through their supineness and profigacy, the nation was exposed to ruin; and the Roman armies were summoned to execute vengeance upon it, under the figure of the wild beasts of the forest being called on to come and devour a neglected flock of sheep. The watchmen were so blind and ignorant, that they saw no danger: even the shepherd's dog could bark when the wolf came; but they were dumb dogs and could not bark; they were neither capable of instructing the people, nor inclined to do anything towards it; for they were lazy, drowsy, and utterly insensible. But though they did not copy the faithfulness and vigilance of the dog; yet they were more greedy than that animal, and their capacity could not be satisfied. They understood not their duty as shepherds; but they were sufficiently quick-sighted and attentive to their interest, and every one was looking out to see what lucru he could acquire in his peculiar station, by any means whatever. They were likewise equally luxurious and intemperate; and expected a perpetuity and an increase of prosperity and self-indulgence, when they were upon the brink of ruin! Alas, how many, in every age of the Church hitherto, might here, as in a mirror, have recognized their own likeness, if they had not been blind!

212
PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.
V. 1—9.

Though we cannot be justified by our own works; yet we cannot be saved in our sins: they, therefore, who "through the Spirit, wait for the hope of righteousness by faith," will be found walking in the ways of holy obedience. There can be no piety without honesty, nor acceptable honesty without piety. He then is the happy man, who layeth hold of the precepts, as well as the promises, of God's word; who halloweth the day, and attendeth on the ordinances of the Lord; who abhorreth that which is evil, and cleaveth to that which is good; and who thus "waits for the mercy of our Lord Jesus Christ unto eternal life." Thanks be to God, we are none of us at present separated from him or his people, by any thing except willful sin and unbelief: and if we come "to join ourselves unto him, to choose the things that please him, and to take hold of his covenant; to love his name, and be his servants;" we shall be sure of acceptance, through the one oblation of our great High Priest. We are now come to mount Zion, and to the city of the living God; (Heb. xii. 22—25;) and may expect to be made joyful in his house of prayer, and our spiritual sacrifices will be acceptable to him through Jesus Christ. And should any of those, who are interested in such blessings, be childless, or afflicted with any bodily infirmity, they need not be distressed: the comforts of religion will counter-balance all external crosses; a name and place in the family of God are far preferable to a numerous offspring; and his everlasting mercies far better riches than the treasures of this world. Let us then seek all our felicity from the God of salvation, and walk with him in all his ordinances and commandments blameless; and let us rejoice in the assurance, that he, who hath gathered us poor outcasts into his family, will gather others, besides those, and more numerous than those, that have already been gathered to him.

V. 10—12.

Also, the visible Church hath hitherto been grievously corrupted, through blind watchmen and ignorant teachers, who like dogs can bark at and bite the sheep, and greedily devour them; but seem at league with the wolf and lion, from which they ought to defend the fold! Who cannot through ignorance, or will not through baseness, preach the truths of God to the people to warn them from the wrath to come, and will not permit others, if they can help it! Who are ever in pursuit of preferment, and after having added one to another, are yet dissatisfied! Who are asleep and dreaming of worldly pleasures, when they should be preaching and praying; but are awake, and keep a sharp look out, when filthy lucre from any quarter can be obtained! Who never study, and do not understand, any part of their pastoral duty; but know very well how to fleece the flock, and to make the most of their income! Who are as lavish and luxurious in spending, as they are rapacious in getting; wasting those benefits in intemperance or magnificence, that were given to be used in charity and hospitality! And who are encouraging each other in sensuality, filling themselves with strong drink, and presumptuously expecting that "to morrow shall be as this day, and much more abundant;" when they, and those that blindly mistook such heresies for shepherds, are about to fall into the ditch together. From such pastors, O Lord, deliver thy Church: open the eyes of those to whom any part of this character belongs, to see their guilt and danger, that they may escape them: teach those "who have the rule" over thy people to set their faces against such abuses, and to exclude such blind guides, such dumb greedy dogs, such covetous and sensual watchmen, from the sacred function; and to oppose them by a contrary example, as well as by authority. And Oh! send us pastors after thine own heart to feed thy people with knowledge and understanding; that we may rejoice in thy holy name, and that believers may be daily added to thy Church; even so be it, Lord Jesus, thou good and chief Shepherd of the sheep.

NOTES.

CHAP. LVII. V. 1, 2. This chapter and the next, are written in so general a manner, that they may accord to several different periods of the Jewish history. But they are equally applicable to the state of the Christian Church, during the prevalence of papal idolatry and superstition: and if we suppose any connexion in this part of the book, we must conclude that they refer to those times: for we shall soon find the prophet speaking in the most evident manner of the glorious events, which will succeed the fall of antichrist. In the conclusion of the preceding chapter, the extreme wickedness of the rulers and teachers of the Church was pointed out, as one sign of approaching judgments; here the disregarded removal of the righteous is mentioned as another. They are said to "perish," not with reference to themselves, but to the CHAPTER LVII.

3 ¶ But I draw near hither, ye sons of the sorceress, the seed of Admah and Siddim, and the throne and the whore.

4 Against whom do ye sport yourselves? against whom do ye make a wide mouth, and draw out the tongue? are ye not children of transgression, a seed of falsehood?

5 Enclosing yourselves with idols under every green tree, by slaying the children in the valleys under the clifts of the rocks.

6 Among the smooth stones of the stream is thy portion: they, they are thy lot: even to them thou hast poured a drink-offering, thou hast offered a meat-offering. Should I receive comfort in these?

7 Upon a lofty and high mountain hast thou set thy bed: even thither wast thou up to offer sacrifice.

8 Behind the doors also and the posts hast thou set up thy remembrance: for thou hast discovered thyself to another than me, and art gone up; thou hast enlarged thy bed, and made thee a covenant with them;

9 Thou lovestst their bed where thou sawest it.

10 And thou wentest to the king with ointment, and didst increase thy perfume, and didst send thy messengers far off; and didst debase thyself even unto hell.

11 There is no hope: thou hast found the life of thine hand; therefore thou wast not grieved.

B. C. 706.

irreparable loss sustained by their survivors: though none were dully affected by it, or considered that the Lord took the righteous away in love, that they might not be involved in those calamities, which their prayers, labours, and example could no longer retard. But "he" (that is, each godly person) enters into peace; his soul being removed to heaven, his body sleeps as in a bed till the resurrection: and this is the case with every one, that hath walked before God in integrity and uprightness. (Marg. Ref.) The death of Josiah, who was taken away before vengeance was poured out on the Jews, may be predicted as an illustration of this general truth. The soul of the righteous "shall be in joy; and their body shall rest in the grave, unto the time of the resurrection; because they walked before the Lord." (V. 3-6. JENOHAN here cites apostates and hypocrites to appear before him. They are not the genuine children of Abraham, or the sons of God and the Church, but rather the sons of a sorceress, the increase of adultery and whoredom: they were descended from parents that had been guilty of such crimes, and they resembled them in their conduct. They were more properly the synagogues of Satan, than the Church of God, and Babylons' children rather than Jerusalem's. "Men are in Scripture called the children of those whose practices they imitate." (Lowth.) By whoredom and adultery we may understand idolatry, and idolators are represented as the offspring of the adulterous church and her paramours. They are charged with having defiled the servants and children of God, expressing their scorn by every contemptuous gesture; and diverting themselves by mocking them, not considering that they despoised God in his people. This they did to be revenged of the prophets, who reproved them for their sins; but could they deny, that they were children of disobedience and hypocrisy? Being eagerly bent upon idolatry, they performed their worship under every green tree: and whilst they adored proud, ambitious, revengeful, cruel, intemperate deities, the imagined characters, pretended exploits, and abominable rites of those idols, inflamed them with every diabolical and sensual lust: so that they even sacrificed their children, in lonely valleys, and in the caverns of the rocks. They were accustomed to take stones from the brooks; to set them up, and anoint them with oil: and whenever any of them met with a stone of this kind, they paid a stupid worship to it, with drink-offerings and meat-offerings, as if it had been their god and portion! And indeed they were likely to have all the happiness which such deities would allot them, and no other; for could they suppose that the Lord would take pleasure in idolators, or even endure them? — V. 7, 8. Here the idolatrous church is represented as a woman, that had violated her marriage covenant, and as grown impudent in her adulteries. The idol-temples, (which were as the adulterous bed,) were built upon the highest mountains, to which the worshippers openly ascended to offer sacrifice. Yet they had in their own houses, behind the doors and on the posts, miniature pictures or images of their deities, to put them in remembrance of that public solemnity. Thus they shamelessly violated their covenant with God, by worshipping idols; they multiplied the objects of their abominable worship, and solemly covenanted with them as if enamoured of them at first sight. — V. 9, 10. The kings and people of Judah often paid court, and made presents, to the idolatrous kings of Egypt or Assyria; and entering into confederacy with them, they conformed to their customs, and worshipped their gods: and thus debased themselves to the lowest degree of infamy. They sent their ambassadors also to a great distance, and wearied themselves in long journeys. And they would not despair of help in this way, though often rebuked and punished for it: for they allied their present fears, and shifted off present dangers by such expedients; and therefore they were notgrieved, or did not wholly faint, on account of the trouble and hardship attending them. Many of the preceding expressions accord to the idolatry of the 11 And of whom hast thou been afraid or feared, that thou hast lied, and hast not remembered me, nor laid it to thy heart? have not I held my peace even of old, and thou fearest me not?

12 I will declare thy righteousness, and thy works; for they shall not profit thee.

13 When thou criest, let thy companies deliver thee; but the wind shall carry them all away: vanity shall take them: but he that putteth his trust in me shall possess the land, and shall inherit my holy mountain;

14 And shall say, Cast ye up, cast ye up, prepare the way, take up the stumbling-block out of the way of my people.

15 ¶ For thus saith the high and lofty one, that inhabiteth eternity, whose name is Holy; I dwell in the high and holy place, with him also that is of a contrite and humble spirit, to revive the spirit of the humble, and to revive the heart of the contrite ones.

16 For I will not contend for ever, neither will I be always wroth: for the spirit should fail before me, and the souls which I have made.

V. 14. Or, "One shall say," or, "I will say," for it may be rendered either way. The Lord will say, or send one to say, "Cast ye up, &c."—Some interpret this of Cyrus's proclamation; but it is not likely that Cyrus should call the Jews his people: it is rather the word of God to his ministers and servants, to prepare the way for those who trust in him, and for sinners to return to him. They are commanded to level, and make straight the road, casting it up as a causeway, and removing every thing that might cause the weak or inert to stumble. (Marg.)

V. 11, 12. The Lord here inquires of this corrupt company, of whom they had been afraid, that they pretended falsely to pay any regard to him, or that they had broken their covenant with him; had they feared him, they would have avoided other abominations; so that their hypocrisy was a needless sin. For they did not really remember him and his law, or lay them to heart; and his patience and silence for a long time, as if he had not regarded them, emboldened them to cast off his fear, and to expect impunity in their crimes. But he would show openly the nature of their righteousness and works, and prove them to be worthless and unprofitable. This seems peculiarly applicable to that Church, which holds the merit of good works in the most exorbitant sense; and yet sets the highest value upon unmeaning forms and worthless superstitions: and the Lord left that Church for ages to go on, as if he had taken no notice of her, which was never the case with the nation of Israel.

V. 13. These idolaters are here supposed to be in extreme terror, and crying to the Lord for deliverance; but they are sent to their companies of idols and idolatrous connexions for help. Yet they and their confidences would be alike carried away by the wrath of the Almighty, as For the iniquity of his covetousness was I wroth, and smote him.
and went on forwardly in the way of his heart.
I have seen his ways, and will heal him: I will lead him also, and restore comforts unto him and to his mourners.

17 For the iniquity of his covetousness was I wroth, and smote him: and I led him, and was wroth, and he went on forwardly in the way of his heart.

18 I have seen his ways, and will heal him: I will lead him also, and restore comforts unto him and to his mourners.

19 I create the fruit of the lips; peace, peace, to him that is far off, and to him that is near, saith the Lord; and I will heal him.

20 But the wicked are like the troubled sea, when it cannot rest, whose waves cast up mire and dirt.

21 There is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked.

are the excellence of divine worship; or of the value of a broken heart above all notions, forms, gifts, visions, or revelations. These lessons are here inculcated. The Lord declares his essential glory and majesty in the strongest terms; “the High and Lofty One, who inhabitteth eternity, whose name is Holy.” As eternity is the habitation of his immutable existence, and holiness is his nature; so the high and holy place of heaven is his special residence, in respect of his sovereign and universal government. But he hath also a habitation on earth, in which he peculiarly delights, (even more than in the temple on mount Zion,) except as it typified the human nature of Christ;) and that is, the heart that is broken down under the sense of guilt and unworthiness, and deeply humbled before God; which is crushed as it were in self-abasement, and broken off from all self-confidence and self-sufficiency. With such persons the Lord will dwell, in order to revive their drooping spirits, and comfort their dejected hearts, and give them life eternal. For though the LXX translates it, and distresses them by showing them his majesty, justice, and holiness, and for a time contends with them by frowns and rebukes; yet the end being answered, he will cease to contend, and to be wroth with them; lest they should be driven to despair and incapacitated from serving him; as no creature can endure his perpetual frown and indignation. (Marg. Ref.)

17, 18. (lvi. 11.) The people are here stated to have imitated the covetousness of their rulers and teachers; and it was connected with iniquity, fraud, oppression, or extortion: therefore the Lord smote Israel, or Judah, and hid his face from him. Under these rebukes he went on forwardly, in the way of his own perverse heart. But though the Lord saw his wicked ways and hated them: yet of his own mere grace he intended to convert and heal him, to take him under his tuition and guidance, and to comfort him, and those who lamented his calamities. This may be understood of the conduct of Judah previously to and during the Babylonish captivity; and of the freeness of God’s mercy in his restoration. But the Jewish nation was more peculiarly addicted to covetousness in the time of Christ, and previous to the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans; their strictest professors of religion “devouring widows’ houses,” and for a pretence making long prayers.” For this, the other sins the Lord was wroth, and smote them; and they have ever since gone on forwardly in the way of their own hearts, and covetousness has all along been the characteristic of the nation even to a proverb. Yet the Lord will surely convert and save Judah, and become again his Guide and Comforter, for his own name’s sake. This seems the more immediate meaning of the prophecy; and yet the avarice of the Church of Rome, her enormous exactions, and her infamous traffic for indulgences, dispensations, &c. must occur to the attentive reader’s mind; and also the promises of God to recover his Church from this corrupt state, into which it has been so long sunk. By covetousness, in Scripture, we must generally understand the inordinate love of money, whether to hoard, or to lavish in luxury and indulgence.

20, 21. Wicked men cannot have that inward peace which springs from the mercy and grace of God. Their turbulent passions, polluting lusts, and unquiet consciences, render them like the tempestuous restless ocean, when it casts up mire and dirt: so that, whatever external changes take place, “there is no peace, saith my God, to the wicked.” The promises before given therefore must not be so explained, as to encourage men to expect reconciliation to God and peace of conscience, without repentance and works meet for repentance: but that he would give the repentance and forgiveness of sins, by faith in Christ Jesus; while the impenitent and unconverted would be given up to destruction.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The death of the righteous is the greatest gain to themselves, and loss to others, that can be imagined. They are exempted from the evils that are impending over guilty nations and churches; but their removal portends, and makes way for, divine judgments; yet this is seldom attended to, and scarcely ever duly laid to heart. In all events upright believers are safe and happy: and even
The prophet is commanded boldly to reprove hypocrisy, injustice, and oppression.

The graves are quiet beds, in which they sleep in Jesus, and from which he will shortly awake them to everlasting joy and felicity. The gross wickedness of those who are favoured with the word and ordinances of God, is a lamentable demonstration of human depravity. The sordid, blood-thirsty, hypocritical, superstitious, and fanaticism have engendered within the visible Church, will easily be distinguished, notwithstanding names and splendid pretences, from her genuine children; and be punished with more severity than any other transgressors. We should neither be discouraged, nor exasperated, if they treat us (as Ishmael did Isaac,) with mockery and derision in every form. Scolds and calumniators are their weapons, when more destructive instruments are placed out of their reach. Yet they think against whom they sport themselves, when they ridicule the humble and faithful servants of the Lord: but he will shortly convict and expose them, silence their mockery and boasts, and show them to be children of transgression, a seed of falsehood. Men naturally love a religion that inflames and authorizes their unholy passions: and there is no absurdity so palpable, no cruelty, even to their children, or their own bodies, so horrid, of which they are not capable, if seduced into an opinion, that it will alone for their crimes, and purchase indulgence for the favouritest lust; if it can be made subservient to their pride and ambition; or if it will quiet their consciences, and bid them to hope for happiness without Christ, or without holiness. This develops that mystery of iniquity, even idolatry, Pagan, Jewish, or Antichristian: the whole hath been suited to one or other of these purposes. And so entirely doth Satan blind the minds of numbers, that they expect the Lord should delight in, and reward them for such observances as he hath expressly forbidden and utterly abhors!

The zeal that men show in false religion, the boldness with which they avow their absurdities; their diligence and constancy, in public and private superstitions; the alacrity with which they weary themselves in burdened service, or severe penances; the pertinacity with which they hold fast their delusive hopes, and labour to establish their own righteousness, should remind us, who have a better cause, how earnest, constant, patient, and diligent we ought to be. The very devotees of superstition and idolatry avow, that religion is the grand concern; that it should be our main employment and satisfaction; that every thing should be sacrificed to it; and that no labour, loss, or hardship, should here be regarded. But we ought at the same time to remember, that except our earnestness be regulated according to the word of God, it will be unprofitable to us. It is vain to disseindle, or to pretend to fear God, and seek his glory, if we do not; they who really remember him, will be universally conscientious; and such as allow themselves in known sin, act from some sinister motive which the Lord will detect; and then he will show the corrupt nature of their righteousness and works, and manifest the reason of his rejecting them. His silence and patience encourage the presumptuous hopes of transgressors; but when he shall arise to judgment, the infidel and profane, the pharisaical and superstitions, the hypocritical, and enthusiastic; and all the advocates for vice, or for false religion, will discover their danger: but it will then be too late to cry for help; nor will any of their companions or idols avail them, but they will all be driven into destruction. But they who trust in, and love our God and Saviour, will inherit the kingdom prepared for them from the foundation of the world. It should therefore be our first care to learn the ways of God ourselves, and then, in our several places, to make them plain to others, and to remove every stumbling-block, which obstructs the path. In this respect we have much to do, and much to pray for. The absurd and wild opinions, that are propagated; and the crimes that are committed, by men professing the doctrines of the Gospel; the multiplied controversies acrimoniously agitated amongst them; the horrible injustice and profligacy of men called Christians, in every quarter of the globe; the corrupt state of almost the whole visible Church, in doctrine, discipline, and practice; and the idolatry, imposture, and enormous covetousness of the Church of Rome, have long been stumbling-blocks to infidels, Jews, Mahometans, and Pagans all over the world. The Lord calls upon Christians and ministers to remove these scandals as much as they can; and we should pray to him to raise up instruments that may do it effectually.

V. 15—21.

Whilst numbers stumble, and fall, and perish, through the offences which every where abound, it is by their own pride, unbelief, and enmity to God and holiness. "For this high and lofty One, who inhabits eternity, whose name is holy, who dwells in the high and holy place, delights in those that are poor in spirit and broken-hearted, mourning for sin, and supplicants for mercy, and grace: He will make his abode with those, whose hearts he hath thus humbled, in order to revive and comfort them; he will not contend for ever with the penitent soul; he will not drive the contrite to despondency, nor leave him to perish under his frown. Let then, no trembling supplicant give way to discouragement or hard thoughts of God; but let him continue to wait and pray, and he shall be comforted. But though the Lord employs corrections to bring sinners to repentance, and to recover backsliders: yet they are not of themselves effectual. Even believers sometimes go on forward for a season, when smitten for their iniquity, and under the hildings of God's countenance: and many who seem to be religious in this 3 Wherefore have we fasted, say they, and thou seest not? wherefore have we afflicted our soul, and thou takest no knowledge? Behold, in the day of thy fast ye find pleasure, and exact all your toil.

4 Behold, ye fast for strife and debate, and to smite with the fist of wickedness: ye shall not fast as ye do this day to make your voice to be heard on high.

5 Is this the fast that I have chosen? a day for a man to afflict his soul? to bow down his head as the hart doth mourn for the grass? is it to fast, and not to make mention of the Lord? to cast your bread upon the floor? to come to the house of the Lord as though ye did appear to the Lord?

6 Is not this the fast that I have chosen? to loose the bonds of wickedness, to undo the heavy burdens, and to let the oppressed go free, and that ye break every yoke?

7 Is it a fast that I have chosen? a day for a man to afflict his soul? to bow down his head as the hart doth mourn for the grass?

8 Is it not to cease your strife, and to cease your violence, that ye may feed your souls, and ye may be healed, and ye may be bound together to the house of the Lord?

9 For, behold, your cry is come unto me, and I will hear; and in due time will I answer thee. And I will destroy evil from under heaven, and will cut off from man, and will leave off the vengeance of the oppressor.

10 And the Lord will judge the inhabitants of the earth; and all the inhabitants of the earth shall fear the Lord and his glory. And they shall return of the Assyrian, that hath smitten them on the head. And they shall return of the Egyptian, that hath been his arm, and of the Amorite, and of the Canaanite, and of the Pharaoh, and of his armies; and he shall say, I will not make my bow against him, nor shall my arrow be launched against him.

11 And he shall say, Set ye up the standard against the wailing city, even against Babylon, whichv Disabled by our idols; every age; and Isaiah might intend his warnings for the hypocrites of his own time; but the Holy Church had also those of other ages in view. The fals of the Jews during the captivity merited the censure here given (Marg. Ref.) The Pharisees in the time of Christ fasted often, in ostentation and hypocrisy, and to cloak their oppression and avarice; the great value put upon fasting by the Church of Rome, without regard to a correspondent temper and conduct in other respects, is notorious. But Vizitinha thinks that this chapter, in its connexion with what precedes and follows, may relate to the reformed or Protestant Churches. They have indeed renounced the idolatry and gross abuses of the Popes; but are grievously deformed by a worldly spirit and conduct, and great formality in religious duties, where the form is not thrown aside: and this brings the matter home to ourselves.

V. 2. The house of Jacob, in the time of Hezekiah, seems to have sat for this picture. They were not openly idolatrous or irreligious; but, as they were earnest and constant in their devotions, seeking the Lord daily, and taking pleasure in learning his truths and precepts, as if they were a very righteous nation; (Note, Ez. xxxiii. 30—33;) but they were pleased with these things, merely because they gratified their pride and curiosity, entitled them to respect, and increased their presumptuous confidence. Nay, they asked of God the ways of righteousness, and took delight in approaching him in his courts: for this was then fashionable and creditable, and it served as an easy commutation for their secret injustice, and as a cheap quietus to their consciences. This hath often been the case both in the Jewish and Christian Church, among papists and protestants.

V. 3. 4. The persons here addressed had mortified themselves with apparent sorrow and contrition, on stated or occasional fasts: they deemed this very meritorious; and they inquired wherefore the Lord had not noticed their services, and delivered them from their troubles? But he answered, that while they denied themselves in one respect, they indulged themselves in others; especially their pride, avarice, and malignant passions: for at the very time when they seemed to abase themselves before God in fasting, they exacted the full measure of hard labour from their oppressed slaves, or their usurious debts from their starving debtors. Their fasting increased their self-preference, and excited them to fierce controversies, or bitter resentment: it was also the cloak of, and commutation for, their exacts and oppressions of the poor, whom they most unjustly plundered.
smote and abused, for not complying in everything with their inclinations. And surely they should not fast in this hypocritical ostentations and unrighteous manner, or call a day thus spent a fast, or expect that God would hear their prayers or accept their services. V. 5-7. Could it be supposed, that the fast which the Lord approved, was “for a man to afflict his soul for a day” (MARG.) with external appearances of sorrow and shame, and with bodily mortification, without repentance or reformation? The fast that God approved would be attended with the mortification of pride, envy, and worldly lusts; and with the unequivocal fruits of true repentance. They that observed such a fast, would loose the bonds of those whom they had injudiciously enslaved or imprisoned; they would moderate the labours of their servants: they would cease from usurious exactations, and remit the debts which either were contracted through fraud and oppression, or which the poor debtor was unable to discharge; they would break every yoke of oppression, and use their authority and influence to protect the poor, or rescue them from the injustice of others. They would also be liberal to the needy according to their wants: and not get out of the way, or frame excuses, to avoid relieving them; remembering that they were of the same nature, and had the same feelings, as themselves. By these things their external humiliation before God, in fasting and prayer, would be shown to be sincere and profitable; but in no other way. V. 8-12. When the people thus repented and did works meet for repentance, they might expect that their inward peace, or outward prosperity, would break forth and increase like the morning light; and that their personal sickness, disquieted consciences, or public calamities would speedily be healed; their good works would go before them, as evidences to attest the sincerity of their faith and love, and for a memorial before God; and his glorious power and presence would protect them from those dangers to which they were most exposed. (MARG. REF.) He would be as ready to answer their prayers, as they had been to answer the cries of their oppressed and afflicted brethren; whom they no longer treated with scorn or menaces, or put off with vain pretences or deceitful promises. And when from their immost souls, in genuine compassion and love, they were habitually ready to relieve the hungry and distressed, their trouble and inward grief should be exchanged for comforts and joy, resembling the noon-day light: the Lord himself would guide them and supply their wants in every emergency; cause their bones to be full of marrow through health and plenty; make their souls pleasant and fruitful like a watered garden, and render their consolations abiding like the unfailing springs of water. Then should they become the honoured instruments of repairing the waste places of Zion, and building upon those foundations that were laid in former ages, but not further completed; and be named the repairers of Zion’s breaches, and the restorers of her ways, that men might come from all around to worship and dwell there. This might apply to Zerubbabel, Nehemiah, and others, who rebuilt Jerusalem, the temple, and the walls of the city after the captivity: and to all those, in every age, who have been or shall be instrumental in promoting true religion: and doubtless, from the Church, which shall first and best answer this description, will those instruments be raised up, who will be principally honoured in bringing forward that extensive and glorious spread of the Gospel.
13 If thou turn away thy foot from the sabbath, from doing thy pleasure on my holy day; and call the sabbath a delight, the holy of the Lord honourable; and shalt honour him, not doing thine own ways, nor finding thine own pleasure, nor speaking thine own words; which we are taught to expect. 'This is chiefly meant of the spiritual Jerusalem, whose builders were the apostles.'

V. 13, 14. As these prophecies chiefly relate to Gospel-times, a cogent argument may be deduced from them for hallowing the Lord's day by Christians. The rule here given implies, that men must not profane that day by doing their ordinary work, or seeking their secular interest; or by spending it in worldly pleasures and recreations; or by vain and trifling conversations, but that they should delight in the sabbath, as a holy day to be spent in the public and private duties of religion; honour it above all other days, and honour God on and for it. Thus they will find much joy and comfort in Him, be triumphant over and exalted above their enemies; be plenteously provided for, as the Israelites were in Canaan: and inherit the peculiar blessing which was the birth-right and heritage of Jacob.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.
V. 1-7.

The ministers of God want, not only great tenderness and skill to comfort the broken hearted and tempted believers, but likewise intrepidity and firmness, that they may reprove and rebuke, with all authority, those who act inconsistently with their profession: they should be disinterested, zealous for the glory of God, prepared for the cross, superior to personal considerations, to the fear of men, and the shackles of party and bigotry; that with all plainness they may detect the transgressions, and expose the hypocrisy, of those that profess to know God, but in works deny him. This requires more courage in the minister, and will generally expose him to greater trials, than all possible severity against avowed infidels and profilers. Self-love, selfish friends, and injudicious or timid Christians, will say to a man in such a case, "Spare thyself;" ambition, avarice, love of ease, and aversion to the cross will suggest to him, spare the rich and powerful: but God says, "speak not," and "we must obey him, and not men," please him and not ourselves. And when the ministers of the reformed churches shall thus loudly protest against all the iniquity that prevails in them, (as well as against erroneous doctrines and Anti-Christian abuses;) we may hope to see them further reformed and purified, and a further progress of the reformation. We all need continually to beg of God to assist us in examining ourselves; seeing men may go so far in the appearance of religion, with an unsound heart. As Herod heard John gladly, yet loved his brother's wife more than either God or his own soul; and as they who have no root in themselves, may receive the word with joy; we should remember, that great delight in outward forms and religious speculations, may spring from pharisaical pride or diabolical delusion: and it must do so, when it consists with the love and allowed practice of one known sin. For, without repentance and works meet for repentance, knowledge puffeth up, faith is dead, hope presumptuous, joy carnal, and profession vile hypocrisy. Such are as are strangers to the power of godliness, either neglect, or grow proud of the form: in their estimation good works rise in their value in proportion to their scarcity: and when it is owing to God's infinite patience that they are out of hell, they deem him unjust, if he slightly afflict them, and if he do not reward them with eternal happiness! But the Lord will manifest the corrupt motives of their tasks of redundant devotion: and their conduct to their poor brethren, whom they enslave, oppress, starve, persecute, and exact upon unmercifully, will demonstrate the hypocrisy of their solemn fasts and ostentatious appearances of piety. Many who are very demure, and seem very humble in the house of God and at his table, are most contentious and tyrannical in their own families; and come from their devotions to distress and harass their wives, children, domestics, and dependents, with bitter words, perverse and cruel actions, and enormous injustice: nor are they more ostentatious in religion to get the good opinion of ministers and Christians, than vociferous in their rage and debates. But it is an invariable rule, that "he shall have judgment without mercy, who hath showed no mercy:" God will not forgive our trespasses, if we do not heartily forgive our brethren; and he will mete to us in the measure that we have meted to them. No expressions of humiliation then can prove him penitent, who doth not loose the bands of wickedness, renounce his gainful iniquities, and aim to mortify his strongest lusts. No man's faith justifieth him, which doth not work by love; he that loveth God will love his brother also; and he that loveth his brother, will do him no injury, but will be ready to do him all the good he can. The Church has been too long amused with fasts and external austerities, in some instances, whilst men found pleasure in other things far more suited to their carnal minds; fasts employed as the cloak of avarice and oppression, and the very watch-word of persecution. Yet, let us not confound the abuse with the use of this Scriptural method of expressing our godly sorrow and humiliation; but rejecting the fast which the Lord hath not chosen, let us attend to that which he approves and accepts.

V. 8-14.

When the external expressions and means of repentance, faith, and grace, are accompanied with the mortification of sin, reformation of life, and abundant exercises of love to the poor and needy, despising, neglecting, and excluding none from our affection or assistance, according to our ability, we may expect consolation in the ways of God. Such CHAP. LIX.

The impiety and multiplied iniquities of Israel the cause of their calamities, 1—15. Promises that God would rescue his church; take vengeance on his enemies; widely diffuse truth and holiness; stop the torrent of impiety and wickedness; and preserve true religion, by his word and Spirit, to the end of time, 16—21.

BEHOLD, the Lord’s hand is not shortened, that it cannot save; neither is his ear heavy, that it cannot hear:

2 But your iniquities have separated conduct proves our sincerity and honours the Lord, and he will honour and protect us on every side: our prayers will then be answered, our tribulations removed, or an adequate support afforded; by the light of God’s countenance we shall pass through every darkness; he will provide for our wants, make our souls like a watered garden, and honour us with usefulness in his Church; for “the righteous shall be had in everlasting remembrance.” Many professed Christians prove themselves hypocrites by a contrary conduct: and many real Christians walk uncomfortably all their days, because their liberality is disproportionate to their affluence; their evidence is therefore low; they little honour God and be little honours them; for he disperses consolation to them, according to their niggardliness to his poor people. Experience evinces, that they who, in humble faith and love, “draw out their souls to the hungry,” and abound most in devising liberal things, are most comfortable, and most honourable to be useful in the cause of God, (a sweet reward to their benevolent minds!) and often they have the most outward peace and prosperity. Let us then avoid, with equal caution, pharisical pride and antinomian sloth or selfishness: and let those who walk uncomfortably, examine whether their conduct towards their poor brethren does not point out at once the reason and the remedy. True faith unites justice, mercy, and piety: in proportion as we are spiritually minded, we shall hollow, honour, and delight in, the sabbaths of God; and laying aside all employments, pleasures, or discourse, that can interrupt our sacred rest in him, we shall seek communion with him in his public and private ordinances. Thus we shall learn to delight in God, and to anticipate heaven; we shall obtain the victory over the world, sin and Satan; we shall follow those who through faith and patience have inherited the promises; and we shall at last be “numbered with his saints in glory everlasting;” for “the mouth of the Lord hath spoken it.”

NOTES.

CHAP. LIX. V. 1, 2. This chapter continues the subject of the preceding; and begins with a further reply to those who complained that God did not regard their fasting and prayers. What has therefore been observed of the times to which that refers, applies to this also: and as the latter part of this chapter, and that which follows, must be understood of the millennium; so (whatever reference there may be to previous situations of the Jewish or Christian Church,) there is some reason to think, with Vitringa, that the low state of the reformed or Protestant Churches, antecedent to that event, is here predicted. If we reflect on the state of these churches, in respect of evangelical truth and vital religion, we must be convinced, that they have lamentably declined since the reformation: and though popery may have lost ground; yet infidelity, skepticism, socinianism, impiety, and vice of every kind, have exceedingly increased. The true people of God are indeed chiefly to be found in those churches; yet they are verging further and further from the purity and strictness of the Gospel, in every respect, except as toleration hath for a time supplanted the monster persecution; and even this great advantage is attended with an indifference about divine truth; or rather an indifference what errors are maintained, provided men be not zealous for the doctrines of the reformation. We have also reason, from several prophecies, to expect still greater departures from the faith; and grievous calamities to be brought on the nations adhering to the Gospel, from those who openly oppose it, whether papists or infidels. It may therefore be supposed that the Holy Spirit predicts these things in the former part of this chapter, as introductory to the most glorious state of the Church on earth: and no events can be mentioned, that are so answerable to what is here foretold, and so connected with what next follows, as to be put in competition with what hath been mentioned. But whatever be the prophetic meaning of the passage, it contains a sermon generally useful to the Church, in all her calamities and distresses. The prophet reminds the people not to ascribe the duration of their afflictions, or the delay of an answer to their prayers, to the Lord’s want of power or inclination to deliver them, or to his inattention to their requests; but wholly to their unpardonable iniquities, which separated between them and the God whom they professed to worship, and provoked him to hide his face and reject their petitions.
6 Their 1 webs shall not become garments, neither shall they cover themselves with their works: their works are works of iniquity, and the act of violence is in their hands.

7 Their 2 feet run to evil, and they hasten to shed innocent blood: their thoughts are thoughts of iniquity; wasting and destruction are in their paths.

8 The 3 way of peace they know not; and there is no 4 judgment in their going: they have made them 5 crooked paths: whoever goeth therein shall not know peace.

9 Therefore 6 is judgment far from us, neither doth justice overtake us: we wait for light, but behold obscurity; for brightness, but we walk in darkness.

10 We 7 grope for the wall like the blind, and we grope as if we had no eyes: we stumble at noon-day as in the night; we are 8 in desolate places as dead men:

11 We 9 roar all like bears, and we cry as gravediggers for water:

V. 3—6. The professors of God were guilty of murders, rapines, perjuries, lies, and impiety: none of them demanded justice on delinquents, or pleaded for the truth; either the truth of God’s word, or the truth of the causes that came before them. They trusted in vanity and deceit, and used lying pretences in defending their conduct: they conceived mischief to their neighbours in their hearts; and thence brought forth iniquity in their lives: with great ingenuity and assiduity they accomplished those projects, which proved pernicious, or useless, “hatching cockatrice’s eggs, and weaving the spider’s web,” so that he who shared in the fruits of their labour, was seduced into destructive errors and iniquities, or involved in ruin: and when advantage was expected from their ingenious schemes and persevering efforts, and the egg, so to speak, was hatched, a viper burst forth for their destruction. Nor could their ingenuity in devising schemes, (as the spider frames its web from its own bowels,) to deliver or save themselves, become garments to cover them, or their own works justify them; for indeed they would appear to be works of injustice and violence. They lost no time, and spared no pains to do evil, and to shed innocent blood: all their thoughts were employed about iniquity, and wherever they went, devastation and destruction attended their paths. They had no acquaintance with the ways of peace, judgment, and justice; and they walked in such crooked and winding paths of subtle policy and selfishness, that none, who go in them, can know any thing of peace with God, or true peace of heart and conscience. (Marg. Ref.)—Alas! how exactly does this correspond with the conduct and character of professed protestant Christians, in every variety of the globe.

V. 9—15. The pious remnant here lament the public calamities, the decay of religion, and the darkness which rests upon their path. Because of the enormous wickedness of the professors of God, he stood at a distance, and did not execute judgment between them and their avowed enemies, and they were unjustly oppressed without redress. They waited for more prosperous times and brighter prospects; but the darkness continued to increase: they grooped for the wall to lean against or to direct their path, or they wandered out of the way like blind men: they stumbled at noon, as if it were midnight; that is, they were at a loss and made fatal mistakes in the most obvious matters: and they were neglected, as the dead are cast out into unfrequented places. Their loud complaints were like the roaring of bears, their continual lamentation like the mourning of doves: whilst they in vain waited for judgment and deliverance from their oppressors. But they confessed that by their multiplied sins, of which they were conscious, and which testified against them, they deserved all their sufferings. For rebellion, hypocrisy, apostacy from God; oppression, fraud, false witness, and every kind of injustice abounded among them: so that truth and equity were openly perverted, trampled on, or banished: all sincerity and integrity were done with, and if any one ventured to be so singular as to make a conscience of his duty, he became a prey to his less scrupulous neighbours, or was treated by them as a fool or a madman. And no wonder that the Lord was displeased at beholding such enormities amongst those who professed to be his worshippers.
from the rising of the sun. When the enemy shall come in like a flood, the Spirit of the Lord shall lift up a standard against him.

20 And the Redeemer shall come to Zion, and unto them that turn from transgression in Jacob, saith the Lord.

21 As for me, this is my covenant with them, saith the Lord; My Spirit that is upon thee, and my words which I have put in thy mouth, shall not depart out of thy mouth, nor out of the mouth of thy seed’s seed, saith the Lord, from henceforth and for ever.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—8.

When our troubles continue, notwithstanding our prayers, and expectations of deliverance, we should examine seriously into the cause. We may be sure that “the Lord’s hand is not shortened, nor his ear heavy;” he is as able to save, and as ready to hear prayer, as in former times: but iniquity, unrepented, unpardoned, will separate between our souls and God, and cause him to refuse his face, and to refuse any comfortable answer. (Notes, &c. Josh. viii.) so that nothing but true repentance and faith in Christ can remove the separation, and make way for returning peace. Also, what crimes have in every age filled and defiled the earth! But it is most lamentable, that the professed worshippers of God, who have the purest creeds and the most Scriptural administration of ordinances among them; and who protest against heresy, superstition, and idolatry with decided vehemence and pertinacity, are often guilty of multiplied murders, rapine, oppressions, perjuries, lies, blasphemies, and impurities! Nay, such criminals often escape with impunity, and able advocates retained to extenuate their guilt, and vanish over their crimes: whilst scarcely any dare call for justice, or plead for truth, through fear of reproach and formidable enemies! But, except the grace of God convert the heart, CHAPTER LX.

Predictions of glorious light, holiness, and prosperity to the church, and a vast accession of converts; till all kings and nations should either serve her, or utterly perish, I—14. All her trials shall terminate in peace and felicity resuming a twining and shining those of heaven, 15—22.

A RISE, * shine; for thy light is come, and the glory of the Lord is risen upon thee.

2 For behold, d the darkness shall

21 xxvi. 18. Rom i. 21—32. Eph iv. 17—20. 1 Pet. i. 9 behold, d the darkness shall men will in one way or other “trust in vanity and lies,” “conceive mischief, and bring forth iniquity.” Not only do we find enormous wickedness amongst rapacious oppressors and powerful wasters of mankind: the schools of philosophers often produce more specious, but still more fatal instruments of destruction. With exquisite ingenuity and persevering application, studious men hatch impious and infidel systems: these gratify the curiosity, pride, and presumption of man, and are congenial to his carnal mind and soothing to his conscience. Compositions are often framed with the most specious arguments, ornamented with enchanting elegance, and varnished over with plausible pretensions to candour, liberality of sentiment, and free inquiry. On this delicious poison numbers feed and perish; in these nests are hatched cockatrices and vipers, the brood of the old Serpent, and from thence they break forth with envenomed teeth to destroy the souls of men. Others are not employed in so pestiferous a manner: but they ingeniously weave a spider’s web, and compared with their own schemes of self-effected salvation, they despise the Redeemer’s robe of righteousness, “which is upon, and unto all that believe.” Yet their webs shall not become garments; neither shall any of their devices cover the shame of their nakedness, or preserve them from detection and the wrath of God. And it is observable, that protestants, who have renounced the reformers’ doctrine of justification by faith through the righteousness of Christ alone, to trust in their own good works, are in general remarkably defective in the very appearance of them. Many of them deem it very meritorious not to perpetrate such crimes as would expose them to the lash of human laws; and many of them “do works of iniquity, and the act of violence is in their hands.” Indeed the feet of every man, who is destitute of the Spirit of Christ, run swiftly to evil of one kind or other: and the history of mankind, and daily observation show, that where the restraints of fear, shame, and human laws are removed, men can do it with impunity, their mad passions render them in haste to shed innocent blood. But whilst they waste and destroy others, regardless alike of justice, truth, and humanity; they are themselves strangers to peace and comfort; others watch their opportunity of retaliation; and their crooked paths lead them far aside from the way of peace and salvation.

V. 9—21.

When the general character of any church or community, where Christianity is professed, becomes corrupt and abandoned, it is reasonable to expect, that it will be left in the hands of its enemies: and vain will be the hope of deliverance or prosperity, without repentance. For their heinous crimes men are given up to be deluded and in-cover the earth, and gross darkness the people; but the Lord shall arise upon thee, and his glory shall be seen upon thee.

3 And the Gentiles shall come to thy thine, and kings to the brightness of thy rising.

4 Lift up thine eyes round about, and see: all they gather themselves together, they come to thee: thy sons shall come from far, and thy daughters shall be nursed at thy side.

5 Then thou shalt see, and flow together, and thine heart shall fear, and be enlarged; because the abundance of the sea shall be converted unto thee, and the forces of the Gentiles shall come unto thee.

6 The multitude of camels shall cover thee, the dromedaries of Midian and Ephah; all they from Sheba shall come; they shall bring gold and incense, and they shall shew forth the praises of the Lord.

7 All the flocks of Kedar shall be gathered together unto thee, the rams of Nebaioth shall minister unto thee: they shall come up with acceptance on mine altar, and will glorify the house of my glory.

NOTES.

CHAP. LX. V. 1—3. (Notes, xxx. 25, 26. xlix. 18—23. Ps. lxiii.) We meet with nothing in the history of the Jews after the captivity, that at all accomplished the prophecy in this chapter. That nation never enjoyed such permanent peace and prosperity as in the days of David and Solomon; but here events are predicted inexpressibly more glorious. Even the happy change, that took place upon the coming of Christ and after his ascension, answered not to this description: the Church was indeed greatly enlarged and purified; but it was in great tribulation, and passed through successive persecutions, till the conversion of Constantine. Then it had a short season of external prosperity: but its purity had previously been greatly tarnished, and soon became much more so: it was speedily filled with time serving hypocrites, split into furious parties, deformed with gross heresies, and disgraced with abominable wickedness: and not long after the Roman empire was overwhelmed, and the Church was afflicted with dire calamities, which continued with little intermission, till Antichristian idolatry and superstition had gained a complete ascendency in the western, and Mahometanism had greatly entrenched on the eastern, division of the Church. So that nothing hath yet occurred which corresponds with these predictions; and they are therefore reasonably expected to relate principally to future events.

The subject of this chapter is the great increase and flourishing state of the Church of God, by the conversion and union of the heathen nations to it, which is set forth in such ample and exalted terms, as plainly show, that the full completion of this prophecy is reserved for future times. This subject is displayed in the most splendid colours, under a great variety of images highly poetical, designed to give a general idea of the glory of that perfect state of the Church of God, which we are taught to expect in the latter times; when the fulness of the Gentiles shall come in, and the Jews shall be converted and gathered from their dispersions; and the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ. (H. L. Wh.) The Church is here addressed as a disconsolate female, sitting on the ground in a dark place and obscure situation: this female is spoken of as the emblem of Zion or Jerusalem, and the imagery is taken from the walls and gates of that city; and from the temple and its ornaments, treasures, sacrifices, altars, which were all good things to come. The Lord calls upon her to arise from the dust, that she might be enlightened, and shine by that light, which was now arrived; “for the glory of the Lord was risen upon her.” When Christ came in human nature, the Light of the world, the Sun of righteousness, and the Glory of the Lord, arose on the Church: but his bright beams have for ages been strangely obstructed, and at some times almost eclipsed, by interposing clouds; and his Church hath almost constantly been harassed with tribulations and persecutions; so that she hath mourned as desolate, and her few witnesses have prophesied in sackcloth. Not only did gross darkness envelope both the Gentile world and the Jewish nation, when Christ came in the flesh: but darkness, equally intense, hath covered the visible Christian Church, as well as the Mahometan and Pagan nations; and we have some intimations of a still more gloomy scene, just before the Lord shall arise in his meridian brightness, most gloriously to irradiate mankind with his beams of truth and righteousness. In the primitive times the Gentiles came to this light: but we do not think that this was the case; it became considerably obscured: but ere long all kings shall fall down before, and do service to, the divine Saviour. As he is the Sun of righteousness and the Light of the Church and of the world, he must be Jehovah; for “JEHOVAH shall arise” upon the Church, “and His glory shall be seen upon her.”

V. 4—7. Zions here called on to lift up her downcast eyes, to behold the blessed effects of her irradiation. On every side converters were seen flocking to her, as her sons and daughters, from the most remote regions, to be nursed at her side, under her care and tuition, and fed upon her spiritual provisions. At this sight she would overflow with joy: her heart would be dilated with gratitude combined with reverence of God, and humble fear of acting wrong in such unexpected prosperity. For the multitudes which dwelt in the distant countries, separated from her by the sea, would be converted; and all their treasures, and all the wealth and power of the gentile world, would be 8 Who are these that are like the clouds, and like the doves to their windows?

9 Surely the isles shall wait for me, and the ships of Tarshish first, to bring thy sons from far, their silver and their gold with them, unto the name of the Lord thy God, and to the Holy One of Israel, because he hath glorified thee.

10 And the sons of strangers shall build up thy walls, and their kings shall minister unto thee: for in my wrath I smote thee, but in my favour have I had mercy on thee.

11 Therefore thy gates shall be open continually; they shall not be shut day nor night; that men may bring unto thee the forces of the Gentiles, and that their kings may be brought.

brought to her. This would be as surprising to the remnant of poor believers, as it would have been to the Jews after their successive oppressions, to have had all the rulers and grandees of Persia, Greece, Rome, and Tyre crowding into Jerusalem, with their immense revenues, in order to enlarge and beautify that holy city, and to support the temple-worship. In order to bring such vast treasures, Jerusalem must have been filled and surrounded with beasts of burden, such as the Midianites carried their merchandise upon. Thus they and the Arabians are represented, as bringing gold for tribute to Zion's King, and incense to be used in his worship as their God; that they might show forth his praises with all their power. All the flocks of Kedar and Nebaioth, other districts of Arabia, would be brought for acceptable sacrifices on God's altar: and thus he would honour and beautify more than ever his temple, where his name had so long been glorified. All this is evidently a figurative prediction of the purity and enlargement of the Church; of the alacrity and zeal with which different nations will dedicate themselves and their substance to the service of God; and of the multitude of spiritual sacrifices which will in every place be presented to the Father with acceptance, through Christ our Temple, Altar, and great High Priest. 'Nothing is more usual, than for the prophets to describe the state of the Christian Church, by representations taken from the Jewish temple and service.' (Lomth.)

V. 8, 9. The multitude of converts is here represented under another figure. The Church sees immense numbers from every quarter thronging to her with one consent; as large flocks of birds darken the air like a cloud, and as doves hasten to the windows of the dove-house: and she inquires, Who are they? To this the Lord answers, that surely the isles of the Gentiles would wait for him, to give them admission into his family: and that it would become the first use of the ships of Tarshish, which traded to the most remote regions, to bring her children, and all their wealth with them, to Zion, that they might worship the name of Zion's God, who thus glorified her: or they would be among the first that did so. This prediction will be accomplished, when Christians shall unanimously agree to make commerce and navigation subservient to the preaching of the Gospel, in every country with which they trade. For the locality of the emblem, taken from the Jewish temple and worship, rendered it necessary that it should be predicted in this manner; rather than as the setting up of the worship of Jehovah in those distant lands.

V. 10—14. The imagery is here varied, but the meaning is nearly the same. The protection given to the Church is represented by the building of Zion's walls: this could be done by the sons of strangers; and kings would minister to the formerly despised Church, when God, who had afflicted her in fatherly displeasure, should favour her in his mercy. But as no enemies would be dreaded, her gates would not be shut; and converts would continually throng into her, and meet with free admission: so that the forces and kings of the nations would be brought into her; and those that refused this subjection would be utterly wasted and perish. But when was this ever verified, in its obvious meaning? And why should we attempt to enervate the language of inspiration; as if the Lord could not, or would not, fulfil all his predictions, because he hath not yet done it? 'This must relate to the latter days, when the Church shall become a great mountain, and break in pieces all the kingdoms of the earth.' (Lomth.) (Marg. Ref.) As the choice timber of Lebanon beautified Solomon's temple, that foostool of Jehovah, (Marg. Ref.) so shall the peculiar advantages of every nation, and of every description of men, concur to beautify the Church of Christ, which he hath determined to make glorious. The descendants of those nations that have persecuted her, shall humbly submit and supplicate her favour: yea, the very persons who have despised her, shall prostrate themselves before her, acknowledging her relation to Jehovah, the Holy One of Israel.

2 L
16 Thou shalt also suck the milk of the Gentiles, and shalt suck the breast of kings: and thou shalt know that the Lord am thy Saviour and thy Redeemer, the mighty One of Jacob.

17 For brass I will bring gold, and for Iron I will bring silver, and for wood brass, and for stones iron: I will also make thy officers peace, and thine executors righteousness.

18 Violence shall no more be heard in thy land, wasting nor destruction within thy borders: but thou shalt call thy walls Salvation, and thy gates Praise.

19 The sun shall be no more thy light by day; neither for brightness shall the moon give light unto thee: but the Lord shall be unto thee an everlasting Light, and thy God thy Glory.

20 Thy sun shall no more go down, neither shall thy moon withdraw itself; for the Lord shall be thine everlasting Light, and the days of thy mourning shall be ended.

21 Thy people also shall be all righteous: they shall inherit the land for ever, the branch of my planting, the work of my hands, that I may be glorified.

22 A little one shall become a thousand, and a small one a strong nation: I the Lord will hasten it in his time.
CHAP. LXI.

Christ declares his office, 1—3. The honour and excellency of his church, 4—9. Her joy in God's salvation, 10, 11.

THE Spirit of the Lord God is upon me: because the Lord hath anointed me, to preach good tidings unto the meek; he hath sent me to bind up the broken heart, to proclaim the acceptable year of the Lord, and the day of vengeance of our God; to comfort all that mourn, to appoint unto them liberty; to the ends of the earth. For unto us a child is born, unto us a son is given: and the government shall be upon his shoulder: and his name shall be called Wonderful, Counsellor, mighty God, everlasting Father, Counsellor. Of the increase of his government and peace there shall be no end, upon the throne of David, and upon his kingdom, to order it, and to establish it in judgment and in justice from henceforth even for ever. The zeal of the Lord of hosts will perform this. Therefore will I divide them that smite thee into small pieces, and I will execute mine anger upon them. And I will feed mine flock in all their places, saith the Lord.

V. 15—22.

The believer is often for a long time, afflicted, hated, and apparently deserted; yet the Lord will at length make him eternally excellent and happy. They who attend duly to the truths, precepts, and ordinances of Scriptural Christianity, have long been filled with the contempt of the scornful, and have been reviled or hated by the wise, the learned, and the powerful of the earth; so that the cross to be endured has made men shy of being connected with them: yet this very company shall be made an eternal excellency, a joy of many generations; and powerful kings and nations shall rejoice to promote their comfort and prosperity, and to serve their interest with their whole heart, soul, and strength; knowing that their Saviour and Redeemer is JEHova, the mighty God of Jacob. If then, in those happy days, when, "for brass the Lord will bring gold, and for iron, silver, &c." all the officers of the nations and of the Church shall be peace, and their executors righteousness: how should Christian magistrates, rulers, and teachers, aim now to be patrons and examples of peace and righteousness! And how should all Christian kings endeavour to terminate the effusion of human blood, and to avoid all violence, wasting, and destruction! For in those days men will be Christians indeed, and every one will do that which is equally the duty of all in this and every age, and from the neglect of which our miseries arise. The people shall then all be filled with knowledge, truth, and grace; they shall all be righteous, as the "branch of God's planting, the work of his hands, that he may be glorified," and this will render earth almost like heaven. But if the Church may, and shall in due season, be thus illuminated, sanctified, and enlarged, and prospered with such permanent joy and peace: if her "walls may here be called Salvation, and her gates "Praise," if she may be said to have done with mourning, even in this land of sorrow and death: what will the glory and happiness of heaven be, where the Lord himself "will indeed be our everlasting Light, and our God our "Glory!" Let this hope cheer us under our present difficulties, and animate us to all diligence, that we may have an abundant entrance into this everlasting kingdom of our Lord and Saviour Jesus Christ.

2 L 2
Lord, that he might be glorified.

4 And they shall build the old wastes, they shall raise up the former desolations, and they shall repair the waste cities, the desolations of many generations.

5 And strangers shall stand and feed in your flocks, and the sons of the alien shall be your plowmen, and your vine-dressers.

6 But ye shall be named the priests of the Lord: men shall call you the ministers of our God: ye shall eat the riches of the Gentiles, and in their glory shall ye boast yourselves.

Notes.

CHAP. LXI. V. 1–3. The prophet, having declared in general both the troubles and deliverances of the Church to the end of time, here returns to discuss some particulars more fully, which relate to those great events. This chapter refers to the coming of Christ, and the calling of the Gentiles. The allusions may be taken from the release of the captive Jews, and their return to their cities and lands: but Christ himself hath determined the interpretation to more spiritual and evangelical subjects. (Note, Luke iv. 17–21.) He is here introduced as the Speaker, and these first verses relate to his personal ministry and the general tendency and effect of his Gospel. The Spirit of the Lord rested on him to anoint, consecrate, and qualify him, as a man, for the work to which he was appointed. (xii. 1–3.) By virtue of his voluntary obedience and sacrifice, as our Surety and High Priest, he was authorized to preach the glad tidings of forgiveness and free salvation to the meek, the afflicted, the poor in spirit, the penitent, who know their guilt, danger, and misery; for though the Gospel is proposed to all, yet it does not appear glad tidings to any but the convinced humbled sinner. He was also commissioned effectually to bind up and heal the broken hearted; to proclaim liberty to the captives and the opening of the prison to them that are bound.

(Lex. xi. 17.) This may be understood in the same sense as elsewhere. Thus the priest is not only the servant and minister of God, but he is also the agent and instrument of his grace and mercy. (Note, Luke x. 17.)

V. 4–6. Zerubbabel, Joshua, Nehemiah, and others, rebuilt Jerusalem and the cities of Judah, after the captivity; and some think, that this passage predicts the return of the converted Jews to their own land, and settling again in it: but it seems rather, from the context, to be a figurative description of the happy effects produced by the preaching of the Gospel in the primitive times. Vital piety had been at a very low ebb for some ages, when our Lord entered on his ministry. Those blind guides, the Scribes and Pharisees, had made "cold the commandments of God, and the traditions of men"; had corrupted the holy scriptures, and had substituted their own traditions and interpretations. The Sadducees also, by their infidel principles, had increased these desolations. But the apostles and primitive evangelists, having been humbled, comforted, and sanctified, by our Lord's ministry, were employed to build up what was decayed and gone to ruins. By the blessing of God on their labours, many tens of thousands among the Jews became humble disciples of Christ, and spiritual worshippers of God through him. And by the conversion of the Gentiles, the Church was replenished with numbers of believers, immensely greater than had ever been known, even before the destruction of many nations. Thus Zion was built up, and her desolated cities rose from their ruins; according to the figurative language often used even in the New Testament. (Note, l.viii. 12. Marg. Ref.) The strangers and aliens, thus brought into the Church, were not only useful to the apostles, evangelists, and Jewish converts, 7 For your shame ye shall have double; and for confusion they shall rejoice in their portion: therefore in their land they shall possess the double; everlasting joy shall be unto them.

8 For I the Lord love judgment, I hate robbery for burnt-offering; and I will direct their work in truth, and I will make an everlasting covenant with them.

9 And their seed shall be known among the Gentiles, and their offspring among the people: all that see them shall acknowledge them, that they are the seed which the Lord hath blessed.

10 I will greatly rejoice in the Lord, my soul shall be joyful in my God; for he hath clothed me with the garments of salvation, he hath covered me with the robe of righteousness, as a bridegroom decketh himself with ornaments, and as a bride adorneth herself with her jewels.

11 For as the earth bringeth forth her bud, and as the garden causeth the things that are sown in it to spring forth; so the Lord God will cause righteousness and praise to spring forth before all the nations.
CHAP. LXII.

The prophet, as a type of Christ, shorten his zeal in interceding for the performance of God's glorious promises to his Church, 1—5. Vigilant watchmen are promised; who, with other believers, are excited to the same zeal, 6, 7. God confirms his promises by an oath, 8, 9. Preparations to be made for the coming of his salvation, 10—12.

and this language is peculiarly applicable to the case of Christians; who, adorned with the robe of righteousness conferred on the great High Priest, are through him made kings and priests to our God. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The office of the great Redeemer, and the tenour of his Gospel, are peculiarly encouraging to the humble and teachable, to those who are burdened with a guilty conscience, and fear of deserved wrath; and who are distracted through the power of inbred sins and strong temptations. Let such discouraged souls then attend to the voice of Christ: he was anointed, and sent to bind up the broken hearted, to pardon the self-condemned, to break off the fetters from the enslaved, to break open the prison door, and to give liberty to the captives. But large as his commission is, the proud, impudent, and stout hearted, continuing such, exclude themselves from the benefit of it; for, unless they are brought by the holy law, the ministration of death and condemnation to transgressors, and by the convictions of the Holy Spirit, to know themselves, and humbly submit to God, they will not understand the nature of, or desire the blessings conferred by him, “who came to seek and save that which was lost.” While the Gospel is preached to us, “the acceptable year of the “Lord” continues: let them such as have feared to know the worst of themselves, recollect that if they be but duly humbled, Christ will assuredly relieve and comfort them: but let the careless, the infidel, the profligate, the hypocritical take notice, that the day of vengeance of our God is intimately connected with this, his acceptable year. Let none delay, for their limited time of mercy and grace may soon expire: let none despound, who are mourning before God in deep self-abasement; for the gracious Saviour will surely comfort them and render both joyful and holy: but let none rest in false joy and carnal confidence; for the rejoicing of every true penitent is connected with love and praise, and they are made, “Trees of righteousness, the planting of the Lord, that He “may be glorified.” The Lord is pleased, from age to age, to employ those who have been thus convinced, humbled, pardoned, and sanctified by his grace, to execute the ministry of reconciliation between him and their fellow sinners. They are sent to comfort the mourners, and to bind up the broken hearted, and to copy the example, as well as to proclaim the Gospel, of their Lord and Saviour. He even employs such persons as instruments of extensive usefulness to his Church; and thus we poor sinners of the Gentiles, are honoured to be “the workers togeth-ther with God,” for the good of his redeemed people. But we should desire the good and useful, though laborious work of the ministry, more than the honour of being named the priests of the Lord, or than the enrolment of eating the riches of the Gentiles. Indeed all believers may glory in being the priests of the Lord, separated and consecrated to offer him spiritual sacrifices, and to draw near unto him: but let none boast themselves in this glory, who do not endeavour to maintain the sanctity, as well as the duty, of their important character. True believers will be doubly honoured for all their confusion and self-abasement before God, and for all the shame and disgrace that they have suffered from the world; and they that have most despised them, will behold them, (perhaps from afar,) rejoicing in their portion with everlasting joy. The just and heart-searching God cannot be imposed upon by specious hypocrisies, or be induced to accept the most costly oblations from those who would thus make him a sharer in their ill-gotten gains; and large donations to pius and charitable uses must be honestly obtained, in order to be accepted of him. But he will not reject the feeblest attempt of the upright believer: he will direct him and his works in the way of his precepts and promises, and teach him how to perform his well meant services acceptably; and he will ratify and seal unto him his everlasting covenant. This generation is continued as a peculiar people, distinguished by their piety, and zeal for good works, as well as for their joy and confidence in God; and all who impartially observe them may perceive, and should acknowledge, “that “they are a seed that the Lord hath blessed.” They may also cheerfully expect that their offspring which they dedicate to him, and bring up for him, shall inherit the same blessings, and be distinguished in the same manner. Every one of them may therefore rejoice greatly in the Lord his God, who hath clothed him with the garments of salvation, even the robe of the Redeemer’s righteousness; and admitted him to an union and relation to him, of which the most admired relations on earth are feeble shadows, and which death, that dissolves all our other unions, shall eternally perfect. Let us seek, first these blessings, rejoice in them, and aim to walk worthy of them; and let us gladly anticipate the time, when righteousness and praise shall spring forth before all the nations of the earth.
glory in the hand of the Lord, and a royal diadem in the hand of thy God.

4 Thou shalt not more be termed Forsaken; neither shall thy land any more be termed Desolate; but thou shalt be called Hephzi-bah, and thy land shall be called Beulah: for the Lord delighteth in thee, and thy land shall be married.

5 For as a young man marrieth a virgin, so shall thy sons marry thee: and as the bridegroom rejoiceth over the bride, so shall thy God rejoice over thee.

6 I have set watchmen upon thy walls, O Jerusalem,

NOTES.

CHAPTER LXII. V. 1—5. Some commentators suppose that the prophet here speaks in his own name, and in that of the prophets and ministers of God in successive generations: but he seems to have spoken as the type of Christ, and in his name. We may therefore consider the Son of God, as assuring his Church of his unfailling love and care of her and intercession for her, under all trials and difficulties; and that he would never intermit his prevailing pleas and powerful operations in her behalf, till her righteousness and salvation shone forth with the brightness of a lamp, lighted up and burning in a conspicuous place, for the use of all that were in the house. By Zion's righteousness we may understand, either the righteousness by which believers are justified, or the fruits of righteousness by which that justification is evidenced: and her salvation may mean the doctrine of salvation taught in the Church; or the blessings enjoyed by believers as the first fruits of that salvation. These would at length be rendered so abundant and conspicuous, that the Gentiles, yea, all kings would behold her glory in them; and so Zion would be called by a new name, which the Lord would give her. Some understand this of the name of Christians, by which believers are called under the new dispensation; but probably it refers to that change which would take place in her state, which is signified by names afterwards mentioned. Then the Church would become a crown, or diadem, which God would hold in his hand, to show his delight in thus honouring her; and her peace, holiness, and happiness would there be held forth to allure others to come, and seek a share of her blessings. She would no longer be looked upon, and spoken of, as a forsaken or divorced woman, nor her land left desolate, (as Judah had been during the captivity;) but the Lord would honour her by the name of Hephzi-bah, or My delight is in her; and her land, or the countries occupied by her people, would be called Beulah, or Married; for the Lord would as openly avow his special favour to his Church, as a man doth for her whom he publicly espouses. Indeed as a young man marrieth a virgin, he greatly loves, so would Zion's Restorer marry her, and God would rejoice in his love to her, as the bridegroom over his bride. The word rendered Sons may be translated thy Restorer, by altering some of the points; but then the verb being plural, must likewise be altered: and perhaps this is not necessary. The Church is sometimes spoken of as a matron, or as a widow or divorced woman, and then again as a virgin: so that it would not be unprecedented, if the members of the Church should sometimes be considered as her dutiful sons; and at others, as standing in the relation of a husband to her. Such a variation of images must sometimes occur in a style so exceedingly figurative and highly poetical, (according to the bold genius of eastern poetry,) as that of Isaiah. The conversion of Constantine and the prosperity and peace of the Christian Church, after the continued persecutions that she had endured, are supposed by some to be here predicted: yet the language seems to indicate that still more glorious events are intended. V. 6, 7. There is no intimation of any change in the speaker; and if we consider the former verses as the words of the Messiah, these verses are the continuation of his discourse. The word shomerim, (watchmen,) doth properly signify those priests and Levites, who kept watch day and night about the temple, and some of them at certain hours sung psalms of prayer and praise. (Lownth.) An allusion may be made to this custom: but the walls of Jerusalem, not the courts of the temple, would be thus guarded: and the watchmen on Zion's walls evidently mean the prophets and faithful ministers of Christ, who are employed to give warning of the approach of an enemy, and also to look out for the coming of her expected Deliverer. (Marg. Ref.) These watchmen would be instant in preaching the word, and constant in prayer for the prosperity of the Church; and all believers are exhorted to join with them. They and other believers make mention of the Lord, or rather are his remembrancers, to remind him of his promises; and they are exhorted not to keep silence, nor to give him any rest, but importunately to beseech him to perform his word: till he should establish his Church, in righteousness, peace, and truth, and render her the praise and glory of the whole earth. This assuredly is addressed to us also, however we interpret the prophecy. To us likewise it is said, Let there be no silence to you; and allow no silence to him until, &c.; according to the emphatic language of the original. He exhorteth the ministers never to cease to call on God: for the deliverance of his Church; and to teach others to do the same.
v. 8, 9. The Lord is here said to have sworn by his right hand and the arm of his strength, or pledged the honour of his omnipotence, that he will rescue his Church from her enemies. The images are taken from the devastations which were made in Judah, when the enemies of the Jews seized their corn and wine; but when the invaders were vanquished, then they gathered their harvest and vintage, and feasted upon them in the courts of the temple, whether they carried their spoils in strings, first fruits, oblations, &c. And it implies the deliverance of the Christian Church from those persecutors who have often kept from them the word of God, and deprived them of the labours of their ministers by putting them to death, immuring them in prisons, or driving them into foreign countries. But a blessed change is here predicted, which would be welcomed and improved in a holy and a thankful manner. (Marg. Ref.)

v. 10—12. The friends and ministers of the Church are here commanded to go through her gates, to cast up an high way, and to remove every obstruction, that the people might come to Zion from the ends of the earth; and to lift up a standard to give them notice that the time was arrived. (Note. lvi. 14.) For the proclamation was sent forth to the ends of the earth, that Zion’s Salvation or Saviour was come. The Lord Jesus was about to receive his full recompence, in becoming the means of bringing in the ends of the earth, and to perform that great work which is before him; and therefore the Church would be called, “an holy people, the redeemed of the Loard,” being “sought out,” or greatly desired by him in his afflictions, and assured of being no more forsaken. Many events have been partial accomplishments of this prediction, especially that before mentioned: but I apprehend these were only earnest of more glorious times that are yet to come. The restoration of the converted Jews to their own land does not seem to be exclusively intended, as some expositors think; but rather the general prevalence of religion throughout the world, is predicted in figurative language.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Whilst we are encouraged by firmly believing the unchangeable love of Christ to his Church, and his uninterrupted intercession in her behalf, in which he will steadily persevere, till her righteousness and salvation are re-established, most conspicuous and glorious; we should in our several stations imitate his example. The interests of true religion should be near our hearts, and we should be willing to spend and be spent in promoting them, without seeking our own credit or emolument: we should be unwearying in doing good, and wait for our rest in heaven: we should think nothing done, whilst so much remains undone, and feel ourselves encouraged to expect, and pray for, greater success, by every degree that is vouchsafed us. Our first object should be to promote the purity of the Church, in doctrine and practice, and her internal peace and unity: for when the Gospel of salvation, through the righteousness of Christ and the sanctification of the Spirit, are clearly professed, and solidly preached and vindicated; and when the holy lives and mutual love of those who profess and preach them, adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things: then the righteousness of Zion, times future, as a lamp that burneth; and her brightness makes way for the wider diffusion of divine knowledge. But her glory and excellency must become very conspicuous, before all kings and nations can behold it: and therefore zealous endeavours to increase knowledge, holiness, and union among professed Christians, tend as much to bring forward the great triumphs of the Gospel, as promoting missions into the remote and benighted regions of the earth. When the scandals of the Church shall be removed and her breach healed, she will appear as the perfection of beauty, and be called by a new name: and all that behold her excellence and the special favour of God to her, will find their hearts allured to seek a share in her privileges. Whilst we admire the happiness of the Church, constituted of redeemed sinners, yea, reconciled enemies, in being the object of the Lord’s delight, and as married unto him: let us also adore his infinite condescension and love. We may all aspire to these honours; and, coming in Christ’s name, we shall not be refused or forsaken; but we should well consider the reciprocal duties that result from such high relations and obligations, that we may thence deduce motives to faithfulness, obedience, submission, and the most entire and devoted attachment. If God rejoiceth over us and over his Church, as a bridgeweak rejoice over her bride; surely we should rejoice in his favour and service, and desire no other happiness: and as the true sons of the Church, we should heartily espouse her interests, and seek her peace and prosperity. Some of us the Lord employs as watchmen to defend the walls of Zion: let us then be watchful and faithful, instant in preaching, fervent in prayer, patient in enduring hardship, wholly giving ourselves to the work of the ministry. Others are the Lord’s remembrancers: let them recollect that he loves to be reminded of his promises and predictions; that he delights in their importunity; and that he commands them not to keep silence, and to give him no rest, till he establish, and till he make Jerusalem a Christ shows his power to save; and of his victories over his enemies and vengeance on them, 1—6. A thankful commemoration of God's ancient mercies to Israel, 7—14. A prayer for the return of his mercy to them, 15—19.

Who is this that cometh b from Edom, with dyed garments from Bozrah? This is * glorious in his apparel, * travelling in the greatness of his strength? I, that speak in righteousness, * mighty to save.

2 Wherefore art thou red in thine apparel, and thy garments like him that treadeth in the wine-fat?

3 I have * trodden the wine-press alone; and of the people there was none with me: for I will tread them in mine anger, * and trample them in my fury; * and their blood shall be sprinkled upon my garments, and I will stain all my raiment.

4 For * the day of vengeance is in mine heart, and the year of my redeeming is come.

5 And I looked, and * there was none to help; and I wondered that there was none to uphold: therefore * mine own arm brought salvation unto me; and * my fury, it upheld me.

6 And I will tread down the people in mine anger, and * make them drunk in my fury, and * I will bring down their strength to the earth.

NOTES.

CHAP. LXIII. V. 1—6. These verses contain a prophetical representation of the victories of Christ over the enemies of his Church; for of him the passage must be interpreted, nor can we admit of so much as an accommodation of it to any other. But it is remarkable, that many interpreters have understood it of the sufferings of Christ, and of his being covered with his own blood; Vol. III.—No. 19.

though nothing can be more evident, than that he is represented by the prophet as covered with the blood of his enemies, and as a mighty Conqueror and Avengeur; and not as a Lamb slain for a sacrifice. Whoever considers attentively what hath been proposed on a parallel Scripture, (Notes, xxxiv.) will probably be convinced that Edom, and Bozrah, (the chief city of Edom,) are here to be understood mystically; and that the destruction of the chief city of the Antichristian powers, and of all that pertinaciously adhere to her, are here predicted, and that no other event fully answers to the description; though the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, and that of the Roman Emperors and armies, about the time of Constantine's advancement to the imperial throne, have been mentioned by eminent interpreters as a partial accomplishment of it. 'Though this prophecy must have its accomplishment, there is no necessity of supposing that it has been already accomplished. There are prophecies, which intimate a great slaughter of the enemies of God, —which remain yet to be fulfilled. This prophecy may refer to the same or the like event.' (By. Lomth.) (Marg. Ref.) The prophet, in vision, beholds the Messiah, returning in triumph from the conquest of his enemies, (of whom Edom was a type;) and being struck with his majestic appearance, he inquires, Who this is, thus returning from Bozrah, with his garments stained with blood: being arrayed in glorious apparel, as some mighty Prince; and travelling, not as one wearied with the combat, but in the greatness of his strength, and as able and prepared to vanquish every opposing power? To this, Messiah answers, that it is He, the Judge, that gives sentence in righteousness against his enemies, performs all his promises, and is mighty to save his Church.—The prophet again inquires, Wherefore his apparel was discoloured, and why he appeared like one that had been treading the purple grapes in the wine-press? (Notes, Es. xxxvii., xxxix. Rev. xiv. 19, 20. xiv. 11—21.) To which Messiah answers, that he had been treading the wine-press of the wrath of God; and that by his own power, without any human help, he had crushed his obstinate op.
eat it, and praise the Lord; and they that have brought it together shall drink it in the courts of my holiness.

10 Go through, go through the gates; prepare ye the way of the people; cast up, cast up the high-way; gather out the stones; lift up a standard for the people.

11 Behold, the Lord hath proclaimed unto the end of the world, Say ye to the daughter of Zion, Behold, thy salvation cometh; behold, his reward is with him, and his work before him.

12 And they shall call them, The holy people, The redeemed of the Lord and thou shalt be called, Sought out, a city not forsaken.

V. 8. The Lord is here said to have sworn by his right hand and the arm of his strength, or pledged the honour of his omnipotence, that he will rescue his Church from her enemies. The images are taken from the devastations which were made in Judah when the enemies of the Jews seized their corn and wine, but when the invaders were vanquished, then they reaped their harvest and vintage, and feasted upon them in the house of the temple whither they carried their peace-offerings, first fruits, oblations, &c. And it implies the deliverance of the Christian Church from those persecutors who have often kept from them the word of God, and deprived them of the labours of their ministers by putting them to death, immuring them in prisons, or driving them into foreign countries. But a blessed change is here predicted, which would be welcomed and improved in a holy and a thankful manner.

(Marg. Ref.)

V. 10-12. The friends and ministers of the Church are here commanded to go through her gates, to cast up an high way, and to remove every obstruction, that the people might come to Zion from the ends of the earth; and to lift up a standard to give them notice that the time was arrived. (Note, Ivi. 14.) For the proclamation was sent forth to the ends of the earth, that Zion's Salvation or Saviour was come. The Lord Jesus was about to receive his full recompense, in becoming the Salvation of God to the ends of the earth, and to perform that work which is before him; and therefore the Church would be called, "an holy people, the redeemed of the Lord." being "sought out," or greatly desired by him in his afflictions, and assured of being no more forsaken. Many events have been partial accomplishments of this prediction, especially that before mentioned; but I apprehend these were only eminences of more glorious times that are yet to come. The restoration of the converted Jews to their own land does not seem to be exclusively intended, as some expositors think; but rather the general prevalence of religion throughout the world, is predicted in figurative language.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Whilst we are encouraged by firmly believing the unchangeable love of Christ to his Church, and his uninterrupted intercession in her behalf, in which he will steadily persevere, 'till her righteousness and salvation are rendered most conspicuous and glorious; we should in our several stations imitate his example. The interests of true religion should be near our hearts, and we should be willing to spend and be spent in promoting them, without seeking our own credit or emolument: we should be unwearied in doing good, and wait for our rest in heaven: we should think nothing done, whilst so much remains undone: and be encouraged to expect, and pray for, greater success, by every degree that is vouchsafed us. Our first object should be to promote the purity of the Church, in doctrine and practice, and her internal peace and unity: for when the Gospel of salvation, through the righteousness of Christ and by the sanctification of the Spirit, are clearly professed, and boldly preached and vindicated; and when the holy lives and mutual love of those who profess and preach them, adorn the doctrine of God our Saviour in all things: then the righteousness of Zion shines forth, as a lamp that burneth and her brightness makes way for the wider diffusion of divine knowledge. But her glory and excellency must become very conspicuous, before all kings and nations can behold it: and therefore zealous endeavours to increase knowledge, holiness, and union among professors of Christianity, tend as much to bring forward the great triumphs of the Gospel, as promoting missions into the remote and benighted regions of the earth. When the scandals of the Church shall be removed and her breaches healed, she will appear as "the perfection of beauty," and be called by a new name: and all that behold her excellency and fertility, and the special favour of God to her, will find their hearts allure to seek a share in her privileges. Whilst we admire the happiness of the Church, (constituted of redeemed sinners, yea, reconciled enemies,) in being the object of the Lord's delight, and as married unto him: let us also adore his infinite condescension and love. We may all aspire to these honours; and, coming in Christ's name, we shall not be refused or foreigned: but we should well consider the reciprocal duties that result from such high relations and obligations, that we may thence deduce motives to faithfulness, obedience, submission, and the most entire and devoted attachment. If God receiveth us over and over his Church, as a bridegroom rejoiceth over his bride; surely we should rejoice in his favour and service, and desire no other happiness: and as the true sons of the Church, we should heartily espouse her interests, and seek her peace and prosperity. Some of us the Lord employs as watchmen to defend the walls of Zion: let us then be watchful and faithful, instant in preaching, fervent in prayer, patient in enduring hardships, wholly giving ourselves to the work of the ministry. Others are the Lord's remembrancers: let them recollect that he loves to be reminded of his promises and predictions; that he delights in their importunity; and that he commands them "not to keep silence, and to give him no rest, till he establish, and till he make Jerusalem a"
Christ shows his power to save; and his victories over his enemies and vengeance on them, 1—6. A thankful commemoration of God's ancient mercies to Israel, 7—14. A prayer for the return of his mercy to them, 15—19.

Who is this that cometh from Edom, with dyed garments from Bozrah? This is the gloriously apparel, travelling in the greatness of his strength I, that speak in righteousness, mighty to save.

Wherefore art thou red in thine apparel, and thy garments like him that treadeth in the wine-fat? I have trodden the wine-press alone; and of the people there was none with me: for I will tread them in mine anger, and trample them in my fury; and their blood shall be sprinkled upon my garments, and I will stain all my raiment.

For the day of vengeance is in mine heart, and the year of my redeemed is come. And I looked, and there was none to help; and I wondered that there was none to uphold: therefore mine own arm brought salvation unto me; and my fury, it upheld me.

And I will tread down the people in mine anger, and make them drunk in my fury, and I will bring down their strength to the earth.

"praise in the earth." We should thankfully acknowledge, that he hath already, in part, fulfilled these engagements. He hath founded a Church, to the honour of his name, in this distant part of the world; and at present, he preserves it from oppression and persecution; he no longer suffers our adversaries to lock up from us the Holy Scriptures, which are as food and as cordials for our souls; or to prevent them to their own base purposes. We have the full comfort and benefit of public ordinances, of the labours of his ministers, and of every means of education. Let us be thankful for these mercies, and for all our distinguished temporal advantages, and use them all in a sanctified manner. Let us delight in attending on his courts, that we may enjoy the consolations of his Spirit: and let us remember that his almighty arm is engaged to effect all that yet remaineth to be done; and that he hath confirmed it with an oath, for our fuller assurance. Let us also endeavour by our examples, prayers, and the improvement of our talents, to open Zion's gates, to prepare her ways, to remove obstructions, to forward the admission of citizens, and the lifting up of the standard of the cross, to call them in. Soon it shall be proclaimed in its fullest sense, "Say ye to the daughter of Zion, behold, thy Salvation cometh!" The Lord Jesus will accomplish his work, and his success will be his most valued recompense: and then all, who name his name, shall be acknowledged to be a holy people, and his Church to be "sought out, a city not forsaken," as it hath long appeared to be. And we are sure that he will never forsake one whom he hath redeemed and sanctified; and that the cause he favours will surely prevail.

NOTES.

CHAP. LXIII. V. 1—6. These verses contain a prophetical representation of the victories of Christ over the enemies of his Church; for of him the passage must be interpreted, nor can we admit of so much as an accommodation of it to any other. But it is remarkable, that many interpreters have understood it of the sufferings of Christ, and of his being covered with his own blood. Vol. III.—No. 19.

though nothing can be more evident, than that he is represented by the prophet as covered with the blood of his enemies, and as a mighty Conqueror and Avenger; and not as a Lamb slain for a sacrifice. Whoever considers attentively what hath been proposed on a parallel Scripture, (Notes, xxxiv.) will probably be convinced that Edom, and Bozrah, (the chief city of Edom,) are here to be understood mystically; and that the destruction of the chief city of the Antichristian powers, and of all that pertinaciously adhere to her, are here predicted, and that no other events fully answer to the description; though the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, and that of the Roman Emperors and armies, about the time of Constantine's advancement to the imperial throne, have been mentioned by eminent interpreters as a partial accomplishment of it. Though this prophecy must have its accomplishment, there is no necessity of supposing that it has already accomplished. There are prophecies, which intimate a great slaughter of the enemies of God, which remain yet to be fulfilled. This prophecy may refer to the same or the like event. (Bp. Lomth.)

(Marg. Ref.) The prophet, in vision, beholds the Messiah, returning in triumph from the conquest of his enemies, (of whom Edom was a type;) and being struck with his majestic appearance, he inquires, Who this is, thus returning from Bozrah, with his garments stained with blood: being arrayed in glorious apparel, as some mighty Prince; and travelling, not as one wearied with the combat, but in the greatness of his strength, and as able and prepared to vanquish every opposing power? To this, Messiah answers, that it is He, the Judge, that gives sentence in righteousness against his enemies, performs all his promises, and is mighty to save his Church.

The prophet again inquires, Wherefore his apparel was discoloured, and why he appeared like one that had been treading the purple grapes in the wine-press? (Notes, Ex. xxxviii. xxxix.) Rev. xiv. 19, 20. xiv. 11—21.) To which Messiah answers, that he had been treading the wine-press of the wrath of God, and that by his own power, without any human help, he had crushed his obstinate opp.
7 I will mention the loving-kindnesses of the Lord, and the praises of the Lord, according to all that the Lord hath bestowed on us, and his great goodness toward the house of Israel, which he hath bestowed on them, according to his mercies, and according to the multitude of his loving-kindnesses.

8 For he said, Surely they are my people, children that will not lie: so he was their Saviour.

9 In all their affliction he was afflicted, and the Angel of his presence saved them; in his love and in his pity he redeemed them; and he bare them, and carried them all the days of old.

10 But they rebelled, and vexed his Holy Spirit: therefore he was turned to be their enemy, and he fought against them.

11 Then remember the days of old, Moses and his people, saying, Where is that he that brought up out of the sea, with the shepherd of his flock, and led them through the deep, as his everlasting name?

12 That led them by the right-hand of Moses with his glorious arm, dividing the waters before them, to make himself an everlasting name?

13 If he had been assured that they would not prevaricate in his solemn engagement, or deal deceitfully with him. This is spoken after the manner of men, and is such as He had given them no cause for their falsehood and apostacy.

14 The Lord interested himself in all the afflictions of Israel, even as if he had shared in their sufferings: and the only begotten Son of the Father, became the Angel or Messenger of his love, in and by whom his special presence attended them for their preservation and salvation, not only from Egypt to Canaan, but also through their successive generations: and thus he compassionately redeemed and bore them, with the patience, assiduity, and tenderness, with which a nursing mother carries, and tends upon, her beloved infant. (Marg. Ref.) The Angel of his covenant, (who still appears before his face to intercede for his Church,) save them. (Rb. Hal.) The Saviour, jointing the latter part of the eighth verse with the ninth, translate the whole passage agreeably to the present Hebrew text: He was their Saviour out of all their trouble. It was not a messenger, nor an angel, but himself delivered them. The Angel, who conducted them by the pillar of fire and cloud, was no other than the Logos, or Second Person of the blessed Trinity. The Person who led the people through the wilderness, could be no created being; though he is sometimes called an Angel, because he took upon him the office and ministry of angels, as he afterwards took on him the form of a servant. (Marg. Ref.) The Angel of his covenant, and the guide of the Israelites, was the Holy Spirit, sent down from Heaven to attest their doctrine by his miraculous operations: thus, God, who had before been their Friend and fought for them, became their dreadful enemy, and fought against them by the Romans, to the destruction of their city; and since that time by various instruments even to this present day.
13 That led them through the deep, as an horse in the wilderness, that they should not stumble.

14 As a beast goeth down into the valley, the Spirit of the Lord caused him to rest; so didst thou lead thy people, to make thyself a glorious name.

15 Look down from heaven, and behold from the habitation of thy holiness and of thy glory: where is thy zeal and thy strength, the sounding of thy bowels and of thy mercies towards me?

Are they restrained?

16 Doubtless thou art our Father, though Abraham be ignorant of us, and Israel acknowledge us not: thou, O Lord, our Father, art our Redeemer; thy name is everlasting.

17 O Lord, why hast thou made us to err from thy ways, and hardened our heart from thy fear? Return for thy servants' sake, the tribes of thine inheritance.

18 The people of thy holiness have possessed it but a little while: our adversaries have trodden down thy sanctuary.

19 We are thine: thou never barest rule over them; they were not called by thy name.

V. 11—14. It is not agreed, whether God, or the nation of Israel be here spoken of in the beginning of this passage: but if we adhere to our version, it is more obvious to understand it of the Jews, in their rejected condition, calling to remember the Lord's ancient mercies to their forefathers, and again inquiring after him. Some of that people, being made sensible of the wrath of God against them, and reflecting how his power had been exercised in behalf of their fathers, and what promises had been made to them, begin seriously to inquire, Where is He that showed such wonders of power and love to Moses and his people? Where is the Lord, who brought Israel up out of the Red Sea, with those to whom he had committed them, as a flock to the care of a shepherd, but who could not have delivered either themselves or the people? Where is He that put his Holy Spirit upon the seventy Elders, to enable them to assist Moses in his too arduous work? Who led the vast multitude of Israel through the deep channel of the Red Sea, (the waters of which he divided by his power, for the glory of his name,) with as much safety and as little obstruction, as a horse passeth in the open plains; and who afterwards led them through the wilderness to the rest and plenty of Canaan, as the beast goeth down, after the labour of the day, to feed and lie down in the fruitful valley? Would this mighty God of Jacob no more glorify his name, in delivering his ancient people from their calamities?

V. 15—19. These meditations are represented as exciting the hopes and fears of the penitent Jews: and here are words prepared for them to take with them, in returning unto the Lord. They are therefore introduced, as beseeching him to look down from his holy habitation on the abject condition of their once favoured nation: they inquire, Where is his zeal for his own glory, his power heretofore exerted in their favour, and his tender compassions for them in their troubles? Were they for ever restrained? They plead, that even if Abraham and Israel should disown them, or knew not of them, or could afford them no help in their misery: yet doubtless he would remember his relation to them, and be their Father and Redeemer; for his name, (his perfections,) was everlasting and unchangeable. Why then had he so long left the

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—6. Our divine Redeemer will appear glorious in the eyes of all holy creatures, when he displays his power and justice in taking vengeance on his obstinate enemies, as well as when he shows himself mighty to save his people. And though he deigns not to answer the arrogant, caviling questions of proud infidels, he will fully satisfy humble believers of the propriety and equity of his most awful judgments. Once he appeared on earth in apparent weakness, to pour out his precious blood as the atonement for our sins; but he will in the time appear travelling in "the greatness of his strength," and covered with the solutions occasioned by their iniquities, and deprecate the severity of his indignation, 6—12.

O h that thou wouldest rend the heavens, that thou wouldest come down, 7 that the mountains might flow down at thy presence; blood of his enemies. No numbers or power can secure them against his righteous indignation; nor will he need any helpers in this tremendous work; any more than he did, when "his own self bare our sins in his own body on the tree." His single arm suffices to apply, as his single sacrifice did to procure, salvation; and his powerful and righteous indignation will uphold him in executing vengeance on his adversaries: yet he may well complain that amongst the numbers who call themselves his disciples, there are scarcely any that stand prepared to be zealous instruments in promoting his cause. But the acceptable year of the Lord is yet proclaimed, though the day of vengeance be in his heart, and the vintage which is to be trodden in the wine-press ripens apace; let then sinners, in general, and the opposers of Scriptural Christianity in particular, take warning and seek reconciliation with their offended Judge: or he will tread them down in his anger, make them drunk in his fury, and bring down their strength to the earth; and by their example he will bring others to repent and seek his face.

V. 7—19.

No sufferings should induce us to forget, or not to mention the praises of the Lord, and his mercies to us and to his people, which have been numberless, and infinite, like his essential goodness. All our comforts and hopes spring from this source, and all our miseries and fears from our sins. Every one of the human species receives unmerited mercies from our God; but they are most favoured who enjoy the benefit of his word and ordinances. He acts towards his professed people, as if they were, and would be sincere, and rescues them from many dangers and troubles; till their iniquity or apostasy proves that they were dissenters. But how great is his mercy towards those that really fear and trust in him! Who are indeed his children, and neither dissemble with him, nor with their brethren, but copy his example of truth and faithfulness. He is become their Saviour; he pities them as a Father doth his children; he interests himself in all their concerns, even as if he shared their sufferings; and they, who persecute or despise them, are accounted his despisers and persecutors also. The Angel of his presence, the Messenger of the covenant, who "was in the form of God, and thought it not robbery to be equal with God," assumed the form of a servant, that in our nature he might bear our griefs and carry our sorrows; and he so loved them whom he hath thus redeemed by his blood, and taught them to trust in and love him, that he bears and carries them with the most unwearied patience. Yet, alas! in many instances, they too are rebellious, and grieve his Holy Spirit, lose their comforts, and expose themselves to sharp rebukes and corrections; by which they are brought to renewed repentance and deeper humiliation. But the Lord never becomes their enemy, to fight against them, as he doth against those who so vex his Holy Spirit, that he will no more strive with them. Yet whatever a man's sins have been, if he so remembers the Lord's mercies, as to be humbled for his ingratitude, and yet be encouraged to hope in his mercy, there is ground to conclude that he is discovering the way of peace. When sinners inquire after him, who hath in other ages glorified himself in saving and feeding his purchased flock, and hath given his Holy Spirit to qualify his ministers and prosper their labours; and when they call to mind his wonderful works of old, in order thence to deduce arguments to plead with him in prayer, that he may glorify himself in saving them also; they are evidently profiting by the sacred records: for whenever we look up by humble faith and hope to the Lord, in the habituation of his holiness and glory, he will be sure to look down upon us in kindness and mercy. His zeal, power, and compassion are no more restrained, than in former ages: and should any become so sable, that the most eminent saints should reject or despise them; yet if God see them truly humbled and fervent in prayer, he will doubtless be their Father and Redeemer, for the everlasting glory of his name. Spiritual judgments, by which men are made to err from the ways, and are hardened against the fear of God, are more to be dreaded than any other calamities; and we should most carefully avoid those sins which provoke the Lord to leave men thus to themselves and to the deceiver, which he never doth without just cause. But when any become sensible that they have verged to this dreadful case, they are in a hopeful way to be preserved from it; for they may confidently beg of God to open their eyes, understandings, and hearts; and he will assuredly accept their petitions. Nay, such persons are proper supplicants for others in the same community or family, who are in the same awful situation. Thus, we are assured, that the Lord will shortly break in upon the blindness of the Jewish nation, and return in mercy to those tribes of his inheritance. Indeed, if all the promises made to their fathers had not received their whole accomplishment in the short-lived prosperity of Israel in Canaan, it might well be considered as beneath the largeness of the terms employed. But all the blessings vouchsafed to the true Israel of God, through the promised Seed, in every age, are also to be included; and unknown blessings are yet reserved for that distinguished nation. And, however God may permit his adversaries to tread down his sanctuary, or to triumph over his people, yet he will bear the prayers of those who belong to him, and deliver them from those over whom he hath not borne rule, and who have never been called by his name.
B. C. 706.

CHAPTER LXIV.

2 As when the * melting fire burneth, the fire causeth the waters to boil, 4 to make thy name known to thine adversaries, * that the nations may tremble at thy presence!

3 When thou didst terrible things, which we looked not for, thou camest down, 2 the mountains flowed down at thy presence.

4 For since the beginning of the world men * have not heard, nor perceived by the ear, neither hath the eye seen, O

NOTES.

CHAP. LXIV. V. 1–3. This chapter continues the prayer begun in the preceding; which has been interpreted to be that of the first converts made from among the dispersed Jews, when that nation is about to be reinstated in the Church. These supplicants perceive vast obstacles in the way of their desires being granted, especially from the power of their oppressors and adversaries: but they most earnestly call upon God to appear and remove them all. They long for him to rend the visible heavens in some awful manner, and to melt the mountains, that they might flow down as water at his presence; which he could do with the same facility as the fire melteth the wax, or the metal; or even as it causeth the water to boil. Thus he could make his name known to his adversaries, and put whole nations to confusion and consternation before him. And this would be no unprecedented favour: for when he delivered Israel out of Egypt, he did such terrible things, to crush the power of their oppressors, as they had never looked for or conceived an idea of; insomuch that opposing difficulties, apparently like immovable mountains, melted and vanished at his presence; and they only entreated a similar interposition, in order again to set them at liberty, and to reinstate them in their privileges. The commotion of Mount Sinai, when the Lord came down upon it, is referred to, in this allusion to their former deliverances. (Marg. Ref.) * The words will bear another interpretation, which agrees better with what follows: "When men shall do terrible and unexpected things, * the mountains shall melt at thy presence." (Lomth.)

V. 4. No man, from the beginning of the world, had heard, seen, or conceived an idea of any thing so great, glorious, or excellent, as what God him self had devised and prepared for those that waited for him; and the display of the divine power and glory, which the people of God yet wait for, will far exceed all that hitherto has been experienced, witnessed, or recorded since the beginning: and can only be properly conceived of by God himself. Some explain the verse to mean that no people had ever heard or conceived of any other God, except Jehovah, who had wrought such wonders for his people. St. Paul quotes the sense (though not the exact words of it), with reference to the blessings of redemption by the death of Christ: and perhaps the leading idea here may be, that nothing too great can be expected from that incomprehensible God, besides thee, what he hath prepared for him that waiteth for him.

5 Thou art meekest that * rejoicest, and worketh righteousness; * those that remember thee in thy ways: behold, * thou art wroth; for we have sinned; in whom is continuance, and we shall be saved.

6 But we are all as an unclean thing, and all our righteousness are as filthy rags; and we all do fade as a leaf; and our iniquities, like the wind, have taken us away.

V. 5. * Thou hast herefore given merciful proofs of thy favour to our forefathers, who rejoiced in thee and walked holily before thee: and so thou art ready to do to those who awfully and thankfully adore thee in thy ways of justice and mercy. But thou art displeas'd with us, for we have done wickedly before thee; whereas, if we had the grace to continue in those ways of thine, we should be sure to be saved. (Bp. Hall.) Thou showest favour toward our fathers, when they trusted in thee, and walked after thy commandments: they considered thy mercies. In them is continuance: that is, in thy mercies, which he calleth the ways of the Lord. (Ps. xxv. 10.) * Thou hast met him who rejoiced and wrought righteousness: these (all of this character in every age,) will remember thee in thy ways. Behold, "thou art angry, for we have sinned: in these" (in thy ways), "is perpetuity, and we shall be saved," or "may be saved." This is a literal translation of the verse, which is considered by Bishop Lowth as inexplicable without entirely conjectural alterations of the text. "The mercy of the Lord is from everlasting to everlasting upon them that fear him." (Ps. ciii. 17. Luke i. 50.) * He waits perpetually on his mercy-seat, to be gracious; "he meets" his worshippers through every generation, in his ordinances. In these is perpetuity; they are not like the changeable fashions and customs of men: and therefore, though the God of Israel had been wrath with his people for their sins; yet they had now begun to seek him, as the God who had met and blessed their fathers, when they rejoined in obeying and serving him, and they trusted that he would meet and save them also. The original word rendered continuance, means an indefinite duration, the beginning or termination of which is hidden from man.
7 And there is none that calleth upon thy name, that stirreth up himself to take hold of thee: for thou hast hid thy face from us, and hast consumed us, because of our iniquities.

8 But now, O Lord, thou art our Father: we are the clay, and thou our Potter; and we all are the work of thy hand.

9 Be not wroth very sore, O Lord, neither remember iniquity for ever.

10 Hold, see, we beseech thee, we are as clay, all thy people.

11 Thus saith the Lord, your redeemer, the mighty One, which formed all the earth; he formed it to establish it: why hast thou utterly cast us off? why doth thy wrath smoke against us?

12 Thedesired of all nations shall come, and the Lord shall be his name. He shall gather the outcasts of Jacob, and assemble the dispersed of Israel, in the midst of the Gentiles: he shall appoint the remnant for a people unto his name, and gather the outcasts of Israel from the four corners of the earth.

13 Judah is thy名称; thou hast rejoiced in thine inheritance; thy people shall be a people forever.

14 Behold, the Lord shall make Jerusalem an everlasting habitation, and a city of居所 for all generations.

15 And all the nations shall call themselves by the name of the Lord, and serve him: they shall be his people, and God shall be with them for a God.

16 And he will turn away the coast into the sea, and the fortified cities into the midst of the sea; Jerusalem shall be built in the top of the mount, and the highway of the Holy One shall be exalted. The pasture shall stand for the sheep, and the valley of the thickness shall be filled with flocks.

V. 6—8. 'The best actions of the best men have a great alloy of imperfection. When the Hebrew language would express the most excellent in its kind, it makes use of the plural. Here righteousnesses is the most perfect righteousness man can attain to.' (Lounth.) The converted remnant, suppliant in behalf of the Jews, are evidently taught to confess their own sins, as well as those of the nation in every age. Instead of 'the people of God's holiness,' as they were by profession, 'they were all as an unclean thing.' Instead of the robe of righteousness and salvation before spoken of, (Isa. 1:19.) 'all their righteous deeds were as a rejected garment.' (Lounth.) a garment thrown away as polluted and worthless. Not only the moral, ritual, or traditional works, by which they had long sought to justify themselves, in neglect of the Saviour and his righteousness, were abominable: because proud, hypocritical, and unbelieving; but even their present endeavours to seek and serve God, were so imperfect and mixed with defilement, that they were wholly unmeet to form a robe, in which to appear in his holy presence. A singular noun, like that plural here rendered 'filthy rags,' is frequently rendered ornament, or ornaments (xliii. 19. Ex. xxxiii. 4, 5, 6. 2 Sam. i. 24. Ez. xvii. 7—11.) and some would so render it in this place; and explain it exclusively of all works done to be seen of men; ostentatious, hypocritical, and vain-glorious works, designed both to acquire human applause, and make compensation for the want of true holiness. But this construction seems contrary to most if not all the old versions; the expression, 'all our righteousnesses are as ornaments,' (for there is no epithet) is obscure and ambiguous; and these penitents, in confessing their own sins and those of their nation, are supposed only to mean the sins of their past lives, or present actual transgressions, without any humiliating acknowledgment of the imperfection found in their repentance, prayers, and best services. How far it is proper for Christians to adopt the strong language of our translation, in respect of those righteousnesses which are the 'fruits of the Spirit,' is another question. 'The fruits of the Spirit' are in themselves most excellent; but the good works which the best of men perform, are not the unmingled 'fruits of the Spirit;' for the remainder of indwelling sin greatly alloys them. And the more humble and spiritual men become, the greater advantage have they of this corrupt alloy; the more they notice, lament, and confess it; and the reader they are, without affectation or direct intention, to use the most humiliating language of Scripture concerning themselves and their services. (Mang Ref.) But, however this may be determined, because of these things the prosperity of Israel was as a withered leaf; their iniquities had been as the wind to scatter them abroad throughout the earth; and there was scarcely one of them who heartily called upon God, or exerted himself to lay hold by faith on his power, truth, and love: for he had hid his face from them, and they were consumed or dissolved because of their iniquities. Yet they would still plead with the Lord, as their heavenly Father; they confided in his wisdom and mercy; and being the work of his creating power as individuals, and as his chosen nation, they were willing to be disposed of at his pleasure, like clay in the hand of the potter.

V. 9—12. The supplicants here continue to deprecate the extremity of the Lord's displeasure, and his perpetual remembrance of their sins: they still plead with him, as his chosen people, and call upon him to consider the dispositions of their hand. The cities, once inhabited by his worshippers, are now either entirely destroyed, or inhabited by infidels and idolaters; especially Jerusalem their holy city, and their temple with all its furniture and ordinances are utterly wasted: and would not the Lord be satisfied with these their miseries? Would he still refrain from interposing? Would he reject their prayers, and persist in his hot displeasure to afflict them? All these circumstances fix the prophetic meaning to the Jewish nation, rather than to the Christian Church. And the dispositions and miseries of the Jews, since their rejection of the Gospel, have so far exceeded, in degree and continuance, all that they before endured, that, though we need not exclude the Babylonian captivity, or the ravages and profanations of Antiochus Epiphanes, yet we must consider their condition from the days of Christ to the present time at length to terminate in their conversion, as the grand accomplishment of these predictions.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The difficulties which occur in our path or work, should excite us to more vigorous exercises of faith in the omnipotence of God, and to more fervent prayers for his interposition; for when he pleases to send the heavens and come down, the most insuperable obstacles remove in an instant; and we can never want a prevalent plea with CHAPTER LXV.

Jehovah declares his grace in the conversion of the Gentiles, and his justice in casting off the Jews for their unbelief, idolatry, and wickedness, 1-7: shows that he preserved the nation for the sake of a chosen seed to arise out of it; and contrasts the blessedness of his servants with the miseries coming on the unbelieving Jews, 8-15: predicts the glories and privileges of the Church in the latter days, 16-25.

I AM * sought of them that asked not for me; I am found of them that sought me not; I said, Behold me, *behold me, unto a nation that was not called by my name.

2 I have spread out my hands all the day unto *a rebellious people, *which walketh in a way that was not good, after their own thoughts;

NOTES.

CHAP. LXV. V. 1, 2. The preceding chapter might seem to intimate, that God had treated the Jewish nation with great severity: but in this he answers the suppliants, and shows them the reasons of his past conduct, as well as his gracious purposes in future towards them, and the Church in general. The subject is so arranged, that the Lord seems to have the whole nation of Israel and all their generations present before him, and sometimes to address one company and sometimes another: because they have been treated with such marked severity, for their rebellions, during the whole time that they continued the professed people of God, and not for the sins of any one generation exclusively. St. Paul quotes these verses, to show God's purpose of calling the Gentiles, and casting off the unbelieving Jews. And the Lord here seems to mention this part of his conduct, to show that he did not reject the Jews for want of a disposition to mercy, though he acted according to his wise and holy sovereignty in the exercise of it. The heathen nations did not seek after him, nor call on him, nor were they called by his name; yet, without their solicitation, the preachers of the Gospel were sent among them. Thus was he 'sought of' or 'made known to,' them that asked not for him; and 'he was found of them that sought him not,' for when they were pursuing their sinful projects, and devoted to their idols, without knowing or thinking anything of him, he demanded their attention, called on them to look to him for salvation and happiness, and disposed their hearts to obey the call: and thus he showed towards them the unsearchable riches of his grace. 'The Gentiles, which
ISAIAH.

3 A people that provokes me to anger continually to my face; that sacrificeth in gardens, and burneth incense upon * altars of brick;
4 Which * remain among the graves, and lodge in the monuments, * which eat swine's flesh, * and * broth of abominable things are in their vessels;
5 Which say, Stand by thyself, come not near to me, for I am holier than thou.
6 Behold, it is written before me: I will not keep silence, but will recompense, even recompense into their bosom,
7 Your * iniquities, and the iniquities of your fathers together, saith the Lord, * which have * burned incense upon the mountains, and * blasphemed me upon the hills: * therefore will I measure their former work into their bosom.
8 ¶ Thus saith the Lord, As the new wine is found in the cluster, and one saith, Destroy it not, for a blessing is in it: so will I do for my servants' sakes, that I may not destroy them.
9 And * I will bring forth a seed out of Jacob, and out of Judah an inheritor of my mountains: and mine elect shall inherit it, and my servants shall dwell there.
10 And * Sharon shall be a fold of flocks, and * the valley of Achor a place for the herds to lie down in, for my people that have sought me.
people on earth and in heaven. Of these Canaan was a type; and these privileges may be denoted by Sharon and Achor, two distant parts of the land, feeding flocks and herds for their use; when they returned to seek the Lord.

—It seems evident that the Jews, when converted, will be restored to their own land, and enjoy its productions as in ancient days. There was indeed a remnant, as "cording to the election of grace," reserved when the nation was rejected: but the events above mentioned seem more immediately predicted. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 11, 12. The Lord here addresses the idolatrous Jews, who willingly forgot mount Zion, to offer sacrifices to a whole troop, a vast number of worthless idols; furnishing out a fable and feasting together in honour of them. Or the words God and Meni, translated troop and number, may be names of some idols. "The holy Scriptures did not design to explain more clearly what these objects of idolatrous worship were; but chose rather that the memory of the knowledge of them should be utterly abolished; and God praised, that they are "utterly abolished, that we are quite at a loss to know what, and what sort of things they were." (Schimidius in Bp. Lowth.) What perverse pains then do many learned men bestowed to bring them again to light; and to explain that which we should be thankful is almost wholly forgotten! But these abominations are so consigned to oblivion, that the meaning of the sacred writers cannot be ascertained. Though the Jews, in the days of Christ and in succeeding ages, did not commit such idolatries; yet they manifested the same spirit of rebellion, perversness, and enmity to God. He therefore adds, that he would number them to the sword, as criminals ordered for execution, and like them she should bow down to be slaughtered: because when Christ and his apostles called them, they would not answer nor be obedient, but continued in those things, in which he could not delight; that is, such as he utterly abhorred.

V. 13-15. When the Romans were about to besiege Jerusalem, the Christians, perceiving the signals of approaching desolations, and obeying the directions of their Lord, left the devoted city and land; but the bulk of the nation, perfidiously defending themselves, endured the extremest miseries. Thus the Christians were well provided for in all respects, and rendered abundantly joyful in the Lord, while the Jews were perishing with hunger and thirst, and howling with anguish and despair. Nay, so great were their obstinacy and their misery, that the chosen servants of God could think of no more dreadful curse, to depurate from themselves and their friends, than the judicial blindness and hardness of heart, the wickedness and punishment of a Jew. In a short time millions were slain, by one dire massacre after another; the nation was cut off from being the people of God; and Jews no longer was the distinguishing appellation of Jehovah's worshippers, but he hath called his servants by another name, even by that of Christians.

V. 16. The introduction of the Christian dispensation and the rejection of the Jews, made way for the propagation of true religion among the nations, which could not so well be done, whilst the Jews continued the peculiar people of God, and the worship of the temple was maintained. So that the events, before predicted, came to pass, in order that men in every part of the earth might bless themselves in the name of the God of truth, or seek happiness from him; and that they might swear by his name as his worshippers, and not by that of any idol: and the truth of the Scriptures being clearly demonstrated, by the accomplishment of these prophecies, would both conduco to the conviction of the nations, lead them to regard Jehovah as a God of truth, worthy to be feared and trusted, and excite them to imitate his truth in their professions and engagements. This may have some reference to the success of the Gospel amongst the nations, in the days of the apostles and in the subsequent ages: but it more immediately relates to the time, when the troubles of the Church shall be passed, and as it were forgotten; and when God will forgive, and no more look upon the sins which occasioned them; when the Jews shall again be called into the Church, and the fullness of the Gentiles be converted. 'The Hebrew reads 'AMEN; so the expression' ('the God of truth'), 'may properly be understood of Christ, who is 'the true God.' (1 John v. 20) and called AMEN, or the Truth, 2 N
17 For, behold, I create new heavens and a new earth: and the former shall not be remembered, nor come into mind.

18 But ye shall rejoice evermore in that which I create: for, behold, I create Jerusalem a rejoicing, and her people a joy.

19 And I will rejoice in Jerusalem, and joy in my people: and the voice of weeping shall be no more heard in her, nor the voice of crying.

20 There shall be no more infant of days nor an old man that hath not filled his days: for the child shall die an hundred years old; and the sinner, being an hundred years old, shall be accursed.

21 And they shall build houses, and inhabit them; and they shall plant vineyards, and eat the fruit of them.

22 They shall not build, and another inhabit; they shall not plant, and another eat; for as the days of a tree are the days of my people, and mine elect shall long enjoy the work of their hands.

23 They shall not labour in vain, nor bring forth for trouble; for they are the seed of the blessed of the Lord, and their offspring with them.

24 And it shall come to pass, that before they call, I will answer; and while they are yet speaking, I will hear.

25 The wolf and the lamb shall feed together, and the lion shall eat straw like the bullock: and dust shall be the serpent's meat. They shall not hurt nor destroy in all my holy mountain, saith the Lord.
CHAPTER LXVI.

God regards a broken heart more than the temple itself; and abhors hypocritical and unbelieving sacrifices, 1—4. The confusion and ruin of the persecutors.

1. "May fill the earth as the waters cover the sea," and ages pass on before our prayers are answered; their desires in this respect shall be granted before they speak; for then "the name of God will be hallowed, his kingdom come; and his will done on earth," in great measure, "as it is in heaven." The malignant dispositions of sinners of every description will then be most completely mortified, and they will all become harmless, amiable, and harmonious. The old serpent shall then be deprived of his prey, and have the ancient sentence fully executed upon him. (Notes, Gen. iii. 14, 15. Rev. xx. 1—3.) And thus the Church on earth shall be full of peace and happiness, like heaven. (xi. 6—9.) None can doubt, but this yet remains to be accomplished.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—10.

The Lord may say of all who are numbered among his people on earth or in heaven, that "He was found of them, who sought him not." When we were strangers and enemies, foolish and disobedient, serving divers lusts and pleasures, he prevented us by the call of his word, and the influences of his grace; and whenever, or in what manner soever, we were disposed to seek the Lord; he first suggested the thought and created the disposition, and having thus led us to seek and pray unto him, he further made himself and his ways known unto us. Often he meets with some thoughtless prodigal, or prejudiced opposer, and as it were, says to him, 'Behold me, here I am, come to me; look unto me, and be saved; and a speedy change takes place; Saul is found amongst the Christians and apostles, and a spiritual worshipper appears in the Church of God: whilst others, brought up under the Gospel, to whom the Lord daily stretches forth his hands, proffering salvation to them, grow more and more rebellious, and follow their own perverse inclinations and evil courses, in defiance of him. Too often, likewise, he has cause to say of his professed worshippers, that they are "a people who provoke him continually to his face:" and that they manifest the same ungrateful spirit, and rebellious alienation from him, and the same perverse disposition to prefer their own inventions to his ordinances, truths, and precepts, as the Jewish nation did. Where the power of godliness is decayed, men grow proud of the worthless form; and the most offensive hypocrites are most prone to look upon the ignorant, the erroneous, the careless, the immoral, or profane, with disdain and loathing; say, they contempt the humble and penitent, and say of those, in whom God delighteth, "Stand by thyself, I am holier than thou." When knowledge, gifts, reputation, or religious performances foster this hateful propensity, they become most injurious to the possessor: and, however he may admire himself, or be admired by others, he is as odious and displeasing unto God, as a smoke in the nose; and nothing more kindles, or feeds the fire of his indignation, than such a disposition and conduct. Let us then watch and pray against them; remembering that every sin and the most secret thoughts of men's hearts are written before God, and will assuredly be brought to light, and recompensed upon every impenitent sinner: and when nations or churches have filled up their measure of iniquity, they will be punished with temporal judgments for their own sins, and those of their fathers which they have imitated. Amongst the various reasons which induce the Lord to spare ungodly men, one is, that "a blessing is in them." Some one, or more, or many shall descend from them, to form a part of his chosen flock; and therefore he bears with them from year to year, that he may bring forth a seed out of them to inherit his holy mountain. For all things are for the sake of his chosen people: the kingdom of providence is administered, and the frame of nature is preserved, for the display of the glory of God in his church of redeemed sinners.

V. 11—25.

In every age and nation the Lord consigns to destruction those who forsake his service to follow their own lusts and devices; and especially such as persist in doing evil in contempt of the call of his Gospel. Sometimes he makes an evident discrimination on earth between his servants and his enemies: but this will be uniformly visible hereafter; and whilst his servants will be satisfied with his love, filled with joy, and abundant in his praise; his enemies shall endure the extreme miseries in the regions of despair, where are weeping, wailing, and gnashing of teeth. That the declarations of God's words to this effect will be exactly accomplished, we may be assured by the long continued contempt and miseries of the Jews: for the Lord hath indeed left their name to be a curse unto his chosen, having cut them off, and called his people by another name, as he declared that he would. But when they shall be restored to their privileges, the truth of God will be rendered still more conspicuous; that all the earth may bless themselves in him, render him worship, and swear unto him in truth and righteousness. Then the long continued troubles of the Church shall cease, and her prosperity will commence. But what a change will this be, when the earth shall be filled with spiritual religion, and exact righteousness! It may well be called new heavens and a new earth: for as we can scarcely frame an idea of so glorious a scene; so the inhabitants of the world in that blessed period will not be able to form an idea of the wretched and confused state of the earth, during the prevalence of vice and impiety. We shall not live to share this joy and gladness; but we may mix our lamentations over the scenes we witness, with rejoicings in the prospect of happier times; and, it believers,
THUS saith the Lord, * The heaven is my throne, and the earth is my footstool: where is the house that ye will build unto me! and where is the place of my rest! 3 For all those things hath mine hand made, and all those things have been, saith the Lord: but * to this man will I look, even * to him that is poor and of a contrite spirit, and * trembleth at my word.

3 He that * killeth an ox, is as if he slew a man; he that sacrificeth a * lamb, as if he cut off a dog's neck; he that offereth an oblation, * as if he offered swine's blood; he that burneth incense, * as if he blessed an idol. Yea, * they have chosen their own ways, and their soul delighteth in their abominations.

4 I also will choose their delusions, and * will bring their fears upon them; because * when I called, none did answer; when I spake, they did not hear: but * they did evil before mine eyes, and * chose that in which I delighted not.

we shall in heaven share the joy of them when they actually arrive: our troubles will soon be terminated by death, and our God will rejoice over us to do us good for ever. Even the natural evils of the world would be inconceivably diminished, if all men were true Christians; and their lives would be prolonged, and rendered more comfortable in every respect. Yet if we be prepared for heaven, and have finished our work on earth, we need not complain of dying too young; for all the ends of life will be answered, as much as if we had lived to be a hundred years old. But the sooner must be preferable, whatever he live to be old and to treasure up wrath, or be cut off young and cast into destruction: and all his planting, and building, and labouring must be left to others, whilst he is driven away in his wickedness. On the other hand, the believer may rejoice even in his temporal labours, that somebody will be benefitted by them, when he is removed to a better inheritance: where he shall long enjoy the gracious recompense of all his services, yea, even for ever and ever: and he may also hope that his children will be favoured after him, as the seed of the blessed of the Lord. Though our prayers are not now always answered immediately, yet they will be in due time; and the more instant and fervent we are in this respect, the fuller evidence we shall have, that the Lord regards the desires of our hearts, and sometimes grants them before we can express them in words, or whilst we are yet speaking: so that we are employed in praise when we meant to be pouring out our prayers. But let us especially pray to be changed from wolves and lions, into lambs and doves, and to be made harmless, gentle, and useful: then we may be assured, that "God will bruise "Satan under our feet shortly," and that we shall be admitted to his holy habitation, where none shall hurt, or destroy, but all shall be love and enjoyment for ever and ever.

NOTES.

CHAP. LXVI. V. 1. 2. The Jews, in our Saviour's time, were extremely attached to the temple and its external worship, which was one cause of their opposition to his spiritual kingdom and ordinances. Just before his coming they had, by king Herod's assistance, almost entirely rebuilt the temple with great magnificence, having been for sixty years employed about it. (Mark xiii. 1, 2. John ii. 20.) To this period the prophecy seems especially to relate: and the Lord addresses them as employed in this work, or proud of it, and reminds them, that he had heaven for his throne of glory, and the earth for his footstool, and wanted no house or resting place of their building. The typical intention and temporary use of the temple were nearly accomplished; the labour and confidence of the Jews were vain: and the whole of that dispensation waxed old, and was ready to vanish away. The heavens and the earth, which he made, had long continued, and would still remain; but the temple and its worship had been, and would soon be no more: for henceforth his temple on earth, to which he would have peculiar regard, would be the heart of the poor contrite penitent, who revered, and obeyed and trembled at his word; whereas they who adhered to the temple, were proud blind Pharisees and hypocrites, or others, who despised both his authority and his Gospel. (Marg. Ref.)
CHAPTER LXVI.

B. C. 706.

5 Hear the word of the Lord, ye that tremble at his word: Your brethren that hated you, that cast you out for my name's sake, said, Let the Lord be glorified: but he shall appear to your joy, and they shall be ashamed.

6 A voice of noise from the city, a voice from the temple, a voice of the Lord that rendereth recompense to his enemies.

7 Before she travailed, she brought forth; before her pain came, she was delivered of a man-child.

8 Who hath heard such a thing? Who hath seen such things? Shall the earth be made to bring forth in one day? Shall a nation be born at once? for as soon as Zion travailed she brought forth her children.

9 Shall I bring to the birth, and not cause to bring forth? saith the Lord: shall I cause to bring forth, and shut the womb? saith thy God.

10 Rejoice ye with Jerusalem, and be glad with her, all ye that love her; rejoice for joy with her, all ye that mourn for her:

11 That ye may suck, and be satisfied with the breasts of her consolations; that ye may milk out, and be delighted with the abundance of her glory.

12 For thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will extend peace to her like a river; and the glory of the Gentiles like a flowing stream: then shall ye suck, ye shall be borne upon her sides, and be dandled upon her knees.

13 As one whom his mother comforteth, so will I comfort you; and ye shall be comforted in Jerusalem.

14 And when ye see this, your heart shall rejoice, and your bones shall flourish like an herb: and the hand of the Lord shall be known toward his servants, and his indignation toward his enemies.

of the Romans; he would bring their fears upon them, and the Romans should execute his vengeance on them in consequence of their unbelief and disobedience. (Note, Lxiv. 11, 12.)

V. 5, 6. The Jewish converts to Christianity seem to be here addressed. They trembled at God's word, and reverenced his authority: but, by embracing the Gospel, they were exposed to the extreme hatred of their countrymen, who communicated and persecuted them for the Lord's sake, and out of a pretended or a mistaken furious zeal for his glory; but he assured them that he would appear to their joy, and for the confusion of their persecutors, which was awfully accomplished in the siege and destruction of Jerusalem. (Marg. Ref.) The Jews indeed trusted in the external sanctity of the city and temple; yet within their walls, and even in the courts of the temple, would the Lord execute vengeance on them, as his enemies; and their outrages and lamentations would declare that he was rendering a recompense unto them, even for the abuse of those institutions on which they ignorantly and presumptuously depended for safety. 'The prophet seems to hear the noise of the ruin of the city and temple sounding in his ears.' 'The voice from the temple was verified in that voice, which Josephus tells us was heard in the temple, a little before the final destruction of it, saying, Let us depart hence.' (Loud.)

V. 7, 9. When the temple should be destroyed, and the ancient people of God cast off, it might be apprehended that he would no longer have a church, or at least that the number of his worshippers would be very small. In answer to this rising thought of his people, he here assures them, that the Church should at that time be vastly increased, by the accession of the converted Gentiles to the remnant of believing Jews. The ancient Church and nation of Israel were not produced in less than four hundred and thirty years from the calling of Abraham; but the holy nation now to be subject to his government should be rapidly formed. Zion, represented as a pregnant woman, would be delivered of a son, even before her travelling pains came upon her: nay, her children would increase so rapidly, that a nation would seem to be born at once: and they would so speedily arrive at maturity, that it would be as if the earth produced and ripened the harvest in one day. These events would indeed be unprecedented; but they would certainly take place: the almighty God would bring the affairs of his Church to such a crisis, that this deliverance and increase must be afforded her, or she must perish; and could any think that he who espoused Zion, and was the Father of all her children, would fail of giving her effectual assistance in this extremity?

V. 10—14. The Lord here calls on all, who love his Church and sympathize with her in her sorrows, to rejoice at the approach of her great prosperity. The consolations that would be prepared for all her children, in the promises and ordinances of the Gospel, must be applied for by earnest faith and prayer, as the infant desires the nutrimental milk, and draws it out from the mother's breast. Thus believers would be satisfied and sanctified by her spiritual provisions, as well as enriched and delighted by the abundance, or the splendour, of her glory. For in due time the Lord would bestow on her peace and prosperity in large measure, and with durable increase; and the most honourable and renowned of the nations would continue to flow in to her, like the perpetual stream of some large river. Nor would this be any diminution to the privileges of Zion's former children, but an increase of them; as they would be nourished and attended to with still greater care and tenderness; being peculiarly loved and cherished by the Gentile converts. Nay, the Lord himself would comfort them, 15 ¶ For, behold, a the Lord will come with fire, and a with his chariots like a whirlwind, to render his anger with fury, and his rebuke with flames of fire.

16 For by fire, and a by his sword will the Lord plead with all flesh: and the slain of the Lord shall be many.

17 They that sanctify themselves, and purify themselves in the gardens, a behind one tree in the midst, a eating swine's flesh, and the abomination, and the mouse, shall be consumed together, saith the Lord.

18 For a I know their works, and their thoughts: it shall come, that I will gather all nations and tongues; and they shall come, and see my glory.

19 And a I will set a sign among them, and they will send those that escape of them unto the nations, to a Tarshish, Pul, and Lud, that draw the bow, to a Tubal, and Javan, to a the isles afar off, that have not heard my name, neither have seen my glory; and they shall declare my glory among the Gentiles.

not only with the prudent affection of a father, but with tender blandishments and compassions resembling those of a fond mother. The prosperity of the Church would add to their consolations, and cause their souls to thrive more abundantly; whilst the power of God would thus be manifested in favour of his servants, and his indignation in the punishment of his adversaries. The sacred writer gradually, and almost insensibly, passes from the primitive times to those more glorious events, which he so frequently recours to. (Marg. Ref.)

20 And they shall a bring all your brethren for an offering unto the Lord, out of all nations, upon horses, and in chariots, and in open chariots, and upon swift beasts, to a my holy mountain Jerusalem, saith the Lord, as the children of Israel bring an offering in a clean vessel into the house of the Lord.

21 And a I will also take of them for priests, and for Levites, saith the Lord.

22 For as a the new heavens, and the new earth, which I will make, shall remain before me, saith the Lord, so shall your seed and your name remain.

23 And it shall come to pass, a that from one new moon to another, and from one sabbath to another, a shall all flesh come to worship before me, saith the Lord.

24 And they shall go forth, a and look upon the carcases of the men that have transgressed against me; for their wound shall not be healed, neither shall their fire be quenched; and they shall be an abhorring unto all flesh.

V. 19—23. When the standard of the Gospel was set up, the Jews who had been converted to Christ, and so escaped the general ruin of the nation, were sent to preach to the Gentiles; and in like manner, it is probable, that God will select some who have been rescued from the corruptions of the Antichristian church, to preach to the nations, far and near, where his fame and glory have never yet been heard and seen; even to isles as remote from us as our island was to the inhabitants of the East in the days of Isaiah. The persons thus converted are immediately considered as brethren; and they would be brought by every method of conveyance then in use, to Jerusalem, as a sacred obligation to the Lord. This signifies the abundance of instruments and means afforded for the conversion of sinners, and their admission into the Church; and for their encouragement, edification, and devotedness to God, until they are brought to heaven.

Ministers were soon raised up from among the Gentiles in the apostles' days, who ministered before God in holy things, (as the priests and Levites used to do,) according to the nature of their dispensation: and ministers will doubtless be hereafter raised up among the inhabitants of those nations, which are now sunk in the deepest ignorance and barbarity. For as God intended his new creation to endure before him for ever; so should the seed and name of the Church under the Christian dispensation. They have their solemnities, sabbaths, sacrifices, and ordinances, in which they would meet before the Lord; and all flesh, or all nations, would thus come to worship before him.— Whereas before there were appointed seasons to sacrifice; in this there shall be one continued sabbath.
V. 24. The inhabitants of the holy city are here represented as going out, to look upon the dead bodies of those whom the Lord had slain for opposing his cause; which are represented as being either eaten by worms, or burnt in the fire. But their worm would never die, nor their fire be quenched: for whatever external events may be alluded to or predicted, the worm and the fire represent the place and nature of the punishment of sinners in another world. The fire which is kindled by the wrath of God, shall not be quenched or cease to torment for ever: the worm of keen self-reflection, and the anguish of an accusing conscience, will endure for ever: because the existence and consciousness of the condemned will be everlasting. (Notes, Mark ix. 33—50.) Some interpret the carcasses cast out of Jerusalem, to signify the ungodly who are excluded from the Church, and remain under the wrath of God, and the power of their own vile lusts; and being thus abhorred on earth, will be miserable and abominable for ever in hell. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS. V. 1—14.

No externals, however splendid or costly, can please God, without a humble and upright heart. He wants not, and is not profited by any of our services: and when we become proud of them or trust in them, he abhors our attendance even on his own appointments. As he dwelleth in Christ, our Temple; so, for his sake, he hath respect to every one that is poor and of a contrite spirit, and trembleth at his word: for such persons value his salvation, and learn to love him and keep his commandments. But whatever men substitute in the place of the priesthood, atonement, and intercession of Christ, will be found most hateful to God: and he will more resent this affront to his wisdom, grace, and truth, than any profaneness or immorality whatsoever. Yet, alas, how many in this most important concern, choose their own ways, and are delighted with their own abominations! but we should be afraid of every deviation from scriptural truth, lest God should give us over to our own delusions. They who so fear the reproach, or opposition of men, as to refuse the call and reject the salvation of God, will have their fears brought upon them in everlasting shame and contempt. Seeing that many have thought they did God service, when they were hating and casting out his children, we should take care that our confidence and conscientiousness be scriptural. It will not avail a man to have said “Let God be glorified,” when in proud self-confidence and obstinate rage, he persecuted his people, and refused to ask counsel of his word and Spirit. But they who tremble at the word of God, need not be alarmed even at the hatred of their professed brethren, or staggered by their great swelling words of vanity; “as if they alone were the only true Church, and all who differed from them were heretics and schismatics. Such boasts and censures are alike unwarranted; God will appear to the joy of the humble believer, and to the confusion of hypocrites and persecutors; their destruction will come upon them in those very places, from those very persons, or by those very means, in which they presumptuously confided for safety; and they shall be accounted the enemies of God with a peculiar emphasis. When the Lord lessens the numbers of his visible Church by cutting off false professors, we need not fear but he will supply their places by more valuable persons. He can add converts in multitudes, as though a nation were born in a day. In the general course of Providence, we must expect to labour, wait, and pray for a considerable time, before we see the success of our work: and ministers must even travail in birth, by their anxious desires and fervent wrestlings, before children are brought forth unto God. They must also wait, as the husbandman, for the precious fruits of the earth; and at last be thankful even for a few seats to their ministry. But when the Lord is pleased to interpose in an extraordinary manner, the work will be done easily, speedily, and beyond expectation. The success, that would richly have repayed the labours of many years, shall crown one sermon; and believers shall grow as rapidly in grace, as converts are made to the Lord. Thus in the days of the apostles, “As soon as Zion travailed she brought forth her children, and a nation seemed to be born in a day.” And the Lord is able so to influence the hearts of men, that whole kingdoms shall at once, without labour or difficulty, welcome, profess, and adorn the Gospel. The time of this deliverance of Zion approacheth; and he that bringeth to the birth, will give strength to bring forth. Let us then say, in admiring faith, “Who hath heard, or seen such things?” And not fail to show our sympathy with the Church in her sorrows, by pleading continually for her joyful deliverance. Then shall we assuredly rejoice in her joy, and partake of her consolations. And even now, if we diligently attend on the ordinances of God, and desire and seek for “the sincere milk of the word, that we may grow thereby,” we shall “suck, and be satisfied with the breasts of her consolations; especially if we carefully avoid whatever may prevent our furtherance and joy of faith. Let us then renounce the vain pleasures of the world and of sin, that we may experience these pure and satisfying joys; and we shall soon be delighted with all the splendour and glory of the Church triumphant. In other possessions, as the number of proprietors increase, the value to each is diminished; but the privileges and felicity of all Christians is enhanced, by every accession of converts to Christ. There is also an abundant provision made for the tending and nourishing up of the weakest of Zion’s children, who shall suck the breasts of her consolations, be carried on her sides, or dandled on her knees: yea, the Lord himself will comfort them through all their tribulations, in such tender love as no human affection can possibly equal. But nothing tends more to the true Christian’s comfort, than the peace and prosperity of the Church. When the honourable of the earth resort to her, believers, as her dutiful sons, rejoice heartily, and flourish like herbs in well watered gardens.

V. 15—24.

Whenever the Lord powerfully appears for his Church; he displays his indignation against his adversaries. Thus the increase of believers in the primitive times was attended by tremendous judgments on the Jews: thus the future success of the Gospel will be introduced by similar judgments on all opposers: and thus the final salvation of the righteous will be connected with vengeance on all the workers of iniquity. Then by the fire and sword of his indignation he will plead with all flesh, and the slain of the Lord shall be many: sinners of every description shall be consumed together; for he knoweth their works and their thoughts; and he will gather all nations and tongues to see his glory. In the mean time, he hath set his Gospel as a sign unto us; and even in these distant isles he sends us his message of love by those whom “Jesus hath delivered from the wrath to come.” We have heard his name and the report of his salvation: may he open our eyes to see his glory, that we may forward the promulgation of his Gospel, and the declaration of that glory to the nations, that have never yet seen or heard of it. May the Lord send forth multitudes of able faithful ministers into all lands, who by every means and in every way, may gather in his elect from the four quarters of the globe; that all its inhabitants may become members of his Church on earth, and inherit his holy mountain, to the praise of the glory of his grace: that even from among the benighted Indians and Africans, priests and Levites may be raised up to minister before him; and thus to diffuse his salvation further and wider, till the earth be filled with the knowledge of his glory, as the waters cover the sea. The Lord will surely maintain and prosper his cause. The heavens and earth that now exist, are indeed reserved unto fire, to the day of judgment and perdition of ungodly men: but his new heaven and earth shall endure for ever; and so shall the name and seed of his believing people. Let us then hearken to his voice, attend on his ordinances, hallow his sabbaths, and keep his word. For all his enemies, whether they experience or escape his temporal judgments, shall perish: and we shall see all the ungodly go away into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels. “Then shall ye return, and discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that serveth God and him that serveth him not.”—If then “thy right hand, foot, or eye offend thee, cut it off, or pluck it out; for it is better to enter into life with one eye, or hand, or foot; than having two, to be cast into hell fire, where their worm dieth not, and the fire is not quenched;” and “they shall be abhorring to all flesh.”
THE BOOK OF THE PROPHET JEREMIAH.

Jeremiah (whose name signifies "the exaltation of the Lord," entered upon the prophetic office about seventy years after the death of Isaiah; during which time the reigns of Manasseh and Amon had intervened, and the former years of Josiah. The nation of the Jews was therefore at that time almost wholly given up to idolatry and wickedness. A short revival indeed soon took place: but the people were in general dissemblers, speedily relapsed into idolatry, and became ripe for divine judgments. Jeremiah prophesied for forty years preceding the Babylonish captivity; and this book consists chiefly of abstracts of the several messages with which he was sent from God to the people: these are remarkable for being replete with plain and faithful reproofs, tender and affectionate expostulations, and awful denunciations of impending judgments. They are occasionally interspersed with narratives of the usage that the prophet met with, and with historical records of national affairs. No exact order is observed in the arrangement of the different prophecies; and the labours of learned men, in classing them, according to the time when delivered, are not satisfactory: but many of them are dated. Jeremiah was a man of a very tender spirit, and he endured many sorrows; but he seems to have been most affected by the miseries of his people, which he both predicted and witnessed. Having seen the utter desolation of Jerusalem and Judah, he was carried into Egypt by the remnant of the Jews, who rebelliously fled thither; and there he continued to prophesy, till they were at length so enraged by his reproofs, that they stoned him to death, as it is credibly attested by several ancient writers. A large proportion of Jeremiah's predictions were accomplished during his life-time, or soon after his death. Such were all those that related to the desolations of Jerusalem and Judah, and the adjacent countries, by the Chaldeans; and the return of the Jews from Babylon at the end of seventy years. These, in the way of argument and evidence, were most conclusive to his contemporaries and the immediately succeeding generations: especially as the want of historical records renders us unable, in many cases, to explain the prophecies, except from the sacred narrative. But several of this prophet's predictions relate to more remote ages, and some have not yet been fulfilled. When proud Babylon was at the height of her prosperity, he foretold, not only that the Medes and Persians should prevail against her, but also that she should sink and rise no more, (li. 63, 64.) which has received a most remarkable accomplishment. He predicted also the abolition of the ritual law, and the union of Israel and Judah in one faith, and the conversion of all nations; (Notes, iii. 15, &c. xxxi. 31, &c.) the dispersion of the Jews, and their preservation as a distinct people in their dispersions, which has been fulfilled to this day; (Notes, xxx. 11. xlii. 23.) the calling of the Gentiles; (iv. 3.) the destruction of idolatry; (Note, x. 11.) and the person and kingdom of Christ, with the introduction of a new dispensation, and vast prosperity to the cause of religion; with clear declarations concerning the conversion of the Jews to Christ, and their restoration to their own land. (Notes, xxiii. xxxiii.) The comment will show, that this statement is well founded: yet nothing could appear more improbable, when Jeremiah wrote, than many of the events which he predicted; and it is undeniable that his prophecies have been most wonderfully accomplished. It appears that his reputation as a prophet was very high among the Jews, in the time of our Saviour; for when the people were divided in opinion who Jesus was, some supposed him to be Elijah, and others Jeremiah. His prophecies are repeatedly quoted in the New Testament, as the oracles of God; and thus receive the most unhesitating sanction of the apostles and evangelists. (Compare xxxi. 15. Matt. ii. 17, 18.—vi. 16. Matt. xi. 29.—ix. 23, 24, Vol. III.—No. 19.)
JEREMIAH.

I Cor. i. 29—31.—xxxvi. 31—34. Heb. viii. 8—12. x. 15—17.) The last references are peculiarly important; for in one of them, God himself is mentioned as speaking the words referred to; and in the other it is said, "whereof the Holy Ghost is a witness to us," &c. This is decisive, as to the judgment of the inspired apostles, respecting the book on which we now enter; and it is peculiarly suited to put us upon our guard against those professed friends of the scripture, who speak of these books, as venerable, authentic, or genuine remains of antiquity, of great value and high authority; but hesitate to vindicate them as divinely inspired. A great part of this book is supposed to be poetry; and though Jeremiah is thought inferior to Isaiah in sublimity; (which may perhaps be owing to the different circumstances in which they lived, and the different subjects on which they treated;) yet must be allowed, that he is admirably pathetical, his descriptions of approaching judgments are peculiarly vivid; and his eloquence is very vigorous and impressive, when inveighing against the shameless audacity of the people in rebellion against God. It is generally allowed that the last chapter was added after Jeremiah's death: perhaps by Ezra, who probably arranged his prophecies in their present order.

B. C. 629.

CHAP. I.

Some account of Jeremiah, and the times during which he prophesied, 1—3. His calling and commission, 4—10. His visions of an almond tree and a seething pot, explained to him, 11—16. He is encouraged by promises of protection and assistance, 17—19.

THE words of Jeremiah the son of Hilkiiah, of the priests that were in Anathoth in the land of Benjamin. 2 To whom the word of the Lord came, in the days of Josiah the son of Amon king of Judah, in the thirteenth year of his reign.

3 It came also in the days of Jehoa- kim the son of Josiah king of Judah, unto the end of the eleventh year of Zedekiah the son of Josiah king of Judah, unto the carrying away of Jerusalem captive in the fifth month.

4 ¶ Then the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

5 Before I formed thee in the belly I knew thee; and before thou camest forth out of the womb I sanctified thee, and I ordained thee a prophet unto the nations.

NOTES.

CHAP. I. V. 1—2. Jeremiah, being of the family of Aaron, would have been an ordinary teacher of the people, if he had not been called to this extraordinary office; and be united in himself the priestly and prophetic character, in which, as in many other respects, he was a type of Christ. Some think he was the son of Hilkiah the high priest, who found the book of the law in the temple, (2 Kings xxii. 8:) but as no intimation is given of this in the subsequent history, the opinion is not very probable. Anathoth was about three miles distant from Jerusalem. Jeremiah was appointed to prophecy just after Josiah had effectually begun his reformation; and great things might have been expected from the united efforts of such a king and such a prophet, both young, and likely to continue long to be useful to their nation: yet their zealous labours aggravated the guilt, and thus accelerated the ruin, of their incorrigible fellow-citizens. Jeremiah prophesied forty years before the expulsion of the Jews from the promised land, as Moses had prophesied forty years previous to their entrance into it; but with a very different effect.

V. 4. 'This seems to have been a visible appearance of the divine majesty,—by the Son of God,—the second Person in the blessed Trinity.' (Lowth.) (Note, 9, 10.)

V. 5. (Marg. Ref.) 'The Lord foreknew Jeremiah, before he was formed in the womb; and gave him his being, on purpose to make him a prophet to the Jews and other nations: he separated him, in his intention for this work before his birth, and perhaps made him partaker of the regeneration of the Holy Spirit, even in his mother's womb. And he let him know this his appointment, that he might prepare for the work assigned him, and apply himself to it. This favour is expressed by knowing him, or taking special notice of him: as if a prince should single one particular person out of a multitude, and call him by name, and appoint him to some honourable office or trust. So God expresses the peculiar favour he had to Moses, by saying, "I know thee by name."' (Lowth.) 'Jeremiah did not only prophecy concerning the Jews, but also the Egyptians, Babylonians, Moabites, and other nations.' (xxvi. xlvi—li.)
CHAPTER I.

V. 6--8. The prophet would have declined, at least for the present, the service to which he was called. He was so young and inexperienced, that he did not think himself competent to so arduous and important an office; and he thought himself defective in the capacity of speaking with fluency and pertinency, or with that boldness and presence of mind which were requisite. (Marg. Ref.) This objection, though it arose from humility and a proper sense of the greatness of the work, was alloyed with a mixture of unbelief, and a timid reluctance to the perils and hardships, to which he might be exposed. The Lord therefore over-ruled his objection, and ordered him not to say that he was a child; for he would embolden and strengthen him to address all to whom he sent him, and give him utterance to deliver all that he commanded him; he ought therefore to dismis his fears, and rest assured that the Lord would be with him to defend and deliver him. (Matt. xxviii. 20.)—The eighth verse is future, as well as the others, and may more literally be rendered, "Thou shalt not fear their faces," &c. as a promise and not as a command.—The word translated child, is used with great latitude in Scripture; and frequently signifies one who has arrived at full maturity; so that we cannot from it determine any thing concerning the age of Jeremiah, when he entered on his prophetical office. —To reprove the faults of all persons, the great men of the world, as well as those of lower degree, with that plainness and impartiality which the prophets used, requires a more than ordinary degree of courage. (Lowth.)

V. 9, 10. This seems to have been an appearance of the personal Word of the Lord, in human form, anticipating his incarnation. (Note, 4.) He therefore put forth his hand, and by touching Jeremiah's mouth, signified that he would "give him a mouth and wisdom, which all his adversaries should not be able to gainsay or resist." (Luke xxi. 15.) Thus he gave him commission and authority over the nations, not to rule or make war against them, but to denounce the judgments of God upon them; and these would be so certainly executed, according to his word, that he might be said to root them out and throw them down, &c. He was also to declare the Lord's mercies and salvation to his people, which would be effectual to build and to plant. It may also mean, that the tendency of the prophet's ministry would be to repress the idolatry and wickedness of the nations, and to promote the knowledge of God and true religion among them ; and the desolations to be wrought in some nations, which had most obstinately opposed the cause of God, would make way for the planting and building of others in their places, that would be more favourable to it. (Marg. Ref.) The prophets are said to do things, when they declare God's purpose of doing them. Thus Ezekiel was sent to destroy the city; that is, to prophesy concerning its destruction. And Isaiah is commanded to "make the heart of the Jews fat," that is, to foretell their obduracy and incredulity. (Lowth.) It may, however, also be added, that God foresaw that the Jews and others would aggravate their past guilt, and even bring down on themselves both spiritual and temporal judgments, by hardening their hearts against the warnings and exhortations of his prophets. And thus the very message which, if properly received, would have been the means of their preservation, tended to hasten and enhance their punishments.

V. 11, 12. "Not only the nature of the almond tree, but the very sound" (or meaning) of the Hebrew word, denotes God's hastening to fulfill the prophecies which Jeremiah uttered." (Lowth.) This vision of a rod of the almond-tree, which is more forward in the spring than any other tree, represented the speedy approach of the judgments predicted against the Jews and other nations; and it was an apt emblem of the prophet's mission, who lived to witness the accomplishment of more of his own predictions, than any other prophet did.

V. 13, 14. By another emblem the Lord showed Jeremiah what was to be the grand subject of his ministry, namely, the destruction of his people by the king of Babylon, whose dominions lay north of Judea. Jerusalem was represented to him, by a pot, or caldron, boiling over the 15 For, lo, I will call all the families of the kingdoms of the north, saith the Lord; and they shall come, and they shall set every one his throne at the entering of the gates of Jerusalem, and against all the walls thereof around about, and against all the cities of Judah.

16 And I will utter my judgments against them, touching all their wickedness, * who have forsaken me, * and have burned incense unto other gods, and worshipped the works of their own hands.

17 Thou therefore gird up thy loins, and arise, * and speak unto them all that they may hear: I command thee; be not dismayed at their faces, lest I confound thee before them.

18 For, behold, I have made thee this day a defended city, and an iron pillar, and brazen walls against the whole land, * against the kings of Judah, against the princes thereof, against the priests thereof, and against the people of the land.

19 And they shall fight against thee; but they shall not prevail against thee; for I am with thee, saith the Lord, to deliver thee.

a large fire: for the city was all in commotion, and about to be emptied by that fear and terror which had overcome them. The face of this seething pot was towards the north: the place under the caldron, which was opened to receive the fuel, by which the fire was kept up, faced the north, by which the Lord instructed the prophet that out of the north an evil should break forth upon all the inhabitants of the land. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 15. Not only would the king of Babylon invade Judea and encamp against Jerusalem; but with him all those kings and nations, who were his allies or vassals, and who chiefly inhabited countries still more to the north than Chaldea.

V. 16. Jeremiah would especially be employed, solemnly denouncing that sentence against the Jews for their idolatries, which the northern nations would speedily execute.

V. 17—19. God commands the prophet instantly to undertake the office he designed him for, and to discharge it with courage and presence of mind. (Marg. Ref.)

The Hebrew word is the same in both parts of the sentence— Be not thou confounded at their faces, lest I confound thee before them. * They shall not more be able to prevail against thee, than they could against an impregnable wall or fortress. (Lown.) The Lord thus called on his servant to expect the most violent opposition from all the great persons in the land; that he might understand the nature of the service, and be prepared accordingly: but such express promises of protection, support, and deliverance were added, as were fully sufficient for his encouragement. He seems, however, afterwards on some occasions, to have greatly lost sight both of the warnings and the promises. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—10.

The Lord raises up and qualifies proper instruments for his work, in every age and circumstance of his Church: and when their labours fail to reform degenerate nations, they prove useful to some individuals, and leave others without excuse. He, who hath formed us in the womb knew before-hand for what services or purposes he intended us: and he will qualify us for all that he hath for us to do or suffer, in this world, and carry us through it. But except he sanctify us by his new-creating Spirit, we shall neither be fit for his holy service on earth, nor his holy happiness in heaven. This is a most invaluable mercy, whenever it is vouchsafed: but the earlier in life, the happier for us and for others: and as the Lord sometimes sanctifies even infants, parents may be encouraged to pray for this blessing on their offspring, even from their conception in the womb. He who gives grace, can alone efficaciously ordain men to be his ministers. In general, young persons are not so proper for the discharge of this sacred office, in important stations and difficult times, as their seniors: and a modest diffidence arising from conscious unworthiness and inability, is a more favourable token, than self-confidence and a hasty eagerness to be employed. Yet the Lord may please to call one who is a child in years and experience, and apparently of inferior endowments: in this case he will surely make it evident that it is his call; he will overrule all objections and remove all impediments; he will encourage his servant against self-diffidence and fear of man, and bear him out in all to which he commis- sions him; he will give him a mouth and wisdom, which all his adversaries shall not be able to gainsay or resist; and will be with him in every work, in which he engages according to the instruction given him. Whatever the wise men and politicians of the world may profess, the safety of kingdoms is decided according to the purpose and word of God; and greatly depends on the reception that is given to his faithful ministers. When their labours are unsuccessful, and their prayers return into their own bosom; and when they are persecuted, injured, and driven away, nations ripen asleep for judgments to root up and destroy them. But when they are protected and prospered, when their prayers are answered, and the number of true believers is greatly increased, there will be more and more, by their prayers, examples, and exhortations, to check the progress of impiety and iniquity: and the churches are useful to build, and to plant, and to promote or to prolong, the external prosperity of the community as well as the salvation of souls.

V. 11—19.

If we would speak properly in the name of God to
CHAPTER II.

God reminds the Jews of his former kindness, and expostulates with them on their ungrateful, unreasonable, and unprecedented apostasies and idolatries, 1—13. Their calamities originate from their crimes, 14—19. Their conduct is a breach of solemn engagements; degeneracy from their pious ancestors; undeniable, and inexusable; the effect of impetuous lusts, and desperately persisted in, 20—30. It is connected with folly and wearying labour; murder and persecution; useless self-justification; and continual changes from one false confidence to another, 31—37.

Moreover, the word of the Lord came to me, saying, others, we must observe attentively his word and works, and study his providence as well as his precepts; this will bring us acquainted with "the signs of the times," and direct our labours and prayers: and though our services are all imperfect and defiled; yet God will graciously show his approbation of all that we do well, according to our measure: and we should thus candidly accept of the well-meant services of each other. The destruction of the wicked, and the salvation of the righteous, are ripening space; in both respects the Lord will hasten his word to perform it. This ministers must boldly declare, according to all that God commands them: they should therefore gird up their loins, and without delay address themselves to their work: they should expect enmity and opposition from many whose sins they reprove and whose doom they denounced: but they need not be dismayed at their stout, frowning, or menacing countenances; and they must not yield to unbelieving fears of man, lest the Lord should put them to shame before their enemies, and employ others to carry their messages. He will protect such, as simply follow and trust in him, against every assault of the wicked, as far as is good for them: he can make the feeblest and most timid, firm and immovable as an iron pillar, and secure as a city defended by brazen walls, though whole nations should combine against them; and we should pray for fortitude and constancy in every temptation, and that they may be connected with prudence, meekness, humility, love, and a willingness to recede from every personal interest or inclination, whilst nothing can move us from our place and duty. If men do not prevail against us to render us unfaithful, negligent, or angry; they cannot greatly hurt us; however they may fight against us. But as there is no respect of persons with God; and kings, princes, and even priests, often need reproof and admonition, as much, or more than others: so they who are called to this perilous service will need and may expect peculiar supports, encouragement and protection; that "as their day is, so their strength may be."

2 Go, and cry in the ears of Jerusalem, saying, Thus saith the Lord; I remember thee, the kindness of thy youth, the love of thine espousals, 5 when thou wentest after me in the wilderness, in a land that was not sown.

3 Israel was holiness unto the Lord, and the first-fruits of his increase: all that devour him shall offend; evil shall come upon them, saith the Lord.

4 Hear ye the word of the Lord, O house of Jacob, and all the families of the house of Israel.

5 Thus saith the Lord, What iniquity have your fathers found in me, that they are gone far from me, and have walked after vanity, and are become vain?

NOTES.

CHAP. II. V. 2, 3. Jeremiah, now about to open his ministry, was ordered to "cry in the ears of Jerusalem;" to proclaim his message in the most public places of the city; and to assure the inhabitants, that the Lord remembered the nation of Israel and those events which had taken place from the calling of Abraham, to the departure of his posterity out of Egypt, which might be called the "youth of the nation;" and the solemn transactions that had taken place at mount Sinai, which were as their espousals to God. The kindness of Israel's youth, and the love of their espousals, may mean either God's kindness to Israel, or Israel's professed love and zeal for him and his worship. They readily followed him out of Egypt, and on the banks of the Red Sea they sang his praises; they cheerfully and unreservedly acceded to the covenant at Sinai: and though they were guilty of many rebellions and provocations, yet they did not utterly renounce his worship and tenaciously set up open idolatry, as they did in after ages. So that in some sense Israel might then be called holiness to the Lord, his worshippers and the first-fruits of that harvest of believers, which he intended afterwards to reap from among men: and, considering the nation as immediately dedicated to him, he was offended with all those who attempted to injure them, and punished them for presuming to devour his portion. The last clause should be rendered, "did offend, evil did come upon them;" referring to judgments executed on Egypt, Amalek, and other nations, who opposed or assaulted Israel.

V. 4. The prophet's ministry was generally confined to Judah; and most of the ten tribes were carried captive and dispersed in foreign countries: yet in this, and many other places, he addresses all the descendants of Jacob. For in various ways, in that or future ages, numbers of the favoured nation would read, and might profit by, his instructions. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 5. After all that the Lord had done for Israel, and all their professed attachment to his worship, they actually 6 Neither said they, * Where is the Lord that brought us up out of the land of Egypt, that led us through the wilderness, through a land of deserts and of pits, through a land of drought, and of the shadow of death, through a land that no man passed through, and where no man dwelt?

7 And I brought you into a plentiful country, to eat the fruit thereof, and the goodness thereof; but when ye entered ye defiled my land, and made mine heritage an abomination.

8 The priests said not, Where is the Lord? and they that handle the law knew me not: the pastors also transgressed against me, and the prophets prophesied by Baal, and walked after things that did not profit.

9 Wherefore I will yet plead with you, saith the Lord, and with your children's children will I plead.

10 For pass over the isles of Chittim, and see; and send unto Kedar, and consider diligently, and see if there be such a thing:

11 Hath a nation changed their gods, which are yet no gods? but my people have changed their glory for that which doth not profit.

12 Be ye astonished, O ye heavens, at this, and be horribly afraid, be ye very desolate, saith the Lord.

13 For my people have committed two evils; they have forsaken me the Fountain of living waters, and hewed them out cisterns, broken cisterns, that can hold no water.

apostatized: and they could have no excuse for this con- duct, unless he had given them cause for it. Could they then bring any charge against him? Had their fathers ever found him unfaithful to his engagements, or oppressive in his government? Had he exacted unreasonable services or inflicted improper punishments? Could they find fault with his precepts, ordinances, or providential dispositions? If they could not, why had they gone far from him, to follow vain and worthless idols, and become as vain and worthless as they?

V. 6. Shadow, &c. A solitary waste, such as continually reminded the people of death or threatened them with it; through this hitherunto untrodden desert the Lord had safely led Israel. "God's sustaining such a vast multitude in a barren desert was an amazing instance of his almighty power, and his goodness and care over his people." (Lowth.)

V. 7. The Hebrew reads "into the land of Carmel," which was so plentiful a part of Judea, that the word came to signify a fruitful place in general." (Lowth.)

V. 8. The priests, whose office was to instruct others in their duty, were ignorant or regardless of it themselves: and this was the principal cause of that degeneracy of manners which prevailed among the people. (Lowth.) The Scribes, who pretended to explain the Scriptures, did not understand them. The pastors, or rulers, civil and ecclesiastical, led the people into rebellion by example and influence: and even the prophets or extraordinary teachers, who professed to be divinely inspired, taught the people to commit idolatry. This concurrence of all orders in wickedness provoked God to plead with or punish the nation, and their remote posterity, who would be induced, in the natural course of things, to imitate the corrupt principles and copy the bad examples of their progenitors. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 10-12. The Greeks, Romans, Arabians, and other inhabitants of the eastern or western world, adhered zealously to the gods and religion of their fathers; and though their idols were helpless and worthless, they would not change them: yet Israel, whose peculiar glory and happiness it was to worship the Creator of heaven and earth, were always ready to change their God and religion, for dumb idols and inanimate superstitions, that tended to their disgrace and ruin! Well might the heavens be astonished at this senseless and hateful ingratitude, and appear as in a horrible conternation, and without their licht, in token of their grief and abhorrence of such enormus guilt. (Matt. xxiii. 45.) "Such rhetorical sponges sotopes upport the untidiness, and likewise the indig- nitv, of the things spoken of; implying them to be such, that if men take no notice of them, the elements them- selves will testify against them." (Lowth.)

V. 13. Every expression in this verse tends to aggravate the folly and guilt of Israel. They were the people of Jehovah, to whom his special favours had been shown to whom his laws and oracles had been given, among whom his wonderful works had been wrought, and to whom his manifested presence was vouchsafed! Even this people had forsaken their God, who is indeed the fountain of living waters, the sum of all excellency and the source of all felicity; who communicates from his infinite fulness life and blessedness to his creatures: even to sinners who come to him in his appointed way; affording them freely whatever is necessary for acceptance, sanctification, and eternal salvation, and everything conducive to their present comfort and security. To this Fountain of living waters Israel had free and unrestricted access, by means of their ordinances and the promises made to them of a Saviour that was to come; from this Fountain they might draw the waters of life by faith and prayer, whenever they would; they always found it full and overflowing; and yet they had been so foolish and ungrateful to forsake it! Nay, as if this evil had not been sufficient, they had committed another also: they could not be satisfied without an object of worship, though they renounced Jehovah, and therefore they set themselves to form gods and a religion for themselves: and thus with much labour they heaved out
CHAPTER II.

14 ¶ Is Israel a servant? is he a home-born slave? why is he spoiled?

15 The young lions roar upon him, and his young bulls will stand and wage: his cities are burned without inhabitant.

16 Also the children of Noph, and Tahapanes have broken the crown of thy head.

17 Hast thou not procured this unto thyself, in that thou hast forsaken the Lord thy God, when he led thee by the way?

18 And now what hast thou to do in the way of Egypt, to drink of the waters of Sihor? or what hast thou to do in the way of Assyria, to drink of the waters of the river?

19 Thine own wickedness shall correct thee, and thy backslidings shall reprove thee: know therefore and see, that it is an evil thing and bitter, that thou hast forsaken the Lord thy God, and that my fear is not in thee, saith the Lord God of hosts.

20 For of old time have broken thy yoke, and burst thy bands; and thou saidst, I will not transgress; when thou art upon every high hill, and under every green tree, thou wanderest, playing with the harlot.

21 Yet I have planted thee a noble vine, wholly a right seed: how then art thou turned into the degenerate plant of a strange vine unto me?

22 For though thou wash with nitre, and take thee much soap, yet thine iniquity is marked before me, saith the Lord God.

23 How canst thou say, I am not polluted, I have not gone after Baalim?

24 *A wild ass+ used to the wilderness, that snuffeth up the wind at her pleasure; in her season can she turn her away? all they that seek her will not weary themselves; in her month they shall find her.

* cisterns, which they preferred to the Fountain of living waters; though at best they could hold but little, and would soon be emptied, and the water in them must needs be turbid; and therefore they multiplied them to supply, if possible, this defect. But indeed their cisterns, when completed, were broken and could hold no water: their idols could do them no good, either in respect of their temporal or eternal concerns.

V. 14—19. The prophet here alludes to the case of the ten tribes. Was Israel born a slave in the family of some idolater? if not, why was he spoiled by them, and reduced to the basest bondage? The Assyrian princes, like young lions, had roared and prevailed against him, and desolated his land: and the inhabitants of Noph and Tahapanes, cities of Egypt, had destroyed his glory and strength. This may also be a prophetic intimation of the death of Josiah, when engaged against Pharaoh-Necho, king of Egypt, and of the drowning and captivity of Jehoahaz by the same prince. But the Israelites brought all these calamities upon themselves by apostatizing from God, and departing from the way in which he led them. And what business had they in Egypt, or in Assyria? Did they still prefer the waters of Sihoh, (that is, the Nile,) or those of Euphrates, to the Fountain of living waters? Could such carnal confidences and idolatrous connexions tend more to their good, than a simple dependence on God and devotedness to him? They would therefore find these their revolts from him to be the sources of misery: for by giving these strangers admission among them, they brought themselves into a dependence on them, which ended in their ruin; and they were thus taught, that sin against God was a bitter, as well as an evil thing, and that he was more to be feared than their strongest enemies.

V. 20—21. In old times God brake the Egyptian yoke from off his people, and they promised to renounce idolatry and adhere to his worship: but they soon broke this solemn covenant, which was as the marriage compact; and they were guilty of spiritual adultery with every abominable idol, in the high places and groves. Yet in the choice of Abraham and the patriarchs of their nation, he had planted them a noble vine, wholly a right seed, and a stock as could be procured of the human species: and under Joshua, he had planted them in the land, very much purged from idolatry, and an excellent race of men: yet, notwithstanding all their advantages, they were most inexcusably degenerate, and were become like the wild vine, that bears poisonous berries instead of grapes.

V. 22—24. The Jews could not conceal or excuse their guilt by any palliations or evasions: the labours of their reforming princes and prophets could not purge away their deep stains; they were so marked before God, that no man could be devised of washing them out. (Notes, Prov. xxv. 20.) Though thou use all the purifications and ceremonies of the law, thou cannot escape punishment; except thou turn to me by faith and repentance. And yet they presumptuously pleaded, that they were not polluted, and had not gone after idols! For a short space they sometimes were restrained by their pious kings from the open practice of gross idolatry; but their hearts were bent upon it, and they speedily rushed into it again. The
25. Withhold thy foot from being unshod, and thy throat from thirst: but as thou saidst, * There is no hope: No; * for I have loved strangers, and * after them will we go.

26. As the thief is ashamed when he is found, so is the house of Israel ashamed; they, * their kings, their princes, and their priests, and their prophets.

27. Saying to a stock, Thou art my father; and to a stone, Thou hast brought me forth: * for they have turned * their back unto me, and not their face; * but in the time of their trouble they will say, Arise, and save us.

28. But where are thy gods that thou hast made thee? let them arise, if they can save thee in the time of thy trouble.

Jews, it seems, had found out distinctions, whereby to reconcile the worship of the true God with those religious rites, which they paid to the idols of the heathen, called here Baalim. These, they pretended, were nothing else but demons or spirits, or the souls of men departed: and might be worshipped in subordination to the supreme God. The word Baalim answers to the lords many, whom St. Paul mentions as the inferior deities of the heathen. (Lomth.) This, and nothing better, may pacify the paper, who urge in excuse of their manifest idolatry in worshipping saints and angels. The valley, (perhaps that of the son of Hinnom, where the Jews caused their children to pass through the fire,) was still marked with their foot-steps and the vestiges of their idolatry; and when freed from restraint, they were as eager to return to their former practices, as the swift dromedary to traverse the plain: and as ready to multiply their idolatries, as she is to run to and fro in every direction. Nay, they were like the wild ass, when she suffers the wind in her eager desire to find out the oracle, and cannot be restrained from her pursuit. In that case, they who sought her would not weary themselves, but would wait till she was heavy with young, and then they would find her. Thus the Jews were greedily determined upon their idolatries, and often for the sake of those licentious practices with which they were attended: and nothing could restrain them, till they experienced the fatal effects of their conduct in the divine judgments executed upon them.

V. 25. * Do not wear out thy shoes or sandals, and expose thyself to thirst and weariness, in undertaking long journeys, to make new alliances with idolaters. (By the south.) But they said, "There is no hope." The case was desperate, meaning, either that there was no hope of safely, except in heathen alliances or in idolatry; or no hope of mercy from God and deliverance from distress; or no hope of getting the better of their headstrong inclinations. And therefore, as they loved strangers and strange gods, they were determined to go after them, and desperately to venture all consequences. (Marg. Ref.)

29. Wherefore * will ye plead with me? ye all have transgressed against me, saith the Lord.

30. In vain have I smitten my children; they received no correction: your own sword hath devoured your prophets, like a destroying lion.

31. O generation, * see ye the word of the Lord? Have I been a wilderness unto Israel? a land of darkness? Wherefore say my people, * We will go lords; we will come no more unto thee?

32. Can * a maid forget her ornaments, or a bride her attire? * yet my people have forgotten me days without number.

V. 26—30. The whole house of Israel, especially the rulers and teachers of every description, shunned detection like a thief; and yet they would certainly be detected and put to shame, for the Lord would prove against them, that they had ascribed divine honours to senseless idols, and worshipped them as the authors of their existence and all their comforts. But though they thus turned their backs on Jehovah; yet, in their approaching troubles, they would call upon him to save them; and then he would send them to their idols to seek deliverance; but they would not obtain any help from them, though they were as numerous as their cities. * Every city had its peculiar deity, after the manner of the heathen." (Lomth.) And why should they attempt to plead their cause against God, or to expect the performance of his promises to the nation; when they had forfeited them by their sins; and when they were all involved in this national transgression, which violated their covenant? He had indeed had long patience with them; he had corrected them in his providence, and was about to use his prophets: but they had not derived benefit by his corrections; and by murdering his prophets, as a fierce lion devours the prey, they had filled up the measure of their iniquities. (Marg. Ref.)
CHAPTER II.

33 Why, trimmest thou thy way to seek love? therefore hast thou also taught the wicked ones thy ways.

34 Also in thy skirts is found the blood of the souls of the poor innocents: I have not found it by secret search, but upon all these.

35 Yet thou sayest, Because I am innocent, surely his anger shall turn from me: behold, I will plead with thee, because thou sayest, I have not sinned.

36 Why, gaddest thou about so much to change thy way? thou also shalt be ashamed of Egypt, as thou wast ashamed of Assyria.

37 Yea, thou shalt go forth from him, and thinke hands upon thine head: for the Lord hath rejected thy confidences, and thou shalt not prosper in them.

V. 33—37. The Lord hereprocured of the people, why they imitated the harlots, who used every artifice to allure, and turned every way to meet, the companions of their shameful amours; for thus the Jews assiduously employed themselves in devising and embracing new idolatries. They not only were acquainted with the worst practices of the heathens, but refined upon them, and became teachers of professed heathens in these infamous mysteries. The word rendered trimmest, is, literally, makest good, which some understand of their plausibly excusing their conduct; though they were so notoriously wicked. They had also shed the innocent blood, both of their children which they sacrificed to Moloch; of the prophets who reproved them for their sins; and of the Lord's decided worshippers: and these abominations were not committed in secret, or carefully concealed; but the marks of them were evidently to been seen on the skirts of their garments, and their guilt defiled every thing they did. Yet they would still persist in justifying themselves; and they had a presumptuous confidence in God, as if he were or soon would be reconciled to them. But he would "enter into judgment with them," or "denounce sentence against them," on that very account: for in saying that they had not sinned, they affronted the God of truth in the grossest manner, (1 John i. 10.) It was also undeniable, that they had not renounced their idolatrous connexions and confidences, but now expected help from Egypt, as they formerly had done from Assyria; and resembled an adulterous woman, that gads about from one paramour to another. Therefore the Lord was determined to put them to shame: and they should go forth from Pharaoh, with every expression of disconsolation; nay, they should go into captivity in the deepest distress and anguish: for the Lord was displeased with their confidence, and had determined never to prosper them in their evil ways.

The alliances of the Jews with Assyria had always proved ruinous and disgraceful: and the Egyptians slew Josiah, carried Jehoahaz prisoner into Egypt, and utterly disappointed all the expectations of the Jews.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—13.

The Lord will remind us of all the favours that he hath conferred on us from our youth; and of all our profession of faith and love, since we first heard of his name and salvation. It is very desirable and honourable to be early numbered amongst his worshippers, and admitted to those sacred ordinances, which are as the solemn espousals of the soul to God, (Note, Cant. iii. 11.) Yet numbers on such occasions express much zeal and love, and appear ready to follow him through every trial and difficulty, who afterwards give cause to suspect, that their affections were only moved, and not their hearts changed; and that they had no root in themselves, and therefore in time of temptation fell away. Many, who once appeared to be "holiness to the Lord," and devoted to his service, spend their future lives in such a manner, that their zealois professions are an additional reproach to their characters, and an aggravation of their crimes. Yet some, who have fallen off, after very promising beginnings, and who have run very wide in the ways of impiety or inidelity, have been recovered, and have remembered the love of their first espousals, and their subsequent unfaithfulness; to their deeper humiliation before God even to the end of their lives. But not only hypocrites, and such persons as disgrace their profession, are criminal in these things: even true believers are often constrained to plead guilty. After having been delivered from the bondage of Satan, relieved in the hour of distress and dismay, conducted through many dangers and perplexities, and made comfortable in the hopes and earnest of heavenly felicity; they have evidently made unsuitable returns for these immense obligations; and have declined from that zeal and love which marked their first entrance on a religious course. We all ought, therefore, to examine ourselves in these things, that we may "repent and do our first works," and we should be very careful, as we proceed in life, that we do not lose zeal and fervency, what we gain in knowledge, prudence, and experience. They, however, who are indeed "holiness to the Lord," and the first fruits of his creatures, (James i. 18;) and who are following him through this dreary wilderness, to the promised rest, experience such love from him, as richly compensates all they can lose, leave, or suffer for his sake: and the Lord will resent the wrong done to such endeared relations, as if done to himself. No apostate or backslider can give a good reason for going far from God: none can charge Him with unfaithfulness, injustice, or unkindness; and he may justly reproach them with the folly, as well as the ingratitude, of leaving such a tried and powerful Friend, to walk after vanity and become vain.

In nations that have been most highly favoured with temporal deliverances and advantages, and with abundance of the means of grace, how grievously do men generally defile themselves and their land, and make the Lord's heritage an abomination! Too often the ministers of religion are peculiarly criminal: men officiate in holy things, without the spiritual knowledge of God or earnest inquiry after him; they presume for lucrative to handle the law, without any acquaintance with the Lawgiver; and thus pastors, and teachers, and rulers, by their example and doctrine, propagate iniquity, infidelity, and heresy, and harden the hearts developed by the numbers that walk after such things as cannot be profitable! What will such men say, when the Lord shall plead against them? And how can they endure the thought of treasuring up judgments even for their children’s children? Men, that have been educated in any false religion, and adhered tenaciously to it, and are hardly persuaded to change it, however absurd and unreasonable it be. Thus Satan rivets the fetters of ignorance and delusion on men’s minds, by means of their bigotry, prejudice, and pride. But the professors of true religion have given a strange propensity to change their minds for any worthless superstition or absurdity; and if the truth and spiritual worship of God cannot be maintained among men, without continual divine interpositions. This is most lamentable, and may well excite our grief and consternation: but our astonishment will be diminished, if we duly consider, “that the ‘carnal mind is enmity against God,’” and must therefore naturally prefer any gross or sensual worship, any proud self-exalting reasonings, any absurd superstitions or fanatical chimeras, to the holy character and precepts, the humbling truths and spiritual worship of the Lord. Indeed we all are prone to commit the two evils, of which Israel was proved guilty. How do we forsake the pure joys of God’s favour and service, for the polluting and wasting pleasures and interests of the world and sin? How apt are we to refuse the glorious salvation of Christ, and to prefer our own foolish ways of recommending ourselves to our offended Creator! How prone are we to forsake the unpering word of God to follow human teachers, and the traditions of men, and to forgo the consolations of the Holy Spirit, for the worthless joys of the enthusiasm and hypo-critism! With great labour do men frame and resort to these broken cisterns; so instead of drawing the waters of life from the wells of salvation. Thus man became, and thus sin-ers continue, the slaves of sin and Satan.

V. 14–24.

Even the professed people of God are sometimes reduced to a base and ruinous subjection by their own lusts; but what hath a Christian to do, in the ways of forbidden pleasure and vain dissipation, or in the pursuits of avarice or ambition? Can the waters of these rivers be equal to those of the River whose streams make glad the city of God?” If men will thus turn aside, their backslidings will correct them, and they will learn the evil of their conduct, by the bitterness of its consequences, when they may be taught to “be in the fear of the Lord all the day “long.” The history of the world, and of the Church, and that of every man, (believer or unbeliever,) proves the total depair of the human heart: no obligations, professions, pious ancestors, good education, or external means, can ensure any man’s continuance in the ways of godliness: no impiety or eloquence can extenuate this matter: though men wash themselves with miry and take much soap, yet their iniquities are marked before God, and will prove develops, when produced against them at the day of judgment. The fact is evident and very affecting, that the descendants of the most pious men, who have seemed to be planted a noble vine, wholly a right seed, have in many cases degenerated, and become hardened infeuds, or profligates. But a disposition to self-justification is strongly marked as a feature of man’s character: when his criminality cannot be denied, he will vindicate or excuse it; and if he can plead not guilty of one gross outward wickedness, he will deem this a compensation for all other offences: say, a short-lived reluc tant abstaining from some habitual sin, shall be pleaded as an atonement for all former indulgences, and even as an excuse for returning to the commission of it. But when the Lord shall cause men to view their ways, and to know and see what they have done, “every mouth will be stopped, and all the world will be found guilty before him.” Indeed they are often as much under the power of their lusts, and as regardless of consequences in gratifying their present inclinations, as the brute beasts; and as inaccessible to arguments, warnings, or motives, when urged against their impetuous cravings.
It is in vain in such cases to warn ourselves about them:
the only hope is, that the painful effects of their vices will lead them to salutary reflection, and give us a future opportunity of suggesting useful admonitions.

V. 25–37.

Sometimes despair of mercy, or of victory over domiminating evil habits and lusts, leads men to as unrestrained indulgence, as the most presumptuous indolence could do.
They think there is no hope for them, and as they have loved their sinful pleasures, they may as well go on in them as not! To this case the abundant mercy and almighty assistance, proposed in the Gospel, form a suitable remedy.
—Sinners of every rank and description must stand before the Judge of the world: and most of them are conscious, that they cannot indicate their conduct before him:
then they will appear like the poor convict before the bar, when he stands to hear the ignominious sentence against him for his crimes. Even kings, princes, priests, and prophets, will be thus put to shame before the assembled world: and the unreasonable blindness of men’s conduct, where they have been idolatrous infidels or profane, will as much shame their understandings as their hearts. It may be vain to expect help from God in the time of trouble, if we now turn our backs on him; yet many call upon him, CHAPTER III.

B. C. 620.

* THEY say, * if a man put away his wife, and she go from him, and become another man's, shall he return unto her again? shall not that land be greatly polluted? but thou hast played the harlot with many lovers, yet return again to me, saith the Lord. 2 Lift up thine eyes upon the high places, and see where thou hast not been lieth with. In the ways hast thou sat for them, as the Arabian in the wilderness; and thou hast played the land with thy whoredoms, and with thy wickedness.

3 Therefore the bowyers have been withholden, and there hath been no latter rain; and thou hast a worm's forehead, thou refusedst to be ashamed.

4 Wilt thou not from this time cry unto Me, My Father, thou art the Guide of my youth? 5 Will he reserve his anger for ever? will he keep it to the end? Behold, thou hast spoken and done evil things among as thou countest.

6 ¶ The Lord said also unto me, in the days of Josiah the king, Hast thou seen that which backsliding Israel hath done? she is gone up upon every high mountain, and under every green tree, and there hath played the harlot.

7 And I said, after she had done all duce a community of wives; and greatly pollute the land where it was practised: yet after all the idolatries committed by the Jews, the Lord could honourably, and would certainly, receive them to full favour, if they returned to him.

V. 2, 3. The people might see the traces of their idolatries on every high place on which they looked: they were continually devising new species of idolatry, and tempting others to it; even as the prostitute sits by the way to seduce the passengers, or as the Arabian roaper waits in the desert for the traveller. Thus they polluted the land by their abominable wickedness: and when the Lord visited them with drought or famine, they persisted in their crimes with the most shameless effrontery.

V. 4, 5. Some interpret these verses as a reproof of the hypocrisy and presumption of the Jews. Notwithstanding their abandoned and obstinate wickedness, they would still pretend to call God their Father and the Guide of their youth; (Note, Prov. ii. 17;) the Friend, who had taken care of the nation from its infancy: and they presumed to expect help from him, though they continued to imitate the rebellious son, or the adulterous wife. Nor would they be induced to believe, that he would so reserve his anger for ever, as to bring his threatened judgments upon them; but they expected that he would relent before matters came to this extremity; though they were conscious, that they spake and did evil to the extent of their ability, and were not restrained from transgression by any other hindrance, than want of power or opportunity. This is a probable intepretation; but the passage is more commonly understood in a contrary sense. Would not the people, from this time, (when they were warned, corrected, and invited to repentance, and favoured with such a pious reforming king,) come and seek mercy from that God who had always been the Father and Guide of Israel? Would they not crave him again to take them under his fatherly guidance? And would they not do it immediately, without further delay? And would the Lord, in that case, reserve his anger for ever, and punish them to the end? By no means: though they had done all in their power to provoke him, he was yet disposed to be merciful to them.

NOTES.

CHAP. III. V. 1. The beginning of this chapter, in the original, seems to connect with the conclusion of the preceding. "In saying if a man," &c. God would never prosper his professed worshippers, while they proceeded in their evil courses: and this appeared, not only by his threatenings and judgments, but even by his calls to repentance and promises of mercy. For in saying they turn to me, and will pardon thee, notwithstanding thy past atrocities, he in effect said, that he would not otherwise pardon them. To show that his ways and thoughts are unspeakably above those of man; he illustrates the subject from the law given by Moses; in which any one who had divorced his wife, was forbidden to take her back, if she had been married to another (Note, Deut. xxiv. 1-4;) and it must be allowed, that such a conduct would intro-these things, "Turn thou unto me; but she returned not: and her treacherous sister Judah saw it."

9 And I saw, when for all the causes whereby backsliding Israel committed adultery, I had put her away, and given her a bill of divorce; yet her treacherous sister Judah feared not, but went and played the harlot also.

10 And it came to pass through the lightness of her whoredom, that she defiled the land, and committed adultery with stones and with stocks.

11 And yet for all this her treacherous sister Judah hath not turned unto me with her whole heart, but f feignedly, saith the Lord.

12 And the Lord said unto me, The backsliding Israel hath justified herself more than treacherous Judah.

13 Only acknowledge thine iniquity, that thou hast transgressed against the Lord thy God, and hast scattered thy ways to the strangers under every green tree, and ye have not obeyed my voice, saith the Lord.

14 Turn, O backsliding children, saith the Lord; for I am married unto you: and I will take you, one of a city, and two of a family, and I will bring you to Zion:

15 And I will give you pastors according to mine heart, which shall feed you with knowledge and understanding.

16 And it shall come to pass, when ye be multiplied and increased in the land, in those days, saith the Lord, they shall say no more, The ark of the covenant of the Lord; neither shall it come to mind; neither shall they remember it; neither shall they visit it; neither shall Jacob any more be assembled thereunto.

17 At that time they shall call Jeru-

V. 6-11. A new message seems to be begun in this place, which probably was delivered after Josiah had made great progress in his reformation. The prophet had a view given him of the wickedness of backsliding Israel, which had apostatized from God, or the kingdom of the ten tribes. The word backsliding seems to be taken from the oxen, when they turned back, instead of drawing forward, in the yoke; and it is used for an individual or a people, renouncing the worship and service of God. Israel had utterly renounced the temple, and almost wholly forsaken the worship of God, and they committed idolatry in every part of the land. The Lord had also sent Elijah, Elisha, and other prophets, to bring them back to him; but in general they returned not. The kingdom of Judah, descended from the same stock, was equally treacherous and unfaithful to the covenant of God with them, and they witnessed all these transactions. At length he saw it necessary to put Israel away, as an adulterous woman; which he did by the kings of Assyria. Yet Judah took not warning, and was not afraid to continue, and to grow more impudent, in their abominable and absurd idolatries. And after all that Judah had heard and witnessed of the long continued captivity and misery of Israel, they did not fall in cordially with good Josiah's reformation, but only feignedly, reluctantly; and hypocritically. So that, all things considered, Israel was not so inexcusable as Judah was become: for Judah had been favoured with many pious kings, had had far greater advantages than Israel, had been borne with in greater patience, and had the doom of Israel set before them as a warning; and all these circumstances aggravated their guilt.

V. 12-15. The prophet was next ordered to proclaim his message towards the north, where the ten tribes were dispersed in captivity. We need not suppose that the prophet went into those countries to preach to the Israelites: but this order was intended to shame the Jews, and it implied that mercy was in reserve for Israel. They were thus called on to repent of their idolatries, and return to the Lord: and he would no longer cause his anger to rest upon them, being ever disposed to mercy. They were exhorted to acknowledge that they had sinned against that God, whose professed and covenantated worshippers they had been; and that they had basely turned every way to seek out other objects of worship, which they preferred to him. They were encouraged to repent and return to God, by an intimation that he still considered them as children, though rebellious, and as married to him, though adulterous; and that he had yet a favour towards them, on account of his ancient transactions with their nation: they were to be assured, that he intended to take a small remnant of them, as some from the whole number of the inhabitants of a city, or two from a family, or subordinate division of a tribe; to bring them back to Zion, and place over them rulers and teachers like David, men after his own heart, who should feed them wisely and prudently, or with divine knowledge and wisdom, which are the proper food of the soul. This was in part accomplished, when some of the Israelites returned with the Jews from Babylon, and were ruled and taught with them by Zerubbabel, Joshua, Ezra, Nehemiah, and others. But it especially refers to the gathering of the dispersed Israelites with the Gentiles, into the Christian Church in the primitive times, and in after ages.
CHAPTER III.

21 A voice was heard upon the high places, weeping and supplications of the children of Israel: for they have perverted their way, and they have forgotten the Lord their God.

22 Return, ye backsliding children, and I will heal your backslidings: behold, we come unto thee; for thou art the Lord our God.

23 Truly in vain is salvation hoped for from the hills, and from the multitude of mountains: truly in the Lord our God is the salvation of Israel.

24 For a shame hath devoured the labour of our fathers from our youth; their flocks and their herds, their sons and their daughters.

25 We lie down in our shame, and our confusion covereth us: for we have sinned against the Lord our God, we and our fathers, from our youth even unto this day, and have not obeyed the voice of the Lord our God.

26 by the calling or gathering in of many nations, and completed, by "the gathering of all nations to the name of the Lord." (Maclaurn.)

V. 19. The blessings, promised in the preceding verses, were exceedingly great; and a difficulty, apparently insurmountable, lay in the way of their accomplishment, arising from the guilt of the nation: for how could Jehovah, consistently with his justice and holiness, put such obdurate rebels among his children, and give them that pleasant land for their inheritance, which had long been possessed as an heritage by the nations and their armies? To this answer, that he would bring them to repentance, faith, and prayer, and give them the Spirit of adoption, the temple of dutiful children; and then they would call on him in times of trouble, and love him as their Father: and that he would influence their hearts by his grace, that they should no more depart from him, is all implied, that when this took place, he would cast out their enemies before them, as he had done when their fathers were first put in possession of Canaan. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 20-25. This seems to be a prophetic representation of the manner in which the change before mentioned should be effected. The Lord would convince the people of their wickedness, in treacherously departing from him. Then the voice of their lamentations and prayers was to be heard, even in the places where their crimes had been perpetrated: and this open confession was necessary, as they had so perversely forsaken the way of obedience, and forgotten their God. He then graciously invites them to return to him, and he will both pardon their guilt and heal their backslidings; establishing their hearts by his sanctifying grace. Thus encouraged, they readily declare their purpose of immediately returning to the Lord, who had a right to their worship and service. They are now Israel and Judah are called to repent, with gracious promises and solemn warnings, 1—4. A prediction of the invasion of Judah and the ravages of war, for the wickedness and hypocrisy of the inhabitants, 5—18. The prophet bitterly laments the sins and miseries of his people, 19—31.

Upon their external privileges, and relation to God; or on his mercy, as if he would not execute his threatened vengeance, especially on those who call him Lord and Father, but who continue to speak and do evil as they can. Alas! how plainly do we find, on an impartial review of our conduct, that we have had it in our hearts to do far more evil than we had it in our power actually to perpetrate; and that we should have made ourselves far worse, if we had had more liberty, health, riches, ingenuity, or opportunity; or if we could have got over the fear of reproach or punishment from man! And how few temptations, comparatively, have we resisted out of pure regard to God! When we carefully mark the crimes of others, especially of such as break off from a religious profession, and despise warnings and convictions, we should also note the consequences; and then we shall generally see abundant reason to shun their evil ways. But when the Lord makes sinners a warning and example of their companions; and they fear not, but rush into similar iniquities, their guilt is greatly aggravated. He is the only competent Judge of characters; he knows perfectly how to estimate men's comparative advantages, with the warnings and the strivings of his Spirit which they resist; the hypocrisy of their apparent good, and many other discriminating circumstances: and he alone can infallibly determine, whether the open infidel and profligate, or the designing hypocrite be the viler character. It is dreadful to be proved more criminal than those who have actually perished in their sins; yet will be no comfort to the condenmed to know, that some others were still worse than they.

V. 12—25.

Blessed be God, his word hath been proclaimed in this distant land, calling on sinners to return unto him, and declaring his plenteous mercy, and readiness to forgive. This goodness of our God should lead us to repentance, and humble confession of our sins. But, alas! most men, after the hardness of their impenitent hearts, despise the riches of his mercy, and proceed to treasure up wrath against the day of wrath. Hitherto only a small remnant hath been called into the true Church of God, even from that nation which was as it were married to him; and but few of this our nation, that hath been almost equally favoured. But let us be thankful, if we are of this number: and let ministers pray for themselves, and let the people pray for them, that they may be pastors after God's own heart, to feed the people with knowledge and understanding; and that very many such pastors may be raised up in all parts of the world. In the primitive ages of the Church, when the partition-wall was taken down, such pastors abounded, and the number of true Israelites was vastly increased; but "yet there is room!" the holy nation may still be multiplied exceedingly, its worship may be rendered more spiritual, its people more weaned from the imagi-
If thou wilt return, O Israel, saith the Lorp, return unto me: and if thou wilt put away thine abominations out of my sight, then shalt thou not remove.

And thou shalt swear, The Lorp liveth, in truth, in judgment, and in righteousness: and the nations shall bless themselves in him, and in him shall they glory.

3 For thus saith the Lord to the men of Judah and Jerusalem, Break up your fallow ground, and sow not among thorns.

4 Circumcise yourselves to the Lord, and take away the foreskins of your heart, ye men of Judah and inhabitants of Jerusalem: lest my fury come forth like fire, and burn that none can quench it, because of the evil of your doings.

5 For thus saith the Lord, 6 Lo, I will bring upon thee a burdensome thing, even a king shall reign over thee, and thou shalt deal no more like a prophet.

6 But this is the agreement that I will make with the house of Israel; After those days, saith the Lord, I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people.

7 And they shall teach no more every man his neighbor, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for they shall all know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord: for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more.

8 And I will put my Spirit within you, and cause you to enter the law of the Lord, and ye shall contain it within you, and I will write it upon your hearts; and I will put my Spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes, and ye shall keep my judgments, and do them.

9 And ye shall dwell in the land which I gave unto your fathers, and ye shall be my people, and I will be your God.

10 And I will also make a new covenant with them; it shall not be like the covenant that I made with their fathers, which was in the day of my glory, which I spoke unto them in the day when I brought them up out of the land of Egypt, from the sign of the blood, which I commanded them to keep, which was the ordinance of the covenant; and they broke my covenant, though I was a husband unto them, saith the Lord.

11 And this was the covenant that I made with them. In the day when I took them in the land of Egypt, said the Lord, my Spirit filled them, that they should keep my ordinances, and do them. And if they had kept my ordinances, saith the Lord, they should have dwelt in the land for ever.

12 And they departed from my sabbaths, and I have spilt their blood upon the ground. They have set theirenas 12:2

13 So the Lord said, Behold, I will give them a heart to know me, that they may come unto me with their whole heart, and with their whole soul; for I will have mercy upon them, and will cause them to return to me with their hearts and with their souls.

14 For I will have mercy upon them, and I will cause them to go into the wilderness, and into the dry and thirsty land, where there is no water; but there I will give them the bread of heaven, and the water of the wells of salvation.

15 Then said I, Lo, I will cause them to know me, in the wilderness, in the habitation of deer, in the habitations of Lubim, in the wilderness of their redeemed; for I will make them go up from among the people, and gather them out of the countries, to bring them again to their own land and to their own country; and I will be their God, and they shall be my people.

16 Then said I, Behold, I will bring them out of the land of Egypt into the land of Canaan, and will make them one nation in the land, and they shall be one people. And they shall be in the wilderness; and I will make them know my power, and will bring them again to their own land.

17 And I will make them one nation in the land, and they shall be one people; and I will give them one heart and one understanding, that they may fear me, and that they may be one nation in the land. And they shall be my people, and I will be their God.

18 And they shall keep my statutes, and perform my judgments, and they shall dwell in the land, and I will be with them, and be their God.

19 And I will give them one heart and one understanding, that they may fear me, and that they may be one nation in the land, and I will be with them, and be their God.

20 And they shall be my people, and I will be their God, and I will give them one heart and one understanding, that they may fear me, and that they may be one nation in the land, and I will be with them, and be their God.

21 And I will give them one heart and one understanding, that they may fear me, and that they may be one nation in the land, and I will be with them, and be their God.

22 And they shall be my people, and I will be their God, and I will give them one heart and one understanding, that they may fear me, and that they may be one nation in the land, and I will be with them, and be their God.

23 And I will give them one heart and one understanding, that they may fear me, and that they may be one nation in the land, and I will be with them, and be their God.

24 And they shall be my people, and I will be their God, and I will give them one heart and one understanding, that they may fear me, and that they may be one nation in the land, and I will be with them, and be their God.

25 And they shall be my people, and I will be their God, and I will give them one heart and one understanding, that they may fear me, and that they may be one nation in the land, and I will be with them, and be their God.
5 Declare ye in Judah, and publish in Jerusalem; and say, Blow ye the trumpet in the land: cry, gather together, and say, Assemble yourselves, and let us go into the defenced cities.

6 Set up the standard toward Zion: retire, stay not: for I will bring evil from the north, and a great destruction.

7 The lion is come up from his thicket, and the destroyer of the Gentiles is on his way: he is gone forth from his place to make thy land desolate; and thy cities shall be made waste without an inhabitant.

8 For this gird you with sackcloth, lament and howl: for the fierce anger of the Lord is not turned back from us.

9 And it shall come to pass at that day, saith the Lord, that the heart of the king shall perish, and the heart of the princes; and the priests shall be as the people, and the people as the priests.

10 Then said I, Ah, Lord God, surely thou hast greatly deceived this people and Jerusalem, saying, Ye shall have peace: whereas the sword reacheth unto the soul.

11 At that time shall that word be fulfilled which I have brought you to hear, saying, Behold, I will scatter you among all the nations for an evil unto you, to be a name, to be a sign, and a wonder among all generations.

12 Even a full wind from those places shall come unto me: now also will I give sentence against them.

13 Behold, he shall come up as clouds, and his chariots shall be as whirlwind: his horses are swifter than eagles.

14 O Jerusalem, wash thine heart from wickedness, that thou mayest be saved. How long shall thy vain thoughts lodge within thee?

V. 5—7. Even during Josiah's reformation, the prophet was commissioned to predict the invasion of the land by Nebuchadnezzar, which took place above thirty years after. The alarm is given, as by one upon the spot; it is ordered to be published by the blowing of the trumpet; and the people are called upon to assemble, and take refuge in their strong-holds. The standard was to be erected in the way to Zion, that the people might without delay repair thither for safety; and yet this would be in vain, for destruction was at hand.

V. 9. Great calamities often deprive men of their wonted courage, and that presence of mind which is necessary for the due management of their affairs; and sometimes a divine infatuation accompanies God's other judgments. The priests and false prophets agreed to make the people believe that none of these calamities should come upon them.

V. 10. In the prospect of these calamities, the prophet was astonished and afflicted to see the people secure, and seduced into a vain expectation of peace and prosperity, by means of the false prophets. This the Lord permitted and appointed in judgment, to punish their contempt of him, and the prophet lamented it, as the most awful of their calamities. For they expected peace, whilst the indignation of the Lord reached even to the soul, and inflicted a mortal wound. These pretenders to prophecy study only to speak pleasing things to the people, and to soothe them in their impatience and carnal security; and thou hast in thy judgment given them up to follow these delusions. (Lornh.) Then said I, Ah, Lord God, surely this people and Jerusalem will be ready to cast upon thee the imputation of deceiving them; in that those who have pretended to prophecy unto them, have said, Ye shall have peace, whereas there is nothing but slaughter and devastation. (By Hall.) Thou hast punished their stubbornness, by causing them to hearken unto lies, who would not believe thy truth. (Notes, Kings xxii. 19—23. 2 Thes. ii. 10—12.)

V. 11—13. The approach of the invaders is here represented by striking similitudes. It would be as a dry wind, increasing drought and famine, bringing suffocating heat, and occasioning fatal diseases, and sometimes overwhelming travellers with immense quantities of burning sands, as they passed through the deserts. It would blow from the high places in the wilderness, towards Zion. It was not intended to correct and purify the people, as the gentle gale fans and cleanses the corn, but as a full wind to drive all away together: and it would come, unto me, either to the Lord's sanctuary, who seems here to speak, and at his command, or to the habitation of the prophet by whom he spake: for God would speedily denounced sentence against Zion as a condemned criminal; to execute which Nebuchadnezzar and his armies would come swiftly and in immense multitudes, so that nothing could stop their progress: as clouds speedily formed doth the sky, and burst forth in a dreadful storm. Thus his chariot would be like a whirlwind, to desolate the land.
15 For a voice declareth from Dan, and publisheth affliction from mount Ephraim.

16 Make ye mention to the nations; behold, publish against Jerusalem, that watchers come from a far country, and give out their voice against the cities of Judah.

17 As keepers of a field, are they against her round about; because she hath been rebellious against me, saith the LORD.

18 Thy way and thy doings have procured these things unto thee; this is thy wickedness, because it is bitter, because it reacheth unto thine heart.

19 My bowels, my bowels! I am pained at my very heart; my heart maketh a noise in me; I cannot hold my peace, because thou hast heard, O my soul, the sound of the trumpet, the alarm of war.

20 Destruction upon destruction is cried; for the whole land is spoiled; suddenly are my tents spoiled, and my curtains in a moment.

V. 14. Some attention had been paid by the Jews to external reformation; but the heart of Jerusalem, or of its inhabitants, was still polluted, and the seat of idolatry and wickedness: vain imaginations, desires, and affections, not only obtained admission, but lodged therein as welcome guests; the people still harboured with pleasure the thoughts of returning to their idols and iniquities; and vainly imagined they should be safe and happy in their evil ways, and in their carnal and presumptuous confidences in the Egyptians and on their religious privileges. (Marg. Ref.)

This had long been the case, and the prophet inquired, how long they intended that it should be so? For it was absolutely necessary that their hearts should be washed, in the exercise of true repentance and faith, from the love and pollution of sin; or no external ablations and purifications could save their city from desolation, or their souls from hell.

V. 19—28. The prophet, in vision, beholds the invaders entering the northern border of the land; and the report spreads swiftly from Dan, through the nations that inhabited Ephraim: but their design was especially against Jerusalem and Judah; they came from a far country to besiege their cities, and to watch around them, that no relief should be brought in, and no inhabitants escape out; as men are set to guard the field, and keep the cattle from getting out, or the robbers from breaking in. Thus the sword of the enemy, or the vengeance of the Lord, would pierce their vitals, to punish their atrocious rebellions.

V. 21—27. The prophet, to express his full conviction of the certainty of these predicted judgments, and to show that he had no pleasure in delivering such terrible messages, here speaks of himself as in great anguish at what he saw and heard. His bowels were in great commotion and agony; his heart was pained and in a tumult through consternation; he could not hold his peace, but must speak of what he foresaw coming on his people, if they persisted in refusing to hearken to him. For the whole scene was present in vision before his mind. He heard the trumpet sound the alarm; it was reported to him that one city after another was destroyed; and the whole land was desolated, as easily and speedily as a few tents may be removed; he had continually before his eyes the standard of war, and the trumpet still sounded in his ears. Upon this complex, the Lord himself seems to speak, to convince his servant of the propriety of his conduct. He shows him, that though the Jews were his professing people, they were foolish and ignorant, and knew him not, because they disliked his holy character and service; they were heedless and inattentive as children; yea, they were sottish, stupid, unteachable children, and seemed destitute of common sense. They had indeed some insensibility in impiety and iniquity, but were perfectly destitute of understanding as to that which was good. In consequence of this declaration, the prophet is shown, in a vision, the whole land reduced to confusion and emptiness, like the original chaos: the heavens darkened, the mountains trembling, and all the inhabitants, and even the fowls of the air, driven away. This represents in the style of very sublime poetry the entire subversion of their civil and ecclesiastical government, the termination of all their prosperity, and the total desolation of the land, after the most violent convulsions; which is more plainly predicted in what follows: yet it is also intimated, that this ruin of the nation would not be final. (Marg. Ref.)
PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1–13.

The Lord will assuredly pardon and bless all those, how ever criminal, who return to him with their whole hearts; and show that they are sincere penitents, "by putting away all their abominations," as in his sight who "requires truth in the inward parts." But a formal or a partial reformation will be of no avail. Whilst Christians, so called, are notoriously addicted to injustice, fraud, lying, and oppression; whilst they trifle with the most solemn oaths, which are administered without reverence, taken without consideration, and violated without hesitation; whilst they are multiplied on such frivolous occasions, and men show a contempt of God and of justice at the same time, by rash as well as profane swearing; it cannot be expected that Pagans or Mahometans should be much impressed in favour of Christianity, or expect much good from embracing it. But whenever a contrary conduct shall distinguish the disciple of Jesus from every other man, in all parts of the world, one grand obstacle to the conversion of the nations will be removed, and we may hope that they will be induced to bless themselves and glory in our God and Saviour. Our aim should therefore be, to prevail, if possible, with professed Christians, to break up the fallow ground, and not to now among thorns; that, with content with empty forms and notions, they may seek for a humble, serious, and broken heart, in which the word of God may take root, and bring forth fruit to perfection. And we should begin with ourselves; for without serious examination, deep convictions of our guilt and depravity, fervent prayers, and constant endeavors to be influenced in our conduct by the truths we receive; all the advantages of revelation, and all the labours of the minister, will be in vain to us. Let us then recollect, that the true baptism, (as well as the true circumcision,) is that of the heart: and as the Lord commands us to put off the body of the sins of the flesh, and to remove, all the impediments of our corrupt nature, that we may fear, trust, and love him; let us turn these precepts into prayers, and entreat him to "create in us a clean heart, and renew a right spirit within us.") For "except a man be born again, he cannot see," or enter into, "the kingdom of God;" and if men die unchanged, "his fury will come forth like fire, and burn that none can quench it, because of the evil of their doings," in a case therefore of such urgent necessity, the least we can do of ourselves, the more need we have to cry incessantly to the Lord for help. He commonly warns before he strikes: but if his warnings are despised, they will soon be realized in judgments; and when he arieth to execute vengeance, sinners will find it in vain to combine for mutual defence, or to flee any whither for refuge; and no roaring lion, or destroyer of the nations, is to be dreaded, in comparison with "him who is able to destroy both body and soul in hell." Yet when he uses ambitious men, besides their intention, as his instruments of temporal punishment, sinners are made to howl and lament. When he contends, men are soon dispirited and infatuated; their resolution and capacity fail them, and their hearts sink and perish within them: but none are more stupified with astonishment and terror on such occasions, than ungodly priests and false teachers! The justice of God, in leaving sinners to be deceived, and to expect peace when vengeance reaches to the soul, is very awful. The faithful servants of God depurate from the people this judgment, above all others; yet they often perceive that he seems good to inflict it. On this account they are treated as malevolent, censorious, and spiritually proud; for they cannot but remind their hearers of the distinction between a faithful minister of the gospel, and a blind guide, or a teacher of lies in the garb of a priest: but the event will justify their conduct, and convince all the world of the reality and importance of this disregarded distinction. When lighter calamities are not effectual to fan and cleanse congregations, Churches, or nations professing Christianity, God will give sentence upon them; a whirlwind and storm of vengeance will be commissioned to execute his word;
The judgments of God on the Jews, for the incorrigible wickedness of all ranks and orders among them, 1—6: for their adultery, 7—9; their impious contempt of God's word, 10—14; their idolatry, 15—19; their blindness, presumption, and ingratitude, 20—25; their injustice and oppression, 26—29; and the favour shown to false prophets, 30, 31.

R U N ye to and fro through the streets of Jerusalem, and see now, and and then it will be unavailing to say, "Wo unto us for "we are undone."

V. 14—31.

Exhortations and encouragements should be blended with warnings; that men may neither presume nor be left without hope: but we must still insist upon it, that without the heart be washed from wickedness, and vain thoughts and desires dislodged from it, there can be no salvation. We can also point out that Fountain, in which the most polluted may wash and be clean, and direct them to One, that is able and willing to assist them in this work: we can assure them, that all who are thus washed shall be saved: and we should distinguish between those who hate vain thoughts and sinful imaginations, but are often harassed by them; and those who love, entertain, and lodge them in their hearts. This hath too long been the case with us all: but how long do sinners intend that it should be so with them? Would they be willing to die when their hearts are thus occupied, and remain to eternity the proud carnal enemies of God and holiness? If not, no time should be lost. For his voice declareth from afar, that misery is speedily approaching, and especially against wicked professors of the gospel; and when this overtakest them, it will be evident, that their rebellious ways and doings have procured these things unto themselves; and that the fruit of wickedness is bitter and the end fatal. They who believe and preach the word of God, clearly foresee that destruction of sinners, in which others have little apprehension, and the prospect often pains them to the heart; and because they cannot hold their peace, but must warn, exhort, and expostulate with sinners, and entreat them to flee from the wrath to come, they are deemed troubleurs of the city: and they are accused of taking pleasure in denouncing damnation, whilst their aim and constant prayers are, that men may be wise and make haste to escape it, and while their benevolence, and compassion towards even their revilers, in their temporal distresses, refuse the injurious charge. But often neither warnings nor judgments make due impression even on men called Christians; they show themselves foolish and rebellious, and prove that they know not the Lord; yet, foolish children, without common sense in the concerns of their souls, though to other respects ingenious, and reputed as oracles. But what a wretched thing is it to be wise to do evil and treasure up wrath, but to have no understanding to do good! Whatever else we know not, may the Lord make us to be of good understanding in the ways of godliness! How has sin marred God's fair creation, and almost reduced it again to a confused chaos! They whose treasure is on earth may be soon bereaved of it by revolutions in kingdoms, or human affairs, or removed from it by death: and ere long the visible creation will pass away, and be no more seen. But the Lord will not make a full end of his people. As for his enemies, their light will soon be put out in utter darkness: and all those things which have here appeared admirable or honorable in them, will terminate in contempt and misery, of which no images in nature can give us an adequate conception.

NOTES.

CHAP. V. V. 1, 2. We are not informed at what time this message was delivered; it could be supposed to have been in the latter part of Josiah's reign, it might serve to explain the mystery of Providence, in removing so prematurely that pious king. Yet it can scarcely be conceived that the external conduct of the Jews was so very bad during his life: and therefore it may perhaps be referred to the time immediately succeeding his death, when their wickedness burst forth the more impetuously, for the temporary restraint that had been put upon it. The Lord speaks to the prophet, and a very few others, who interceded for the people; and directs them to make a diligent and accurate survey of Jerusalem, of her streets and broad places, where business was transacted, and where justice should have been administered; and let them see whether they could find a man that executed justice and sought the truth? and if they could, he would for his sake pardon the city. Their depravity was so universal, that none could be found, who either did justice to man, or inquired after the truth and will of God. If any such characters remained, they were driven into obscurity, and were afraid to show themselves. (Marg. Ref.) Especially not one should be met with, among the rulers and priests, who acted as a pious and upright man, in the important duties of his station: and even the few, who professed themselves the worshippers of Jehovah, and were by his name, scrupled not to commit perjury, and to use that solemn act of worship to cloak their iniquity; and hesitated not to violate the vows which they had thus ratified.
4 Therefore I said, Surely these are poor; they are foolish: for they know not the way of the Lord, nor the judgment of their God.

5 I will bring them into the wilderness, and give them up to their enemies; and when I silence them, they will cry on account of their destruction. And they will say, we have another God, and another king, not the God and the king of Israel.

6 Therefore take a lion out of the forest, and a wolf out of the waste places; they shall slay them, and a wolf out of the evening shall eat them, and the evening shall devour the lion.

7 How shall I pardon thee for this? thy children have forsaken me, and sworn by them that are no gods; when I fed them to the full, they said, We will deal treacherously with thee; they have* assembled themselves by their harlots' houses.

8 They were as fed horses in the morning: every one neighed after his neighbour's wife.

9 Shall I not visit for these things? saith the Lord: and shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this?

10 Go ye up upon her walls, and destroy; she make not a full end: take away her battlements; for they are not the Lord's.

11 For the house of Israel and the house of Judah have dealt very treacherously against me, saith the Lord.

12 They have belied the Lord, and said, It is not he; neither shall evil come upon us; neither shall we see word nor famine.

13 And the prophets shall become wind, and the word is not in them: thus shall it be done unto them.

14 Wherefore thus saith the Lord: God of hosts, Because ye speak this word, behold, I will make my words in thy mouth fire, and this people wood, and it shall devour them.
15 Lo, I will bring a nation upon you from far, 1 O house of Israel, saith the LORD: it is a mighty nation, an ancient nation, a nation whose language thou knowest not, neither understandest what they say.

16 Their quiver is as an open sepulchre, they are all mighty men.

17 And they shall eat up thine harvest and thy bread, which thy sons and thy daughters shall eat; they shall eat up thy flocks and thine herds: they shall eat up thy vines and thy fig-trees: 9 they shall impoverish thy fenced cities, wherein thou trustedst, with the sword.

18 Nevertheless, in those days, saith the LORD, I will not make a full end with you.

19 ¶ And it shall come to pass, when ye shall say, Wherefore doeth the LORD our God all these things unto us? then shalt thou answer them, Like as ye have forsaken me, and served strange gods in your land; so shall ye serve strangers in a land that is not yours.

* described as having a sharp sword proceeding out of his mouth; because the judgments he denounces against the wicked are like the sentence of a judge, which is certainly followed by execution. (Lomkh.)

V. 15—18. In the preceding verse God addressed the prophet; but here he speaks to the people, and declares that he will bring against them from afar, a very powerful and ancient nation.—The Jews had in former times been principally oppressed by the adjacent nations: but the Chaldeans came from a great distance, having subjugated all their former oppressors and become exceedingly powerful. The building of Babylon was begun soon after the flood, and we read of the Chaldeans in the book of Job, which is supposed to have been written as early as the time of Moses: (Job i. 17;) though the Chaldean monarchy had but lately been established.—God would bring this mighty nation upon them, to inflict the vengeance predicted by Moses, (Notes, Deut. xxviii. 48—59;) and as they used another language, which the Jews did not understand, they would be more regardless of their complaints, and cruel in their oppressions. When they opened their quivers, destruction would be the certain consequence; as the opening of a sepulchre denotes that death has taken place: and thus they would endure every misery, as far as consisted with their escaping total extermination. Some indeed suppose this to mean, that God would still have further judgments in reserve for them. “For all this his anger is not turned away; but his hand is stretched out still.” In either sense it is a most remarkable prediction. —The vengeance executed on the Jews for crucifying the Lord of Glory, was far more terrible, and has been of vastly longer continuance, than that brought upon them by the Chaldeans:

20 Declare this in the house of Jacob, and publish it in Judah, saying,

21 Hear now this, O foolish people, and without understanding; which have eyes, and see not; which have ears, and hear not:

22 ¶ Fear ye not me, saith the LORD; I will not place the sand for the bound of the sea by a perpetual decree, that it cannot pass it: and though the waves thereof of toss themselves, yet can they not prevail; though they roar, yet can they not pass over it.

23 But this people hath a revolting and a rebellious heart; they are revolted and gone.

24 Neither say they in their heart, Let us now fear the LORD our God, that giveth both rain in its season, and bread out of the earth.

25 Your iniquities have turned away these things, and your sins have withheld good things from you.

and yet a full end has not been made of the nation, which is at present exceedingly numerous, and is preserved distinct from other nations, no doubt for some very important purpose in Providence. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 19. Those who fall under the severity of God's judgments, are apt to think so favourably of themselves, as to wonder that they should be singled out as examples of divine vengeance. The Jews thought this severe proceeding scarcely consistent with the many gracious promises God had made unto their nation. (Lomkh.) Yet the very books of Moses, if duly attended to, were fully sufficient to silence for ever this presumptuous objection. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 21—25. The whole seed of Jacob, but especially the Jews, are here called upon to hear the rebuke of God. He had given them sense, rational powers, and abundant opportunities of information; yet they continued as senseless, if destitute of eyes, ears, and understandings. (Note, Is. vi. 9;) The restless and impetuous waves of the ocean seemed to stand in awe of that decree, which God had given from the beginning to continue in perpetual force, that they should not pass the bounds of the sandy shore: but Israel, more senseless and unruly, reverenced not the authority of God, nor trembled at his wrath; but burst all the restraints of his law, in the rebellion of their apostate hearts, and were wholly revolted and gone into idolatry, impiety, and wickedness! Neither had they understanding to consider their own interest. When they adhered to the worship of God, he gave them reasonable rains and plentiful harvests; yet when their apostasy had caused them to withhold these good things from them, they could not be induced to return to him in order that they might recover them.
26 For among my people are found wicked men: they lay wait as he that setteth snares; they set a trap, they catch men.

27 As a f cage is full of birds, so are their houses full of deceit: therefore they are become great, and waxen rich.

28 They are waxen fat, they shine; yea, they overpass the deeds of the wicked: they judge not the cause, the cause of the fatherless, yet they prosper; and the cause of the poor of this world doth not plead.

V. 26—29. Men as atrociously wicked might be found among God's people, as among the worst of the Gentiles. They were generally occupied in over-reaching and defrauding one another; and thus their houses were replenished with the gains of deceit, as the fowler's cage with the birds that he hath ensnared. In this manner they lived in luxury and magnificence, and even surpassed in wickedness the worst of sinners in other ages and nations. Nor did their rulers redress the wrong done to the poor, the widows, and orphans, being induced to connivance by bribes, or other interested motives; and by these means they prospered, whilst the Lord was preparing vengeance against the whole nation. (Note 7—9.) The last clause is very expressive in the original. "Shall not my soul be avenged on a nation which is like unto this?"

30 The most wonderful and horrible wickedness that was committed in the land, and which above all things hastened the ruin of the nation, was the combination of the false prophets and ambitious priests, to seduce the people into a presumptuous security. The prophets accommodated their predictions to the humour of the chief priests, and the princes that were influenced by them; and thus the nation was deceived into the expectation of permanent prosperity, and submitted quietly to the despotic domination of the ungodly rulers and teachers; for they loved the flattering delusion, which encouraged them in sin; and were emboldened to despise the disagreeable messages of the true prophets. But what would they do, when the event should verify those dreadful denunciations, which they now treated as the effect of a gloomy imagination or a malevolent disposition?

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.
V. 1—14.

To what an awful condition is the earth reduced by sin, when even in those cities and countries, that are most favoured with the means of grace, so few are found, that "execute judgment and seek the truth," or who make any conscience of observing the most solemn oaths or sacred engagements? Alas! impiety and iniquity greatly abound in this our land; yet we may find a considerable number, who are both conscientious in their whole conduct, and steady friends to the truths of God: and for their sakes, in answer to their prayers, and by his blessing on their endeavours, we hope that the Lord will yet spare us. It must, however, be confessed, that the more carefully we investigate the state of religion, comparing it accurately with the standard of Scripture, the worse opinion we shall be constrained to entertain of it: and too often we find, that an attachment to the truths and an attendance on the most sacred observances of religion, are made subservient to more secular designs. But nothing more provokes the Lord than our multiplied perjuries, prevaricating subscriptions in sacred things, and prostituted sacramental engagements.

—We are sure that the eyes of the Lord are upon the truth; and, believing him to be righteous in his most mysterious dispensations, we shall gradually be led to see something of the reasons of his conduct; by observing the ingratitude, perverseness, and obstinate rebellion of sinners, who harden their hearts against his mercies, rebukes, corrections, and convictions. This is readily allowed to be the case of numbers in the lower orders of society, who are as prolific as ignorant; who neither know nor desire to be taught the way of the Lord, and who plead their want of learning and leisure as an excuse for the most abandoned vice and iniquity. But if the faithful minister of God, discouraged by his ill success amongst them, and by their unteachableness and obstinacy, should embrace some opportunity of betaking himself to those in superior stations, and such as possess authority, influence, dignity, or learning; he will commonly have cause to mourn under still greater obstructions and delays. He will find the pride of submission, the habits of being flattered, humoured, submitted to, and indulged, by every one and in every thing; their infidel contempt of sacred things, which they have learned sophistically to defend; and their enmity to the truths and precepts of the Gospel, which run counter to all their maxims, habits, and pursuits, far more insurmountable obstacles to his success, than the ignorant profaneness of the unprincipled poor. So that, in our land, though we have a few exceptions, to the honour of divine grace, to which nothing is impossible: yet it may be said of most of the great and noble, that "they have altogether broken the yoke, and burst the bonds." Nay, in one respect they are worse than the Jewish nobles: for they are many of them more unacquainted with the Scriptures than the untaught multitude. This is an alarming symptom of the decayed condition of our constitution in church and state; and as our transgressions are multiplied, and our backslidings increased, we cannot but fear that national judgments, though mercifully retarded, will at length overtake us. And indeed how can we expect, that the Lord should always bear with and pardon us? when our youth are...
CHAPTER VI.

Ye children of Benjamin, gather yourselves to flee out of the midst of Jerusalem, and blow the trumpet in Tekoa, and set up a sign of fire in Beth-haccerem: for evil appeareth out of the north, and great destruction.

I have likened the daughter of Jerusalem to a comely and delicate woman.

The shepherds with their flocks shall come unto her: she shall pitch their tents with her, and set up their curtains for her; she shall make great fires of stubble, and lay meat in her ashes: she shall eat ashes for meat, and drench her soul with boozing, and be drenched with drunkenness.

The worship and service of his Maker! And whilst the Lord, year after year, giveth plenteous seasons, and reserveth to us the appointed weeks of harvest, men live on his bounty, and are thus emboldened to increase their transgressions against him! Nay, when their iniquities have runned away these good things from them, they seldom so consider even their temporal interest, as to use any means of recovering his favour; but vent their disquietude in rebellious complaints and bitter revilings of one another! It is notorious, that wickedness of every kind prevails among nominal Christians as much as among heathens; may, that in some respects they even exceed them: so that they treat their brethren as lawful prey, and set traps and lay snares for each other, to plunder, defraud, enslave, or murder them, and thus fill their houses with abundance, through deceit; they wax rich and great, and live in luxury and splendour on the spoils of the poor. Nay, it is also to be lamented, that even rulers, out of interest and policy, often leave such men unmolested, and do not judge the cause of the orphan, the widow, the destitute, and oppressed. But whilst these things ripen guilty nations for vengeance, and ruin the souls of men, nothing is more so terrible, as the ambition, avarice, ignorance, unfaithfulness, and wickedness of numbers, who are the nominal priests and prophets of the Lord. Too many, who pretend to teach religion, prophesy falsely; others enjoy affluence, dignity, and authority, by their means; and most of the people love to be thus soothed into a false and fatal security! But what will they do in the approaching day of judgment, and final retribution? "Oh that men were wise, that they understood these things, that they would consider their latter end!"

V. 15-31.

Ministers are not at present authorized to predict national judgments, or to declare what instruments God intends to employ, or in what way he will punish sinners; but they are commissioned to declare, that all the prosperity and confidence of the ungodly will shortly fail, and leave them in everlasting misery and despair. If men will yet inquire, wherefore the Lord doeth these things unto them? Let them be referred to their unnumerable iniquities and manifold ungodliness for an answer. And let them be reminded, that the most tremendous effects of their sins might yet be prevented, if they could but be prevailed on to use their senses, faculties, and advantages in a proper manner. But, alas! for this they have no disposition; "having eyes they see not, having ears they hear not," and their rational powers leave them without understanding. So that, whilst all nature proclaims the perfections, and obey the mandate of her Creator; man, with all his boasted powers, neither fears his wrath, regards his authority, is grateful for his mercies, nor values his favour; but his revolting and rebellious heart carries him far off from the worship and service of his Maker!
their tents against her round about; they shall feed every one in his place.

4 Prepare ye war against her: arise, and let us go up at noon. Woe unto us! for the day goeth away, for the shadow of the evening is stretched out.

5 Arise, and let us go by night, and let us destroy her palaces.

6 For thus hath the Lord of hosts said, Hew ye down trees, and cast a mount against Jerusalem: this is the city to be visited; she is a wholly oppression in the midst of her.

7 As a fountain casteth out waters, so she casteth out her wickedness: violence and spoil is heard in her; before me continually is grief and wounds.

8 Be thou instructed, O Jerusalem, lest my soul depart from thee; lest I make thee desolate, a land not inhabited.

9 Thus saith the Lord of hosts, They shall thoroughly glean the remnant of Israel as a vine: turn back thine hand as a grape-gatherer into the baskets.

10 ¶ To whom shall I speak and give warning, that they may hear? their ear is uncircumscribed, and they cannot hearken: behold, the word of the Lord is unto them a reproach, they have no delight in it.

11 Therefore I am full of the fury of the Lord; I am weary with holding in: I will pour it out upon the children abroad, and upon the assembly of young men together: for even the husband with the wife shall be taken, the aged with him that is full of days.

12 And their houses shall be turned unto others, with their fields and wives together: for I will stretch out my hand upon the inhabitants of the land, saith the Lord.

13 For from the least of them even unto the greatest of them, every one is given to covetousness; and from the prophet even unto the priest every one dealeth falsely. 14 They have healed also the hurt of the daughter of my people slightly; saying, Peace, peace; when there is no peace.

15 Were they ashamed when they had committed abomination? nay, they were not at all ashamed, neither could they blush: therefore they shall fall among them that fall; at the time that I visit them, they shall be cast down, saith the LORD.

16 Thus saith the LORD, Stand ye in the ways, and see, and ask for the old paths, where is the good way, and walk therein, and ye shall find rest for your souls. But they said, We will not walk therein.

17 Also I set watchmen over you, saying, Hearken to the trumpet. But they said, We will not hear.

18 Therefore, hear ye nations, and know, O congregation, what is among them.

19 Hear, O earth: behold, I will bring evil upon this people, even the fruit of their thoughts, because they have hearkened unto my words, nor to my law, but rejected it.

20 To what purpose cometh there to me incense from Sheba, and the sweet cane from a far country? 4 your burnt-offerings are not acceptable, nor your sacrifices sweet unto me.

21 Therefore saith the LORD, Behold, I will lay stumbling-blocks before this people, and the fathers and the sons together shall fall upon them; the neighbour and his friend shall perish.

22 Thus saith the LORD, Behold, a people cometh from the north country, and a great nation shall be raised from the sides of the earth.

23 They shall lay hold on bow and spear; they are cruel, and have no mercy; 4 their voice roareth like the sea; and they ride upon horses, set in array as men for war against thee, O daughter of Zion.

24 We have heard the fame thereof;
27 I have set thee for a tower, and a fortress among my people, that thou mayest know and try their way.

28 They are all grievous revolters, walking by slanders: they are brass and iron: they are all corrupters.

29 The bellows are burned, the lead is consumed of the fire; the founder melteth in vain: for the wicked are not plucked away.

30 Reprobate silver shall men call them, because the Lord hath rejected them.

---

They that are intent upon worldly gain or greatness, though by means of the miseries of others, are assiduous, indefatigable, lose no time, deny themselves even ordinary refreshments, and consider hindrances as grievous calamities: how shameful then is it, that we should be so attached to our ease and indulgence, when the glory of God, the welfare of our neighbours, and the salvation of our souls, demand our vigorous and patient activity! The Lord uses wicked men as the executioners of his vengeance: and he girds, directs, and prospera them, though they know him not: but it is far more desirable, in the humblest station, to subserve the good of our brethren, and it will meet with a far different recompense. The wickedness of men’s lives springs from the corrupt nature of their hearts; this fountain may, in part and for a time, be stopped; yet it will cast forth its waters; and unless it be cleansed and changed, we can do nothing spiritually good.

All the secret, as well as open, iniquity in the world, is continually before the eyes of the Lord, and he will repay oppressors with more terrible miseries than they occasion to their poor brethren. To be separated from God and his favour, is the greatest evil that can befall a rational creature: yet numbers hear the Judge himself declare that he will at last say to all the wicked, Depart from me, cursed, into everlasting fire, preparèd for the devil and his angels; and yet continue careless and unconcerned! Nay, they even seem to say to the Almighty, Depart from us, we desire not the knowledge of thy ways! --

So long as men continue uninstructed amidst opportunities of instruction, and unsanctified amidst the best means of sanctification, there is reason to fear that the Lord will depart from them in final indignation: he will surely withdraw the light of his gospel from those who generally despise and abuse it: and this is a more grievous judgment than any temporal calamity. When he shall arise to take vengeance, no sinners, of any age, rank, or sex, can possibly escape; but they shall all be collected, as grapes are gathered to be cast into the wine-press. Obvious and incontrovertible as these truths are, but few properly notice them. Most men stop their ears against all salutary warnings and instructions: and their pride and lusts render them incapable of hearing, understanding, believing, and obeying the gospel of Christ. They deem the faithful preaching of God’s word a reproach and a snare, and neither neglect all religious instruction, or turn away their ears from the truth, or hearken to fables. This often so

V. 24–26. The people seem to be here prophetically represented as discussing on the report of the Chaldean invasion: and being filled with anguish and dismay, they exhort one another to keep close within the walls of Jerusalem; as all other places were exposed to the ravages of the enemy, and full of terror and destruction. And then the people are warned to show every token of sorrow and distress, as they would suddenly be plundered, with immense slaughter, by the victorious assailants.

V. 27–30. The Lord had raised up the prophet, made him courageous and firm in his duty, and secured him as a fortress against every enemy: not with an intention to preserve the city from ruin; but to prove and discover the temper of the people, to show their incorrigible wickedness, and to illustrate the divine justice in punishing them: thus he was appointed to investigate their whole conduct, and to bring in his report concerning them. For they were most grievous rebels and apostates, who slandered the ways and prophethood of God, to excuse themselves. They pretended to be gold or silver: but indeed they were base metal, without any mixture of precious ore; and they continually corrupted one another more and more. The prophets, whom the Lord used as instruments to refine and purify them, were not only worn out to no purpose, but put to death for attempting it; as if the refiner’s bowels were thrown into the fire, and his head consumed to no purpose: yet, all the judgments and mercies of God were in vain; for wickedness was not separated from among them. Indeed the whole mass of them was proved to be refuse metal, and not silver, as it had once appeared to be; and men would treat them with contempt, because God no longer regarded them as his people. Their impiety resembles brass, and their obstinacy may be compared to iron. Before the use of quicksilver was known, they made use of lead for refining their metals. (Lom. 355.) (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1–15.

Ungodly prosperity, when the Lord is provoked to withdraw his protection, renders men the richer prey to the rapacious, and affords them no security against their depredations: and the more admired, indulged, or delicate they are, the more dreadful will they find it to endure hardship.
CHAPTER VII.

Jeremiah is sent to call the Jews to repentance that they might not be removed; to reprove their presumptuous confidence in the temple, while living in gross wickedness; and to predict that Jerusalem would be desolated like Sihon, and the people carried captive, as Israel had been, 1-15. God directs the prophet not to pray for them. He shows him their idolatries and the judgments about to come upon them, 16-20. He refuses the sacrifices of the disobedient; and exposes the perverse conduct of the nation from their departure out of Egypt, 21-28. A call to mourning for the prevailing abominations, and a denunciation of desolating judgments, 29-34.

THE word that came to Jeremiah from the Lord, saying,

2 Stand in the gate of the Lord’s house, and proclaim there this word, and say, b Hear the word of the Lord, all ye of Judah, that enter in at these gates to worship the Lord.

nothing of these ways, and take no pains to inquire after them: many prefer modern improvements and discoveries: may, many treat these ancient ways as novel inventions and enthusiastic rhapsodies; and others have some speculative knowledge of them, yet do not walk in them. But if men will not obey the voice of God, nor take warning when his watchmen sound the alarm, nor flee to his appointed refuge; it will appear at the day of judgment to all the world, that their ruin originated from their own wicked thoughts, because they would not hearken unto God’s words, but rejected them. Nor can any man reasonably expect that the Lord should accept the most costly oblations or services, which are offered in impurity, or in proud contempt of the sacrifice and intercession of our great High Priest. To such men, even this tried Foundation becomes a Rock of offence: and every doctrine, and ordinance, and providential dispensation, concurs in binding and hardening them to their perdition: and thus unbelievers will perish together, being unable to help one another. They despise indeed the distant report, both of temporal judgments and of eternal punishment; but their near approach will soon cause their courage to fail, and then anguish will seize upon them: for the sword of the most cruel enemy is as nothing, in comparison of the final wrath of Almighty God. In short, sinners must lament and mourn, either here in penitent sorrow and self-abasement; or hereafter with doleful, unwavailing, and eternal wailing and gnashing of teeth. If the bold and faithful ministers of God are not instrumental to the conversion of those whom they address, they will be found unanswerable witnesses against them, and men will be judged and condemned according to their word. And when warnings, corrections, rebukes, and every means of grace, leave not renewed, they will be left as rejected of God to everlasting contempt and misery.

V. 16—30.

If we would learn the safe and happy path, amidst the discordant opinions that prevail, let us look well to our steps, put ourselves in the way of instruction, ask wisdom of God, and reduce what we know to practice: especially let us diligently inquire for the old paths, in which patriarchs, prophets, apostles, martyrs, and other honoured servants of God, have walked, and which they have pointed out to others. (Notes, Heb. xi.) Following their steps, we cannot fail of finding rest to our souls. But many know

NOTES.

CHAP. VII. V. 1, 2. This chapter begins a new prophecy, which probably was delivered some time after the preceding. The prophet was commanded to station himself in the entrance of the temple, and there to proclaim his message to all who came thither to worship, probably on some of their solemn feast-days. This must have given great offence to the chief priests, and those in authority in ecclesiastical concerns.

2 R 2
3 Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; 4 Amend your ways and your doings, and I will cause you to dwell in this place.

4 Trust ye not in lying words, saying, 5 The temple of the Lord, The temple of the Lord, The temple of the Lord, these.

5 For if ye thoroughly amend your ways and your doings; if ye thoroughly execute judgment between a man and his neighbour;

6 If ye oppress not the stranger, the fatherless, and the widow, and shed not innocent blood in this place, neither walk after other gods whom ye know not;

7 Then will I cause you to dwell in this place, in the land that I gave to your fathers for ever.

8 Behold, ye trust in lying words, that cannot profit.

9 Will ye steal, murder, and commit adultery, and swear falsely, and burn incense unto Baal, 10 and walk after other gods whom ye know not?

V. 4. The people glorified and trusted in the temple of Jehovah, even when they were given over to idolatry and wickedness: and when the prophets foretold judgments from God upon the city and nation, they boasted that the temple and its courts and solemnities belonged to the Lord; and they were confident that he would spare the city on that account. Thus they trusted in lying words, which the false prophets spake to them: as if they were so unalterably the favourites of heaven, that they might be sure of protection, whatever wickedness they committed.

V. 5-7. As the omniscient God foresaw that the Jews would not thus repent, and amend their lives: the absolute predictions of desolating judgments were not consistent with these conditional promises: and as it was their undeniable duty, thoroughly to amend their ways, and to "do justice, love mercy, and walk humbly with "your God," it was peculiarly honourable to him, thus to hold out encouragements to them, in case they attended to his exhortations. The prescience or decrees of God cannot be the rule or motive of man's duty: and the exhortations, promises, and threatenings, should always be considered as abstracted from that incomprehensible subject: because this is the scriptural and rational way of stating this matter, for "secret things belong unto "the Lord our God; but those things which are revealed be "long to us, and to our children for ever, that we may do "all the words of his law."

V. 10. The Jews acted as if God had delivered and protected them, that they might have the opportunity of committing every kind of abomination: thus men sometimes appear very penitent, when they are sick and think themselves near death; but when they recover, they return to wickedness. as if they supposed the Lord had restored them for that purpose. Or they thought that an attendance on the temple worship had delivered them from the guilt of their past sins, and that they might now without concourse return to their idolatries and iniquities: as some men task themselves with fasting and devotions, and come to the Lord's table; that, having, as they think, settled the old account, they may return to their former course of life without scruple, till the next reeking day. Thus they made the house of God a den of robbers, by frequenting it in the midst of their unrepented frauds, oaths, murders, adulteries, and perjuries; and yet they thought, that the temple, which they so profaned, would be their protection. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 12-15. (Note, I Sam. i.-iv.) The tabernacle and ark of God had been long stationary at Shiloh; till at length the iniquity of Eli's sons, and the wickedness of the people, provoked God to give up the ark into captivity: then it was finally removed from Shiloh, which was afterwards reduced, or desolated. Yet the inhabitants of that city had had as good ground to presume that God would preserve them for the sake of his sanctuary, as the inhabitants of Jerusalem now had; especially as the latter were become still more abandoned, in the midst of more abundant means and advantages. Accordingly the Lord assured them, that he would deal with Jerusalem, as he had with 16 Therefore pray not thou for this people, neither lift up cry nor prayer for them, neither make intercession to me: for I will not hear thee.

17 Seest thou not what they do in the cities of Judah and in the streets of Jerusalem?

18 The children gather wood, and the fathers kindle the fire, and the women knead their dough, to make cakes to the queen of heaven, and to pour out drink-offerings unto other gods, that they may provoke me to anger.

19 Do they provoke me to anger? saith the Lord: do they not provoke themselves to the confusion of their own faces?

20 Therefore thus saith the Lord God: Behold, mine anger and my fury shall be poured out upon this place, upon man, and upon beast, and upon the trees of the field, and upon the fruit of the ground: and it shall burn, and it shall not be quenched.

21 ¶ Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; I put thy burnt-offerings unto thy sacrifices, and eat flesh.

22 For I spake not unto your fathers, nor commanded them, in the day that I brought them out of the land of Egypt, concerning burnt-offerings or sacrifices:

23 But this thing commanded I them, saying, Obey my voice, and I will be your God, and ye shall be my people: and walk ye in all the ways that I have commanded you, that it may be well unto you.

24 But they hearkened not, nor inclined their ear, but walked in the counsels, and in the imagination of their evil heart, and went backward, and not forward.

25 Since the day that your fathers came forth out of the land of Egypt unto this day, I have even sent unto you all my servants the prophets, daily rising up early and sending them.

26 Yet they hearkened not nor inclined their ear, but hardened their neck: they did worse than their fathers.

Shiloh; destroying the temple, removing all the sacred utensils, and utterly destroying the city: and that he would drive the inhabitants out of their favoured land, into heathen countries, as he had done the Israelites, banishing them, as it were, from the sight of his eyes; (Deut. xii. 12.)

V. 16. The prophet, hoping that the threatenings were not absolute, continued to intercede for the people. But the Lord not only said to him, "Let me alone;" (Note, Ezek. xxxix. 10;) but he absolutely forbade him to pray for them any more, for he would not hear him, nor would he have him pray in vain. He might pray for the conversion and salvation of individuals; for the mitigation of national judgments; for the preservation of the Jews during the captivity, and for their restoration: but he was not allowed any more to depreciate the destruction of the city and temple, the desolations of the land, and the captivity of the people. Nothing but an universal reformion, which God foresaw would not be effected, could deliver the Jews from captivity and desolation.—The divine decree being without repentance irrevocable, God forbids Jeremiah to interpose his prayers for the reversing of it. (Lomth.)

V. 17, 18. To convince the prophet that the irreversible sentence was most just, the Lord calls his attention to the unanimous zeal of old and young, men and women, for their abominable idolatries.

—Queen, &c. This may be understood of the moon, or of the whole frame of the visible heavens, of which the people had some image or symbol, that they worshipped with great earnestness. Some think that the cakes here mentioned were stamped with the likeness of the idol to which they were offered. It is remarkable that the papists have adopted this title in the worship of the Virgin Mary; styling her "the queen of heaven," as if they were ambitious of resembling the Jews in their idolatry.

V. 19. The people committed wickedness, as if they meant it on purpose to affront the Lord: but did they think they could do him any real harm? Or could they expect any other, than to expose themselves by it to confusion and misery?

V. 21—23. The Jews confided in their sacrifices, as if by them they made the Lord their debtor. But he bade them take their burnt-offerings (the whole of which was consumed on the altar) along with their other sacrifices, and feast upon them, for he would not accept of them: or to put the burnt-offerings with the peace-offerings, on which the priests and offerers feasted, instead of consuming them on the altar. The intention of the whole revelation to Israel at mount Sinai was, to lead the people to obedience, and the sacrifices were appointed in subserviency to that end. They were in themselves instances of obedience; they formed an expression of the people's repentance, and faith in the promised Saviour; and they were means of grace, and of communion with God: all which, when genuine, conduces to the conscientious obedience of holy fear and love. In this way the Lord would have been their God, and they would have been his people: but all their external observances must be worthless, when this obedience was wanting. (Note, 1 Sam. xv. 22, 23.)
27 Therefore thou shalt speak all these words unto them; but they will not hearken unto thee: thou shalt also call unto them, but they will not answer thee.

28 But thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord, a nation that obeyeth not the voice of the Lord their God, nor receiveth correction; truth is perished, and is cut off from their mouth.

29 ¶ Hur off thine hair, O Jerusalem, and cast it away, and take up a lamentation on high places: for the Lord hath rejected and forsaken the generation of his wrath.

30 For the children of Judah have done evil in my sight, saith the Lord: they have set their abominations in the midst of their sanctuary, which is called by my name, to pollute it.

31 And they have built the high places of Tophet, which is in the valley of the son of Hinnom, to burn their sons and their daughters in the fire; which I commanded them not, neither came it into my heart.

32 Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that it shall no more be called Tophet, nor the valley of slaughter: for they shall bury in Tophet till there be no place.

33 And the carcases of this people shall be meat for the fowls of the heaven, and for the beasts of the earth; and none shall fray them away.

34 Then will I cause to cease from before the cities of Judah, and from the streets of Jerusalem, the voice of mirth, and the voice of joy, and the voice of the bridegroom, and the voice of the bride: for the land shall be desolate.
CHAP. VIII.

A prediction of the indignities shown to the bones of the idolatrous Jews; and of such miseries, that men would prefer death to life, 1—3. Severe reproofs of the obstinacy, avarice, and shameless wickedness of the people, 4—12. A prophetic description of the dismay occasioned by the Chaldean invasion, 13—17. The grief of the prophet in the prospect of these calamities, 18—22.

deny, overlook, or evade these conclusions; by various subterfuges; and they turn from one delusion to another, as times and circumstances change. The legal Pharisees, for instance, pays a sort of guilt-rent to the Lord, by a task of austerity or devotion; and thus he purchases the liberty, as he supposes, to live the rest of his time according to his own plan. And many such men, after all their sanctimonious scrupulousness, will cheat, lie, perjure, commit adultery, or any other wickedness, which they hope may escape detection and punishment from man. But the evangelical Pharisee and antinomian enthusiast make a cheaper bargain. They receive a mutilated and distorted evangelical creed into a carnal heart; they contend earnestly for the doctrines of free grace: they mistake some change of sentiment or sect, or some lively impression on the imagination or affections, for a new creation unto holiness; they call the most open apostasy backsliding; or the most notorious and unrepented vices “the spots of God’s children;” and then, by abusing the doctrine of final perseverance, they hope to live the life of the wicked, and at last to die the death of the righteous! Thus men sin on, that grace may abound, and treat Christ as the minister of sin; they think themselves delivered from wrath, to commit all kinds of abomination; and speak of the Church of God, as if it were a den of robbers, adulterers, and covetous oppressors! They who are not conversant with such matters, can scarcely deem it possible that men should hold such impious sentiments: yet it is, alas! too true that many do; and it is more incredible, than that the Jews should come from their idols and lusts to the temple of God, and then be confident of his protection, because his ordinances were thus profaned among them! If any thing could break this strong delusion, the dealings of God with his ancient people might teach men another lesson: but the cross of Christ, when duly understood, forms the most effectual antidote to these detestable sentiments. Did the Son of God then give himself for our transgressions, to show the justice and holiness of God, the excellency and obligation of the violated law, and the evil and desert of sin; and was this in order to give his followers leave to commit sin with impunity? But when men have gone far into these delusions, they are seldom recovered: and though we are not forbidden to pray for any person, or people, by name; yet there are some, respecting whom we feel discouragement, whenever we attempt to plead in their behalf: as if the Lord said to us, “Make no intercession for them, for I will not hear thee.”

V. 16—22.

Whatever enormity we witness in the conduct of the ignorant and profane, there remains some hope concerning them: but presumptuous professors, who commit and plead for sin, must in general be let alone. If, however, they will learn nothing from us, we may learn from them, “while we think we stand, to take heed lest we fall;” and to be as diligent and as careful in instructing our children in the truths of God, and in habituating them to attend on divine ordinances, as they often are in initiating them in the mysteries of iniquity. Hardened sinners often delight in showing their contempt of God, as if this could interrupt his happiness, when it only provokes him to hasten and enhance their misery. Nothing can avert the ruin of those who persist in disobedience: and we understand the Gospel as little as the Jews did the law, if we think that a notional belief and a high confidence that we are the people of God can avail those who persist in rebellion; or that he will accept any particular actions or services, which are intended as compensations for continuing in the practice of some beloved iniquity. The way is indeed open for the sinner to return; and when we are brought to obey the Gospel, all former offences are pardoned, imperfect services are accepted, the Lord becomes our God, and numbers us among his people; we learn to walk in his ways, and it is well with us; his Gospel furnishes us with motives, encouragements, and assistance; and his ordinances are means of grace to our souls. But he abhors external services, when men continue to follow their own counsels, to walk after their own evil imaginations; and when they grow worse in the midst of opportunities of improvement. The minister must speak all the message of God, though men will not hear: he must call on them to repent, and invite them to come to Christ, even if he knows they will reject his message; and when individuals or nations cast off the authority of God, and refuse correction; or become so addicted to dissimulation and hypocrisy, that truth perisheth, and is cut off from their mouth; their guilt should be charged home upon them, and warning given them. The Lord hates sin the most when it is nearest to him; and the profanation of his solemn ordinances is the worst of all impiety. If men were required to endure such losses, hardships, weariness, or expense, in the service of God, as they often impose on themselves in their sinful pursuits, they would complain loudly of his commandments. But they are frequently cruel to themselves, their families, and children; they ruin their health or circumstances, and act contrary to natural affection, without complaining, when serving sin and Satan. All the precepts and prohibitions of the Lord are holy, just, and good; and the self-denial he requires, rational and salutary. But the devil is a cruel tyrant in this world; what will he then be, as a tormentor in the next? There all joy will for ever cease from the workers of iniquity. May we then learn to rely on holy and spiritual joys, and to sit loose to all other satisfactions, however lawful in themselves.
A t that time, saith the Lord, they shall bring out the bones of the kings of Judah, and the bones of his princes, and the bones of the priests, and the bones of the prophets, and the bones of the inhabitants of Jerusalem, out of their graves:

2 And they shall spread them before the sun, and the moon, and all the host of heaven, whom they have loved, and whom they have served, and after whom they have walked, and whom they have sought, and whom they have worshipped: they shall not be gathered, nor be buried; they shall be for dung upon the face of the earth.

3 And death shall be chosen rather than life, by all the residue of them that remain of this evil family, which remain in all the places whither I have driven them, saith the Lord of hosts.

4 ¶ Moreover, thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord; Shalt they fall, and not arise? shall he turn away, and not return?

5 Why then is this people of Jerusalem slidden back by a perpetual backsliding? they hold fast deceit, they refuse to return.

6 ¶ They hearkened and heard, but they spake not aright: no man repented of his wickedness, saying, What have I done? Every one turned to his course, as the horse rusheth into the battle.

7 Yea, the stork in the heaven knoweth her appointed times; and the turtle, and the crane, and the swallow, observe the time of their coming; but my people know not the judgment of the Lord.

8 How do ye say, We are wise, and the law of the Lord is with us? Lo, certainly in vain made he it; the pen of the scribes is in vain.

9 ¶ The wise men are ashamed, they are dismayed and taken; lo, they have rejected the word of the Lord; and what wisdom is in them?

NOTES.

CHAP. VIII. V. 1—7. When the Chaldeans had taken Jerusalem, without doubt they accomplished this prediction: and being enraged at the Jews, especially at the rulers and teachers, who had violated their treaties, and made so obstinate a resistance, they absurdly vented their indignation, by abusing the bodies of the dead, as well as by massacring the living. Thus the bones were taken from the graves, and spread before the sun, moon, and stars: and they were disgraced and left as dung on the earth, as it were in the presence of those creatures whom they had worshipped and served, instead of the great Creator. Their idolatry is spoken of in a variety of phrases of similar import, to show their excessive attachment to it. And the remains of Israel, (no more worthy to be called a holy nation, but an evil family,) being dispersed into distant countries, would encounter such miseries, as would cause them to envy those who were slain at the taking of the city. Some think that the Chaldeans broke open the monuments of the great men, in searching for the treasures which were frequently laid up in them. The latter part of the second verse may more literally be rendered, "Because they loved them, and because they served them," &c. They were thus disgraced, by the just judgment of God, for their idolatry.

V. 4—7. Some explain the fourth verse to this sense, "Are they so plunged in sins and miseries—that there is no hope of their recovery? If they will turn to God, will not he immediately be pacified and return to them?" (Lowth.) The same word is in that verse rendered turn and return; but if a man have turned out of the way, he must turn again, in order to return into it; so that the same sense is preserved by the interpretation given below, which seems most agreeable to the context, and the scope of the prophet's keen expostulations. If men fall into a pit, or fall down by the road, they attempt to rise again, and are glad of assistance; when they fall into trouble, they endeavour to extricate themselves; and if a traveller have lost his way, he will bear to be told of his mistake, and be ready to ask for information, and to return back to the road. Why then did the people of Jerusalem persist in apostasy from God? Why were they so obstinate in their idolatry, notwithstanding all the methods used to reclaim them? It was undeniable, that they were fallen into sin and misery; and yet they held fast the delusion, and could not be induced to return to the worship and service of God! They were fallen into a pit, and would not attempt to get out of it! They had wandered from the way, and would not attempt to return to it! The Lord had his eye upon them in all their trials, but he saw no man who spoke aright and as became sinners in such circumstances. None of them repented of their sins, or condemned themselves for their rebellion, ingratitude, and folly. On the contrary, every one of them returned to his sinful practices, with as little regard to consequences, as the impetuous horse rushes into the battle. Even the birds of passage knew the times which Providence had appointed for their removal from one climate to another; but the Jews, more stupid than they, could not perceive the signs of the times; they did not see, that the Lord was about to execute judgments which could not be shunned, without repentance and conversion; indeed they knew neither their duty, nor the rules of the Lord's dealings with them.
CHAPTER VIII.

10 Therefore will I give their wives unto others, and their fields to them that shall inherit them: for every one from the least even unto the greatest is given to covetousness: from the prophet even unto the priest every one dealeth falsely.

11 For they have healed the hurt of the daughter of my people slightly, saying, Peace, peace; when there is no peace.

12 Were they ashamed when they had committed abomination? Nay, they were not at all ashamed, neither could they blush: therefore shall they fall among them that fall: in the time of their visitation they shall be cast down, saith the Lord.

13 ¶ I will surely consume them, saith the Lord: there shall be no grapes on the vine, nor figs on the fig-tree, and the leaf shall fade; and the things that I have given them shall pass away from them.

V. 8, 9. (Notes, Rom. ii. 17—23.) The Jews valued themselves upon their superior wisdom and knowledge, and upon having the law of God among them. But what ground had they for such glorying, when they were guilty of the most atrocious idolatry and iniquity? They might as well have been left in ignorance with the poor Gentiles. The Lord had given them the law, and the scribes laboured in writing copies of it, and expounding it, to no purpose, if obedience was not rendered to it. Indeed their politicians and counsellors could not prevent the ruin of the state; they would be frustrated in all their devices, put to shame, dismayed, and taken prisoners. All that wisdom could be in such men, as rejected the truth, precepts, and warnings of God's word! The title of Scribes, as applied to the skill of transcribing or interpreting the law, was first given to Ezra; (that is, according to the order of the sacred books, in our Bibles, for Jeremiah lived long before Ezra;) who was not merely a copier of the law, but likewise an expounder of the difficulties in it. And it is likely none made it their business to write copies of the law, but those who were well versed in the study of it; which would best secure them from committing mistakes in their copies. (Lomith.) (Notes, xxxvi. 4. Ezra vii. 6—10. Neh. viii. 1—13. Matt. xii. 51, 52.)

V. 10—12. (Note, vi. 13—15.) The fields would not only be levelled, and the crops carried off and cattle driven away, but God would give the estates of the Jews to those who would permanently possess them as their own inheritance.

V. 13. The verse may be literally translated, "In gathering I will consume them, saith Jehovah. There are no grapes on the vine; no figs on the fig-tree; the very leaf is fallen and what I gave them shall pass away." Israel was the vine, or fig-tree: but there was no fruit on the vine, or fig-tree, even the profession of true religion was cast off; and therefore God would take away from the people all the peculiar advantages which he had afforded them. (Notes, Is. v. 1—9. Matt. xxi. 18—20. Luke xiii. 6—9.)

V. 14—16. The Jews are again introduced, conferring together on the report of the Chaldean invasion. They excite one another without delay to leave the villages and lands, that they might take refuge in the defended cities; and there remain inactive, unless forced to resist by a close siege: for they saw the hand of God in the visitation, and this damped their hopes and enervated their efforts; as he had, for their sins, given them water mingled with gall to drink. This may be considered either as the language of the remnant, who humbly themselves under the affliction of God: or of those that counted him their inexorable enemy, and sat down in sullen despondency. The former had hoped, that their brethren would have joined with them in repentance and prayer, and that the storm would thus have been averted: the latter, through their own presumption and the deception of their false prophets, had expected peace and deliverance, when these desolating judgments came upon them. The snorting of the horses in the Chaldean army being heard in the northern extremity of the land, terror would soon diffuse itself everywhere, and speedily be followed by tremendous devastations, not only in the open country, but in Jerusalem itself. This last verse is awfully sublime.

V. 17. The Chaldeans are represented as pestiferous serpents, on account of their motives and conduct in this invasion, and its fatal effects upon the Jews. The invaders were so cruel, subtle, and malicious, and so intent upon the spoil, that they were deaf to all arguments and entreaties; nothing could mollify them, or interrupt their progress, or escape their ravages. (Note, Ps. lxxx. 3—5.)
19 Behold, the voice of the cry of the daughter of my people, because of them that dwell in a far country: Is not the Lord in Zion? is not her king in her? Why have they provoked me to anger with their graven images, and with strange vanities?

20 The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved. V. 18, 19. The prophet complains that he was ready to sink under the pressure of his sorrow: he had endeavoured to comfort himself in submission to the will of God; but Jerusalem and her inhabitants, exposed to be plundered and massacred, continually haunted his imagination, and the cries of the sufferers still sounded in his ears. Nay, even before these calamities arrived, the people distressed him by inquiring, whether Jehovah did not inhabit Zion? and whether their king was not of David's line, and of God's own appointment? Or whether God himself, the King of Israel, was not in her? (Is. xii. 6.) How then could he leave his city to be profaned and spoiled by idolaters? Would not this dishonour his great name? In answer to this the Lord demands, Why the Jews had renounced his worship, and provoked him to anger with their multiplied idolatry? They had broken the covenant and defiled the city and temple, and his honour required him to execute conflagration punishment on them. "The words may be rendered more agreeably to the Hebrew, thus, "The voice of the cry of the daughters of my people, from a land afar off." So that the prophet represents the doleful complaints of the Jews, under a state of captivity; as if God had quite forsaken and disowned them. "But why have ye provoked "me?" &c. (Lomb.) The instruction is the same, whether our translation be adhered to, or this adopted.

V. 20. The people seem here to speak. When pressed closely by the siege, they had waited for deliverance in vain. The Egyptians were expected to come to their relief: but the harvest and the summer were past, and they were not delivered, and destruction now stared them in the face.

V. 21, 22. The prophet here sympathized with his people in their troubles, for he was melancholy, disconsolate, and stupefied with astonishment. He saw the kingdom like a man expiring of wounds, to which no proper remedy was applied: yet as Gilead produced balm, and there were physicians or surgeons who had skill to use it for healing wounds; so in this case, likewise, effectual relief might be obtained. The Lord was ever ready to deliver his people when they returned to him; his mercy and grace were proposed to all who sought them; and his prophets were sent to exhort and instruct them. Why then did they remain in so hopeless a condition? Because they were set against their only remedy and Physician, and were mainly employed in seeking help in other ways and from other quarters. "I am black," I look ghastly, as those that are dying." God had sent his prophets, as so many spiritual physicians; and they had given them the best advice: but the fault lay wholly in the patients themselves, who refused to submit to their prescriptions. (Lomth.) and the uncircumcised, will be punished together, 25, 26.

Oh that my head were waters, and mine eyes a fountain of tears, that I might weep day and night for the slain of thy daughter of my people.

2 Oh that I had in the wilderness a lodging place of way-faring men; that I might leave my people, and go from them: for they be all adulterers, an assembly of treacherous men.

manifested in the punishment of those who deem themselves secured by the engagements of the new covenant and their relation to God, whilst they idolize the world and are slaves to their lusts. As salvation by Christ can only be found in this life, so the present opportunity should be seized; lest at the hour of death, or the day of judgment, any should dolefully exclaim, “The harvest is past, the summer is ended, and we are not saved.” The Lord hath graciously become our Physician; and the blood of Christ and the influences of the Holy Spirit are more effectual to heal the wounded conscience, and the distempered heart, than any medicines to cure the diseases of the body. Why then are sinners not healed? Is there no Saviour, no Sanctifier? Alas! they deem themselves whole, or are in love with their disease, or hate the Physician and his means of cure, or are madly attempting other methods of recovery. Thus they die unpardoned and unchangéd, for they will not come to Christ to be saved.

CHAP. IX. V. 1, 2. The prophet did not think himself sufficiently affected by the foresight of the miseries that he was sent to predict: he wished to be more evidently impressed and in earnest; and he, the excess of his sorrow to show the people his assured belief of what he spake, and his tender love for them, and to affect them by his example. He therefore pathetically exclaimed, “Oh that one would grant me, that my head were full of waters, and my eyes as fountains, whence tears might flow, without intermission, for the calamities which I foresee can never be sufficiently lamented.” “The same word in the Hebrew signifies both the eye, and a fountain: as if, in this land of sorrows, our eyes were desèred rather for weeping than seeing.” (Henry.)—At the same time the prophet spake with equal energy of his abhorrence of their crimes. “His righteous soul was vexed day by day with their ungodly deeds,” by which God was dishonoured, and vengeance was brought down upon them. He would therefore have preferred some but in the wilderness, and the life of a hermit, to his present situation, had not his duty made it necessary for him to continue among them. The prophet showeth the great compassion that he had towards his people: which is a special note to discern the true pastors from the hirelings. The word adulterers, may mark either the sensuality or the idolatry of the people, or both combined, which was generally the case.
3 And they bend their tongues like their bow for lies: but they are not upright for the truth upon the earth; for they proceed from evil to evil, and they know not me, saith the Lord.

4 Take ye heed every one of his neighbour, and trust ye not in any brother: for every brother will utterly supplant, and every neighbour will walk with swindlers.

5 And they will deceive every one his neighbour, and will not speak the truth: they have taught their tongue to speak lies, and weary themselves to commit iniquity.

6 Thine habitation is in the midst of deceit; through deceit they refuse to know me, saith the Lord.

7 Therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts, Behold, I will melt them, and try them: for how shall I do for the daughter of my people?

8 Their tongue is as an arrow shot out: it speaketh deceit: one speaketh peaceably to his neighbour with his mouth, but in heart helayeth his wait.

9 Shall I not visit them for these things saith the Lord: shall not my soul be avenged on such a nation as this?

10 For the mountains will I take up a weeping and wailing, and for the habitations of the wilderness, a lamentation, because they are burned up, so that none can pass through them; neither can men hear the voice of the cattle; both the fowl of the heavens and the beast are fled, they are gone.

11 And I will make Jerusalem heaps, and a den of dragons; and I will make the cities of Judah desolate, without an inhabitant.

12 Who is he that will assuage this understanding? and who is he that will give counsel in Jerusalem, whom the mouth of the Lord hath spoken, that he may declare it, for what the land perisheth, and is burned up like a wilderness, that none passeth through?

13 And the Lord saith, Because they have forsaken my law which I set before them, and have not obeyed my voice, neither walked therein;

14 But have walked after the imagination of their own heart, and after Baalim, which their fathers taught them:

V. 3—8. The people cultivated the art of lying, as men prepare bows and arrows for war: they habituated their tongues to lies, that they might utter them without hesitation and with confidence: they devised ingenious methods of deception, and strove to get over the restraints of shame and conscience; they were ambitious of being adepts in the whole system of dissimulation, and were continually employed in slander, flattery, cheating, and over-reaching: they were very bold in this work, and sought to obtain authority by these base practices, instead of being valiant for the truths of God, or in maintaining truth and justice in judicial proceedings: they were indefatigable in committing iniquity, and this mutual deceit and fraud were so universal, that the nearest relations and neighbours could not safely trust one another. Whilst the prophet thus complained of his people, the Lord himself spake, and allowed that his servant’s dwelling was in the midst of deceit and lies, and that he was on that account despised and hated: but he might be patient in his situation, when he considered, that through the same deceit, the people were resolved not to have any acquaintance with God, and despised him even more than his prophet. They trusted to their lies for safety; they hated the holy perfections, truths, and precepts of God, because contrary to their own character and conduct: they loved darkness rather than light, because their deeds were evil; they preferred any worthless idol and superstition to God and his worship: and their religion was wholly hypocrisy. (3.)

V. 7. In this corrupt state of the whole nation, the only one on earth where the name of God was known and worshipped, what did it behove him to do? It would have been very dishonourable to him to connive at their wickedness; yet would he not be without a Church on earth; and his engagements to Abraham and David forbade him utterly to cast off the nation, before the coming of the Messiah. He was therefore determined to cast them into the furnace, to melt, prove, and refine the mass; which would be attended with the destruction of vast multitudes, consumed as dross. But it would refine a small number, from whom he would raise up a purer Church for the honour of his name. ‘What can I do else for my people; but by all means try to save them from the common destruction?” (Lomth.)

V. 9. (Notes, v. 9. 29.)

V. 10, 11. (Marg. Ref.) The most dreadful desolations are here predicted with the most exquisite pathos; the prophet being suffused in tears, and unable to repress his groans and bitter lamentations, when compelled to deliver his awful message. ‘I have not desired the woful day, Loarn, thou knowest.”

V. 12. ‘Is there none of you so well acquainted with the will of God, as to be able to declare the reasons, why he hath given such severe instances of his anger against this land?” (Lomth.)
Therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, I will feed them, even this people, with wormwood, and give them water of gall to drink.

16 I will scatter them also among the heathen, whom neither they nor their fathers have known; and I will send a sword after them, till I have consumed them.

17 ¶ Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Consider ye, and call for the mourning women, that they may come; and send for cunning women, that they may come:

18 And let them make haste, and take up a wailing for us, that our eyes may run down with tears, and our eyelids gush out with water.

19 For if a voice of wailing is heard out of Zion, How are we spoiled! we are greatly grieved, because we have forsaken the land, because our dwellings have cast us out.

20 Yet hear the word of the Lord.

V. 15, 16. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 17, 18. Consider the evil circumstances you are in, which call for mourning and lamentation; and since you are not sufficiently affected with the dangers that threaten you, send for those women whose profession it is to make public lamentation at funerals, and let them bring mourful ditties excite true sorrow in you. "(Lowth.)

(V. 19.) Our land hath sped us out, according to the expression of Moses, and would no longer bear our abominations. "(Lev. xviii. 28.) "(Lowth.)

V. 21. Through this chapter the prophet speaks of the predicted judgments as actually arrived: and he addresses different descriptions of people, as present at the calamitous scene, that he might affect their minds with the foresight of those terrible judgments which so much affected his own. Thus death is here spoken of as a person that entered by the windows to destroy those who were shut up in the houses and palaces, as well as cutting off the children and young people who were found in the streets.

V. 22. The bodies of the slain would lie as thick on the ground, as the heaps of dung do on the field which the husbandman is manuring; or even as the handfuls of corn and sheaves do, after the reapers; the latter, however, are soon either gathered by the owner, or gleaned by the poor; but the dead bodies of the Jews would be left unburied, to be devoured by the wild beasts and fowls of the air.

V. 23, 24. Men glory in those things by which they account themselves honourably distinguished from others, and entitled to applause, respect, or admiration; on which they congratulate themselves; which they make the subject of their boasted; and from which they expect safety and felicity. "(Marg. Ref.) Thus the Jews were prone to glory in their prudence, policy, valour, strength, or wealth, both as to their national and their personal concerns. But the Lord here solemnly warned them not to glory in these empty distinctions, which at all times were precarious and transient, and could little profit their possessors; but in their case would only expose them very speedily to more complicated miseries, by rendering them the first objects of attention to the rapacious, revengeful, and cruel invaders. But if any of them were disposed to glory, let him see to it that he possessed a really valuable and honourable distinction, and ground of self-congratulation and confidence. This no man could have, but he who knew the Lord, and by faith had become acquainted with his glorious perfections, and the methods of his dealings with mankind. "(Note, 1 Chr. xxviii. 9.) To have a serious sense of his mercies to the penitent, of his judgments to the obstinate, and of his truth and integrity in making good his promises and threatenings to both. "(Lowth.) To have a genuine transforming knowledge of the eternal and glorious God, in the character of a merciful Father, and of a righteous Judge; and as exerting his abundant mercy and truth, in full harmony with his glorious justice and holiness, according to the wonderful plan devised by his infinite wisdom, and revealed in his holy word; and as delighting in these displays of his perfections, and in seeing his creatures copy the example of his mercy, truth, purity, and righteousness, formed the only distinction in which any one of them could reasonably glory, as his inestimable privilege and happiness; because the only thing which would secure his permanent, yes, eternal honour and felicity. As God is thus known to sinners only in and through Christ, the apostle applies this passage in its genuine meaning, when he speaks of believers glorying in him and his salvation. (Note, 1 Cor. 1. 26—31.)
25 Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will * punish all them which are circumcised with the uncircumcised:

26 * Egypt, and Judah, and Edom, and all the children of Ammon, and Moab, and all that are in the utmost corners, that dwell in the wilderness; for all these nations are uncircumcised, and all the house of Israel are *uncircumcised in the heart.

V. 25, 26. The Jews were prone to glory and confide in the external sign of circumcision: but the Lord here assures them, that he would entirely disregard this distinction, in the judgments to be inflicted on the nations by the Chaldeans. Accordingly Judah seems purposely to be named between Egypt and Edom, as no more entitled to the special benefits vouchsafed to the people of God than those nations: because of the uncircumcision of their hearts and their utter want of faith and love to him. (Notes, Gen. xvii. 9—12. Lev. xxvi. 21, 22. Deut. xxxi. 1—10. Rom. ii. 28, 29.) ‘The marginal reading is to be preferred.’ ‘They have that of the corners of their hair “poll’d.”’ ‘The expression denotes those Arabians who cut their hair on the forepart of their heads round, and let the hair grow long behind.’ (Lev. xix. 27.) (Lorih.) The Septuagint, instead of Judah, read Idumaeus, though Edom, another name for the same people, follows directly. It seems the translators were unwilling to have Judah introduced in this connexion.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—9.

If ministers would have the people deeply affected by their representations of the evil and fatal consequences of sin, their conduct must manifest that their own hearts are suitably impressed with the subject, as well as full of tender sympathy with them in their sufferings; thus showing that their severe rebukes and awful warnings spring from love, and not from resentment or moroseness. But they who most lament the miseries that are coming on the wicked, are sensible that they ought to be more affected: and if they could weep over them day and night, it would not exceed the cause of sorrow, and would give emphasis to their exhortations and expostulations. Nay, the state of this world always suggests matter of lamentation; and a compassionate heart is ready to take up a weeping and wailing continually, for the havoc made among the human species by wars, famines, pestilences, and other judgments, with which God visits guilty nations, turns cities into heaps, and desolates the countries. Yet we must adore the divine justice and acquisance in the divine will, and what we see hear, and discover, by careful investigation of the conduct of mankind, even where favoured with revelation, will serve to explain these mysteries of Providence. Such views would also render us weary of human society, and lead us to prefer a lodging place in the wilderness, were we not conscious that we must carry along with us, in our own hearts, an epitome of this wicked world; and that the powers of darkness have access to us in every retirement.

Even the desert would certainly be the scene of horrid temptations, abominable imaginations, and vile affections, without communion with God through Jesus Christ, and the influences of the Holy Spirit: and with these, we may live in purity and peace amidst the wickedness of populous cities. Yet the more holy any man is, the more painful will it be for him to witness the impurity and wickedness of mankind: and when ministers see no success attend their labours, it is not wonderful that they wish to leave them. They are men of like passions with others: continual disappointment in the leading desire of their hearts is very painful; they cannot but feel the contempt and ill treatment, which they meet with for their plain-dealing; and, though preserved from resentment, they must be grieved to be always giving offence and rendering themselves obnoxious. It also distresses them to collect, that they must prove the occasion of increasing the condemnation of those whose salvation they long after. But whilst it is proper for them to express very strongly their sentiments on these subjects, it is generally best for them to abide in their place and work, and to leave the event with God. If their lot is cast where deceit and wickedness abound, they should protest against these by their example and their preaching: and in reproving sin, it is necessary to mention particulars even in the detail, that their hearers may know themselves to be the persons concerned; whether they be living in adultery or dishonestly, in avarice or malice. Whilst all men are offended at the imputation of being liars, all, in one way or other, have been guilty of lying; and multitudes use their tongues almost wholly for this purpose. The whole social intercourse of thousands and millions is a mere interchange of dissimulation: now they lavish deceitful compliments, professions, and panegyrics; and shortly they deviate as widely from the truth in slander and backbiting, and perhaps in respect of the very same persons. In trade a similar system of falsehood is prevalent; and buying and selling are often conducted by the same interchange of deceit as visiting and conversation, but with still more atrocious iniquity. In short, men are everywhere seeking to accomplish their selfish designs by concealing them, and to prey on one another by false professions and with smiling countenances: and as nothing is so prolific as lies, they proceed from evil to evil; wander more and more from God and truth; and employ all their ingenuity, industry, and even iniquity, in cutting upon daring schemes of deception. So that there is need for every one to take heed of his neighbour, and to be cautious how he trusts even the nearest relation; lest he should be supplanted and circumvented. But whilst men thus lay in wait for their neighbours, Satan takes their souls in his snare, and God gives them over to strong delusions: the state of their hearts indispaces them for true religion: if they pretend to any, they are mere hypocrites: "not liking to retain God in their knowledge," they are
CHAPTER X.

Warnings against the idolatry and superstition of the heathen, 1—5. None like to Jehovah the Creator and Lord of all, 6—16. Prophecies concerning the captivity, with suitable lamentations and prayers, 17—25.

Hearken ye the word which the Lord speaketh unto you, 0 house of Israel:

2 Thus saith the Lord, 1 Learn not the way of the heathen, and 2 be not disdained at the signs of heaven; for the heathen are disdained at them.

left to some foolish scheme of superstition, enthusiasm, or skepticism; and so become perhaps the instruments of the devil, in propagating and strenuously contending for lies, instead of being valiant for the truth upon the earth. But however corrupt any part of the visible church may become; or however God may visit, and avenge himself on guilty nations who are called by his name, he will always have a people upon earth. And he will either utterly cast off professing churches, that become thus corrupt; or he will melt and try them; and putting away numbers as dross, he will bring forth a few as vessels of honour fitted for his use.

V. 9—26.

When the judgments of God are abroad in the earth, they, who are indeed wise, and understand such matters, and have heard and believed his word, will perceive for what reason he causes such calamities. And surely it behoves the Jews, who have been so long scattered among the nations, and consumed by a succession of calamities, to inquire, "Wherefore hath God thus fed them with wormwood, and given them water of gall to drink?" Must it not be obvious, that it is because they have forsaken his law, and not obeyed his voice; but followed their own imaginations and the traditions of their fathers, in contempt of the Messiah, the Prince of peace, and the King of Israel? It avails little to multiply expressions of sorrow or to excite each other to lamentation, when death enters our houses or desolates our streets; except we obey the word of the Lord, and mourn with "godly sorrow," "that worketh repentance unto salvation not to be repented of." This, and this alone, can prepare the heart for true comfort, and convert the heaviest afflictions into the most precious mercies. But in this world of sin and sorrow, terminating speedily in death and future judgment, how unreasonable is it for men to glory in their learning, knowledge, sagacity, health, strength, authority, wealth, or any other appendage, which leaves them under the dominion of sin and the wrath of God! which cannot avert temporal or eternal misery! which may be torn from them in a moment, and of which an account must hereafter be rendered! which, instead of rendering them happy, may probably increase their eternal condemnation! Happy is he who knoweth God by true faith and the experience of his mercy and grace in Jesus Christ; who beheld his glory, and is changed into his image; who is a follower of him in his loving kindness, judgment, and righteousness: This is the true "circumcision of the heart," whose praise is not of men, but of God. Such men are the true Israel, "who worship God in the Spirit, glory in Christ Jesus, and have no confidence in the flesh." Let us then prize this distinction, which is divine and eternal. Let us seek for it diligently, and then rejoice and glory in it above all other things: let us so value ourselves upon it as to be above grovelling pursuits, and to deem ourselves set apart for the glory of God our Saviour; and to him let us devote all our possessions and endowments, that he may be honoured in our use of them.

—but the time is coming, when the uncircumcised in heart, notwithstanding external forms and notions, will, with the heathens and infidels, be punished with an everlasting destruction from the presence of the Lord.

NOTES.

CHAPTER X. V. 2. The people of Israel, when in their own land, had always been disposed to learn the idolatries and superstitions of their neighbours: the ten tribes were dispersed in heathen countries, and the Jews were about to be carried captive to Babylon, the very centre of idolatry. The Gentiles in general, and the Chaldeans above all others, were addicted to astrology and to regard omens; they were dismayed by comets, eclipses, and other unusual appearances of the heavenly bodies; and their determinations in the most important matters were often formed from such signs of the heavens, rather than from sound policy. This was the effect of ignorance of God, of idolatrous regard to his creatures, and of vain endeavours to pry into futurity; and therefore the Lord's people must not imitate their customs. Whatever might seem to be portended by the signs of the heavens, they would be safe while trusting in God and walking in the path of duty; and nothing could truly presage prosperity to them in the way of disobedience.

V. 3—5. The prophet exposes the folly and stupidity of idolaters, in the same manner that Isaiah had done. (Notes, B. xiv.) unto thee, O Lord; thou art great, and thy name is great in might.

7 Who would not fear thee, O King of nations? for to thee doth it appertain: forasmuch as among all the wise men of the nations, and in all their kingdoms, there is none like unto thee.

8 But they are altogether brutish and foolish; the stock is a doctrine of vanities.

9 Silver spread into plates is brought from the Tarshish, and gold from Uphaz, the work of the workman, and of the hands of the founder: blue and purple is their clothing; they are all the work of cunning men.

10 But the Lord is the true God, he is the living God, and an everlasting King: at his wrath the earth shall tremble, and the nations shall be not able to abide his indignation.

11 Thus shall ye say unto them, The gods that have not made the heavens and the earth, even they shall perish from the earth, and from under these heavens.

12 He hath made the earth by his power, he hath established the world by his wisdom, and hath stretched out the heavens by his discretion.

13 When he uttereth his voice, there is a multitude of waters in the heavens, and he causeth the vapours to ascend from the ends of the earth: he maketh lightnings with rain, and bringeth forth the wind of his treasures.

V. 6-8. The prophet here contrasts the glory of Israel's God with the impotency of senseless idols, in an act of solemn worship addressed to them; that by interweaving adorations with his instructions, the people might be led to concur in this holy service. None of the pretended deities, which some professed to worship by their images, could be equalled to Jehovah: they were either inanimate creatures, or the departed spirits of eminent men, or ideal characters, or devils. Nor could any of the wise legislators, philosophers, or rulers of the nations, vie with the Lord the King of all nations. Who then would refuse to fear and worship him, whose infinite perfection, and absolute, universal, and everlasting sovereignty over all creatures, which are the works of his hands and wholly dependent on him; and whose power to save and to destroy, entitle him to this honour, and make it reasonable and advantageous to all rational creatures? Idolators therefore must be altogether brutish and foolish; and the worship of a senseless block of wood, (however carved or ornamented, or whatever it was supposed to represent,) must lead to the most unworthy apprehensions of God, to the most gross and pernicious mistakes, and to all vain and abominable practices. (10.)

V. 9, 10. Some think that Uphaz is the same as Ophir; but this is quite uncertain. The contrast between the most expensive and most richly ornamented dead images and the living and true God, the everlasting King, whose wrath the nations could not abide, is very expressive and instructive. Where but in the Scriptures do we meet with such sublime and rational thoughts concerning the great Creator and Lord of all? The very circumstance that the Bible (and the Bible alone,) has established the doctrine of one God of infinite perfection, to the exclusion of all others who have been or are called God, or have been or are worshipped, is a very convincing argument of a sober and moderate mind, that it is the word of that One living and true God.

V. 11. This verse, in the original, is in the Chaldee, and not the Hebrew language; and it seems to have been thus inserted, that the captive Jews might have an answer ready for the idolaters, in their own language, when they tempted them to join their worship. Their idols were no gods, they had not created the world, and they would shortly be destroyed from the earth. This is a prediction of the total extermination of idolatry, which hath already received a most wonderful accomplishment, and will be perfectly fulfilled, when that auspicious spirit, whom all idolaters worship, shall be confined in the bottomless pit. —...
CHAPTER X.

14 Every man is *brutish in his knowledge; *every founder is confounded by the graven image; *for his molten image is falsehood, and *there is no breath in them.

15 They are *vanity, and the work of errors: *in the time of their visitation they shall perish.

16 The *Portion of Jacob is not like them: for he is *the Former of all things; and *Israel is the rod of his inheritance: *he the LORD of hosts is his name.

17 Gather up *thy wares out of the land, O *inhabitant of the fortress.

18 For thus saith the LORD, Behold, I will sling out the inhabitants of the land at this once, and will distress them, that they may find it so.

19 *Woe is me for my hurt! my wound is grievous: but I said, *Truly this is a grievance, and I must bear it.

20 My *tabernacle is spoiled, and all my curtains are broken: *my cords are broken, *my children are gone forth of me, and they are not: *there is none to stretch forth my tent any more, and to set up my curtains.

21 For *the pastors are become brutish, and have not sought the LORD: therefore they shall not prosper, and all their flocks shall be scattered.

22 Behold, *the noise of the bruist is come, and a great commotion out of the north country, to make the cities of Judah desolate, and a den of dragons.

23 If O LORD, *I know that the way of man is not in himself: *it is not in man that walketh to direct his steps.

24 O LORD, *I correct me, but with judgment; not in thine anger, lest thou *bring me to nothing.

25 Pour out thy fury upon the heathen that know thee not, and upon the families that call not on thy name: for they have *eaten up Jacob, and devoured him, and consumed him, and have made his habitation desolate.

V. 12-15. Here again the almighty and all-wise Creator and Upholder of the universe, the great Disposer of all events, who giveth rain from heaven and fruitful seasons, and ordeth the whole in judgment and mercy, is contrasted with the senseless, lifeless idol, in a manner exquisitely suited to shame the idolators. *The more any *man thinketh to do any thing well by his own wisdom, and *not as God instructeth him, the more doth he prove *himself to be a vile beast. "The time of their visitation" means, the time appointed by the only wise God for punishing the idolaters, and pouring contempt on the idols.

V. 16. The Lord himself was Jacob's Portion; and he was not at all like the worthless idols, that were the portion of the heathen: for he is the Former, or Creator, of all things, and was before all things. His infinite sufficiency is the riches of his people; his wisdom chooseth, and his power effects, their felicity; his truth engages to and his bounty bestows upon them, whatever can conduct to their good; and he is their great Protector, "the LORD of hosts," or armies, "is his name." The nation of Israel typified this people of God; and as far as they lived up to their privileges, they possessed this happiness, and needed not to seek help from idols. In his disposal of the nations, Jehovah had taken them as his inheritance: his worship was established among them, his revenue of honour from fallen man was chiefly collected from them, and his peculiar delight was in them; whilst other nations were left to the worship and service of Satan.

V. 17-18. Here the siege and destruction of Jerusalem are again predicted. Her inhabitants are called on to collect their treasures from the country, within the walls of the city which they inhabited; yet this would not secure either them or their property: for they would at once and altogether be violently driven out of the land; and the Lord would make them feel the bitter effects of their sins, and the truth of his despised predictions, in their deep distress.

V. 19-22. The prophet here sympathizes with his country, and bewails its calamities. The wound which had been inflicted was indeed very grievous, and greatly to be deplored: but it was unavoidable, and must be patiently endured, as the righteous appointment of God. *Thus he showed the people how to behave themselves.—The city and temple were plundered and destroyed, like the removal of a tent: the children of his people were slain or carried captive; so that none remained to rebuild their ruins. For the pastors (both rulers and teachers) were become brutish in their conduct, neglecting every duty to God and man; and thus they had occasioned the flock to be scattered, and the cities of Judah to be turned into a desert, where dragons, or serpents abide. The clause, "they shall not prosper," is rendered in the old translation, "they have no understanding," as they would not seek the Lord, they were judicially insulted. "The "noise of the bruist, &c." (an obsolete word, signifying a report;) means an alarming rumour, circulated in a loud and earnest manner, that the Chaldeans had entered the northern part of the land, and were marching directly to Judea.

V. 23-25. By thus addressing God, the prophet taught the people in what light to view their calamities, and how to pray respecting them. *He speaketh this, because that Nebuchadnezzar purposed to have made 2 T
The prophet is sent to proclaim God's covenant, and to reprove the Jews for war against the Moabites and Ammonites; but hearing of Zedekiah's rebellion, he turned his power against Jerusalem. In this enterprise he had been guided and prospered by the Lord himself, who employed him to punish his rebellious people; "Howbeit he meant not so."—His hand must therefore be acknowledged and his justice submitted to, in these afflictive dispensations. In like manner the counsels and devices of the people would not accomplish their own purposes, but the decrees of God; nor would they ever be led back into the right way by their own natural willingness, wisdom, or strength; and therefore the case must be referred to the Lord, with prayer that he would guide and set them right. The prophet next deprecates from his people that anger of God, which would destroy them; and prays that their corrections might be moderated by his fatherly wisdom and love, that they might tend to their good; (Marg. Ref.) and that his vindictive fury might be averted from Israel, and poured out upon the heathen nations, especially such as had devoured and desolated Jacob his people. (Note, Psalm lxxix. 6, 7.)

The last clause is literally, "They have eaten Jacob, yea, they have eaten him and consumed him, &c."

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS. V. 1-16.

Man's apostacy from God hath made way for his being so deluded and enslaved by Satan, as to be capable of the greatest absurdities under the notion of religion: and these soon become the customs of whole nations, who join together in worshipping a lifeless block, which cannot possibly do them either good or harm! Nothing but revelation hath prevented this degrading folly from becoming universal; this appears, not only from the very general prevalence of idolatry, but from the strange propensity which the worshippers of God have ever shown to learn the ways of the heathen, and to turn aside to pagan idolatries and superstitions. Even in those Christian countries, where images and other vain pageantures no longer disgrace their worship, the regard paid by multitudes to the signs of the heavens, to charms, to predictions, to lucky days, lucky numbers, good or bad omens, &c. &c. and all that fear of some unknown invisible power which in one way or other is supposed to act independently of God, strangely prevails! and is evidently copied from the vain customs of the heathen, but is far more criminal in us than in them. But they who do not fear God, are always liable to be dismayed without cause: whilst such as reverence his majesty, dread his anger, seek his favour, worship his name, and walk in his ways, need not fear either the powers on earth or the powers of hell. For there is none like unto Jehovah, who is great in might, the King of nations, and the Lord of all. To him all worship and honour appertain; and all will serve and fear him, who are not foolish and brutish: for he is the true, living, and eternal God; and his wrath not only makes the earth to tremble, and overhelms the nations, but he is able to destroy body and soul in hell. Let sinners then forsake the company of his enemies, and join that of his reconstituted people. He hath a right to our devoted service as our great Creator; his wisdom contrived the glorious fabric of the universe; his power completed the grand design; in his knowledge and discretion he hath established it hitherto. His command continues the course of the seasons, and the variations of the weather; the tremendous voice of his thunder, and the lightnings which attend his fertilizing rain, and the tempestuous winds which he bringeth out of his treasures, show him to be the Author of all our mercies, and warn us not to abuse them, nor to forget the Giver. But though we all have, for our rebellion and ingratitude, deserved his indignation; yet he is ready to forgive and save all who repent and believe in the name of his Son Jesus Christ; and thus sinners become a part of his valued inheritance, and he becomes their unchangeable Friend and all-sufficient Protector. These blessed truths faith learns from the word of God; but all other sources of instruction lead to doctrines of vanity: and all idols and idolaters, of every kind, will perish in the time of God's visitation.

V. 17-25.

We are continually warned to beware of mere profession. No place is so sacred, or so fortified, as to secure the workers of iniquity: and they who do not believe that God will execute his awful threatenings, will "find it so," when their wound will be more grievous than they can now conceive. A gracious resignation indeed will support the believer under every grief, that the Lord may allot him: but what can render the load of divine vengeance tolerable to those who fall under it in sudden despair? Alas, that ever the pastors of God's Church should become so brutish, as to be given up to the pursuit of carnal interests and pleasures, to the neglect of him and his service! such men cannot ponder themselves; and their misconduct not only stirs their flock, but brings down divine judgments upon guilty nations. But the way of man is not in himself: if the Lord has directed our steps into the ways of peace and righteousness, let us continually entreat him to enable us still to walk in them, and to hold up our goings, that we slip not; and let us lift up our prayer for others, that they may be guided and directed in the same path. If even severe corrections lead sinners to a conviction of these salutary truths, they will have abundant cause for gratitude; they will then humble themselves before God, and seek his guidance and assistance; they will submit to his correcting rod, and only deprecate the destroying sword of his avenging justice; and they will no longer remain under the condemnation of those nations, families, or individuals, who call not upon the name of the Lord. But whilst he visits the offences of his people with sharp corrections, and destroys hypocrites, his hot displeasure will be poured out on those that have not known and worshipped him, and especially on the persecutors of his chosen people.
THE word that came to Jeremiah from the Lord, saying, 2 Hear ye the words of this covenant, and speak unto the men of Judah, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem; 3 And say thou unto them, Thus saith the Lord God of Israel; Cursed be the man that obeyeth not the words of this covenant, 4 Which I commanded your fathers, in the day that I brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, from the iron furnace, saying, Obey my voice, and do them, according to all which I command you: so shall ye be my people, and I will be your God: 5 That I may perform unto you the oath which I sware unto your fathers, when I brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, from the iron furnace, saying, 6 Then the Lord said unto me, Proclaim all these words in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem, saying, Hear ye the words of this covenant, and do them: 7 For I earnestly protested unto your fathers, in the day that I brought them out of the land of Egypt, even unto this day, rising early and protesting, saying, Obey my voice. 8 Yet they obeyed not, nor inclined their ear, but walked every one in the imagination of their evil heart: therefore I will bring upon them all the words of this covenant, which I commanded them to do; but they did them not. 9 And the Lord said unto me, A conspiracy is found among the men of Judah, and among the inhabitants of Jerusalem, 10 They are turned back to their iniquities, and to the iniquities of their forefathers, which refused to hear my words, and they went after other gods to serve them: the house of Israel, and the house of Judah have broken my covenant which I made with their fathers. 11 Therefore, thus saith the Lord, Behold, I will bring evil upon them, which they shall not be able to escape; and though they shall cry unto me, I will not hearken unto them. 12 Then shall the cities of Judah and inhabitants of Jerusalem go, and cry unto the gods in whom they have set up altars, to that shameful thing, even altars which burned incense unto Baal. 13 For according to the number of thy cities were thy gods, O Judah; and according to the number of the streets of Jerusalem have ye set up altars to that shameful thing, even altars which burned incense unto Baal. 14 Cast a figure 22 22 21 16 to xiv 20 — Heb. ret, y 22 y 1, 2. Deut. xxv 19, 17. 2 Kings xxiii, 4, 6, 12. Is. ii. 8. Heb. xii. 11. • 2 e 10. 3 xxv 20. 15. 2 Kings xxvi 4, 5. Heb. shem. Hor. ix. 10. 2 T 2

NOTES.

CHAP. XI. V. 2-8. The orders are here given in the plural number, "Hear ye," &c.; to Jeremiah, as one of many who had been charged with the same message; and they refer to the national covenant made with Israel at mount Sinai: (Notes, &c. Ex. xix. xxiv. Deut. xxvii. xxviii. xcvii.) This was the charter of all Israel's privileges, as long as they were obedient according to the terms of it. But idolatry and apostasy from God, when general, and committed or connived at by public authority, forfeited the covenant. The prophet was therefore sent to remind the people of the curses denounced in the law against the rebellious; and to show that the continuance of the benefits covenanted to them, when they were delivered from Egyptian bondage, depended on their obedience. Whilst the Lord charged him with this message, and mentioned the good land given them, he answered and said "Amen," or "So be it, O Lord!" as expressing his acquiescence in this reasonable requirement. (Notes, &c. xxvii. 25, &c.) and his hearty desire, that the people might return to obedience, and be continued in their privileges. He was then ordered to proclaim the covenant very publicly; to show the people how their fathers had broken it; to predict the speedy approach of the calamities threatened in it; and to charge the whole nation with having conspired together to forsake God, and give themselves up to idolatry. Some think that the prophet also reminded the people of the renewal of the covenant, lately made during the reign of Josiah. (Mari. Ref.) "The use of an iron furnace is to melt and purify metals, and it is an apt representation of sore afflictions." (Lowth. v. 9, 10. They made some steps towards a reformation in the time of Josiah: but now they have conspired together to return back to their former idolatries. (Lowth.) v. 11, 12. (Mari. Ref.) "I will not hearken to them, because they will not pray with true faith and repentance; but for the smart and grief which they feel,"—So that not receiving a favourable answer from God, they again turned to their idols, and sought help from them; as Saul, when God did not answer him, consulted the witch: and with similar success. v. 13. (Mari. Ref.) "Basheth, shame, was a nickname for Baal. So Jeruhalal is called Jerub-besheth. 2 Sam. xl. 21." (Lowth.) (Note, Judg. vi. 31, 32.)
Therefore pray not thou for this people, neither lift up a cry or prayer for them: for I will not hear them in the time that they cry unto me for their trouble.

What hath my beloved done to me, seeing she hath wrought me lewdness with many, and the holy flesh is passed from thee? when thou doest evil, then thou rejoicest.

The Lord called thy name, A green olive-tree, fair, and of goodly fruit; with the noise of a great tumult he hath kindled fire upon it, and the branches of it are broken.

For the Lord of hosts, that planted thee, hath pronounced evil against thee, for the evil of the house of Israel, and of the house of Judah, which they have done against themselves, to provoke me to anger, in offering incense unto Baal.

And the Lord hath given me knowledge of it, and I know it; then thou shewest me their doings.

But I was like a lamb, or an ox that is brought to the slaughter; and I knew not that they had devised devices against me, saying, Let us destroy the tree with the fruit thereof, and let us cut him off from the land of the living, that his name may be no more remembered.

But, O Lord of hosts, that judgest justly, that triest the reins and the heart, let me see thy vengeance on them: for unto thee have I revealed my cause.

Therefore thus saith the Lord, of the men of Anathoth, that seek thy life, saying, Prophecy not in the name of the Lord, that thou die not by our hand.

Therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts, Behold, I will punish them: the young men shall die by the sword, their sons and their daughters shall die by famine.

And there shall be no remnant of them: for I will bring evil upon the men of Anathoth, even the year of their visitation.

V. 14. (Note, vii. 16.)

God had always treated Israel as his beloved, and had still mercy in reserve for the nation. He had espoused them by the Sinai covenant: and they, vainly deemed themselves his favourite people, and still came to his temple. But what had the spouse to do in the house of her husband, after all her shameless adulteries? She was now about to be divorced, and turned out of doors. The Jews would soon be driven from the city and temple; the holy flesh of their sacrifices, which was burned upon the altar or feasted on in the courts of the Lord, would cease from among them; for God abhorred their obligations, seeing they rejoiced in iniquity.

V. 16. (Note, Rom. xi. 16—24.) The Lord had planted Israel in Canaan, as a good olive-tree in a rich soil: he had made the nation very prosperous, and afforded them every advantage for fruitfulness; and once they were fruitful, and he called the nation a green olive-tree, fair and of goodly fruit. But they were now so degenerated, that he was determined to consume them, as with fire, by means of the tumultuous and furious Chaldean invaders.

V. 17. (Note, ii. 20, 21.)

Whilst the prophet was earnestly seeking the good of his people, a conspiracy was formed against his life. His brethren, the priests, of his own city Anathoth, were the ringleaders in this combination. They could not endure his faithful warnings and reproves: they hated the man and his communications, and were determined either to silence or to slay him, that he and his predictions might be forgotten together. But before they had matters to bear, the Lord discovered their devices to his prophet, and probably directed him how to frustrate them. Upon this he speaks, as one in amazement: he had done nothing to merit this treatment from them; and had never suspected them, any more than the lamb, or ox, suspects danger when led to the slaughter. He then appeals for his innocence to God, who knoweth what passes in the inmost recesses of the heart, and refers his cause to him, and he was in consequence instructed to denounce vengeance on them, root and branch: so the no remnant should be left of them in the approaching season of visitation. The words, rendered "Let me see thy vengeance upon them," are literally, "I shall see thy vengeance upon them." I foresee it, and predict it, though I deplore it. This is one out of many instances, in which, I apprehend, an undue regard to the Spirit has induced our venerable translators needlessly to introduce the sacred writers as uttering imprecations, rather than predictions, against their persecutors. It cannot be denied, that their predictions sometimes must be rendered as imprecations; but this should not be done, when the words may literally be otherwise translated.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Not only did the covenant of works, and Israel's national covenant, denounce curses on those who obeyed not; but the very Gospel threatens even severer vengeance on those who refuse obedience to the divine Redeemer. So that no
CHAPTER XII.

The prophet pleads with God concerning the prosperity of the wicked; appeals to him for his integrity; and prays that they, for whose sins the land was visited, might be selected for punishment, 1—4. God reproves his impatience, warns him to expect heavier trials, describes the wickedness of the people, and denounces sentence against them, 5—13. A prophecy of heavy judgments on the oppressors of the Jews, who would be restored to their own land; and of the calling of the Gentiles; the privileges of the obedient, and the destruction of the disobedient, 14—17.

RIGHTEOUS art thou, O Lord, when I plead with thee: yet let me talk with thee of thy judgments:

man can be saved, who doth not obey the command of God to repent, to believe in Christ, to separate from sin and the world, to deny himself, and to walk in newness of life. Indeed, it is absurd to suppose that a God of unchangeable holiness should, under any dispensation, authorize rebellion and ingratitude. Still he earnestly protests to all men, saying, "Obey my voice," and commands his ministers publicly to make known his words; and especially to charge "all, that name the name of Christ," to depart from iniquity." But, alas, how few do thus obey! In general men cry, "Lord, Lord, but do not the "things which he says." They will hearken to his ministers, whilst they speak of doctrines, promises, and privileges: but when duties are mentioned, they will not incline their ear, but walk every man in the imagination of his evil heart. And professed Christians in general seem to have conspired together to run down strict holy walking with God; to return back to the iniquities of their heathen ancestors; and to copy after those who have refused to hear the commandments of God. But as the law is not written in the hearts of such men, their sins are not forgiven: and the curses of the Bible belong to them, and nothing else. Evil is coming upon them, which they cannot escape: if they now remain impenitent, their exerted cries for mercy will at last be disregarded; and they will be left to seek help from their idolized lusts and possessions: their shameful practices will be exposed; and they will find that even the prayers of despised ministers for their conversion, having returned into their own bosom, will only tend to aggravate their condemnation. They may glory in their relation to God, as his beloved, and presume that all the privileges of his covenant are their own: but whilst they rejoice in inequality, they only prostitute God's ordinances here, and have nothing to do in his holy habitation in heaven. For when the olive-trees and fig trees, that have been planted in this vineyard, remain unfruitful; though they be luxuriant in foliage and of promising appearance; yet they shall surely be cut down, and cast into the fire. But they who venture thus to address presumptuous professors, must expect to be hated for their faithfulness; how much soever they weep over and pray for them, or spend themselves in labouring for their good.

NOTES.

CHAP. XII. V. 1—4. The prophet's discomposure, on account of the conspiracy formed against him, led him into a perplexity about the prosperity of the ringleaders in iniquity, among whom he probably numbered the men of Anathoth to be the principal. He also thought that judgments inflicted on them might prevent the ruin of the
If thou hast run with the footmen, and they have wearied thee, then how canst thou contend with horses? and if in the land of peace, wherein thou trustest, they wearied thee, then with whom do thou put in the swelling of Jordan?

6 For even thy brethren, and the house of thy father, even they have dealt treacherously with thee; yea, they have called a multitude after thee: believe them not, though they speak fair words unto thee.

7 I have forsaken mine house, I have left mine heritage; I have given the dearly beloved of my soul into the hand of her enemies.

8 Mine heritage is unto me as a lion in the forest; it crieth out against me: therefore have I hated it.

9 Mine heritage is unto me as speckled bird, the birds round about are against her; come ye, assemble all the beasts of the field, come to devour.

10 Many pastors have destroyed my vineyard, they have trodden my portion under foot, they have made my pleasant portion a desolate wilderness.

11 They have made it desolate, and being desolate, it mourneth unto me; the whole land is made desolate, because no man layeth it to heart.

12 The spoiler is come upon all high places through the wilderness: for the sword of the Lord shall devour from the one end of the land even to the other end of the land: no flesh shall have peace.

13 They have sown wheat, but shall reap thorns; they have put themselves to pain, but shall not profit; and they shall be ashamed of your revenues, because of the fierce anger of the Lord.

5. 6. The Lord seems here gently to have reproved the prophet's impatience. The opposition of the men of Anathoth was not so formidable as what he must expect to encounter from the kings and rulers of Judah; and the present calamities of the nation were trivial, compared with the approaching desolations; if then he was so disconcerted by these lighter trials, how would he endure more severe afflictions? If he were so wearied with running with footmen, or contending with his equals, how would he run with horsemen, or execute his office in defiance of those in authority? If he could scarcely endure, when the land (in which he too confidently had expected safety), remained in peace, what would be done, when hostile invasions would bear down all before them, like the overflowing waters of Jordan? And as his nearest relations, even such as were nearer to him than the rest of the men of Anathoth, and whom he probably supposed to be unconcerned in the conspiracy, would fiercely combine against him, and excite the multitude to assault him; so he must expect opposition from every quarter, and prepare for it: and he ought not to trust even to those who spake most friendly to him.

V. 7—9. The Lord next condescended to explain his intentions, and the reasons of his conduct, to his discouraged servant. He was determined to forsake his temple, and to give up his heritage, (which he had so long treated with peculiar kindness,) into the hands of his enemies. For his people were become outrageous and rampant as lions; they openly quarrelled with his appointments and requirements; and because they could not reach Him, they showed their enmity by murdering his prophets! This was the general character of the nation, and therefore the Lord abhorred them. Nay, they were become as a speckled bird: they had collected together all the abominations of the surrounding kingdoms, and combined them together, with the worship of Je-hova-h, into one moiety mixture of idolatry and superstition. Therefore the nations should be let loose against them, to punish them for harboring their idolatries; and as wild beasts to devour them.

V. 10—13. The captains of Nebuchadnezzar's army were the many pastors here intended: they came, as shepherds with their flocks, to devour and tread down Judah and Jerusalem, (the Lord's vineyard, whose hedge he had broken down,) and when this pleasant portion should be desolated, it would mourn unto him; the very ruins of the city and temple would, as it were, mournfully cry for redress; and the captive Jews would repent of their sins, and seek deliverance. But till these judgments were actually inflicted, none of the people would hearken to these denunciations or any preceding corrections to heart. The Chaldean spoilers therefore would come through the wil-

14 ¶ Thus saith the Lord against all mine evil neighbours, that touch the inheritance which I have caused my people Israel to inherit; Behold, I will pluck them out of their land, and pluck out the house of Judah from among them.

15 And it shall come to pass, after that I have plucked them out, I will return, and have compassion on them, and will bring them again, every man to his heritage, and every man to his land.

16 And it shall come to pass, if they diligently learn the ways of my people, to swear by my name, The Lord liveth; as they taught my people to swear by Baal; then shall they be built in the midst of my people.

17 But if they will not obey, I will utterly pluck up and destroy that nation, saith the Lord.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The Lord allows his people to spread their perplexities before him, and humbly to plead with him concerning his judgments: but he expects it to be always for granted, that “he is righteous in all his ways and holy in all his works.” The success of the wicked, and especially that of persecutors and deceivers, who oppose the cause of God; terrify or seduce multitudes into impiety, infidelity, or hypocrisy; and bring down judgments on Churches and nations; is very embarrassing to the pious mind. Yet the Lord never permits such men to prosper; except it be for the salutary trial or correction of his people, or for just judgments on those who hate his truths and precepts; and they who are spared to be executioners of wrath on others, and “to treasure up wrath for themselves,” should not be called happy! For if they be planted, and take root and bear fruit, it is unto death and condemnation. But it is not easy in such trying circumstances to avoid every degree of impatience; even when the Lord himself may safely be appealed to for our integrity, and when the hypocrisy of our opponents is most evident. Our grief for the prevalence of iniquity is often leavened with peevishness, on account of the trials which it occasions: and our zeal for the honour of God, our appearance of sin, and even our love to the Church and nation to which we belong, are often mingled with an undue regard to our own credit, and with bitterness against our opponents. We ought then, on such occasions, to watch our hearts, and to bridle our tongues, that we may not speak or act unadvisedly, and in our own spirit. Should the Lord see any of us, in this our favoured day, fretful or desponding under our trialling difficulties, he might sharply and properly reprove us, as he did his servant of old: “we should therefore judge ourselves, and consider how we should behave, if, instead of our trials, we were called to sufferings like those of the prophets, apostles, and martyrs of other ages. And thus our minds would be quieted in submission and gratitude. We ought not, however, to trust in our land of peace, for we know not what overwhelming calamities await us; we are sure that, if we be faithful in the cause of truth and holiness, the wicked, though nearly related, will hate us, and we must expect treachery cloaked with fair words: we should then prepare for trials and count our cost; and we may well question our own faithfulness, if all go smooth with us in this evil world. But none will be so inveterate against the faithful servant of God, as those who presume themselves to be his chief favourites, merely because they have enjoyed and abused peculiar advantages. Such men count every privilege their own by a title which nothing can forfeit, and as they are ready to complain of the Lord when he crosses them in providence, so they are enraged at his ministers when they reprove them from his word. They often wish to be deemed the lambs of his fold, but their ungoverned tempers and capacity show them to be more like furious lions devouring the prey: and instead of the purity and simplicity of the dove, they present to the view an heterogeneous mixture of religion and the world, with its vain fashions, maxims, pursuits, and pollutions. Thus many Churches become like speckled birds, mixing together religion and vain superstition; attempting to serve God and Mammon, and to form a coalition between light and darkness, Christ and Belial. But this the Lord abhors: and for such degeneracy he often leaves them to be punished by those whose vices and errors they have imitated. All the efforts of CHAP. XIII.

The prophet, by the sign of a linen girdle, first worn by him, and then buried and spoiled near Euphrates; and by the simile of bottles filled with wine, predicts the approaching captivity, and the misery attending it, 1—14. He calls the rulers and people to repentance, and mourns over their pride, and in the prospect of their calamities, 15—21. He expostulates with them concerning their incorrigible obstinacy, 22—27.

Thus saith the Lord unto me, 'Go and get thee a linen girdle, and put it upon thy loins, and put it not in water. 2 So I got a girdle according to the word of the Lord, and put it on my loins. 3 And the word of the Lord came unto me the second time, saying, 4 Take the girdle that thou hast got, which is upon thy loins, and arise, go to Euphrates, and hide it there in a hole of the rock. 5 So I went, and hid it by Euphrates, as the Lord commanded me.

The prophet, by the sign of a linen girdle, first worn by him, and then buried and spoiled near Euphrates; and by the simile of bottles filled with wine, predicts the approaching captivity, and the misery attending it, 1—14. He calls the rulers and people to repentance, and mourns over their pride, and in the prospect of their calamities, 15—21. He expostulates with them concerning their incorrigible obstinacy, 22—27.

Thus saith the Lord unto me, 'Go and get thee a linen girdle, and put it upon thy loins, and put it not in water. 2 So I got a girdle according to the word of the Lord, and put it on my loins. 3 And the word of the Lord came unto me the second time, saying, 4 Take the girdle that thou hast got, which is upon thy loins, and arise, go to Euphrates, and hide it there in a hole of the rock. 5 So I went, and hid it by Euphrates, as the Lord commanded me.

a considerable time without washing, when it would cease to be ornamental, and even become offensive; as an emblem of the corrupt state of Israel, the chosen people of God. (11.)—Many interpreters conclude that the subsequent transaction was only a vision: but it is related as a fact; and it is not advisable, without evident necessity, to sanction such a mode of interpretation, in opposition to the obvious meaning of Scripture. Nay, the self-denying, laborious, implicit obedience of the prophet, in taking all these journeys of some hundreds of miles each, was aptly suited to render his sign impressive; to shame the disobedience of the people, and to show the excessive hardship to which they would be exposed by the approaching captivity. (Note, Hos. 1. 2, 3.)

V. 8—11. It is probable that the people were acquainted with this sign, some time before it was expounded, and they were left to make their own observations on it: at length God instructed his servant to explain it to them. He had chosen Israel to be his covenant people, and brought them near unto him by every external privilege, that they might be an honour and prize unto him: 'That they might have the honour of being called by my name; and that I might be glorified by their showing forth my truth and praises to the world.' (Loud.) And this was the case while they adhered to his worship, and were obedient and prosperous. But they glorified their peculiar distinctions, and were very proud of them, and at the same time turned aside to idolatry and iniquity. Thus

NOTES.

CHAP. XIII. V. 1—7. It is probable that the girdle, worn by the prophet, was such as were used as ornaments by the priests at that time. He was directed to put it on without washing; 'to represent the Jews in their corrupt state of nature, when they had nothing to recommend them to grace and favour. (Compare Ex. xvi. 4.)' (Loud.) Perhaps the prophet was to wear the girdle for a considerable time without washing, when it would cease to be ornamental, and even become offensive; as an emblem of the corrupt state of Israel, the chosen people of God. (11.)—Many interpreters conclude that the subsequent transaction was only a vision: but it is related as a fact; and it is not advisable, without evident necessity, to sanction such a mode of interpretation, in opposition to the obvious meaning of Scripture. Nay, the self-denying, laborious, implicit obedience of the prophet, in taking all these journeys of some hundreds of miles each, was aptly suited to render his sign impressive; to shame the disobedience of the people, and to show the excessive hardship to which they would be exposed by the approaching captivity. (Note, Hos. 1. 2, 3.)

V. 8—11. It is probable that the people were acquainted with this sign, some time before it was expounded, and they were left to make their own observations on it: at length God instructed his servant to explain it to them. He had chosen Israel to be his covenant people, and brought them near unto him by every external privilege, that they might be an honour and prize unto him: 'That they might have the honour of being called by my name; and that I might be glorified by their showing forth my truth and praises to the world.' (Loud.) And this was the case while they adhered to his worship, and were obedient and prosperous. But they glorified their peculiar distinctions, and were very proud of them, and at the same time turned aside to idolatry and iniquity. Thus they became a scandal instead of an honour to the Lord; losing their comeliness, and becoming polluted like the unwashed gilder. Therefore he purposed to punish them by the Chaldeans, and to carry the remnant of them captive to Babylon. Then their great pride would be marred, their temple would be destroyed, and its worship caused to cease; their city would be desolated, their prosperity ruined, their numbers reduced; and a poor despised enslaved company alone would be left to go captives to Babylon, and there to be worn out by oppressions, till they became like the decayed gilder. But though this would mar their great pride, it was not intended to ruin the nation, but to prepare them for future mercies. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 12—14. The prophet was next ordered, in the name of the Lord, to assure the people that “every bottle should be filled with wine.” This seems to have been a proverbial expression, and applied in different ways, and the Lord forewarned him that they would reply, in a mixture of contempt and indignation, “Do we not certainly know that every bottle shall be filled with wine?” The hearers shall take this prophecy in great scorn, and say, What wonders are these that thou tellest us? As if they knew not that the use of bottles is, to be filled with wine! Tell them these things to children that understand nothing.” (R. Hall.) Upon this he was ordered to explain his meaning; and to show them, that as the bottle was fitted to hold the wine, so their sins had made them vessels of wrath fitted for the judgments of God; and that they should all be filled with them, till they were intoxicated and made furious to accomplish each other’s destruction; like earthen bottles filled with wine and dashed against each other.

V. 13—17. These messages seem to have greatly exasperated the Jews: but the prophet endeavoured to enfoce his warnings and soften their resentments by a most pacific exhortation. He endeavoured to soothe their patient and attentive hearing, for these were indeed the words of God, and not his own devices. Instead of proudly rejecting his message, he exhorted them to give glory to God by confessing their sins, acknowledging his justice, humbling themselves in repentance, seeking forgiveness, and returning to his worship and service: and to do this without delay, that the threatened judgments might, if possible, be averted. Otherwise the Lord would speedily extinguish all their prosperity, and leave them in darkness and despondency; then they would be in distress, like that of men wandering in the dark upon the mountains, liable every moment to fall down precipices, or to be devoured by wild beasts. Or they would be carried from the “valley of vision,” into countries destitute of the light of Revelation, and enveloped in all the darkness of idolatry and wickedness: there they would be left to stumble and fall without remedy; all their hopes would issue in disappointment and deeper distress, which would be introductory to the final misery and despair of those who persisted in impenitence. But if they would not hear his words, the prophet assures them, that, so far from rejoicing in the prospect of their miseries, he should weep secretly and bitterly, lamenting their pride and obstinacy, their presumption, and their contempt of the authority and defence of the vengeance of God; which he knew would terminate in the captivity of the whole company of his professing people. The word rendered dark, seems to mean the break of day seen on the mountains. Various circumstances gave the Jews a sort of glimmering prospect of deliverance; appearing amid their dangers and calamities as the dawn of day. But when they expected that this would increase, and usher in clear light, God turned it into the very shadow of death; and the disappointment of these presumptuous hopes increased their misery.

2 U
21 What wilt thou say when he shall punish thee? for thou hast taught them to be captains, and as chief over thee: shall not sorrows take thee, as a woman in travail?

22 And if thou say in thine heart, Wherefore cometh this upon me? for the iniquity of thine iniquity: for the greatness of thine iniquity are thy skirts discovered, and thy heels made bare.

23 Can the Ethiopian change his skin, or the leopard his spots? then may ye also do good, that are accustomed to do evil.

24 Therefore will I scatter them among the nations, and disperse them in the countries.

V. 18-21. Some think that Jeconiah and his mother are here meant: and others that Jehoiakim and his queen were addressed. (Marg. Ref.) The prophet seems to have charged the princes who heard him to repeat his words to the king and queen; requiring them in the name of God to sit down on the ground as penitents: for all the authority, splendour, and decorations, of which they were proud, would soon be brought to nothing: the cities of Judah would be besieged without being relieved, and the whole nation carried into captivity. Of those of Egypt, to which the Jews hoped to retreat if driven to extremities, would be shut against them, and none would be able to come to their aid. The invaders would be seen coming from the north: and the prosperous nation, which had been committed to the care of the king soon after the death of Josiah, and which was also the flock of God, would be scattered, destroyed, or carried captive, through the wickedness of him and his princes. And what would he say, when the king of Babylon should come to punish him for his crimes? For the house of David and the people of Judah had brought themselves into dependence on that prince, by their sinful propensity to call in the help of heathen allies, instead of confiding in the Lord: and now their sorrows on that account would become extreme and unspeakable.

22. The Lord knew that the people would inquire, in their hearts at least, what they had done, that such punishments should be inflicted on them? To this thought be answered, that if their offences had not been very heinous, he would not have thus exposed them; but the greatness of their iniquity required that he should strip them of all their ornaments, and leave them exposed to the contempt and scorn of their enemies; that he might show his abhorrence of sin, especially in his professed worshippers.

23. This proverbial expression is evidently added, to aggravate the incorrigible obstinacy of the Jews, and to show that no ordinary means would be effectual for their reformation: it might as reasonably be expected, that an Ethiopian could be brought by argument to change the colour of his skin, and the leopard to divest himself of his spots, as that exhortations would induce the Jews to return as the stubble that passeth away by the wind of the wilderness.

25 This is thy lot, the portion of thy measures from me, saith the Lord; because thou hast forgotten me, and trusted in falsehood.

26 Therefore will I discover thy skirts upon thy face, that thy shame may appear.

27 I have seen thy adulteries, and thy neighings, the lewdness of thy whoredom, and thine abominations on the hills in the fields. Woe unto thee, O Jerusalem! wilt thou not be made clean? when shall it once be clean?

V. 19. The word rendered accustomed, is, literally, instructed; not merely the effect of bad habits, but of false principles assiduously inculcated. Bochart maintains that the word Cush is never used for Ethiopia; but this text is a good proof of the contrary, and may most probably be understood of the Africans, or Blackmore, as they are commonly called. A moral change in habitual sinners is almost as impossible as a natural one. Thus our Saviour compared the difficulty of a rich man's entering into the kingdom of God to a natural impossibility: viz. to "a camel's passing through the eye of a needle." But yet qualifies the comparison by adding, "What is impossible with man is possible with God." God's grace can surmount such difficulties as are impossible to nature to overcome: and thus we are to understand the text before us. (Lamb.)

V. 27. The Jews not only were unable to cleanse themselves from their filthiness and idols; but they would not be made clean, being in love with their abominations. As the Lord used all proper means for their being cleansed, and was ready to afford effectual assistance to those who sought it, their unwillingness to be made clean was their only inability: for by his help the Ethiopian might change his skin, and they might have been made to do good. The Lord therefore here demands of Jerusalem, Whether she was determined not to be made clean? And how long this was to be delayed, if she ever intended it? For all her misery would arise from this not having been at any time the case with her.
chap. xiv.

A terrible famine in Judah, 1—6. The prophet calls on God to deliver the people though sinful, for his own name's sake, 7—9. The Lord shows him their wickedness, and forbids him to pray for them, 10—13. The prophet charges the blame on the false prophets, and the Lord includes them also in the threatened vengeance, 14—16. The prophet is ordered to mourn over his people; and he perseveres in interceding for them, 17—22.

practical observations.

v. 1—14.

They who are employed in the more important parts of the Lord's service, will often be called to peculiar self-denial and hardship: it behoves us to render implicit obedience to all his commands, however laborious they may be, and though they should seem unreasonable to the carnal eye: and if we obey the will of God as far as we know it at present, he will give us further instructions, as they become needful. Every means should be used, by which the minds of men may be made sensible of their ingratitude and rebellion against God, and awakened to a conviction of their guilt and danger; yet nothing will be effectual without the concurrent influences of the Holy Spirit. The peculiar advantages which the Lord confers on nations favoured with his word and ordinances, are intended to render them his people; and that they may be to him a name, a praise, and a glory: but no external relation will profit those who refuse to hear his words, and persist in walking after the imaginations of their evil hearts; and degenerate professors of religion are the most worthless, and shall be rendered the most contemptible, of all men. When the gifts of God render men proud and presumptuous, they will either be torn from them, or increase their disgrace and misery: but whatever the Lord takes from us or lays upon us, if he "mar the great pride of our hearts," and bring us to self-abasement and true repentance, we shall have cause to be very thankful. Every kind of sin renders men vessels of wrath fitted for destruction: but pride and impudence continue them in that state, and make way for their being filled with the wrath of Almighty God. When nations are thus ripened for destruction; all ranks of men may expect to be filled with his indignation: and then they are often so given up to ambition, envy, suspicion, and revenge, as to destroy one another by civil wars and intestine discord; in which even parents and children engage in opposite parties and destroy one another. And when God is provoked to say, "I will not pity, nor spare, nor have mercy, but destroy them:" rage, misery, and desperation must be the effect.

v. 15—27.

The proud are not disposed to hear the warnings of God by his ministers; they do not believe that he hath spoken by them, but ascribe their alarming words to melancholy or malevolence: and thus they disregard the friendly admonition, until it be too late. Yet whether men will hear, or whether they will forbear, we must call upon them to give glory to God by repentance, faith, and conversion to him, whilst the day of his patience endures. And though the humiliation of individuals may not prevent national judgments, it will preserve them from darkness and despair. It is very dreadful when kingdoms are wasted, the inhabitants massacred or enslaved, and Churches bereaved of the light of divine truth: but when God leaves men to be blinded, and to fall into error and delusion here, and into the blackness of darkness hereafter, the judgment is most tremendous: and who can tell how soon the Lord may leave the obstinate unbeliever thus to stumble and fall; and while he looks for light, to find it turned into the shadow of death, and made gross darkness? The true minister will be deeply affected at the pride of those who regard not the word of God; he often laments in his closet over such as he has offended by his awful warnings: and if sinners could witness the prayers offered for them, and the tears shed on their account, by some who declare the counsel of God unto them, they could not but ascribe their plain dealing to other causes than they now do. All misery witnessed, or foreseen, will affect a feeling mind; but the pious heart mourns more over the afflictions of the Lord's flock. As none are too great to be sinners, and to be accountable to God; and as nations and Churches suffer through the folly and wickedness of princes; it should be said to them especially, 'Humble yourselves before God, and penitently sue for his mercy, submit to his will and 'seek his glory, and the honour that cometh from him.'

All other distinctions are a vain pageantry, which will soon be terminated by death, and are often taken away in this life: and as ministers must give an account of the people committed to their charge, so must kings and rulers of the nations which they were intrusted to govern, and of the good or mischief which they did with their authority. But what will sinners say, when they shall be delivered up to be punished by that enemy, whom they have long allowed to rule over them? Will they not sooner seize on them, as on a woman in travail? It will be fatal for pride to object, Wherefore are we to be thus punished? But all such objections will be answered, when the Lord shall expose to the whole world the greatness of their iniquities. It is a dreadful case when sinners become habituated to evil, even under the means of grace: their inability to do good becomes the great aggravation of their guilt, and renders them obstinate and incorrigible in rebellion, and perfectly like Satan, the arch-apostate and rebel; and thus they are given over to final obduracy. Men should therefore be very careful not to contract habits of sin, and not to stifle the convictions of their consciences. Yet, though we cannot change the Ethiopian's skin, or the leopard's spots, our God can; and neither natural depravity, nor the strongest habits of iniquity, form any obstacle to the operations of his new-creating Spirit. We should therefore hope and pray for, and endeavour to do good to, those who are the most enslaved to inveterate habits of vice. And if any poor slave of sin feels that he could as soon change the
THE word of the Lord that came to the prophet Jeremiah concerning the death of Judah and Jerusalem.

2 Judah mourneth, and the gates thereof languish; they are black unto the ground; and the cry of Jerusalem is gone up.

3 And their nobles have sent their little ones to the waters: they came to the pits, and found no water; they returned with their vessels empty; they were ashamed and confounded, and covered their heads.

4 Because the ground is chapt, for there was no standing in the earth, the plowmen were ashamed, they covered their heads.

5 Yeah, the bind also calved in the field, and forsook it, because there was no grass.

course of nature, as master his headstrong lusts, or learn to delight in doing good: let him not despair; for the “things that are impossible to man, are possible to God,” and he even now asketh him, Whether he will or will not be made clean? Let him then without delay call for help to him who is almighty to save, and who waiteth to be gracious, and he will say to him, “I will, be thou clean,” and so his leprosy shall be cleansed. But if men hesitate, and procrastinate, and will not use the appointed means of cleansing, misery and woe will be measured out to them as their portion, for having forgotten God, trusted in falsehood, and multiplied their crimes against him.

NOTES.

CHAP. XIV. V. 1. The Hebrew word, (rendered ‘death’), signifies ‘restraining’; that is, “when the heaven is shut up there is no rain.” (Lowth.) Some think that the events referred to in this chapter occurred at the end of Josiah’s reign: but it is more likely that all these prophecies were delivered at a later period, and nearer to the final desolations of the land; at least after the open prevalence of idolatry which followed the death of Josiah.

V. 2-6. Some render this passage in the future, as a prediction: but the prophet seems to speak of scenes which he himself witnessed. He has here given us a melancholy description of this calamity and its effects. Through the want of rain, and the consequent failure of the crops, the whole land of Judah mourned in deep distress: they who went in and out through the gates of the cities, languished for want of food; or the gates were unfrequented by those who had been used to bring in provisions. The people neglected their persons, and lay on the ground, squalid, meagre, and dejected, through want and misery: and the cry of Jerusalem went up; either their cries of distress, or their supplications for deliverance; for it is probable that a day of fasting and humiliation was observed on this occasion. (12.) The very nobles were distressed for want of water, and sent either their own children, (as not caring to trust any others in this emergency,) or their own servants, to fetch it from the wells or cisterns, but none could be had: and they returned with empty vessels, ashamed, and confounded, and covered their heads.

B. C. 606.

6 And the wild asses did stand in the high places, they snuffed up the wind like dragons; their eyes did fall, because there was no grass.

7 О Lord, though our iniquities testify against us, do thou it for thy name’s sake: for our backsides are many; we have sinned against thee.

8 O the Hope of Israel, the Saviour thereof: in time of trouble, why shouldest thou be as a stranger in the land, and as a way-faring man that turneth aside to tarry for a night?

9 Why shouldest thou be as a man astonished, as a mighty man that cannot save? yet thou, O Lord, art in the midst of us, and we are called by thy name; leave us not.

V. 6-9. In this extreme distress the prophet ventured to intercede for his people, notwithstanding the interdiction that had been laid upon him, (vii. 16. xi. 14.) and he seems still to have indulged a hope, that by repentance the threatened judgments might be averted: or at least that it would be a lengthening of their tranquility. He was enlightened that their multiplied apostasies, idiocities, and iniquities, were so many witnesses against them, that they had deserved these miseries: but he entreated the Lord, for the honour of his own name, to interpose in their behalf. He had always been the only hope of Israel; and their Deliverer even from those troubles which had come upon them for their sins: and would he now finally forsake them? He had dwelt among them, and taken care of them as of his own habitation; and if he left them for a time, to chastise them for their sins, he had soon returned to them in mercy: and would he now be a stranger? or as a traveller, who, having tarried for a night in any place, departs next morning and takes no more thought about it? he had showed himself ready and able to save: and would he now appear like a man who is surprised by some unexpected accident, which renders him unable to save concerning the prophets that prophesy in my name, and I sent them not, yet they say, Sword and famine shall not be in this land: By sword and famine shall those prophets be consumed.

16 And a the people to whom they prophesy shall b be cast out in the streets of Jerusalem, because of the famine and the sword; and they shall have none to bury them, their wives, nor their sons, nor their daughters: p for I will pour their wickedness upon them.

17 Therefore thou shalt say this word unto them; q Let mine eyes run down with tears night and day, and let them not cease: for r the virgin daughter of my people is broken with a great breach, with a very grievous blow.

18 If I s go forth into the field, then shall the slain with the sword! and if I enter into the city, then shall them that are sick with famine! t yea, both the prophet and the priest shall go into captivity, that they know not.

19 Hast thou utterly rejected Judah? y v bath thy soul loathed Zion? why hast thou smitten us, and there is u no healing for us? we looked for peace, and there is no good; and for the time of healing, and behold trouble!

20 b We acknowledge, O Lord, our wickedness, and the iniquity of our fathers: for we have sinned against thee.

21 Do not abhor us, for thy name's sake; do not disgrace the throne of thy glory: remember, break not thy covenant with us.

22 b Are there any among the vainties of the Gentiles that can cause rain? or can the heavens give showers? b Art not thou, O Lord our God? therefore we will wait upon thee, for thou hast made all these things.

V. 19-22. The prophet still pleaded for a mitigation of the sentence. Had the Lord utterly cast off Judah, his visible Church, in which the promised Messiah was to be raised up? Did he abhor Zion, the place of his temple and worship, and the type of good things to come? and would he no longer have a Church on earth? If this were not his purpose, wherefore did he so smite them, that there was no hope? None else could, and he would not, heal them: and all their expectations of deliverance and peace were frustrated. He then acknowledged his own sins and those of his people: but he still prayed that the Lord would not abhor them, for the honour of his great name. The temple, in which he manifested his special presence above the mercy seat, was “the throne of his glory” on earth; which would be disgraced, if profaned by the heathen: and he pleaded with the Lord, that he would remember his covenant and not break it; either his covenant with Abraham and his seed, or that with David and his seed; for the national covenant had been utterly violated and forfeited on the part of the people. Even in their present distress, none of the idols of the Gentiles could help them, nor could the heavens give rain of themselves: they had none to apply to but the Lord; and on him they waited for relief, as the omnipotent Creator and Governor of all things. “He teacheth the Church a form of prayer, to humble themselves to God by true repentance, which is the only mean to avoid this famine.” Though most of the people were either hypocrites or idolaters; yet a small remnant of believers may be supposed to have joined the prophet in these prayers: and probably they prevailed for the removal of the famine, though not for the prevention of the captivity. (v. 1.) The Hebrew word Hu, (He,) is often equivalent to the true or eternal God: See especially Ps. cii. 27, where the expression is the same as that of the text, “Thou art He,” our English reads, “Thou art the same.” (Lo nth.) The apostle applies this to our Saviour. (Heb. i. 10-12, xiii. 8.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS. V. 1-12.

Our entire dependence on God is manifest in everything: if he withholds the showers of rain, the fields no longer yield their increase, the springs of water fail, tillage ceases, flourishing cities languish, and the inhabitants wax pale, faint, and die: and should he continue this severe judgment, the earth with all its proudest and wealthiest possessions must perish. When man’s iniquity hath provoked the Lord thus to visit any land, the inhabitants often lament their miseries, without any due regard to him, or humiliation for their sins; and they express their anguish in much the same way as the innocent animals do which are involved in their punishment; except that their complaints are rebellious as well as bitter. And often, when facts are proclaimed, and formal confessions and supplications made before God, the insincerity of those concerned is demonstrated by the want of fruits meet for repentance: and then such hypocritical cries are disregarded and rejected. Whatever men trust to, whilst they neglect God and his service and salvation, it will finally disappoint them: they will return from their broken cisterns with their vessels empty, and ashamed of their confidence: nor will industry and ingenuity stand them in any more stead than nobility and influence, when God ariseth to execute vengeance. But they who make the Hope of Israel their confidence, will find him a present Saviour in every time of trouble, in the hour of death, and in the day of judgment. And though our manifold iniquities testify against us, and our backslidings have been many: yet, if we now return to the Lord, by sincere repentance, faith, and prayer, he will save us, to the glory of his grace. Such genuine converts will long for the salvation of their neighbours and relatives, and will interest themselves in the concerns of the Church: and they are sometimes more troubled for the miseries which oppress or await others, than for their own share in temporal calamities. They will therefore supplicate their reconciled God in behalf of all connected with them, for their native country, and that part of the Church especially to which they belong. Here also the mercy of God, and the honour of his name, supply many a plea to urge before him, in behalf of those whose iniquities testify against them: for the Hope and Saviour of Israel will return to deliver those communities in which a considerable remnant of true believers are found; though otherwise they are justly deserving of his severest vengeance. But when the faithful fail, and the measure of iniquity is filled up, the Lord will certainly estrange himself from those that have been most favoured with the means of grace; and his glory will require that they be more severely punished, than less enlightened communities. He can silence the blasphemies of his enemies, when he sees good thus to punish those who are called by his name; and show that he knows how, and is able, to deliver them when he pleases, though for a time he leave them to smart for their iniquities. And when he showeth his servants how they, for whom they plead, love to wander, and do not refrain their feet from every evil way, they will be constrained to allow the justice of his most awful dispensations.
CHAPTER XV.

God determines, let who will intercede, to pour out many heavy judgments on the Jews, 1—9. Jeremiah complains that he is generally hated; and God promises good to him amid the calamities of the nation, 10—14. He professes his integrity, and renews his complaints, 15—18. God recalls him to his work, and promises to support and deliver him in the due discharge of it, 19—21.

THEN said the Lord unto me, 1 Though Moses and Samuel stood before me, yet my mind could not be toward this people; 2 cast them out of my sight, and let them go forth.

V. 13—22.

The false teachers, which have always abounded in the visible Church, are of all others the most criminal; whilst they speak lies in the name of God, and by teaching the people false doctrine and the deceit of their hearts, they encourage men to expect peace and salvation without repentance, faith, conversion, and holiness of life; thus much of the guilt and misery of mankind will be charged to their account; and inevitable and tremendous destruction will overwhelm them. But as the hatred of truth and holiness, and the love of sin, dispose men to prefer such ministers of Satan to the faithful servants of God; they who are thus given up to a strong delusion to believe a lie, will not be allowed to plead this for an excuse, when the Lord shall pour their wickedness upon them. He is righteous in these judgments: yet it behooves us to mourn over the miseries of the human race; for the law that commands us to love our neighbour as ourselves, and not the purpose of God, is our rule of conduct. And when we consider, how “evil men and seducers wax worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived,” to the temporal ruin of nations and churches, and the destruction of innumerable immortal souls; our eyes might well run down with tears night and day, and not cease: and we should more frequently be thus affected, if we were more of his mind, who wept over Jerusalem, and prayed on the cross for his persecutors. Yet we need not fear lest the Lord should utterly reject his Church, or abhor his ordinances: he will always have a people to commune with him at his mercy-seat, and never suffer that throne of his glory to be disregarded, or break his covenant with the great Redemer. Though he may smite, and not heal, professing nations and hypocrites; yet he will bind up the wounded conscience of every true penitent, and heal the stripes that he inflicts on his believing people: and if he should not see good to hear our prayers in behalf of our guilty land; yet he will certainly blesse with temporal and eternal salvation all who confess their sins before him, and wait on him for his promised mercy. But this implies an express and unrestrained renouncing of every other dependence; for even in the case of drought, what unbelievers call nature can no more give showers, than the idols of the heathen could. On the contrary, God directs them when and where they shall fall. (Lowth.) Thus “every good and perfect gift is from above, and cometh down from the Father of lights, with whom is no variableness or shadow of turning;” and in him alone must we trust, on him alone must we wait, for all things pertaining to this life and to that which is to come.

NOTES.

CHAP. XV. V. 1. The prophet still continued importunately to pray for his people; but the Lord had determined not to grant his requests in this particular: yet, in order to reconcile his mind to this refusal, he declared that even Moses and Samuel must plead in vain in the present case. They had separately and repeatedly prevailed with him to pardon his offending people, when they lived on earth, and were most eminent among his servants: but if both of them should unite to intercede for Israel now, the mind or favourable regard of God could not be towards them; their crimes were so enormous, and their habits of rebellion so inveterate. He had therefore given orders for them to be cast out of the land; for he could no longer endure them in his sight. This passage fully proves that departed saints do not intercede for us: for it is implied that Moses and Samuel did not then stand before the Lord in behalf of Israel.

V. 2—4. The same law that condemns the malefactor determines his punishment. So the condemned Jews were appointed to different kinds of misery by the righteous judgment of God: and this decision was notified to them, that they might see to what straits their sins had reduced them. Pestilence, (called here death, as it kills without any visible causes,) and the sword and famine, would destroy the most of them, and a few would be reserved for captivity. Whilst the sword of the enemy would cut off vast numbers, their dead bodies would be left unburied, to be devoured by dogs, and by birds and beasts of prey; and the survivors would be subjected to fierce and cruel oppressors. Their remnant would be removed into the most distant regions; because of their willing concurrence and implicit continuance in the idolatries and iniquities of Manasseh, notwithstanding all the methods afterwards used to reclaim them. (Note, 2 Kings, xxiii. 26, 27.) The word rendered remove, signifies to run to and fro for fear and unquietness of conscience, as did Cain.

V. 5. Every body, that sees the calamities brought upon thee, will own him to be just. Who will be so much concerned for thee, as to step a little out of his way to inquire after thee? Rather that they pass by will insult over thy calamities. (Lomth.)

V. 6. I am, &c. The Lord had often threatened to execute judgment on the people; but he had spared them on their repentance, and in answer to the prayers of his servants; but he seemed to repent of the evil that he said he would do unto them. But as they continually relapsed into idolatry, his patience was, as it were, worn out, and he was weary of repenting: that is, it was proper for him to take vengeance on them.

V. 7. The nation in general was become as chaff: and therefore the Lord would drive them by his judgments from the gates of their cities all over the land; as the fan drives away the chaff. (Mang. Ref.)

V. 8, 9. The vast slaughter made by the victorious enemy, and by other judgments, would leave great numbers of widows, who would have none but God to take care of them; thus they would be increased to Him; (for the future is spoken of, as if it were already arrived.) The Lord was about to bring upon Jerusalem, (the mother city, or metropolis of Judah,) a young man, a spoiler; at noon-day, who would plunder openly by force, and not secretly by fraud; or against the mother, and the young men her children. Nehuchannahar was the spoiler intended: he was a young man, when he took Jerusalem, and he suddenly fell on the city, and filled it with terror and miseries. Then the populous city was made desolate; the mothers who had brought up many children were broken hearted with grief, at hearing that they were all slain. Jerusalem's honour and prosperity terminated unexpectedly, as if the sun should set before the time; and the remnant of her inhabitants were given up to be slain or enslaved by the conqueror, at his pleasure.

V. 10. The prophet had rendered himself very obnoxious by his awful predictions; and he could not prevail for a mitigation of the sentence denounced against his people: nay, he was sent with still severer messages of vengeance. This he knew would expose him to their more violent resentment; and therefore he lamented that his mother ever bare him, to be a man of strife and contention to the whole land. For he was doomed to spend his life in contending against the sins of the people, and the delusions of the false prophets; and to be treated as a troublesome quarrelsome person for so doing. He had neither borrowed nor lent money in an usurious manner; he meddled not with secular concerns; he gave no usury and did no injury in those matters, which are the common grounds of contention: and yet he was more generally hated and cursed, than any fraudulent debtor or oppressing creditor. His trials were dreadful great: yet there was much infirmity in these passionate wishes and complaints. I am an object of the common hatred: every body takes occasion to quarrel with me; because I speak such truths as they do not care to hear. (Lomth.)

V. 11. In order to calm the ruffled spirit of his servant, the Lord graciously engaged that it should be "well with his servant:" either with him for the remnant of his days; or with the remnant of the people who attended to his word and joined in his prayers. They should be supported and comforted under all their troubles, and all would end well: and the enemy would treat the prophet with kindness, whilst his opponents were overwhelmed with calamities. (Notes, xl. 2-6.)
CHAPTER XV.

B. C. 605.

12 Shall iron break the northern iron and the steel?

13 Thy substance and thy treasures whereunto thou trustest will I give to the spoil without price, and that for all thy sins, even in all thy borders.

14 And I will make thee pass with thine enemies into a land which thou knowest not: for a fire is kindled in mine anger, which shall burn unto the depths of the sea.

15 O Lord, thou knowest: I remember thee, and visit me, and revenge me of my persecutors; I take me not away in thy long-suffering: know that for thy sake I have suffered rebuke.

16 Thy words were found, and thy soul did eat them; and thy word was unto me the joy and rejoicing of mine heart: for I am called by thy name, O Lord of hosts.

17 I sat not in the assembly of the mockers, nor rejoiced: I sat alone; because of thy hand: for thou hast filled me with indignation.

18 Why is thy pain perpetual, and why doth the wound incurable, which refusest to be healed? wilt thou be altogether unto me as a liar, and as waters that are foul?

19 Therefore thus saith the Lord: If thou return, then will I bring thee again, and thou shalt stand before me: and if thou takest forth the precious from the vile, thou shalt be as my mouth: let them return unto thee; but return not thou unto them.

20 And I will make thee unto this people a fenced brazen wall: and they shall fight against thee; but they shall not prevail against thee: for I am with thee to save thee, and to deliver thee, saith the Lord.

21 And I will deliver thee out of the hand of the wicked, and I will redeem thee out of the hand of the terrible.

V. 12—14. The Jews endeavoured to fortify the city, and to form alliances against the Chaldeans; and they hardened their hearts, as if they could out-brave or withstand the indignation of the Lord. But could ordinary iron, though hard and strong in itself, break which was of a much stronger kind and well tempered? No more could they prevail against their northern invaders, or those divine judgments which they were sent to inflict. All their treasures would certainly be given to these spoilers, without any possibility of buying them off; and they would be carried away into the land of their enemies, for the sins committed in every country. God would deal with them as men do with the refusal of their stock or goods, which they are glad to be rid of on any terms. (Lorth.) (Marg. Ref.)

V. 13—18. The prophet still found his mind greatly discomposed, so that he opened his case before God, with some impatience and peevish expressions; and the whole was recorded for the instruction of the Church in other ages. He was sensible that the Lord knew his integrity, his circumstances, and his enemies: he entreated him to remember and visit him with mercy, and to revenge his cause; and not to take him away whilst he exercised his long-suffering towards his persecutors, seeing that he was hated and reproached for his sake. Suffer not mine enemies to take away my life. Verbs active, in the Hebrew language, do often signify only permission. The prophet had found the words of God as a valued treasure; he had meditated on them, and well digested both the ancient books of the Scripture and the revelations immediately made to him; and he had found much comfort and joy in them. He had been known as his prophet, and had cheerfully received and delivered his messages; in hopes that the people would have been brought to repentance: he had withdrawn himself from all intercourse with the profane and scornful, and had not frequented their revels nor shared in their carnal mirth; but had lived in retirement: and the awful predictions with which he had been charged, the impiety and opposition of the people, and the trials allotted him, had matured all his joy, and filled him with terror, sorrow, and melancholy, because of the Lord's indignation with his people, or their indignation at him. But wherefore was his pain thus made perpetual? Why was he oppressed with grief which would admit of no remedy? The Lord had promised to deliver him; and would he break his promise and act after the manner of deceitful men? or as waters which fail in drought when they are most wanted?

V. 19—21. The prophet was out of temper, and heartless about his work; and in a frame of mind which may be best understood by those who have been tried a little in the same way. But the Lord called him to repent of his impatience and to return to his work. In this case he would again employ and honour him; he would bring him out of his difficulties, and cause him to stand with acceptance before him. And if he learned to distinguish between the precious and the vile, especially in respect of the characters of the people; that he might address them severally for reproof, conviction, instruction, or exhortation; then the Lord would employ him as his mouth, declare his will, and certainly take care of him. But he must go on steadily with his work, using every means to bring the people to return to him, as their prophet, and to obey the Lord's word by him; and in case they would not, to leave the matter with him; but not to go down at all upon their ground, not to vary from his instructions, not to accommodate in the least to their wishes, nor to give the least countenance, or encouragement. to them in their sins, either by his doctrine or example. If he attended to these things, he might be assured that the Lord would perform his promises before made to him, and deliver him from the most powerful and malicious of his enemies. (Note, i. 18, 19.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—9.

The holy God so abhors evil, and his honour is so engaged to punish it; that it is absolutely impossible his heart can be towards obstinate and impenitent sinners; and if the prayers even of his most eminent servants for the wicked are not answered by their conversion, they cannot avail for their deliverance from deserved misery: nor can any thing rescue guilty nations from divine judgments, without it tends in some measure to their reformation.—Whilst we remain on earth, we ought to persevere in prayer for our unconverted relations and connexions: but the spirits of just men made perfect would not, if they might, say a word in behalf of any for whom the heavenly advocate does not intercede; and his intercession suffices for all that come to God through him. Dreadful will be the case of all those whom the Lord finally rejects and abhors. The variety of temporal calamities which he inflicts on guilty nations; the wars, famines, and pestilences, that waste them; the imprisonment and slavery, loss of children and other near relations; the terror, anguish, and pain, to which numbers are exposed, are no more than an earnest of the wrath to come, which awaits all impenitent workers of iniquity.—Bad examples and abused influence, authority and talents, often produce fatal effects after men are dead: this may be the case even with those who live to repent, and so escape the worst personal consequences of their crimes; and this shows us how important it is to begin early to serve the Lord. These things, however, are no more than occasions to men’s sins, which originate from the evil of their own hearts; and therefore they justly deserve punishment: yet we should greatly dread being the guilty, or even the innocent, occasion of it. We ought while here to compassionate and emano those who suffer for their sins, and incite ourselves in their concerns: but the wicked will perish unpitied and unaccounted, when God shall stretch forth his hand against them to destroy them; because their obstinate insinuate has wearied out his patience.

V. 10—21.

The ministers of God are constrained to declare his whole counsel, though the proud be exasperated. And however upright, prudent, harmless, blameless, benevolent, and peaceable, their conduct may be; however they avoid being entangled with the affairs of this life, and shun every appearance of evil; so long as they contend against sin and error, and those who commit or favour them, they will be deemed pestilent fellows, trouble-makers of the city, and men of strife and contention. But as prophets and apostles, (and even Christ himself,) were thus hated, reviled, and execrated, by the ungodly, instead of complaining that we are exposed to such treatment, we should rejoice and be exceedingly glad, that Heaven is so confirmed to such honourable patterns, and because “our reward is great in heaven.” Yet in such circumstances unbelief and impatience are apt to stir and to sour our tempers, cloud our judgments, and suggest improper thoughts and words. But our gracious Lord will tenderly bear with the infirmities of his upright servants, and give them proper encouragement: and assuredly it will be well in life and death, with all the remnant of true believers; whilst all their enemies will be consumed by the fire that the Lord hath kindled in his anger; and the stoutest and proudest of them will be utterly unable to withstand him, or the weapons of his indignation. We should acquiesce in the judgments of God upon his enemies, and rejoice in his knowledge of us, and of all our trials; and we should beseech him to remember and visit us in our trials with his salvation, and to preserve us from our persecutors. When we are conscious that we are rebuked for his sake, we may plead it as a reason why he should interpose in our behalf; but we should rather pray for the conversion of our persecutors, than to be avenged of them. Happy are they who seek and find the Lord: who can relish and feed on them in their hearts, by faith, prayer, and meditation; who can truly say, that they are the joy and succour of their souls: such are justly called by the name of the Lord, and they will have pleasant employment for their retired hours. Indeed, we all ought to avoid the assembly of the mockers; and the sensual and dissipated pleasures of the ungodly; and court retirement, for searching the Scriptures, for meditation and prayer; (Ps. i. 2;) yet whilst we are suitably affted with the calamities of the Church and the world, and mourn for our own sins and sorrows, we should not indulge melancholy or moroseness, nor exclude ourselves wholly from society; lest we grow fretful, impatient, and unfruitful for our duty. Even in complaining to God, we are prone to give place to unholy tempers, and to use distrustful and irreverent expressions: as if our griefs were unnecessary, intolerable, or incurable; or as if he disappointed our expectations grounded on his faithful word. Thus we often dishonour him and disquiet ourselves; and he might justly leave us to the effects of our sin and folly; but he bears with us, and checks the progress of our evil tempers. Yet we cannot expect the comfort, credit of his favour and service, except in the exercise of faith, submission, and diligence in our work; and to stand accepted with him is an abundant recompense for all that we can do or suffer for his sake. They who are employed as his mouth must learn to distinguish the precious from the vile, in doctrines, practices, experiences, and characters; that they may be “workmen, who need not be ashamed, rightly dividing
CHAPTER XVI.

THE word of the Lord came also unto me, saying,

2 Thou shalt not take thee a wife, neither shalt thou have sons or daughters in this place.

3 For thus saith the Lord concerning the sons and concerning the daughters that are born in this place, and concerning their mothers that bare them, and concerning their fathers that begat them in this land.

4 They shall die of grievous deaths; they shall not be lamented; neither shall they be buried; but they shall be as dung upon the face of the earth: and they shall be consumed by the sword, and by famine; and their carcasses shall be meat for the fowls of heaven, and for the beasts of the earth.

5 For thus saith the Lord; Enter not into the house of mourning, neither go to lament nor bemoan them: for I have taken away from thee the occasion of mourning, saith the Lord, even loving-kindness and mercies.

6 Both the great and the small shall die in this land: neither shall be buried, neither shall men lament for them, nor cut themselves, nor make themselves bald for them:

7 Neither shall men tear themselves

“the word of truth.” They must endeavour to reduce their hearers to the scriptural standard of faith and holiness, but by no means must they lower the requirements of God's word, or accommodate their message to the humours, sentiments, fashions, or characters of men; or teach them to seek safety and happiness in any other way than that laid down in the gospel. When they strictly adhere to this plan, they may be sure that the Lord will protect, uphold, comfort, and prosper them; and they need not fear prevailing against every terrible and wicked opposer: but they who are men-pleasers cannot be the servants of Jesus Christ, but will at length be put to shame, and perish.

NOTES.

CHAP. XVI. V. 2—4. ‘Fruitfulness was promised as a blessing under the law,’ (Deut. xxviii. 4;) but it ceased to be so, in such difficult times as were coming on the Jewish nation.” (Lowth.) The prophet was therefore forbidden to marry, and required to make the prohibition known, in order the more forcibly to impress the minds of the people with the apprehension of the reality and near approach of the tremendous judgments which he had predicted. The time was at hand, when the most endeared relations would be an additional cause of anguish and misery; and to manifest his assured belief of for them in mourning, to comfort them for the dead; neither shall men give them the cup of consolation to drink for their father, or for their mother.

8 Thou shalt not also go into the house of feasting, to sit with them to eat and to drink.

9 For thus saith the Lord of hosts, Behold, I will cause to cease out of this place in your eyes, and in your days, the voice of mirth, and the voice of gladness, the voice of the bridegroom, and the voice of the bride.

10 And it shall come to pass, when thou shalt shew this people all these words, and they shall say unto thee, Wherefore hath the Lord pronounced all this great evil against us? or what is our iniquity? or what is our sin that we have committed against the Lord our God?

11 Then shalt thou say unto them, ‘Because your fathers have forsaken me, and saith the Lord, and have walked after other gods, and have served them, and have worshipped them, and have not kept my law:

12 And ye have done worse than your fathers; for behold, ye walk every one after the imagination of his evil heart, that they may not hearken unto me:

this, the prophet was to remain unmarried, that he might be less encumbered and more prepared for days of distress. (Marg. Ref.) (Notes, 1 Cor. vii. 8—9. 25—28.)

V. 5—7. The best comment on these verses may be found in any authentic narrative of what takes place, when dire pestilence baffles all efforts to restrain it, in a city or district. So far from the customary funeral rites being attended to, it often happens, that houses are deserted, where the dead, nay dying, remain; who are not found for some time, and then in circumstances too horrid to be described. Several of these customary tokens of mourning were prohibited by the law.

V. 8, 9. Fasting and mourning for sin were more seasonable in these circumstances, than any kind of mirth or pleasure. “In your eyes, and in your days,” this clearly showed, that the predicted miseries would no longer be delayed.

V. 10—12. ‘Because the wicked dissemble their own sins, and murmur against God’s judgments, as though he had no just cause to punish them; he sheweth the prophet what to answer.’ It is worthy of remark, how much the spirit of self vindication appeared in the Jews, even in the grossly wicked state of the nation at this time. Several times already we have seen the traces of it in this prophecy. It is inherent in human nature, and no encor-
13 Therefore will I cast you out of this land, into a land that ye know not, neither ye nor your fathers; and there shall ye serve other gods day and night, where I will not shew you favour.

14 Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will send unto you fasting, mourning, and grinding of the teeth: and it shall be unto the end, saith the Lord: and they shall return every man to his people, and every man to his family.

15 But the Lord liveth, that brought up the children of Israel out of the land of Egypt, which delivered them from among the nations, and from the reproach of them which surrounded them on every side: he lifted up the right hand and his holy arm, and delivered them.

16 Therefore, behold, I will send unto you fasting, mourning, and grinding of the teeth: and it shall be unto the end, saith the Lord: and they shall return every man to his people, and every man to his family.

17 For mine eyes are upon all their ways: they are not hid from my face, neither is their iniquity hid from mine eyes.

18 And first I will requite their iniquity and their sin double: because they have defiled my land, they have filled mine inheritance with the carcases of their detestable and abominable things.

19 O Lord, I have heard the solemn sentence; I fear iniquity, and remain among the children of men.

20 Shall a man make gods unto himself, and they are no gods! Therefore, behold, I will bring them and their offspring among the nations, and they shall mock them in their own land. And I will pour out upon the father and the mother in the land whom I have gathered, the burden of my people.

21 Therefore thus says the Lord, your fathers which did eat in the land of Egypt, and your fathers that ate in the land of Canaan, shall fall by the sword, which I have poured out upon the land.

22 And as for yourselves, ye shall eat every man the flesh of his servant, and every man the flesh of his concubine, whom ye have in the land of Egypt, for I brought you unto this land, to eat the flesh of the slain, which ye have slain in the land of Egypt; that ye might eat it at every place, upon every green thing that groweth in the earth.

23 And it came to pass, at that time, that Ishmael the son of Abimelech took and carried away all the wealth of his father Abimelech: and his servants went after him, and his mother, and all his wives, and all his children.

24 And his mother answered his servants, and said, Am I a widow, and am I such a man as shall despise my son, so that he is not able to show himself before his brethren? there is none in Abimelech's house, that is able to show himself before Ishmael.

25 And she spake also to the men that were her servants, which did serve Ishmael his father, saying, Prostrate yourselves before the young men of my lord Ishmael, and humble yourselves before the young men: and Ishmael and his men rose up from before them, and bowed themselves, and returned.

26 And Ishmael and all that he had rose up, and went out of thence, and dwelt in the wilderness of Kedar, and was in conflict with all his brothers, and had no peace among them.
CHAPTER XVII.

The Jews are convicted of Idolatry, and condemned to captivity, 1—4. They who trust in man are cursed, and they blessed who trust in God, 5—8. None but God can search out the deceitfulness and desperate wickedness of the heart, 9, 10. The doom of those who grow rich by injustice, 11. The glory of God, as dwelling among his people, an aggravation of the guilt of such as forsook him, 12, 13. The prophet prays for comfort and salvation; complains of ill usage; protests his pa-

Holl.) Therefore the Lord determined, that he would by this one proof of his power and might, in the Babylonish captivity and the deliverance of the Jews from it, make them to know his name and effectually set them against idolatry. Yet the calling of the Gentiles was, and the future conversion of the Jews to Christianity, and restoration to their own land, will be, far more effectual for the destruction of idolatry, than any preceding events ever were.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The servants of God have continual occasion for self-denial in their implicit obedience: and he may very properly require them to forego the most innocent comforts of life, for his glory, and to render them instructive examples to the people. For he can make them more easy and satisfied in the situation allotted, than they who are not bound by such restrictions can imagine. None can be sure, that if they had children, or if their children were continued to them, they would add to their comfort; and many events may take place, which might cause them to wish that they had never been born, or that they had died in their infancy: so that entire resignation to the will of God in all these matters is our only wisdom. Peace, inward and outward, domestic and public, is wholly the work and gift of God, the result of his loving kindness and mercy: and when he takes his peace from any people, every kind of confusion and distress must follow. There may be circumstances, in which it may be proper to avoid those things which at other times are a part of our duty. In general it is good to go to the house of mourning; both in order to learn profitable lessons, and that we may counsel and comfort the afflicted, and give a religious turn to their sorrows. Yet times of public calamity may render such private regards unseemly; and it becometh the servants of God by every means to show their abhorrence of sin, and their apprehension of the divine indignation against impenitent transgressors. But it is more generally expedient for them to withdraw from the house of feasting; especially when the Lord calls his people to mourn and sigh for the abominations and miseries which they witness. And indeed we should all sit loose to the pleasures and concerns of this life: for carnal mirth, yes, the most allowable causes of joy, will soon cease from impenitent sinners, or be turned into weeping, wailing, and gnashing of teeth. We cannot silence the objections of unhumbled sinners; they will persist in justifying and excusing themselves, and declining against the dispensations and threatenings of God, as unmerited and severe. But he will shortly show them and all the world their iniquities; for his eyes are upon them; none of their sins, or the aggravations of them, are hid from him: and then they will no more be able to object to the justice of their sentence, than to elude or resist the executioners of it; “for every mouth shall be stopped, and all the world shall be found guilty before God.” Thus will he recompense the sins of the impenitent on their own heads; but he will also exercise mercy to thousands and tens of thousands. Every public calamity shall promote the purity of his Church, every personal affliction the sanctification of the believer: succeeding remarkable interpositions in behalf of his people shall eclipse those that have preceded: till the fulness of the Gentiles shall come in, and all Israel shall be saved. The nations have often known the power of Jehovah in his indignation: but they shall at length know his name as the Strength and Fortress of his people, and their Refuge in the time of trouble. When sinners truly repent, they will renounce the vain practices delivered to them by tradition from their fathers; and not be content with unprofitable vanity and lies, because these were the portion of their progenitors. And these are indeed the only portion of all who do not come to the Lord, renouncing all for his sake, accepting of his salvation, and devoting themselves to his worship and service.

NOTES.

CHAP. XVII. V. 1, 2. (Marg. Ref.) The Jews persisted in denying or excusing their guilt: but the Lord declared that it was marked before him in as indelible characters, as if written with a pen of iron or an engraving instrument, and with the point of a diamond, which were employed to make the most durable inscriptions on the hardest substances. Their attachment to idolatry was so engraved on their hearts as not to be erased; and it was written in legible characters on the horns of the altars, which they dedicated to idols. Perhaps the name of the idol, and of him who erected the altar, used to be inscribed on its horns. Their children were early initiated in these 3 O my mountain in the field, I will give thy substance and all thy treasures for spoil, and all thy high places for sin, throughout all thy borders.

4 And thou, even thou, shalt discontinue from thine heritage that I gave thee; and I will cause thee to serve thine enemies in the land which thou knowest not; for ye have kindled a fire in mine anger, which shall burn for ever.

5 Thus saith the Lord; Cursed is the man that trusteth in man, and maketh flesh his arm, and whose heart departeth from the Lord.

6 For he shall be like the heath in the desert, and shall not see when good cometh; but shall inhabit the parched places from year to year; and shall not see the dwelling place of_jwtens; and shall not dwell in the land of the reptiles; but shall be cast out into the wilderness.

abominations, and would be sure to remember their altars and groves as long as they lived: and that idolatry was handed down to succeeding generations. Or this verse may be rendered, "As they remember their children, so they remember their altars, &c."

V. 3, 4. Zion, "the mountain of the Lord's house," may here be put for Jerusalem. The city itself is elsewhere called "the valley, and the rock of the plain," (xxxi. 13;) for it was surrounded with hills: but the whole together constituted a mountain, and the adjacent country a field in which it stood. This was sentenced to be plundered by the Chaldeans, and Judah himself, (or the nation of the Jews,) should be dispossessed for a long time, and the inheritance which God had given him, and reduced to slavery in a foreign country: and though this national judgment would at length be terminated, the Lord's national judgment against his sins would burn like fire perpetually, nay, for ever, against the impenitent.

The word rendered discontinue seems to refer to the sabbatical years: as these had long been neglected, the Lord determined to give rest to the land by the destruction or captivity of the inhabitants.

V. 5—8. The Jews were always prone to trust in powerful allies, or in their own strength; which emboldened them to disregard God and his denunciations of vengeance.

A dreadful curse is here therefore pronounced against every one who trusteth in man: (Note, Ps. cxliv. 2—5.) To expect safety, prosperity, or happiness, from any man, or number of men; to rely on their power, wealth, wisdom, valour, favour, and fidelity; and thus to neglect the promises, precepts, and ordinances of God, and to bestow more pains to obtain man's patronage and protection, than the divine favours; as a prince could render him happy who has God for his enemy: by these things, and such as these, we "make flesh our arm," and put a poor, frail, dying, sinful creature, in the place of our almighty and everlasting Protector and Helper. In so doing, "the heart departeth from the Lord," and renounces its reliance on him. And as trusting in other men idolizes them; so reliance on our own capacity, knowledge, wisdom, strength, or righteousness, idolizes ourselves: and when this is habitual, it subjects a man to this curse.

A person of this character resembles the heath, a sorry, sapless, worthless shrub, which grows in the barren desert, and withers for want of moisture; and whilst other plants, in more fertile soils, flourish by seasonable rains; and whilst others, this still continues the same, as doomed to grow in its native heartless soil. Thus he who trusts in man can never share the prosperity of God's people: he must remain destitute of divine grace, unfruitful, unholy, and contemptible, frustrated of all his expectations, liable to be deprived of all comfort, exposed to all misery, and excluded from the presence and favour of God, to inhabit the land where sin and sorrow dwell for ever. But he who trusts in the Lord, and expects every blessing from his mercy, grace, and providence, according to his word, is a happy man: he resembles a tree planted in a fertile soil on the bank of a river, which is not affected by heat or drought; but is covered with verdant leaves, and continues to bear fruit in the most unfavourable seasons. His profession and prosperity are permanent: he remains safe in every difficulty, and needs fear no event; for he shall not cease from bringing forth the fruits of righteousness to all eternity. (Note, Ps. i. 3, 4. xcvii. 12—14.) The clause, rendered "he shall not see when heat cometh," is in the Hebrew text, and in the Septuagint, "he shall not fear," &c.; and this gives a clearer sense than the masculine marginal reading.

V. 9, 10. The heart here means the dispositions and desires of the rational soul; the result of the understanding, will, and affections, reciprocally influencing each other. The heart, not of this or that man, but of fallen men in general, is declared to be deceitful above all things, and "desperately wicked." Every man is naturally disposed to dissimulation, self-flattery, and hypocrisy; in an inconceivable degree; every man is prone to be imposed upon by his own heart; and this deceitfulness is more dangerous to CHAPTER XVII.

B. C. 605.

As the partridge sitteth on eggs, and hatcheth them not; so he that getteth riches and not by right, he shall leave them in the midst of his days, and at his end shall be a fool.

12 ¶ A glorious high throne from the beginning is the place of our sanctuary, that the Lord, the Hope of Israel, all that forsake thee shall be ashamed, and they that depart from me shall be written in the earth, because they have forsaken the Lord, the Fountain of living waters.

him than any external artifice and deceit. The pride of the heart leads men to form false estimates of their real and comparative character and conduct, and to think far better of themselves than they deserve. The love of the pleasures and profit resulting from the favourite sin betrays every man into deception respecting its criminality, and his own guilt and danger; his understanding is thus bribed to frame excuses and palliations of it; he is led to call it by some soft name, and his conscience is thus seduced into connivance. The enmity of the heart to the holiness of God, and his righteous sovereignty, betrays men in a variety of ways into fallacious reasonings about his perfections, and their obligations to him: against the divine original of the sacred Scriptures, or against their obvious meaning; against the strict and spiritual precepts and awful sanctions of the law, against the humiliating doctrines of the gospel or their holy tendency; and against the measure, rule, and consequences of the future judgment. To this deceitfulness of the heart all partial and erroneous decisions of the conscience are in a great measure to be ascribed; with the self-preference which is universal in all unconverted men; the strange propensity of the most atrocious criminals to palliate their vices, and to plume themselves on some imagined virtues; and the gross absurdity of men's boasting of the goodness of their hearts, when forced to allow of the wickedness of their lives; though they must be conscious that their wicked inclinations and imaginations have been immensely more numerous than their actual sins. From the same source springs the universal propensity of men to be confident in their hasty resolutions of amendment, under sudden terrors or pangs of conscience; though they have found them as changeable as the wind in all former instances. In a word, (for the detail would be endless,) the deceitfulness of the heart is the only cause that any man doubts of its being desperately wicked; and capable of any kind or degree of impiety, iniquity, enmity, cruelty, or sensuality that ever was committed or can be conceived. For the history of the world and of the Church, yes, universal experience and observation, demonstrate, that the heart of every man is naturally so wicked, that, were he left wholly to himself, in suitable circumstances of temptation, and gradual seduction from one thing to another, by the artifice of Satan, he is capable of deliberately committing any crime that ever was perpetrated on earth, and with every possible aggravation. But, like an artful villain, who conceals, that he may perpetrate his base purposes, the heart is so deceitful in its desperate wickedness, that it is wholly unsuspected by most men respecting themselves, even though they are aware of the artfulness and selfishness of other men, and suspicious of them to excess. But he, who believes the testimony of God, learns to watch his own heart, (as he would a servant, whom he was credibly assured was a concealed villain;) and he will in a course of years, and by a variety of painful experiences, comparing what passes in his mind with the divine law, and praying to be taught of God to know himself, infallibly learn the truth of this harsh and offensive decision in his own case; he will perceive that this is the exact picture of his own heart; and thence he will deduce many most important lessons to direct his conduct. But no man can penetrate to the depth of this deceptive evil: the more the subject is studied, the worse will the heart of man appear; yet must much remain unknown both in our own hearts and those of others, which could only be discovered by our being actually placed in all the infinite variety of possible circumstances and temptations. As this cannot be done with any man, nor the result be made fully known to a finite understanding; so God alone, who knows entirely and searcheth thoroughly the heart of man, is perfectly acquainted with the extent of its desperate wickedness. And he proves and tries men's actions, to bring forth into practice what he sees in the heart, whether of the sin that is naturally there, or of the grace which he hath communicated; that his decisions may appear to his creatures, (what they uniformly are in themselves,) the result of infinite justice, wisdom, truth, and mercy. The Lord saw the hearts of the Jews to be more desperately rebellious than their conduct showed them; and this might be ascribed as a reason of his severe judgments: and it is also a conclusive reason, that none should trust in men, but in God alone.

V. 11. What bird is meant by the original word, is not certainly known. Some understand the first clause to mean, that the bird in question sat on eggs which she had not laid, or those of a different species, and that the young left her when hatched; so that she had the confinement and fatigue of sitting on the eggs; but no compensating pleasure from the brood. But perhaps the partridge sits more frequently than other birds without hatching her eggs; as they lie upon the ground, and are exposed to a variety of accidents, which may render all her care and pains about them unavailing. Thus unjust men get wealth with much contrivance and many crimes, and then they are taken away in providence, perhaps in the prime of their lives: so that they are torn from their riches, having had little or no satisfaction in them; and their end proves their folly, though for a time they were deemed prudent and prosperous. This must have been the case of many Jews at the time of the captivity. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 12. 13. The sanctuary of God was placed among the Jews, for a throne on which Jehovah was gloriously exalted, as their King and Protector, where he displayed his power and majesty, in the works of mercy and special to yourselves, and bear no burden on the sabbath-day, nor bring it in by the gates of Jerusalem;

22 Neither carry forth a burden out of your houses on the sabbath-day; neither do ye any work, but hallow ye the sabbath-day, as I commanded your fathers.

23 But they obeyed not, neither inclined their ear, but made their neck stiff, that they might not hear, nor receive instruction.

24 And it shall come to pass, if ye diligently hearken unto me, saith the Lord, to bring in no burden through the gates of this city on the sabbath-day, but hallow the sabbath-day, to do no work therein;

25 Then shall there enter into the gates of this city kings and princes, sitting upon the throne of David, riding in chariots and on horses, and the princes, the men of Judah, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem: this city shall remain for ever.

26 And they shall come from the cities of Judah, and from the places about Jerusalem, and from the land of Benjamin, and from the plain, and from the mountains, and from the south, bringing burnt offerings, and sacrifices, and libation: they did not, and would not believe them to be the word of God till they were fulfilled, of which they saw no probability, and they even set the Almighty at defiance. But the prophet could appeal to God, that he had not been eager to leave the ordinary employment of a priest, or pastor of the flock, to follow him as a prophet: he had neither sought this honour for himself, nor been hasty in accepting of it. Or, as others interpret it, he had patiently continued in the execution of his office, as became a public teacher who was a follower of God; and had not been wearied by their ill usage. The Lord could witness for him, that he had not desired the winter season which he predicted; but had continually pleaded for a reversion or mitigation of the sentence. He had faithfully adhered to his instructions; and had spoken what was right in the sight of God, and what he would verify: he therefore prayed, that he would not be a terror to him, seeing he was his only confidence in the day of evil. In the present confusion of his mind. Jeremiah seems to have had alarming apprehensions of the divine displeasure, or of being involved in the public calamities. But he prayed that he might be exempted from confusion and dismay, and that these might be the portion of his persecutors; and that the day of evil might overwhelm them with double destruction, as they had occasioned the ruin of the nation. (Marg. Ref.)
meat-offerings, and incense, and bringing = sacrifices of praise unto the house of the Lord.

27 But if ye will not hearken unto me to hallow the sabbath-day, and not to bear a burden, even entering in at the gates of Jerusalem on the sabbath-day,

Then will I kindle a fire in the gates thereof, and it shall devour the palaces of Jerusalem, and it shall not be quenched.

V. 19-27. Some think that this message was delivered at the time of Josiah's reformation; because of the promises contained in it, which they think less suitable to the time when the captivity was absolutely decided on. But this is uncertain: for the Lord proved the people by one test after another, that their obstinate rebellion might be more evident; and he might properly make these conditional promises, though he foreknew that they would not perform the annexed condition. It is therefore probable, that the message was sent at a later period. The prophet was directed to lay before the king, rulers, and people of Judah, this command, and its sanctions, in the most public manner. Let them show their disposition to return to obedience, by observing purity and enforcing the fourth commandment, and not doing or permitting any manner of work to be done on that holy day. (Note. Exod. xx. 8-11.) Let them prevent any burden being carried by man or beast, and cause all secular employments to cease, according to the law given to their fathers, but obstinately broken by them; and let them take heed to themselves, for they were on their good behaviour; and if they diligently obeyed this word, their prosperity should be restored and established; the family of David should recover its pristine dignity; Jerusalem should never be subdued by any invader; and the temple should be preserved and frequented by the people, living in plenty, peace, and security, as in the best days of their pious kings. But if they refused obedience in this particular, the predicted vengeance would be inevitable. We cannot conceive any thing more decisive on the importance of hallowing the sabbath-day.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-13.

Though men violate the commands of God, without much reflection, yet every sin is marked in his book as with an iron pen; yet, they are all so graven upon the table of the heart, that they will be readily recognized by every man's conscience in the great day of retribution. Indeed, conscience frequently now reproaches the transgressor with his crimes, when he will not yield to conviction, but, as much as possible, imposes silence on that friendly monitor, and rushes into further sins. This is the effect of our natural and customary bias to evil, whence simplicity and wickedness proceed, like water from a fountain; and as "the heart is deceitful above all things and desperately wicked," the fruit of our doings must of course be evil, as far as we are uninfluenced by the sanctifying Spirit of God, and in proportion as restraints are removed, and Satan hath permission to tempt us. That which is graven in the heart will become legible in the life: men's actions are only speciments of their desires and purposes; and as such they testify against sinners, and prove the justice of God in the punishments inflicted on them. Children are prone to forget good instructions, examples, and tuition; but they readily remember the vanity, vice, and folly, in which they have been trained up, or with which their memories and imaginations have been polluted. Thus one generation succeeds to the crimes of another; and the tendency of corrupt nature is from bad to worse; except as a prudent, cautious, and pious education of youth, and proper means used by parents, ministers, magistrates, and others, are rendered effectual by the blessing of God to counteract the tendency. This consideration may suggest many important duties to men in every order of society, for the good of their neighbours and that of the rising generation: whilst the conviction of the deceitfulness and desperate wickedness of the human heart will remind us, that "He, who trusteth in his own heart, is a fool." What need have we then of deep humiliation before God! How entirely should we depend on his mercy and grace! How ought we to examine ourselves, to keep out of the way of temptation, to shun every occasion of sin, and to pray to be rendered victorious over every assault of the tempter! What cause have we to beg of God continually to search, and prove, and keep us, and not suffer us to be deceived by our own hearts; and to create in us a clean and holy nature by his Spirit? How jealous should we be of ourselves, distrustful of our resolves, and suspicious of our judgment in our own cause, or where our prejudices or interests are concerned! How thankful should we be for restraints, (even by poverty, pain, or sickness,) from acting out all that is in our hearts, to the misery and ruin, temporal and eternal, of ourselves and others! How thankful should we be for the salvation of Christ! And how patient under every trial that we meet with from the hand of God, or from the wickedness of our fellow sinners! For nothing but the divine interposition could make our lives tolerable in such a world as this; as it too plainly appears from the wars, persecutions, massacres, and other dreadful crimes and evils, which have desolated the earth: innumerable that every historian, who relates unvarnished facts, as effectually illustrates the scriptural doctrine of man's depravity, as if he had purposely set himself to do it! But whatever we suffer, or however we may be impoverished or enslaved by cruel enemies in a strange land; yet we shall be happy if we escape the fire of the Lord's anger, which will burn for ever. This cannot be done by those who trust in man, and expect health and happiness from their fellow creatures, or from themselves: for thus they remain impenitent and unbelieving, shut up under the curse of the law, and excluded from the grace of the gospel; they continue at a distance from God, the Fountain of living waters, and the Source of all wisdom, holiness, and felicity; and must be left for ever base and unholy, to associate with the enemies of God, in the regions of shame, misery, despair, and absolute unrestrained wickedness. What then will it avail them, if by their crimes and carnal confidences, they have accumulated...
CHAP. XVIII.

Jeremiah.

By the emblem of the potter and his clay, God shews his right and power over Israel; and the method of his righteous and merciful dealings with the nations, 1–10. The prophet warns the people to repent; expostulates with them on their folly and wickedness, and denounces divine judgments, 11–17. Their devices against him, and his prophetic prayers against them, 18–23.

The word which came to Jeremiah from the Lord, saying,

2 Arise, and go down to the potter's house, and there I will cause thee to hear my words.

3 Then I went down to the potter's house, and, behold, he wrought a work on the wheels.

4 And the vessel that he had made of clay was marred in the hand of the potter; so he made it again another vessel, as seemed good to the potter to make it.

5 Then the word of the Lord came to me, saying, wealth or lived in prosperity! When God shall cut them off, and say unto each of them, "Thou fool, this night shall thy soul be required of thee, and then those shall perish, which thou hast provided." Nor can hypocrisy serve any other purpose but that of self-deception: "for the Lord knoweth, and searches the heart and "reins, to give every man according to his ways." Let us then seek happiness by trusting in him, accepting his mercy, and walking before him in the humble obedience of love, and the patient submission of hope: that being planted in his courts, we may grow fruitful in righteousness, and flourish in unfading and ever increasing prosperity. For no changes or temptations can injure the root, destroy the fruit, wither the leaf, or even mar the beauty of those trees of righteousness, which the Lord hath planted for the glory of his name. May we then rejoice in the hope of Israel; may our names be written in heaven, and our treasures there deposited!

6 O house of Israel, 4 cannot I do with you as this potter? saith the Lord. Behold, as the clay is in the potter's hand, so are ye in mine hand, O house of Israel.

V. 14–27.

Whatever wounds or diseases we experience in our hearts or consciences, let us apply to the Lord to heal us, that we may be healed; to save us, that we may be saved; and that our souls may praise his name. His hands can bind up the troubled conscience, and heal the broken heart; he can cure the most invertebrate diseases of our infected nature; and he can fill us with joy amidst contempt or persecution, and even in the agonies of death; and his righteousness and salvation are for ever. Thus applying to him for all the blessings of his grace; "exerting ourselves to have a conscience void of offence towards God and man;" and following him patiently and fully, all things will certainly terminate in our good. Trials all must meet with; and the ministers of Christ cannot escape the enmity or scorn of those, who despise and defy God himself; but if they have not rashly intruded into the sacred office; if they are now employed by him, and keep close to their instructions; if they continue to pray for the salvation of those whom they solemnly warn to flee from the wrath to come; if their words and works are right before God, they have nothing to fear, he will not be a terror but a comfort to them, and answer their hopes in every day of evil; and whilst they are delivered and graciously rewarded, their enemies will be dismayed and destroyed with aggravated ruin. The daring impertinence of mankind appears exceedingly in the contempt which is generally shown to the commandment of hallowing the sabbath. The degree of strictness with which this ordinance is observed, is a good test of the degree of spiritual religion in any land. But by this rule, how awful is our condition in this nation, especially in the metropolis and its environs! A small number in proportion pay any decent respect to the Lord's day, or the ends for which it was instituted. Various secular employments, and some not fit to be tolerated on any day, are openly conducted on it: and probably more gross licentiousness and impurity are perpetrated on the Lord's day, than on all the rest. If this have a similar connexion with our national peace and prosperity as it had with those of Judah, we have abundant reason to take heed to ourselves, and to fear lest a fire should be kindled in our gates to devour our most magnificent palaces; in too many of which God's holy day is more daringly violated, than in almost any of the houses of the poor. And doubtless he may say of us also, "I commanded: but they obeyed not, neither inclined "their ear; but made their neck stiff, that they might not "hear, nor receive instruction." It behoves the ministers of religion in every place to sound the alarm in this respect, that all who go in and out at our gates may hear: and that rulers, magistrates, and all the inhabitants of the land, by their authority, influence, and example: by attention to their families, and by avoiding all intercourse with those who will not hallow the Lord's day, may combine to check the progress of this growing evil: that so true religion may revive, general reformation may take place, our national prosperity be preserved and increased; and above all, that the souls of men may be led into the ways of eternal salvation.

NOTES.

CHAP. XVIII. V. 6. Indisputably the Lord had a more absolute property in his people, as their Creator and Governor, than the potter could have over the clay: yet
At what instant I shall speak concerning a nation, and concerning a kingdom, to pluck up, and to pull down, and to destroy it;

if that nation, against whom I have pronounced, turn from their evil, I will repent of the evil that I thought to do unto them.

And at what instant I shall speak concerning a nation, and concerning a kingdom, to build and to plant it;

if it do evil in my sight, that it obey not my voice, then will I repent of the good wherewith I said I would benefit them.

Now therefore Go to, speak to the men of Judah, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, saying, Thus saith the Lord Behold, I frame evil against you, and devise a device against you: return ye now every one from his evil way, and make your ways and your doings good.

And they said, There is no hope; but we will walk after our own devices, and every man will do according to the imagination of his evil heart.

and we will every one do the imagination of his evil heart.

Therefore thus saith the Lord; Ask ye now among the heathen, who hath heard such things? Is it virgin of Israel hath done a very horrible thing.

Will a man leave the snow of Lebanon which cometh from the rock of the field? or shall the cold flowing waters that come from another place be forsaken?

Because my people hath forgotten me, they have burnt incense to vanity, and they have caused them to stumble in their ways from the ancient paths, to walk in paths, in a way not cast up;

To make their land desolate, and a perpetual hissing: every one that passeth thereby shall be astonished, and wag his head.

I will scatter them as with an east wind before the enemy; I will shew them the back, and not the face, in the day of their calamity.

the potter disposed of his clay as he pleased without control; but the people were ever ready to murmur against God, for his dispensations towards them. The case holds equally in respect of other nations, and of every individual. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 7—10. The sovereignty of God is absolute, and he does not always show the reasons of his conduct; especially towards fallen sinners, who are as marred clay in his hand; but it is always in perfect wisdom, justice, truth, and mercy. This was here shown by the case, in his providential government of the nations. If he sent his prophets to warn any nation with desolating judgments for their sins, a reserve of mercy to the penitent was always implied. If then that nation, (as Nineveh did at the preaching of Jonah,) took the alarm, and by repentance and reformation sought to avert the impending storm, the Lord would certainly repent of the evil that he thought to do to them; that is, he would not execute the threatened vengeance. On the other hand, all promises of national prosperity, implied a requirement of obedience: and if a apostasy from God and his service took place, the promised blessings would be revoked or withheld. (Note. Gen. vi. 7.)

When the Scripture attributeth repentance unto God, it is not that he doth contrary to that which he hath ordained in his secret counsel. But when he threateneth, it is a call to repentance: and when he giveth man grace to repent, the threatening, (which ever containeth a condition in it,) taketh not place: and this the Scripture calleth repentance; because it appeareth so to man's judgment. Wherever repentance is ascribed to God, it must be meant only of a change with respect to the outward administrations of his providence, and his dealings with man otherwise than he did before. (Lowth.)

V. 12. (Note, ii. 25.) The people either pretended that God was a severe Master, whom there was no hope of pleasing; and an implacable Enemy, whom there was no hope of pacifying; or that there was no hope of security or prosperity, if they renounced their idols, and heathen ordinances, and returned to his service: they were therefore determined to go on in their evil ways. "But they said desperately, Surely we will walk after our own imaginations; and every man after the stubbornness of his wicked heart." (Old trans.) "As men that had no remorse, but were altogether bent to rebellion, and to their own self-will." Perhaps the people, contemptuously and profanely, used the prophet's own words concerning them, in expressing their avowed disregard to his exhortations: for it is not likely that they meant to own the wickedness of their hearts. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 13—17. (Note. ii. 9—13.) The heathen had not apostatized from their false gods, as the Israelites did from the true God. He had espoused the nation as a chaste virgin; but she had committed horrible adulteries. Common sense taught men to value clear waters, which, from the melted snows on Lebanon, were purified by running through the cavities of the rocks, and sprang up in the fields; or to prefer the cold spring-waters from any other place to the stagnant waters of some dirty pond or cistern; but Israel had forsaken the infinitely glorious Jehovah for 2 Y 2
B. C. 600.

JEREMIAH.

18 ¶ Then said they, 'Come, and let us devise devices against Jeremiah; for the law shall not perish from the priest, nor counsel from the wise, nor the word from the prophet. ¶ Come, and let us smite him with the tongue, and let us not give heed to any of his words.'

19 ¶ Give heed to me, O Lord, and hearken to the voice of them that contend with me.

20 Shall evil be recompensed for good? for they have digged a pit for my soul. ¶ Remember that I stood before thee to speak good for them, and to turn away thy wrath from them.

21 Therefore deliver up their children to the famine, and + pour out their blood by the force of the sword; and let their wives be bereaved of their children, and be widows; and let their men be put to death; ¶ let their young men be slain by the sword in battle.

22 Let a cry be heard from their houses, when thou shalt bring a troop suddenly upon them: ¶ for they have digged a pit to take me, and hid snares for my feet.

23 Yet, Lord, thou knowest all their counsel against me; ¶ to slay me; ¶ for give not their iniquity, neither blot out their sin from thy sight; but let them be overthrown before thee: deal thus with them in the time of thine anger.

worthless idols! and they had caused each other to stumble and turn aside from the ancient paths, in which their believing ancestors had walked, into such as were unauthorized, and which resembled the deep or rough road, through countries which are seldom travelled. For this sin and folly their land would soon be desolated, and exposed to the derision of every passenger: they would be left to fly before the enemy, as chaff or dust before the east wind; and the Lord would turn his back on them, and show them no favour in their distress. The sixteenth verse is rendered differently by some translators; but the meaning is clear; and our translation seems preferable to such as are substituted in its place.

V. 18. When the prophet assured the people that the Lord devised devices against them, and called them to repentance, instead of obeying the call, they devised devices against him, and thus they showed their enmity against God. The prophet had denounced vengeance against the ungodly priests, rulers, and counselors, and against the false prophets. (Marg. Ref.) But they were confident, that they should maintain their credit and authority, notwithstanding his predictions; and that their priests would be able to understand and handle the law, their men to give good counsel, and their prophets to speak the word of God to them. They therefore conspired together, instead of obeying the call, they devised devices against him, and thus they showed their enmity against God. The prophet had denounced vengeance against the ungodly priests, rulers, and counselors, and against the false prophets. (Marg. Ref.) But they were confident, that they should maintain their credit and authority, notwithstanding his predictions; and that their priests would be able to understand and handle the law, their men to give good counsel, and their prophets to speak the word of God to them. They therefore conspired together, instead of obeying the call, they devised devices against him, and thus they showed their enmity against God.

This argument the wicked have ever used against the "servants of God." The Church cannot err; we are the "Church;" and therefore whoever speaketh against us "ought to die. Thus the false church persecuted "true Church, which standeth not in outward pomp, and "in multitude; but is known by the graces of the Holy "Ghost." (Marg. Ref.)

V. 19, 20. The discovery of this conspiracy led the prophet to renew his complaints; and his prayers that the Lord would notice the malicious words of those who rewarded him evil for good. If the people would not heed to his words, he trusted the Lord would. They were secretly plotting against his life: but he, that searched the heart, knew that he earnestly prayed for their temporal and eternal salvation.

V. 21—23. Since they are thus incorrigible, I shall not any more intercede for them; but let those calamities of famine and sword, which thou hast threatened, overtake them. (Luther) Seeing the obstinate malice of the adversaries, which grew daily more and more; the prophet, being moved by God's Spirit, without and carnal affection, prayed for their destruction; because he knew that it should tend to God's glory and profit of his Church. As several of the verbs are imperative, the language of prayer, rather than prophecy, it is not needful to maintain that no mixture of human infirmity discovered itself on this trying occasion; especially as we must allow this to have been the case in other instances. (xx. 15—18.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—10.

The servant of God may collect profitable hints from every object and occurrence: and nothing conveys truth more forcibly than apt illustration. We should unreservedly obey the commandments of God: and if we should hear his words, we must meet him according to his appointment. The great Creator and Lord of the universe hath an undoubted right and uncontrollable power to dispose of us and all creatures, as he pleases; and this extends equally to nations and individuals, to our temporal and our eternal concerns. And as fallen creatures we are entirely without plea or claim, having forfeited all by sin. He may therefore, "according to the counsel of his own "will," either leave us to ourselves, as "vessels of wrath "fitted for destruction," or cast us into a new shape, as "vessels of mercy prepared before by grace for his eternal "glory." But this absolute sovereignty is always directed by unerring wisdom, and exercised with the most perfect justice, truth, goodness, and mercy: so that none have CHAP. XIX.

The prophet is sent to Tophet, (with an earthen bottle, and attended by the elders;) to denounce the judgments of God on the Jews and on Jerusalem, and there to break the bottle as an emblem of their destruction, 1—13. He returns to the temple, and declares the same to the people, 14, 15.

THUS saith the Lord, Go and get a potter's earthen bottle, and take thereof the ancients of the people, and of the ancients of the priests; 2 And go forth unto the valley of the son of Hinnom, which is by the entry of the * east gate, and proclaim there the words that I shall tell thee.

3 And say, * Hear ye the word of the Lord, O kings of Judah, and inhabitants of Jerusalem; Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, I will bring evil upon this place, upon which * whatsoever heareth, his ears shall tingle.

4 Because they have forsaken me, and have estranged this place, and have burned incense in it unto other gods, whom neither they nor their fathers have known, nor the kings of Judah, and have filled this place with the blood of innocents.

5 And now, therefore, * hear ye the word of the Lord, all Judah, and all inhabitants of Jerusalem; Thus saith the Lord, I testify against you that ye have decoyed me off the old way, which was good, and have followed the way of your fathers, which they followed not; 6 And I will send a sword upon you, that it destroyeth the father, and the son, and cutteth off the refuge from wickedness.

7 Therefore, as ye have forgotten me, and have walked after栏目者, and have not kept my commandments, saith the Lord, 8 Behold, I will bring upon you such as came out of your own hiring; and they will hate you; they will confound you; they will rejoice at your confusion.

9 And ye will say, * We are not gods; and the work of our hands shall speak for us; we will tell the future by the fortune-teller; and the law of usury shall be our prince. 10 And I will pluck you out of the land which is your home, and I will cast you into a land which is not yours.

11 Then shall you remember, * for thus saith the Lord; that I smote you for your sauciness; because ye have forgotten me, ye have provoked, and provoked me with your works and your doings; therefore will I bring evil upon you, and I will destroy you. 12 Because ye have sold yourselves for your offspring, and are not ashamed; therefore I will take you from off the land which I gave you; and ye shall be no more a people unto me.

13 Ahab king of Israel went up against Ramoth-gilead, and took counsel with all the prophets of his, and all the seers, saying, Shall I go up against Ramoth-gilead, or shall I forbear? 14 And one of the prophets said unto him, Go up; for the Lord shall deliver it into thine hand.

15 But another said, Thou shalt not go up; for the Lord will deliver it into thine hand. 16 And King Ahab and all the kings of Israel went up, and they came to Ramoth-gilead; and the king of Syria gathered together a multitude, and they came against Ramoth-gilead.

17 And the king of Israel said unto his servants, Shall we fall upon them? if so be it well with us, then shall we follow them: and if not, then shall we have sufficient spoil. 18 And one of the prophets came to the king, saying, Thus saith the Lord, Feed not the army of Syria; for theirs is no bread, nor water; and give not thine army grain and horn to set them on fire; lest they should shoot down the inhabitants of Ramoth-gilead.

19 And the king of Israel said unto his servants, Shall we go up by the plain road, or by the way of the vineyards to Samaria? 20 And one of the servants of the king said, He is not worthy to be of thy servants that I should speak unto him: but the, thy servant will go, and will speak with him. 21 And the king said unto him, What hast thou to do here? And he said, I am a servant of the Lord, and I have seen all that they have done in thine house, and all that they have done in the house of Israel; and there is none like unto thee, but thou art great, and thine house is great above all house; for in it there is glory. 22 And he said, Henceforth the Lord will deliver me from mine enemies. 23 And the king spake unto him, Thou shalt not speak any more unto me: lo, thou shalt go down on thine knees, and I will hear thee. 24 And the servant of the Lord said, And it shall be, if I go down on my knees, the Lord will shew me mercy. 25 And the king said unto his servants, Shall I go down on my knees? I will not; but this servant of the Lord said, Therefore I will go down on my knees. 26 And the king of Israel arose, and the servants with him, and bowed themselves before the king of Syria: therefore the king of Syria answered: and he said, Take me up, and carry me forth out of the camp, that I may go in to Ramoth-gilead. 27 And one看了 the king, and said, Behold, the king of Syria is come again to take possession of the land. 28 And the servants answered the king, and said, Behold, my master, the kings of Israel have found out our near kinsmen, and have appointed them captains over their armies; and also the kings of Syria have appointed them captains over their armies. 29 And the king of Israel said unto his servants, Am I not he that smote the Egyptians with ten thousand swordsmen? 30 And ye said, The Lord shall deliver them into our hand, and we will smite them. 31 And ye saw the sons of the prophets of our country, who said to your master, Go up; for the Lord will deliver this land into thine hand. 32 And ye have not hearkened to the voice of the Lord; but ye have mustered against the king. 33 Now therefore, hear me, my servants, and ye shall be栋 in all, and every one of you shall return to his home; and I will go to Ramoth-gilead. 34 And it came to pass that when the messengers had come to king Ahaziah for the matter; he was sick in his knees. 35 And king Joram sent to king Ahaziah, saying, Do you well, and take heed that you eat nothing, and drink nothing, neither take bath: for I am gone to consume the Canaanites, and I will take possession of Moab, and will utterly destroy Ammon. 36 But the rest of the acts of Ahab, and all that he did, and how he fought against Ramoth-gilead; are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel? 37 And the rest of the acts of Ahab, and how he built, and how he set over his eunuchs, are they not written in the book of the chronicles of the kings of Israel? 38 And Ahab rested with his fathers; and Joram his son reigned in his stead.

V. 11—23.

Sinners should be called on to take notice, that the Lord is framing evil and devising devices concerning them, which they cannot escape, except they return from their evil ways, and seek his grace, that they may make their ways and doings good. But some of them will answer, There is no fear, God is so merciful, that he will not punish others will say, There is no hope, for he is so strict and severe, that he cannot be pleased, and will not pardon; while some verge alternately to presumption and despair, and in both determine to follow their own devices, and to walk after the imaginations of their own evil hearts. But the perversion or contempt of God's word, and the daring disregard shown to his precepts among professing Christians, are more horrible than any wickedness to be found among the heathen. Multitudes forget God, to follow lying vanities, and stumble from the ancient paths to walk in ways of their own devising. But he will disown those who have disowned him: and what will they then do in the day of judgment, and perdition of ungodly men? Yet, instead of taking warning by such awful denunciations, men frame devices against the faithful servants of God, who declare to them his whole counsel: and none are so violent and implacable in their enmity as false teachers, who are proud of their wisdom and reputation for sanctity; for the foolish preaching of God's word detects their hypocrisy and ignorance, undermines their credit and authority, and predicts their confusion and destruction. When sinners resolve not to regard the word of the Lord, it may be expected, that base slanderers of his servants will form a prelude to bloody persecutions, except their malice be restrained by an invisible power. In such circumstances we should study to possess our souls with patience, and to give ourselves unto prayer: and it will be comfortable to reflect that we have earnestly sought, and fervently prayed for, the salvation of those who now revile or persecute us: but we must still continue to pray for, and not against, them. We may, however, declare, that most tremendous punishments await such as recompense evil for good, and seek to destroy faithful ministers, or to entangle them in their snares, unless they repent of this atrocious wickedness. Nor can men commit any sin that tends more to bring down national judgments, or to entail misery on their posterity, as well as destruction on their own souls.

NOTES.

CHAP. XIX. V. 1. Ancients, &c. Or elders.—Certain persons of the Sanhedrim, or great counsel of the nation; and some of the chief priests, the heads of the twenty-four courses. (Marg. Ref.) (Notes, I Chr. xxiv.) Some of these might be more favourable to Jeremiah than others; and the Lord inclined them to attend him on this occasion, that they might witness and report what passed.

V. 2. The prophets sometimes did not know what they were to speak, till the very time that their message was to be delivered, and then it was immediately revealed to them. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 3. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 4. Estranged, &c. Setting up idols even in the temple of God! (Marg. Ref.)
5 They have built also the high places of Baal, to burn their sons with fire for burnt-offerings unto Baal, which I commanded not, nor spake it, neither came it into my mind:

6 Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that this place shall no more be called Tophet, nor The valley of slaughter.

7 And I will make void the counsel of Judah and Jerusalem in this place, and I will cause them to fall by the sword before their enemies, and by the hands of them that seek their lives: and their carcasses will I give to be meat for the fowls of the heaven, and for the beasts of the earth.

8 And I will make this city desolate, and an hissing; every one that passeth thereby shall be astonished and hissed, because of all the plagues thereof.

9 And I will cause them to eat the flesh of their sons and the flesh of their daughters, and they shall eat every one the flesh of his friend, in the siege and the straitness, wherewith their enemies, and they that seek their lives, shall strain them.

—Nor the Kings, &c. The pious kings of Judah had not known, or noticed, the idols worshipped by their descendants.

—Filled, &c. Some confine the interpretation of this to the children which they sacrificed to idols. But the blood of innocents, or of innocent persons, (as contrasted with malefactors who were put to death for their crimes,) includes the blood of the prophets and of the righteous, who were put to death by the persecuting rage of the rulers and people. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 5. Unto Baal. The idol to whom these inhuman sacrifices were offered is elsewhere called Molech. Baal and Molech are two names promiscuously given to one and the same idol. (xxxii. 35.) (Loth.) Some things however, favour the opinion that Molech and Baal were different idols: one the abomination of Ammon; the other of the Philistines and Zidonians, (1 Kings xi. 8. xvi. 31.) 32. 2 Kings i. 1.) But it is probable, that the Jews sacrificed children sometimes to one and sometimes to the other.

Which, &c. (Note, vii. 31.)

V. 9. (Notes, Lev. xxvi. 29. Deut. xxviii. 49—57. Lam. iv. 10.)

V. 11. The Lord alone could restore Jerusalem; until his time came, their ruin would be irreparable, and their efforts useless: and the destruction of numbers of the inhabitants would be final and irreremediable.

V. 12. As Tophet, &c. That is, a place of slaughter and burial, and altogether uncleanness.

10 Then shalt thou break the bottle in the sight of the men that go with thee; 11 And shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord of hosts: Even so will I break this people and this city, as one breaketh a potters vessel, that cannot be made whole again; and they shall bury them in Tophet, till there be no place to bury.

12 Thus will I do unto this place, saith the Lord, and to the inhabitants thereof, and even make this city as Tophet:

13 And the houses of Jerusalem, and the houses of the kings of Judah, shall be defiled as the place of Tophet, because of all the houses, upon whose roofs they have burned incense unto all the host of heaven, and have poured out drink-offerings unto other gods.

14 Then came Jeremiah from Tophet, whither the Lord had sent him to prophesy; and he stood in the court of the Lord's house, and said to all the people, 15 Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, I will bring upon this city and upon all her towns, all the evil that I have pronounced against it; because they have hardened against me, that they might not hear my words.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Man's unteachableness and unbelief render it proper to use a variety of methods to engage his attention; repetitions become unavoidable; and sometimes a mere circumstance may impress those, who remained unaffected under the most solemn warnings of the word of God. We ought therefore to avail ourselves of every proper expedient, and to observe every direction for that purpose.—They who stop their ears and harden their hearts against the threatenings of God, will not only have their ears made to tingle at the report of dire calamities; but their hearts filled with anguish and dismay, at feeling the truth of what they would not believe. The rulers, in church and state, are peculiarly concerned to know those things which relate to national sins and judgments: and it is proper to convey information and warning to the more careless, by means of such as are willing to attend to the word of God.

Men may often read their sins in their punishment: persecutors and oppressors commonly come to a dreadful and violent end; abused plenty often terminates in wretched penury; and children trained up in ungodliness become the misery of their offending parents. They, who despise God, must sink into contempt and ruin; and he will make void the councils of all those who will not obey his commandments. The power of the mightiest nations is easily broken by him as an earthen vessel; and he often
CHAPTER XX.

Pashur smites Jeremiah and sets him in the stocks, 1. 2. Jeremiah gives him a new name, and predicts the doom of him and his friends, 3—6. The prophet complains bitterly: but is constrained to speak in the name of God, 7—9. He recovers his confidence, and rejoices in God, 10—13. He curses the day of his birth, 14—18.

NOW Pashur the son of Immer the priest, who was also chief governor in the house of the Lord, heard that Jeremiah prophesied these things. 2 Then Pashur smote Jeremiah, and put him in the stocks that were in the high gate of Benjamin, which was by the house of the Lord. 3 And it came to pass on the morrow, that Pashur brought forth Jeremiah out of the stocks. Then said Jeremiah unto him, The Lord hath not called thy name Pashur, but Jeramiah. 4 For so saith the Lord, Behold, I will make thee a terror to thyself, and to all thy friends; and they shall fall by the sword of their enemies, and thine eyes shall behold it. 5 And I will give all Judah into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall carry them captive into Babylon, and shall slay them with the sword. 6 Moreover I will deliver all the strength of this city, and all the labours thereof, and all the precious things thereof, and all the treasures of the kings of Judah will I give into the hand of their enemies, which shall spoil them, and take them, and carry them to Babylon. 7 And thou, Pashur, and all that dwell in thine house, shall go into captivity: and thou shalt come to Babylon, and there thou shalt die, and shall be buried there, thou, and all thy friends, to whom thou hast prophesied lies. 8 And I was deceived: thou art stronger than I, and hast prevailed: I am in derision daily, every one mocketh me. 9 For since I spake, I cried out, I cried violence and spoil; because the word of the Lord was made a reproach unto me, and a derision daily. 10 Then I said, I will not make mention of him, nor speak any more in his name. But his word was in mine heart as a burning fire shut up in my bones, and I was weary with forbearing, and I could not stay.

NOTES.

CHAP. XX. V. 1—6. It might have been expected, that the prophet's plain dealing would exasperate the rulers of Judah, if it did not convince and humble them. Accordingly we have in this chapter an account of a persecution that he endured, and of his behaviour under it. Pashur, a priest of the race or order of Immer, who under the high priest superintended the affairs of the temple, having heard of the predictions which the prophet had delivered in Tophet, and perhaps being present when he repeated them in the temple, used his authority to punish and silence him, as a trouble of the nation. Having smitten or scourged him as a mealefactor, he set him in the stocks, or the pillory, in a public part of the city, and left him there all night, exposed to ignominy as well as pain. This he probably thought would disgrace him with the people, and discourage him from prophesying any more. The prophet seems to have borne the indignity of Babylon, and be able to carry them captive into Babylon, and slay them with the sword. Moreover I will deliver all the strength of this city, and all the labours thereof, and all the precious things thereof, and all the treasures of the kings of Judah will I give into the hand of their enemies, which shall spoil them, and take them, and carry them to Babylon. And thou, Pashur, and all that dwell in thine house, shall go into captivity: and thou shalt come to Babylon, and there thou shalt die, and shall be buried there, thou, and all thy friends, to whom thou hast prophesied lies. For since I spake, I cried out, I cried violence and spoil; because the word of the Lord was made a reproach unto me, and a derision daily. Then I said, I will not make mention of him, nor speak any more in his name. But his word was in mine heart as a burning fire shut up in my bones, and I was weary with forbearing, and I could not stay.

V. 7—9. The prophet here complains more bitterly than he had done before. The Lord had called him by his name, (Note, i.) to undertake the prophetical office, and thus he was drawn in to engage; and now he found himself disappointed of the comfort and credit which he had expected. But if he meant to charge the Lord with having deceived him, he was not only very criminal, but very forgetful; for the Lord had told him, that the rulers and people of the land would fight against him, though they should not prevail against him. He complained also, that...
A B.C. 600.

10 For I heard the defaming of many, fear on every side. Report, say they, and we will report it. All my familiar watched for my halting, saying, Peradventure he will be enticed, and we shall prevail against him; and we will take our revenge on him.

11 But the Lord is with me as a mighty terrible one; therefore my persecutors shall stumble, and they shall not prevail: they shall be greatly abashed; for they shall not prosper: their everlasting confusion shall never be forgotten.

12 But, O Lord of hosts, that triest the righteous, and seest the reins and the heart, let me see thy vengeance on them: for unto thee have I opened my cause.

13 Sing unto the Lord, praise ye the Lord; for he hath delivered the soul of the poor from the land of evildoers.

14 ¶ Cursed be the day wherein I was born: let not the day wherein my mother bare me be blessed.

15 Cursed be the man that brought tidings to my father, saying, A man's child is born unto thee; making him very glad.

16 And let that man be as the cities which the Lord overthrew, and repented not: and let him bear the cry in the morning, and the shouting at noon-tide.

17 Because he slew me not from the womb; or that my mother might have been my grave, and her womb to be always great with me.

18 Wherefore came I forth out of the womb to see labour and sorrow, that my days should be consumed with shame!

The Lord being stronger than he, constrained him even against his will, to continue in his work, though he met with daily derrision and insult. From the beginning of his ministry, he had been urged with great vehemence, to reprove the oppression and iniquity of the people, and to predict that they would be given up to the violence and mockery of their enemies. On this account the word of the Lord became the cause of continual reproach and derision to him: whereas bad he spoken more agreeable things, he might have met with respect and favour. He therefore determined to speak no more to the people concerning, or in the name of, God: but the convictions of his conscience, zeal for the glory of God, indignation at the sins, and compassion for the souls of the people; and above all, the immediate impulse of the prophetic Spirit, so urged him on, that he had no more ease than if a burning fire had been shut up in his bones; so that he was wearied out with forbearing, and could no longer refrain from delivering his message, though it exposed him to further trials. Herein appeareth the impatience, which oftentimes overtook the servants of the Lord, when they see not their labours to profit, and also feel their own weakness. Thou didst thrust me forth to this work, against my will. He thought to have ceased to preach; save that the Spirit of God did force him thereon. The word rendered decreed, is by some translated enticed, persuaded, and attracted. The power of divine grace acts upon souls to God. Jeremiah alludes to the power of that call, by which he was attracted and drawn to the work of the ministry, which he exercised among many difficulties and contradictions. (Evan. Mag.) The same verb is rendered enticed in the tenth verse.

V. 10-13. The prophet thought that he had reason to be weary of his work; when he heard every where those who reviled and terrified him; so that he became like Fasburi, a terror to himself, for fear was on every side of him; (Marg. Ref.) His enemies encouraged each other to collect or invent calumnies against him, and engaged to circulate them. His most intimate acquaintance narrowly watched him, expecting to see him make some false step, which might afford them an advantage; nay, they endeavoured to entice him into some improper conduct, that they might prevail against him, and be revenged on him for his reproofs, and the unaccessibility and terror of conscience that he had occasioned them. Whilst he was thus stating his case, his faith sprang into lively exercise; he became himself assured of God's favour; he perceived that He was his mighty Defender, and a terrible Avenger of his enemies; he confidently predicted their confusion and ruin; he recollected that the Lord tried, that he might purify the righteous; he had opened his cause to him, as his heart-searching Judge, and the Avenger of his enemies; and he exulted and praised God, and called on others to praise him, in the assurance of deliverance and victory. Here he showeth how his faith did strive against temptation; and sought for the Lord strength. (Marg. Ref.) V. 14-18. (Notes, Job iii.) This is an extraordinary transition as any in the whole Scriptures; and for that aught to the contrary, the prophet related what passed in his experience, according to the order in which it took place. An experimental acquaintance with our own hearts, as the variations of our affections under sharp trials, according as encouraging or discouraging thoughts occur to our minds, will best enable us to understand it. We should not think it possible for such rebellion and absurdity to prevail in the heart of a true believer, and to succeed the most vigorous exercises of faith, hope, and love; did we not meet with a few instances of the kind in the word of God; and they, who have been thus tempted of Satan, might be further urged to give up their hope, and to adopt the most desperate measures. Yet such thoughts and wishes are not to be excused: for they are strong proofs of people, and show them no mercy, 3—7.
He counsels the people to fall to the Chal-deans, as the only way of preserving their lives, 8—10. He exhorts the king and his family to execute justice, 11, 12.
The city would certainly be destroyed, 13, 14.

V. 7—13.
No opposition or ill treatment should deter the man of God from declaring his whole message: and indeed many have maintained their boldness and faithfulness in their public work, under the most perilous circumstances; who yet have been grievously baffled by Satan’s temptations in their private experience, and led to wish they had never engaged in it, or that they could change their employment for some other. But they who put their hands to the plough, and look back, are not fit for the kingdom of God: and after all, the minister’s work is in reality the most important, honourable, and useful service, that man can possibly perform. But they who are thus employed deceive themselves, if they expect worldly honour, and the friendship of men, from a faithful discharge of their office; ay, if they do not expect contempt, opposition, and injustious treatment, from the ungodly of every description.
The Lord doth indeed allure men into the service, by giving them a hope of usefulness, and assurance of assistance and support: and few are at first aware of the extent and variety of those trials and difficulties, to which they will be exposed in the course of their ministry. So that when contempt, derision, or hard usage, tempt them to resolve that they will speak no more in his name, or that they will qualify their message, and render it more palatable, the Lord, being stronger that they, will prevail, and they will find “his word like a burning fire shut up in their bones,” and that no relief from their disquietude can be had, but by faithfully declaring the whole counsel of God.
Thus “necessity is laid upon them, yea, wo unto them, if they do not preach the Gospel.” Indeed, were we only to speak of promises and privileges, and indiscrimi-nately to deal out consolation, all would go on very smoothly: but if we are faithful, we must cry aloud, and not spare either ourselves or the people, either professed believers or opposers; we must reprove men’s sins, and denounce the wrath of God against every one that doeth evil. Thus our earnestness alone will excite the derision and mockery of the profane; our faithful rebukes and warnings will exasperate the Pharisee and hypocrite.
None will make any allowance for him, who will grant no indulgence to any man’s sins: all around will watch for the halting of the bold repever, and report with additions whatever they spy of imperfection in his conduct. Even the harshness of the dove, and the wisdom of the serpent, could not exempt him from defamation from those who want to be revenged on him, for the terrors of conscience which he has occasioned them. But God will be with and for his servants: he sees the uprightness of their hearts, and approves their conduct: let them then open their cause before him, and he will enable them to foresee the ruin of their implacable enemies, and their own comple-

CHAP. XXI.
Zechariah sends to inquire concerning Nebuchadrezzar’s invasion, 1, 2. He is told that the city shall be destroyed, and that God will fight against both king and the desperate wickedness of the heart. How absurd was it for a godly man to curse the day of his birth, which no longer had any existence, and was in no degree the cause of his sufferings! To curse the man who first informed his father of his birth, and even to wish him the doom of Sodom, or that the cry of terror and alarm might never cease to sound in his ears, because he would not murder him when a helpless infant! How strange to wish such an exquisitely cruel wish to his parent! And all this, because he was called to endure contempt and persecution for a short time, which would be counterbalanced by divine consolations, and terminate in everlasting felicity. So un reasonable are passion and impatience! “How the children of God are overcome, in this battle of the flesh and spirit! And into what inconveniences they fall, till God raises them up again!” Some expositors endeavoured to palliate the vehemence expressions here used: but this is impossible; and could they effect their purpose, they would also counteract the very design of the Holy Spirit in recording them; viz. to show what the best of men are when left to themselves, and to preserve tempted believers from despising when they are harassed in like manner.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.
V. 1—6.
In this evil world, of which Satan is the god and prince, they that boldly stand up for the authority, truth, and righteousness of Jehovah, will certainly meet with persecution, in one form or another: and the more and more convincing the truth is made to the minds and consciences of sinners, the more violent will be their resentment, except the Lord powerfully restrain them, or change their hearts. Superior rank, influence, reputation, and authority, will render men more apt to take umbrage at the humbling truths and sharp reproofs of God’s word: and thus they who are exalted to do justice, preserve peace, and maintain truth, have often taken the lead in running down the cause of God, and in abusing his servants. The worthless caterers to men’s vain pleasures, and the flatters of their pride and passions, may expect favour, influence, and distinction; but contempt and penury, dun-gerons, stripes, and the stocks, or more severe and bloody sufferings, have been the general recompense of those who have sought the salvation of souls! But the Lord can easily make those a terror to themselves and to each other, who attempt to terrify his ministers from their work, or to put them to silence and disgrace: no mitigation of the sentence can possibly be attained, by persecuting those who proclaim it: and lying prophets, and they who trust in them, will miserably perish together.

Vol. III.—No. 20.
THE word which came unto Jeremiah, from the Lord, 3 when king Zedekiah sent unto him Pashur the son of Melchiah, and Zephaniah the son of Maaseiah the priest, saying, 4 "Inquire, I pray thee, of the Lord for us;" (for Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon maketh war against us:) so be that the Lord will deal with us according to all his wondrous works, that he may go up from us.

5 Then said Jeremiah unto them, Thus shall ye say to Zedekiah: 6 Thus saith the Lord God of Israel; Behold, I will turn back the weapons of war that are in your hands, wherewith ye fight against the king of Babylon, and against the Chaldeans, which besiege thee without the walls, and I will assemble them into the midst of this city. 7 And I will make thee like to a bird of the wild places: and I will set before you the way of life, and the way of death.

8 He that abideth in this city shall die by the sword, and by the famine, and by the pestilence: but he that goeth out, and falleth to the Chaldeans that besiege you, he shall live, and his life shall be greater for his life than for his which remaineth in this city, 9 which shall die by the sword, and by the famine, and by the pestilence.

10 For thus saith the Lord; Behold, I will give this city into the hand of the Chaldeans, and into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, and he shall burn it with fire. 11 And all the stones thereof, and all the beams thereof, and all the earthwork thereof, shall be tender for all the strangers that plant it, and water it, and grow it: for I have spoken it, saith the Lord. 12 Be not comforted: for all these words are vanity. The noise of the city shall be heard no more, nor shall there be a voice of joy and rejoicing, nor the voice of the crier, 13 neither shall there be any man therein to make the trumpet sound. 14 Behold, I am against thee, O inhabitants of the land, saith the Lord, and will be a fulfilling vengeance, and will give to Babylon them that depart out of thee.

15 But as for the land of Egypt, and as for the land of the Philistines, and as for the land that is inhabited by Ammon and by Moab, and as for all the land that is inhabited by the children of Israel, and will make them an astonishment, and a hissing, and a reproach in all the earth whither I have driven them, 16 that all they that go out of the house of Israel, and that dwell among the heathen, shall know that I am the Lord, when I have stretched out my hand over those that are round about them. 17 And I will stretch out mine hand over them, and make an example of them among all the heathen, and will make thee a loathed thing, and a hissing, among all the heathen that are round about thee: 18 and I will make thee a Loathed thing and a Hissing among all that are round about thee, because all that live among thee are unclean by all your abominations which you have done. 19 And it shall come to pass, when all these things be come upon thee, that the kings of the lands, which are round about thee, shall say, 'This is a worshipful nation; for God is with them.' 20 Whencefore I will deliver thee not into the hand of the king of Babylon, neither into the hand of Pharaoh's horsemen, 21 but I will deliver thee into the hand of the king of Egypt, and he shall deal with thee: for he shall enter into my sanctuary, and set up his throne, as the throne of his fathers: and he shall come near, and he shall set his chariot in the city gates, in the way of the gate: 22 and he shall come near, and he shall set his chariot in the way of the gate, and the cry shall be, 'Alas, this is a day of greatness!' 23 And it shall come to pass, when the king of Egypt shall hear of it, that he shall leave off from the house of his servants, and from the food of his female servants, and from the cloth of his servants, and from the meat of his cattle; 24 and his servants shall desert him, and his female servants shall depart: for his chariot shall go forth, and the horsemen shall flee: 25 and it shall come to pass, when the king of Egypt shall hear of it, that he shall withdraw his hand from Jerusalem and from all the land that I have given the children of Israel: for I am the Lord their God, and I will deliver them out of the hand of the Egyptians. 26 And it shall come to pass, when this shall be fulfilled, that ye shall know that the Lord is he which doth speak.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXI. V. 1, 2. We have been left to conjecture the time in which most of the preceding prophecies were delivered: but many of those which follow are dated. This chapter leads us forward to the time of Zedekiah, and very near to the captivity: yet we shall frequently be brought back to the preceding reigns. When Nebuchadrezzar had formed the siege of Jerusalem, Zedekiah was anxious to know the event: though it had been so often predicted, that nothing but the most determined incredulity could doubt of it. He was convinced, at some times at least, that Jeremiah was a true prophet, and he sent messengers to him on this occasion; who entreated him to inquire of the Lord, whether he would not appear for their deliverance, according to the wonders which he had formerly wrought for his people, that the siege might be raised: and perhaps they meant to desire his prayers. But they paid no regard to his warnings and exhortations, and made no attempts towards reformation, personal or public. 'Not that the king was touched with repentance, and so sought to God, as Hezekiah did, when he sent to Isaiah; but because the prophet might pray unto God to take away this present plague; as Pharaoh sought unto Moses.' Pashur, here mentioned, seems to have been a different person, from Pashur, who put the prophet in the stocks.
my fury go out like fire, and burn that none can quench it, because of the evil of your doings.

13 ¶ Behold, I am against thee, O inhabitant of the valley, and rock of the plain, saith the Lord; which say, Who shall come down against us? or who shall enter into our habitations?

14 But I will punish you according to the fruit of your doings, saith the Lord: and I will kindle a fire in the forest thereof, and it shall devour all things round about it.

V. 9. If the king and his princes refused to surrender, the people were called on to provide for their own safety; which could only be done by going over to the Chaldeans.

For a prey. As a thing recovered from extreme danger. Or, instead of spoil. He ought to think himself a considerable gainer, by escaping with his life, in so general a destruction. (Loomth.) (Marg. Ref.)

V. 11, 12. Some expositors suppose that a new prophecy is here begun, which was delivered long before the rest of the chapter. But there is not the smallest intimation given of this: and it was proper, even to the last, that exhortations to repentance and works meet for repentance should be given along with denunciations of wrath. The justice of God in punishing the obstinate rebels, who refused to hearken, would be thus more fully illustrated. And, though the destruction of the city, and the captivity of the nation, were absolutely determined; yet a variety of circumstances might exceedingly have mitigated the horrors of that catastrophe, especially to Zedekiah and his sons, had this exhortation been regarded. (xxviii. 17—23. xxxix. 6, 7.) The wickedness of Zedekiah and his sons, and that of the princes of that line, was aggravated by their relation to David. They probably trusted in the covenant of royalty, whilst their crimes forfeited their personal interest in it: and the exhortation implied a severe reproof of Zedekiah's conduct, as guilty of abuse of power and neglect of duty. But let him and his princes immediately and earnestly set themselves to execute justice, and deliver the oppressed: let them do it in the morning, as their first concern, at that time when their courts were held, and every morning: or else the Lord's anger would burn unquenchably against them.

V. 15, 14. Jerusalem was built part on a hill, and part in the valley, and was compassed about with mountains. (Note, xvii. 3.)—They confided in the strength of the place, as the Jebusites had formerly done. (Loomth.) Indeed the city was thought impregnable, and therefore the inhabitants flattered themselves, that they should escape; for none would be able to enter their walls, though the adjacent countries should be wasted. But the Lord declared that he was against them, and would destroy them. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The most obstinate sinners, yea, the most virulent persecutors, have seasons of compunction, and are sometimes convinced that their faithful reprovers are wiser and happier than they. So that, in seasons of urgent distress and peril, men frequently desire the counsels and prayers of the very persons, whom at other times they despise or oppose: and thus the servants of God pass through “honour and dishonour, through evil and good report.” But such men only inquire after deliverance from punishment: if the Lord would deal with them according to the richness of his power and mercy, in saving them from suffering, and then leave them to indulge themselves in sin, they would be reconciled to him and to his ministers; and they will meet with teachers, who will encourage them upon this plan, for a valuable consideration to themselves. But the faithful servant of God is zealous for his Master’s honour, and adheres to his instructions: he can encourage no man who refuses to repent and to do works meet for repentance: he will stand to it, that they who hate the precepts have no interest in the promises of God: and that he will never deal with hypocrites according to the wonders which he performs for his people. When they who stand out in obstinate disobedience would presume on external privileges, let them be told, that God will prosper his open enemies against them; nay, that he will battle all their efforts, and fight against them by his own out-stretched arm, and not spare them, or show them any favour. Yet intimations of mercy are couched under the severest denunciations: and in the most tremendous public calamities, there is hope for individuals of escaping the wrath to come. No sinner on earth is absolutely left without refuge, who desires to avail himself of one: life and death are continually set before men: but the way of life is humiliating, it requires self-denial and singularity, and exposes men to difficulty and reproach. Few therefore choose it: but most persist in that course against which the most awful vengeance of God is denounced. In all possible circumstances, the way of duty is the safest and most advantageous; and will tend to alleviate those miseries which cannot be entirely avoided. When sinners therefore inquire about events, they should be directed to the duties of their stations: they, who are descended from pious ancestors, should be exhort to imitate them; and CHAP. XXII.

The prophet is sent to the king's palace, to exhort him and his people to various duties, with conditional promises and threatenings, 1—9. The people need not weep for Josiah, but should lament for Shalum, who was carried captive to return no more, 10—12. Severe rebukes of Jehoiakim, and a dreadful sentence against him, 13—19. The Jews, who had been rebellious in prosperity, would be rendered more pliant by suffering, 20—23. The doom of Jeconiah, and others of David's family, 24—30.

THUS saith the Lord; * Go down to the house of the king of Judah, and speak there this word;

2 And say, *Hear the word of the Lord, O King of Judah, that sittest upon the throne of David, thou, and thy servants, and thy people that enter in by these gates:

The people who are placed in authority, should be reminded to execute justice and do good: otherwise such distinctions will the more expose men, when the fury of the Lord goeth forth like fire, and burneth, that none can quench it because of the evil of their doings. He sets himself especially against those who presumptuously defy his threatenings: and he will let them know, that none of their carnal confidences can withstand the power of his righteous indignation.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXII. V. 1. Some interpreters suppose that this chapter contains two distinct messages, the one sent to Jehoiakim, and the other afterwards to Jeconiah or Jehoiachin his son: but there is in it no intimation of this. Others suppose, that the whole chapter was addressed to Jeconiah: and that the former part was a recapitulation of messages formerly delivered to Jehoiakim: but there is great difficulty in applying the conclusion of the address to Jeconiah. It hath therefore been supposed by a few interpreters, that the whole was addressed to Zedekiah, and that it is a continuation of the subject of the preceding chapter. This interpretation I accede to: but without being very confident in so doubtful a matter. If this point could be ascertained, the difficulties would vanish, which upon other interpretations are almost, if not quite, insuperable; as will be shown: but there is no evidence on either side, except the chapter itself compared with the context, of which the reader will judge for himself. Yet it seems very reasonable to expect, that after Jeremiah had answered Zedekiah's inquiries by his messengers, the Lord should send him in person to confirm and enforce his word, in the manner here recorded: and the abrupt opening of the chapter, as well as its coincidence with the preceding, favours his opinion. We suppose then, that Zedekiah is addressed; and that the names of the other kings are introduced, by way of reminding him that the predictions concerning them, which they had disregarded, had been exactly accomplished; and from this to infer, that those which related to him and the approaching captivity would be so likewise. Coniah indeed is last mentioned in the chapter, and Zedekiah is not named in it; but he had been mentioned in the former part of the subject, as the foregoing chapter is supposed to have been: and being here addressed in person as king of Judah, it was not necessary to address him by name.

V. 2—5. (Marg. Ref.) * This was his ordinary manner of preaching before kings, from Josiah to Zedekiah, which was about forty years. The prophet repeats to Zedekiah the admonitions which he had given to his predecessors, connected with similar protests and denunciations: and the express declarations made in other places, that the city would be taken and destroyed, implied that God certainly foreknew Zedekiah's obstinate disobedience. Thus the Lord again and again sent Moses to Pharaoh, to demand the liberty of Israel, though he knew and foretold that Pharaoh would not let them go till forced to it. (Note, xxii. 11, 12.)

V. 6. The palace of the kings of Judah was become very magnificent: it had been favoured more than the residence of other kings, and made pre-eminent by its vicinity to the temple; and the royal family had been equally favoured and exalted by the covenant with David and his seed: but having been polluted with idolatry and fornicity, they were condemned to be destroyed and made desolate. Gilead was renowned for rich pastures, and Lebanon for stately cedars. (Marg. Ref.) against thee, every one with his weapons: and they shall cut down thy choice cedars, and cast them into the fire.

3 And many nations shall pass by this city, and they shall say every man to his neighbour, Wherefore hath the Lord done thus unto this great city?

9 Then they shall answer, Because they have forsaken the covenant of the Lord their God, and worshipped other gods, and served them.

10 ¶ Weep ye not for the dead, neither bemoan him: but weep sore for him that goeth away; for he shall return no more, nor see his native country.

11 For thus saith the Lord touching Shalman the son of Josiah king of Judah, which reigned instead of his father, which went forth out of this place; He shall not return thither any more:

12 But he shall die in the place whither they have led him captive, and there shall see this land no more.

13 ¶ Woe unto him that buildeth his house by unrighteousness, and his chambers by wrong; that useth his neighbour's service without wages, and giveth him not for his work;

14 That saith, I will build me a wide house, and large chambers, and cutteth him out windows: and it is c cedared with cedar, and painted with vermin.

15 Shall thou reign, because thou shouldest thyself in cedar? did not thy father eat and drink, and do judgment and justice, and then it was well with him?

16 He judged the cause of the poor and needy; then it was well with him:

17 But thine eyes and thine heart are not for the Lord's covetousness, and for to shed innocent blood, and for oppression, and for violence to do it.

18 Therefore thus saith the Lord concerning Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah; They shall not lament for him, saying, Ah my brother! or, Ah sister! for he shall not be lamented for, saying, Ah lord! or, Ah my glory!

19 He shall be buried with a burial of an ass, drawn and cast forth beyond the gates of Jerusalem.

he that reigned instead of his father Josiah. He likewise was carried captive, and never returned. (LXXWth)

—Some indeed think the Shalman mentioned in Chronicles cannot be the same; because they conclude from the historian's language that he was younger than Zedekiah; but Jehoahaz was older than he. (Note, 1 Chr. 13.)

V. 13-19. These verses evidently relate to Jehoiakim, who succeeded his younger brother Jehoahaz, or Shalman; but whether they were, on this occasion, addressed to him, or whether they were added in confirmation of other predictions, is not agreed. According to the interpretation here adopted the case of Jehoiakim was recalled to, to convince Zedekiah that the prediction uttered against him and Jerusalem would certainly be accomplished. Jehoiakim it seems built a magnificent palace in those calamitous times, the expense of which exceeded his finances: and this introduced a system of iniquity and oppression. He constrained his subordinates to work without wages, and never paid for the materials; and in various ways he committed extortion and injustice. A crying sin, and too common among the great men of the world. (LXXWth.) But did he think that his house of cedar would secure his authority, or prolong his reign? His pious father affected not such splendid; but he lived in plenty and hospitality, with out injuring any of his subjects: and his clear conscience and character, the love of his people, and above all the favour of God, were far preferable to Jehoiakim's guilty and 20 ¶ Go up to Lebanon, and cry; and lift up thy voice in Bashan, and cry from the passages: for all thy lovers are destroyed.

21 ¶ I spake unto thee in thy prosperity; but thou saidst, I will not hear. This hath been thy manner from thy youth, that thou obeyest not my voice.

22 The wind shall eat up all thy pastors, and thy lovers shall go into captivity: surely then shalt thou be ashamed, and confounded for all thy wickedness.

23 O inhabitant of Lebanon, that maketh thy nest in the cedars, how gracious shalt thou be when pangs come upon thee, the pain of a woman in travail!

24 As I live, saith the Lord, though Coniah the son of Jehoiakim king of Judah were the signet upon my right hand, yet would I pluck thee thence; and I will give thee into the hand of thine enemies, and into the hand of them that seek thy life, and into the hand of them whose face thou fearest, even into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, and into the hand of the Chaldeans.

25 And I will give thee into the hand of them that seek thy life, and into the hand of them whose face thou fearest, even into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, and into the hand of the Chaldeans.

26 And I will cast thee out, and thy mother that bare thee, into another country, where ye were not born; and there shall ye die.

27 But to the land whereunto they desire to return, thither shall they not return.

28 ¶ Is this man Coniah a despicable broken idol? is he a vessel wherein is no pleasure? wherefore are they cast out? he and his seed, and are cast into a land which they know not.

29 O earth, earth, earth, bear the word of the Lord.

30 Thus saith the Lord: Write ye this man childless, a man that shall not prosper in his days: for help: but none would regard them: for all their idols and idolatrous alliances were about to be destroyed by the power of the conqueror.

The Lord had warned them of these calamities in their more prosperous days, and commanded them to repent of their sins; but they were averted and obstinate in rebellion: and this had been the manner of the nation from the beginning, that they would not obey his voice. Therefore all their rulers and teachers would perish, as the fruits of the earth are blighted by an unwholesome wind; and their allies would go with them into captivity, being reduced by the same power. They thought themselves indeed as safe in Jerusalem, as the eagle in her nest, on the top of a cedars upon the summits of Lebanon; and therefore they despised the word of God: but destruction was coming as pangs on a woman in travail; and then they would show some regard to the Lord, and assume the appearance of humility, devotion, or of mercy to their oppressed brethren; but it would not prevent their ruin.

V. 24—27. After the removal of Jehoiakim, Jehonadab reigned for a short time, and was then taken prisoner and carried to Babylon; where he continued many years before his death. He is here called Coniah, in contempt, as it is generally thought: the first syllable of his name, being a part of the name of Jehovah, is cut off, perhaps as an intimation that the Lord no longer owned him. As he was the lineal heir of the house of David, it might have been thought that God would have taken special care of him: but he spurned by himself, that even were Coniah to him like the royal signet on the right hand of a king, his ornament and a peculiar badge of authority, he would pluck him off, and cast him away with disdain; and that he should end his days in captivity, with his mother, who had brought him up in iniquity, and with the rest of his family. (Marg. Ref.)
V. 28-30. This is the application of the whole address, which is here supposed to have been made to Zedekiah. Indeed Jeconiah is spoken of as absent, and as already in captivity. Now, had he been thrown aside as a broken idol, or a vessel which a man cares not to make use of? Wherefore was he and his seed carried captive to Babylon? Was it not for their sins? And did Zedekiah, who copied and far exceeded them, expect to prosper on the throne of David? If he would pay no regard to the word of God, let the earth itself hear and record it: for the Lord had determined, that this man, to whom the prophet addressed himself, should die childless, and be unsuccessful all his days; and that none of his seed should prosper, filling the throne of David, and ruling over Judah; as he had vainly expected, after his nephew Jeconiah was carried captive. If we understand this of Zedekiah, all is very easy: he was taken prisoner by Nebuchadrezzar, his sons were slain before his eyes, then his eyes were put out, he was carried to Babylon, and we read no more of him or his posterity. But if we apply it to Jeconiah, we are involved in difficulties. He certainly left several sons; (Marg. Ref.) Zerubbabel his grandson possessed great authority, and prospered ruling in Judah. Jeconiah’s name stands in the genealogy of our Lord, as one of the line of David, from whom Joseph the husband of Mary was descended. Nay, Jeconiah himself may be said to have prospered towards the close of his days. (2 Kings xxv. 27-30.) So that this sentence seems not to have been executed, respecting him, in any measure answerable to the peculiar solemnity with which it was denounced. To obviate these difficulties, some conjecture that Salathiel, the father of Zerubbabel, was only the adopted son of Jeconiah: but it is expressly said, that “he begat him,” which can hardly mean less than that he was his ancestor; (Matt. i. 12. Note, 1 Chr. iii. 17:) and such an interpretation would reduce the genealogy of Christ, and indeed all other genealogies, to uncertainty. Others suppose, that the sentence only meant that he should not see any comfort in his children, and that they should not succeed him on the throne; but that, after the death of Zedekiah, the temporal kingdom of David should terminate: but the word rendered childless occurs only in two other places; and both seem to confirm our translation of it. (Gen. xv. 2. Lev. xx. 21.) And certainly Zerubbabel ruled prosperously in Judah, though he did not sit on the throne of David. As to the opinion, that the Salathiel and Zerubbabel, in the line of Nathan, must be the same as the Salathiel and Zerubbabel in the line of Solomon; though neither their ancestors nor their descendants were the same; nothing, but the countenance and sanction of so many learned men, could entitle it to any degree of attention.—For the coincidence of names in the same nation and the same family is so very common in all history, that one cannot but wonder to see so much built upon it in this instance. But having suggested what appears to me the most obvious method of removing the difficulty, I shall only add, that there seems a peculiar propriety in the prophet’s thus adding former instances of the Lord’s performing his predictions, as an introduction to passing this solemn sentence of condemnation on him, under whose government, and through whose obstinacy, Jerusalem was destroyed, and the people carried into captivity.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.
V. 1-12.

The mightiest princes are as much concerned to hear the word of God, as their meanest subjects; and they who are called to speak to them, in the name of God, should deal plainly and faithfully with them: as their servants and people are deeply concerned in their conduct, and are generally influenced by it. No durable prosperity in any station can be obtained without obedience to God’s commandments. Nor can real religion subsist, without justice, truth, and mercy, in our relative conduct. They who are intrusted with authority, are under the greatest obligations to imitate our God, in patronizing the poor and rescuing the oppressed: and innocent blood shed by them, under colour of law, or by iniquitous wars, must be as exactly accounted for, as that which their inferiors shed in violation of their statutes. The neglect of these things exposes nations to the righteous vengeance of God: and he alike disregards temples and palaces, when they who frequent or possess them will not obey his word. He neither destroys cities, nations, nor individuals, except for their sins; and in this world he often makes it obvious to every one, for what crimes he inflicts punishment: but this will be fully manifest to all the world, at “the day of judgment, “ment and perdition of ungodly men.” They who have escaped from this world of sin and sorrow, and are safely arrived at the mansions of the blest, may more reasonably be envied than lamented: and their happiness should reconcile survivors to the loss they have sustained. But incontinent sinners, living or dying, are objects of our compassion or lamentation. Speedily death will remove the most prosperous from their good things here, and their place will know them no more; and they have a place of torment prepared for them in the eternal world. Yet others
WOE be unto the pastors that destroy and scatter the sheep of my pasture, saith the LORD.

2 Therefore thus saith the LORD God of Israel against the pastors that feed my people: Ye have scattered my flock, and driven them away, and have not visited them: behold, I will visit you the evil of your doings, saith the LORD.

3 And I will gather the remnant of my flock out of all countries whither I have driven them, and will bring them again to their folds; and they shall be fruitful and increase.

4 And I will set up shepherds over them which shall feed them: and they shall no more fear no more, nor be dismayed, neither shall they be lacking, saith the LORD.

V. 13-30.

Men fancy that wealth, magnificence, elegant mansions, furniture, paintings, and such splendid vanities, give happiness to their possessors: and in order to acquire them they commit the most atrocious crimes, and expose themselves to the severest vengeance of their offended Judge.

How many houses have thus been built by unrighteous ness! How many live in magnificence and luxury, by oppressing and defrauding the poor; and by constraining them to excessive labour, without giving them any adequate compensation for their work! How many thus run into debt, cheat their creditors, and ruin honest families, to gratify their infamous ostentation! And indeed all, who determine to be rich or luxurious at all adventures, will fall into such temptations, and be betrayed into some species of injustice. Generally, the pride and vanity of young persons, in wanting to make a more genteel and elegant appearance than their prudent or pious parents, prove them defective in more valuable accomplishments; especially if their circumstances are not more affluent. It is unspeakably more respectable and comfortable to have food and raiment, and other accommodations in a plain style, with honesty and piety; and to use hospitality, be friendly to the poor, and to have an interest in their prayers, than to use sumptuously, to lodge magnificently, be surrounded with numerous servants and visitors; whilst extravagance puts an edge on capacity, and the eyes and heart are only after covetousness, oppression, and other crimes, which luxury renders necessary. They who know God will do justice and love mercy; and it will be well with them living and dying; but they who dishonour him will be disgraced; and when ostentation and oppressive rulers are removed, and none lament their death, it is an awful token that they are gone to receive the due recompense of their crimes. Such as, in prosperity, will not hear the voice of God by his word, must expect to feel the strokes of his correcting rod; and, (if this doth not produce a salutary effect,) to be overwhelmed and confounded by his awful judgments: then all helpers and confidences will fail; and the perishing transgressors will cry for mercy, and not be heard, when sudden destruction cometh upon them, as pangs upon the travailing woman.

Indeed it has been too much the way with all of us from our youth, that in prosperity and health we would not obey the voice of God; and when visited with chastisements, we have many of us repeatedly appeared very gracious, and made many professions and resolutions of amendment, which we have broken, as soon as our danger was past, and the terror worn off. Yet the Lord often blesses affliction as a means of bringing sinners to repentance. Also, how little is earthly grandeur to be depended on, or flourishing families to be rejoiced in! Soon the greatest may be thrown down into the most abject misery; and children may be torn from us in the most distressing manner: men may lose their external relation to God secure a man from being driven into the hands of that enemy who seeks the life of our souls. But they who hear the voice of God, and will follow him, have eternal life, and shall never perish, "neither shall any enemy pluck them out of his almighty hands." May this be our character, our honour, and our felicity!

NOTES.

CHAP. XXIII. V. 1, 2. Israel was the flock of God, for which he had taken special care, and on which he had set a peculiar value. Judah was at that time his visible Church, in which there was a remnant of true believers; and from that people the promised Saviour was to arise: and the king, his counsellors and chief officers, with the high priest, the chief priests, and those in authority under them, were the pastors or shepherds, who were appointed to feed and protect the flock, both in respect of their temporal welfare and their spiritual estate. But the oppression and persecution of the civil rulers, their neglect of duty, and their bad policy, tended to destroy the people, to expose them to the sword of their enemies, to drive them to seek shelter in foreign countries, and to reduce them to captivity; so that their wickedness ended in the desolations of the land, and the scattering of the people among the heathen: while the ignorance, negligence, false doctrine, and wickedness of the priests, were equally ruinous to their souls. Thus they abused their trust, and were condemned to be deposed and punished for their crimes.

V. 3, 4. These verses contain a promise of the restoration of the remnant of the Jews, and their re-establishment in their own land; and of their increase and prosperity, under the government and instruction of Zerubbabel, Joshua, Ezra, and Nehemiah; who ruled over them in the fear of God, and under whom they lived in a measure of peace and confidence: yet their full accomplishment must be referred to the times of the gospel, to the true flock of Christ, and to their entire safety and holy confidence in him. (Note, xxxii. 37.) 5 Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will raise unto David a righteous Branch, and a King shall reign and prosper, and shall execute judgment and justice in the earth.

6 In his days Judah shall be saved, and Israel shall dwell safely: and this is his name whereby he shall be called, THE LORD OUR RIGHTEOUSNESS.

7 Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that the young shall serve the old, and the weak shall serve the strong.

8 But, The Lord liveth, which brought up and which led the seed of Jacob out of the wilderness, and from all countries whither I had driven them; and they shall return, and shall serve the Lord, and be our servants: ye shall know, and be instructed, as you have not known, and as you have not been instructed, from the days that you were born, even to this day.

V. 5, 6. The time would speedily approach, when, instead of the degenerate branches from the stock of David, who had brought Judah to ruin, a righteous Branch would spring from him, who would reign in prosperity, and execute justice in the land and throughout the earth. (Note, xxii. 30.) Under his government, the people of God, being saved from wrath and sin, and protected from their enemies, would dwell in peace and safety: and men would call this Branch of David Jehovah the Righteousness of the Lord.

V. 9—12. The prophet, having predicted the coming of Christ, and many future blessings in reserve for the Church, for the encouragement of the faith and hope of the pious remnant, here returns to reprove, convict, and pass sentence on his contemporaries. His heart was broken with sorrow, and his frame was most violently agitated, to see the people so deluded by the false prophets: and he was so filled with amazement and zeal, that he spake with vehemence and incoherency, and acted with impetuosity like a drunken man, when he considered the justice and power of God as armed against the nation, and the holy denunciations of his vengeance which he had been sent to proclaim; or when he compared the precepts and sanctions of the law with the crimes of the people. For the whole land swarmed with adulterers, and profane and perjured persons: for which iniquities the Lord had begun by drought and famine to punish the land, and had burnt up her pleasant pastures. But they still proceeded in their evil course, and did wrong with impetuous violence, and with all their power. In this impiety the prophets and priests were the ring leaders; nay, they chose the temple as the scene of their enormities: and therefore the Lord, who witnessed their crimes, condemned them to be driven forward in their ruinous ways into final destruction; as those who are driven headlong on slippery paths in the dark, till they are cast down some precipice and dashed in pieces. (Marg. Ref.)

Swearing. The Hebrew word signifies inerritably swearing or cursing. The Jewish forms of adoration, used in their courts of justice, had usually 3 A 13 And I have seen * folly in * the prophets of Samaria: they * prophesied in Baal, and caused my people Israel to make you vain: they speak * a vision of their own heart, and not out of the mouth of the Lord.

14 I have seen also * in the prophets of Jerusalem * an horrible thing: they commit adultery, and walk in lies: they strengthen also the hands of evildoers, that none doth return from his wickedness: they are all of them unto me * as Sodom, and the inhabitants thereof as Gomorrah.

15 Therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts concerning the prophets: Behold, I will feed them with wormwood, and make them drink the water of gall: for from the prophets of Jerusalem is * profaneness gone forth into all the land.

16 Thus saith the Lord of hosts: Hearken not unto the words of the prophets that prophesy unto you: * they make you vain: they speak * a vision of their own heart, and not out of the mouth of the Lord.

17 They say still unto them * that despise me, The Lord hath said, Ye shall have peace; and they say unto every one that walketh after the imagination of his own heart, No evil shall come upon you.

18 For * whoso hearkeneth unto the counsel of the Lord, and hath perceived and heard his word, * he that hath marked his word, and heard it? * Behold, * a whirlwind of the Lord, is gone forth in fury, even a grievous whirlwind: it shall fall grievously upon the head of the wicked.

20 The anger of the Lord shall not return, * until he hath executed, and till he have performed the thoughts of his heart: * in the latter days ye shall consider it perfectly.

16:13-15. The false prophets of Samaria, who had foolishly and impiously prophesied in the name of Baal, deluded the Israelites into those idolatries that ruined the nation: Yet the Lord considered the false prophets of Jerusalem who prophesied lies in his name, as guilty of more horrible and abominable wickedness. For they were abandoned to adultery and deceit; and their prophesying was a constant imposture, by which the people were hardened and emboldened in iniquity, in the expectation of peace and prosperity; and prejudiced against the true prophets, who called on them to return from their wickedness. Thus the whole nation were become as asiduous to the Lord as the inhabitants of Sodom and Gomorrah; and would soon be visited with judgments almost as tremendous. But the prophets would be constrained to drink the most bitter part of this cup of God's indignation; as their false doctrine, pretended visions, and corrupt examples had spread impiety throughout the land, and frustrated all the means used to retard its progress. The prophets of Judah * pronounced their prophecies in the name of the true God, and entitled him to all their impostures: the wickedness of their lives also reflected a dishonour on his name and religion.* (Lomh.) * They that should have profited by my rods against Samaria, are become worse than they.* (Marg. Ref.)

V. 16, 17. Make you vain. They deceive you, and soothe you into vain confidence. To deceive God, is not only most wicked in itself, but the grand aggravation of all other atrocious sins. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 18. This may be understood as the scoffing language of the false prophets, that opposed Jeremiah and others, who declared to them the Lord's counsel to destroy them and the city. They therefore derived their pretensions to inspiration: and inquired which of them was of the Lord's privy counsel, and made acquainted with his secret? And whether they alone had perceived and heard his word? They thought it not likely that two or three inconsiderable persons should know more concerning the will of God, than the numbers of respectable persons among the priests and prophets, who predicted peace and prosperity: and they were amazed at the confidence with which they uttered their prophecies. But on the other hand, the words may be interpreted as spoken by Jeremiah, demanding of the false prophets, which of them had received any revelation from God, or indeed understood any thing of his word? * The context shows, that he designs by this question to exclude only the prophet or natural man, from being enlightened from above, or being a competent judge of divine truths.* (Lomh.) (Marg. Ref.)

V. 19, 20. * If these prophets had really known God's purposes and intentions, they would not have said of peace, peace,—to the wicked; but have prophesied a grievous destruction just coming on them: for that is what will certainly come to pass; and the event will convince you of the truth of what I say. The sudden strokes of God's vengeance are often compared to a whirlwind.* (Lomh.) (Marg. Ref.)

In the latter, &c. The execution of the predicted judgments would effectually convince the people, that the prophet spake by authority from Jehovah. In those future days, the surviving captives, at Babylon, and they who lost their lives, in the eternal world would have leisure fully to consider the subject; and then they would reflect on their own incredulity and obstinacy, with bitter remorse and indignation at themselves for their folly and madness. But the latter days generally means the times of the Messiah, and even the latest ages of the world; and the full consideration and understanding of their present unpa 21 I have not sent these prophets, yet they ran: I have not spoken to them, yet they prophesied. 22 But if they had stood in my counsel, and had caused my people to hear my words, then they should have turned them from their evil way, and from the evil of their doings.

23 Am I a God at hand, saith the Lord, and not a God afar off? 24 Can any hide himself in secret places that I shall not see him? saith the Lord.  Do not I fill heaven and earth? saith the Lord.

25 I have heard what the prophets said, that prophecy lies in my name, saying, I have dreamed, I have dreamed.

26 How long shall this be in the heart of the prophets that prophecy lies? yea, they are prophets of the deceit of their own heart;

27 Which think to cause my people to forget my name by their dreams, which tell every man to his neighbour, as their fathers have forgotten my name for Baal.

28 The prophet that hath a dream, let him tell a dream; and he that hath my word, let him speak my word faithfully. What is the chaff to the wheat? saith the Lord.

29 Is not my word like as a fire? saith the Lord; and like a hammer that breaketh the rock in pieces?

rallied dispersion after so many ages, and of the sins which provoked God thus to deal with them after so highly favoured nation, will make way for the conversion of the Jews to Christ, and their restoration to their own land. (Note, xxx. 23, 24.) (Marg. Ref.)

V. 21, 22. 'He showeth the difference between the true prophets and the false; between the hireling and the true minister.' The Lord here solemnly disowneth these prophets, who at that time promised the people peace. They forwardly engaged in the work, and their predictions coincided with the corrupt inclinations of the people: they ran of their own accord, and prophesied out of their own heart, and all went on very smoothly. But if indeed they had stood in the Lord's counsel, and had spoken his words to the people: their grand object would have been to bring them to repentance, and to turn them from all their idolatries and iniquities to the worship of Jehovah. This would have been the tendency of their lives and doctrine; and they would have had some measure of success. But their object, and the tendency and effect of their prognostications, were entirely the reverse of this.

If it be inquired, how the people might have known the false prophets from those that were sent of God, when these wrought no miracles, the obvious answer is this: the ministry of the true prophets was coincident with the law of Moses, and its precepts, promises, threatenings, and predictions, and to the writings of the preceding prophets; whereas the false prophets, in their predictions, ran counter to these sacred records. The instructions and example of the true prophets evidently tended to bring men to repentance, faith, serious godliness, and universal righteousness; those of the false prophets led them to rest in forms and notions, and to be quiet in their sins: and these are still the rules by which the faithful ministers of Christ are to be distinguished from false teachers. (Note, Matt. vii. 15—23.) 'Giving encouragement to men's carnal security is often mentioned as a mark of a false prophet.' (Lowth.) But in respect of their immediate revelations, the ministry of the true prophets admitted of another kind of proof. No miracles, or even predictions, verified by the event, could prove him a true prophet, whose doctrine evidently contradicted any of the leading truths and precepts of the preceding Scriptures; (Note, Deut. xiii. 3.) In other cases the accomplishment of such predictions as related to their own times, generally sanctioned those that referred to more remote events. This was the case especially with Jeremiah. (Notes, xxii.)

V. 23, 24. Did the false prophets think to hide their crimes from God? or teach the people that he could not pursue them with his vengeance into distant countries, and detect their most secret crimes? Did they suppose that he only knew what was doing in heaven, and was not present on the earth also, or in those corners that lay most remote from human observation? Could they hope to avoid his inspection, or escape his vengeance, whose presence fills heaven and earth?

V. 25—27. False prophets pretended revelations from God in supernatural dreams; and they got it rumoured abroad. But the Lord knew this to be an imposition: for they only spake their own conjectures, the result of the pride and presumption of their own deceitful hearts. Their evident purpose was, to seduce the people into forgetfulness of God, and contempt of his word; that they might graft idolatry and superstition on their infidelity, and so render them their attached and submissive followers. — 'The giving heed to the false prophets is as effectual a way of making my people forget me and my laws, as the setting up an idolatrous way of worship, which hath been too successfully practised by their fathers.' (Lowth.)

V. 28, 29. Let then the matter be brought to decision between the different descriptions of prophets: let these dreamers declare openly their dreams, and let the true prophets faithfully deliver their message; and the difference would be as evident to the impartial inquirer, as that between the chaff and the wheat. The dreams of the false prophets would appear slight, superficial, and only calculated to flatter the pride and soothe the consciences of ungodly men: but the word of God, faithfully spoken by his servants, would appear weighty, interesting, suited to alarm the sinner's conscience, and to excite reverence of 30 Therefore, behold, I am against the prophets, saith the Lord, that steal my words every one from his neighbour.

3 A 2

31 Behold, I am against the prophets, saith the Lord, that use their tongues, and say, He saith.

32 Behold, I am against them that prophesy false dreams, saith the Lord, and do tell them, and cause my people to err by their lies, and by their lightness; yet I sent them not, nor commanded them: therefore they shall not profit this people at all, saith the Lord.

33 ¶ And when this people, or the prophet, or a priest, shall ask thee, saying, What is the burden of the Lord? thou shalt then say unto them, What burden? I will even punish that man and his house.

34 And as for the prophet, and the priest, and the people, that shall say, The burden of the Lord, I will even punish that man and his house.

35 Thus shall ye say every one to his neighbour, and every one to his brother, What hath the Lord answered? and, What hath the Lord spoken?

36 And the burden of the Lord shall ye mention no more: for every man's word shall be his burden; for ye have perverted the words of the living God, of the Lord of hosts our God.

37 Thus shalt thou say to the prophet, What hath the Lord answered thee? and, What hath the Lord spoken?

38 But since ye say, The burden of the Lord; therefore thus saith the Lord; Because ye say this word, the burden of the Lord, and I have sent unto you, saying, Ye shall not say, The burden of the Lord;

39 Therefore, behold, I, even I, will utterly forget you, and will forsake you, and the city that gave you your fathers, and cast you out of my presence:

40 And I will bring an everlasting reproach upon you, and a perpetual shame, which shall not be forgotten.

God's authority, and conducive to repentance and holiness. For "is not the word of God like fire?" This element penetrates, enlightens, illumines, softens, melts, purifies, consumes, or transforms, every substance into its own nature. Thus the sacred word penetrates the conscience, quickens and illuminates the mind, softens and melts the heart, purifies the affections, consumes the dross of sin, and transforms the believer's soul into its own holy nature. As a hammer, also, it breaks down the presumptuous confidence of the proud and stout-hearted, and renders them broken and contrite in spirit; and it crushes the rebellion and obstinacy of the will, and produces humble submission and obedience. This is the genuine tendency of the corrupted word of God, and these effects are produced where it is truly believed: but false doctrine is coincident with the pride and lusts of the human heart; and the more firmly it is believed, the faster are the chains of sin riveted, and the more is conscience stupefied in impenitence, and the will in obstinate rebellion.

V. 36. The false prophets catched up some of the phrases of the true prophets, and such things as suited their purpose: and this served to give plausibility to the lying predictions which they intermingled with them.

V. 37. The word rendered lightness, is understood by some to mean inconstancy, a frivolous accommodation to the varying humours of the people; by others flattery; and by others boasting, namely, of their revelations. (Num. xxiv. 3, 4. 2 Pet. ii. 15—19. Jude 16.)

V. 38—40. (Note, Isaiah xiii. 1.) The priests frequently called their prophecies "Burdens," especially when they related to divine judgments: and their opposers ridiculed the expression. So that, by way of exposing them for delivering so many terrible predictions, they used deridingly to ask. "What is the burden of the Lord?" To this Jeremiah was commanded to answer, "the Lord would forsake them," and then their miseries would indeed be a heavy burden. He did not mean, that God would finally forsake the nation, but that he would forsake those mockers, and that rebellious generation. And if any of them dared to use that expression in derision any more, the Lord declared that he would severely punish that man and his house. He therefore directed them what words to use in such cases, that they might not ridicule the language of the Holy Spirit. But as they would pervert his words, he would say, "the Lord of Hosts, their God;" he would make their own words fall on them as a heavy burden, and execute the predicted judgments with unrelenting severity. As we find some of the succeeding prophets used the same expression, it is plain that God did not mean to restrict his servants from using, but his enemies from deriding this word, (Zech. ix. 1.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—35.

Every man must render an account to God of the talents committed to his stewardship; and "to whom much hath been given, of him will much be required." Men must also be answerable to God for the mischief that arises from their neglect of duty, as well as for their other crimes.

We then be to those rulers, who abuse their authority to destroy and scatter their subjects! who oppress and plunder those whom they are commissioned to protect! Or who CHAPTER XXIV.

A vision of two baskets of figs, one very good, the other very bad, 1–3. This is explained of the reformation and re-suffer them to be enslaved, oppressed, slaughtered, or scattered by private depredators, or foreign enemies, through their ambition, avarice, luxury, or negligence! But still deeper guilt is contracted by the pastors of God’s flock, the professed rulers and teachers of the Church, who abuse their authority, neglect their work, are greedy of filthy lucre, and persecute those whom they ought to tend and feed. The true sheep of Christ, however, shall not be lost, through the negligence or wickedness of such pastors. Their great and good Shepherd, who is the Lord of Hosts, will gather them from every district of the earth into his fold; and there he will place them over all, faithful, diligent, and tender shepherds, to feed and tend them: and he himself will protect them by his power, and support them by his grace from terror and dismay; and not one of them shall be wanting, when he shall come finally to separate betwixt the sheep and the goats. For this righteous Branch hath been raised up unto David, and now reigns as Immanuel on the mediatorial throne; to execute judgment on his enemies, and to save and defend his people: and in him, as “The Lord our Righteousness,” believers are “justified, and glory! of his Spirit they all partake, and are taught to love, to obey, and imitate him, in whom is all their salvation.” “To him shall the gathering of the people be!” his redemption is far more glorious than all former deliverances of his Church: here the glory of God is peculiarly displayed, and it is our grand privilege to have such a Prophet, Priest, and King: may our souls be gathered to him, and found in him; and may Jews and Gentiles, and all the inhabitants of the earth, become the subjects of “The Lord our righteousness!”

V. 9–32.

Whilst we rejoice in our privileges, if we be zealous for the glory of God, and have compassion for our fellow-sinners, we cannot but be deeply concerned, when we consider the present state of mankind, and even that of the visible Church. It might well fill us with consternation and amazement, and prompt us to such earnestness in endeavouring to convince men of their guilt and misery, as would be despised by carnal men, and mistaken for inebriation or insanity, (Notes, Acts ii. 13–15. 2 Cor. v. 10–14.) to compare the words of God’s holiness in the sacred Scriptures, with the doctrine of most teachers, and the lives of most professed Christians. For it is evident that they are wretchedly deceived, and deceiving each other into a false peace, when the heavy wrath of God is ready to fall upon them. Whilst even in this favoured land men seem ambitious to exceed the adulteries and lewdness of the reprobate Jews, there can be no doubt but a far heavier load of perjury rests upon us; which, being connected with the system of political government and judicial transactions, and even ecclesiastical affairs, is in the strictest sense a national sin. “Because of swear-oration of the Jews, carried captive with Jecohiah; and the increasing wickedness and total ruin of those who remained in the land, 4–10.

“ing” our land ought to mourn in deep repentance: and if it do not, it may justly be apprehended, that ere long it will mourn under desolating judgments, which may turn all our pleasant places into a wilderness. But alas! the course in which men in general proceed is evil; and too often authority and influence give energy to natural depravity, to urge them on more forcibly in sin. And are not many of our priests and prophets ungodly? Does not the Lord find their wickedness in his house, and even at his table? And do not numbers thus provoke God to give them up to the lusts of their own hearts, till they are driven headlong into destruction? Perhaps God more abhors those who profess to preach his truth, but pervert it by their lies, and disgrace it by their vices, than those who openly abet the cause of infidelity and irreligion. He sees it very horrible when the wicked examples of the teachers combine with their soothing and plausible instructions to embolden evil doers in their crimes, and to quiet the consciences of the impenitent and unbelieving: and though men may attempt to palliate these abominations, they are in the eyes of the Lord as vile as the inhabitants of Sodom, and it will be less tolerable for them in the day of judgment. For from such teachers, profaneness goes forth throughout the land: the principles and morals of the people are poisoned at the fountain-head; and hence originate those torrents of infidelity, impiety, and profligacy, which overwhelm whole nations, and ripen them for destruction. Yet they that will hearken to such teachers as speak from their own hearts, and not out of the mouth of the Lord, and whose doctrine tends to render them vain and ungodly, must be answerable for it: for it is easy to distinguish them from those who stand in the counsel of the Lord, and hear his word; especially as he hath promised to give wisdom to them who lack it, and pray for it. It is plain that many run before they are sent of God; and that they only aim to obtain preferment or reputation, and not to bring sinners to repentance, to faith in Christ, and newness of life; and therefore they scruple not to promise peace to those who despise the Lord, and who walk after the imagination of their own hearts. It is evident that this is the tendency and effect of much public teaching: men, destitute of the fear of God, and without conscientiousness in their general conduct, are emboldened by it to hope well of their state, and even to deem themselves interested in all the privileges of the gospel. Some of these teachers dream dreams of the deceit of their own hearts, and are continually inventing new refinements in infidelity or enthusiasm, which cause the people to forget the Lord, and his holy truths and precepts; to take a part of the Bible for the whole; to establish new creeds, or to separate doctrinal truths from their practical tendency. Some again retail other men’s inventions, and steal scraps of divinity from their neighbours, and preach, (without any judgment of their own,) what other men have compiled for them; to indulge their laziness, and to gratify their own avarice. Others pick up a few notions and expressions from faithful
THE Lord shewed me, and, behold, two baskets of figs were set before the temple of the Lord; after that Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon had carried away captive Jeconiah the son of Jehoiakim king of Judah, and the princes of Judah, with the carpenters 3 and smiths, from Jerusalem, and had brought them to Babylon.

2 One basket had very good figs, even like the figs that are first ripe: and the other basket had very naughty figs, which could not be eaten, 4 they were so bad.

3 Then said the Lord unto me, What seest thou, Jeremiah? And I said, Figs; the good figs, very good, and the evil, very evil, that cannot be eaten, they are so evil.

The ministers; and by additions, alterations, or perversions, enervate and corrupt them, and cause the people to err by their lies and lightness. But what is all this chalk to the wheat? saith the Lord. Cannot they be distinguished from each other? Let the word of God be faithfully and fully preached, and the difference will soon appear, in its nature, tendency, and effects: for the word of God is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two edged sword; it comes to the heart and conscience with authority and conviction; it tends to instruct and alarm, to break the hard, and to humble the proud heart: it leads to repentance, to faith, and holiness: it enlightens, quickens, purifies, and refreshes the soul: it is no smooth, hallowing, stupifying message; but resembles the fire and the hammer that breaketh the rocks in pieces. And by these emblems, this tendency, and these effects, and by the spirit and example of true ministers of Christ, the real word of God may be distinguished as certainly from false doctrine, as taught by carnal preachers, as the wheat may be known from the worthless chaff. No fair appearances or pretences can conceal the hypocrisy, ambition, avarice, or insincerity of false professors or teachers from the omnipresent heart-searching Judge. He hears all their words, and sees their thoughts; he will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and manifest the counsels of their hearts: and when his vengeance shall fall grievously upon the head of the wicked, and he hath performed the thoughts of his heart respecting them, they will perfectly consider, and effectually be convinced of those truths, which before they would not believe.

V. 33—40.

It is a mark of great and daring impiety for men to jest with the words of God, or to ridicule the expressive language of faithful ministers. The cantity of the carnal heart works greatly in thus perverting the words of the living God; they who expect impunity in sin, and despise or abuse the salvation of the Gospel, are always prone to revile or deride those who, in the most scriptural manner, preach to sinners their danger of eternal damnation; and numbers only inquire concerning the word of God for their diversion, or to ridicule it. But every idle and profane word will add to the sinner's insupportable burden of wrath and misery, in the day when the Judge shall bid him "depart accursed into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels." and when, being forsaken of God, everlasting shame and reproach will be his portion. Let us then so inquire after the word of the Lord, that we may believe, reverence, and obey it, for our good.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXIV. V. 1. (Note, 2 Kings xxiv. 9—16.) 'The vision represented two such baskets of figs, as used to be offered up for first fruits at the temple.' (Deut. xxvi. 2.) (Lowth.)

V. 5. 'The Jews, who were left in their own country, thought themselves better beloved of God, than their brethren who were carried away captive. To check this vain confidence, God promises to show the latter particular signs of his favour in a strange land; and to show distinguishing marks of his displeasure on the former.' (Lowth.)

V. 6. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 7. Many of the more pious Jews were carried away captive with Jeconiah, or before him, among whom were Daniel and his companions, and Ezekiel likewise. The afflictions of the captives were suited to humble and lead them to repentance; whilst those who remained at Jerusalem became more and more hardened in presumption and rebellion. But whatever means were used, the power of divine grace effected the grand difference between them. The Lord promised to give the captives a heart, (a proper disposition of mind,) to know him, in the glory of his perfections, and in his relation to them: and this knowledge would induce them to renounce all idols and iniquities, and to return to his worship and service with their whole heart. And thus they would be 8 And as the evil figs, which cannot be eaten, they are so evil; surely thus saith the Lord; So will I give Zedekiah the king of Judah, and his princes, and the residue of Jerusalem, that remain in this land, and them that dwell in the land of Egypt.

9 And I will deliver them to be removed into all the kingdoms of the earth for their hurt, to be a reproach and a proverb, a taunt and a curse, in all places whither I shall drive them.

10 And I will send the sword, the famine, and the pestilence, among them, till they be consumed from off the land that I gave unto them and to their fathers and theirs.

CHAP. XXV.

A review of the messages sent by Jeremiah to the Jews during twenty-three years; and their contempt of them reproved.

acknowledged as his people, and he would be their God, their Portion, Protector, and Salvation: and he would take care of them as a man would of the best and most valued produce of the fig-tree. Doubtless a great reformation and revival of religion took place among the captives, and by them and their descendants the land was afterwards chiefly replenished: for they who remained in Judea, were in general destroyed, or driven into Egypt, whence few, if any of them returned; or they were carried to distant regions, and detained in slavery. But some expressions lead us to suppose, that the Spirit of prophecy looked forward to the present dispersion of the unbelieving Jews in all the nations of the earth, and all the debasing circumstances attending it. To the first captives chiefly those blessings belong, which are promised to the Jews upon their return from captivity; such as were the knowledge of God, and grace to live in obedience to his commandments. But I conceive the eminent completion of this prophecy will be at the time of the general restoration of that nation. (Lomh.)

V. 3—10. (Marg. Ref.)

- PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The professors of true religion are presented before God, to be devoted to his glory, and employed in doing good to mankind; as the first fruits of the fig-tree were brought to the temple, to be used by the priests and Levites. Indeed, none of the human race are so good and useful as true believers; but none are so vile and worthless as hypocrites: thus the good are very good, and the bad very bad, more than among other men. (Matt. v. 13.) But the Lord often spares those longest, and exempts them most from present suffering, whom he hath appointed unto wrath. As many as he loves he rebukes and chastens: and when the loss of estates, liberty, and country, and a complication of hardships and calamities, are sanctified to the saving of their souls, these appear to be the methods by which God acknowledges his choice of them, and his purpose of doing them good. He alone can remove the pride, enmity, and blindness of the carnal mind, and give men hearts to know, fear, love, and trust in him: when this change takes place, they cordially return to him in his appointed way. Thus they become his accepted obedient servants and worshippers: and he becomes their God and Father. Thenceforth he will comfort them under all their trials, deliver them from every Tempt, and set his ways upon them for good, and that for ever. Let those who desire these blessings beg of God to give them a heart to know him. And let us remember, that it is in this way that the Lord preserves a Church on earth; whilst multitudes of professed Christians, without respect of rank or external distinction, are given up to complicated contempt and misery, for a warning to others not to copy their crimes, nor to presume upon their privileges: and this consideration should direct our prayers, and encourage our hopes, respecting a final prevalence of the Gospel throughout the earth.

CHAP. XXV. V. 1. Nebuchadnezzar, or Nebuchadnezzar. The first year of Nebuchadnezzar’s reign, according to the scripture account, is coincident with the end of the third, and the beginning of the fourth, year of Jehoiakim. Two years after Nebuchadnezzar relented with his father, Daniel, writing in Chaldea, follows the computation in use among the Chaldeans. (Lomh.) This fixes the beginning of Nebuchadnezzar’s reign two years later; namely, from the time in which he began to reign alone. (Note, Dan. ii. 1.)

NOTES.

35. The word that came to Jeremiah concerning all the people of Judah, in the fourth year of Jehoiakim son of Josiah king of Judah, that was the first year of Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon: 2 The word which the prophet spake unto all the people of Judah, and to all the inhabitants of Jerusalem, saying: 3 From the thirteenth year of Josiah, the son of Amon, king of Judah, even unto this day, that is the three and twentieth year, the word of the Lord, acknowledged as his people, and he would be their God, their Portion, Protector, and Salvation; and he would take care of them as a man would of the best and most valued produce of the fig-tree. Doubtless a great reformation and revival of religion took place among the captives, and by them and their descendants the land was afterwards chiefly replenished: for they who remained in Judea, were in general destroyed, or driven into Egypt, whence few, if any of them returned; or they were carried to distant regions, and detained in slavery. But some expressions lead us to suppose, that the Spirit of prophecy looked forward to the present dispersion of the unbelieving Jews in all the nations of the earth, and all the debasing circumstances attending it. To the first captives chiefly those blessings belong, which are promised to the Jews upon their return from captivity; such as were the knowledge of God, and grace to live in obedience to his commandments. But I conceive the eminent completion of this prophecy will be at the time of the general restoration of that nation. (Lomh.)

V. 3—10. (Marg. Ref.)
THE Lord shewed me, and, behold, there were two baskets of figs before the temple of the Lord: after Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon had carried away captive Jeconiah the son of Jehoiakim king of Judah, and the princes of Judah, and the carpenters and smiths, from Jerusalem, and had brought them to Babylon.

2 One basket had very good figs, even like the figs that are first ripe; and the other basket had very naughty figs, which could not be eaten, they were so bad.

3 Then said the Lord unto me, What seest thou, Jeremiah? And I said, Figs; the good figs, very good, and the evil, evil, that cannot be eaten, they are so evil.

ministers; and by additions, alterations, or perversions, enervate and corrupt them, and cause the people to err by their lies and lightness. But what is all this chaff to the wheat? saith the Lord. Cannot they be distinguished from each other? Let the word of God be faithfully and fully preached, and the difference will soon appear, in its nature, tendency, and effects: for the word of God is quick and powerful, and sharper than any two edged sword; it comes to the heart and conscience with authority and conviction; it tends to instruct and alarm, to break the hard, and to humble the proud heart: it leads to repentance, to faith, and holiness: it enlightens, quickens, purifies, and reneweth the soul: it is no smooth, hollow, stupifying message; but resembles the fire and the hammer that breaketh the rocks in pieces. And by these emblems, this tendency, and these effects, and by the spirit and example of true ministers of Christ, the real word of God may be distinguished as certainly from false doctrines, taught by carnal preachers, as the wheat may be known from the worthless chaff. No fair appearances or pretences can conceal the hypocrisy, ambition, avarice, or insincerity of false professors or teachers from the omnipresent heart-searching Judge. He hears all their words, and sees their thoughts; he will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and manifest the counsels of their hearts: and when his vengeance shall fall grievously upon the head of the wicked, and he hath performed the thoughts of his heart respecting them, they will perfectly consider, and effectually be convinced of those truths, which before they would not believe.

4 Again the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

5 Thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel: Like these good figs, so will I acknowledge them that are carried away captive of Judah, whom I have sent out of this place into the land of the Chaldeans for their good.

6 For I will set mine eyes upon them for good, and I will bring them again to this land: and I will build them, and not pull them down; and I will plant them, and not pluck them up.

7 And I will give them an heart to know me, that I am the Lord: and they shall be my people, and I will be their God; for they shall return unto me with their whole heart.
CHAPTER XXV.

A review of the messages sent by Jeremiah to the Jews during twenty-three years; and their contempt of them reproved, acknowledged as his people, and he would be their God, their Portion, Protector, and Salvation; and he would take care of them as a man would of the best and most valued produce of the fig-tree. Doubtless a great reformation and revival of religion took place among the captives, and by them and their descendants the land was afterwards chiefly replenished: for they who remained in Judea were in general destroyed, or driven into Egypt, whence few, if any of them returned; or they were carried to distant regions, and detained in slavery. But some expressions lead us to suppose, that the Spirit of prophecy looked forward to the present dispersion of the unbelieving Jews in all the nations of the earth, and all the ensuing circumstancies attending it. To the first captives chiefly those blessings belong, which are promised to the Jews upon their return from captivity; such as were the knowledge and fear of God, and grace to live in obedience to his commandments. But I conceive the eminent completion of this prophecy will be at the time of the general restoration of that nation. (Lowth.)

V. 3—10. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The professors of true religion are presented before God, to be devoted to his glory, and employed in doing good to mankind; as the first fruits of the fig-tree were brought to the temple, to be used by the priests and Levites. Indeed, none of the human race are so good and useful as true believers; but none are so vile and worthless as hypocrites: thus the good are very good, and the bad very bad, more than among other men. (Matt. v. 13.) But the Lord often spares those longest, and extremest them most from present suffering, whom he hath appointed unto wrath. As many as he loves he rebukes and chastens: and when the loss of estates, liberty, and country, and a complication of hardships and calamities, are sanctified to the saving of their souls, these appear to be the methods by which God acknowledges his choice of them, and his purpose of doing them good. He alone can remove the pride, enmity, and blindness of the carnal mind, and give men hearts to know, fear, love, and trust in him: when this change takes place, they cordially return to him in his appointed way. Thus they become his accepted obedient servants and worshippers; and he becomes their God and Father. Thenceforth he will comfort them under all their trials, deliver them from every enemy, and set his eyes upon them for good, and that for ever. Let those who desire these blessings beg of God to give them a heart to know him. And let us remember, that it is in this way that the Lord preserves a Church on earth; whilst multitudes of professed Christians, without respect of rank or external distinction, are given up to complicated contempt and misery, for a warning to others not to copy their crimes, nor to presume upon their privileges: and this consideration should direct our prayers, and encourage our hopes, respecting a final prevalence of the Gospel throughout the earth.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXV. V. 1. Nebuchadnezzar, or Nebuchadrezzar. The first year of Nebuchadnezzar's reign, according to the scripture-account, is coincident with the end of the third, and the beginning of the fourth year of Jehoiakim. Two years Nebuchadnezzar reigned with his father, Daniel, writing in Chaldea, follows the computation in verse among the Chaldeans. (Lowth.) This fixes the beginning of Nebuchadnezzar's reign two years later; namely, from the time in which he began to reign alone. (Note, Dan. ii. 1.) hath come unto me, and I have spoken unto you, rising early and speaking; but ye have not hearkened.

4 And the Lord hath sent unto you all his servants the prophets, rising early and sending them; but ye have not hearkened, nor inclined your ear to hear.

5 They said, Turn ye again now every one from his evil way, and from the evil of your doings, and dwell in the land that the Lord hath given unto you, and to your fathers, for ever and ever:

6 And go not after other gods to serve them, and to worship them, and provoke me to anger with the works of your hands; and I will do you no hurt.

7 Yet ye have not hearkened unto me, saith the Lord; that ye might provoke me to anger with the works of your hands, to your own hurt.

8 Therefore saith the Lord of hosts; Because ye have not hearkened to my words, 9 Behold, I will send and take all the families of the north, saith the Lord, and Nebuchadrezzar the king of Babylon, my servant, and will bring them against this land, and against the inhabitats thereof, and against all these nations round about, and will utterly destroy them, and make them an astonishment, and an hissing, and perpetual desolations.

10 Moreover, I will bring upon you that which I have pronounced against you; even all that is written in this book, which Jeremiah hath prophesied against all the nations.

11 And this whole land shall be a desolation, an astonished; and these nations shall serve the king of Babylon seventy years.

12 And it shall come to pass, when seventy years are accomplished, that I will punish the king of Babylon, and that nation, saith the Lord, for their iniquity, and the land of the Chaldeans, and will make it perpetual desolations.

13 And I will bring upon you all my words which I have pronounced against you; even all that is written in this book, which Jeremiah hath prophesied against all the nations.

14 For many nations and great kings shall serve themselves of them also: and I will recompense them according to the Jews' confederates, on whose assistance they relied: and the subduing of them made way for the easier conquest of Judah.' (Lomh.)

V. 10. (Marg. Ref.) 'St. John exactly follows the Hebrew text; (Rev. xixii. 22, 23,) whereas the seventy in this place, instead of the sound of the mill-stones, reads, "the smell of ointment," from which, and several other places of the New Testament, it appears that the apostles and evangelists did not implicitly follow the Greek translation; but only when they thought it agreeable to the original text.' (Lomh.)

V. 11. Seventy, &c. (Notes, 2 Chr. xxxxi. 21. Ezra i. vi. 6—15. Dan. ix. 1, 2. Zech. i. 12, 13.)

V. 12. 'God often punishes the persons whom he makes instruments of his vengeance on others, for those very things which they did by his appointment; because their intent was purely to carry on their own ambitious and cruel purposes, and not at all to fulfill God's will or advance his glory. So that the evil they did was also gether their own, and the good that was produced out of it was to be ascribed to God.' (Lomh.)

V. 13. The prophecies contained in the fiftieth and fifty-first chapters against Babylon, seem here referred to; and this renders it probable that they had been delivered before this time; though the order, in which they now stand, may lead the reader to suppose the contrary.
CHAPTER XXV.

their deeds, and according to the works of their own hands.

15 ¶ For thus saith the Lord God of Israel unto me; "Take the wine-cup of this fury at my hand, and cause all the nations, to whom I send thee, to drink it.

16 And they shall drink, and be moved, and be mad, because of the sword that I will send among them.

17 Then took I the cup at the Lord's hand, and made all the nations to drink, to whom the Lord had sent me.

18 To wit, Jerusalem, and the cities of Judah, and the kings thereof, and the princes thereof, ²⁹ to make them a desolation, an astonishment, and a hissing, and a curse; "as it is this day;

19 Pharaoh king of Egypt, and his servants, and his princes, and all his people;

20 And all the mingled people, and all the kings of the land of £ Uz, and all the kings of the land of the Philistines, and £ Ashkelon, and Azzah, and Ekron, and the remnant of Ashdod,

21 £ Edom, and £ Moab, and £ the children of Ammon,

22 And all the kings of Tyrus, and all the kings of Zidon, and the kings of the isles which are beyond the sea, 23 £ Dedan, and Tema, and Buz, and all that are in the utmost corners.

24 And all the kings of Arabia, and all the kings of the mingled people that dwell in the desert.

25 And all the kings of £ Zimri, and all the kings of £ Elam, £ and all the kings of the Medes, 26 And all the kings of the north, and of the far and near, one with another, and all the kingdoms of the world, which are upon the face of the earth: £ and the king of Shashshach shall drink after them.

27 Therefore thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; £ Drink ye, and be drunken, and spue, and fall, and rise no more, because of the sword which I will send among you.

V. 14—'The nations and kings, which confederated with Cyrus.'

V. 15—17. The nature of the case determines this to have been a figurative representation, and not a real transaction; for the prophet could not have performed literally the things here commanded: but this was not the case in respect of some other transactions, which many suppose to have only been done in vision. (Note, xiii. 1—11.) It was in this way revealed to the prophet, and he was ordered to publish it as widely as he could, that the vengeance of God would be executed on all the surrounding nations, as well as on the Jews, by Nebuchadrezzar and his Chaldeans. The wrath of God, and its fatal effects, when men are judicially left to infatuation and rage, and to rush upon their own destruction, are aptly represented by a cup of intoxicating liquor, mingled with poisonous ingredients; such as was commonly given to condemned criminals, in order to end their wretched lives.

V. 18. As it is this day. 'This relates to the desolations of Judea and Jerusalem, when all that had been foretold by Jeremiah was fulfilled; and therefore must have been added by Baruch, or by Ezra, or whoever it was that collected Jeremiah's prophecies into one volume. (Lowth.) As the prophet lived to witness the completion of these predictions, it is not at all unlikely, that he himself added the clause to the copies that were afterwards written; from which it might be inserted also in the others.

V. 20. The mingled, &c. These are supposed to have been the various tribes of the Midianites, and others con.

Vol. III.—No. 20.
28 And it shall be, if they refuse to take the cup at thine hand to drink, then shalt thou say unto them, Thus saith the Lord of hosts; * Ye shall certainly drink.

29 For, lo, * I begin to bring evil upon the city * which is called by my name, and should ye be utterly unpunished? ye shall not be unpunished: for * I will call for a sword upon all the inhabitants of the earth, saith the Lord of hosts.

30 Therefore prophesy thou against them all these words, and say unto them, The Lord shall roar from on high, and utter an inquisition from his holy habitation; he shall mightily roar upon his habitation; he shall give a shout, as they that tread the grapes, against all the inhabitants of the earth.

31 A noise shall come even to the ends of the earth; for the Lord hath a controversy with the nations, he will plead with all flesh: he will give them that are wicked to the sword, saith the Lord.

32 Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Behold, * evil shall go forth from nation to nation, and a great whirlwind shall be raised up from the coasts of the earth.

33 And * the slain of the Lord shall * be at that day from one end of the earth even unto the other end of the earth: * they shall not be lamented, neither * gathered, nor buried; they shall be dung upon the ground.

34 * Howl, * ye shepherds, and cry; * and wallow yourselves in the ashes, ye principal of the flock: for the days of your slaughter, and of your dispersions, are accomplished; and ye shall fall like a pleasant vessel.

35 * And * the shepherds shall have * no way to flee, nor the principal of the flock to escape.

36 * A voice of the cry of the shepherds, and an howling of the principal of the flock, shall be heard: for the Lord hath spoiled their pasture.

37 And * the peaceable habitations are cut down, because of the fierce anger of the Lord.

38 He hath forsaken his covert and the lion: for their land is desolate, because of the fierceness of the oppressor, and because of his fierce anger.

V. 27, 28. (Note, 15—17.) * If they either do not believe thy threatenings, or disregard them as thinking themselves sufficiently secure; let them know that the judgments denounced against them are God's irrevocable decree. (Latham.)

V. 29. If the Governor of the world would not let his own worshippers escape punishment, but would even destroy the city and temple, which were more immediately dedicated to him, for the sins of the people, would be dealt with idolaters and avowed enemies as if they were altogether innocent? Or would he suffer them to escape with impunity? (Marg. Ref.)

V. 30. Upon, &c. The Lord would utter and execute his tremendous threatenings from his holy habitation in heaven, upon Jerusalem and the temple, which had been as his habitation on earth; but which, having been polluted with wickedness, were sentenced to be destroyed along with the cities of the Gentiles. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 31—33. The dreadful devastations made by the Chaldeans through all the nations in that part of the world, and at length the destruction of Babylon by the Medes and Persians, are primarily foretold, in this awful language: but it accords very much with those passages in which the ruin of all the antichristian powers is evidently predicted. (Marg. Ref.) (Notes, Is. xxxiv. Ez. xxxviii. xxxix. Rev. xi. xiv.)

V. 34—36. When the predicted judgments of God should dismay and scatter the nations, as the roaring of a lion would a flock of sheep, the shepherds or rulers would have peculiar cause to howl: they would have no place to flee to, the pasture where their wealth arose would be spoiled, and they would fall a prey to the instruments of the Lord's indignation.

Pleasant vessel. * As an earthen vessel that is curiously wrought, while it holds sound is well esteemed; but if once it fall and break, is worth nothing: so shall ye be unto me. (Bp. Halle.) The rulers of the Jews seem principally meant. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 37. * In the Hebrew; it is north Shalem, alluding to Salem, the same with Jerusalem. (Latham.) (Heb. vii. 2.)

V. 38. Some expositors understand this of Nebuchadnezzar, who had left the covert of Babylon, to destroy the nations, especially Judah. (iv. 7.) Others explain it of the Lord, who had left Jerusalem and his temple defenceless to their enraged invaders and oppressors: whereas, had he continued to protect them, no enemy would have dared to approach, any more than other beasts would enter the den of a fierce lion, whilst he remained in it.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—14.

The command to repent and turn from every evil way to the worship and service of God; and the invitation to sinners to come and trust in Christ, and partake of his salvation; concern all men, and ought to be fully and plainly proposed to all. It is agreed by the servants of the Lord, in every age and under every dispensation, that he...
CHAPTER XXVI.

Jeremiah, delivering an awful message at the temple, is persecuted by the priests and prophets, 1—9. He pleads his cause before the princes, exHORTS them to repent, and warns them not to shed innocent blood, 10—15. The princes acquit him, referring to the example of Micah, 16—19. Urijah, prophesying in like manner, is persecuted; and fleeing into Egypt, is fetched thence by Je-hoiakim and slain, 20—23. Ahikam protects Jeremiah, 24.

The beginning of the reign of Jehoiakim, the son of Josiah king of Judah, came this word from the Lord, saying;

2 Thus saith the Lord; b Stand in the court of the Lord's house, and speak unto all the cities of Judah, which come to worship in the Lord's house; c all the words that I command thee to speak unto them; d diminish not a word:

1 N

V. 15—33.

How grand and awful a view have we, in this passage, given us of divine providence! How affecting, of the state of fallen man! The judgments of God have ever been going their rounds from one nation to another, and have never been suffered to rest; because of the wickedness of mankind! When we consider the fury and rage, with which the nations of the earth have, in every age, rushed upon mutual carnage and destruction; we must allow, that their conduct hath resembled that of men who are intoxicated and mad: but we need not wonder at these effects, when we reflect that they have been drinking of the cup of God's indignation, and have been given up to their own mad passions, to execute his vengeance on each other. This emblem also may instruct us what an odious and pernicious vice drunkenness is; and how dreadful the wrath of God must be to those who fall under it to rise no more. It is vain to struggle against the sentence which he hath denounced, or to object to his righteousness: he will constrain men to drink of this bitter cup; he will destroy them with his avenging sword. He will not even spare those cities or persons who have been called by his name; but if his judgments begin with degenerate professors of Christianity, let not the impious and profane expect to be altogether unpunished. From his holy habitations he will utter his voice against all flesh. He hath just ground of controversy with every nation and every individual, and he will plead against them, and execute judgment on all the wicked. Thus evil goes from nation to nation: no tongue can express the miseries that have been endured, or the multitudes that have perished, by the great scourges of the world, who successively have been raised up, run their course, and been destroyed. We have abundant cause to be thankful, that ours are yet peaceable habitations: but many, which were so for a time, have been cut down, because of the fierce anger of the Lord. When he leaves his place to execute judgment, or withdraws his protection from offending nations, the days of slaughter arrive, and lands are soon left desolate, or groaning under the iron rod of oppression: and then the chief in rank and authority are most exposed to peril and suffering, and are generally the least able to escape, or to endure hardship. But the Lord will preserve his people in all changes: and whatever removes them from this world of sin and sorrow, they will then enter into those peaceful mansions, where war, changes, sickness, and death, can find no admission; because no sin will be found therein for ever.
3 If so be they will hearken, and turn every man from his evil way, that I may repent me of the evil, which I purpose to do unto them, because of the evil of their doings.

4 And thou shalt say unto them, Thus saith the Lord, If ye will not hearken to me, to walk in my law, which I have set before you,

5 To hearken to the words of my servants the prophets, whom I sent unto you, both rising up early, and sending them, but ye have not hearkened:

6 Then will I make this house as Shiloh, and will make this city a curse to all the nations of the earth.

7 So the priests, and the prophets, and all the people, heard Jeremiah speaking these words in the house of the Lord.

8 Now it came to pass, when Jeremiah had made an end of speaking all that the Lord had commanded him to speak unto all the people, that the priests and the prophets, and all the people, took him, saying, Thou shalt surely die;

9 Why hast thou prophesied in the name of the Lord, saying, This house shall be like Shiloh, and this city shall be desolate without an inhabitant? And all the people were gathered against Jeremiah in the house of the Lord.

10 When the priests of Judah heard these things, then they came up from the king's house unto the house of the Lord, and sat down in the entry of the new gate of the Lord's house.

11 Then spake the priests and the prophets unto the princes and to all the people, saying, This man is worthy to die: for he hath prophesied against this city, as ye have heard with your ears.

12 Then spake Jeremiah unto all the princes, and to all the people, saying, The Lord sent me to prophesy against this house, and against this city, all the words that ye have heard.

13 Therefore now amend your ways and your doings, and obey the voice of the Lord your God: and the Lord will repent him of the evil that he hath pronounced against you.

14 As for me, behold, I am in your hand: do with me as seemeth good and meet unto you:

15 But know ye for certain, that if ye put me to death, ye shall surely bring innocent blood upon yourselves, and upon this city, and upon the inhabitants thereof: for of a truth the Lord hath sent me unto you, to speak all these words in your ears.

16 Then said the princes, and all the people unto the priests, and to the prophets. This man is not worthy to die: for he hath spoken to us in the name of the Lord our God.

17 Then rose up certain of the elders of the land, and spake to all the assembly of the people, saying,

18 Micaiah the Maimathite prophesied in the days of Hezekiah king of Judah, and spake to all the people of Judah, saying, Thus saith the Lord of hosts; Zion shall be plowed like a field, and Jerusalem shall become heaps, and the mountain of the house as the high places of the forest.

19 Did Hezekiah king of Judah, and all Judah put him at all to death? did he not fear the Lord, and besought the Lord, and the Lord repented him of the evil which he had pronounced against them? Thus might we procure great evil against our souls.

20 And there was also a man that prophesied in the name of the Lord, Urijah, the son of Shemaiah of Kirjath-jearim, who prophesied against this city, and against this land, according to all the words of Jeremiah:

21 And when Jehoiakim the king, with all his mighty men, and all the princes, heard his words, the king sought to put him to death: but when Urijah heard it, he was afraid, and fled, and went into Egypt;

22 And Jehoiakim the king sent men into Egypt, namely, Elihanan the son of Achbor, and certain men with him into Egypt.

23 And they fetched forth Urijah out of Egypt, and brought him unto Jehoiakim the king: who slew him with the sword, and cast his dead body into the graves of the common people.

24 Nevertheless the hand of Ahikam, the son of Shaphan was with Jeremiah, that they should not give him into the hand of the people to put him to death.

V. 16—19. Some expositors consider the remainder of this chapter as the debate which took place in the Sanhedrim, or council, on the case of Jeremiah: but as the people were present, part of the time at least, and as no mention is made of the council, but merely of the princes and certain elders, perhaps what is here recorded took place in the court of the temple; and the subsequent verses were added by the prophet, to illustrate the narrative.—'The people, who before were forward to condemn him; now, upon hearing his apology, were as ready to acquit him.' (Lowth.) They before united with the priests and prophets; but now some of them concurred with the princes, who refused to pronounce the sentence of death against Jeremiah, (24.) 'Not against this man the sentence of death.' (Note, 11.) It does not appear, whether the elders of the land' were some of the princes before mentioned; or other eminent persons, who added before appositely the example of Micaiah, and quoted his words in support of their determination, and against the rash judgment of priests and prophets. (Note, Mic. iv. 12.) There is no satisfactory ground in the following history, to conclude that either these princes, or elders in general, so attended to the message of God, as to repent of their sins, or to attempt a public reformation; though they seem at this time to have had transient convictions, which the Lord made use of for his servant's preservation. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 20—23. 'This seems to be an instance alleged by others of the Sanhedrim, in favour of the priests and prophets who were for condemning Jeremiah.' (Lowth.) If the narrative was added by the sacred writer, he meant to magnify the power and goodness of God in preserving him against the persecuting violence of Jehoiakim, as well as that of the priests and prophets. Urijah seems to have been very faithful in delivering his message, but faulty in relinquishing his work, and fleeing into Egypt for fear of Jehoiakim; as if he dared not to stand to what he had said. Jehoiakim, by burying Urijah in the graves of the common people, intended to render him and his prediction contemptible among his subjects. Had the king and people imitated Hezekiah, the Lord would have averted the threatened judgments, as he had done in that pious prince's time: nor would Nebuchadnezzar have been able to take the city, any more than Sennacherib had been. But God foresaw, that both rulers and people would bring destruction on themselves by impenitence, and by murdering his prophets.

V. 24. 'Which declareth that nothing could have appeased their fury, if God had not moved this nobleman to stand valiantly in his defence.' Both Shaphan and Ahikam were employed by Josiah in his reformation, and were his principal ministers; and several of Ahikam's brethren or near relations seem to have been principal persons during the reign of Jehoiakim and his successors; so that his influence must have been very great. His son Gedaliah was appointed ruler over the remnant of Jews, left in the land by Nebuchadnezzar after the destruction of Jerusalem; and he appears to have been a man of good character. So that it is not improbable that Ahikam was a pious man; though, except on this occasion, he did not boldly expose the cause of the prophet. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—9.

The ambassadors of God should speak his word with all boldness, and adhere strictly to their instructions; but in CHAP. XXVII.

Jeremiah is directed to make yokes and bonds; to wear one on his own neck, and to send them to several kings by their ambassadors, with a command from the Creator of the world to submit to the king of Babylon, if they would escape destruction, 1—11. He counsels Zedekiah to the same effect; warns him and the people against false prophets; and predicts further desolations, 12—22.

In the beginning of the reign of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, came this word unto Jeremiah from the Lord, saying,

... know for certain, that injuring or putting to death their faithful reprovers will hasten and increase the punishments of individuals and communities. The more pious any man is, the less apt will he be to resent the most pointed Scriptural reproofs and warnings: for such persons profit continually by this plain dealing, and are led to fear God, and seek his favour with increasing earnestness; and thus they escape the threatened condemnation. Of what great importance is it to be well versed in the Scripture history: for apposite references may be made to it on almost every occasion, and directions deduced from it, to regulate our conduct! It seems a light matter to conclude, that they are not worthy to be put to death, who have spoken the word of the Lord: yet they may generally think themselves greatly favoured, who are thus protected, though they have no other recompense from man. For many whose consciences testify to the character of the faithful minister, and to the truth of his words, and who will occasionally countenance him, from conviction or personal respect, will not obey the commands of God delivered by him, but go on in sin to their own destruction. No enmity is more implacable, than that excited by faithful reproof; or more dangerous, when the proud transgressor hath power to gratify it: but none can go further than the Lord is pleased to permit; and they who are employed in his service, and abide in their proper work and place, have no reason to fear man. Extraordinary cases call for extraordinary firmness: but though the servants of God agree in the substance of their ministry, they do not all possess equal constancy and intrepidity; nor do the same persons at all times. The persecuted minister may change the scene of his labours, and thus flee from one city to another: but he must not run away from his work, or shelter himself from danger in those places where he can have no opportunity of usefulness. They who most honour God by confidence in him, and zeal for his glory, shall be peculiarly honoured by him: but such as appear to distrust him, and to despise his word, will be proportionately disgraced, rebuked, and laid aside. The Lord can raise up friends to his people, where they least expected them: and he will honour and recompense those who show kindness to such as are persecuted and oppressed for his sake.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXVII. V. 1. Jehoiakim. As Zedekiah is afterwards mentioned through this whole transaction, it seems to have been by an error of some early transcriber, that the name of Jehoiakim is here substituted. Yet several interpreters suppose, that the prophet had the vision in the reign of Jehoiakim; but was not ordered to make the yokes and bonds according to it, till the reign of Ze-
2 Thus saith the Lord to me; Make thee bonds and yokes, and put them upon thy neck, and send them to the king of Edom, and to the king of Moab, and to the king of the Ammonites, and to the king of Tyrus, and to the king of Zidon, by the hand of the messengers which come to Jerusalem unto Zedekiah king of Judah; And command them to say unto their masters, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, thus shall ye say unto your masters; I have made the earth, the man, and all the beasts that are upon the ground, by my great power, and by my outstretched arm, and have given it unto whom it seemed meet unto me. And now have I given all these lands into the hand of Nebuchadnezzar, the king of Babylon, my servant, and the kingdom of the king of Babylon, he shall possess the land from the river of Egypt unto the river Euphrates." (Bp. Hall.)

7 And all nations shall serve him, and his son, and his son's son, until the time appointed, and it shall come to pass, that the nation and kingdom which shall not serve this Nebuchadnezzar the king of Babylon, and that shall not put their neck under the yoke of the king of Babylon, that nation will I punish, saith the Lord, with the sword, and with the famine, and with the pestilence, until I have consumed them by his hand. Therefore hearken not ye to your prophets, nor to your diviners, nor to your dreamsers, nor to your enchanters, nor to your sorcerers, which speak unto you, saying, Ye shall not serve the king of Babylon: for all these nations serve the king of Babylon; and therefore he shall be their leader; and they shall serve him, because he shall save them: for he is the accursed one of the earth." (Luth.)

V. 2. 3. The kings of these nations seem to have entered into an alliance against the growing power of Nebuchadnezzar, and to have sent ambassadors to Zedekiah to induce him to accede to the treaty. But as it had been before repeatedly predicted, that they should be subjugated by the king of Babylon, this was a vain attempt to frustrate the purpose of God. Jeremiah was therefore ordered to make yokes of wood, like those that were put upon the oxen; and bonds, such as were used to fasten them; and wearing one on his own neck to excite their attention, he was directed to send one to each of the confederating kings, with the following message, by the ambassadors.

V. 1-9. God is the sole Lord and Proprietor of the world; and by virtue of his absolute sovereignty, he has a right to give the kingdom of the earth to whomsoever he pleases. (Dan. iv. 17.) He exercises this authority by changing times and seasons, by removing kings and setting up kings. It is the business of human laws to establish every government in that method, wherein it is divinely settled: but as this is no bar to Providence, which still has a right to alter government, and for great and wise reasons often changes the scene of worldly affairs; so neither ought it to be an objection against submitting to any persons, whom God's providence hath placed over us, and put into their hands the full power of exercising all those acts of government in which sovereignty consists. But although the people are bound in such cases to obey, yet this does not lessen the guilt of usurpers. (Luth.) There was a peculiar grandeur, as well as propriety, in this mode of predicting Nebuchadnezzar's rapid successes. The God of Israel, declaring himself to be the Lord of all armies, and the Creator and owner of the whole earth, with all its inhabitants and productions, and claiming full sovereignty over all his creatures, avows his determination, (for reasons which he does not deign to assign,) to give all the countries in that part of the world to the king of Babylon, whom he calls his servant, because he would accomplish an important part of his most righteous designs. They, therefore, who would escape the most dreadful judgments, must submit to the God of Israel by submitting to N. Nebuchadnezzar; they must hearken to, (believe and obey,) the prophets of Israel, and not to their own diviners and enchanters; and they must observe, that Nebuchadnezzar, and his son, and grandson, would, whatever opposition might be made, possess the full dominion of all these countries; but that, when the appointed time was expired, these haughty conquerors and cruel oppressors, in their turn, become the prey of other powerful conquerors and oppressors. This prophecy would, no doubt, be made known, in some degree, among the principal persons in the adjacent countries; and though for the present neglected, when it received its exact accomplishment, it must have been a very conclusive proof, that the God of Israel was the only true God, and the Sovereign of the whole earth, and that he did according to his will among the inhabitants of the world.
10 For they prophesy a lie unto you, to remove you far from your land; and that I should drive you out, and ye should perish.

11 But the nations that bring their neck under the yoke of the king of Babylon, and serve him, those will I let remain still in their own land, saith the Lord; and they shall till it, and dwell therein.

12 If I spoke also to Zedekiah king of Judah according to all these words, saying, bring your necks under the yoke of the king of Babylon, and serve him and his people, and live.

13 Why will ye die, thou and thy people, by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence, as the Lord hath spoken against the nation that will not serve the king of Babylon?

14 Therefore hearken not unto the words of the prophets that speak unto you, saying, Ye shall not serve the king of Babylon: for they prophesy a lie unto you.

15 For I have not sent them, saith the Lord, yet they prophesy a lie in my name; that I might drive you out, and that ye might perish, ye, and the prophets that prophesy unto you.

16 Also I spake to the priests and to all this people, saying, Thus saith the Lord; Hearken not to the words of your prophets that prophesy unto you, saying,

"earth, and that none could stay his hand, or say unto him, 'what doest thou.' (Notes, Ezra i. 1—4. Is. xiv. 22. Dan. iv. v.)

V. 10. To remove, &c. This would be the effect of the division of these false prophets and sorcerers, if they were attended to. Nothing but voluntary submission to Nebuchadnezzar could prevent the miseries of unsuccessful war, and the hard bondage that awaited the vanquished.

V. 12. What the prophet said here to Zedekiah hath a peculiar weight in it; because he was made king by Nebuchadnezzar, and took an oath of being faithful to him. (Ex. xvii. 15—18.) (Lorp.)

V. 13—15. (Marg. Ref.) It is here intimated, that the people were about to be left to be deceived by the false prophets, that they might fall into deserved calamities: as Ahab had been deceived to his ruin by a lying spirit in the mouth of all his prophets.

V. 16. Vessels. Which were taken when Jehoniah was led captive to Babylon. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 22. And there they shall be, until the time of their restoration by Cyrus, whom I will stir up to be gracious to my people. (Bp. Hall.)

"Behold, the vessels of the Lord's house shall now shortly be brought again from Babylon: for they prophesy a lie unto you.

17 Hearken not unto them; serve the king of Babylon, and live: wherefore should this city be laid waste?

18 But if they be prophets, and if the word of the Lord be with them, let them now make intercession to the Lord of hosts, that the vessels which are left in the house of the Lord, and in the house of the king of Judah, and at Jerusalem, go not to Babylon.

19 For thus saith the Lord of hosts, concerning the pillars, and concerning the sea, and concerning the bases, and concerning the residue of the vessels that remain in this city,

20 Which Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon took not; when he carried away captive Jeconiah, the son of Jehoiakim king of Judah, from Jerusalem to Babylon, and all the nobles of Judah and Jerusalem;

21 Yea, thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, concerning the vessels that remain in the house of the Lord, and in the house of the king of Judah, and of Jerusalem;

22 They shall be carried to Babylon, and there shall they be until the day that I visit them, saith the Lord; then will I bring them up, and restore them to this place.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Ministers should always take the lead in every kind of self denial or self-abasement, which they inculcate on others; and they will be supported under every hardship, which they meet with in the path of duty. Opposition to the growing power and despotic rule of earthly conquerors and tyrants, should always be conducted in submission to the authority of God, and with every means of obtaining his peace and favour: for the most powerful confederacies will be broken, that are cemented by impiety and rebellion against him. The whole earth is the property, as well as the work of its omnipotent Creator; and he giveth it to whomsoever it seemeth meet to him: but the character of those who have had the largest share of its power and riches allotted to them, teaches us how very worthless he deems such acquisitions, compared with spiritual blessings. The Lord does not now expressly inform us, whom he hath appointed to rule the nations; and therefore the efforts of men to defend their liberties from usurpers or invaders, are not indiscriminately to be condemned. But when his will is made known by the event, it behoves
Chapter XXVIII.

Hananiah confidently predicts the speedy ruin of Babylon, and the return of the sacred vessels and the captive Jews, 1—4. Jeremiah desires that it may prove true, but appeals to the event, 6—9. Hananiah breaks the yoke from Jeremiah's neck, who is sent with yokes of iron to confirm his former prophecies, 10—14. He foretels Hananiah's death, which takes place accordingly, 15—17.

And it came to pass the same year, * in the beginning of the reign of Zedekiah, king of Judah, in the fourth year, and in the fifth month, that b Hananiah, the son of Azur, e the prophet, which was of Gibeon, spake unto me in the presence of the Lord, in the presence of the priests, and of all the people, saying,

2 Thus speaketh the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, saying, "I have broken the yoke of the king of Babylon.

us in our private capacity to consider "the powers that be" as ordained of God," and to submit to them according to the laws and constitution of our country; without respect to their characters or conduct, for which they must render an account to their own Master. As every comfort or calamity is at the disposal of God; it must in all cases be our interest to obey his will, by what means soever it is made known: and they who will not believe this, will be convinced of it by the event, and of the fallacy of all the reasonings and devices, by which they were encouraged to seek happiness in following their own inclinations. But if all men are bound to obey God, as far as they are able in any way to discover his will, how inexcusable are they, who live at the fountain-head of instruction, and have repeated warnings, exhortations, and encouragements sent to them, and yet persist in their rebellion? They may be said to be in love with death, and bent on their own destruction: and those who encourage them to impurity, by contradicting God's word and speaking lies in his name, are more criminal than the diviners and sorcerers of the Gentiles, and will be answerable for the souls which perish by their means. But time-servers, who accommodate their instructions to the inclinations and wishes of men, especially of those in authority, will too generally be more acceptable to the great, than the faithful ministers of Christ. Yet whilst they promise the impenitent and unbelieving increasing prosperity, they have no power or interest in heaven, by which they may avert the most dreadful calamities: and it will be too late to remedy the mischief, when the event has proved them deceivers. But if it be better to submit to those whom Providence places over us, and to live in peace and to eat the bread of honesty by labour, than to seek great things by turbulence and hazarding the loss of life or property, how good must it be to submit to Christ, "whose yoke is easy and whose burden is "light, that we may find rest to our souls!" For all, who refuse this subjection and neglect his salvation, must be finally and eternally miserable; notwithstanding all their own presumptuous hopes, and the delusions of those who confidently promise them safety in unbelief and disobedience.

Notes.

Chapter XXVIII. V. 1. "This plainly refers to the * time specified, at the beginning of the former chapter, and confirms the conjecture there made, that Jeheoaikim 'is put there, by a mistake of the copies, for Zedekiah.' (Lowth.) (Note, xxviii. 1.)

V. 2—4. This false prophet imitated the style and manner of the true prophets: but he unconditionally promised prosperity to an abandoned generation; and did not so much as exhort them to repentance or reformation; (xxiii. 14. 17.) It was just such a message as some men call pure Gospel; all encouragement, promise, and privilege, without warning, discrimination of character, exhortation, or precept.

Jeconiah. 'This was grateful news to the people, who looked upon Zedekiah only as Nebuchadnezzar's deputy!' (Lowth.) It seems by this, that Hananiah was more desirous of popular than regal favour: for his prediction could not be altogether agreeable to Zedekiah. But he evidently was a weak as well as a wicked prince, and was very generally despised.

V. 6. Amen, &c. The prophet thus expressed his fervent love to his people. He would have been glad that 3 7 Nevertheless, hear thou now this word that I speak in thine ears, and in the ears of all the people: 8 The prophets that have been before me, and before thee of old, prophesied both against many countries, and against great kingdoms, of war, and of evil, and of pestilence. 9 The prophet which prophesieth of peace, when the word of the prophet shall come to pass, then shall the prophet be known, that the LORD hath truly sent him. 10 ¶ Then Hananiah the prophet took the yoke from off the prophet Jeremiah's neck, and brake it. 11 And Hananiah spake in the presence of all the people, saying, Thus saith the LORD; Even so will I break the yoke of Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon from the neck of all nations, within the space of two full years. And the prophet Jeremiah went his way. 12 Then the word of the LORD came unto Jeremiah the prophet, after that Hananiah the prophet had broken the yoke from off the neck of the prophet Jeremiah, saying, 13 Go and tell Hananiah, saying, Thus saith the LORD; Thou hast broken the yokes of wood, but thou shalt make for them yokes of iron. 14 For thus saith the LORD of hosts, the God of Israel, I have put a yoke of iron upon the neck of all these nations, that they may serve Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, and they shall serve him: and I have given him the beasts of the field also. 15 Then said the prophet Jeremiah unto Hananiah the prophet, Hear now, Hananiah; Thus saith the LORD; Behold, I will cast thee from off the face of the earth this year thou shalt die, because thou hast taught rebellion against the LORD. 16 So Hananiah the prophet died the same year, in the seventh month.

V. 11. As the prophet had no message to deliver on this occasion, he would not enter into any further altercation with so violent a man; but waited till God directed him what to say and do.

V. 13. Yokes of iron would be more galling, as well as stronger, than yokes of wood; which implied that every effort of the nations, to resist the power of Nebuchadnezzar, would render their bondage more rigorous: as Hananiah's prophecies tended to encourage this unwavering resistance, it is said that he would make them yokes of iron.

V. 16. (xxvii. 12–22.) Hananiah's false prophecy not only encouraged the people in wickedness, but in refusing submission to the Chaldeans, which God expressly commanded.

V. 17. 'Seeing this thing was evident in the eyes of the people, and yet they returned not to the LORD; it is manifest, that miracles cannot move us, neither the word itself, except God touch the heart.'

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

No true prophet ever delivered his message with greater confidence, than false prophets have expressed when speaking lies in the name of God: and yet some well meaning people are apt to regard men the more for being positive, as if it were an evidence of their being in the right. But that which renders false teachers acceptable to multitudes, evidently distinguishes them from the faithful servants of God: namely, the coincidence of their doctrine with the pride and self-flattery of the human heart; and its tendency to encourage impudent sinners with the hopes of impu-
CHAP. XXIX.

Jeremiah, by letter, requires the captives at Babylon to accommodate themselves to their condition; and not to believe the false prophets, who promised them a speedy deliverance, 1—9. He promises them a gracious restoration at the end of seventy years, 10—14. He foretells the destruction of those who remained at Jerusalem, 15—19; and shows the dreadful end of two false prophets at Babylon, 20—23. She- mahiah, writes a letter from Babylon against Jeremiah, 24—29. His doom is foretold, 30—32.

NOW these are the words of the letter that Jeremiah the prophet sent from Jerusalem unto the residue of the elders which were carried away captives, and to the priests, and to the prophets, and to all the people, whom Nebuchadnezzar had carried away captive from Jerusalem to Babylon.

2 (After that Jeconiah the king, and the queen, and the eunuchs, the princes of Judah and Jerusalem, and the carpenters, and the smiths, were departed from Jerusalem,)

3 By the hand of Eliasah the son of Shaphan, and Gemariah the son of Hilkiiah, (whom Zedekiah king of Judah sent unto Babylon to Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon,) saying,

4 Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, unto all that are carried away captives, whom I have caused to be carried away from Jerusalem unto Babylon;

5 Build ye houses, and dwell in them; and plant gardens, and eat the fruit of them;

6 Take ye wives, and beget sons and daughters; and take wives for your sons, and give your daughters to your husbands, that they may bear sons and daughters; that ye may be increased there, and not diminished.

7 And seek the peace of the city whither I have caused you to be carried away captive; and pray unto the Lord for it: for in the peace thereof shall ye have peace.

CHAP. XXIX. V. 1. Residue. Many of the elders, and others might die, by the hardships which they suffered on the road; or be cut off by the conquerors.

—Prophecy. It does not appear that there was any true prophet at Babylon, when this letter was sent; except Ezekiel, and Daniel, who was newly entered on the prophetic office. But there were several, who were accounted prophets, and who had great influence over the people; and therefore the letter was addressed to them, along with the elders and priests. The Septuagint read it, false prophets, but they would hardly, in that character, have been thus addressed; especially as the letter was particularly intended to warn the people against the false prophets.

V. 2. Queen Jeconiah's mother. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 3. These persons seem to have been sent by Zedekiah, to ratify some treaty with Nebuchadnezzar, or to make some submissions to him.

V. 4—7. The vain expectation of a speedy return to their own land, which the false prophets excited in the Jews at Babylon, led them to neglect their own interests and comfort, and the good of the nation; and tended to betray them into measures that would excite the jealousy of ungodly men to escape the wrath, or frustrate the purpose of God, will rivet their fetters and increase their misery; and they, who encourage them in such rebellious efforts, by causing them to trust in a lie, must expect the first, or the largest, portion of divine vengeance.

NOTES.
8 For thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, 'Let not your prophets and your diviners, that be in the midst of you, deceive you, neither hearken ye to the dreams which ye cause to be dreamed.
9 For they prophesy * falsely unto you in my name: I have not sent them, saith the Lord.

10 For thus saith the Lord, That after seventy years be accomplished, at Babylon, I will visit you, and perform all my good word toward you, in causing you to return to this place.

11 For I know the thoughts that I think towards you, saith the Lord, thoughts of peace, and not of evil, to give you an † expected end.

12 Then shall ye call upon me, and ye shall go and pray unto me, and I will hearken unto you.

13 And ye shall seek me, and find me, when ye shall search for me with all your heart.

14 And I will be found of you, saith the Lord; * and I will turn away your captivity, and I will gather you from all the nations, and from all the places whither I have driven you, saith the Lord; and I will bring you again into the place whence I caused you to be carried away captive.

15 † Because ye have said, * The Lord hath raised us up prophets in Babylon, of the victors, and increase their own miseries. But the prophet, in the name of God, directed them to consider Babylon as their bone, and to take the best care they could of themselves, their families, and the nation; to use their influence and endeavours to promote the public peace; and to pray for the welfare of the city, as the way to obtain peace to themselves. These directions tended to render them patient and contented, industrious and useful, and as comfortable as their situation would admit of. This deportment, and their constant prayers in all their religious assemblies, for the welfare of the community, would tend to conciliate the rulers. Most of them must end their lives at Babylon, and share the calamities and many of the advantages of that city, all their days; and their posterity must do the same, till the expiration of the appointed period. It was therefore both reasonable and prudent to pray, that there might be peace in that place where the Lord had assigned them their habitations: and as far as they believed his word they would do it. The Lord had caused them to be carried captive, or all the power of the Chaldeans could not have effectuated it: and his will ought to be submitted to in this dispensation. (20.) * It is the duty of all private persons to submit to the government that protects them, and to pray for the prosperity of it. And if they are persecutors, or enemies to the truth, they are to leave it to God to execute on them the judgments he has denounced against tyrants and oppressors; which threatens the Jews expected God would execute upon Babylon in due time. (Ps. cxxvii. 8, 9.) (Lomfth.) — To pray for the peace of a city or country, and for the health or eternal salvation of the rulers, is very different from wishing success to their ambitious, rapacious, or sanguinary undertakings; though this distinction is not always kept. May not the surprising change, which took place in the character of Nebuchadnezzar, (Notes, Dan. iv.) be considered as an answer to the prayers of the pious Jews for him; as the conversion of Saul was to the prayers of the Christians for their persecutors? And may not even they, who live under the most oppressive persecutors, take an encouraging hint from this consideration, as to their duty in such circumstances?

V. 8. Cause, &c. By the encouragement which the Jews gave to those who promised them speedy deliverance, they, as it were, bespoke these dreams; and unprincipled men would be sure to furnish such prophecies as they found acceptable to the people.

V. 10. (Notes, 2 Chr. xxvi. 21. Ezra i. 1, vi. 6—15. Dan. ix. 1. Zech. i. 12, 13.) * But few, in comparison of these, returned in person into their own country: so this promise was chiefly fulfilled to their posterity: and it is common in Scripture to speak of blessings bestowed † upon the children, as if they had actually been made good to their progenitors. (Lomfth.)

V. 11—14. The Lord had his plan before him, and neither the impatience of the Jews, nor the power of the Chaldeans could alter it. He had determined, that the Chaldean monarchy should continue till the seventy years expired; and so long the Jews must remain in captivity. But he had thoughts of peace and not of evil to those who were already at Babylon: (Notes, xxiv.) Their calamities were intended for their good, and he would pour upon them the Spirit of grace and supplication, and lead them to fervent prayer, and great earnestness, by every means to seek his favour; and they would do it with their whole heart, and succeed, and then their captivity would be terminated. By consulting the marginal references, the reader will see, that the termination of the judgments brought on the nation by their sins, in answer to their penitent fervent prayers, had been foretold by Moses and the prophets; and the same is foretold by Zecchariah, as the introduction to the restoration of the Jews from their present dispersions, (which some think to be here predicted, as well as their return from Babylon.) (Note, Zech. xii. 10—14.)

V. 15. * As Ahab, Zedekiah, and Shemaijah.' (31. 25.)
CHAPTER XXIX.

16 Know that thus saith the Lord, of the king that sitteth upon the throne of David, and of all the people that dwell in this city, and of your brethren that are not gone forth with you into captivity; * 17 Thus saith the Lord of hosts; Behold, I will send upon them the sword, the famine, and the pestilence, and will make them like vile figs, that cannot be eaten, they are so evil. 18 And I will persecute them with the sword, with the famine, and with the pestilence, and will deliver them to be removed to all the kingdoms of the earth, * to be a curse, and an astonishment, and an hissing, and a reproach, among all the nations, whither I have driven them: 19 Because they have hearkened not to my words, saith the Lord, which I sent unto them by my servants the prophets, rising up early and rendering them; but ye would not hear, saith the Lord. 20 Hear ye therefore the word of the Lord, all ye of the captivity, * whom I have sent from Jerusalem to Babylon. 21 Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, of Ahab the son of Koliah, and of Zedekiah the son of Maaseiah, * which prophesy a lie unto you in my name; Behold, I will deliver them into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon; and he shall slay them before your eyes; 22 And of them * shall be taken up a curse: by all the captivity of Judah which are in Babylon, saying, The Lord maketh thee like Zedekiah and like Ahab, whom the king of Babylon roasted in the fire; 23 Because they have committed villany in Israel, and * have committed adultery with their neighbours' wives, and have spoken lying words in my name, which I have not commanded them; * even I know, and am a witness, saith the Lord. 24 ¶ Thus shalt thou also speak to Shemaijah the * Nehelamite, saying, 25 Thus speaketh the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, saying, * Because thou hast sent letters in thy name unto all the people that are at Jerusalem, and to Zephaniah the son of Maaseiah the priest, and to all the priests, saying, 26 The Lord hath made thee priest in the stead of Jehoiada the priest, that ye should be * officers in the house of the Lord, * for every man that is mad, * and maketh himself a prophet, * that thou shouldst put him in prison, and in the stocks. 27 Now therefore why hast thou not reproved Jeremiah of Anathoth, * which maketh himself a prophet to you? 28 For therefore he sent unto us in Babylon, saying, * This captivity is long; build ye houses, and dwell in them; and plant gardens, and eat the fruit of them. 29 And * Zephaniah the priest read * it is letter in the ears of Jeremiah the prophet. 30 Then came the word of the Lord unto Jeremiah, saying, 3 Send to all them of the captivity, saying, Thus saith the Lord concerning Shemaijah the Nehelamite; * Because that Shemaijah hath prophesied unto you, and I sent him not, and he caused you to trust in a lie; 32 Therefore thus saith the Lord; Behold, * I will punish Shemaijah the Nehelamite, and his seed: * he shall not have a man to dwell among this people; neither shall he * behold the good that I will do for my people, saith the Lord;
because he hath taught rebellion against the Lord.

Prophecies of the restoration of the Jews, and the rebuilding of their city and temple; notwithstanding their extreme calamities, the justice of their punishment, the failure of all human help, and their own desponding thoughts, 1—18: of their subsequent increase and prosperity under their own rulers; and of the destruction of their enemies and the wicked, 19—24.

V. 24—32. Shemaiah seems to have written back by Zedekiah's messengers. The word Nehelamite signifies a dreamer. Jeremiah had been a prophet for a long course of years; so that even the captivity of Jeconiah and the Jews had been repeatedly and expressly predicted by him; yet Shemaiah, (pretending to be a prophet) thought himself authorized to treat him with the most decided contempt: and by a circular letter, in his own name, and not in that of the elders of the people, and directed to the priests and people at Jerusalem, he exhorted them to silence and punish him! His letter was particularly addressed to Zephaniah, who had succeeded Jehoiada, in superintending the affairs of the temple. Zephaniah is elsewhere called "the second priest," under Seraiah the high priest, (li. 24.) who, some think, was also called Jehoiada. Shemaiah thought that Zephaniah neglected his duty, in not calling Jeremiah to a severe account for his predictions, which seemed to him one great end of his advancement. Jeremiah had long been owned of God, as his appointed prophet, and Shemaiah ran without being sent; yet he charged Jeremiah with making himself a prophet, probably because the chief priests generally opposed him. And though his predictions coincided with the whole tenor of their Scriptures, yet he wanted to have him confined as a mad man, and severely punished; because he would not flatter his wicked countrymen with the hopes of prosperity! Zephaniah seems not to have regarded the letter, and perhaps was favourably disposed to Jeremiah; (xxi. 1.) But the Lord ordered his prophet to denounce the doom of Shemaiah and of his family: and doubtless he took the first opportunity of transmitting the sentence to him. "He and his seed shall be destroyed, so that none of them shall see the benefit of this deliverance."

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.
V. 1—14.

The zealous servant of God considers himself as bound to use every means in his power to profit those who are afar off, as well as those that are near. Writing is peculiarly profitable in this respect; and it is rendered immensely more beneficial by the invention of printing, in circulating the knowledge of the word of God. Also, that these useful discoveries should be so generally abused to contrary purposes! Submission to Providence is always our duty and interest; and it is as foolish as it is ungrateful to undervalue and reject the comforts within our reach, by repining for the want of those which we cannot obtain. The interests of the Church, or of posterity, should by no means be neglected, because we may not live to witness or share them. Wherever our lot is cast, we ought to approve ourselves peaceable members of the community, even though subjected to hardship and oppression: considering our situation and its disadvantages as the appointment of God; and assured that good behaviour will render it more tolerable than turbulence and faction; it is our duty to pray for the peace of the country in which we reside, and the welfare of those rulers who afford us any measure of protection: and if this was the duty of the Jews at Babylon, and of the Christians under Nero, it must be that of all the people of God in every age and place. Christians should therefore exceedingly fear being seduced into foolish measures, which are contrary to Scripture and disgraceful to the Gospel. And as no pre-eminences are given us of those great revolutions, by which power passes from one to another; and which are generally effected by those in public situations, or by popular assemblies; it behoves us in our private stations to study to be quiet, and to mind our own business. The promises of God will certainly be performed in their appointed season; but that must be waited for, in the use of authorized means alone. We know not what the thoughts of God are, respecting our personal concerns, and he hath put the times and seasons in his own power; but it should suffice us to know, in general, that he hath thoughts of good, and not of evil, towards his Church, which shall at length have an expected end of its long continued oppression; and that all things shall work together for the believer's good till his trials are ended, and his most enlarged hopes are vastly exceeded in the rest and felicity of heaven. In general, we are assured that all who seek the Lord, and call upon him, and search for him with their whole hearts, shall find him, and be made joyful in his salvation: and that the Lord introduces great revivals of religion, by exciting his people to fervent prayers and supplications. Thus they go forth to meet him, when he comes to perform his promises: and thus let us seek for that prevalence of the Gospel, which he hath taught us to expect.

V. 15—32.

Let all beware how they call those teachers, "whom they heap to themselves after their own lusts," "prophets whom the Lord has raised up unto them; or those dreams, which they cause to be dreamed coincident with their inclinations, revelations from God. The mistake is often fatal: and the teacher and his message should be carefully compared with the Scriptures, and the nature, tendency, and effects of them, well weighed. The Lord is immovable in his purposes and will surely be true to his word, both in punishing impenitent sinners, and in saving all who obey his Gospel: and it is vain to attempt new modeling religion, by leaving out alarming and offensive truths, in order to render it more palatable to the vitiated minds of sinners. In this way men deceive themselves, and are
CHAPTER XXX.

6 Ask ye now, and see, whether + a man doth travail with child? wherefore do I see + every man with his hands on his loins, as a woman in travail, and all faces are turned into + paleness?

7 Alas! for that day is great, + so that none is like it: + it is even the time of Jacob's trouble; + but he shall be saved out of it.

8 For it shall come to pass in that day, saith the Lord of hosts, that + I will break his yoke from off thy neck, and will burst thy bonds, and strangers shall no more serve themselves of him:

9 But they shall serve the Lord their God, and David their king, whom I will raise up unto them.

...are called madness and enthusiasm, by numbers who scarcely ever looked into the word of God! They who are thus invertebrate against the truth, and those who preach it, will not behold the good that the Lord will do unto his people; but will be punished according as they have taught rebellion against him.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXX. V. 2, 3. This and some of the following chapters contain predictions as encouraging as the preceding chapters were alarming. The prophet was ordered to write in a book, for the use of posterity, all "the words that the Lord had spoken to him." This seems to refer to the whole of his prophecies, and not to this particular message; and it is supposed that an abstract of all his predictions has been transmitted to us. JEHOVAH intended to restore the Jews to their own land, and to continue his worship among them: and the whole of Jeremiah's predictions would be of great use to them. As his contemporaries had almost universally neglected his warnings and exhortations, the prophet might be tempted to conclude that his labours were in vain: but this was by no means the case; for his writings would convince, lead to repentance, and encourage the Jews, during their captivity; at the approach of their deliverance, they would direct their measures, and put energy into their prayers; and after that event, they would tend to establish successive generations in the worship of God, who had predicted and effectually all these surprising events: they would excite their praises to him for performing his promises, warn them against idolatry and iniquity, and animate them to obedience. Nay, this weeping prophet (who seems a peculiar instance of one every way fitted for usefulness, labouring for years with very little visible success,) has been made abundantly useful to the Church of God, for above two thousand years already, and will continue to be so to the end of the world.

Israel and Judah. Several prophecies foretold the restoration both of Israel and Judah, and their reunion after their restoration. (Lomth.) (Marg. Ref.)
10 Therefore fear thou not, O my servant Jacob, saith the Lord; neither be dismayed, O Israel: for, lo, I will have thee from afar, and thy seed from the land of their captivity; and Jacob shall return, and shall be in rest, and be quiet, and none shall make him afraid.

11 For I am with thee, saith the Lord, to save thee; though I make a full end of all nations whither I have scattered thee, yet will I not make a full end of thee: but I will correct thee in measure, and will not leave thee altogether unpunished.

12 For thus saith the Lord, Thy bruise is incurable, and thy wound is grievous.

13 There is none to plead thy cause, that thou mayest be bound up: thou hast no healing medicines.

14 All thy lovers have forgotten thee; they seek thee not, for I have wounded thee with the wound of an enemy, with the chastisement of a cruel one, for the multitude of thine iniquity; because thy sins were increased.

15 Why criest thou for thine affliction? there is none to plead thy cause, because thy sins were increased, I have done these things unto thee.

16 Therefore all they that devour thee shall be devoured; and all thine adversaries, every one of them, shall go into captivity; and they that spoil thee shall be a spoil, and all that prey upon thee will I give for a prey.

17 For I will restore health unto thee, and I will heal thee of thy wounds, saith the Lord; because they called thee an Outcast, saying, This is Zion, whom no man seeketh after.

18 Thus saith the Lord; Behold, I will bring again the captivity of Jacob's tents, and have mercy on his dwelling-places; and the city shall be built upon her own heap, and the palace shall remain after the manner thereof.
19 And * out of them shall proceed thanksgiving, and the voice of them that make merry: * and I will multiply them, and they shall not be few; * 7 I will also glorify them, and they shall not be small.

20 Their * children also shall be as of aforetime, and their congregation shall be established before me, * and I will punish all that oppress them.

21 And * their nobles shall be of themselves, and their Governor shall proceed from the midst of them; * and I will increase the number of them, * and set them in their own land, and they shall possess it.

22 And they shall be mine people, and I will be your God.

23 Behold, * the whirlwind of the Lord goeth forth with fury, a * continuation of the whirlwind: it shall * fall with pain upon the head of the wicked.

24 The * fierce anger of the Lord shall not return, until he have done it, * and until he have performed the intents of his heart: * in the latter days ye shall consider it.

ing their Church and state, or even of rendering their bondage more gentle. All the nations, whose alliance they had courted, whose idolatries they had copied, and who professed great love to them, had forgotten them, and desired no further acquaintance with them. Jeovahan himself seemed to fight against them as an enemy: his chastisement was very severe, and like that of a cruel one; for he had been provoked to it by their multiplied iniquities. It was therefore in vain for them to lament their miseries, or complain of hard usage: their sorrow was incurable by any other hand than that which had inflicted it; and in order to obtain that, they must submit to him, and acknowledge his justice in their punishment. Never theless, though they suffered justly, and could not help themselves, yet he intended to appear for them, and to retaliate on those who had devoured them and carried them captive; he would bind up and heal the wounds, of which the nation lay as it were expiring: and because the heathen insulted over the Jews as outcasts, and Zion as deserted and disregarded, he promised, in mercy to the people, to cause their habitations throughout the land to be re-built, as well as the city, upon its old foundation, which during the captivity was a heap of ruins; and that the temple should be restored, and remain, after the ancient manner, the centre of their worship, and the place of their solemn fasts and sacrifices.

V. 19–22. After the captivity the Jews should have abundant cause for joy and thanksgiving: for the Lord promised that he would exceedingly multiply and prosper them: their posterity should be taken care of, as the children of the covenant, in the same manner as they had been in former ages; the whole nation should be established as his congregation; and their oppressors should be severely punished. They would also be governed by magistrates of their own nation, and of the Gentiles, as during the captivity; and that their chief governor would be raised up from among themselves: the Lord would cause him to draw near unto him, to inquire his will, and present his appointed worship; for who, except thus taught, and drawn of God, had ever engaged his heart to approach unto the Lord? Thus they would become the Lord's people, and he would again be known as their God.—

This prophecy was accomplished in some measure by the increase and prosperity of the Jews in their own land, under the government of several rulers of their own nation, who for a long time were the high priests, that by office drew near before God, even into the most holy place, as the typical intercessors for the people whom they governed. Yet the Jews were seldom, if ever, free from dependence on strangers, and were frequently oppressed by them after the captivity; and many of their rulers were far from meriting the character here given. But when Christ arose, and was advanced to the mediatorial throne, as High Priest and King in one person, and in this character drew near before God, in behalf of his people, having engaged his heart to pass through all his previous sufferings as their all-stoning sacrifice, this prediction had its full accomplishment. And who is this, that engages his heart and life to take so arduous a service? Who is this, that ventures to intercede for sinners before a just and holy God? Is he not the Son of God and the Lord of glory, in whom the Father is well pleased, and whom all the angels of God worship? And, through him, all that believe become the people of God, and he becomes their Portion and Salvation.

Nobles. * The Hebrew word is singular, and literally signifies their mighty One; a title given to God himself.

They shall no more be governed by strangers, but shall have a ruler of their own nation; such was Zerubbabel, a figure of Christ. He shall have a near attendance on me: for I will make him a Priest as well as a King, according to the prophecy concerning the Messias, Thou art a Priest for ever, after the order of Melchizedek.— For who is there but the Messias, that is so entirely devoted to my service?—The words have an emphasis in the original, that cannot be translated, and are spoken by way of admiration.—(Lowth.)—Let it be remembered, that Zerubbabel was neither priest nor king, though ruler of the Jews under the kings of Persia.

V. 23, 24. (Note. xxiii. 19, 20.) These verses may be understood of those enemies of the Jews who attempted to hinder their return to their own land; or who afterward molested or oppressed them: in this sense, they were fulfilled in the subversion of the Babylonish empire; and in the slaughter of those who sought the destruction of the Jews in the days of Esther and Mordecai: and afterwards... in the ruin of Antiochus Epiphanes, and those who concurred in his cruel persecutions. But if we explain the preceding verses of Christ and his kingdom, these, most naturally and consistently with the context, refer to the unbelieving Jews themselves, and to the terrible ruin that came on them, for wickedly rejecting and crucifying Christ, and opposing the setting up of his kingdom. These judgments came from the fierce anger of the Lord, and the effects of them continue to this day: and in the latter days the Jewish nation will consider the rejection of that Governor, that proceeded from themselves, as the cause of all their miseries.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.
V. 1—18.

The discoveries which God hath made of his truth and will, have been carefully registered and preserved, for the benefit of future generations: and he speaks to us by the writings of his ancient servants, as plainly as he did to their contemporaries by their mouths: let us then value, and study with humble diligence and obedient faith, these sacred records. They who simply serve God, and are zealous for his glory, will in one way or other be useful to their fellow sinners: some of his ministers are most useful during their lives by their preaching; and others speak most effectually after their death by their writings: but "as every man hath received the gift, so let him minister," "as a good steward of the manifold grace of God:" and "let us not be weary in well doing; for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not." Sin leads to terror and dismay: they who will not tremble at the word of God, must tremble at his judgments: obstinate transgressors will hear a voice of terror, and not of peace: and if temporal calamities dismay and distress the stoutest and most inrepid, what will be the wrath to come? Afflictions in this world often prove the means of good, and are never entirely without hope; but future punishment will be unmingled hopeless misery. Deep convictions of sin and terrors of conscience, attended with some temptations and afflictions, often cause a time of trouble so great, that the awakened sinner has never before known any thing like it: but it proves a happy crisis, when attended with "that godly sorrow which worketh repentance unto salvation not to be repented of;" and in due time he shall be saved out of it. For our gracious God will pardon his sins, speak peace to his conscience, and break off the yoke of sin and Satan; that, "being delivered from all his enemies, he may serve him without fear, in righteousness and true holiness before him," all the remnant of his days, as the redeemed subject of Christ our King, whom the Father hath raised up unto us. The believer also may have days of great affliction and temptations, and even of terror and dismay; but he shall be saved from them all: and even death, which is such a time of trouble as can but once be experienced, will be to him a season of complete deliverance, and an introduction to "the joy of his Lord." Let then none who serve God fear or be dismayed on his own account, or on that of the Church; for victory and triumph await them. Believers shall be gathered from afar, and return from all their dispersions; and faith, with submission to God, will give them rest and quietness here on earth, and none shall durably make them afraid. He will be with them to save them; though he correct them, it shall be in measure, and for their good, and he will not make full end of them, as of the wicked around them. Yet the wounds and bruises which he sometimes inflict, seem very grievous, and are incurable by any hand but his. Every effort to heal ourselves must needs prove fruitless: for we have none to plead our cause, that we may be bound up, nor any healing medicines, whilst we neglect the heavenly Advocate and the sanctifying Spirit. All earthly comforts and comforters will soon fail us. When we consider the number and heinousness of our sins, we may be ready to consider God himself as our irreconcilable enemy, and every chastisement as the wound of a cruel one; and so long as we only repine at our affliction, our sorrows remain incurable. But when we are thus driven from every false refuge, and led to acknowledge that God is just in all he inflicts or threatens, the alarming and painful discovery is a preparation for peace and comfort. Thus we are brought to submit to his righteousness and accept of his mercy. Then he rebukes our enemies, and rescues us from the jaws of the devourer: he binds up the broken heart, and cures the sin-distempered soul; and he will complete the salvation that hath been so happily begun. The dealings of his grace, with every true convert and every returning backslider, are exactly the same, upon a smaller scale, as his dealings with the Jews. And in the same manner he corrects, humbles, pardons, heals, and restores offending Churches from age to age: for the Redeemer of Israel is "the same yesterday, to-day, and for ever."

V. 19—24.

Our God will certainly comfort all those who penitently turn unto him: he will give them abundant blessings and a thankful heart: and when he increases and glorifies his Church, all, who sympathized in its sorrows and prayed for its prosperity, will rejoice and be thankful. It is a great mercy to nations to be ruled by prudent princes and magistrates, who are "of them that serve," and have their welfare at heart; but still more Chapter XXXI.

Then saith the Lord, 'will I be the God of all the families of Israel, and they shall be my people.'

2 Thus saith the Lord, 'The people which were left of the sword found grace in the wilderness; even Israel, whom I went to cause him to rest.

3 The Lord hath appeared ° of old unto me, saying, Yea, ° I have loved thee ° with an everlasting love: ° there-fore ° with loving-kindness have I drawn ° thee.

4 Again I will ° build thee, and thou shalt be built, ° O virgin of Israel: ° thou shalt again be adorned with thy tabrets, and shalt go forth in the dances of them that make merry.

5 Thou shalt ° yet plant vines upon ° the mountains of Samaria: the planters shall plant, and shalt ° eat them as common things.

watchmen upon the mount Ephraim shall cry, 'Arise ye, and let us go up to Zion unto the Lord our God.'

7 For thus saith the Lord; 'Sing with gladness for Jacob, and shout among the chief of the nations: publish ye, praise ye, and say, 'O Lord, save thy people, the remnant of Israel.'

8 Behold, I will bring them from the north country, and gather them from the coasts of the earth, and with them the blind and the lame, the woman with child and her that travailleth with child together: a great company shall return there to.

9 They shall come with weeping, and with supplications will I lead them: I will cause them to walk by the rivers of waters, in a straight way, wherein they shall not stumble: for I am a Father to Israel, and Ephraim is my firstborn.

10 Hear the word of the Lord, O ye children of Israel: for he is a merciful God, and a forgiving Lord, slow to anger, and of great kindness, and of mighty salvation.

11 And say ye, 'Vulg: In v. 11, it is: 'And the Lord will revive the people of Jerusalem, and the people of those places.' '

V. 8, 17. The Jews and Ephraim, or the ten tribes, are here represented as in possession of their own land; and all their former jealousies and divisions are ceased; so that the watchmen, the teachers or prophets of Ephraim, excite the people to resort to mount Zion to worship. This may refer to the union of different nations in the Church of Christ, and their harmonious worship and community in the privileges and ordinances of the Gospel. This is further intimated, when among the chief of the nations men are called on to rejoice, and praise God for his goodness to Jacob, and to mingle prayers with their praises for the salvation of the remnant of Israel. The most powerful, renowned, and civilized nations at this day, professing Christianity, praising God for his mercies to his ancient people, and praying for the conversion and salvation of the Jews, form a striking accomplishment of this prophecy. But the re-establishment of Judah and Israel in their own land seems to be also foretold.

V. 8, 9. In answer to these prayers, or to excite these praises, the Lord here promises to bring Israel from the utmost coasts of the earth, without excluding the blind, the lame, the woman with child, or even her that travaileth with child: however feeble or unable they were of themselves, or however distressed in their circumstances or burdened in spirit, under the protection and tender care of God, and willingly assisting each other, they would return in a great company to Zion. Mourning for their sins, weeping even for joy, and praying for themselves and for each other; the Lord being their Guide, they would walk by the rivers of waters, every obstacle being removed, and their way made plain before them: for God would avenge himself the Father of all Israel; and even Ephraim, who seemed quite cast off, should inherit as his first-born.

—The return of a few Israelites with the Jews, after the captivity, cannot come up to the full meaning of these predictions; nor can any other gathering of Israel to their own land. They seem figuratively to describe the conversion of sinners to Christ; their helpless condition in themselves; the burdens and distresses under which they labour; the repentance and prayer with which they come; the comforts and assistance which they derive from their tender Guide and Shepherd; the plain and safe way in which they are led; and their adoption as children and heirs of the Lord almighty. But there is abundant reason to conclude, that they also predict a future gathering of the Israelites to Christ, from all the quarters of the globe. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 10—14. The same subject is here enlarged on. Let all the distant nations hear that Jehovah, who scattered Israel, would gather them again into his Church, as a shepherd doth his flock into his fold. By breaking the power of the Assyrians and Chaldeans, he redeemed Jacob from enemies stronger than he; by breaking the yoke of Satan, he redeems the true Israel from this potent enemy; and by crushing the power of antichrist, he will deliver his Church, and make way for the conversion of both Jews and Gentiles. The return of the Jews to mount Zion with songs of praise, and their flowing together to enjoy the goodness of the Lord, and to thank him for their plenty and prosperity; with the revival of religion, and 15 Thus saith the Lord; 'A voice was heard in Ramah, lamentation, and bitter weeping; Rachel weeping for her children,' refused to be comforted for her children, 'because they were not.

16 Thus saith the Lord; 'Refrain thy voice from weeping, and thine eyes from tears; 'for thy work shall be rewarded, saith the Lord; 'and they shall come again from the land of the enemy.

17 And there is hope in thine end, saith the Lord, that thy children shall come again to their own border.

18 If I have surely heard, saith the Lord, Ephraim bemoaning himself thus; 'Thou hast chastised me, and I was chastised, 'as a bullock unaccustomed to the yoke; 'turn thou me, and I shall be turned; 'for thou art the Lord my God.

19 Surely, after that I was turned, I repented; and after that I was instructed, 'I smote upon my thigh; 'I was ashamed, yea, even confounded, because "I did bear the reproach of my youth.

20 Is Ephraim my dear son? is he a pleasant child? 'for since I spake against him, I do earnestly remember him still; 'therefore mybowels are troubled for him; 'I will surely have mercy upon him, saith the Lord.

- The holy joy which shewed itself among them, after the building of the city and temple, and was manifested in varied expressions, by all orders and ranks of the people, were emblems of the abundant holiness, privileges, and comforts, reserved for the Church in those happy times that are approaching.

V. 15—17. The original name of Rachel is exactly the same as in Genesis; though in our bibles it is generally printed Rahel. As this in some degree perplexes many readers, Rachel is substituted in the text, as well as in the notes. Rachel was mother to Joseph and Benjamin: from the former descended a large proportion of the kingdom of Israel, and from the other numbers of the inhabitants of Jerusalem. The desolations of Israel and Judah made vast havoc among her descendants. The sepulchre of Rachel was betwixt Ramah and Beth-lehem: and she is here poetically introduced as weeping for her children with bitter and inconsolable lamentation, as if her posterity had been utterly extirpated. It will hereafter be conceived in what sense the murder of the children in the coasts of Beth-lom accomplished this prediction. (Notes, Matt. ii. 17, 18.) To carry on the allusion, the Lord addresses her, and calls on her to refrain from weeping, for her labour in bringing up her children should not be lost, or be without recompense; as those that were left, and scattered among their enemies, would come again to their own land; and she might hope for great blessings for them in the latter days.

V. 19—20. All the blessings predicted to Israel, implied that he would be brought to repentance. This is here more particularly described, in the person of Ephraim, as representing the nation. The Lord heard him under his afflictions, bemoaning himself with penitent confessions and prayers. He looks back, and recollects with grief and shame, that the Lord had chastised him, and that he had suffered without deriving benefit; or at length he had received instruction, though he had long been refractory and rebellious, as headstrong bullocks, not inured to the yoke, which struggle against the driver, and will not submit. — Conscientious that this is the nature of his proud stout heart, and that it must be humbled, softened, and converted; and that he cannot effect this change by his own power; he believes that God can, hopes that he will, and prays that he would, "turn him, that he may be turned." He acknowledges, that the Lord has a right to his obedience and service, and that he stands in a peculiar relation to him, and he desires to have him for his God and portion. Some little of this gracious turning he experiences; he had begun to repent of his sins: and since he had been instructed in the things of God, he was sensible of his guilt and danger, and was full of self-indignation and abhorrence, to think how rebellious and ungrateful he had been; which astonishment and self-dispacency he expressed by smiting on his thigh. He was grieved and confounded to find that he lay under a heavy load of deserved ignorance and reproach, for the sins that he had been committing from his youth, which deserved more than all the contempt and misery that he lay under. The Lord, Ephraim, like the prodigal son, thus become to himself, and overwhelmed with sorrow and shame, speaks of himself with the tenderest affection. Could this poor distressed mourner be Ephraim, his dear son, his child in whom he had so delighted? And was he at length returned home again? Let him not be upbraided with his offences, of which he so deeply repented; but let him be re-admitted to all the privileges of a child, without limitation or delay. For ever since that the Lord denounced sentence against him, or addressed him with cutting rebukes, he had remembered him with tender compassion, and earnest longings after him; as an affectionate parent doth his son, whom he is obliged to correct. His eye was upon him through all his wanderings, waiting to be gracious; and as he was now truly penitent, and supplicated mercy, he would surely extend it to him. — Do thou turn my heart by thy preventing grace, and thus I shall be effectually reformed. As soon as God's grace touched my heart, and gave me a due sense of my duty, and the many deviations from it I had been guilty of, I straightway became a true penitent; and expressed my repentance by all the outward and inward signs of an unfeigned sorrow. — The burden of my former sins lay heavy on my mind; and I became sensible, that all the calamities and re-21 'Set thee up way-marks, make thee high heaps; set thine heart toward the high-way, even the way which thou wentest: turn again, O virgin of Israel, turn again to these thy cities.

22 'How long wilt thou go about, O thou backsliding daughter? for the Lord hath created a new thing in the earth,' A woman shall compass a man.

23 Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; As yet they shall use this speech in the land of Judah, and in the cities thereof, when I shall bring again their captivity; The Lord bless thee, O habitation of justice, and mountain of holiness.

proaches I had undergone were the due desert of mine offences.' (Lomth.) — This is a most instructive and encouraging representation of the nature and effects of true repentance; and its prophetic meaning may either relate to the conversion of Israelites to Christianity in the primitive times, or to events yet in futurity.

V. 21, 22. The dispersed Jews and Israelites are here called on to return without delay to their deserts cities, and to set up way-marks, or to throw up heaps to direct inquirers in the road. Let them heartily attempt to go back to their own land, by the way in which they had once for all, and no longer wander about as they had done; like a woman who had improperly left her father's house, and was afraid or ashamed, or reluctant to return. To encourage them to this, the Lord assures them, that if they had created, or would create, a new thing in the earth, it would be a new thing, altogether unprecedented, and worthy to be called a creation; for 'A woman should compass a man,' or a Mighty one, a great Deliverer. Now what can this more properly mean, than a virgin, continuing so, should conceive and compass in her womb, and bear a son, who would be 'that Seed of the woman,' who was appointed to bruise the serpent's head; even Emmanuel, God with us? This was accomplished by the immediate power of God, contrary to the established course of nature: it was a new thing, both as to his miraculous conception and his mysterious person: and it was adduced with great propriety for the encouragement of the Jews to return to that land, where this promised Deliverer was to arise. — As it is a new thing, and unheard of, that a woman should court a man; so God will bring as strange a thing to pass, that the Jewish nation shall return to God, their Husband. So most of the modern Jews, and some of the Christian expositors, understand the words: A woman, that is, the most feeble desppicable persons, compared elsewhere to women, should discomfit a mighty warrior. (Lomth.) There are the most plausible interpretations given of the passage, by those who reject that which is stated above. But the narrative of Poliphil's wife, and that of Jael and Sisera, and very many others, suffice to show, that neither of these were new things on earth: and surely the solemnity of the introduction, and the term create, appear on either interpretation, to have little propriety or meaning. 'One that is only a woman, and not a wife, namely, a virgin, shall conceive in her womb a man-child, (Rev. xii. 5.) This is truly a new thing, never before related or heard of: without which satisfaction could not be obtained by the weary soul, nor the new covenant be established, (31—34.) By this the backsliding daughter, namely, the nation of the Jews, which was turned away from God, ought to be so influenced as no longer to wander about, at a distance from him.' (Cocc. scus.) It is observable, that the other predictions of the miraculous conception are conveyed in an obscure manner, and have caused much difficulty to expositors, (Notes, Gen. iii. 15. Is. vii. 14. ) and it seems exceedingly proper, that the clear and express declaration of such an event should be subsequent to its having actually taken place. — Several ancient Jews expounded the text of the Messiah. — And most Christian interpreters understand it of the miraculous conception. — Taking the words in this sense, they properly impart a new creation, and such as is the immediate work of God. The coming of the Messiah is the foundation of all the promises of the first and second covenant; and that covenant, of which Christ was to be the Mediator, is plainly foretold and described. (31—34.) (Lomth.)

V. 23—26. After the desolations of Judah, Jerusalem, and the temple, which had been called the habitation of justice and the mountain of holiness, their prosperity were discouraged: but the suspension would be taken off by the restoration of them; and then such expressions of good-will to Zion would be frequent and fervent. For the Lord had purposed to satisfy and comfort every one, who was wearied with trials and sorrow for his sins, or who sympathized in the sorrows of his afflicted people; and the outward blessings, to which he had been restored, would be typical of the spiritual prosperity of the gospel-church. This seems to have been presented before the prophet's mind in a dream or vision: and when he awakened and considered it, he was refreshed with the pleasing prospect, so contrary to the visions that he had generally seen. — Having seen this vision of the Messiah to come, in whom the two houses of Israel and Judah should be joined, I rejoiced.' throw down, and to destroy, and to afflict; so will I watch over them, to build, and to plant, saith the Lord.

29 In those days they shall say no more, The fathers have eaten a sour grape, and the children's teeth are set on edge.

30 But every one shall die for his own iniquity: every man that eateth the sour grape, his teeth shall be set on edge.

31 ¶ Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will make a new covenant with the house of Israel, and with the house of Judah;

32 Not according to the covenant that I made with their fathers, in the day that I took them by the hand to bring them out of the land of Egypt; which my covenant they brake, although I was an Husband unto them, saith the Lord:

33 But this shall be the covenant that I will make with the house of Israel: After those days, saith the Lord, I will put my law in their inward parts, and write it in their hearts;

34 And they shall teach no more every man his neighbour, and every man his brother, saying, Know the Lord: for they shall know me, from the least of them unto the greatest of them, saith the Lord; for I will forgive their iniquity, and I will remember their sin no more.

V. 27, 28. (Marg. Ref.) I will show the same care and vigilance (xiv. 27.) in restoring them, as I have formerly done in destroying them. (Lowth.) Some understand the passage of the replenishing of the church by numerous converts; and establishing it in peace and prosperity.

V. 29, 30. (Notes, Es. xviii.) (Marg. Ref.) The people thought it hard, that they should suffer for the sins of their fathers, (though it was evident that they imitated and exceeded them, and thus filled up the measure of their iniquities:) and they expressed their murmurs by a proverb, stating that the children's teeth were set on edge, or put to pain, by the fathers eating sour grapes. But the Lord assures them, that in the happy days here predicted they should neither have occasion, nor disposition, thus to reflect on the equity of his dealings. But should willingly acknowledge, that every one of them had smarted for his own iniquity; and had sins enow of his own, to warrant God's proceedings against him. (Bp. Hall.) When Christ came, all who believed on him, separated from unbelieving countrymen, and escaped their national calamities. This will be remarkably verified, when God shall cease to visit on the Jewish nation the imprecation which they lay on themselves by the death of Christ; His blood be upon us and on our children.

One of the promises of a new covenant, as St. Paul has shown, implied the abrogation of the Mosaic law, and the introduction of another and more spiritual dispensation. (Note, Heb. viii.) I was an husband, &c. This clause is rendered in the Septuagint, I regarded them not. St. Paul follows that version in this respect, though he varies from it in several parts of his quotation. Some think the original may admit of this translation; but it does not seem the obvious meaning. God will deal with them with that grace and favour, as if they had never offended him; and will set forth Christ to be a full, perfect, and sufficient Sacrifice and Propitiation for the sins of all that truly repent and turn to him. God will now give a greater measure of his grace, both to instruct men in the knowledge of his will, and to engage them to practise accordingly. (Lowth.) Israel as a nation typified the true people of God; the old covenant made with them, as typical of the new covenant made with all true believers, one with Christ. This is not ratified with a nation as such, (though every Christian nation is under a dispensation of mercy, according to this covenant, in some things, as the Jews were;) but it is made with Christ the Surety, in behalf of his people, and with each of them personally, as by faith he becomes a member of his mystical body.

The moral law was written in tables of stone, and in the book of the law, and put into the hands of the Israelites; but they brake it, for want of a spiritual mind, and thus it brought them under condemnation: but, according to the new covenant, God engages to put it into the inward parts, and to write it in the hearts of his people. That is, by regenerating grace, he creates in them a judgment, disposition, and affections, congenial to the holy law of love; then they perceive its spirituality, reasonableness, and excellency; they consent to it, that it is good, and they repent of breaking it; they see the beauty, majesty, and glory of Christ's salvation, and accept of it; they hope for pardon, acceptance, and assistance, through him; and thus they learn to delight in the law after the inward man, and to grieve and be humbled that they keep it so imper-
35 Thus saith the Lord, which giveth the sun for a light by day, and the ordinances of the moon and of the stars for a light by night, which divideth the sea when the waves thereof roar: the Lord of hosts is his name.

36 If his ordinances depart from before me, saith the Lord, then the seed of Israel also shall cease from being a nation before me for ever.

37 Thus saith the Lord; if he heaven above can be measured, and the foundations of the earth searched out beneath, I will also cast off all the seed of Israel, yea, and of the house of Jacob also.

38 Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that the city shall be built to the Lord, from the tower of Hananeel unto the gate of the corner.

39 And the measuring line shall yet go forth over against it upon the hill of Gareb, and shall compass about to Goath.

40 And the whole valley of the dead bodies, and of the ashes, and all the fields unto the brook of Kidron, unto the corner of the horse-gate toward the east, shall be holy unto the Lord; and it shall not be plucked up, nor thrown down, any more for ever.

families is, that the Lord may be their God: and if we devote them to him, and bring them up for him, we may expect that this will be their felicity. When he commissions the sword to waste the nations where his name is known, he reserves a remnant to whom he will be gracious; and often those judgments, which sweep numbers of hypocrites and ungodly men into perdition, are the means of peculiar blessings to their survivors, or posterity. If we find grace with God, he will lead us through all the perils and difficulties of this wilderness, and cause us to rest in his salvation. All the discoveries that he hath made of himself to fallen man, and all his marvellous works for his Church, have sprung from his everlasting and unchangeable love. This induced him to form the glorious plan of salvation, and first to promise, and then to give his beloved Son to be the sacrifice for our sins: and this also moved him to draw us by his grace and allure us by his loving kindness, to come unto him, and seek a share in the purchased blessings; and having been thus drawn to seek communion with him and conformity to him, we shall for ever enjoy the fruits of his special favour. From the same endearing principle Jehovah is led to build up the walls of Jerusalem, and to turn the mourning of his people over her desolations into songs of triumphant praises for her renewed prosperity. They should bless the name of our God, whom he hath placed near to his watchmen, who watch for their souls, and who exult in the triumph of the Lord our God. Such as are called to this work should be vigilant, faithful, and earnest; they ought themselves first to arise and lead the way by their example, “walking in all God’s ordinances and commandments blameless:” they should endeavour to terminate those unhappy differences, which, as it were, set the tribes of Israel at variance: and all Christians should pray that many such watchmen may be raised up, and sent forth in every place; and especially to call the ancient people of God to rejoin his Church and share her privileges. The chief of the nations, and Britain especially, (which seems to be rendered pre-eminent in commerce and navigation for that very purpose,) should celebrate with gladness the wondrous works of God for Jacob, in the great Redeemer raised up among that people; and should publish these glad tidings to all around, with praise and gratitude, that they may spread from shore to shore.
B.C. 589.

CHAPTER XXXII.

Jeremiah imprisoned for predicting the destruction of Jerusalem and the captivity of Zedekiah, 1—5. He buys a field by the command of God, as a token that the Jews should be restored to their inheritance, 6—15. He prays to be further certified concerning these transactions, 16—25. He is informed of the approaching calamities for the sins of the people, 26—35; and encouraged by promises of spiritual and temporal blessings, 36—44.

shores, till the utmost coasts of the earth are made acquainted with the joyful sound: nor should we forget to join our prayers with our endeavours, that the Lord may save his people, even the remnant of Israel. When his time arrives, his power and grace can readily remove all obstacles, rectify all obliquities, and remedy all defects: he can give eyes to the blind, and feet to the lame, strength to the weak, support to the heavy laden, and rest to the weary soul; and thus bring great companies into his Church. When he effectually draws sinners to come to him, their hard hearts soon melt and soften; and they, who once were too proud and stout to attend to such duties, and who deserted those that did, learn to mourn for sin and cry for mercy. Then he will lead them in his ways, supply their wants, refresh and comfort their hearts, uphold them from falling, and be a Father unto them, and they shall be his children and his heirs. It shall be known even to the ies afar off, that he cares for his chosen people: and if he suffer them to be scattered, he will gather and keep them, as a shepherd doth his flock: by price and by power he hath ransomed and redeemed them from those enemies that were stronger than they; and he will maintain and perfect their deliverance, and not let any pluck them out of his hand. To his courts they flow together, to share and to celebrate his goodness: and whilst he supplies all their outward wants, their souls shall be cheerful and fruitful as a watered garden. Their sorrows shall terminate in joy; and their comforts are earnest of eternal felicity in that world, where they shall not sorrow any more at all, but both ministers and people shall be satisfied with the goodness of the Lord.

 whilst the believer hath "a joy that a stranger intermeddeth not with," he must in the world expect tribulations; and a voice of lamentation often interrupts that of thanksgiving, even in the dwellings of the righteous. But if bereaving providences, or other afflictions, cause the Christian such bitter mourning, that he refuses to be comforted, it must be considered as his iniquity. We should not mourn over our children and relatives, as if they were not, when they are removed from us: but, having used the proper means for promoting their future felicity, we should leave them with our righteous and merciful God. He graciously comforts those that are cast down, and bids his mourners dry their tears; for both their sorrows and labours shall be recompensed: and if we have hope in our end for ourselves and those belonging to us, concerning an eternal inheritance, all temporal afflictions will be tolerable. The true penitent reflects with shame and contrition on his former obstinacy and rebellion, and on his misconduct under afflictions, as well as his abuse of mercies: he knows that he hath often suffered in vain, and hath been as untractable as the "bullock unaccustomed to the yoke." Once he excused his sins; but now he is sensible of his ingratitude and folly: he is convinced that he must be made a new creature, in order to serve God and enjoy his favour; he feels the power of inbred sin, evil habits, and strong temptations, and perceives that he cannot new-create his own heart: thus he learns to value the promises of sanctifying grace, and to plead them in prayer, crying to the Lord, "Thou me, and I shall be turned;" "Convert me, or I shall never be converted." His prayers will be answered, he will be more and more amazed and humbled; and increasing instruction will lead him to abhor himself, and to remember with shame the sins that were the reproach of his youth, and the effects of which he hath perhaps still to struggle with. This may, or may not, be accompanied with terror: but it will surely be attended with submission to the justice of God in all his corrections and threatenings, an entire reliance on his mercy and grace, and meekness of life. Where this change is effected, (whether in the case of a new convert, or of a returning backslider,) the Lord will treat him as a beloved child in whom he greatly delighteth, and "will surely have mercy on him:" he will pity his sorrows and tears, as a father doth those of his son whom he loveth and correcteth; and will remember him with the most tender compassions. He is of his own clemency disposed to this kindness; and in that new thing, that he hath created on earth, in the Virgin's Son, the glorious Prince of Peace, the great Emmanuel, he hath made way for the honourable exercise of his mercy to the chief of sinners. Let then poor prodigals, who are come to themselves, no longer wander about, as ashamed or afraid to return to their Father's house: let them set their hearts to the highway which he hath cast up; let them "return to the Lord," and he will have mercy on them; and then let them direct and encourage others in the same salutary course. Thus men return to Zion, and are enrolled her citizens: and all who profess to worship our God in Christ, and on his mercy-seat, should remember that his Church is "the habitation of righteousness and the mountain of holiness:" as such, they should still pray for her prosperity, and that they may be a credit and ornament to her by their holy examples. He hath yet a remnant both of pastors and of flock, who answer this description; and he still continues to satiate the weary, and replenish the sorrowful soul. Having tasted his grace, hoping for his glory, and looking forward to the happy event of all our troubles and those of the whole family of Christ, our thoughts even in death may be pleasant, by reflecting on what we shall shortly awake to behold and enjoy. For the Lord will still watch over his people and purify his Church. No man shall finally perish, but for his own sins; nor any sinner, who is willing to accept of Christ's salvation.

3 E
THE word that came to Jeremiah from the Lord in the tenth year of Zedekiah king of Judah, which was the eighteenth year of Nebuchadrezzar.

2 For then the king of Babylon's army besieged Jerusalem: and Jeremiah the prophet was shut up in the court of the prison, which was in the king of Judah's house.

3 For 'Zedekiah king of Judah bad shut him up, saying, 'Wherefore dost thou prophesy, and say, Thus saith the Lord; "Behold, I will give this city into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall take it;"

4 And 'Zedekiah king of Judah shall not escape out of the hand of the Chaldeans, but shall surely be delivered into the hand of the king of Babylon, and shall speak with him mouth to mouth, and his eyes shall behold his eyes;

5 And he shall lead Zedekiah to Babylon, and there shall he be until I visit him, saith the Lord; 'though ye fight with the Chaldeans, ye shall not prosper.

6 ¶ And Jeremiah said, The word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

7 Behold, Hanameel the son of Shallum thine uncle shall come unto thee, saying, Buy thee that field which is in Anathoth: 'for the right of redemption is thine to buy it.

V. 31-40.

Blessed be God for his new covenant, and for that new dispensation under which we live! But let us not trust to the outward administration of it, which will stand us in no more stead than the Sinai covenant did Israel, except the law be written in our hearts, as the principle of genuine repentance, faith, and cheerful obedience. This alone can prove that we are the true people of God: and that we know the Father and the Son, by the teaching of the Holy Spirit, and that all our sins are blotted out, to be remembered no more for ever. This circumcision and regeneration of the heart seals to the Christian the righteousness of faith, and evidences that he is Christ's, and has peace with God through him: and the power that formed the heavenly orbs, and continues them for lights to the earth, and that doth divide the sea when the waves thereof roar, will keep him through faith unto salvation. The personal happiness of every true believer is secured by that promise, covenant, and oath, which assure us that the gates of hell shall not prevail against the Church. This his love is immeasurable, and passeth knowledge; it can only be apprehended by faith and experience; and to those who thus apprehend it, every present mercy is a pledge and earnest of his complete and eternal salvation.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXII. V. 2. Jeremiah was confined, to prevent his publicly delivering his predictions: but it does not appear that he was put to further hardship at this time, or that his friends were excluded from him. Zedekiah and his princes were desperately resolved to hold out to the last extremity, not only against the superior power of the Chaldeans, but in defiance of the word of God: and Jeremiah must be silenced, or he would discourage the people by his predictions.

V. 4. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 5. 'In his posterity, whom I will restore to their own country.' (Louv.)—Zedekiah's sons were slain before his eyes; his daughters were carried by Johanan the son of Karah into Egypt, and never returned. No individual of his posterity is mentioned in Scripture, (Notr. xxiii. 30;) so that the visitation of death seems to be exclusively meant. —'Till I take Zedekiah away by death; for he shall not die by the sword.' (xxxiv. 5. Es. xii.)
is sealed, and this evidence which comes to the land of Egypt, even unto this day, and in Israel, and among other men;" 15 For thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, "Houses, and fields, and vineyards, shall be possessed again in this land. 16 ¶ Now when I had delivered the evidence of the purchase unto Baruch the son of Neriah, I prayed unto the Lord, saying, 17 "Ah Lord God! behold, thou hast made the heaven and the earth, by thy great power and stretched-out arm, and there is nothing too hard for thee: 18 Thou showest loving kindness unto thousands, and recompensest the iniquity of the fathers after them for the great, the mighty God, the Lord of hosts is his name, 19 Great is counsel, and mighty in power is he that executeth all the ways of the sons of men: to give every one according to his ways, and according to the fruit of his doings: 20 Which hast set signs and wonders in the land of Egypt, even unto this day, and in Israel, and among other men; and hast made thee a name, as at this day; 21 And hast brought forth thy people Israel out of the land of Egypt, with signs, and with wonders, and with a strong hand, and with a stretched-out arm, and with great terror; 22 And hast given them this land, which thou didst swear to give to their fathers, a land flowing with milk and honey; 23 And they came in, and possessed it, but they obeyed not thy voice, neither walked in thy law; they have done nothing of all that thou commandedst them to do: therefore thou hast caused all this evil to come upon them. 24 Behold the mount, they are come unto the city to take it; and the city is given into the hand of the Chaldeans that fight against it, because of the sword, and of the famine, and of the pestilence: and what thou hast spoken is come to pass: and, behold, thou seest it.

V. 6—15. The prophet was assured that the city and temple would soon be levelled with the ground; and all the rest of the land was at that time in the possession of the Chaldeans: yet the Lord made it known to him, that his companion Baruch was to sell him a field; and as he was the next in succession, to whom the right of redemption belonged, he commanded him to purchase it. Accordingly Hanameel came on this business. During the famine that prevailed in the city, he probably wanted money to buy bread, and his field would not be thought of much value in such circumstances; which may account for the stipulated sum being so small, for probably it was not more than forty shillings. It does not concern us to inquire, whether this land was a part of the possessions of the priests, in the suburbs of Anathoth, or some other small estate in the neighbourhood, that had come into the family: for the thing signified, not the sign, was chiefly to be noticed. The prophet himself was not likely to have any advantage from the field, nor any relation that was nearer to him than Hanameel himself; and it might be very inconvenient to him to part even with so small a sum, in his difficult circumstances: but he knew that it was the word of the Lord, and implicitly obeyed it. By remaining unmarried (xvi.) he assured the people, that he was satisfied of the truth of his predictions respecting the captivity; and by thus buying the field he proved the same, as to his predictions on their restoration. The transaction being settled, according to the law and custom of the time, with great punctuality, would give it notoriety; and his orders to his companion Baruch to put the deeds into an earthen vessel, (an apt emblem of the precariousness of such possessions,) and to secure them in some place where they might be found at the end of many days, would cause the annexed reason to be the more noticed and remembered.

V. 17. Hard, &c. Or 'hidden from thee, out of the reach of thy wisdom to compass,' (Lowth.) (Marg. Ref.) The original more generally "signifies wonderful:" 'Nothing of any kind is hidden from thee, or is too hard for thee, and therefore appears to thee wonderful.' (Genxxviii. 14. Judg. xiii. 18. Marg. Is. ix. 6.) The prophet seems to have been greatly surprised, at comparing the command just given with the dispensations of Providence. The whole appeared wonderful to him: but he knew that it was not so before God; because "known unto him are all his works from the beginning of the world;" and He worketh all things after the counsel of his own will." This therefore seems to have implied a petition for some further satisfaction on the subject.

V. 18. (Notes, xvi. 10—xii. xxxvi. 29, 30. Ex. xxv.) V. 19. "Who art infinitely wise in ordering all events, and as powerful in putting thy decrees in execution." (Lowth.) V. 20. Unto &c. "The remembrance of which is preserved to this day." (Lowth.)
25 And thou hast said unto me, O Lord God, Buy thee the field for money, and take witnesses; * for the city is given into the hand of the Chaldeans.

26 ¶ Then came the word of the Lord unto Jeremiah, saying,

27 Behold, I am the LORD, *the God of all flesh: Is there anything too hard for me?

28 Therefore thus saith the Lord; Behold, I will give this city into the hand of the Chaldeans, and into the hand of Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, and he shall take it.

29 And the Chaldeans, that fight against this city, shall come *and set fire on this city, and burn it, with the houses,
*upon whose roofs they have offered incense unto Baal, and poured out drink-offerings unto other gods, to provoke me to anger.

30 For *the children of Israel, and *the children of Judah have only edeviled before me from their youth:
for the children of Israel have only provoked me to anger with the work of their hands, saith the LORD.

31 For *this city hath been to me *as a provocation of mine anger and of my fury, from the day that they built it even unto this day;
that I should remove it from before my face.

32 Because of all the evil of the children of Israel and of the children of Judah, which they have done to provoke me to anger,
*they, their kings, their princes, their priests, and their prophets, and the men of Judah, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem.

33 And they have turned unto me the back, and not the face: though I taught them,
rising up early and teaching them, yet they have not hearkened to receive instruction.

34 But they set their abominations in the house which is called by my name, to defile it.

35 And *they built the high places of Baal, which are in the valley of the son of Hinnom, to cause their sons and their daughters to pass through the fire unto Molech,
*which I commanded them not, neither came it into my mind, that they should do this abomination, to cause Judah to sin.

36 ¶ And therefore thus saith the Lorn, the God of Israel, concerning this city, whereof ye say,
It shall be delivered into the hand of the king of Babylon by the sword, and by the famine, and by the pestilence;

employ the Medes and Persians to execute vengeance on Babylon, to give liberty to his people, and to enable them to rebuild the temple and Jerusalem. (Note, 17.)

V. 28—30. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 31. Jerusalem, or Salem, was built not very long after the deluge. (Note, Gen. xiv. 18—20.) But when David took the city of Zion, he so improved and enlarged Jerusalem, in order that it might be the capital of his kingdom, and the centre of Israel's worship, that he may be considered as the builder of it. He intended that it should be "the holy city," and in external privileges it was so: but even during his life time many abominations were there committed; and no sooner had Solomon completed his father's designs, than the holy and "faithful city became an harlot!" and continued to be the scene of the greatest idolatries, with little intermission, till the Baby-lonish captivity.

V. 32—35. (Marg. Ref.)

To cause, &c. The idolatrous kings, princes, and priests, and the false prophets, by their authority, influence, exemple, menaces, reasonings, and persuasions, "caused Judah to sin;" that is, they proved successful tempters to the people in general.

V. 36. As the people would not believe the predictions of the siege and destruction of the city, till they were fulfilled before their eyes: so they seem to have been equally incredulous respecting its future restoration, and generally given up to sullen despondency.

V. 37. (Marg. Ref.) 'This promise, taken in its full extent, was not made good to those that returned from captivity; because they were frequently infested with wars, as well by the kings of Syria and Egypt, as by the rest of their neighbours; and were finally subdued and destroyed by the Romans.' (Jerome in Lomth.)

V. 39-41. These verses might have some reference to the revival of religion, which took place after the captivity: but greater and more durable blessings were evidently intended. The introduction of the gospel dispensation, the conversion of many of the Jews to Christ, their union with each other, and with the Gentile converts, in the worship of God, and perhaps the future conversion of the Jewish nation, must be implied in the prophetical meaning: but the character and privileges of all true Christians are also described. By regeneration the Lord gives them one heart, that is, one judgment and disposition. They differ in things of inferior consequence, through remaining ignorance, sin, and temptation: but in the more important matters, which respect the divine character and perfections, the evil of sin, and the lost estate of fallen man: the way of salvation through the divine Saviour, and his merits and grace; the nature and excellency of holiness; their obligations to love and serve God; the vanity of the world, and the importance of eternal things; they are all of one mind and judgment. And they are all disposed to repentance, faith in Christ, and love to him and their brethren; to hate sin, and to worship and obey the Lord. Union and communion with God in Christ, and conformity to him, produce congeniality of spirit with each other: so that, as far as they are under the influence of divine grace, they are all of one heart and soul, and disposed to associate and worship together; as children of one family, soldiers of one army, or travellers in one journey. They have also all of them access to God, and acceptance with him in one Way, even through Jesus Christ; and they all habitually walk in the one way of holiness which he hath marked out to them. These blessings are conferred on them, that they may fear, reverence, worship, and obey God through life; and that a succession of such persons may be preserved on earth to the end of the world. This is for their present and future good, and for that of their children after them; who, being trained up under the ordinances of God, have vast advantages above others, and are generally made partakers of the same grace with their parents, when properly educated. With these persons God makes an everlasting covenant, and secures to them the enjoyment of the promised blessings. He engages them to turn away from them, so as to cease to do them good; and to prevent the effects of their own inconstancy and depravity, by putting his fear into their hearts, that they may not depart from him. So that when love declines, and they grow watchful, or are tempted to sin; fear revives, they begin to trouble for the consequences, and are thus led to renewed repentance, faith, prayer, watchfulness, and obedience. Thus they cannot forfeit the promised blessings; for the Lord engages for their part in the covenant, as well as for his own: and he will assuredly rejoice over them to do them good, with his whole heart and soul,' for the glory of his name; and will bring them to heaven, even as he restored the captive Jews to the land of Canaan. As nothing like such an unchangeable covenant was made with the Jews after the captivity, we must needs have recourse to a more spiritual and evangelical meaning, in explaining the prophecy. (Note. xxxi. 31-34.)

Plant. The re-establishment of Israel and Judah in Canaan, and their union as one nation, after conversion to Christ, is here, as well as in many other places, most clearly and emphatically predicted.

V. 42-44. (Marg. Ref.) 'The return of their cap
CHAP. XXXIII.

Predictions concerning the return of the Jews from captivity; their rebuilding Jerusalem; and the pardon, holiness.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The judgments of God often come gradually upon sinners; but always without fail, when not prevented by timely repentance. They who harden their hearts against the warnings of his word, will hate and persecute those that faithfully declare them. But if God be for us, we need not fear the power of any adversary: and they who fight against him, can never prosper in resisting the executioners of his vengeance. Ministers should in their whole conduct exhibit an example of implicit obedience, and evince that they really believe the doctrines which they teach to others: they should appear disinterested, and attentive to every relative duty: and though they must not entangle themselves in the affairs of this life, yet, in needful secular concerns, they should act with punctuality and exactness, avoiding all appearance of evil, and precluding, as far as possible, all occasions of contention to survivors. Earthly inheritances are never of very great value: but in times of great public calamities, and in the hour of death, they begin to appear in their real insignificance: and in the same interesting seasons men begin to form a more proper estimate of the value of an inheritance in heaven. This consideration should direct our habitual judgment and conduct. Whatever creates perplexity should lead us to the throne of grace: and though we must not hesitate to obey God, when we do not perceive the reasons of his commandments, yet we should seek increasing light, that our obedience may be more intelligent. When we cannot understand any particular providential dispensations, we may profitably recur to first and general principles. We are sure that nothing can be too hard for the Creator of the world, that the Judge of all the earth will do right, and that the Saviour of sinners cannot be defective in goodness and mercy. If then the Lord recompense the iniquities of the fathers into the bosom of their children after them, we may be sure that it consists with his justice: and if he suffer his people to be afflicted by their enemies, it must be the result of his wisdom, truth, and mercy. Whatever he promises or threatens he can easily effect: for he is great in council, and mighty in operation; and his eyes are open upon all the ways of the sons of men, to give to every one according to his doing. The works that he hath wrought for the salvation of his people and the ruin of his enemies, and to make his name glorious, should be considered as so many specimens of his general conduct, and demonstrations that he will perform his whole word. Alas, how many are there, who enjoy his providential bounties and the means of grace in abundance, who will not obey his voice; may, will do nothing of all that he hath commanded them to do! Therefore evil comes upon them: and while suffering the punishment of their sins, they will remember that it thus it was written, and thus it must be.

When we have meditated with prayer and praise on the divine perfections and conduct, and have referred to him those things that have troubled us, we shall frequently find our minds composed and satisfied, even before we have received a solution of our difficulties: and the Lord will make known to his people his will, as far as their duty and peace are concerned. But he is of one mind, and his purposes are irreversible: he will relax nothing of his requirements, nor at all mitigate the sentence denounced against the impenitent. When the authority, influence, or example of ungodly men causes others to commit abomination; and when peculiar advantages for instruction are neglected and abused, the wrath of God will burn fiercely against the transgressors. But though the misconduct of vast multitudes has from the beginning made his visible Church a provocation of his anger, he will not forsake it: but, having destroyed the rebels from among his chosen remnant, he will gather them from all places into his fold, and cause them to dwell safely. To those who are indeed his people, and who have the Lord for their God, he giveth one heart and one way, that they may be like minded with himself and each other; their filial fear and reverential worship does not mar the exercise of their grateful love and joy, but concerns in producing active and watchful obedience: this is as much for their good as for his glory, and entails the most valuable blessings on their posterity. Let us seek an interest in these precious promises, and rest in nothing short of them: let us remember that unity of heart and worship among Christians comes from the Spirit of God; and discord from sin and Satan: and let us endeavour to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace. Let us diligently seek the good of our children after us, and bringing them up in the nurture and admonition of the Lord. Let us earnestly come to Christ, and constantly use the means of grace: thus we shall know, that the everlasting covenant is made with us, and that the Lord will neither turn from us, nor leave us to depart from him. But it is his plan to preserve his people by putting his fear into their hearts: a confidence, therefore, that is never shaken by fear, even when disgraced by sin, is very suspicious; and some tender trembling Christians have better evidence of their safety, than they can be made to perceive. But we should be careful not to persuade men to a degree of confidence above their experience, diligence, conscientiousness, and simplicity: for this contradicts the Lord's plan. They who are interested in the covenant, MOR EOVER, the word of the Lord came unto Jeremiah the second time, while he was yet shut up in the court of the prison, saying,

2 Thus saith the Lord ; the Maker thereof, the Lord that formed it, to establish it; * the Lord is his name;

3 Call unto me, and I will answer thee, and shew thee great and mighty things, which thou knowest not.

4 For thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel, concerning the house of this city, and concerning the houses of the kings of Judah, which are thrown down by the mount, and by the sword;

5 They come to fight with the Chaldeans, but it is to fill them with the dead bodies of men, whom I have slain in mine anger and in my fury, and for all whose wickedness I have hid my face from this city.

6 Behold, I will bring it health and cure, and will cure them, and will deal wisely unto them the abundance of peace and truth.

7 And I will cause the captivity of Judah and the captivity of Israel to return, and will build them as at the first.

8 And I will cleanse them from all their iniquity, whereby they have sinned against me; and I will pardon all their iniquities, whereby they have sinned, and whereby they have transgressed against me.

9 And it shall be to me a name of joy, a praise, and an honour before all the nations of the earth, which shall hear all the good that I do unto them; and they shall * fear and tremble for all the goodness and prosperity that I procure unto it.

10 Thus saith the Lord; Again there shall be heard in this place, (c) which ye shall be desolate without man and without beast, even in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem, that are desolate, without man, and without inhabitant, and without beast.

11 The voice of joy, and the voice of gladness, the voice of the bridegroom, and the voice of the bride, the voice of them that shall say, * Praise the Lord of hosts; for the Lord is good; for his mercy endureth for ever: and of them that shall bring the sacrifice of praise into the house of the Lord. * For I will cause to return the captivity of the land, as at the first, saith the Lord.

V. 5. The allies who came to assist the Jews, or the Jews themselves, effected nothing by resisting the Chaldeans, except the prolongation and increase of their miseries, whilst their houses were filled with the dead bodies of such as the Lord slew by famine, pestilence, and the sword.

V. 6—9. All human efforts, to close the wounds and heal the maladies of Zion, made them worse: but in due time the Lord intended to apply effectual remedies to them; to re-establish her civil and ecclesiastical state, and to make known to her inhabitants the abundance of his mercy in being reconciled to them, the abundance of peace and prosperity to be found in his service, and the abundance of his truth in performing his promises. For he meant to cleanse them from both the guilt and pollution of their sins: and then they would be an accepted, holy, and happy people, in whom he would delight, and be glorified in the sight of the nations; who would be filled with astonishment and consternation, lest the power that had prospered the Jews, should punish them for their enmity and injuries against them. (Notes, Ezek. vi. 11—13.) (Marg. Ref.)

V. 11. (Marg. Ref.) The mention, (in the midst of the dire calamities to which the Jews were at this time subjected;) of that joyful song of praise, which was used to express the lively gratitude and admiring love of the 12 Thus saith the Lord of hosts; Again in this place, which is desolate without man and without beast, and in all the cities thereof, shall be an habitation of shepherds causing their flocks to lie down.

13 In the cities of the mountains, in the cities of the vale, and in the cities of the south, and in the land of Benjamin, and in the places about Jerusalem, and in the cities of Judah, shall the flocks pass again under the hands of him that telleth them, saith the Lord.

14 Behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will perform that good thing, which I have promised unto the house of Israel, and to the house of Judah.

15 In those days, and at that time, will I cause the Branch of righteousness to grow up unto David; and he shall execute judgment and righteousness in the land.

16 In those days shall Judah be saved, and Jerusalem shall dwell safely, and this is the name wherewith she shall be called, The Lord our righteousness.

17 For thus saith the Lord; David shall never want a man to sit upon the throne of the house of Israel.

18 Neither shall the priests the Levites want a man before me to offer burnt-offerings, and to kindle meat-offerings, and to do sacrifice continually.

19 ¶ And the word of the Lord came unto Jeremiah, saying,

20 Thus saith the Lord; If ye can break my covenant of the day, and my covenant of the night, and that there should not be day and night in their season;

21 Then may also my covenant be broken with David my servant, that he should not have a son to reign upon his throne; and with the Levites the priests, my ministers.

22 As the host of heaven cannot be numbered, neither the sand of the sea measured; so will I multiply the seed of David my servant, and the Levites that minister unto me.

23 ¶ Moreover, the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah, saying,

24 Considerest thou not what this people have spoken, saying, The two families which the Lord hath chosen, he hath even cast them off? Thus they have despised my people, that they should be no more a nation before them.

25 Thus saith the Lord; If my covenant be not with day and night, and if I have not appointed the ordinances of heaven and earth;

26 Then will I cast away the seed of Jacob, and David my servant, so that I will not take any of his seed to be rulers over the seed of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob: for I will cause their captivity to return, and have mercy on them.

most eminent saints, in the most prosperous times, is peculiarly striking; especially as connected with the joy expressed, during prosperity, in the common concerns of life, and showing, that these also would be conducted, with a hearty regard to the will and glory of God.—

Kimchi observes on this place, that none but eucharistic sacrifices shall be in use in the times of the Messiah.' (Lornth.)

V. 12, 13. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 14—16. (Note, xxiii. 5, 6.) In the passage referred to "the Lord our righteousness" is given as the name of Christ; but here the Church is thus called. The privilege, in which above all the other end, is that Jehovah is her righteousness: and this is the peculiar distinction which distinguishes true believers from all other persons. The words, however, are more literally rendered in the old translation: "and he that shall call her "is the Lord our righteousness."
CHAPTER XXXIV.

The prophet is sent to assure Zedekiah, that the city would be taken; and that he would be carried to Babylon, and there die in peace, 1—7. The princes and people, having covenanted to set free their enslaved brethren, again reduce them to bondage, 8—11. God by the prophet proclaims liberty to the sword, pestilence, and famine; and predicts the return and success of the Chaldeans, 12—22.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The Lord more values, favours, and honours his faithful servants in a prison, than ungodly princes on their thrones, or hypocritical priests in the temple; and his presence and consolations can make any situation pleasant. He, that created and upholds the earth, forms and establishes the Church; and no power can prevail against him. All blessings must be sought by fervent prayer, which the Lord never fails to answer. The trembling sinner, when he begins to call upon God, soon begins to discover and experience such glory and blessedness, as before he could not have conceived. And as the believer continues to call on the Lord, he is led further and further in the same way, and finds, in everything, that he is "able to do exceeding abundantly above all that he ask or think." But when the saint shall arrive in heaven, what great, what glorious, what hidden things will be shown him, when he shall see the Lord as he is, be made like him, and know even as he is known! When sinners are suffering under divine corrections, or trembling for fear of the wrath to come, they only increase and prolong their miseries, by delaying to submit to God: but when they cast themselves unreservedly on his mercy, he brings health and cure to their souls, and reveals to them the abundance of his peace and truth. His sanctifying grace and pardoning mercy are inseparably connected: he certainly pardons all whom he cleanses; and cleanses all whom he pardons: "they who are thus washed, and sanctified, and justified, in the name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God," are enabled to walk before him in peace and purity; and he takes pleasure in them, and is glorified by them, and in his goodness to them, before those that are without. Many are thus led to perceive a real difference between the people of God, and the world around them; and to fear his wrath, for their enmity to those whom he delighteth to honour. Thus they tremble at the view of the prosperity and joy of believers, and are led to inquire after his salvation, and at length to partake of it; while in the same manner others are over-awed and kept from doing them further injury. Though the Lord will hide his face from his people for their sins; yet he will return to repair the desolations of his Church: and notwithstanding interruptions, "the voice of joy and thanksgiving shall be heard in the dwellings of the righteous." Whilst they praise him for his everlasting mercy, they cannot but rejoice in him; and their sacrifices of praise are highly acceptable and honourable to him, when presented in the name of his beloved Son. Where he gives righteousness and peace, he will supply all temporal wants; and our relations and possessions will be comfortable to us, in proportion as they are sanctified by the word of God and prayer. When his time comes, he will perform every good thing that he hath promised to his Church: and as he fulfilled his word, in giving his Son to be the sacrifice for our sins and the Lord our Righteousness, who was emphatically "that good thing promised to the house of Israel;" it would be the most inexcusable incredulity, to question the performance of any of his engagements. Through this our righteous King, who reigns on the throne of David, and is our High-priest upon his throne, let us bring our spiritual sacrifices, continually giving thanks to our God and Father by him. Let us pray, that the royal priesthood may be multiplied, as the sand of the sea: and in order to this, that able and faithful ministers may be sent forth into every place, to call sinners to the knowledge of salvation, and to excite his people to glorify God with their lips and in their lives. Whilst we value our privileges, as the people of God, let us not despise those families, which were of old his chosen, though for a time they seem to be cast off: for as he hath appointed the ordinances of heaven and earth, and the sun and moon know their appointed seasons; so surely will he cause their captivity to return, and have mercy on them. And as he, who rules over the whole spiritual seed of Abraham, sprang from that nation according to the flesh, he will deem his honour concerned in bringing them again into his Church, and restoring them to their former privileges.
5 But thou shalt die in peace: and with the burnings of thy fathers, the former kings which were before thee, so shall they burn ordinances for thee; and they will lament thee, saying, Ah, lord! for I have pronounced the word, saith the lord.

6 Then Jeremiah the prophet spake all these words unto Zedekiah king of Judah in Jerusalem, 7 When the king of Babylon's army fought against Jerusalem, and against all the cities of Judah that were left, against Lachish, and against Azekah; for these defended cities remained of the cities of Judah.

8 This is the word that came unto Jeremiah from the Lord, after that the king Zedekiah had made a covenant with all the people which were at Jerusalem;

9 That every man should let his man-servant, and every man his maid-servant, being an Hebrew or an Hebrewess, go free; that none should serve himself of his man-servant, to wit, of a Jew his brother.

10 Now when all the princes, and all the people, which had entered into the covenant, heard that every one should let his man-servant, and every one his maid-servant, go free, that none should serve themselves of them any more, then they obeyed, and let them go.

11 But afterward they turned, and caused the servants and the handmaids, whom they had let go free, to return, and brought them into subjection for servants and for handmaids.

12 Therefore the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah from the Lord, saying, 13 Thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel; I made a covenant with your fathers, in the day that I brought them forth out of the land of Egypt, out of the house of bondmen, saying,

14 At the end of seven years let every man set free his servant, which is bought of him to serve him. 15 And when he hath served thee six years, thou shalt let him go free from thee: but if thy servant hearkened not unto thee, neither inclined their ear;

16 And seven ye were turned, and had done right in my sight, in proclaiming liberty every man to his neighbour, and ye had made a covenant before me.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXIV. V. 2—5. (xxiii. 1—5.) Zedekiah was assured that he should be taken prisoner and carried captive, notwithstanding all his efforts to defend himself, or to escape by flight: but he was also informed that he should not be slain in battle, or die a violent death, but that he should die in peace according to the course of nature. Perhaps he was brought to repentance, and died at peace with God. It was, however, foretold that the Jews would show him the same respect which had been paid to other kings of Judah after their decease; and lament, that in his days the measure of their national iniquity was completed, and the family of David reduced so low; though he was not so desperately wicked as some of his predecessors had been. It is not known at what time Zedekiah died.

V. 8—11. (Notes, Exod. xxii. 2—6.) The Jews did not generally observe the divine law, in freeing their brethren who had become slaves, after they had served them seven years. But when Jerusalem was straitened by the Chaldeans, the king, perhaps excited by Jeremiah, entered into a solemn covenant with the people to set at liberty all their Hebrew slaves: and it was proclaimed that none of them, on any pretence, should thus illegally use the service of their brethren: accordingly the law was in this respect complied with. But when Pharaoh's army came out of Egypt to assist them, and the Chaldeans had left the siege of Jerusalem to go and meet them, thinking the danger was over, they impiously violated their solemn covenant, and with the most cruel injustice reduced to slavery the very persons to whom they had just before given freedom.

Princes. The verse may be thus translated, "All the princes consented that every one should let his man-servant go free: they consented, I say, and let them go." (Lomith.)

V. 14. 'The seventh year was the year of release. (Deut. x. 9.) consequently servants were to continue in service but six years, and at the beginning of the seventh were to be made free.' Thus, "at the end of three years, thou shalt bring forth all the tithe, &c." The "third year is the year of tithing." (Deut. xxi. 12.) 'So Christ is said to rise again after three days,' which is elsewhere explained by his rising on the third day. (Lomith.) It is generally supposed that the slaves should have been set at liberty on each sabbatical year: but in that case many of them would have served far less than six years; and this is not expressly mentioned, either in the law of liberating slaves, or in that of keeping the sabbatical year. It is, however, likely that when any special reasons required the observance of it, the observance of it was attended by giving liberty to slaves, as well as a release of insolvent debtors; and that the transaction here recorded was on a sabbatical year, though the calculations of learned men on that subject are not very satisfactory. (Marg. Ref.)
in the house * which is called by my name:
16 But ye turned, and polluted my name, and caused every man his servant, and every man his handmaid, whom he had set at liberty at their pleasure, to return, and brought them into subjection, to be unto you for servants and for handmaids.
17 Therefore thus saith the Lord; Ye have not hearkened unto me, in proclaiming liberty every one to his brother, and every man to his neighbour: behold, I proclaim a liberty for you, saith the Lord, to the word, to the pestilence, and to the famine; and I will make you to be removed into all the kingdoms of the earth.
18 And I will give the men that have transgressed my covenant, which have not performed the words of the covenant which they had made before me, when they cut the calf in twain, and passed between the parts thereof,
19 The princes of Judah, and the princes of Jerusalem, the eunuchs, and the priests, and all the people of the land, which passed between the parts of the calf;
20 I will even give them into the hand of their enemies, and into the hand of them that seek their life: and their dead bodies shall be for meat unto the fowls of the heaven, and to the beasts of the earth.
21 And Zedekiah king of Judah and his princes will I give into the hand of their enemies, and into the hand of them that seek their life, and into the hand of the king of Babylon's army, which are gone up from you.
22 Behold, I will command, saith the Lord, and cause them to return to this city; and they shall fight against it, and take it, and burn it with fire:
23 And I will make the cities of Judah a desolation without an inhabitant.

CHAP. XXXV.

Jeremiah invites the Rechabites to drink wine; who answer, that, obeying their

V. 15, 16. It was a most solemn covenant, made at the temple in the name of the Lord; so that the violation of it polluted his name," and was a most atrocious act of perjury.

V. 17. The Lord gave liberty to those judgments to seize upon the Jews; he cast them out of his protection, and left them exposed to every kind of misery. These calamities come upon men by direction and commission of God, as the executioners of his justice. (Lukow.)
(Marg. Ref.) (Note, Gen. xv. 10.) This ceremony of dividing the sacrifice, and passing between the parts of it, implied an imprecation on the persons coveting, (if they brake their engagement,) that they might be thus cut asunder, and made a sacrifice to divine justice.

V. 20—22. (Marg. Ref. and notes on the texts referred to.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

In the midst of wrath the Lord remembers mercy: and whatever calamities a sinner endures through life, or however he ends his days, if he dies at peace with God, he is highly favoured: and as faithful reproofs and severe corrections tend far more to this happy event, than flattery and prosperity; they are in themselves far preferable, though seldom chosen. The mercy of God to us should teach us mercy to our brethren; but they that despise his authority, commonly abuse their authority over others. Yet the Lord will severely punish even the greatest princes for oppressing their meanest slaves. Many things contained in the word of God are not known to his professed worshippers, which they will sometimes obey, when set before them: and this is one end and use of preaching. When those in authority join example to their influence in promoting equity and humanity, they may effect great things in a little time; and this, as far as it goes, is doing right in the sight of God, who loveth righteousness and mercy. But when reformation springs only from terror and the prospect of imminent destruction, it is seldom durable. Many in such circumstances, seem very penitent, make hasty resolutions and solemn engagements, and do many things; but when the terror is subsided, they repent of their repentance, fall more entirely under the power of their sins, and seem in haste to undo the little good they had done. Solemn vows and sacramental engagements, thus entered into, only pollute the name and profane the ordinances of the Lord; and they, who are most forward to bind themselves by imprecations to perform their vows, are commonly most ready to violate them. But if men repent of their repentance, God will repent of his forbearance; they shall have judgment without mercy, who have showed no mercy; and they, who will not obey God in their conduct towards those whom they have been used to oppress, will be cast out of his protection, and exposed to his temporal and eternal judgments. Let us then look to our hearts; that our repentance may be genuine, and that the law of loving God supremely, and our neighbour as ourselves, may be so written in our hearts, as to regulate our conduct in all our transactions.
ancestor Jonadab, they drank none, and lived in tents, &c. 1-11. The disobedience of the Jews contrasted with this example, 12-17. Promises to the Rechabites. 18, 19

THE word, which came unto Jeremiah from the Lord, in the days of Jechonias the son of Josiah king of Judah, saying,

2 Go unto the house of the Rechabites, and speak unto them, and bring them into the house of the Lord, into one of the chambers, and give them wine to drink.

3 Then I took Jaazaniah the son of Jeremiah, the son of Libazaniah, and his brethren, and all his sons, and the whole house of the Rechabites;

4 And I brought them into the house of the Lord, into one of the chambers of the sons of Hanan, the son of Igdaloth, a man of God, which was by the chamber of the princes, which was above the chamber of Maaseiah the son of Shalum, the keeper of the doors.

5 And I set before the sons of the house of the Rechabites pots full of wine, and cups, and I said unto them, Drink ye wine.

6 But they said, We will drink no wine: for Jonadab the son of Rechab commanded us, saying, Ye shall drink no wine, Neither ye, nor your sons, for ever:

7 Neither shall ye build house, nor sow seed, nor plant vineyard, nor have any: but all your days ye shall dwell in tents; that ye may live many days in the land where ye be strangers.

8 Thus have we obeyed the voice of Jonadab the son of Rechab our father, in all that he bade us, we drank no wine all our days, we, our wives, our sons, our daughters;

9 Nor to build houses for us to dwell in: neither have we vineyard, nor field, nor seed;

10 But we have dwelt in tents, and have obeyed, and done according to all that Jonadab our father commanded us.

11 But it came to pass, when Nebudadnazar king of Babylon came up into the land, that we said, Come, and let us go to Jerusalem for fear of the army of the Chaldeans, and for fear of the army of the Syrians: so we dwell at Jerusalem.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXV. V. 4. The Rechabites were a family of the Kenites, who descended from Moses' father in-law, (Notes, Judg. i. 15. 1 Chron. ii. 55.) They had dwelt in the land from the first, but no inheritance seems to have been allotted to them. It was doubtless well known, that they had rules of conduct peculiar to themselves: but this trial was made, to show their steady adherence to their rules, and the reasons they assigned for it, in order to shame the disobedience of the Jews. (Marg. Ref.) 'The Rechabites were descended from the Kenites; they were never incorporated with the Jews; but yet were looked on as friends and allies. —They were worshippers of the true God, though they were not circumcised.' (Lowth.)

The prophet seems to have brought the Rechabites into a chamber adjoing to the temple, and to have been particular in describing it, in order to render the transaction more public: and Hanan being a man of God, would readily accommodate them.

V. 5. God commanded Jeremiah to give the Rechabites wine to drink; but he did not command them to drink, so that they were free to refuse it.

V. 6, 7. (Note, 2 Kings x. 15, 16.) Jonadab lived about three hundred years before this time. He had probably practised these rules himself; and having trained up his children to habits of abstinence, he enjoined them and their posterity to adhere to them. He seems to have desired, that they should be, as much as possible, kept from temptations to avarice, luxury, and sensuality: and be a hardy, self-denied, and industrious race. He might also foresee the calamities, which were likely to come on Judah and Israel, and desire that their posterity should be prepared for the worst. He seems to have wished them to avoid giving umbrage, or exciting the jealousy or envy of those among whom they lived, which would have been the natural effect of their living in opulence, magnificence, or luxury: for one reason of his rules was, 'that they might live long in the land where they were strangers.' But, above all, he doubtless meant that they should be devoted to God, as a race of perpetual Nazarites: and he deemed these rules conducive to this end, and calculated to render them simple, humble, patient, and superior to the delights of sense. Such injunctions of dying parents, or others, can only be considered as counsels: and if consistent with Scripture, suited to the circumstances of the times, and neither put in the place of the merits of Christ, nor in that of obedience to God's commandments, but subordinated to them, and used in suberviency to true godliness, they may be given and observed with propriety and advantage. The Rechabites and the Nazarites resembled the religious orders in the Roman church; more than any other persons in the Old Testament; yet they were not forbidden to marry, nor commanded to abstain from meats. No restriction was laid on them in these respects.
CHAPTER XXXV.

12 ¶ Then came the word of the Lord unto Jeremiah, saying, 13 Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Go and tell the men of Judah, and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, Will ye not receive instruction to hearken unto my words? saith the Lord.

14 The words of Jonadab the son of Rechab, that he commanded his sons not to drink wine, are performed; for unto this day they drink none, but obey their father’s commandment; notwithstanding I have spoken unto you, rising early and speaking; but ye hearkened not unto me.

15 I have sent also unto you all my servants the prophets, rising up early and sending them, saying, Return ye now every man from his evil way, and amend your doings, and go not after other gods to serve them, and ye shall dwell in the land which I have given to you and to your fathers; but ye have not inclined your ear, nor hearkened unto me.

16 Because the sons of Jonadab the son of Rechab have performed the commandment of their father, which he commanded them; but this people hath not hearkened unto me:

17 Therefore thus saith the Lord God of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, I will bring upon Judah, and upon all the inhabitants of Jerusalem, all the evil that I have pronounced against them: because I have spoken unto them, and they have not heard; and I have called unto them, but they have not answered.

18 ¶ And Jeremiah said unto the house of the Rechabites, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Because ye have he obeyed the commandment of Jonadab your father, and kept all his precepts, and done according unto all he hath commanded you:

19 Therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Jonadab the son of Rechab shall not want a man to stand before me for ever.

V. 11. The Rechabites abode at Jerusalem at this time, not by choice, or through any relaxation of their rules, but to shelter themselves from the invaders. (Note, 2 Kings xxiv. 2.)

V. 13—16. The command given to the Rechabites originated from a man like themselves, to whom their obligations were small, when compared with those of the Jews to their God; and whose authority was limited and Inconsiderable, compared with that of Jeremiah. When Jonadab died, all his authority expired with him: he could no longer remind his children of his injunctions, take cognizance of their conduct, reward their obedience, or punish their disobedience. Yet, out of respect to his memory, deference to his wisdom, or experience of the salutary effects of his counsels, they persevered in observing them. But the Jews disobeyed the commands of God, who daily loaded them with benefits; whose authority continued in full force; who earnestly and frequently reminded them of their duty, and called them to repentance; and who could reward or punish them, as much as and as long as he pleased! Moreover, the commands of Jonadab were far more rigorous than the divine laws, and forbade the use and possession of those things, which God allowed his people to possess and to enjoy. All these considerations tended to expose the folly, ingratitude, and unreasonableness of their disobedience.

V. 18, 19. The Rechabites seem to have been preserved comparatively uncorrupt, by observing these rules: their respect to their venerable ancestor was commendable, and showed a docile disposition; their peculiarities do not seem to have been heaved by superstition, spiritual pride, moroseness, or censoriousness; but to have been subservient to piety. Their temperance, frugality, and hardi-ness, would favor their preservation amid the desolations of the land; even their poverty would tend to secure them from the conqueror: and it was proper that God should avow his readiness to reward every degree of good, when he determined to punish his apostate people. Accordingly he promised, that the family of the Rechabites should be very durably continued; and upheld in the practice of piety and righteousness before him, as his accepted worshippers, even when the Jews were cast out of his sight. This appears to be the meaning of the expression, “to stand before the Lord:” for it cannot be supposed that they performed any service at the temple. Nothing is known respecting the fulfilment of this promise; but doubtless it was performed, and perhaps may be so to this day.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Every method should be used to bring men to repentance; and when promises and threatenings prove ineffectual, we should attempt to shame them out of their iniquities. Man is greatly the creature of habit: thus the abominableness, which to some would be intolerable, to others is easy, because customary; and they are not affected by temptations, which to others are irresistible. The longer and the more carefully wise and pious men have observed the course of the world, the more fully have they been convinced that it is vain, vexatious, and ensnaring: and that separation from it, (as far as duty will admit,) is far safer and happier, than the most successful pursuit of its pleasures and possessions. It may not be advisable for us to restrict ourselves by such rules, as were prescribed by Jonadab: but it is necessary to learn indifference about all
CHAP. XXXVI.

Jeremiah, at God's command, causes Baruch to write in a roll all his threatening prophecies, 1—7. Baruch reads the roll publicly, and afterwards to the princes, who counsel him and Jeremiah to hide themselves, 8—19. Jehudi reads it before Jehoiakim, who casts it into the fire, contrary to the request of the princes; and orders Jeremiah and Baruch to be apprehended: "but the Lord hid them," 20—26. Jeremiah is directed again to write the same, with many like words, and a dreadful sentence against the king; which he does by the hand of Baruch, 27—32.

And it came to pass in the fourth year of Jehoiakim, the son of Josiah, king of Judah, that this word came unto Jeremiah from the Lord, saying,

2 Take thee a roll of a book, and write therein all the words that I have spoken unto thee against Israel, and against Judah, and against all the nations, from the day I spake unto thee, even unto the days of Josiah, even unto this day.

3 It may be that the house of Judah will bear all the evil which I purpose to do unto them; that they may return every man from his evil way; that I may forgive their iniquity and their sin.

4 Then Jeremiah called Baruch the son of Neriah: and Baruch wrote from the mouth of Jeremiah all the words of the Lord, which he had spoken unto him, upon a roll of a book.

5 And Jeremiah commanded Baruch, saying, I am shut up; I cannot go into the house of the Lord:

6 Therefore go thou, and read in the roll, which thou hast written from my mouth, the words of the Lord in the ears of the people, in the Lord's house upon the fasting day: and also thou shalt read them in the ears of all Judah that come out of their cities.

7 It may be they will present their worldly things; to consider ourselves as strangers on earth, and to be devoted to God, and disposed to prefer that station, and that way of life, which are best for our souls. We should habituate our appetites to brook denial even in things lawful; and thus inure ourselves to resist temptation, to be contented with mean fare, and to be prepared for all events. It is not generally advisable for young persons to forsake the plain honest employments of their parents; or to be ambitious of such of a more elegant or fashionable style: that is, amid stronger temptations to pride, luxury, sensuality and rapacity. Prudence and moderation are conducive to piety; and tend to preserve families from the contagion of prevailing iniquity and ungodliness: by abashing competition and envy, they tend to peace and comfort; by avoiding excess, they promote health and long life: the more mortified we are to this present world, the render we shall be to leave it, that we may go to a better: and thus we may live and die happy, though we never possess houses or lands, or those other coveted acquisitions, which most men waste their lives in pursuing. But whatever rules we prescribe to ourselves or receive from others, we must count nothing indispensable but the law of God: for there will be circumstances, when regard to safety may render it necessary to dispense with them. Yet no prudence or good behaviour can exempt us from sharing the common calamities, to which sin hath subjected mankind. How common is it for men to be more observant of the rules of their order, circle, or sect, or of the traditions of their fathers, than professed Christians are of the precepts of God's word! Respect to the memory, and authority or counsel, of pious parents will always meet with some recompense from God, and is commonly made effectual for the continuance of true religion in families through successive generations. But they who can neither be moved by the terror, nor allured by the goodness, of God, to repent of sin and return to him; who despise his authority, which is absolute; their obligations to him, which are infinite; his justice and wrath, which are almighty to punish, and his mercy and readiness to forgive, which are boundless and everlasting, will perish miserably: and all the world will see the justice of God in the condemnation of those who disobey his commandments, and neglect his great salvation.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXVI. V. 1. (Notes xxvi. 1—7. xxxi. 2.)

V. 2. From, Sc. This was twenty-three years, from the thirteenth of Josiah, when the prophet was first appointed to his office. (Notes i.)

V. 3. The Lord foresaw that the people would not hear and obey: but it was proper that the prophet should do every thing that could tend to awaken their attention. His endeavours might be useful to individuals, and the rebels would thus appear the more inexcusable. 'God's foreknowledge of future events does not put any force upon men's will, or take away the liberty of human actions.' (Luther.)

V. 4. Jeremiah seems not to have possessed the skill of a ready writer; and therefore Baruch, who might be a more learned man, was employed as his secretary. We frequently read of him, as the assistant and companion of Jeremiah; (Notes xiv.) (Megg. Reg.) but the apocryphal book that bears his name seems to be altogether a forgery.

V. 5. 'He was under confinement, for having given offence to the king, or the great men, by his prophecies: a calamity which often befall him.' (Luther.) supplication before the Lord, and will return every one from his evil way: 7 for great is the anger and fury that the Lord hath pronounced against this people.

8 And Baruch the son of Neriah 6 did according to all that Jeremiah the prophet commanded him, reading in the book the words of the Lord in the Lord's house:

9 And it came to pass, in the fifth year of Jehoiakim, the son of Josiah, king of Judah, in the ninth month, 8 that they proclaimed a fast before the Lord to all the people in Jerusalem, and to all the people that came from the cities of Judah unto Jerusalem.

10 Then read Baruch in the book the words of Jeremiah in the house of the Lord, 6 in the chamber of Gemariah, the son of Shaphan 7 the scribe, in the higher court, at the entry of the new gate of the Lord's house, in the ears of all the people.

11 When Michaiah the son of Gemariah, the son of Shaphan, had heard out of the book all the words of the Lord;

12 Then he went down into the king's house, into the scribe's chamber, and lo, all the princes sat there, even Elishama the scribe, and Delaiiah the son of Gemariah, and Elhanan the son of Ach

V. 6. Some think, that this was the great expiation, called, by way of eminence, the fast. (Acts xxvii. 9;) but others suppose it to have been a fast that was observed on account of the calamitous state of the nation. 'He showeth, that fasting, without prayer and repentance, availleth nothing, but is mere hypocrisy.'

V. 9. As the command was given in the fourth year of Jehoiakim, and this is dated in his fifth year, many expostulators are of opinion that the roll was twice read: once in the fourth year, when it was little noticed, and afterwards in the fifth year. And as Jeremiah was shut up, when he first ordered Baruch to read the roll, but had liberty to make his escape after it had been read, (5. 19;) they conclude that two distinct readings must be intended. Others think, that the writing of the roll might take up a considerable time; and that it was deemed expedient to wait for the fasting day, as the most convenient time for reading it, which was in the fifth year of Jehoiakim; and that Jeremiah was not shut up in prison, but confined from going to the temple, by some other hindrance: and though he was at liberty when the notice was taken of Baruch's reading the roll, yet he had not gone up to the temple to read it himself. If the roll was twice read, (which indeed seems the more probable opinion,) it is supposed, that the first time was on the great day of stenomation; and that soon after Nebuchadnezzar took Jerusalem, and carried Jehoiakim to Babylon. (Note, 2 Kings, xxiv. 1. Dan. i. 2.) But having made submissions to the victor, he was restored to the throne; and just after his return the roll; was read the second time, on a fast, proclaimed and observed in commemoration of that first taking of Jerusalem; and which hath ever since been annually observed by the Jews on the eighteenth day of the ninth month.

V. 10. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 11—13. Though the fast was proclaimed by authority, yet it does not appear, that either the King or his princes attended the observance of it at the temple. Nor can it be determined, whether Michaiah meant to call the attention of the princes to the word of God, or to inform them against Baruch. Baruch had the use of Gemariah's chamber, who was father to Michaiah, and probably by his consent; and Ahikam, another of Shaphan's sons, protected Jeremiah on a similar occasion. (xxvi. 24;) Yet neither Gemariah nor Ahikam seem to have been present when the roll was read.

V. 16. 'The judgments denounced were so terrible as to make the ears of them that heard them to tingle, (Lowth.)—The godly were afraid, seeing God was so offended; and the wicked were astonished at the horror of the punishment.'

V. 17. 18. Perhaps the princes supposed that Baruch had written his roll from memory; and that it was rather 19 Then said the princes unto Baruch, Go, hide thee, thou and Jeremiah; and let no man know where ye be.

20 ¶ And they went in to the king into the court, (but they laid up the roll in the chamber of Elishama the scribe,) and told all the words in the ears of the king.

21 So the king sent Jehudi to fetch the roll: and he took it out of Elishama the scribe's chamber. And Jehudi read it in the ears of the king, and in the ears of all the princes which stood beside the king.

22 Now the king sat in the winterhouse in the ninth month: and there was a fire on the hearth burning before him.

23 And it came to pass, that when Jehudi had read three or four leaves, he cut it with the penknife, and cast it into the fire that was on the hearth, until the roll was consumed in the fire that was on the hearth.

24 Yet they were not afraid, nor rent their garments, neither the king, nor any of his servants that heard all these words.

25 Nevertheless Elathan, and Delaiah, and Gemariah had made intercession to the king, that he would not burn the roll: but he would not hear them.

26 But the king commanded Jerahmeel the son of Hanamelech, and Seraiah the son of Azriel, and Shelemiah the son of Abdeel, to take Baruch the scribe, and Jeremiah the prophet; but the Lord hid them.

27 ¶ Then the word of the Lord came to Jeremiah, (after that the king had burned the roll, and the words which Baruch wrote at the mouth of Jeremiah,) saying,

28 Take thee again another roll, and write in it all the former words that were in the first roll, which Jehoiakim the king of Judah hath burned.

29 And thou shalt say to Jehoiakim king of Judah, Thus saith the Lord; Thou hast burned this roll, saying, Why hast thou written therein, saying, The king of Babylon shall certainly come and destroy this land, and shall cause to cease from thence man and beast;

30 Therefore thus saith the Lord of Jehoiakim king of Judah; He shall have none to sit upon the throne of David: and his dead body shall be cast out in the day to the heat, and in the night to the frost.

V. 19. The princes had some compunction, that this was a message from God, and were not disposed to persecute Baruch or Jeremiah; yet they would not duly regard the divine authority, nor venture the king's displeasure. He must be informed, and they were aware that he would attempt to apprehend Jeremiah and Baruch, and therefore they advised them to conceal themselves.

V. 22-25. It was scarcely possible for a man to show more contempt and defiance of God, than Jehoiakim did on this occasion. The predictions that he had heard had been delivered during a long course of years, by a prophet of established reputation: many of his prophecies had already been fulfilled; as Jehoiakim's late captivity at Babylon, and his state of submission to Nebuchadnezzar, proved: and they were all coincident with the written word of God, and were addressed immediately to him and his princes. Yet he treated them with the utmost disregard; and deliberately burned the roll, as if the destruction of the sentence could have prevented its execution! And though his princes were not so totally callous, but entreated him not to burn the roll: yet it was a great proof of their insensibility, that they rent not their clothes, and showed no tokens of grief or consternation, either when the roll was read, or when it was so impiously destroyed. Compare Jeboiakim's conduct with that of his father Josiah, in circumstances not totally dissimilar.

(Marg. Ref.)

V. 28. "Hid, &c. Jeremiah and Baruch, by divine direction, lay concealed in some place where their persecutors could not find them.

V. 29. To Jeboiakim. Or, "of Jeboiakim;" for this command seems to have been given to Jeremiah during the time of his concealment." (LXX.). This is the latest prophecy of Jeremiah, in which Jeboiakim is mentioned, or which is dated from the years of his reign; though he lived about six years afterwards, (xxv. 1. xxvi. 1.) Perhaps the prophet lay concealed, during that whole time, from the blood-thirsty rage of the king: at least he was directed to let him alone, as one given up to a depraved mind, for his daring impiety and wickedness on this occasion: while the sentence denounced against him, not being immediately executed, and the prophet apparently silenced, he would be the more hardened in treating the whole as a delusion.
31 And I will *punish him and his seed, and his servants, for their iniquity; and I will bring upon them, and upon the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and upon the men of Judah, all the evil that I have pronounced against them; but they hearkened not.

32 Then took Jeremiah another roll, and gave it to Baruch the scribe, the son of Neriah; who wrote therein from the mouth of Jeremiah, all the words of the book, which Jehoiakim king of Judah had burned in the fire: and there were added besides unto them many † like words.

V. 30, 31. (Note, xxii. 18, 19.) Jeconiah sat a very short time on his father's throne, and being carried captive to Babylon, was succeeded by his uncle Zedekiah. No other of Jehoiakim's race was king over Judah, though some of them had authority under the kings of Persia; and Mary the mother of our Lord was not descended from Solomon, but from Nathan the son of David. Jeconiah indeed is mentioned in our Lord's genealogy by St. Matthew; but that is the line of Joseph, not of Mary, (Notes, xxii. 29, 30. Matt. i. Luke ii. 23—38.)

V. 32. Though the wicked think to have abolished the word of God, when they have burnt the book thereof; yet this declareth that God will not only raise it up again, but also increase it, in greater abundance, to their condemnation. During the persecutions, which the Papists carried on against the reformers and others whom they called heretics; the burning of Bibles was a very common practice, to which this note refers.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—19.

Faithful ministers must use every method of awakening the consciences of sinners, if 'peradventure God will give them repentance, to the acknowledging of the truth.' His revealed word, and not his secret purpose, is the rule of their conduct; and they must 'declare his whole counsel,' whether men will hear or forbear, and without desisting because of ill success.—The Lord declares the evil he purposes to do against sinners; that they may 'hear and fear, and return from their evil ways': they who make this use of his warnings, in dependence on his promised mercy, will find him ready to forgive all their iniquities; and all others will be left without excuse. Different advantages result from the proposal of truth by word of mouth, and by writing; the former is generally more copious, particular, energetic, and affecting; the latter more exact, compendious, and permanent. Both should then be used, 'according to the ability that God giveth to every man.' Many attend upon the outward forms of Religion, and pretend humiliation, mortification, and devotions, who are not humbled for their sins, and who do not mortify their lusts, present their supplication before the Lord, or turn from their evil ways. Yet when multitudes are collected together on such occasions, the ministers of God may find a favourable opportunity of calling them to repentance, and warning ing them to flee from impending judgments. But national fasts, without national reformation, will avail little to turn away the wrath of God; especially as they who appoint such solemnities, often do not so much as sanction them by their own example! A faithful declaration of divine truth will attract some attention: but in general it reaches last the ears of those who are most advanced in rank and authority, and too often finds them most closed against it. Even such as have some conviction of the truth and importance of what they hear, and are disposed to favour those employed in preaching it, are so surrounded with persons of another stamp, and have so many reserves about their own safety, ease, character, interest, or preference, that they often dare not act according to their convictions, but endeavour to silence them as soon as they can, by some evasion or other: and they often flatter themselves into a persuasion, that they act nobly in their circumstances, if they do not take an active part in persecution, but covertly shelter the servants of God from the rage of their enemies. But they who would follow the Lord wholly, and be indeed the disciples of Christ, must be prepared to venture and suffer every thing in his cause.

V. 20—32.

There are degrees of guilt even among the ungodly; and condemnation will be proportioned to them. Some rapidly arrive at the height of impiety and presumption; and none more so, than they who have broken off from a religious education. Many act as if their outrages against the word of God could save them from the condemnation denounced by it; or as if their irrational infidelity could invalidate all the demonstrations which we have of its divine original, and render the sacred oracles of none effect! But such persons should be openly opposed, whatever their rank in life or abilities may be: and a few gentle persuasions do not form a sufficient testimony against their impiety: but their contempt of God's word should be noticed with unequivocal tokens of disapprobation, concern, yea, abhorrence. The Lord himself will protect those who are valiant for his truth, from all their enemies, until they have finished their testimony; and then it is of small consequence by what means they are removed to heaven. But all their opposers will treasure up wrath, and add to the weight of that condemnation, which they could not endure to be told of: for God will honour those who honour him, and in proportion as men despise him, they must sink into contempt and misery.

3 G
And king Zedekiah, the son of Josiah, reigned instead of Coniah the son of Jehoiakim, whom Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon made king in the land of Judah.

And neither he, nor his servants, nor the people of the land, did hearken unto the words of the Lord, which he spake by the prophet Jeremiah.

And Zedekiah the king sent Jehucal the son of Shelemiah, and Zephaniah the son of Maaseiah the priest, to the prophet Jeremiah, saying, Pray now unto the Lord our God for us.

Now Jeremiah came in and went out among the people: for they had not put him into prison.

Then Pharaoh's army was come forth out of Egypt: and when the Chaldeans that besieged Jerusalem heard tidings of them, they departed from Jerusalem.

Then came the word of the Lord unto the prophet Jeremiah, saying, Thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel; Thus shall ye say to the king of Judah, that sent you unto me to inquire of me, Behold, Pharaoh's army, which is come forth to help you, shall return to Egypt into their own land.

And the Chaldeans shall come again, and fight against this city, and take it, and burn it with fire.

Thus saith the Lord, Deceive not yourselves, saying, The Chaldeans shall surely depart from us; for they shall not depart.

For though ye had smitten the whole army of the Chaldeans that fight against you, and there remained of wounded men among them, yet should they rise up every man in his tent, and burn this city with fire.

And it came to pass, that when the army of the Chaldeans was broken up from Jerusalem, for fear of Pharaoh's army,

Then Jeremiah went forth out of Jerusalem to go into the land of Benjamin, to separate himself thence in the midst of the people.

And when he was in the gate of Benjamin, a captain of the ward nas there, whose name nas Irijah, the son of Shelemiah, the son of Hananiah; and he took Jeremiah, saying, "Thou hast spoken against us to the Chaldeans.

Then said Jeremiah, It is false; I fall not away to the Chaldeans. But he hearkened not to him: so Irijah took Jeremiah, and brought him to the princes.

Wherefore the princes were wroth with Jeremiah, and smote him, and put him in prison in the house of Jonathan the scribe: for they had made that the prison.

It is not clear what his intentions were: however, the Lord had otherwise appointed concerning him; and the malignity of his people was exposed by it. For being met with by Irijah, who was the grandson of Hananiah, (the false prophet, as it is most probable,) he was apprehended, and accused of deserting to the Chaldeans; because he had counselled the people to surrender, as the only method of saving themselves and the city: and though he denied the charge, (and doubtless he had no such intention,) he was treated with the utmost cruelty and indignity, and committed to the most dismal and noisome prison which the enraged princes could find out. The former word, rendered prison, often means chains. "They put him in chains, in the house," &c.

In the midst, &c. (12.) Or "from among his people." (Lurtz.) The Septuagint renders it, "to buy among his people;" that is, to buy provisions, which were scarce in the city; but the original does not admit of that meaning.
16 When Jeremiah was entered into the dungeon, and into the cabins, and Jeremiah had remained there many days;

17 Then Zedekiah the king sent and took him out: and the king b asked him secretly in his house, and said, Is there any word from the Lord? And Jeremiah said, There is: for, said he, thou shalt be delivered into the hand of the king of Babylon.

18 Moreover Jeremiah said unto king Zedekiah, What have I offended against thee, or against thy servants, or against this people, that ye have put me in prison?

19 Where are now your prophets which prophesied unto you, saying, The king of Babylon shall not come against you, nor against this land?

20 Therefore hear now, I pray thee, O my lord the king: let my supplication be accepted before thee; that thou cause me not to return to the house of Jonathan the scribe, lest I die there.

21 Then Zedekiah the king commanded that they should commit Jeremiah into the court of the prison, and that they should give him daily a piece of bread out of the bakers' street, until all the bread in the city were spent. Thus Jeremiah remained in the court of the prison.

V. 16. The prophet was left for a considerable time in this wretched condition, till the Chaldeans returned and renewed the siege.

V. 17—21. The princes of Jehoiakim were more favourable to the prophet than their king, and afraid of his displeasure: but Zedekiah was less invertebrate than his princes, and afraid of them in favouring him. When Jeremiah was interrogated about the word of the Lord, he neither concealed nor softened his message, but plainly told the king, that he would be delivered into the hand of the king of Babylon: yet he meant to plead for favour, and to present his supplication to him; to which this might have been deemed a very impolitic preface. But he had truth, reason, justice, and the king's conscience, on his side; and he needed no subtleties or artifices. He could appeal to Zedekiah, that he had not offended him or his princes, except by faithfully declaring his message: and the flattering prophets, who had promised them peace, were convicted by the event of being deceivers. Surely then he ought not to be sent back to his noisome dungeon, where he must shortly die by famine or disease. Zedekiah indeed was induced in some measure to grant his request, yet he still kept him confined; and though he gave orders that he should be supplied with food, so as to secure him from dying for want; yet his sustenance was mean and scanty, and he was soon after treated with great cruelty.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Numbers witness the fatal effects of other men's sins, and yet heedlessly step into their places, and steer the same destructive course: and many, who pay no regard to the instructions and warnings of faithful ministers, will in great extremities, desire their prayers. Every reprise given to hardened sinners encourages their presumption; they trust to fallacious appearances, and despise the word of God; and they deceive themselves by vain words, till wrath comes upon them to the uttermost. But whatever present appearances may be, the Scriptures must be fully read, and the feeblest, most unlikely, or despised persons will suffice to execute the vengeance of God, and to dispel the confidence of those who rebel against him. It is unseparably wearisome to zealous ministers, to witness those crimes and miseries which they cannot prevent: and cruel treatment, united with ill success, is apt to render them reluctant to their work, and disposed to court privacy and obscurity. But every step they take will be misrepresented by perverse opposers: the most disinterested friends of their country may sometimes be treated as traitors or rebels, and the most upright and blameless accused of the worst of crimes; and such callumies will meet with more credit than all their assurances and pleas in their own behalf. Thus, whilst the enemies of God have lodged in palaces and indulged in luxury, his faithful servants have been smarting with wounds, loaded with ignominy and fetters, immersed in loathsome dungeons, or dying by famine or torture. But ere long it will be said of the afflicted believer, and to the prosperous sinner, "Now he is comforted, but thou art consumed." Many secretly favour the servants of God, who, through fear of man and love of sin, will not follow their counsel. No respect of persons, or carnal policy, must warp the plain and direct testimony of the faithful minister, when addressing himself to the proudest and most powerful of the sons of men, whose frown he has most cause to fear, and from whose favour he might hope many temporal advantages. Yet, as far as consists with this faithfulness, he may properly reason with those who injuriously treat him; inquire what offence he has committed by plainly speaking the word of God; and show that they who flatter them are proved to be deceivers by evident facts, and stand condemned even in the consciences of those who suffer themselves to be deluded by them: and even they, who are most ready to die for the truth, may and ought to use lawful means of self preservation, and of obtaining fairer treatment. All this, however, should be done with great meekness; without reproaches, or acrimonious complaints: and the bolder any man is in the cause of God, the more gentle, patient, and plant, should be about his own concerns: his message must be delivered with authority over the consciences even of the greatest princes; but he should be ready to speak with deference and submission, and as a supplicant, when pleading his own cause. The Lord has all hearts in his hands, and can incline his enemies.
JEREMIAH.

CHAP. XXXVIII.

Jeremiah, being accused of disheartening the people by his prophecies, is cast into a miry dungeon, 1—6. He is taken out at the suit of Ebed-melech, an Ethiopian, 7—13. In a private conference, he counsels Zedekiah to save himself and the city, by surrendering, 14—23. Zedekiah requiring him, he conceals what had passed from the princes; and remains in the court of the prison, till the taking of the city, 24—28.

THEN Shephatiah the son of Mattan, and Gedaliah the son of Pashur, and Jucal the son of Shelemiah, and Pashur the son of Malchiah, heard the words that Jeremiah had spoken unto all the people, saying,

2 Thus saith the Lord, He that remaineth in this city shall die by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence: but he that goeth forth to the Chaldeans shall live; for he shall have his life for a prey, and shall live.

3 Thus saith the Lord, This city shall surely be given into the hand of the king of Babylon's army, which shall take it.

4 Therefore the princes said unto the king, We beseech thee, let this man be put to death: for thus he weakeneth the hands of the men of war that remain in this city, and in the hands of all the people, in speaking such words unto them: for this man seeketh not the welfare of this people, but the hurt.

5 Then Zedekiah the king said, Be hold, he is in your hand: for the king is not he that can do any thing against you.

6 Then took they Jeremiah, and cast him into the dungeon of Malchiah the son of Hammelech, that was in the court of the prison: and they let down Jeremiah with cords. And in the dungeon there was no water, but mire: so Jeremiah sunk in the mire.

7 ¶ Now when Ebed-melech the Ethiopian, one of the eunuchs which was in the king's house, heard that they had put Jeremiah in the dungeon; (the king then sitting in the gate of Benjamin;) 8 Ebed-melech went forth out of the king's house, and spake to the king, saying,

9 My lord the king, these men have done evil in all that they have done to Jeremiah the prophet, whom they have cast into the dungeon; and he is like to die for hunger in the place where he is: for there is no more bread in the city.

10 Then the king commanded Ebed-melech the Ethiopian, saying, Take hence thirty men with thee, and take up Jeremiah the prophet out of the dungeon before he die.

11 So Ebed-melech took the men with him, and went into the house of the king under the treasury, and took thence old cast clouts, and old rotten rags, and let them down by cords into the dungeon to Jeremiah.

12 And Ebed-melech the Ethiopian said unto Jeremiah, Put now these old rags and clouts under your loins, and go out.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXVIII. V. 1—6. Some of these persons were sent by Zedekiah to Jeremiah, to inquire concerning the event of the siege, and to desire his prayers. (Notes, xxxvii. 1—10.) Jeremiah, though confined in the court of the prison, continued to prophesy; and they who had access to him dispersed his predictions throughout the city. This greatly offended the princes, who determined to defend themselves to the last extremity; and they resolved to put him to death. In order to this they represented him to the king, as an enemy to the people, who intentionally sought their hurt; though his labours, sufferings, tears, and supplications, abundantly proved his fervent love to them; and Zedekiah (who seems to have been a prince of slender capacity, and who was greatly in the power of his nobles, by reason of his difficult circumstances;) would not venture any thing to protect him, but abjectly left him in the hands of his enemies. Having thus got his consent, the malicious princes without delay caus'd the prophet to be let down into a dungeon or pit, where he sank in the mire, and must soon miserably have perished. Possibly they intended to have then given out that he was dead in prison; and perhaps this dungeon was prepared for such silent executions. 'Some think that when he was in this dismal place, he made those mournful meditations, which are set down in the third chapter of the Lamentations.' (Lowth.)—Hammelech signifies the king: the dungeon seems to have belonged to one of Zedekiah's sons.
cast clouts and rotten rags under thine arm-holes, under the cords. And Jeremiah did so.

13 So they drew up Jeremiah with cords, and took him out of the dungeon: and Jeremiah remained in the court of the prison.

14 ¶ Then Zedekiah the king sent, and took Jeremiah the prophet unto him into the third entry that is in the house of the Lord: and the king said unto Jeremiah, I will ask thee a thing; hide nothing from me.

15 Then Jeremiah said unto Zedekiah, If I declare it unto thee, wilt thou not surely put me to death? and if I give thee counsel, wilt thou not hearken unto me?

16 So Zedekiah the king sware secretly unto Jeremiah, saying, As the Lord liveth, that made us this soul, I will not put thee to death, neither will I give thee into the hand of these men that seek thy life.

17 Then said Jeremiah unto Zedekiah, Thus saith the Lord, the God of hosts, the God of Israel, If thou wilt assuredly go forth unto the king of Babylon's princes, then thy soul shall live, and this city shall not be burned with fire; and thou shalt live, and thine house.

18 But if thou wilt not go forth unto the king of Babylon's princes, then shall this city be given into the hand of the Chaldeans, and they shall burn it with fire, and thou shalt not escape out of their hand.

19 And Zedekiah the king said unto Jeremiah, I am afraid of the Jews that are fallen to the Chaldeans, lest they deliver me into their hand, and they mock me.

20 But Jeremiah said, They shall not deliver thee. *Obey, I beseech thee, the voice of the Lord, which I speak unto thee: so it shall be well unto thee, and thy soul shall live.

21 But *if thou refuse to go forth, this is the word that the Lord hath shewed me:

22 And, behold, all the women that are left in the king of Judah's house, shall be brought forth to the king of Babylon's princes, and those women shall say, *Thy friends *have set thee on, and have prevailed against thee, 'thy feet *are".

V. 7—13. We have here an example of fortitude and active kindness as noble, as the conduct of the princes was base and disingenuous. Ebed melech, a Cushite, a stranger, probably a negro, whose name seems to imply that he had been the king's slave, though now preferred, was employed to deliver the prophet, and to shame the Jews. Hearing that Jeremiah had been cast into the dungeon, without hesitation or delay, and without fearing the wrath of the nobles, he boldly went to Zedekiah, when engaged in public business; and plainly told him, that they had done evil, in acting so cruelly towards the prophet of God; and that he must soon perish for hunger in the dungeon: (for perhaps he was not aware that he must have been suffocated with the mire, or destroyed by the exhalations of so noisome a cavern.) By this representation he obtained from the king a commission to rescue Jeremiah, and a guard to protect him in this service, which he performed with great promptitude and tenderness; and thus saved a most valuable life, though not without the hazard of his own.

To die for, &c. *They needed not to have put him into the dungeon; he would have died of hunger, without adding the cruelty of that punishment; "for there is, &c." (Lowneth.)—This, however, does not seem to be the obvious meaning of the words: and perhaps Ebed-melech was not aware what a dreadful place the dungeon was; but was fully assured that the prophet, being confined and out of sight, would perish by hunger, for none would carry him any food, when the famine in the city was extreme.
are sunk in the mire, and they are turned away back.

23 So they shall bring out all thy wives and thy children to the Chaldeans: and thou shalt not escape out of their hand, but shall be taken by the hand of the king of Babylon: and thou shalt cause this city to be burned with fire.

24 Then said Zedekiah unto Jeremiah, Let no man know of these words, and thou shalt not die.

25 But if the princes hear that I have talked with thee, and they come unto thee, and say unto thee, Declare unto us now what thou hast said unto the king, hide it not from us, and we will not put thee to death: also what the king said unto thee:

26 Then thou shalt say unto them, I presented my supplication before the king, that he would not cause me to return to Jonathan's house, to die there.

27 Then came all the princes unto Jeremiah, and asked him: and he told them according to all these words that the king had commanded. So they left off speaking with him; for the matter was not perceived.

28 So Jeremiah abode in the court of the prison, until the day that Jerusalem was taken: and he was there when Jerusalem was taken.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-13.

Nothing but close confinement or death can totally silence the zealous servant of God: whatever he suffers or fears, he cannot but declare his message, as he hath opportunity; and he cannot consent to any alteration or compromise respecting it. Submission to Providence, and to those who obtain the pre-eminence, is very contrary to the proud heart of man. But though liberty is very valuable, and worthy to be preserved at a great price, yet we must not rebel against God, or throw away our lives, if he please to permit us to be deprived of it. — They who point out to men the only way of safety and happiness, and who spend themselves, in the most disinterested manner, to promote their present and future welfare, must expect to be deemed enemies, and worthy of death, for declaring the whole truth! Doubtless their counsels and warnings tend to weaken the hands of those who fight against God: their words run counter to the projects and lusts, and are uneasy to the consciences, of worldly men; and therefore they conclude that they seek the hurt, and not the welfare, of the people. Thus the wicked, when armed with power, are pushed forward to persecution; while they who secretly favour them, often do not think it worth while to risk any thing for their protection. Man's cruel ingenuity has invented various methods of torture and destruction; and persecutors have always been most remarkable for refinement in cruelty. Besides the numbers who have been openly tortured and put to death, it will never be known how many servants of God have privately been dispatched, till "the earth shall disclose her blood, and no more cover her slain." But till the "witnesses have finished their testimony," the malice of their enemies must be frustrated: for God will raise up instruments for their protection, where they might have been least expected. Equity, humanity, piety, and zealous boldness, in a good cause, have been found in persons of every climate, complexion, or rank in life; and the Lord often chooses those, who by birth, education, and outward circumstances, labour under peculiar disadvantages; in order
3 And all the princes of the king of Babylon came in, and sat in the middle gate, even Nebuchadrezzar, king of Babylon, and all his army against Jerusalem, and they besieged it.

4 And it came to pass, that when Nebuchadrezzar the king of Judah saw them, and all the men of war, then they fled, and went forth out of the city by night, by the way of the king's garden, by the gate betwixt the two walls: and he went out the way of the plain.

5 But the Chaldeans' army pursued after them, and overtook Zedekiah in the plains of Jericho: and when they had taken him, they brought him to Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon; and to Riblah in the land of Hamath, where he gave judgment upon him.

to shame the conduct of degenerate professors. Even the retirements, or engagements, of princes should be interrupted, to prevent the shedding of innocent blood. In such a cause, we should neither fear the displeasure of man, nor any personal consequence; for where so great evil is about to be done, decided plain language is becoming, though the greatest princes be the perpetrators of the mischief. They who use their influence in the fear of God, to prevent injustice, oppression, or murder, may expect that he will protect and prosper them: and those timid tempers, which are easily seduced into sinful compliances, may often be as easily engaged by firm expostulation, to retract, and to prevent the consequences. Promptitude and tenderness should always concur in our efforts to relieve the distressed; and the manner of showing kindness is sometimes as expressive and as agreeable, as the favour itself.

V. 14—23.

The man of God must never yield to resentment, or suffer himself to be overcome of evil: he must ever be ready to give good counsel, and to promote the salvation of those who have most deeply injured him: he ought to do any thing to win upon them, except flattering them or offending his Lord. It is not always necessary to endeavour to oblige, by repeated warnings, which they have often heard in vain. It may be proper to appeal to their consciences, whether they be not determined against doing the will of God, though they pretend to inquire after it? And it may sometimes be prudent to require of them promises, that they will not resent or punish us for what is spoken. Yet, if any relenting appear, and there be even a distant hope of succeeding, we should not be too anxious about our own safety; but declare the whole counsel of God, and leave the event with him. Whilst men have only some general convictions, and not a steady realizing faith, they will be unstable in all their ways. The fear of reproach will preponderate against the fear of almighty God: and every trifle will induce them to refuse that obedience, which alone can ensure their welfare and the life of their souls. Thus men treat faithful monitors with enemies, and flattering sycophants as bosom-friends, and bring on themselves by disobedience the very evils they dreaded from obedience; till their feet sink in the mire, their selfish friends forsake them, and they involve their families and connexions with them in inevitable destruction. But when ministers faithfully counsel and warn powerful ungodly men, they may consider themselves as highly favoured, if they be not put to death, or delivered up to the will of their enemies. The less men fear God, the more they fear their fellow creatures; and often they dare not act according to their own judgments, consciences, or inclinations, lest they should be censured by their own servants! We are not, however, bound to speak all we know to gratify our enemies, when no good end can be answered: and a partial evasive answer, if not contrary to truth, is sufficient for an impertinent and malicious inquiry. We have then need to be wise as serpents, and harmless as doves.”

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXIX. V. 1. (Notes, &c. 2 Kings xxv.)

V. 2. Broken. ‘Such breaches were made in the walls, that the army of the Chaldeans entered.’

V. 4. Zedekiah, &c. ‘Instead of submitting,—as Jeremiah had advised, Zedekiah endeavoured to make his escape.’

V. 5. Riblah. ‘Most interpreters suppose this city to be the same which was called Antioch, in after times, when it was re-edified by Seleucus.’

Gave judgment. ‘As against one who had broken his oath of fidelity.’ (Louv.) (Marg. Ref.)
6 Then the king of Babylon slain the sons of Zedekiah, in Riblah before his eyes: also the king of Babylon slain all the nobles of Judah.

7 Moreover he put out Zedekiah's eyes, and bind him with chains, to carry him to Babylon.

8 And the Chaldeans burned the king's house, and the houses of the people, with fire, and brake down the walls of Jerusalem.

9 Then Nebuzaradan the captain of the guard carried away captive into Babylon the remnant of the people, that remained in the city, and those that fell away, that fell to him, with the rest of the people that remained.

10 But Nebuzaradan the captain of the guard left of the poor of the people, which had nothing, in the land of Judah, and gave them vineyards and fields at the same time.

11 Now Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon brought in charge concerning Jeremiah, to Nebuzaradan, the captain of the guard, saying, 12 Take him, and look well to him, and do him no harm; but do unto him even as he shall say unto thee.

V. 11—14. Nebuchadnezzar doubtless had heard of Jeremiah's predictions, many of which were now fulfilled; and this would dispose him to respect his character; he had likewise no doubt been informed, that the prophet had suffered many things, for advising the Jews to surrender. The prophet was therefore set at liberty, to go home to Anathoth, or elsewhere, as he pleased, and accordingly he at length joined the remnant under Gedaliah. (Notes, xl. 1—6.)

V. 15—18. This message was sent to Ebed-melech before the taking of the city. He seems to have been afraid of the princes, whom he had offended by his kind- ness to Jeremiah: but the Lord assurred him, that they would in a very little time be deprived of power; for the city would soon be destroyed. At the same time he was assured of protection in that catastrophe: he should escape with his life, whilst others fell by the sword: seeing he had so trusted in the Lord, as to expose himself to danger, by rescuing his prophet from his powerful persecutors.—It is worth remark, that his confidence in God, rather than his kindness to Jeremiah, is assigned as the special reason of the promise here made to him. Had he been kind to the prophet, merely from humanity, or inferior motives, it would not have been noticed in this manner; but exerting himself to deliver a prophet, "in the name of a prophet, he received a prophet's reward." (Marg. Ref.)

13 So Nebuzaradan the captain of the guard sent, and Nebushasban, Rab-saris, and Nergal-sharezer, Rab-mag, and all the king of Babylon's princes;

14 Even Nebuzaradan the captain of the guard carried away out of the court of the prison, and committed him unto Gedaliah, the son of Ahikam the son of Shaphan, that he should carry him home: so he dwelt among the people.

15 ¶ Now the word of the Lord came unto Jeremiah, while he was shut up in the court of the prison, saying, 16 Go, and speak to Ebed-melech the Ethiopian, saying, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Behold, I will bring my words upon this city for evil, and not for good; and they shall be accomplished in that day before thee.

17 But I will deliver thee in that day, saith the Lord: and thou shalt not be given into the hand of the men, of whom thou art afraid.

18 For I will surely deliver thee, and thou shalt not fall by the sword, but thy life shall be for a prey unto thee; because thou hast put thy trust in me, saith the Lord.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

"He that being often reproved hardeneth his neck, shall suddenly perish, and that without remedy!" and they, who will not credit the words of God, will be dreadfully convinced by the event, that not one of them fails of accomplishment.—They fatally err, who mistake reprobates for pardons; and they labour in vain, who attempt to resist or elude the executioners of divine vengeance.—External sanctity will be equally vanishing with magnificence or strong fortifications, to defend sinners against deserved wrath; and their obstinacy often occasions the ruin and misery of their children, relatives, and neighbours, as well as their own.—How precarious are earthly possessions! And how soon are they shifted from one hand to another, especially in times of public calamity! But whether the Lord make men poor or rich, nothing can durably profit them, whilst they cleave to their sins.—The servants of God alone are prepared for all events; they are delivered and comforted, when the wicked are suffering for their crimes; and they often meet with more respect and kindness from the profane, than from hypocrites. God, however, will raise them up friends, and do them good, and perform all his promises to them. "In every nation, he that feareth God, and worketh righteousness, is accepted of him," and he will reward men for the kindness that they should show to his people for his sake. He
CHAPTER XL.

Jeremiah, being dismissed by the Chaldeans, returns to Gedaliah, 1—6. The fugitive Jews resort to Gedaliah, who encourages them to cultivate the land, 7—12. Johanan, discovering a plot against Gedaliah, is not believed, 13—16.

THERmehichc ome to Jeremiah from the Lord, after that Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard had let him go from Ramah, when he had taken him, being bound in chains, among all that were carried away captive of Jerusalem and Judah, which were carried away captive unto Babylon.

2 And the captain of the guard took Jeremiah, and said unto him, The Lord thy God hath pronounced this evil upon this place.

3 Now the Lord hath brought it, and done according as he hath said: because ye have sinned against the Lord, and have not obeyed his voice, therefore this thing is come upon you.

4 And now, Behold, I loose thee this day from the chains which I put upon thy hand. If it seem good unto thee to come with me into Babylon, come; and I will look well unto thee: but if it seem ill unto thee to come with me into Babylon, forbear: behold, all the land is before thee: whither it seemeth good and convenient for thee to go, thither go.

5 Now while he was not yet gone back, he said, Go back also to Gedaliah the son of Ahikam the son of Shaphan, whom the king of Babylon hath made governor over the cities of Judah, and dwell with him among the people: or go wheresoever it seemeth convenient unto thee to go. So the captain of the guard gave him victuals and a reward, and let him go.

6 Then went Jeremiah unto Gedaliah the son of Ahikam to Mizpah; and dwelt with him among the people that were left in the land.

7 ¶ Now when all the captains of the forces which were in the fields, even they and their men, heard that the king of Babylon had made Gedaliah the son of Ahikam governor in the land, and had committed unto him men, and women, and children, and of the poor of the land, of them that were not carried away captive to Babylon;

8 Then they came to Gedaliah to Mizpah, even Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, and Johanan and Jonathan the sons of Kareah, and Seraijah the son of Tanhumeth, and the sons of Ephaiah the Netophathite, and Jezaniah the son of Pekahiah.

9 And Gedaliah the son of Ahikam the son of Shaphan sware unto them, and unto their men, saying, Fear not to serve the Chaldeans: dwell in the land, and serve the king of Babylon, and he shall be well with you.

10 As for me, behold, I will dwell at Mizpah, to serve the Chaldeans which will come unto us: but ye, gather ye wine, and summer-fruits, and oil, and put them in your vessels, and dwell in your cities which ye have taken.

of them, and carried to Ramah; and that he was there again set at liberty, in the manner here related.

V. 2, 3. The Jews were so blinded, that they could not see, or would not acknowledge, the hand of God in these events, or that they were the punishment of their sins. But this Gentile evidently perceived it: and perhaps he thought, that this justified all the violence and cruelty which he and the Chaldeans had committed.

V. It is doubtful whether Jeremiah acted prudently in this decision: the event seems to indicate the contrary. He had received no intimations from God, that the Jews should prosper again in their own land, till seventy years were expired. But he was influenced by love to the promised land and to the remnant of his people; and he preferred the hopes of doing them good, to any favour that could have been shown him in Babylon.

13 H

NOTES.

CHAP. XL. V. 1. The word, &c. This is rather the title of the subsequent part of the book, than of what follows in this chapter, which is wholly historical. It seems that Jeremiah, after he had been freed from prison, continued among the Jews, till he was bound with others.

VOL. III.—No. 21.
11 Likewise when all the Jews that were in Moab, and among the Ammonites, and in Edom, and that were in all the countries, heard that the king of Babylon had left a remnant of Judah, and that he had set over them Gedaliah the son of Ahikam the son of Shaphan;

12 Even all the Jews returned out of all places whither they were driven, and came to the land of Judah, to Gedaliah unto Mispar, and gathered wine and summer-fruits very much.

13 ¶ Moreover Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces that were in the fields, came to Gedaliah to Mizpah, 14 And said unto him, Dost thou certainly know, that Baalis the king of the Ammonites hath sent Ishmael the son of Nethaniah to slay thee? But Gedaliah the son of Ahikam believed them not.

15 Then Johanan the son of Kareah spake to Gedaliah in Mizpah secretly, saying, ¶ Let me go, I pray thee, and I will slay Ishmael, and he will say slay the son of Nethaniah, and no man shall know it; ¶ wherefore should he slay thee, that all the Jews which are gathered unto thee should be scattered, and the remnant of Judah perish?

16 But Gedaliah the son of Ahikam said unto Johanan the son of Kareah, ¶ Thou shalt not do this thing: for thou speakest falsely of Ishmael.

---

V. 7—12. (xxvi. 24.) Perhaps Gedaliah had before surrendered to the Chaldeans; or by some services, or his general character for integrity and capacity, he had recommended himself to the confidence of the victors. It was not their intention entirely to desolate the land: and therefore they wished to induce the poor remains of the Jews to settle there; as they feared no further resistance, now Jerusalem lay in ruins, and their rulers and nobles were either slain or made captives. They therefore placed Gedaliah over them, to encourage them to settle and cultivate their lands. Accordingly he fixed his residence at Mizpah: and many of those, who had commanded bodies of troops in different parts of the land, and who had fled into the adjacent countries, now repaired to Gedaliah, with some hopes of enjoying peace and acquiring a settlement. Gedaliah seems to have been an upright man and a cordial friend to his people, and well approved by them. (Marg. Ref.) He encouraged them to expect protection from the Chaldeans, whilst they continued in quiet subjection: he engaged with a solemn oath not to injure or oppress them, but to do them all the service in his power: and he exacted from them to make all the provision they could for their wants, by collecting such of the fruits of the earth as had escaped the ravages of war. Accordingly their numbers increased; they found great abundance of provisions; and they had a fair prospect of again prospering, had not their unrepented wickedness entailed divine judgments on them.

---

SEREC. (10.) Or stand before the Chaldeans, as a mediator.

V. 13—16. Johanan and his companions seem to have acted honestly in this affair. They had received certain intelligence of the plot formed against Gedaliah's life, and consequently against the whole new settlement. Ishmael, (whose very name seemed hostile to Israel,) being a branch of David's family, was perhaps displeased that another was preferred above him. And the king of the Ammonites, (as it seems, out of hatred to the Jews,) employed him to slay Gedaliah. But Gedaliah meaning honestly, was too unsuspecting: and as Johanan proposed a violent method of defeating Ishmael's design, it is probable that he considered the information as malicious. Yet he certainly ought to have examined into the evidence, and to have confined Ishmael; or to have taken some precautions for his own safety, on which that of the people so much depended. But he was left to this indiscretion, that judgment might come to the uttermost on this incorrigible remnant of Jews.

---

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Many can see the justice of God's judgments, and the truth of his words, in the case of others, who are heedless or blind as to those things which relate to themselves. Nay, some can plead the prophecies, in vindication of their own cruel oppressions, and think themselves justified, because the scripture is fulfilled; though it was equally fulfilled by the treachery of Judas and the malice of those who crucified Christ! None, however, are so hardened as apostate professors of religion. It is allowable for faithful ministers to receive the professed kindness even of ungodly men, when it can be done without appearance of selfishness; when it does not tend to deceive the giver; and when it is not to be purchased or repaid by any sinful compliances or flatteries. Nay, their counsel may be often taken in secular matters: for they are wise in their generation. They who earnestly desire the salvation of sinners and the prosperity of the church, are apt to take encouragement, from transient appearances, to expect better times: and they prefer the hope of being useful, to the most secure and profitable situations, in which they would be shut out from God's ordinances, and waste their lives to no purpose. After heavy calamities, men might obtain peace and comfort, if they would but submit to Providence, and to those placed over them; if they accommodated themselves to their circumstances, and applied themselves with diligence, quietness, and honesty, to the duties of their station; and, especially, if they did but repent of their sins, and seek peace with God and protection from him. But his wrath pursues the impenitent into every place and condition; and whilst pride, ambition, avarice, or revenge, bear rule, men will form new projects, and be restless in mischief, which commonly ends in their
Now it came to pass in the seventh month, that Ishmael the son of Nethaneiel the son of Elishama, of the seed royal, and the princes of the king, even ten men with him, came unto Gedaliah the son of Ahikam to Mizpah; and there they did eat bread together in Mizpah.

2 Then arose Ishmael the son of Nethaneiel, and the ten men that were with him, and smote Gedaliah the son of Ahikam the son of Shaphan with the sword, and slew him, whom the king of Babylon had made governor over the land.

3 Ishmael also slew all the Jews that were with him, even with Gedaliah, at Mizpah, and the Chaldeans that were found there, and the men of war.

4 And it came to pass, the second day after he had slain Gedaliah, and no man knew it,

5 That there came certain from Shechem, from Shiloh, and from Samaria, even fourscore men, having their beards shaven, and their clothes rent, and having cut themselves; with offerings and incense in their hand, to bring them to the house of the Lord.

6 And Ishmael the son of Nethaneiel went forth from Mizpah to meet them, weeping all along as he went: and it came to pass, as he met them, he said unto them, Come to Gedaliah the son of Ahikam.

7 And it was so, when they came into the midst of the city, that Ishmael the son of Nethaneiel slew them, and cast them into the midst of the pit, he, and the men that were with him.

8 But ten men were found among them, that said unto Ishmael, Slay us not; for we have treasures in the field, of wheat, and of barley, and of oil, and of honey. So he forbore, and slew them not among their brethren.

own ruin and that of others. Advancement above such as were equals or superiors always excites envy and opposition: and no equity, kindness, or services, can afford security from the assaults of turbulent enmity and disappointed ambition. —When men mean well, they are often too free from suspicion; and even information and good counsel, when given with violence and connected with unjustifiable proposals, will often be rejected by conscientious persons. We have, however, need to be wise as serpents, as well as harmless as doves; not only for our own preservation, but to prevent "one sinner from destroying much good." But we should especially learn to trust in God alone; as the most powerful earthly protectors cannot secure us from the base designs of even very mean and inconsiderable enemies.

NOTES.

CHAP. XLII. V. 1. Seventh, &c. Three months after the temple was destroyed. The fast in the seventh month was observed in remembrance of the murder of Gedaliah. (Marg. Ref.)

—Princes. Some of the chief officers belonging to Gedaliah. (xxvi. 12.) These brought a great number of others with them as their retinue; or else they could not have made such destruction as they did. (Lowth.)—These "princes of the king" might join with Ishmael, from hatred to the Chaldeans, as well as envy of Gedaliah.

V. 2, 3. Gedaliah was evidently imprudent in taking no precaution against a person, whom he had great reason to suspect, both as a rival, and on account of the caution which Johanan had given him; but his unsuspecting generosity aggravated the baseness of Ishmael's conduct. Had not the other captives been inflated, either by envy, resentment, or by a selfish regard to their private concerns, they would have been more careful in defending a life on which the safety of the whole company so greatly depended. —Ishmael, by coming to Gedaliah, had virtually submitted to his authority and claimed his protection; and he was at this time, along with his friends, hospitably entertained by Gedaliah. Yet he slew all that joined with Gedaliah in opposing him: for several of the commanders, as well as the greatest part of the people, were still left alive, as it appears by the sequel. (Lowth.) Many of these, however, seem to have been absent from Mizpah at this time, gathering in the fruits of the earth, or attending to their private concerns; so that all present, that stood out in resistance, seem to have been slain; and the rest kept in close confinement, that the transaction might be concealed, till Ishmael had completed his designs.

V. 4—5. The care which had been taken to conceal the murder of Gedaliah, &c. gave Ishmael an opportunity of still further increasing the number and atrocity of his crimes. The places here mentioned had belonged to the kingdom of Israel: but they lay not far from Mizpah; and it is probable, that these men were Jews, who had returned to Gedaliah, and confident in his protection, had fixed their residence in different places, in order to gather in the fruits of the earth. They expressed their grief for the calamities of the nation, by some observations which 9 Now the pit wherein Ishmael had cast all the dead bodies of the men, whom he had slain, because of Gedaliah, was in which Asa the king had made; for fear of Baasha king of Israel: and Ishmael the son of Nethaniah filled it with "then that were slain.

10 Then Ishmael carried away captive all the residue of the people that were in Mizzpah, even the king's daughters, and all the people that remained in Mizzpah, whom Nebuzaradan the captain of the guard had committed to Gedaliah the son of Ahikam; and Ishmael the son of Nethaniah carried them away captive, and departed to go over to the Ammonites.

11 ¶ But when Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces that were with him, heard of all the evil that Ishmael the son of Nethaniah had done, 12 Then they took all the men, and went to fight with Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, and found him by the great waters that are in Gibeah.

13 Now it came to pass, that when all the people, which were with Ishmael, saw Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces that were with him, then they were glad.

14 So all the people that Ishmael had carried away captive from Mizpah cast about and returned, and went unto Johanan the son of Kareah.

15 But Ishmael the son of Nethaniah escaped from Johanan with eight men, and went to the Ammonites.

16 Then took Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces, that were with him, and all the remnant of the people, whom he had recovered from Ishmael the son of Nethaniah, from Mizpah, (after that he had slain Gedaliah the son of Ahikam,) even mighty men of war, and the women, and the children, and the eunuchs, whom he had brought again from Gibeon:

17 And they departed, and dwelt in the habitations of Chimham, which is by Bethlehem, to go into Egypt.

18 Because of the Chaldeans: for they were afraid of them, Because Ishmael the son of Nethaniah had slain Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, whom the king of Babylon made governor in the land.

were forbidden in the law, on funeral occasions; (Marg. Ref.) but which were customary, and perhaps counted allowable, in seasons of public calamity. Some think, that Gedaliah, after the destruction of the temple, had erected an altar, and appointed a temporary place of worship at Mizpah, to which they purposed to carry their offerings; but it is more likely, that they meant to show their regard to the ruins of the temple, and there to offer their oblations, as well as the circumstances would admit.

—The hypocrisy of Ishmael, in pretending to share their sorrows, and inviting them to see Gedaliah; and then murdering a company of men who gave him no provocation, without sparing any but those who appealed to his avarice, when added to his other crimes, constituted a complication of atrocious wickedness, which has scarcely ever been exceeded. Perhaps he hoped at first to have won them over to his party; but perceiving their attachment to Gedaliah, he thus wreaked his vengeance on them.

V. 9, Pit. Asa fortified Mizpah; and in doing this, he would make trenches as well as ramparts: but perhaps this pit was some hiding-place, which he prepared for security, in case Bashi should suddenly assault him. (Marg. Ref.) (Notes, 2 Chr. xvi.)

V. 10. Perhaps Ishmael had at first hoped that the Jews would have joined him; and that by the help of the king of Ammon, he should be able to make a stand against the Chaldeans, who had withdrawn most of their forces from that neighbourhood. But he now despaired of success in that way; and proceeded to carry the whole unarmed multitude captive into the land of Ammon. Among them, it seems, were some daughters of king Zedekiah, who had been left to the care of Gedaliah, when his sons were slain; and these, being recovered from Ishmael by Johanan, went down with him into Egypt, and seem to have perished there with the other Jews.

V. 11—15. Johanan seems to have been employed, at a distance from Gedaliah: so that it was some time before he heard tidings of these tragic events. But when he was informed of them, he immediately pursued Ishmael, who had not courage to face him; and being left by those whom he had detained as prisoners, he escaped the avenging sword of Johanan. Ishmael came to Gedaliah with ten men, who are supposed to have been princes of Judah, with their retainers: but he fled with only eight men. Perhaps the others had before left him, or had lost their lives in these bloody transactions; and, if they had retainers, these might think it safer to join Johanan, than to accompany Ishmael in his flight.

V. 16-17. Johanan had hitherto acted right: and it was proper that he should assume the command, till the king of Babylon had been informed. But he and the other princes, having taken a decided part against Ishmael, had no sufficient reason to fear lest the Chaldeans would revenge the murder of Gedaliah on them. Perhaps Joha-
CHAPTER XLII.

Johanan and his company desire Jeremiah to inquire of God for them, and promise implicit obedience, 1—6. He charges them with hypocrisy in asking counsel which they did not mean to follow, 19—22.

THEN all the captains of the forces, and Johanan the son of Kareah, and Zedaniah the son of Hoshaiah, and all the people from the least even unto the greatest, came near, 2 And said unto Jeremiah the prophet, Let us beseech thee, our supplication be accepted before thee, and pray for us unto the Lord thy God, even for all this remnant: (for we are left but a few of many, as thine eyes do behold us;) 3 That the Lord thy God may shew us the way wherein we may walk, and the thing that we may do. 4 Then Jeremiah the prophet said unto them, I have heard you; behold, I will pray unto the Lord your God according to your words; and it shall come to pass, that whatsoever thing the Lord shall answer you, I will declare it unto you; 5 But I will keep nothing back from you. 6 Then they said to Jeremiah, The Lord be a true and faithful witness between us, if we do not even according to all things, for which the Lord thy God shall send thee to us. 7 Whether it be good, or whether it be evil, we will obey the voice of the Lord our God, to whom we send thee: 8 That it may be well with us, when we obey the voice of the Lord our God.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

When God is provoked to leave men to themselves and to the temptations of Satan, they are hurried on into every kind of wickedness; their impetuous passions burst through all restraints, and misery and destruction attend their ways. While divine judgments are executing on guilty nations, the best men are often first cut off, for the punishment of the survivors. Candour and generosity frequently expose men to be base designs of those wretches, who are of their father the devil, and closely copy his example of subtlety, malice, and murder. They, who hate the worshippers of God, can assume the appearance of piety and love, that they may better accomplish their purposes: and the thirst for blood, like other depraved appetites, becomes more insatiable by every gratification, until men delight in murder for its own sake. It is sometimes well for mankind, that one selfish passion restrains another in the conduct of those who are not influenced by a better motive, Thus avarice checks the progress of cruelty, ambition and pride that of licentiousness, the love of licentious pleasures that of avarice, ambition and revenge; and the fear of consequences restrains all the other selfish passions. By these and such like means the Lord bounds and over-rules the wickedness of ungodly men; and provides for the accomplishment of his own wise designs, whether of judgment or of mercy. As death in such varied forms meets men in those places where they least expect it, we should continually inquire, whether we be in such a state and frame of mind, as we should wish to be found in when called to appear before our Judge? And as men readily give all their substance to ransom their lives, how ready should we be to forsake all for the salvation of our souls! If our hearts delight in the ordinances of God, and are disposed to sympathize in the afflictions of his people, and to regard the interests of true religion as our interests, death can do us no harm; but will remove us to that happy place, where all tears will be wiped from our eyes. They who are most savage in their cruelty to those that are not prepared to resist them, are often most cowardly when vigorously opposed. The success of villany must be short lived; and though base murderers and traitors may for a time escape vengeance, yet evil pursueth, and will certainly overtake them. But how soon may our most promising appearances of worldly prosperity vanish as a dream! And how impossible is it, that any can prosper, who harden their hearts against God! The removal of a prudent, peaceable, and equitable ruler, and the succession of another, who is rash, turbulent, and enterprising may affect the condition of vast multitudes; so entirely do we in every thing depend on the providence of God! When men's hearts are fixed on worldly projects and conjunctions, they will soon pretend or feign some motive or reason for following their inclinations. And if the fear of man sometimes restrains from evil, it more frequently leads to rebellion and impiety. But they only are happy and steady, who fear the Lord, and walk in his ways.

NOTES.

CHAP. XLII. V. 1—6. We are not informed by what means Jeremiah escaped the sword of Ishmael; but the Lord took care of him according to his promises. The princes seem to have neglected him; till, on this occasion, they wanted to have his sanction to their purpose of going to Egypt. In order to induce him to favour them, they applied to him with one consent, and in the most respectful and plausible manner; they used language suited to prepossess him with a favourable opinion of them, and to move his compassion; and they entreated his prayers in their behalf, and that he would inquire of the Lord what he would have them to do. The prophet readily acquiesced; and doubted not but he should receive an answer from God, which he would unreservedly declare to them. And they called the Lord to witness, that they would implicitly follow his directions, whatever they were, that it might be well with them. When they said, "Whether it be good, or whether it be bad," they used language, which implied, that they supposed Jeremiah would answer according to his own discretion, rather than that he would deliver the unerring counsel of God. It is the constant method of hypocrites, to pretend a profound submission to the will of God, till that comes to cross their inclinations or interest. (Lomth.)

V. 7. The prophet waited for a revelation from God, in answer to the inquiries of the people, who saw good to delay for some time to make known his will: perhaps to show them, that Jeremiah did not speak of his own mind, but when, and as he was directed. The delay was also suited to give time for consideration, and to retard the execution of their rash projects: and as it would render them impatient, it tended to detect their hypocrisy, and to show more clearly their determined rebellion against God.

V. 10. I repent, &c. The Lord was ready to alter his conduct towards the people, provided they would obey his voice. He delighted not in their miseries, but was ready to terminate them, as soon as it could consist with his justice and the honour of his name. "God is said to repent, when he alters the outward methods of his providence. The punishment, which the Jews had received, had made satisfaction to his justice, as far as concerns this world; and he would not continue the same severity, unless they gave him a new provocation. (Lomth.)

V. 13. He should cause them to return to their cities and inheritances; and not live in that unsettled manner which they then did. (Lomth.)

V. 14-17. "Thus God turneth the policy of the wicked to their own destruction: for they thought themselves safe in Egypt; and they Nebuchadnezzar destroyed them and the Egyptians." (Lomth.)

V. 16. The people had witnessed the tremendous effects of the wrath of God, in the siege and destruction of Jerusalem; and had they not been past feeling, this denunciation must have made their ears to tingle, and appalled their very souls. (Marg. Ref.)
The Lord hath said concerning you, O ye remnant of Judah; ye shall not go into Egypt: know certainly that I have avowed you this day.

20 For ye shall be dispersed among all the kingdoms of the earth, when I shall have scattered you among all the nations. And when any shall say to you, Wherefore go ye away from your land? and whither ye shall be dispersed among the nations of the earth? Then shall ye answer him, We are dispersed among all the nations for an example to all the kingdoms of the earth, to bear witness against them for the works of the Lord of Jacob, and for the testimonies of Israel, saith the Lord of hosts.

21 And now I have this day declared it unto you; yet ye have not obeyed the voice of the Lord your God, nor any thing for the which he hath sent me unto you.

V. 19. The Jews going into Egypt for protection, was in effect refusing to submit to the king of Babylon, to whom God had decreed the government of Judaea and all the neighbouring countries. (Lowth.) (Marg. Ref.)

V. 20—32. God made known to the prophet the dissimulation of the princes and people; and their conduct when he delivered his message, seems to have indicated a determination to disobey it. He did not therefore shun to charge the matter home on their consciences, and to denounce the awful judgments of God against them; though they had shown him much respect, and had him entirely in their power.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Numbers have a general persuasion, that the instructions given them from the word of God are right and good; but they do not so decidedly believe them, as to yield obedience, when self-denial is requisite: yet they wish faithful ministers to sanction their measures, and in urgent cases desire an interest in their prayers. Many of them learn the language of piety, and can upon occasion use it very plausibly: they pretend great respect for the servants of God, and become their supplicants, for their own selfish purposes; they impose upon them, and recommend themselves to their compassion and good will; and make them think, that they desire to "know the way in which they should walk, and the thing that they should do." There is, however, no harm done, if ministers entertain better hopes of men than they deserve; provided they be only induced to pray for them, and to declare the word of God without reserve or discouragement: for they should on all occasions be ready to do this for every one, whether great or small. But many, who promise with great solemnity to do whatever the Lord requires, whilst they can hope to have their pride flattered, and their favourite inclinations gratified, cannot endure to be contradicted or called to exercise self-denial: and generally something in the language of such persons betrays the state of their hearts to those who have "their senses exercised to discern good and evil." For how could men, if they were not greatly attached to their own wills, suppose that the Lord would require of them any thing evil in itself, or prejudicial to them? All his commands are holy, just, and good, however they may thwart our inclinations: and not only will it be with us at last, if we obey the voice of the Lord our God, but "in keeping of his precepts there is great reward." They that would know the mind of God in doubtful cases, must wait as well as pray. He that believeth will not be hasty, but will stay till he is satisfied, or obliged to decide: but unbelief and self-will are impatient; and the Lord often delays to answer prayer, that he may distinguish between the humble believer, who must wait at mercy's door till it be opened; and the pretender, who (like Saul) will soon apply elsewhere, if he find not the encouragement and success that he expected. It is vain as impious, to attempt imposing upon God. He will, however, always give encouragement to sinners, who apply for it in his appointed way. He is ever ready to return in mercy to those whom he hath afflicted, and to pardon the penitent; for he delighteth not in the death of a sinner, but rather that he should repent and live: and he never rejects those who rely on his promises and obey his commandments. Whatever loss or suffering we may sustain from obedience, it is provided against in his word; and he hath engaged to protect and deliver all who trust and serve him. But if men will not abide in his counsel, nor obey his voice; if they will lean to their own understandings, instead of trusting in his guidance; if they will expect security from trouble and danger by disobedience, and obstinately pursue their carnal projects: either the evils they feared, or far worse, will come upon them, from which they will not be able to escape. And they, who copy the crimes of those on whom the anger and fury of the Lord hath been poured out, will in their turn also be made an execration, an astonishment, a curse, and a reproach. These things must be urged on the consciences of men, without respect of persons: nor must the servants of God shun to declare his counsel, out of regard to their rank, fear of their frown, or even gratitude for the favours conferred on themselves. But no sinners should be rebuked with such sharpness, as they who have dissembled with God in their solemn professions and inquiries after his will. This will appear in their conduct, for actions speak more plainly than words: and when it is thus made manifest, that they will not obey the voice of God, they must be plainly told that his wrath abideth on them.
Lord their God, for which the Lord their God had sent him to them, even all these words.

2 Then spake Azariah the son of Hoshaiah, and 7. Johanan the son of Kareah, and 6. all the proud men, saying unto Jeremiah, 1 Thou speakest falsely; the Lord our God hath not sent thee to say, Go not into Egypt to sojourn there;

3 But Baruch the son of Neriah setteth thee on against us, for 8. to deliver us into the hand of the Chaldeans, that they might put us to death, and carry us away captives into Babylon.

4 So Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces, and all the people, 9. obeyed not the voice of the Lord, 5. to dwell in the land of Judah;

5 But Johanan the son of Kareah, and all the captains of the forces, 10. took all the remnant of Judah, that were returned from all nations, whither they had been driven, to dwell in the land of Judah;

6 Even men, and women, and children, and 12. the king's daughters, and every person that Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard had left with Gedaliah the son of Ahikam, the son of Shaphan, and 13. Jeremiah the prophet, and Baruch the son of Neriah.

7 So they came into the land of Egypt; for they obeyed not the voice of the Lord: thus came they even to 14. the land of Egypt.

CHAP. XLIII. V. 2, 3. Azariah, called Jezaniah. (xliii. 1.)

Proud men. 1 Who refused to obey almighty God, 2 when his command crossed their inclinations. —Hath not spoken. 3 The constant method of hypocrites and infidels, who pretend that they are not satisfied 4 of the truth of divine revelation; when the true cause of their unbelief is, that God's commands contradict their own lusts and appetites.

Baruch. 5 They would not directly accuse Jeremiah; 6 but they lay the blame on Baruch. (Lownh.) The princes had previously made up their minds, at all events, to go into Egypt; and therefore they were of course decidedly averse to Jeremiah's counsel, because proudly attached to their own will and wisdom; and doubtless they were also exasperated by his severe language and awful warnings. They were not, however, willing to allow, that they acted in direct defiance of God's authority; they pretended, therefore, and perhaps persuaded themselves, that Jeremiah was influenced by Baruch to oppose their projects, that they might fall into the hands of the Chaldeans.

NOTES.

Their suspicions of Baruch were doubtless ill-grounded for he was a very pious man, and a steady friend to his people: but Jeremiah's character was so established, he had so long shown a patient disinterested love to his nation, and so many of his predictions had already been fulfilled, that their accusation of him was as foolish as it was malicious. His late preference of a lot among them, to the favour of the king and princes of Babylon, was alone a sufficient confutation of the slander.

V. 5—7. Johanan and the captains and soldiers seem to have compelled the people in general, as well as Jeremiah and Baruch, to accompany them into Egypt. This aggravated their impurity and rebellion; as they carried away those into that idolatrous country, which had always proved treacherous to Israel, who had returned from other nations out of affection to the land of Judah. When they arrived in Egypt, they repaired immediately to the royal city, where, it is probable, they were favourably received by Pharaoh.

V. 8—13. The Jews had sheltered themselves in Egypt, to be out of the reach of the Chaldeans: but they were not sooner arrived there, than the prophet was instructed to CHAP. XLIV.

God, by his prophet, expostulates with the Jews in Egypt, for persisting in idolatry, after all that they had heard, suffered, and witnessed, 1—10. He denounces their destruction, 11—14. The Jews impiously avow their purpose of clearing to their idols, and ascribe their miseries to the neglect of them. 15—19. The prophet shows the falsehood of their plea; and, in the name of God, predicts their utter ruin, 20—28; and, for a sign, that also of the king of Egypt, 29, 30.

The word that came to Jeremiah concerning all the Jews, which dwell in the land of Egypt, which dwell at Migdol, and at Tahpanhes, and at Noph, and in the country of Pathros, saying,

2 Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, Ye have seen all the evil that I have brought upon Jerusalem, and upon all the cities of Judah; and, to behold, this day they are a desolation, and no man dwelleth therein;

3 Because of their wickedness which they have committed to provoke me to anger, in that they went to burn incense, and to serve other gods, whom they knew not, neither they, ye, nor your fathers.

4 Howbeit I sent unto you all my servants, the prophets, rising early and sending them, saying, Oh, do not this abominable thing, that I hate.

5 This is the message which came to all your servants the prophets; and I said, No; let not this people sin thereby, and return unto me: for they have forsaken me, saith the Lord.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Pride is the great root of infidelity, and proud men scorn subjection to any superior; they prefer their own wisdom to the revealed word of God; they resist warning, counsel, and reproof; they set up their own will in opposition to divine authority, and justify themselves in the most flagrant enormities. When such men have resolved not to be ruled by the Scriptures, they deny their divine original, notwithstanding the manifold demonstrations with which they are authenticated: they can give credit to any absurdity, which seems to countenance infidelity; they impute the basest conduct to the most blameless and excellent characters, and the most unexceptionable actions to the vilest motives. But they express most enmity against faithful ministers, whom they treat as deceivers, and charge with malevolence and with being enemies to mankind. When thus bent upon disobedience, they employ their ability, influence, or authority, in carrying others along with them in their rebellious courses: and the prospect of success or carnal security easily leads them into the most powerful temptations. But vengeance pursues the obstinate rebel; while no banishment, or distance from external advantages, can exclude God's people from his presence and the comfort of communion with him.—When he employs ambitious men to scourge guilty nations, they have easy and speedy success in their destructive expeditions; but he will especially punish those, who deceive, ensnare, or tempt his people to rebellion against him.

NOTES.

CHAP. XLIV. V. I. The Jews were now dispersed in different cities, probably according to the appointment of Pharaoh; and there they worshipped idols without restraint. Jeremiah was therefore commissioned to deliver a message from God to them; which he seems to have done at Pathros, to a multitude there assembled, (15) but it would soon be circulated among those, who lived in the other cities.

—Noph. 'Commonly called Memphis; near this place stands one of the pyramids, which is yet remaining,' (Lowth.) 'These were all famous and strong cities in Egypt, where the Jews that were fled dwelt for their safety: but the prophet declareth that there is no hold so strong, as to preserve them from God's vengeance.' (Marg. Ref.)

V. 2, 3. The God of Israel had given so many proofs of his wisdom and power, his justice, truth, and mercy, in his dealings with that nation, during a long succession of ages, that nothing but wilfully closing their eyes could prevent the Jews from knowing him to be the one living and true God. But they could assign no good reason for worshipping idols: they knew not that they had any existence; and they could not but know, that the images which they made of them were nothing else than lifeless wood, metal, or stone.

V. 4. (Marg. Ref.) The latter clause may be rendered.
5 But they hearkened not, nor inclined their ear to turn from their wickedness, to burn no incense unto other gods.

6 Wherefore my fury and mine anger was poured forth, and was kindled in the cities of Judah and in the streets of Jerusalem; and they are wasted and desolate as this day.

7 Therefore now saith the Lord, the God of hosts, the God of Israel; Wherefore commit ye this great evil against your souls, to cut off from you man and woman, child and suckling, out of Judah, to leave you none to remain?

8 In that ye provoke me unto wrath with the works of your hands, burning incense unto other gods in the land of Egypt, whither ye be gone to dwell, that ye might cut yourselves off, and that ye might be a curse and a reproach among all the nations of the earth?

9 Have ye forgotten the wickedness of your fathers, and the wickedness of the kings of Judah, and the wickedness of your wives, and your own wickedness, and the wickedness of your wives, which they have committed in the land of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem?

10 They are not humbled even unto this day, neither have they feared, nor walked in my law, nor in my statutes, that I set before you and your fathers.

11 Therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, I will set my face against you for evil, and to cut off all Judah.

12 And I will take the remnant of Judah, that have set their faces to go into the land of Egypt to sojourn there, and they shall all be consumed, and fall in the land of Egypt: they shall even be consumed by the sword and by the famine: they shall die, from the least even unto the greatest, by the sword and by the famine; and they shall be an execration, and an astonishment, and a curse, and a reproach.

13 For I will punish them that dwell in the land of Egypt, as I have punished Jerusalem by the sword, by the famine, and by the pestilence:

14 So that none of the remnant of Judah, that are gone into the land of Egypt to sojourn there, shall escape or remain, that they should return into the land of Judah, to the which they have a desire to return to dwell there; for none shall return but such as shall escape.

15 And as for the remainder of those Jews that went down into Egypt at this time, (Loath.) As, however, Ochos's conquest of Egypt did not occur till nearly three hundred years from the time of the Jews going into Egypt, this opinion is not very probable; nor do we read any thing more of this remnant, or of the fulfilment of this prediction.

None shall, &c. The Jews, when they went into Egypt, supposed, that they might more easily return into their land, than their brethren at Babylon could; and they had a desire of returning, provided they might be secured from the Chaldeans. But the Lord declared that none of them should return thither, but such as should escape; and by which they may mean such as should escape the contagion of idolatry; or a very mean and small remnant, escaping idolatry; or a very mean and small remnant, escaping idolatry; or a very mean and small remnant, escaping idolatry; or a very mean and small remnant, escaping idolatry; or a very mean and small remnant, escaping idolatry; or a very mean and small remnant, escaping idolatry; or a very mean and small remnant, escaping idolatry; or a very mean and small remnant, escaping idolatry; or a very mean and small remnant, escape.
CHAPTER XLIV.

15 ¶ Then all the men, which knew that their wives had burned incense unto other gods, and all the women that stood by, a great multitude, even all the people that dwelt in the land of Egypt, in Pathros, answered Jeremiah, saying, 16 As for the word that thou hast spoken unto us in the name of the Lord, we will not hearken unto thee. 17 But we will certainly do whatsoever thou goest forth out of our own mouth, to burn incense unto the queen of heaven, and to pour out drink-offerings unto her, as we have done, we, and our fathers, our kings, and our princes, in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem: for we had plenty of victuals, and were well, and saw no evil. 18 But since we left off to burn incense to the queen of heaven, and to pour out drink-offerings unto her, we have wanted all things, and have been consumed by the sword, and by the famine. 19 And when we burned incense to the queen of heaven, and poured out drink-offerings unto her, did we make her cakes to worship her, and pour out drink-offerings unto her, without our men? 20 Then Jeremiah said unto all the people, to the men, and to the women, and to all the men which had given him that answer, saying, 21 The incense that ye burned in the cities of Judah, and in the streets of Jerusalem, ye, and your fathers, your kings, and your princes, and the people of the land, did not the Lord remember them, and cause it not into his mind? 22 So that the Lord could no longer bear, because of the evils of your doings, and because of the abominations which ye have committed; therefore is your land a desolation, and an astonishment, and a curse, without an inhabitant, as at this day. 23 Because ye have burned incense, and because ye have sinned against the Lord, and have not obeyed the voice of the Lord, nor walked in his law, nor in his statutes, nor in his testimonies; therefore this evil is happened unto you at this day. 24 Moreover Jeremiah said unto all the people, and to all the women, Hear the word of the Lord, all Judah that are in the land of Egypt: 25 Thus saith the Lord of hosts the God of Israel, saying: Ye and your wives have both spoken with your mouths, and fulfilled with your hand; saying, We will surely perform our vows that we have vowed, to burn incense to the queen of heaven, and to pour out drink-offerings borne with them, till at length their measure of iniquity was filled; and then he executed vengeance upon them because they clave in heart to their idols, even when they had it not in their power to worship them. (Marg Ref.)

V. 19. This is supposed to have been the answer of the women, who took the prophet’s rebuke to themselves, and were offended at him for it; (15;) and they pleaded, that they had not performed their worship, without the knowledge or consent of their husbands: yet as the mass is used, it seems the men concur in it. This sheweth how great danger it is for the husbands to permit their wives any thing, whereof they be not assured by God’s word; for thereby they take occasion to justify their doings; and then husbands shall give an account thereof before God. (Jehovah.)

V. 22. Could, &c. As men, when urged by repeated provocations, are no longer able to repress their anger, but it bursts forth most violently on the objects of their resentment; so the Lord could no longer endure the provocation of his people; but his honour required him to take vengeance on them, and then the effects of his indignation became very dreadful.

V. 15. The women, it seems, been more active in idolatry than the men; yet the men were enraged at the prophet’s reproof, and were determined to justify what their wives had done. After many evasions and excuses for their disobedience, they at length spoke out in the most impious manner, declaring that they would not regard the word, which the prophet had spoken to them in the name of God. Either they meant to treat Jeremiah as a false prophet; or they were avowed in infidelity and impiety: they thought the service of Jehovah unprofitable and ruinous, and were determined to have no more to do with it. They had vowed to burn incense to idols, and they would do that which had gone out of their mouth, (Marg Ref.) This worship, they averred, had been of great antiquity and authority; for their fathers, and their kings and princes, had sanctioned it, not only in the cities of Judah, but in Jerusalem itself: when this worship was observed, they had prospered; but since it had been put down, all their miseries had come upon them. Nothing could be more irrational than this pretence: for the prophets, who had reproved their idolatry, had also predicted their calamities; and they, who had favoured it, had promised them peace and prosperity. Indeed, the Lord had long unto her: ye will surely accomplish your vows, and surely perform your vows.

26 Therefore bear ye the word of the Lord, all Judah that dwell in the land of Egypt; Behold, I have sworn by my great name, saith the Lord, that my name shall no more be named in the mouth of any man of Judah in all the land of Egypt, saying, There liveth God.

27 Behold, I will watch over them for evil, and not for good; and all the men of Judah, that are in the land of Egypt, shall be consumed by the sword and by the famine, until there be an end of them.

28 Yet a small number shall escape the sword shall return out of the land of Egypt into the land of Judah, and all the remnant of Judah, that are gone into the land of Egypt to sojourn there, shall know whose word shall stand, mine, or theirs.

29 And this shall be a sign unto you, saith the Lord, that I will punish you in this place, that ye may know that my words shall stand against you for evil:

30 Thus saith the Lord; Behold, I will give Pharaoh-hophra king of Egypt into the hand of his enemies, and into the hand of that which seeketh his life, as I gave Zedekiah king of Judah into the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, his enemy, and that sought his life.
CHAP. XLV.

Baruch being dismayed, Jeremiah, in the name of God, warns and instructs him, and assures him of protection, 1—5.

THE word that Jeremiah the prophet spake unto Baruch the son of Ne-riah, when he had written these words in a book at the mouth of Jeremiah, in the fourth year of Jehoiakim the son of Josiah king of Judah, saying, far more provoking to God, and ruinous to men, than is generally supposed. They, who worship images, saints, and angels, and present oblations to the queen of heaven, should recollect the consequences of similar practices of God's ancient people, previous to the Babylonish captivity. And they, who neglect the person and mediation of the Son of God, should consider the punishment inflicted on the Jews for rejecting and crucifying him; under which they still continue a curse and a reproach among the nations; because they have not been humbled to this day, nor have feared the Lord to obey his command of honouring the Son, "even as they should honour the Father that sent him."

2 Thus saith the Lord, the God of Israel, unto thee, O Baruch;

3 Thou didst say, 'Woe is me now!

V. 15—30.

If men remember the wickedness of former ages only to imitate it, they may expect even severer punishment than that which ancient rebels suffered: for neither rank nor sex will protect the workers of iniquity. Such as neglect to use their authority to restrain their own households from wickedness, will be punished as accomplices in their crimes: yet their connivance will not excuse those, who were thus emboldened to commit impiety and vice. Men ought not to expect, that God will grant even their lawful desires, when they refuse obedience to his commands: and carnal projects which are contrary to his word, must end in wretched disappointment, however polite and plausible they may appear. The tendency of human depravity is from bad to worse, and sinners left to themselves grow continually more bold and insolent in their impiety. Reproofs exasperate those, whom they do not convince and humble. Multitudes show by their actions, that they will not hearken to the word of God; but will follow the devices and desires of their own evil hearts; and some dare to avow their purposes, and to "say to the Almighty, Depart from us, we desire not the "knowledge of thy ways." When sinners are thus hardened and blinded by Satan, they are seldom at a loss for arguments and excuses for their conduct: and whilst the long-suffering of God towards sinners, and his judgments upon hypocrites, can supply them with reasons for the most abominable wickedness, they can never be without some apology. But such perverse inferences from providential dispensations are as absurd as unscriptural: and they who know the truth and will of God, can easily prove, that all our miseries spring from sin; all our comforts and hopes from God's mercy; and that all our well-grounded persuasions of an interest in that mercy are connected with repentance and the obedience of faith. Indeed, ingenious infidels and ungodly men may perplex the plainest subjects. And they have been so numerous in all ages and places hitherto, and have possessed so much of the wealth, power, and wisdom of the world, that they have been able plausibly to plead antiquity, authority, and general consent, in support of their pernicious doctrines and vile abominations. Thus men encourage themselves and each other, to speak and act in direct defiance of the revealed will of God; to accomplish their iniquitous purposes; to vindicate what they have done: and to bear down the servants and worshippers of the Lord. But when we have borne testimony against them, and shown the folly, wickedness, and fatal consequences of their conduct, we must leave the matter to him. He will assuredly plead his own cause, and the event will show, whether the Scripture-threatenings, or their flimsy conjectures, will stand their ground. Nay, the punishment of those who have countenanced, encouraged, and abetted their rebellion and impiety, will be a sign unto them, that the Lord's word will stand against them for evil.

NOTES.

CHAP. XLV. V. 3. Baruch seems to have been a young man, when employed to read the roll in the temple; and though he was well disposed to the service of God, he had not sufficiently counted the cost. He had been grieved, to write and read of the many and great calamities, which were coming on his people: but when he was persecuted for it by Jehoiakim, he complained that the Lord added grief to his sorrow; and he was ready to faint with excess of disquietude and terror, from which he could find no rest.

V. 4, 5. This message, though inserted subsequent to the narrative of the destruction of Jerusalem, was sent to Baruch long before, at the time when his mind was greatly discomposed. Being a man of learning and ingenuity, it seems he had formed expectations of obtaining preferment, and was "seeking great things for himself." He had perhaps hoped, that the predicted judgments would not happen in his time; and that by prudence and activity he should obtain the favour of his superiors. For this the Lord rebuked him. "Dost thou aspire to honour and dignity, in a time of common calamity?" (Lowth.) God was about to break down the city and temple; to pluck up
JEREMIAH.

B. C. 608.

CHAP. XLVI.

Predictions of the destruction of Pharaoh-necho's army, near the Euphrates, by the Chaldeans, 1—12: and of the invasion and conquest of Egypt by Nebuchadrezzar, 13—26. A word of encouragement to Jacob, 27, 28.

THE word of the Lord, which came to Jeremiah the prophet, against the Gentiles;

2 Against Egypt, against the army of Pharaoh-necho king of Egypt, which was by the river Euphrates in Carchemish, which Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon smote in the fourth year of Jehoiakin the son of Josiah king of Judah.

3 Order ye the buckler and shield, and draw near to battle.

4 Harness the horses; and get up, ye horsemen, and stand forth with your helmets; "furbish the spears, and put on the brigandines.

5 Wherefore have I seen them dismayed, and turned away back? and their mighty ones are beaten down, and are fled apace, and look not back: for their fear was round about, saith the Lord.

6 Let not the swift flee away, nor the mighty man escape: they shall stumble, and fall toward the north by the river Euphrates.

7 "Who is this that cometh up as a flood, whose waters are moved as the rivers?" Egypt riseth up like a flood, and his waters are moved like the rivers, and he saith, I will go up, and will cover the earth; I will destroy the city, and the inhabitants thereof.

in it; we should not seek more than food convenient for us. And, however our lives may be preserved, or exposed, or whithersoever we may be driven, chief diligence should be employed in obtaining an assurance, that "when this earthly house of our tabernacle shall be dissolved, we shall have a building of God, an house not made with hands, eternal in the heavens."

NOTES.

CHAP. XLVI. V. 1. This verse is the title of this and the five following chapters; and refers to the general denunciation of God's judgments upon the countries round about Judea, contained in the twenty-fifth chapter. (Lomth.) These nations had either helped forward the calamities of the Jews, or had rejoiced at them. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 2. After Pharaoh-necho had slain Josiah in battle, and had gained great advantages in the countries bordering on the Euphrates, as he returned home, he entered Jerusalem, carried Jehonaz captive into Egypt, and left Jehoiakim upon the throne of Judah. Some time after he raised a very great army, and marched into the same regions, to extend his conquests. But previously this prophecy had been delivered, in which his entire defeat by Nebuchadnezzar was predicted; (Notes, 2 Kings, xxiii. 29, 30, xxiv. 6.) This took place about the same time that Jehoiakim, the vassal or ally of Pharaoh, was carried captive to Babylon; who, making submissions to Nebuchadnezzar, was restored to his kingdom.

V. 3, 4. This is a poetical and ironical call to the Egyptians to muster their forces, and implies that all their courage and efforts would be in vain. (5, 6.)

V. 6. The original is future, and may more properly be rendered, "The swift shall not flee away; neither shall "the mighty man escape, &c." For it is a clear prediction of what would certainly take place; and not an expression of what the prophet wished or prayed for.

V. 7, 8. "He derideth the boastings of the Egyptians, 9 Come up, ye horses; and rage, ye chariots; and let the mighty men come forth; the *Ethiopians and the Lybians, that handle the shield; and *the Lydians, that handle and bend the bow.

10 For this is the day of the Lord God of hosts, a day of vengeance, that he may avenge him of his adversaries; and the sword shall devour, and it shall be satiate, and made drunk with their blood: for the Lord of hosts shall have a sacrifice in the north country by the river Euphrates.

11 Go up into *Gilead, and take balm; O virgin, the daughter of Egypt: in vain shalt thou use many medicines; for thou shalt not be cured.

12 The nations have *heard of thy shame, and *thy cry hath filled the land: for the mighty man hath *stumbled against the mighty, and they are fallen together both.

13 The word that the Lord spake to Jeremiah the prophet, how *Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon should come, and smite the land of Egypt.

14 Declare ye in Egypt, and publish in *Migdol, and publish in Noph, and in Tahpanhes: say ye, *Stand fast, and prepare thee, for the sword shall devour round about thee.

15 Why are *thy valiant men swept away? they stood not, because the Lord did drive them.

16 He *made many to fall, yea, *one over another; and they said, *Arise, and let us go again to our own people, and to the land of our nativity, from the oppressing sword.

17 They did cry there, *Pharaoh king of Egypt is but a noise; he hath passed the time appointed.

18 As I live, saith the King, whose name is The Lord of hosts, Surely as *Tabor is among the mountains, and as *Carmel by the sea, so shall he be.
19 O thou daughter dwelling in Egypt,
20 Egypt is like a very fair heifer, but destruction cometh; it cometh out of the north.
21 Also her hired men are in the midst of her; like fatted bullocks: for they are turned back, and are fled away altogether; they did not stand, because the day of their calamity was come upon them, and the time of their visitation.
22 Their voice thereof shall go like a serpent; for they shall march with an army, 23 They shall cut down her forest, saith the Lord, though it cannot be searched;
24 Her daughter of Egypt shall be confounded; she shall be delivered into the hand of the people of the north.
25 The Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, saith; Behold, I will punish the multitude of Noph, and Pharaoh, and Egypt, with their gods, and their kings; even Pharaoh, and all them that trust in him.
26 And I will deliver them into the hand of those that seek their lives, and into the hand of Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon, and into the hand of his servants:
27 But fear not thou, O my servant Jacob, and be not dismayed, O Israel:
28 Fear thou not, O Jacob my servant, saith the Lord; for I am with thee, for I will make a full end of all the nations whither I have driven thee, but I will not make a full end of thee, but I correct thee in measure; yet will I not leave thee wholly unpunished.

V. 19. Furnish, &c. The expression is ironical, implying, that instead of the rich and goodly furniture, wherein she did pride herself, she should be carried away captive, naked and bare, and wanting all manner of conveniences. (Losh.)

V. 20. In the foregoing verse, the prophet compared Egypt to a delicate young woman. Here he resembles her to a fat and well favoured heifer. Grotsius, not probably, conjectures, that there is an allusion to their god Aphis, who was a bull remarkable for his beauty. (Losh.)

V. 21. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 22 The Egyptians would no longer utter boastings; but in a more abject and timider manner give vent to their terror and resentment, like a serpent hissing out of its hole, or when it is pursued. The cities of Egypt were very many, and the inhabitants both numerous and wealthy; but this would only render them a richer booty to the conqueror, as the heower of wood prefers those forests where the trees are many and of large growth. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 25. Multitude of No. The Hebrew reads Ammon Minno, which may be literally rendered Ammon of No. The same place is expressed by Ezekiel by Hamon No, (Ex. xxx. 15.) And in Nahum it is called No Ammon, (Nah. iii. 8.) The name is generally thought to be derived from Jupiter Ammon, whose temple was there. It is rendered Diospolis by the Septuagint, which is the Greek name for Thebes, famous in Homer's time for its hundred gates. (Losh.)

V. 26. (Note, xliiv. 29, 30.) It is supposed that Pharaoh-hophra was slain by Amasis; but Amasis was at that time the deputy of Nebuchadnezzar, who was principally employed in executing the vengeance of God on the Egyptians.

Afterward, &c. Nebuchadnezzar's conquest of Egypt was preceded, attended, and followed, by violent internal convulsions and revolutions; and Egypt did not recover from these calamities till about forty years afterwards. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 27. 28. (Note, xxx. 10, 11.) The Jews, who had taken shelter in Egypt, were, with very few exceptions, devoted to destruction; but this repetition of the Lord's former assurances to the nation of Israel, was intended to encourage the hopes of those in other places, who regarded his word, with the prospect of better times and returning tranquillity.

The repetition, also, of so remarkable a promise, shows that it was considered as of very great importance, and should remind us of its remarkable accomplishment even to this day. The words, "Fear not thou, O Jacob, &c." are repeated in the concluding verse, which gives the promise additional energy, and renders the passage peculiarly poetical.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Every part of Scripture speaks terror to the impotent and unbelieving, and comfort to those who obey the Gospel.

The vast preparations, which in all ages have been made for the destruction of the human species, (as if men did not die fast enough in the ordinary course of nature,) show
CHAPTER XLVII.

A prophecy against the Philistines, 1—7.

The word of the Lord, that came to Jeremiah the prophet against the Philistines, before Pharaoh smote * Gaza.

2 Thus saith the Lord; Behold, waters rise up * out of the north, and shall be an overflowing flood, and shall overflow the land, and all that is therein, the city, and them that dwell therein; * and then the men shall cry, and all the in habitants of the land shall howl.*

3 At * the noise of the stamping of the hoofs of the strong horses, at the rushing of his chariots, and at the rumbling of his wheels, * the fathers shall not look back to their children, for * feebleness of hands;

4 Because of * the day that cometh to all the Philistines, and to spoil all the Philistines, and to cut off from * Tyrus and Zidon * every helper that remaineth: for the Lord will spill the Philistines, * the remnant of the * country of * Caphtor.

5 * Baldness is come upon * Gaza; Ashkelon is cut off with * the remnant of their valley: * how long wilt thou cut thyself?

6 O thou sword of the Lord, how long wilt thou wait?

7 * How long will the land lie waste, and the cities be consumed * through all the enemies of the Lord?

8 Rise up and come against * the inhabitants of the land; * carry away with spoils, and with spoil.

9 * How long must I see * the耕, * the Medes and * the Babylonians, * that transgress the bounds of their own lands?

10 They break in pieces * horses in the stalls, * * they break in pieces * chariots, * they * break in pieces * the horses that * they ride, * break in pieces * the chariots that they use.

11 * How long will they * make * the land desolate, and all that is therein to be dismayed?

12 Let * them consider, * and know that * the pastime of the Lord is coming to the house of Judah, * and * to the inhabitants of Jerusalem.

13 * What! * the pastime of the Lord is coming, to bring forth his harvest; * to make * all the * spoils of the provincials to be taken.

14 * A great tumult is raised; * for the Lord shall smite with a mighty * tumult * in the land: * he shall make a sudden destruction; * and * an overflowing destruction, * as the destruction of no former.

15 * A * force is coming from the north, * and * the * law shall destroy the Philistines from before them.

16 * What! * the Lord shall give a signal for the inhabitants of the city, * for * an overthrow and * for the * desolation of the whole land.

17 * The Lord will bring * quick destruction, * and a swift destruction, * from * before them, * from * the north, * with swift and dread naked devastations.

18 * How! * the unlooked for curse shall come, * and * the destruction from the north, * and * the spoil of the stately cities, 19 * Desolate shall be * Azekah, * and * all her helpers: * her offspring shall be taken * away captive.

20 * Ashkelon shall be a desolation; * Gaza shall be a desolation, * and * Ekron a city no more inhabited.

21 * Ashdod shall be a desolation; * Ashdod shall be a desolation, * a place where the* inhabitants had a place of rest.

22 "..."..."..."...

23 Their inhabitants shall be * ashamed of their helplessness, * and * their helplessness shall * come upon like a woman in travail.

24 * Egypt shall be ashamed of her helplessness, * and * the priests and the prophets shall die for want of the Lord's "..."..."..."...

25 "..."..."..."...

26 Caphtor. * (Marg. Ref.)

V. 2. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 3. (Note, viii. 16. Marg. Ref.) The terrifying circumstances of this invasion would so dismay the Philistines, that they would not dare to look back, even to see what became of their own children.

V. 4. Every helper, &c. The destruction of the Philistines would tend to weaken the power of their confederates, the Tyrians and Zidonians; and to prepare the way for their subjection by Nebuchadnezzar. But some understand the words to signify, that the ruin of Tyre and Zidon, the helpers of the Philistines, would leave them without resource in their abject condition.

NOTES.

CHAP. XLVII. V. 1. Jeremiah had foretold that the Philistines should be conquered by Nebuchadnezzar, (xxv. 20.) This probably came to pass during the time of the siege of Tyre, which lasted thirteen years, as Josephus shows out of Philostratus, and the Phoenician annals.” (4.) (Lwth.) The Philistines had repeatedly been subjected by the kings of Judah; but they had again recovered strength. The prophecy was delivered before Pharaoh took Gaza. ‘This might probably happen after Pharaoh’s victories at Megido and Carchemish, when Judea became tributary to him.” (Lwth.) The Philistines seem to have been at that time in prosperity, and at peace with the Chaldeans. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 2. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 3. (Note, viii. 16. Marg. Ref.) The terrifying circumstances of this invasion would so dismay the Philistines, that they would not dare to look back, even to see what became of their own children.

V. 4. Every helper, &c. The destruction of the Philistines would tend to weaken the power of their confederates, the Tyrians and Zidonians; and to prepare the way for their subjection by Nebuchadnezzar. But some understand the words to signify, that the ruin of Tyre and Zidon, the helpers of the Philistines, would leave them without resource in their abject condition.

Caphtor. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 5. This represents the total desolation of Gaza, which, with those of Ashkelon, would cause inexcusable grief to the inhabitants: this they would express, by tearing or shaving off their hair, and cutting their flesh. (Marg. Ref.)
B. C. 610.

JEREMIAH.

2 There shall be no more praise of Moab, in \(^4\) Heshbon they have devised evil against it; \(5\) come, and let us cut it off from being a nation. Also thou shalt be \(6\) cut down, O Madmen; the sword shall \(7\) pursue thee.

3 A voice of crying shall be from Horonaim, spoiling and great destruction.

4 Moab is destroyed; her little ones have caused a cry to be heard.

5 For in the going up of \(8\) Luhith, continued weeping shall go up; for in the going down of Horonaim the enemies have heard a cry of destruction.

6 Flee, save thy lives, and be like \(9\) the heath in the wilderness.

7 For \(10\) because thou hast trusted in thy works, and in thy treasures, thou shalt also be taken: and \(11\) Chemosh shall go forth into captivity, \(12\) with his priests and his princes together.

NOTES.

CHAP. XLVIII. V. 1. 'The following prophecies against Moab, Ammon, Edom, and the neighbouring countries, seem to have been fulfilled, during the siege of Tyre, (Ez. xxv. 6, &c.) Josephus places these events five years after the destruction of Jerusalem. Jeremiah, in his prophecy, borrows several expressions from Isaiah's prophecy against the same people; though that was probably fulfilled several years before.' (Lomth.) The predictions of Isaiah, it is probable, were fulfilled by Shalmaneser, but those of Jeremiah by Nebuchadnezzar. (Notes, Is. xv. xvi.)

V. 2. Moab should be no more praised as an honourable kingdom: for the invaders, having possessed themselves of Heshbon, would determine on the utter ruin of the nation. Or the passage may mean, that there should be no more glorying in Moab, concerning Heshbon, as a strong fortress or a flourishing city: for their enemies had devised their complete destruction. (Old. Trans.) A confederacy of the Moabites and the neighbouring nations is represented, by the Psalmist, as using the same language concerning Israel, which the Chaldeans are here introduced as employing concerning Moab. (Ps. lxxxiii. 4-12.)

V. 5. The lamentations of the Moabites would be so loud and grievous, as to be heard even by their enemies, at a distance; and thus they would direct them in their pursuit of the fugitives.

V. 6. ‘Escape for your lives, and be content to be left poor and desolate, (Note, xvii. 5, 6;) and hide yourselves in barren places, whither the enemy will not pursue you.’

V. 7. The Moabites had confided in their fortifications or methods of defence, and in the riches laid up in their treasuries; or in their superstitious observances, and the treasures dedicated to their idol Chemosh. (Marg. Ref.)
8 And the spoiler shall come upon every city, and no city shall escape: the valley also shall perish, and the plain shall be destroyed, as the Lord hath spoken.

9 Give wings unto Moab, that it may fly and get away: for the cities thereof shall be desolate, without any to dwell therein.

10 Cursed be he that doeth the work of the Lord deceitfully, and cursed be he that keepeth back his sword from blood.

11 ¶ Moab hath been at ease from his youth, and he hath settled on his lees, and hath not been emptied from vessel to vessel, neither hath he gone into captivity: therefore his taste remaineth in him, and his scent is not changed.

12 Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will send unto him wanderingers that shall cause him to wander, and shall empty his vessels, and break their bottles.

13 And Moab shall be ashamed of Chemosh, as the house of Israel was ashamed of Bethel their confidence.

14 How say ye, We are mighty and strong men for the war?

15 Moab is spoiled, and gone up out of her cities, and she that chosen young men are gone down to the slaughter, saith the King, whose name is The Lord of hosts.

16 The calamity of Moab is near to come, and his affliction hasteth fast.

17 All ye that are about him, be- moan him; and all ye that know his name, say, How is the strong staff broken, and the beautiful rod!

18 Thou daughter that dost inhabit Dibon, come down from thy glory; and sit in thirst; for the spoiler of Moab shall come upon thee, and he shall destroy Moab, strong holds.

19 O inhabitant of Aror, stand by the way, and espie; ask him that fleeth, and her that escapeth, and say, What is done?

20 Moab is confounded; for it is broken down: howl and cry; tell ye it in Arnon, that Moab is spoiled,

21 And judgment is come upon Moab, their plain country; upon Holon, and upon Jahazah, and upon Mephaath, 22 And upon Dibon, and upon Nebo, and upon Beth-diblathaim, 23 And upon Kiriataim, and upon Beth-gamul, and upon Beth-meaon, 24 And upon Kerioth, and upon Bozrah, and upon all the cities of the land of Moab, far or near.

25 The horn of Moab is cut off, and his arm is broken, saith the Lord.

They were therefore like wine left long to refine and feed on the lees; which becomes much stronger than when frequently emptied from vessel to vessel. Having met with little disturbance, they were become proud, presumptuous, secure, and sensual; indulging in wickedness habitually, and from age to age, without any degree of reformation.

12. The Chaldeans would march far from home under the secret direction of God to conquer the Moabites, and to carry them away captive into a distant country; desolating their cities, wasting their country, and destroying all that they had gloried in.

13. As the calf of Bethel was not able to deliver the Israelites, no more shall Chemosh deliver the Moabites.

17. His calamities are so great, as must needs make all that have heard of his former fame bewail his misfortunes.

19. In thirst, &c. Thirst, or the extreme want of every thing, is here opposed to that luxury and splendour, to which the Moabites had been accustomed.
26 ¶ Make ye him drunken; for he magnifieth himself against the Lord. Moab also shall wallow in his vomit, and also shall he be in derision.

27 For was not Israel a despised people among thee? was he found among thieves? for since thou spakest of him, thou hast skippeth for joy.

28 O ye that dwell in Moab, leave the cities, and dwell in the rock, and be like the dove that maketh her nest in the sides of the hole's mouth.

29 ¶ We have heard the pride of Moab, (be is exceeding proud,) his loftiness, and his arrogancy, and his pride, and the haughtiness of his heart.

30 I know his wrath, saith the Lord; but it shall not be so; his lies shall not so effect it.

31 Therefore will I howl for Moab, and I will cry out for all Moab; mine heart shall mourn for the men of Kirheres.

32 O vine of Sibmah, I will weep for thee with the weeping of Jazer: thy plants are gone over the sea, they reach even to the sea of Jazer: the spoiler is fallen upon thy summer-fruits, and upon thy vintage.

33 And joy and gladness is taken from the plentiful field, and from the land of Moab; and I have caused wine to fail from the wine-presses: none shall tread with shouting; their shouting shall be no shouting.

34 From the cry of Heshbon even unto Elealeh, and even unto Jahaz, have they uttered their voice, from Bethnebo even unto Nebaim, as an heifer of three years old; for the waters also of Nimrim shall be desolate.

35 Moreover I will cause to cease in Moab, saith the Lord, him that offereth incense in the high places, and him that burneth incense to his gods.

36 Therefore mine heart shall sound like pipes for Moab like pipes, and mine heart shall sound like pipes for the men of Kirheres; because the riches that he hath gotten are perished.

37 For every head shall be bald, and every beard shall be clipped: upon all the hands shall be cuttings, and upon the loins sackcloth.

38 There shall be lamentation generally upon all the house-tops of Moab, and in the streets thereof: for I have broken Moab like a vessel wherein is no pleasure, saith the Lord.

39 They shall howl, saying, How is it broken down! how hath Moab turned the back with shame! so shall Moab be a derision and a dismaying to all them about him.

40 For thus saith the Lord, Behold, he shall fly as an eagle, and shall spread his wings over Moab.

41 ¶ Kerith is taken, and the strongholds are surprised, and the mighty men's hearts in Moab at that day shall be as the heart of a woman in her pang.

42 And Moab shall be destroyed from being a people, because he hath magnified himself against the Lord.
CHAPTER XLVIII.

43 Fear, and the pit, and the snare, shall be upon thee, O inhabitant of Moab, saith the Lord.

44 He that fleeth from the fear shall fall into the pit; and he that getteth up out of the pit shall be taken in the snare:
for I will bring upon it, even upon Moab, the year of their visitation, saith the Lord.

45 They that fled stood under the shadow of Heshbon because of the force; but a fire shall come forth out of Heshbon, and a flame from the midst of Sihon, and shall devour the corner of Moab, even the crown of the head of the multitude ones.

46 Woe be unto thee, O Moab: the people of Chemosh perisheth; for thy sons are taken captives, and thy daughters captives.

47 Yet will I bring again the captivity of Moab in the latter days, saith the Lord. Thus far is the judgment of Moab.

these severe judgments on Moab, a heathen nation, is this, that "he had magnified himself against Jeboyan." (Morgan's Ref.)

V. 43-46. (Note, Isaiah, xxiv, 17, 18.)

V. 47. The Moabites were afterwards restored to their country, as appears from Josephus: but these and such like promises of mercy, after judgment, are chiefly to be understood of the conversion of the Gentiles to Christ, under the Gospel, called the latter days by the prophets. (Lowth.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-25.

Wo be to all those against whom the Lord of Hosts hath spoken! they can expect nothing but terror and confusion; all their praise and honour must expire in infamy; they who devise evil against them will succeed according to their wishes; the sword of justice will pursue them; weeping and bitter wailing will attend their great destruction; and generally their children are involved in calamities on their account. There is indeed a Refuge provided for sinners: and the exhortation should be very pressing "to flee from the wrath to come," to seek the salvation of their souls, and forsake all for Christ and the Gospel; as men in perilous circumstances partici- pate with all their substance to save their lives. But the case of obstinate unbelievers is very dreadful; for how shall they escape, who neglect "so great salvation?" They who trust in their own works, treasures, or superstitions, will soon be overtaken by the vengeance of God, and will go into destruction, along with their idols and deceivers, and will for ever be made ashamed of their confidences. No guilty city, village, or individual, shall be able to escape the ruin that the Lord hath spoken against them; and if any could give wings to sinners, they could not fly out of the reach of divine indignation. Whatever the Lord enjoins us must be done heartily, and according to his word, if we would escape his curse. We should indeed be thankful, that we are required to seek the preservation of men's lives, and the salvation of their souls, and not to shed their blood; but we shall be the more inexcusable, if we do this work deceitfully, preferring our own interest, credit, inclination, or indulgence, to the glory and will of God: and it is great insolencc, for man to pretend to be more merciful than his Creator. When men continue long in peace, wealth, and prosperity, and escape the calamities which others experience, they are apt to grow insensible and secure; to contract habits of pride, impurity, intemperance, and self-indulgence; to cleave without remorse to evil practices, and to proceed from bad to worse: so that great prosperity is peculiarly dangerous to us fallen creatures. But when the Lord's time comes, he will send upon sinners, who are thus settled on their lees, such judgments as will dash their comforts and hopes in pieces. In vain do men say, that they are mighty and strong for the battle: when the King, the Lord of hosts, hath a controversy with a people, their young men go down to the slaughter, rather than to battle; and all the beauty and strength of nations only tend to increase the astonishment of those who behold their ruin, and exclaim, "How is the strong staff broken, and the beautiful rod!" Every circumstance, that tended to increase their glory, now enhances their misery; and every inquiry about what is done makes known their terror and distress. But "the Lord is righteous in all his ways, and holy in all his works!" He does not cut off the horn and break the arm of any, except such as have magnified themselves against him.

V. 26-47.

When sinners grow intoxicated with pride and ungodly lusts, the Lord will make them drunken with his judgments, and expose them to shame and derision. He abhors those who rejoice in the calamities of their neighbours, and insult over the miserable, and especially over his inoffensive worshippers. Yet this is a general effect of the envy, malice, selfishness, and impurity, of the human heart. But pride, in its multiplied exercises, is the fruitful root of unnumbered crimes, and when this diabolical vice grows stronger continually, disgrace and ruin are at hand; for "a haughty spirit goes before a fall," and the Lord knows the malice, deceit, and lies, of his enemies, and will disappoint them. It becomes us to compassionatc the sufferings even of our enemies, when joy and gladness are taken away from the plentiful field; when penury and famine succeed luxury and abundance, and the riches of those CHAP. XLIX.

Prophecies against the Ammonites, 1—6. Edom, 7—22; Damascus, 23—27; Kedar and Hazor, 28—33; Edom, 34—39.

CONCERNING the Ammonites, thus saith the Lord; Hath Israel no sons? hath he no heir? why then doth their king inherit Gad, and his people dwell in his cities!

2 Therefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will cause an alarm of war to be heard in Rabbah of the Ammonites; and it shall be a desolate heap, and her daughters shall be burned with fire: then shall Israel be heir unto them that were his heirs, saith the Lord.

who once lived in splendid obsequies are persuaded: we should sympathize in their sorrows, and be ready to afford them such relief as we are able. But we should also take warning to avoid their transgressions; and, amidst the desolation and calamities that surround us, we should learn to set our affections on things above, and not on things of the earth. If our sins be pardoned, and our hearts renewed, the Lord will preserve us from every fear, pit, and snare, into which others fall; and whilst the vessels of wrath, in which he had no pleasure, and which are fitted for destruction, shall perish for ever, he will effectually take care of those vessels of mercy, whom he hath afore prepared for his glory.

NOTES.

CHAP. XLIX. V. 1. The old translation more exactly renders the first clause, "Unto the children of Ammon, thus saith the Lord." The same may be noted concerning the other nations mentioned in this chapter. The king of Ammon had sent Ishmael to murder Gedeiah, and probably Nebuchadnezzar intended to revenge that injury, when he made war against the Ammonites: but the Lord had a controversy with him, on account of their injustice to his people Israel. Being situated on the north-east border of the land, the Ammonites seized every opportunity of getting possession of their cities and lands, as if the Israelites had no heirs; and thus the subjects of the king of Ammon, or the worshippers of Molcon the idol of Ammon, (so it may be understood,) dwelt in the lot of Gad, and in the cities which God had given to his people, and which had not belonged to their ancestors. It seems that their capacity was attended with the most shocking barbarity. (Note, Amos i. 13—15.)

Even before the Syrians and Assyrians had dispossessed the Israelites, several cities, originally given to Gad or Reuben, were possessed by the Ammonites. (Marg, Ref.)

V. 2. Daughters. The lesser cities, which are reckoned as so many daughters to the mother-city. The Jews made themselves masters of the Ammonites and the neighbouring countries under the Maccabees, (1 Mac. v. 6, 7.) "The words heir and inheritance, in the Hebrew, signify any real and lasting possession." (Lowth.)

V. 3. When Al, a city of the Ammonites, was desolated,—it is time for Heshbon, the chief city of Moab, to lament her danger; for her turn comes next. (xlviii. 2.) (Lowth.) Howl, O Heshbon, the chief city of the Gadites, (upheld by Ammon;) for Al, the neighbouring city, is spoiled. (Hp. Hall.) Heshbon, the capital of Sion's kingdom, had originally been taken from Moab. (Num. xxxi. 26—30;) and it is generally supposed that Heshbon of Moab, (xlvii. 2.) is the same city, the Moabites having again got possession of it. But it is not certain that another city, called after the name of that which the Amorites took from Moab, might not be intended. The kingdom of Sion was divided between Reuben and Gad: Heshbon was at first allotted to Reuben; but it is afterwards mentioned as a city of Gad. (Num. xxxii. 34—35. Josh. xiii. 15—18. xxi. 39.) So that either Moab, or Ammon, had taken it from Reuben or Gad. Heshbon is mentioned by Isaiah as a city of Moab; and are several others, which had been given to Reuben and Gad. (Compare Num. xxxii. 34—38, and Josh. xiii. 15—28, with Is. xvi. xvi.:) but Heshbon, as a city of Ammon, is not elsewhere mentioned.

Run to, &c. Try to hide yourselves in the thickets, and remove from one place to another for fear of being discovered. (Lowth.)

—Their king, &c. Or Molcon. (Marg. Reading, xlviii. 7.) The Ammonites gloried, either in the security of their valleys, as surrounded on every side with mountains, so that no army could penetrate into their country; or in the fruitfulness of them: one in particular was called "the flowing valley," as resembling Canaan, that flowed with milk and honey. Ammon is called a daughter, either as having apostatized from the religion of Lot, the ancestor of the nation, or as refractory and rebellious, which the word may signify.
V. 6. (Note, xlviii. 47.) It is observable, that the Septuagint leave out these intimations of mercy in reserve for the descendants of Moab and Ammon; though that concerning Elam is not omitted. (39.)—The conversion of idolaters is expressed by returning from their captivity, (Ex. xvi. 53.) (Lohth.)

V. 7. (Marg. Ref.)—Eliphaz, the friend of Job, was a Temanite; and it is probable, that the descendants of Esau were among those children of the east, who in Solomon’s days were famed for wisdom, (1 Kings, iv. 10.) but, when God designs a people for destruction, (1 Kings, iv. 33.) he deprives them of that common prudence and foresight, which is requisite for the management of their affairs; and takes from them their usual courage, so that “a thouand sand flee at the rebuke of one,” (Obad, 8, 9.) (Lohth.)

V. 8. Ezekiel mentions Dedan twice, in one place he speaks of the Dedanites, the descendants of Dedan, the son of Abrah- am by Keturah; in the other, as it is probable, of those who inhabited Dedan, a city in Idumea. (Gen. xxv. 3. Ex. xxvii. 15. 20.)

Dedan, 4c. That is, ‘Retire into your caverns and fastnesses, to secure yourselves, for there will be no securi- ty in the open country, or even in the cities.’

V. 9—11. (Ob. 5, 6.) Grape-gatherers generally leave some gleanings; and nocturnal depredators take what they can, yet do not destroy every thing: but the Chaldeans, whom God employed to desolate Edom, would entirely spoil them; they would discover and plunder their secret treasures, and leave them no refuge to hide in; and they would destroy their seed, and brethren, and neigh- bours, that there would be none left to say to those that were dying, ‘Leave thy orphans and widows to my care, and I will provide for them.’—This seems the most natural meaning of the passage in this connexion; though the latter part of it is generally quoted as a promise to the people of God, when about to leave the world: and some suppose, that it was intended for the afflicted Israelites, to remind them of the advantages which they possessed above the Edomites. Some indeed understand it ironically, as if no orphans or widows would remain, about whom the dying Edomites need be concerned: but so entire a mas- sociate never took place: and such a way of predicting so dire an event does not accord with the general manner of the holy Scriptures.

V. 12. The people of God might have expected an exemption from the calamities which overtook his ene- mies; yet they had been deeply involved in them: and could the Edomites hope to escape?—Not the character, but the peculiar privileges of the Israelites, were alluded to. (1 Pet. iv. 17, 18.)

V. 13. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Is. xxxiv. lixii. 1—6.)

V. 14. God’s stirring up men’s spirits is described here, as if he had sent ambassadors to the Chaldeans and their confederates, to engage them in the war against the Idumeans. (Lohth.)

V. 16. The word rendered terribleness is, by some, supposed to mean an idol worshipped by the Idumeans, from which they expected help, but which would disap- point their confidence,—Jerom, who lived in the neigh- bourhood, tells us, in his commentary on Obadiah, that Idumea was a rocky mountainous country; and that the inhabitants dwelt in caves dug out of the rocks and hills, (Lohth.) (Marg. Ref.)
V. 17, 18. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 19, 20. Nebuchadnezzar was about to come up (as a lion from the banks of Jordan, when driven from his den by the overflowing waters, he fiercely assailed the sheep-folds;) and the Lord would cause him suddenly to run upon the land of Edom, though it was strongly fortified; or he would cause the Edomites suddenly to run out of the land, as despairing of success against so powerful an invader. For the Lord had, as it were, summoned all the valiant captains of the earth to appear before him, that he might appoint one to this service; and from them all he had chosen Nebuchadnezzar. And who, like the Lord, was able to prepare instruments to his work? Who dared to appoint him a time, either to meet him in judgment, or to be him in battle? Or what ruler of Edom would dare to withstand him, and the weapons of his indignation? What shepherd could meet this fierce lion, to defend the sheep fold against him? Let then the Edomites hear the counsel and purpose of God against them, for he meant so to confound and intimidate them, that the least of Nebuchadnezzar’s soldiers would be able to drive out of their cities, and to lead them into captivity. (1. 44, 45. Marg. Ref.)

V. 21. All the adjacent regions would hear with astonishment of Edom’s ruin; and the outcries of the sufferers would be heard at the Red Sea, which lay at a considerable distance.

V. 22. (Note. xlviii. 40. Marg. Ref.)

V. 23. (Marg. Ref.) Damascus, the chief city of Syria, is put for the whole country, which it is probable Nebuchadnezzar totally subdued during the siege of Tyre. On the &cc. Or, “as on the sea,” when the ship is sinking, and the sailors have nothing but death before their eyes. V. 25. This may be considered as the language of the king or the inhabitants of Damascus, when they found their city, which they had so much applauded and rejoiced in, involved in the common fate of other cities that had been desolated by the Chaldeans.

V. 27. Ben-hadad. A common name of the kings of Syria; (Marg. Ref.) The accomplishment of these prophecies on the surrounding nations, during the captivity of the Jews in Babylon, would greatly tend to encourage their hopes of that deliverance, which had been predicted by the same prophet; and to impress the spectators with a conviction, that the God of Israel was indeed the Lord of heaven and earth.

V. 28. Kedar and Hazor seem to have been districts in the south-east of the land of Canaan, occupied by different tribes of the Arabsians, who lived in tents, and subsisted chiefly by feeding cattle, or by rapine. (Marg. Ref.)
CHAPTER XLIX:

30 Flee,
get you far off, dwell deep, O ye inhabitants of Hazor, saith the Lord; for Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon hath taken counsel against you, and hath conceived a purpose against you.

31 Arise, get you up unto the wealth- nation, that dwelleth without care, saith the Lord, which have neither gates nor bars, which dwell alone.

32 And their camels shall be a booty, and the multitude of their cattle a spoil: and I will scatter into all winds them that are in the utmost corners; and I will bring their calamity from all sides thereof, saith the Lord.

33 And Hazor shall be unto dragons, and a desolation for ever: there shall no man abide there, nor any son of man dwell in it.

34 ¶ The word of the Lord, that came to Jeremiah the prophet against Hazor.

B. C. 599.

V. 29. Because they used to dwell in tents, he nameth the things that pertain thereunto.

V. 30—33. (Marg. Ref.)—V. 34. Elam was a district of the country afterwards called Persia. It was subjected and ravaged by Nebuchadrezzar; but under Cyrus it aided to destroy the Chaldean monarchy. (Marg. Ref.)—This prophecy was delivered some time before the taking of Jerusalem, and probably the others were delivered about the same time, though accomplished several years after.

V. 36. Nation, &c. That is, in all that part of the world.

V. 38. Throne, &c. The Lord would place his judgment-seat among them, whence he would give sentence against them, which the Chaldeans would execute.

V. 39. (Note, vii. 47.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—22.

The Lord notes down, and will call men to an account for, every instance of dishonesty; and especially for all their injustice to the destitute and orphans, who are not able to defend their own property. Power may for a time over- come right; but he will cause the injurious to make ample restitutions for all their ill-gotten wealth, or he will distress upon them for it. The commission of iniquity, may, the concurrence at it, by those in authority, causes the alarm of war with all its desolations to be heard in the land: and it is a serious inquiry, whether an account of this kind do not stand out against this nation, in respect of several of our foreign dependencies? and whether they may not be male heirs to our wealth in those parts, who have been unjustly deprived of their inheritances?—It is in vain for those who rebel against God, to glory in fruitful fields and flowing valleys, or to trust in fleets, armies, treasures, or advantageous situations. His terror can make even the stoutest to flee; and at his word, kings, princes, and priests, must go into captivity together. But, however the people of God may be plundered and injured, they will inherit the earth, and the wealth of the sinner is laid up for the just. Wisdom and counsel cannot be preserved from vanishing and perishing, when the time of God's visitation comes. By a blow or a fever the finest genius may be rendered an idiot, and the gravest statesman a lunatic. Even when the faculties are preserved, their counsels may be so infatuated, that they may appear as fools and madmen to all around them: and in short, without true piety there can be no valuable or durable wisdom. When the Lord lets loose victorious armies to spoil guilty nations, not only for the sake of plunder, but out of wanton cruelty; when the inhabitants are driven into, or hunted out of their fastnesses, and cut off by the devouring sword; the case of widows and fatherless children appears very deplorable. But the Lord hath given gracious intimations of his special care of them; and if the dying believer have neither friend nor brother to take charge of those whom he leaves behind; if he can make no provision for them, nor direct them to any earthly protection; he may be satisfied in hearing the Lord say to him, "Leave thy fatherless children, and I will preserve them alive, and let thy widows trust in me." This is a strong tower, into which the righteous may flee and be safe in every emergency; but no secret places can hide the sinner from the Lord. And if the children of God here drink the bitter cup of affliction, can prosperous rebels expect to escape altogether unpunished? Indeed, the Lord hath sworn by himself, that they shall drink the cup of his vengeance to PROPHECIES AGAINST BABYLON, FOR ALL HER IDOLATTRIES AND INIQUITIES, BUT PARTICULARLY FOR HER OPPRESSION OF GOD'S PEOPLE, 1-3. 9-17. 21-32. 35-46. AND OF MANY AND GREAT MERCIES TO ISRAEL, 4-8. 18-20. 33. 34.

THE WORD THAT THE LORD SPOKE AGAINST BABYLON, AND AGAINST THE LAND OF THE CHALDEANS, BY JEREMIAH THE PROPHET.

2 Declare ye among the nations, and publish, and set a standard; publish, and conceal not: say, 'Babylon is taken, Bel is confounded, Merodach is broken in pieces; her idols are confounded, her images are broken in pieces.'

3 For out of the north there cometh up a nation against her, which shall make her land desolate, and none shall dwell therein: they shall remove, they shall depart, both man and beast.

4 In those days, and in that time, saith the LORD, the children of Israel shall come, they and the children of Judah together, going and weeping, they shall go, and seek the L ORD their God.

5 As in the days of lost ten, in the 15th year of king Josiah, so shall they come, weeping and mourning: and as when one goeth and doeth the death of his father or his mother, and he weeps with a loud voice with bitterness,

6 So shall Babylon be to me as Sodom, and as Gomorrah, which were in the midst of the Earth, which the Lord overthrew in a moment.

7 Make the heart of the inhabitants as the heart of a woman during labor pains; for all they that dwell in the land shall be wasting away with sickness and spoilage.

8 Depart from her, and let go; for she is no prophetess; therefore in the midst of her shall fall a prey, and in all her borders confusion.
CHAPTER L

5 They shall ask the way to Zion with their faces thitherward, saying, Come, and let us join ourselves to the Lord in a perpetual covenant, that shall not be forgotten.

6 My people hath been lost sheep: their shepherds have caused them to go astray; they have turned them away on the mountains; they have gone from mountain to hill; they have forgotten the way of their rest.

7 All that found them have devoured them: and their adversaries said, We offended not; because they have sinned against the Lord, the Habitation of justice, even the Lord, the Hope of their fathers.

8 Remove out of the midst of Babylon, and go forth out of the land of the Chaldeans, and be as the he-goats before the flocks.

9 ¶ For, lo, I will raise, and cause to come up against Babylon, an assembly of great nations from the north country: and they shall set themselves in array against her: from thence shall she be taken; their arrows shall be of a mighty expert man; none shall return in vain.

10 And Chaldea shall be a spoil: all that spoil her shall be satisfied, saith the Lord.

11 Because ye were glad, because ye rejoiced, O ye destroyers of mine heritage; because ye are grown fat as heifer at grass, and gomorrah as bulls;

12 Your mother shall be soreounded; she that bare you shall be ashamed: behold, the hindermost of the nations shall be a wilderness, a dry land, and a desert.

13 Because of the wrath of the Lord it shall not be inhabited, but it shall be wholly desolate: every one that goeth by Babylon shall be astonished, and hiss at all her plaques.

V. 4—6. The restoration of the Jews and many Israelites to their own land, was connected with the subversion of the Babylonish monarchy; and the more extensive spread of Christianity, attended with the conversion of the Jews, will be connected with the ruin of the new Testament Babylon: but some think that the future conversion of the Jews, and the restoration to their own land, is also predicted. The people are represented as convinced of their guilt, their duty, and their true interest: so that, weeping for their former sins, and for joy on account of their happy deliverance, they go to seek the Lord their God: they determine to leave Babylon and return to Zion, according to the liberty given them by Cyrus. Being unacquainted with the road, they inquire about it, as travellers who have turned their faces thitherward, being already set out and determined to proceed: and they invite their brethren to go with them, and encourage each other to go forward; that on Mount Zion they may join themselves to the Lord, and renew their acceptance and confirmation of his covenant, which was perpetually in force and obligatory; that (as persuaded he would not fail to perform it with them,) they might engage themselves not to forget to walk with him according to it. The covenant entered into by Josiah and the people, which was speedily forgotten and violated, may be referred to. Then the Lord mercifully considers the former sufferings of his people. Their rulers and teachers, who should have fed and tended them as the flock of God, had occasioned their dispersion, by seducing them to idolatry. 'They had turned them aside from the right worship of God at Jerusalem, to sacrifice to idols on mountains and high places,' (Lament.) Thus they were exposed, as lost sheep, to be devoured by their enemies, who were like wolves and lions; and they had not thought of returning to their resting-place, to God, and his worship. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 7-8. The Chaldeans, having heard that the Lord was punishing the Jews for their sins against him, supposed that they did not offend by destroying them. They allowed, that he had in former times been the Habitation of justice, the sure Protector of the righteous, and the Hope of the fathers of the Jews: but they thought that he would not defend such wicked persons, or punish those who spoiled and murdered them; as if they had been free from sin, or as if they had sought the glory of God, or acted in obedience to his commandment and in support of his righteousness, when they fought against Israel! But as the Lord had now taken vengeance on these oppressors of his people, the Jews were ordered to leave Babylon; and the leading men go to be before others, as the he-goats before the flock, without fearing any obstruction or opposition. Let every one strive to lead the way to others, and give them an example of speedily obeying God's call, without showing any fondness for the place, or the idolatries there practised. (Lament.)

V. 10. Satisfied. They shall be enriched by the plunder, and have as much as they can desire. The treasures accumulated at Babylon were immensely great.

V. 11. 'The Chaldeans were the executors of God's judgments on the Jews; but they were carried on purely by their own ambition and covetousness, though Providence directed their cruelties and oppressions to the fulfilling its own ends and purposes.' (Lament.) They insulted over the miseries of the Jews, and in their success against the worshippers of Jehovah; and they were become exceedingly prosperous and insolent.

V. 12. 13. Babylon was the mother-city, or metropolis, of 3 L 2 14 Put yourselves in array against Babylon round about: all ye that bend the bow, shoot at her, spare no arrows: for she hath sinned against the Lord.
15 Shout against her round about: she hath given her hand: her foundations are fallen, her walls are thrown down: for it is the vengeance of the Lord: take vengeance upon her; as she hath done, do unto her.
16 Cut off the sower from Babylon, and him that hath held the sickle in the time of harvest: for fear of the oppressing sword they shall turn every one to his people, and they shall flee every one to his own land.
17 ¶ Israel is a scattered sheep, the lions have driven him away: first the king of Assyria hath devoured him; and last this Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon hath broken his bones.
18 Therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel; Behold, I will punish the king of Babylon and his land, as I have punished the king of Assyria.
19 And I will bring Israel again to his habitation, and he shall feed on Carmel and Bashan, and he shall satisfy himself upon Mount Ephraim and Gilead.
20 ¶ In those days, and in that time, saith the Lord, the iniquity of Israel shall be sought for, and there shall be none; and the sins of Judah, and they shall not be found: for I will pardon them whom I reserve.
21 ¶ Go up against the land of Merathaim, even against it, and against the inhabitants of Pekod: waste and utterly destroy after them, saith the Lord, and do according to all that I have commanded thee.

the Chaldean empire. This was the greatest monarchy on earth at that time: yet the prophet called the Chaldeans the hindermost of the nations, either because of their wickedness, or in the prospect of the abject state to which they would be reduced; or as drinking last of the cup of vengeance, which he had been directed to send to the nations. (xxv. 26.) The words may mean "She shall be the hindmost of the nations, a wilderness," &c. Isaiah predicted, that "Babylon should be pools of water." (Is. xiv. 23; ) here it is foretold, that she should be "a dry land and a desert." At first, the overflowing of the Euphrates reduced the adjacent country to a fen or marsh: but there is some ground to think, that in process of ages, and by the changes thus gradually produced, Jeremiah's prediction also was literally fulfilled; as well as in the entire desolations of the city. (Note, li. 61-64.) (Marg. Ref.)

V. 14. Sinned. She hath been, in a remarkable manner, an enemy to God's truth and people. This may be especially applied to the mystical Babylon, (Lomth.) Though the Lord called the Babylonians his servants, and their work his work; yet, because they did "not to glorify God, but for their own malice, and to profit themselves, it is here called sin."

V. 15. Given, &c. Either as entering into a confederacy with other nations to defend herself against the predicted vengeance; or rather as surrendering to the conquerors, as captives gives their hands to be bound. Though Cyrus did not destroy the walls of Babylon, yet he began to execute that vengeance of God, which continued to be inflicted, till her walls and foundations were totally destroyed. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 16. Babylon was more like a country walled in, than a city; her walls being sixty miles in circumference, according to Herodotus; forty eight according to Strabo. —Within this circuit, a great deal of ground was taken up in corn-fields, so that they had corn enough growing within the walls to maintain a siege, as Q. Curius asserts. (Lomth.) The slaughter of the Husbandmen therefore, and the consequent neglect of agriculture, would increase the miseries of the inhabitants, and hasten the ruin of the city. The reader must recollect, that not only the taking of Babylon by Cyrus, but all the subsequent sieges and calamities of that city, terminating in her utter desolation, are here predicted.

For fear. This is spoken of the allies and hired soldiers of Babylon. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 17. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 18. Either the destruction of Sennacherib's army, and his death by the hand of his sons; or the destruction of Nineveh, as foretold by Jonah, Nahum, and Zephaniah, is here referred to. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 20. The Jews never relapsed, after the captivity, into those idolatries, which had been their great national offence, and had exposed them to their sufferings. This, and their other national guilt were repented of, pardoned, and blot ted out; so that they could no more be found. But the words can be applied in their full meaning to none but true believers, the spiritual Israel, whose sins are all buried in the depth of the sea, so that no one can lay any thing to their charge, or find any unpardonable or unmerited sin in them. The passage implies a prediction of the future conversion of the Jews to Christ, and their full participation of all the blessings of his Gospel. In all the judgments God brings upon his people, he promises to reserve a remnant. St. Paul calls it a remnant "according to the election of grace." (Lomth.) (Marg. Ref.)

V. 21. (Margin.) Merathaim, signifies rebels, and Pekod, visitation. But Pekod is spoken of as the name of a country or city belonging to Babylon, (Ez. xxiii. 23.)
22 A sound of battle is in the land, and of great destruction.

23 How is the hammer of whole earth cut asunder and broken! bow is broken before Babylon become a desolation among the nations!

24 I have laid a snare for thee, and thou art also taken, O Babylon, and thou wast not aware: thou art found, and also caught, because thou hast striven against the Lord.

25 The Lord hath opened her armoury, and hath brought forth the weapons of his indignation: for this is the work of the Lord God of hosts in the land of the Chaldeans.

26 Come against her from the utmost border, open her storehouses; cast her up as heaps, and destroy her utterly: let nothing of her be left.

27 Slay all her bullocks; let them go down to the slaughter: woe unto them! for their day is come, the time of their visitation.

28 The voice of them that flee, and escape out of the land of Babylon, to Jerusalem, and there celebrated the praises of God in fulfilling his word against Babylon: and from time to time, as further desolations were there made, many Jews, fleeing from that city and its neighbourhood, would carry the report to their brethren in Judea. (Note, li. 64.)

The vengeance, &c. The Chaldeans were guilty of the greatest impiety, in destroying the temple of God, as well as of cruelty and oppression upon the Jews, (7.) Belshazzar was profaning the vessels of the temple in the most blasphemous manner, when the hand-writing announced his destruction, (Dan. v.) and the ruin of the Chaldeans was the vengeance of God's temple, and the punishment of their enmity against him and his people.

29 Call together the archers against Babylon: all ye that bend the bow, camp against it round about: let none thereof escape: [recompense her according to her work;] because all that she hath done unto her: [for she hath been] proud against the Lord, against the Holy One of Israel.

30 Therefore shall her young men fall in the streets, and all her men of war shall be cut off in that day, saith the Lord.

31 Behold, I am against thee, O thou that art exalted in heart, against thee that sayest in thine heart, I am, and who can make me desolate? I will make thee desolate, thy cities shall be consumed, and thou shalt fall by the sword: and it shall devour all round about him.

33 Thus saith the Lord of hosts: [I,] the children of Israel, and the children of Judah were oppressed together: [and] all that took them captives held them fast; | they refused to let them go.

34 Their Redeemer is strong; The Lorn of hosts is his name: he shall thoroughly plead their cause, | that he may give rest to the land, and disquiet the inhabitants of Babylon.

35 A sword is upon the Chaldeans, | and upon the inhabitants of Babylon, and upon her princes, and upon her wise men.

36 A sword is upon their horses, and upon their chariots, and upon all the mingled people that are in the midst of her; and they shall become as women: a sword is upon her treasures, and they shall be robbed.

37 A drought is upon her waters: and they shall be dried up: for it is the land of graven images, and they are mad upon their idols.

39 Therefore the wild beasts of the desert, with the wild beasts of the islands, shall dwell there, and the owls shall dwell therein; and it shall be no more inhabited for ever; neither shall it be dwelt in from generation to generation.

40 As God overthrew Sodom and Gomorrah and the neighbour-cities thereof, saith the Lorn; so shall no man abide there.

41 Behold, a people shall come from northward, and a great nation, and many kings shall be raised up from the coasts of the earth.

42 They shall hold the bow and the lance: | they are cruel, and will not shew mercy: | their voice shall roar like the sea, and they shall ride upon horses. every one put in array, like a man to the battle, against thee, O daughter of Babylon.

43 The king of Babylon hath heard the report of them, and his hands waxed feeble: anguish took hold of him, and pangs as of a woman in travail.

44 Behold, he shall come up like a lion from the swelling of Jordan unto the habitation of the strong: but I will make him suddenly run away from her: and | who is a chosen man, that I may appoint over her? for who is like me? and who will appoint me the time? and | who is that shepherd that will stand before me?

45 Therefore hear ye the counsel of the Lord, that he hath taken against Babylon: and his purposes, that he hath purposed against the land of the Chaldeans; Surely the least of the flock shall draw them out: surely he shall make their habitation desolate with them.

46 At the noise of the taking of Babylon the earth is moved, and the cry is heard among the nations.
CHAPTER LI.

Further predictions of terrible judgments on Babylon, for her enormous wickedness, 1—58. Seraiah is ordered to take this prophecy to Babylon, and to read it there; and then to sink the book in the Euphrates, as a sign that Babylon should thus fall, and rise no more, 59—64.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—8.

The longer God delays his judgments, the heavier will fall on those who go on to treasure up wrath against the day of righteous retribution. His servants must not hesitate to declare his threatenings to the most prosperous sinners; either from fear of their frown, hope of their favour, or even gratitude for their kindness. The ruin of those who have been the supports of idolatry, infidelity, superstition, or impiety, is necessary, in order to the revival of true godliness, and the more general propagation of Christianity: and the prophecies of Scripture may yield great comfort to the believer, in this view of them. It should not be concealed, but published to all the nations, that the great seat of anti-christian tyranny, idolatry, and superstition, and the grand persecutor of true Christians, is as certainly doomed to destruction as ancient Babylon was; and that all her idols will be broken, and her abominations buried in her ruins: for the Lord will cause his standard to be set up, and the instruments of his anger will be gathered together, to render her land desolate, that none may dwell therein. Then will vast multitudes learn to mourn for sin, and to seek the Lord, and join themselves to him according to his new and everlasting covenant; then will the lost sheep of the house of Israel be brought back into the fold of the good Shepherd, and stray no more. In the mean time, let us rejoice that there is a remnant in every age, who seek him with weeping and supplication; especially, if we be conscious that we are of the number.—They, that would find acceptance with him, must come to his mercy-seat, through the heavenly Advocate: if not acquainted with this new and living way to Zion, they should inquire after it, by reading the word of God and praying for his Spirit; they should also attend the instructions, and seek the counsel of pious ministers, and cultivate the acquaintance of experienced Christians. Above all, they should "set their faces thitherward," and walk in the ways of God, as far as they have learned them: for it is absurd and impious to pretend to inquire the way to heaven, whilst men continue in that course of life which they are conscious tends to hell. They that have got some knowledge of the way should be always ready to give instructions to inquirers. Nor ought we willingly to travel the road alone: nay, we should press others to attend us; and desire that both we and they may be joined to the Lord in the most intimate union, as his redeemed servants and worshippers. If we be reconciled to him, according to the tenor of his new covenant by faith in Christ, the blessings will be perpetually, yea, eternally secured to us: our God will never forget his own engagements; and we should continually beseech him not to leave us to forget the duties of our relation to him. Then we shall no more be as "lost sheep, who have forgotten their resting-place," and exposed to the great devourer of souls; but we shall find rest and safety in God, the Habitation of justice, and the Hope of all the generations of Israel. Nor will he leave us to those wretched shepherds, who cause their flocks to go astray by false doctrine and corrupt examples; or who leave them to wander in ignorance and darkness, through sloth and negligence; but he will himself feed us with knowledge and understanding. The sins of professing Christians do not excuse the enmity, injustice, and cruelty of those who rejoice in destroying the heritage of God. He that will not save his people in their sins, will never countenance the wickedness of his open enemies, who upbraid them with their crimes, and then commit still viler abominations. We should avail ourselves of opportunities given us of separating more entirely from ungodly persons, and idolatrous and corrupt professors of the Gospel. Every one should be prompt in taking the lead, and setting the example, in such pious singularity: and they, whose office or rank gives them pre-eminence, should be as the he-goats before the flocks.

V. 9—46.

How earnest ought we to be in choosing and securing that good part, that can never be taken from us! For worldly possessions often render men a more desirable and satisfying spoil to the sons of rapine and violence: and they that were chief soon become the hindermost, because of the wrath of the Lord. When he arises to render to sinners according as they have done, accumulated miseries come upon them from every quarter; and every comfort and helper fails and vanishes. Indeed, the people of God seem to fall a defenceless prey to their foes; and one king or nation after another scatters them, as the lion doth the helpless sheep: thus they devour and torment them; they break their bones on racks, burn them in fires, immerse them in dungeons, or reduce them to cruel bondage, and refuse to let them go. But persecutors of every age may read their certain doom, in what befell the Assyrians and Chaldeans of old; for "the Redeemer of Israel is strong, the Lord of Hosts is his name," and he will thoroughly plead their cause, and give them rest, and feed them in his green pastures, and satisfy them with his abundant consolations. He will pardon those whom he reserves, and for ever bury their sins in oblivion, and be propitious to his chosen remnant. But his enemies, after having perhaps been employed as his hammer to dash in pieces their fellow-criminals, will themselves be broken in pieces: they will be taken in a snare, when they least suspect it: their treasures will be robbed, and they led away as fatted bullocks for the slaughter: for it is the work of God, against whom they have dared to contend. The vengeance of his broken law is terrible: and that of his despised or abused Gospel still more so; but the vengeance of his temple, the punishment of those who have used all their power to put down his worship and extirpate his people, is most tremendous:
THUS saith the Lord; Behold, I will raise up against Babylon, and against them that dwell in the midst of them, that rise up against me, a destroying wind; And will send unto Babylon fanners, that shall fan her, and shall empty her land: for in the day of trouble they shall be against her round about. Against him that bendeth, let the archer bend his bow, and against him that lifteth himself up in his pride: and spare ye not her young men; destroy ye utterly all her host. Thus the slain shall fall in the land of the Chaldeans, and they that are thrust through in her streets. For Israel hath not been forsaken nor Judah of his God, of the Lord of hosts: though their land was filled with sin against the Holy One of Israel. Flee out of the midst of Babylon, deliver every man his soul: be not cut off in her iniquity; for this is the time of the Lord’s vengeance; he will render unto her a recompense. Babylon hath been a golden cup in the hand of the Lord’s hand, that made all the earth drunk; the nations have drunken of her wine; therefore are the nations mad. Babylon is suddenly fallen and destroyed: howl for her; take balm for her pain, if so be she may be healed. We would have healed Babylon, but she is not healed: forsake her, and let us go every one into his own country: for her judgment reacheth unto heaven, and is lifted up even to the skies. The Lord hath brought forth our righteousness; come, and let us declare in Zion the work of the Lord our God. Make the arrows bright; gather the shields: the Lord hath raised up the spirit of the kings of the Medes, for his device is against Babylon, to destroy it; because it is the vengeance of the Lord, the vengeance of his temple. And it will be far more tolerable for Sodom and Gomorrath in the day of judgment, than for them. From the judgments denounced against prosperous Babylon, and the mercies promised to afflicted Israel, we should learn to choose affliction with the people of God, rather than the pleasures of sin for a season. And in the exact accomplishment which hath taken place of these ancient predictions, we may be encouraged to expect, with realizing faith, the performance of all the promises and prophecies of the sacred Scriptures: for “heaven and earth shall pass away, but the words of our Lord shall not pass away.”

NOTES.

CHAP. LI. V. 1, (Note, iv. 11, 12.) (Marg. Ref.)
V. 2. “As the wind drives and scatters chaff in a threshing floor, so shall the Persian armies make a perfect riddance of every thing that is valuable.” (xxv. 7.) (Loth.)
V. 3. “That he bendeth his bow, shall bend it no more, nor exalt himself in his bragging.” &c. Thus some render the verse.
V. 5. “For Israel hath not been a widow,” &c. (Old Trans.) “Though Israel and Judah had been sharply corrected for the iniquities with which they had filled the land, their enemies should find that they were not left as a friendless widow, to be oppressed with impunity.”
V. 6. The Jews were ordered to leave Babylon, (as Lot left Sodom,) lest they should be involved in her calamities, or corrupted by her idolatries. (Marg. Ref.)
V. 7. The great splendour and prosperity of Babylon are denoted by the term golden: as the extensive desolations occasioned by the victorious arms of Nebuchadnezzar, and the idolatries he propagated, are represented by a cup in the hand of God to intoxicate the nations and make them mad. “Babylon has recommended her idolatries to the world by several specious pretences, as well as by her authority and example, so that they have been like poison set off by a golden cup, which hath enticed men to drink, without being aware of the danger: and all this by God’s permission, in order to the accomplishing some great ends of his providence. The sense of this verse is ascribed to St. John to spiritual Babylon, which hath used the most plausible methods to disguise her idolatrous practices.” (Loth.) (Marg. Ref.)
V. 8. Take &c. (Marg. Ref.) “This is spoken ironically, implying that her ruin is irrecoverable.” (Loth.)
V. 9. The allies of Babylon did what they could to prevent her ruin; but, finding it in vain, they determined to shift for themselves: for they saw the hand of God lifted up against her; and that her judgment was to be made manifest to all men, as those objects are most conspicuous that reach very high. Some understand it of the prophets and servants of God, who had sufficiently testified against the crimes and idolatries of Babylon, and must now leave her to the most dreadful and manifest judgments of God.
V. 10. By the vengeance of God on Babylon, it was manifested that the Jewish nation had been unjustly oppressed by the Chaldeans: and that their religion indeed was the true religion, and their cause righteous, as far as man was concerned. (5.) “Therefore we ought to give glory to him, in the assemblies of the Church, and in the most public manner imaginable.” (Loth.)
V. 11. “The King of Babylon, having formed an 12 Set up the standard upon the walls of Babylon, make the watch strong; set up the watchmen, prepare the ambushes: for the Lord hath both devised and done that which he spake against the inhabitants of Babylon.

13 O thou that dwellest upon many waters, abundant in treasures, thinkest thou end is come, and the measure of thy covetousness.

14 The Lord of hosts hath sworn by his own self, saying, Surely I will fill thee with men, as with caterpillars, and they shall lift up a shout against thee.

15 He hath made the earth by his power, he hath established the world by his wisdom, and hath stretched out the heavens by his understanding.

16 When he uttereth his voice there is a multitude of waters in the heavens; and he causeth the vapours to ascend from the ends of the earth: he maketh lightnings with rain, and bringeth forth the breath of his treasures.

17 Every man is but brûtish by his knowledge; every founder is confounded by the graven image: for his molten image is falsehood, and there is no breath in them.

18 They are vanity, the work of errors: in the time of their visitation they shall perish.

19 The portion of Jacob is not like them; for he is the Former of all things, and Israel is the rod of his inheritance.

The Lord of hosts is his name.

20 Q Thou art my battle-axe and weapons of war: for with thee will I break in pieces the nations, and with thee will I destroy kingdoms;

21 And with thee will I break in pieces the horse and his rider; and with thee will I break in pieces the chariot and his rider;

22 With thee also will I break in pieces the man and woman; and with thee will I break in pieces old and young; and with thee will I break in pieces the shepherd and his flock; and with thee will I break in pieces the husbandman and his yoke of oxen; and with thee will I break in pieces captains and rulers:

23 I will also break in pieces with thee the sheep and the flock; and with thee will I break in pieces in pieces the mountains, and will pitch their folds.

24 And I will render unto Babylon, and to all the inhabitants of Chaldea, all their evil that they have done in Zion in thy sight, saith the Lord.

25 Behold, I am against thee, 1 ye destroy mountain, saith the Lord; which destroyest all the earth: and I will us that he will in due time assert his own authority, against all the encroachments of idolatry and false religions. (Lomth.)

V. 20-24. Some understand these verses of Cyrus, whom God would employ to execute his dreadful sentence upon Babylon and the Chaldeans; but others suppose, that Babylon, or the king of Babylon, is spoken of as the battle-axe by whom God would break in pieces the nations: (Notes, xxv.) and that after he had thus accomplished his purposes, he would execute vengeance on Babylon and the Chaldeans, for all the evil done in Zion, as well as for all their idolatries and iniquities. Or else the words may be understood of the Church, and imply, that God will destroy all those powers and kingdoms, which are adversaries to his people and truth. This will be fulfilled at the fall of mystical Babylon, when God's kingdom shall break in pieces all the kingdoms of the earth, in the destruction of that remnant of the fourth monarchy. (Dan. ii. 44. Mic. v. 8-15. Zech. xii. 3-6.)

In your sight. This may either refer to the evil done at Zion by the Chaldeans, in the sight of God's worshippers, (who seem here addressed;) or the public manner in which judgment would be executed on Babylon.
stretch out mine hand upon thee, and roll thee down from the rocks, and I will make thee a burnt mountain.

26 And they shall not take thee a stone for a corner, nor a stone for foundations: but thou shalt be desolate for ever, saith the Lord.

27 Set ye up a standard in the land, blow the trumpet among the nations, prepare the nations against her, call together her kings against her, to cause the horses to come up as the rough caterpillars.

28 Prepare against the nations with the kings of the Medes, the captains thereof, and all the rulers thereof, and all the land of his dominion.

29 And the land shall tremble and sorrow: for every purpose of the Lord shall be performed against Babylon, to make the land of Babylon a desolation without an inhabitant.

30 The mighty men of Babylon have forborne to fight, they have remained in their holds: they might have failed; they became as women: they have burned her dwelling-places, her bars are broken.

31 One post shall run to meet another, and one messenger to meet another, to shew the king of Babylon that his city is taken at one end;

32 And that the passages are stopped, and the reeds they have burned with fire, and the men of war are affrighted.

33 For thus saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel: The daughter of Babylon is like a threshing-floor, it is:

V. 26. Babylon stood in a plain: but the immense multitude of the buildings, and the height of the temples, walls, and towers, rendered the city as an artificial mountain. The destruction which was thence diffused to all the surrounding nations, rendered Babylon as a tremendous volcano: but at length the empire and city would be consumed, as it were, by fire; and the Lord would overturn and roll them down, as a burnt mountain, into the ocean, to be found no more. (Rev. viii. 8.)

—Destroying, &c. Or a 'corrupting mountain, which 'corrupteth the whole earth.' Babylon was the seat of idolatry, from whence it was derived into other countries; which is remarkably true of mystical Babylon. (Rev. xvii. 5.) We do not find that Babylon was ever destroyed by fire: but that mystical Babylon shall be so destroyed is plain from Rev. xvi. xvii. 8, 9. (Lomth.)

V. 27. 'There shall not be left an entire stone fit for use.' (Lomth.) It is a figurative description of the most complete desolation; of being 'swept with the besom of destruction,' as Isaiah has expressed it.

V. 27. (Marg. Ref.) 'Ararat and Minni are probably the same with the greater and lesser Armenia. Cyrus's first expedition in this war, was for reducing the Armenians who had revolted, who were obliged to assist to their usual quota of auxiliaries, to the carrying on of the war. But Astchenaz Bochart understands Phrygia and Troas; part of that country being called Ascania by Homer. Cyrus had conquered Cassius, and several nations from the Egean sea to the Euphrates, before he marched against Babylon. Xenophon informs us, that there were both Phrygians and Cappadocians in his army. (Lomth.) Virgin calls the son of Eneas, the Trojan, Ascanius. A., &c. That is, in immense multitudes destroying all before them. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 28. Kings. The princes or viceroy's of the Medinn empire, or the kings that were allies and tributaries of the king of Media.

V. 30. 'Accordingly the Babylonians, after the loss of a battle or two, never recovered their courage to face the enemy in the field again: they retired within their walls; and the first time that Cyrus came with his army before the place, he could not provoke them to venture forth, and try the force of arms; and at the last time that he came, he consulted with his officers about the best manner of carrying on the siege, since, saith he, they do not come forth and fight.' (Bp. Newton.) The Chaldeans were very valiant, when the Lord used them as his hammer or battle-axe; but they became as women, when his vengeance was to be executed on them.

V. 31, 32. Cyrus having spent two years before Babylon, with little prospect of success, and even derided by the inhabitants, at length, having drained the river, divided his army into two parts, and marched them into the city at each end, by the channel of it; and through the brazen gates, at the ends of each street toward the river, which the riotous Babylonians had left open. When the Persians appeared in the city, messengers would immediately be sent to inform the king that the city was taken at one end, (not supposing that the other end was taken also;) and these would meet with one another, and increase the terror and confusion of the inhabitants; but it seems that the troops of Cyrus arrived at the palace before the messengers could inform the king of his danger. They were also to carry information, that the Persians had stopped the passages, and cut off the communication between one part of the city and another: that they had set the reeds on fire, and that the soldiers were so affrighted, as to be incapable of making any resistance. The word translated reeds properly signifies martial lakes. —The enemy have burnt up all the amphitheatres, belonging to the marshy grounds about the river. Herodotus takes notice, that the extreme parts of the city were taken before they dwelt in the middle of it, and were sensible of the danger.' (Lomth.) time to thresh her; yet a little while, and the time of her harvest shall come.

34 Nebuchadnezzar, the king of Babylon, hath devoured me, he hath crushed me; he hath made me an empty vessel, he hath swallowed me up like a dragon, he hath filled his belly with my delicacies, he hath cast me out.

35 *The violence done to me, and to my flesh by upon Babylon, shall the inhabitants of Zion say, and my blood upon the inhabitants of Chaldea, shall Jerusalem say.

36 Therefore thus saith the Lord; Behold, I will plead thy cause, and take vengeance for thee; and I will dry up her sea, and make her springs dry.

37 And Babylon shall become heaps, a dwelling-place for dragons, an astonishment, and an hissing, without an inhabitant.

38 They shall roar together like lions; they shall howl as lions' whelps.

39 In *their heat I will make their feasts, that they may rejoice, and sleep a perpetual sleep, and not wake, saith the Lord.

40 I will bring them down like lambs to the slaughter, like rams with he-goats.

41 How is Sheshach taken! and how is the praise of the whole earth surprised! how is Babylon become an astonishment among the nations!

42 The sea is come up upon Babylon: she is covered with the multitude of the waves thereof.

43 Her cities are a desolation, a dry land, and a wilderness; a land wherein no man dwelleth, neither doth any son of man pass thereby.

44 And I will punish Bel in Babylon, and *I will bring forth out of his mouth that which he hath swallowed up;

45 and *the nations shall not flow together any more unto him; yea, *the wall of Babylon shall fall.

V. 33. Babylon had crushed and trampled on the nations, and especially on the Jews, as the corn was trodden out on the threshing floor: and she was about to endure the like miseries herself. The riches of the nations, likewise, were collected into her, as the sheaves into the floor: but her crimes had made her ripe for divine vengeance; the time of her harvest was at hand; the whole would be carried away by her enemies, as the field is cleared at harvest, and the conquerors would be enriched by her spoils.

V. 34—37. Zion here complains to the Lord of the injuries she had sustained from the Chaldeans: they had devoured the substance, and destroyed the people of Judah; they had rendered Jerusalem like an empty vessel; and having gorged themselves, like some voracious animal, with all her precious stores, they cast her and her children out of the land, and carried them into captivity. But this violence done to the children of Zion, and their blood which had been shed, lay upon Babylon as a heavy load: and in avenging Zion, God would waste Babylon, and render it the residence of venomous and hateful creatures alone. (Marg. Ref.) By drying up the sea and springs of Babylon, the destruction of her people, and the total failure of all those resources whence she derived her immense riches, may be meant: and perhaps the draining of the Euphrates may be alluded to; as all great waters are called seas in Scripture.

V. 38—46. The drunken revels of the Chaldeans would be turned into hideous howlings, when they found their enemies in the midst of them. The Lord so ordered it, that they should be left at this crisis to inflame themselves with wine, at a feast observed in honour of their idols; that their clamorous rejoicing and intoxication might make way for Cyrus to destroy them when fallen asleep, and they should wake no more in this world. (Marg. Ref.) For thus God made them sacrifices to his awful justice: while they were exposed to the swords of their enemies, with as little consciousness of the doom which awaited them, as the animals had which were butchered or sacrificed.

V. 41. (Marg. Ref.) Babylon was esteemed the wonder of the world, for the height, breadth, and compass of her walls, and the palace and hanging gardens belonging to it; for the temple of Belus; for the banks and fountains of the river, and the artificial lakes and canals made for the draining of it. (Lomith.)

V. 42. The multitude of the invaders who came against Babylon was as irresistible as the impetuous waves of the ocean: and her ruin would be as surprising as if the sea had quitted its channel, and had come up to destroy the city.

V. 43. (Note, l. 12—32.) Babylon, and all the adjacent regions, would become uninhabited, uncultivated, and unproductive, like a barren desert.

V. 44. Bel was the chief idol of Babylon, and the destruction of his temple and his worshippers was as his punishment; and doubtless was a heavy punishment to those ambitious spirits, whom all idolaters worship. The immense treasures of his temple, which had been accumulating for ages, became the property of the conquerors. (Note, l. 1, 2, 3. (Marg. Ref.) The heathen ascribed the honour of all their successes to their idols; and upon great victory, offered the best part of their spoils to their gods, and deposited them in their temples. The restoring of the holy vessels to their right owner is here particularly foretold, which was done by Cyrus, upon his proclamation for rebuilding the temple. Xerxes demolished the temple.
45 My people, go ye out of the midst of her, and deliver every man his soul from the fierce anger of the Lord.

46 And last your heart, and ye fear for the rumour that shall be heard in the land; a rumour shall both come one year, and after that in another year shall come a rumour, and violence in the land, ruler against ruler.

47 Therefore, behold, the days come, that I will do judgment upon the great images of Babylon: and her whole land shall be confounded, and all her slain shall fall in the midst of her.

48 Then the heaven and the earth, and all that is therein, shall sing for Babylon: for the spoilers shall come unto her from the north, saith the Lord.

49 As Babylon hath caused the slain of Israel to fall, so at Babylon shall fall the slain of all the world.

50 Ye that have escaped the sword, go away, stand not still: remember the Lord afar off, and let Jerusalem come into your mind.

51 We are confounded, because we have heard reproach: shame hath covered our faces: for strangers are come into the sanctuaries of the Lord's house.

52 Wherefore, behold, the days come, saith the Lord, that I will do judgment upon her graven images: and through all her land the wounded shall groan.

53 Though Babylon should mount up to heaven, and though she should fortify the height of her strength, yet from me shall spoilers come unto her, saith the Lord.

64 A sound of a cry cometh from Babylon, and great destruction from the land of the Chaldeans:

55 Because the Lord hath spoiled Babylon, and destroyed out of her the great voice; when her waves do roar like great waters, a noise of their voice is uttered:

56 Because the spoiler is come upon her, even upon Babylon, and her mighty men are taken, every one of their bows; even all Gen. 32. 4 Adon. ii. 4 Ps. xcvii. 15 Niv. 3 Lev. 5. 3. Kjv. 5. 5.

of Belus, and plundered it of its vast wealth, which is computed to have amounted to twenty-one millions of our money. There shall be no more costly presents brought by foreign nations to the temple of Bel. Just as, under the Roman empire, people that were conquered sent "golden crowns to Jupiter Capitolinus." (Lomth.)

V. 45. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 46. Lest the sudden destruction of the city where they resided should terrify the Jews, the Lord intended to prepare them for it. Rumours would reach them, one year after another, of Cyrus's intended invasion: and by comparing the wars, insurrections, and revolts which took place, with these predictions, they might learn to consider such events as the forerunners of their own deliverance. (Notes, Luke, xxi. 20—28.) "Meaning, that Babylon should not be destroyed all at once; but by little and little should be brought to nothing. For the first year came the tidings, the next year the siege, and in the third year, it was taken: yet this is not the horrible destruction, which the prophets threatened in many places; for that was, when after this they rebelled, and Darius overcame them by the policy of Zopyrus, and hanged three thousand of superior rank." (Notes, 61—64.)

V. 47. "Taking this prophecy in its full extent, it comprises the fall of mystical Babylon, which is represented, both here and in the parallel passages of Isaiah and the Revelation, as a decisive stroke, which should thoroughly vindicate the cause of oppressed truth and innocence, and put a final period to idolatry, and to all the oppressions of God's people." (Lomth.)

V. 48, 49. The earth. (Marg. Ref.) The regions which constituted this vast empire, which was spoken of as the whole earth or world, as the Roman empire afterwards was.

V. 50, 51. The Jews who had escaped during all their preceding sufferings, and who escaped the sword when Babylon was taken, were again exiled to leave Babylon, to think of the Lord and of his temple, though they were far off from Jerusalem; and to make haste to return thither. To which they answered, that they were covered with shame, because of the reproach they lay under whilst their holy places had been profaned, destroyed, and trampled on by strangers.

V. 53. (Note, 47.) The builders of Babylon, (or Babylon,) meant to build a tower, whose top should reach to heaven; and so the walls of Babylon were of prodigious and almost incredible height and strength. It appears from the testimony of those who had been upon the spot, that the walls were three hundred and fifty feet in height, and eighty seven in thickness, and sixty miles in circuit; with towers still higher and stronger, at proper distances: and though there is some difference in the account given by different authors, yet all agree that the fortifications of Babylon were unparalleled. Depending on these, and the plenty of provisions that were in the city, the inhabitants derided the besiegers. But God had sent them, and they were sure to prevail. (9.)

V. 55. The multitude, tumult, and boasting of the inhabitants of Babylon made a noise like the waves of the sea; but in process of time it was to be succeeded by entire solitude and silence; except as interrupted by the noise of doleful birds and venomous creatures.
CHAPTER LI.

57 And I will make drunk her princes, and her wise men, her captains, and her rulers, and her mighty men: and they shall sleep a perpetual sleep, and not wake; saith the King, whose name is The Lord of hosts.

58 Thus saith the Lord of hosts; The broad walls of Babylon shall be utterly broken, and her high gates shall be burned with fire; and the people shall labour in vain, and the folk in the fire, and they shall be weary.

59 The word which Jeremiah the prophet commanded Seraiah the son of Neriah, the son of Maaseiah, when he went with Zedekiah the king of Judah into Babylon in the fourth year of his reign. And this Seraiah was a quiet prince.

60 So Jeremiah wrote in a book all the evil that should come upon Babylon, even all these words that are written against Babylon.

61 And Jeremiah said to Seraiah, When thou comest to Babylon, and shalt see, and shalt read all these words;

62 Then shalt thou say, O Lord, thou hast spoken against this place, to cut it off, that none shall remain in it, neither man nor beast, but that it shall be desolate for ever.

63 And it shall be, when thou hast made an end of reading this book, that thou shalt bind a stone to it, and cast it into the midst of Euphrates:

64 And thou shalt say, Thus shall Babylon sink, and shall not rise from the evil that I will bring upon her: and they shall be weary. Thus far are the words of Jeremiah.
CHAP. LII.
Zeckiah's wicked reign, and rebellion against the king of Babylon, 1—3.
Jerusalem is taken; Zedekiah made prisoner; his sons and nobles are slain; his eyes are put out, and he is carried in chains to Babylon, 4—11. The temple and city are burnt, the sacred treasures, &c., are with the people, carried to Babylon, 12—23. The nobles are slain at Riblah, 24—27. The numbers, at different times carried captive, 28—30. Evil-merodach shows kindness to Jehoiachin, 31—34.

ZEDEKIAH was one and twenty years old when he began to reign, and he reigned eleven years in Jerusalem. And his mother's name was Hamutal the daughter of Jeremiah of Libnah. And he did that which was evil in the sight of Jehovah.

V. 33—64.

Whilst God avenges all injustice and oppression, &c., violence done to the saints and martyrs of Jesus will draw down the heaviest load of vengeance: and in bringing sinners to condign punishment, he needs only leave them to their lusts, and they will make way for their own destruction. Drunken revels and sensual mirth are awful preparations for death: and if men would not fall asleep amidst such excesses, to awake no more but in eternal ruin, they ought not to indulge in them. The wars and desolations which pervade the earth should cause our hearts to mourn; but not to faint or fear: for though violence be in the land, and ruler against ruler, and tremendous slaughter be made, yet the Lord presides, and is preparing to execute judgment on the enemies of his cause, that heaven and earth may sing his praise. We may indeed yet complain of reproach and shame; because the sanctuaries of his house are possessed and profaned by those who are strangers and enemies to his truth and grace: but let us still remember the Lord our God, and pray for the promised and not far distant peace of Jerusalem; let us use every means that he hath appointed, to promote the cause of genuine Christianity; and confidently expect, that Babylon and every Antichrist will soon sink and rise no more for ever. We need not be dismayed at the haughtiness, prosperity, or power of the wicked; or at the prospect of mountainous difficulties in our way: for there is nothing too hard for the Lord. Let us then hope in his word, and quietly wait for his salvation: and then we shall see, but never share, the destruction of the wicked that rise up against us.

NOTES.
CHAP. LII. V. 1—3. (Notes, 2 Kings xxiv. 17—23. 2 Chr. xxxvi. 13. Es. xvii. 11—21. (Marg. Ref.)) the eyes of the Lord, 4 according to all that Jehoiakim had done.

3 For 4 through the anger of the Lord, 5 it came to pass in Jerusalem and Judah, till he had cast them out from his presence, that 6 Zedekiah rebelled against the king of Babylon.

4 7 And it came to pass in the ninth year of his reign, 8 in the tenth month, in the tenth day of the month, 9 that Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon came, he and all his army, against Jerusalem, and pitched against it, and built forts against it round about.

5 So the city was besieged unto the eleventh year of king Zedekiah.

6 And in 10 the fourth month, in the ninth day of the month, 11 the famine was sore in the city, so that there was no bread for the people of the land.

7 Then 12 the city was broken up, and 13 all the men of war fled, and went forth out of the city by night, by the way of the gate between the two walls, which was by the king’s garden; (now the Chaldeans were by the city round about;) and they went by the way of the plain.

8 But the army of the Chaldeans pursued after the king, 14 and overtook Zedekiah in the plains of Jericho; and all his army was scattered from him.

9 Then 15 they took the king, and carried him up unto the king of Babylon to Riblah, in the land of Hamath; where he gave judgment upon him.

10 And the king of Babylon 16 slew the sons of Zedekiah before his eyes: 17 he slew also all the princes of Judah in Riblah.

11 Then 18 he put out the eyes of Zedekiah, and the king of Babylon bound him in 19 chains, and carried him to Babylon, and put him in 20 prison till the day of his death.

12 Now in the 21 fifth month, in the tenth day of the month, 22 which was the nineteenth year of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, came Nebuzar-adan, 3 captain of the guard, 23 which 24 served the king of Babylon, into Jerusalem, 13 And 25 burned the house of the Lord, 26 and the king’s house; and all the houses of Jerusalem, and all the houses of the great men, burned he with fire.

14 And all the army of the Chaldeans that were with the captain of the guard, 2 broke down all the walls of Jerusalem round about.

15 Then Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard carried away captive certain 27 of the poor of the people, and the residue of the people that remained in the city, and those that fell, that fell to the city of the king of Babylon, and the rest of the multitude.

16 But Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard left 28 certain of the poor of the land, for vine-dressers, and for husbandmen.

17 ¶ Also the 29 pillars of brass that were in the house of the Lord, and 30 the bases, and the brazen sea that was in the house of the Lord, the Chaldeans brake, and carried all the brass of them to Babylon.

18 The 31 caldrons also, and 32 the shovels, 33 and the snuffers, 34 and the bowls, and 35 the spoons, and all the vessels of brass wherewith they ministered, took they away.

19 And the basins, and the 36 firepans, and the bowls, and the caldrons, and the candlesticks, and the spoons, and the cups; that which was of gold in gold, and that which was of silver in silver, took the captain of the guard away.

20 The 37 two pillars, one sea, and twelve brazen bulls that were under the bases, which king Solomon had made in the house of the Lord: 38 the brass of all these vessels was 39 without weight.

21 And 40 concerning the pillars, the height of one pillar was eighteen cubits; and a 41 fillet of twelve cubits did com-

---

4 Under the bases. (Lath.) Or instead of bases, to support the brass sea. (Lath.) V. 24—27. Note, 2 Kings xxv. 19—21. These were eminent persons, who had concealed themselves, but were afterwards discovered. (Lath.) V. 28, 29. (Note 2 Kings xxiv. 8—16.) Arch.
pass it; and the thickness thereof was four fingers: it was hollow.

22 And a chapter of brass was upon it; and the height of one chapter was five cubits, with net-work and pomegranates upon the pomegranates round about, all of brass. The second pillar also and the pomegranates were like unto these.

23 And there were ninety and six pomegranates on a side; and all the pomegranates upon the network were an hundred round about.

24 ¶ And the captain of the guard took Seraiah the chief priest, and Zephaniah the second priest, and the three keepers of the door:

25 He took also out of the city an eunuch, which had the charge of the men of war; and seven men of them that were near the king's person, which were found in the city; and the principal scribe of the host, which mustered the people of the land; and threescore men of the people of the land, that were found in the midst of the city.

26 So Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard took them, and brought them to the king of Babylon to Riblah.

27 And the king of Babylon smote them, and put them to death in Riblah, in the land of Hamath: thus Jehudah was carried away captive out of his own land.

28 ¶ This is the people whom Nebuchadrezzar carried away captive: in the seventh year, three thousand Jews and three and twenty:

29 In the eighteenth year of Nebuchadrezzar, he carried away captive from Jerusalem eight hundred thirty and two 30 In the three and twentieth year of Nebuchadrezzar, Nebuzar-adan the captain of the guard carried away captive of the Jews seven hundred forty and five persons: all the persons were four thousand and six hundred.

31 ¶ And it came to pass in the seven and thirtieth year of the captivity of Jehoiachin king of Judah, in the twelfth month, in the fifth and twentieth day of the month, that Evil-merodach king of Babylon, in the first year of his reign, lifted up the head of Jehoiachin king of Judah, and brought him forth out of prison;

32 And spake kindly unto him, and set his throne above the throne of the kings that were with him in Babylon:

33 And changed his prison-garments, and he did eat bread before him all the days of his life.

34 And for his diet, there was a continual diet given him of the king of Babylon, every day a portion, until the day of his death, all the days of his life.

---

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

When nations provoke God to give them up to ruin, he leaves their princes to infatuated counsels, which bring deserved punishment on themselves and their subjects. Would we then have wise and successful rulers, we must pray for them, and study ourselves to walk conscientiously before God. When sinners follow one another in the ways of rebellion, it may be expected that God will follow them with similar judgments. Ringleaders in impiety will have the heavier load of misery: external privileges and sacredness of character aggravate the wickedness, and will increase the punishment, of transgressors: and the ruin of churches and nations is often chargeable on the crimes of the leading ministers of religion. But let us, with serious application to ourselves, observe, how certainly the word of God takes effect; and how fatal are the consequences of obstinate iniquity and impiety. Let us consider the manifold changes of this world: that we may mourn even under long continued afflictions without desponding, as we know not what good may be reserved for us; and rejoice in prosperity without presuming, for we know not what fatal reverse may await us. And let us set our affections on things above, where there are no changes, or death, because no more temptation or sin, for evermore.
THE LAMENTATIONS OF JEREMIAH.

The Jews denominate this Book Echah, (How,) from the first word of the text; or sometimes they call it ' Kinnoth, (Tears,) alluding to the mournful character of the work. Josephus and other writers, suppose that it was written upon the occasion of Josiah's death. The generality of commentators are, however, of a contrary opinion; and indeed Jeremiah here bewails the desolations of Jerusalem, the captivity of Judah, the miseries of famine, and the cessation of all public worship, in terms so forcible and pathetic that they appear rather applicable to some period after the destruction of Jerusalem, when, agreeably to his own predictions, every circumstance of complicated distress overshadowed Judea.' (Grey's Key.) It is indeed wonderful, that any man, having attentively perused the book, should doubt concerning the occasion on which it was written. The prophet had said, that if the people "would not hear, his soul should weep in secret places for their pride:" and, though the awful catastrophe was a remarkable attestation of his character as a true prophet, and confuted all his opposers; yet his lamentations over it constitute, beyond all comparison, the most tender and pathetic elegy, extant in any language. This poem affords the most elegant variety of affecting images that ever probably were collected into so small a compass. The scenes of affliction, the circumstances of distress, are pointed out with such beautiful combination, that we contemplate every where the most affecting picture of desolation and misery.

The prophet reiterates his complaints in the most pathetic style; and aggravates his sorrow with a boldness and force of description, that correspond with the magnitude and religious importance of the calamities displayed to view. In the instructive strains of an inspired writer, he reminds his countrymen of the grievous rebellions that had provoked the Lord to "abhor his sanctuary;" confesses that "it was of God's mercies, that they were not utterly consumed;" and points out the sources of evil in the iniquities of their false prophets and priests. He then with indignant irony threatens Edom with destruction for rejoicing over the miseries of Judea; opens a consolatory prospect to Zion; and concludes with an affecting address to God, to consider the reproach of his people, and to renew their prosperity.' (Grey's Key.)—The leading design indeed of this sacred Poem seems to have been, to teach the captive Jews the due medium, betwixt obdurate insensibility and rebellious despondency, under their calamities; to lead them to consider God as the righteous Author, and sin as the deserving cause, of them: to call them to the exercise of submission, repentance, faith, and prayer; to show them the way of finding support under such complicated miseries, and with hopes of promised deliverance, from the mercy of God. This view of the subject will likewise occasionally lead us to look to him, who for our salvation became a man of sorrows and acquainted with grief, and who, in this and every other duty, hath left us a perfect example that we should follow his steps. (Note, iii. 1.) The nature of the subjects precludes the expectation of direct prophecies, as proofs of the divine inspiration of the poem; except as it introduces and adopts the predictions of other scriptures, and anticipates the accomplishment of them. Neither is it expressly quoted in the New Testament; unless St. Paul intended to refer to it, (Compare iii. 45. with 1 Cor. iv. 13;) but there never was a doubt so much as hinted by the Jews, against its being the genuine work of Jeremiah, and a part of the sacred oracles; and the instructions conveyed in it remarkably coincide with those of the New Testament. Each of the chapters consists of twenty two stanzas; (for no doubt the work is poetical;) Each verse in the first two begins with a letter of the Hebrew alphabet, in regular order; after the manner of some of the Psalms. The third has three short verses to each stanza; each beginning with the Hebrew letters as before; but with one variation as to the order of them. The fourth agrees to the first and second: but, the fifth, though consisting of the same number of verses, is not arranged according to the initial letters. There are many traditions extant about the death of this prophet; but no great dependence can be placed on them.

Vol. III.—No. 21.
CHAP. I.

The miseries of Jerusalem and of the Jews, pathetically lamented, with confessions of their sins, 1-11. The attention and compassion of beholders demanded to this unprecedented case, 12-17. The justice of God acknowledged, and his mercy supplicated, with prayers against insulting foes, 18-22.

How doth the city sit solitary that was full of people! how is she become as a widow! she that was great among the nations, and princess among the provinces, how is she become tributary!

2 She weepeth sore in the night, and her tears are on her cheeks: among her lovers she hath none to comfort her: all her friends have dealt treacherously with her: they are become her enemies.

3 Judah is gone into captivity because of affliction, and because of great servitude: she dwelleth among the heathen.

then, she findeth no rest: all her persecutors overtook her between the straits.

4 The ways of Zion do mourn, because none come to the solemn feasts.

5 All her gates are desolate: her priests sigh, her virgins are afflicted, and she is in bitterness.

6 Her adversaries are the chief, her enemiess prosper; for the Lord hath afflicted her for the multitude of her transgressions: her children are gone into captivity before the enemy.

6 And from the daughter of Zion all her beauty is departed: her princes are become like harts that find no pasture, and they are gone without strength before the pursuer.

7 Jerusalem remembered, in the days of her affliction and of her miseries, all her pleasant things that she had in the days of old, when her people fell into the hands of the enemy.

How doth the city sit solitary, that was full of people? Jerusalem, as a weeping female, sits on the ground, with none to attend or comfort her: the Lord had forsaken her, her king was carried captive, and she was become as a widow. She had been eminent in dignity and authority; and in the days of David and Solomon, several of the surrounding nations acknowledged her as their princess, and rendered her tribute: but she was now become tributary, and was grievously oppressed by the heathen. How had this lamentable reverse in her condition taken place? Without doubt the hand of God was gone forth against her: or her enemies could never have thus prevailed. On these accounts Jerusalem is represented as weeping very sore in the night when others are refreshed by sleep; a continued flow of tears beset her cheeks; none of her idols, who had seduced her from God, and had been her paramours in spiritual adultery, could now afford her any consolation; and her heathen allies, whom she had relied on as friends, were treacherously turned to be her enemies. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 2. Here the scene changes, and the nation is considered as another female dragged away to Babylon, a captive and a slave; by reason of those grievous afflictions which sin had occasioned. There she dwelt in great servitude, among idolaters, at a distance from God's ordinances, bereft of all her comforts, and exposed to every outrage from the insulting victors, who hated her for her relation to Jehovah; nor could she there have any rest from labour, terror, and suffering. Her persecutors, who had long pursued her, at length had overtaken her in the straits where she could not elude or avoid them: and she was entirely exposed to their merciless oppression. (Jer. lii. 6-11.)

NOTES.

CHAP. I. V. 1, 2. The fifty second chapter of Jeremiah was formerly placed as a prologue to this book: but, instead of it, the Greek and Latin copies have a short introduction, which may be thus translated: It came to pass, that after Israel was carried captive, and Jerusalem desolate; the prophet Jeremiah sat weeping, and bewailed Jerusalem with this lamentation, and said, &c.

This argument was occasioned, as Huetus probably conjectured, by removing the fifty second chapter from the place where it first stood, and placing it at the conclusion of the prophecy of Jeremiah. (Lorith.) In these pathetic complaints, the prophet sometimes speaks in his own person; at other times Jerusalem or Zion, as a sorrowing female, is the speaker; and at others a chorus, or collective body of the Jews, is introduced. The reader is also in some places made to witness the miseries of the people during the siege of Jerusalem; then the calamities attending the plunder and destruction of it are presented to his imagination; then he reviews the dreary condition of the city and land, when the desolations were completed, and hears the insults of his enemies over them; or his attention is called to the poor captives at Babylon, as if indeed a spectator of the hardships put on them. Thus the scenes are shifted, so to speak, in such a manner as may best realize to the mind the various and complicated miseries endured by the nation, from the death of Josiah to the completion of the captivity: but especially at the close of that period. The scene here laid is the city, after all the inhabitants were driven out of it, and its buildings were burned, and while it lay in ruins. The prophet had witnessed Jerusalem a populous, prosperous, and tumultuous city: but now viewing her desolate situation, he exclaims,

CHAPTER I.

All her people sigh; she seeketh bread; they have given her pleasant things for meat to the rapine: O Lord, and consider; for I am become vile.

12 Is it nothing to you, all ye that pass by, and see, and consider, and be turned backward?

13 From above hath he sent fire into the midst of his bones, and it prevaiileth against them; he hath spread a net for my feet; he hath turned me back: he hath made me desolate and faint all the day.

14 The yoke of my transgressions is bound by his hand: they are wreathed, and come up upon my neck: he hath made my strength to fall, the Lord hath delivered me into their hands, from whom I am not able to rise up.

V. 4—7. The poor disconsolate captive is for the present lost sight of; and the reader is presented with a view of the city after it was taken. The ways that led to Zion, had been at stated times to be thronged by persons, who from all parts of the land came up to keep the solemn feasts; but now the enemies were in possession of the city, the inhabitants were slain or carried captive, and the ways were unfrequented! The gates, through which numbers had used to pass and re-pass continually, were silent and desolate. The priests, deprived of employment and subsistence, spent their time in unavailing sighs: and the virgins, who formerly attended the sacred temple-service, were in the deepest distress. Zion herself or Jerusalem (1.) was in bitterness: her enemies had acquired the ascendency, and prospered in all their attempts against her: the Lord, who had been her Protector, was provoked by the multitude of her transgressions to give her up into the hands of her adversaries: and her children were torn from her and carried captive. Thus all her beauty and glory, both of external prosperity and of the temple and sacred services, were departed from her. (Marg. Ref.) Her princes, once courageous as lions, were now become, not only as timorous as the hunted harts or deer which dare not face the pursuers, but as feeble as the harts that find no pasture and are not able to flee away. In these circumstances Jerusalem remembered, with bitter regret, her former prosperity and privileges, both civil and sacred; and this remembrance added to her anguish, now that her people were helplessly fallen into the hands of the enemy. Her adversaries saw and insulted over her miseries: and as they had always observed her sacred solemnities, and observance of her sabbaths; they now mocked her, because those peculiarities had been of no use to her. (2.) The enemies of Jerusalem, witnessing her calamities, mocked at her religion as unprofitable: but the prophet reminded them, that her miseries were the punishment of her grievous transgressions, which rendered all her forms of godliness unacceptable. She was therefore removed, and as it were turned out, for her offences. The nations, that had been used to honour her, now despised her; for her crimes by which she had disgraced herself, were as conspicuous as the punishments were, by which God had stripped her naked and exposed her to shame: and this was the cause of her sighs, groans, and confusion of face. Indeed she had been so shameless in her filthiness, that she had taken no pains to conceal it, but exposed it to every one: nor had she remembered what Moses and the prophets declared would be the last end of such misconduct; therefore she was brought down from her eminency in the most wonderful manner, and was reduced to the most abject and disconsolate misery. In this view of the state of Jerusalem, the prophet was extremely grieved to think, how the enemy magnified himself, and was emboldened in idolatry and blasphemy: and he therefore besought the Lord to behold and compassions his affliction. He was deeply affected to see the sad condition of Jerusalem, not only seize on all her valuable treasures, jewels, and furniture; but spread their sacrilegious hands on the sacred vessels of the temple, which were most pleasant to every pious mind: for Jerusalem had seen the heathen, who by the law were excluded from the congregation of Israel, profaning by their presence and depredations, the sanctuary and even the holy of holies! At the same time the people sighed and lamented: for in the extremity of the famine, they not only had given all their valuable effects to purchase bread, to preserve their lives; but at length were forced by hunger to give up the temple and all its pleasing things, into the hands of the enemy. In this sad condition Jerusalem at idolatrous beseigers, and supplicating the compassion of God, seeing she was become so vile and despised among the enemies of true religion.

3 N 2
15 The Lord hath trodden under foot all my mighty men in the midst of me: he hath called an assembly against me to crush my young men: the Lord hath trodden the virgin, the daughter of Judah, as in a wine-press.

16 For these things I weep; mine eye, mine eye runneth down with water, because the comforter that should relieve my soul is far from me: my children are desolate, because the enemy prevailed.

17 Zion spreadeth forth her hands, and there is none to comfort her: the Lord hath commanded concerning Jacob, that his adversaries should be round about him: Jerusalem is as a menstruating woman among them.

18 The Lord is righteous: for I have repleted against his commandment: hear, I pray you, all people.

19 The adversaries of my people are strong, and the enemies of the Lord as the强有力的字眼, 因为他们的敌人是如此强大。

20 Behold, O Lord: for I am in distress: my bowels are troubled; mine heart is turned within me; for I have grievously rebelled, and abroad the sword bereaveth, at home there is as death.

21 They have heard that I sigh, there is none to comfort me: all mine enemies have heard of my trouble; they are glad that thou hast done it: thou wilt bring the day that thou hast called, and they shall be like unto me.

22 Let all their wickedness come before thee; and do unto them as thou hast done unto me for all my transgressions; and my heart is faint.

23 Jerusalem or Zion is here introduced, (as in the close of the last verse,) sitting dejected and distressed upon the ground, and, seeing the passengers disposed to neglect or insult her sufferings, she called upon them to consider whether her example did not concern them? Doubtless they ought to consider the greatness of her misery, that they might sympathize with her; and the cause of them, that they might take warning and receive instruction.

It must be evident that her sorrows were unprecedented in greatness and variety; and that the Lord himself had done all this to her in his fierce anger. His wrath, like fire from heaven, penetrated, tortured, and consumed her bones, and overthrew all her strength. His various judgments, (like a net spread for her feet,) so entangled her that she could not escape; and if she attempted it, she still rebounded back against the power of her persecutors. Thus he had made her obstinate and faint with unremitted miseries. She had been sold as a slave for her transgressions; and God himself had bound the yoke, and wrenched it on her neck, so that she could not possibly shake it off: her slavery was the evident effect of her crimes, and was embittered by the sense of his wrath: and he had deprived her of all power to withstand, or escape, the instruments of his rigorous vengeance. He had trodden down all the mighty men, who attempted to defend her: he had collected the armies against her, who crushed her young men to pieces: he had given her up into the hands of the besiegers, to be bruised by them, as grapes are when cast into the wine-press. These things extorted her ceaseless tears: for God, who alone could comfort her when thus bereaved of her children, was become her enemy, and paid no regard to her supplications, when she stood forth her hands towards him. Nay, he had given commandment, that her adversaries should surround her, and that even idolaters should treat her with loathing or neglect. Some parts of this passage, are often quoted, in speaking of our Lord's sufferings; and they are capable of striking accommodation: but it should be recollected, that this is only an accommodation, and not the real meaning of the sacred writer. The address is so beautifully pathetic, that no comment can do justice to it. In the midst of all her sufferings, Jerusalem was constrained to acknowledge the justice of God, and to condemn herself; for she had rebelled against his commandment. It was therefore worthy of the attention of all people to observe the punishment to which her crimes had subjected her. All confidences failed in the extremity of her trouble: even her priests and elders perished for famine: what then must have been the case with the multitude of her inhabitants? But her inward anguish was most intolerable, through the sense of guilt and of the wrath of God; whilst the sword devoured without, and the famine within the city: (for the scene seems here to be laid previous to the taking of Jerusalem.) It was in vain for her to look to her former friends, for they had heard of her sorrows, but attempted not to comfort her. And her enemies exulted and rejoiced over her miseries, out of hatred to her religion. She had therefore none to look to but God, and to him she made her appeal; and said that the doom of her enemies was passed, and that the Lord would deal with them as he had done with her because of her transgressions, which had reduced her to so deplorable a condition. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-11.

We shall often be required in this evil world to weep with sufferings of the people who, by hearing to false prophets, are exposed to the cruel insults of their enemies; and he calls on the sufferers to join with him in tears and prayers, 13–19. Zion refers her distress case to the compassionate consideration of God, 20–22.

We cannot derive benefit from our sufferings, unless we look above the instruments and occasions of them, and consider the hand of God in them. He it is, who impoverishes, endnares, intimidates, and enslaves men, as he sees good; he treads down and crushes the mighty, the valiant, and the delicate, without respect of rank, of age, or sex. Wars, pestilences, and famines, are his judgments: conquerors, tyrants, and oppressors are his executioners; and he is just in all the miseries which spring from their injustice. We should therefore look to him in all our troubles, and inquire, Wherefore he contends with us? we should consider our ways and confess our sins, and mingle our tears of natural grief for our sufferings, with those of godly sorrow for our sins. We should entreat the Lord to consider, and relieve our miseries, and to pardon our transgressions: we should despair of comfort and help from all others, and confidently expect them from his mercy, truth, and power: we should justify him in our sufferings, and condemn ourselves; acknowledging that we have rebelled against his commandment, and that grievously. Thus we should pour out our hearts before him, who regards the sighs and counts the tears of such as mourn for their sins: then will he support us under every stroke of his correcting rod; in due time vouchsafe us deliverance, and render the whole profitable to our souls; he will restore our privileges and comforts, and confound all our enemies. They who rejoice over the calamities of the Lord's people, should remember, that their day also is coming, when, except they repent of this their wickedness, they will be rendered still more contemptible and miserable. It may therefore properly be inquired of all that pass by,
LAMENTATIONS.

B. C. 588.

1 How hath the Lord covered the daughter of Zion with a cloud in his anger, and cast down from heaven unto the earth the beauty of Israel, and remembered not his footstool in the day of his anger!

2 The Lord hath swallowed up all the habitations of Jacob, and hath not pity; he hath thrown down in his wrath the strongholds of the daughter of Judah; he hath brought them down to the ground; he hath polluted the kingdom and the princes thereof.

3 He hath cut off in his fierce anger all the horn of Israel: he hath drawn back his right hand from before the enemy, and he burned against Jacob.

4 He hath covered hisQ daughter with a cloud in his anger, and cast down from heaven unto the earth the beauty of Israel, and remembered not his footstool in the day of his anger!

5 The Lord was as an enemy: he hath swallowed up Israel, he hath swallowed up all her palaces; he hath destroyed his strongholds, and hath increased in the daughter of Judah mourning and lamentation.

6 And he hath violated taken away his tabernacle, as if it were of a garden: he hath destroyed his places of the assembly: the Lord hath caused the solemn feasts and sabbaths to be forgotten.

whether the sufferings of the people of God be nothing to them? If they have not thought of compassionating, or attempting to alleviate their distresses, they may at least be said to be instructed: they may see in them the holiness of God, the evil of sin, the emptiness of forms, the fatal effects of hypocrisy and impiety: and they may take warning to flee from the wrath to come, by considering the temporal miseries to which sin exposes men in this world.

4 For if the righteous scarcely are saved, where will the ungodly and profane appear? If the rod of correction be so terrible, what will the sword of vengeance be? But whatever may be learned by viewing the desolations of Jerusalem, either by the Chaldeans or Romans; far more may be learned from looking unto Jesus, and his sufferings and death. Does he not, as it were from the cross, call on every helpless mortal to attend to the interesting scene? Does he not say, 'Is it nothing to you, all ye that pass by? Behold, and see if there be any sorrow like unto mine sorrow, wherewith the Lord hath afflicted me, in the day of his fierce anger, against the sins of those whom I have sought to seek and save!' It is nothing to you, that I am here a sinless sufferer? That I, the well beloved Son of the Father, am consumed by the fire of his wrath, and that my heart in the midst of my bowels is even as melting wax, and all my bones out of joint, and that mine enemies stand staring on, and insulting over me? Is it nothing to you, that the Father hath wreaked on my neck the yoke of man's transgressions, and laid on me the iniquity of all his people? I say, doth not our suffering Immanuel seem thus to address us? And does it not behove us to consider who this Sufferer was, what he suffered, and why he suffered at all? Here we may see the evil of sin, the honour of the law, and the justice of God, more than in all the other scenes that we have been contemplating: here we may learn the worth of our souls, the importance of eternal things, the vanity of the world, and the misery of fallen man. Here we may see the only Foundation of our hope, and the Source of our comfort and happiness. Here we may learn gratitude and patience, meekness and mercy, from the brightest example, and the most endearing motives. Let then all our sorrows lead us to contemplate the cross of Christ, and mark the way he took, through sufferings and death, to his glory: that we may be comforted under our trials, and cheerfully follow our Forerunner, that where he is, there we may also.

NOTES.

CHAP. II. V. 1. The prophet had before spoken, as full of astonishment, at the deplorable condition to which Jerusalem was fallen; (i. 11) but here he inquires, with mingled surprise and regret, how the Lord, the Author of her afflictions, could be induced thus to distress her? Zion had been exalted to heavan's privileges, and in the honor put on her by the temple and ordinances of God. These, with the ark of the covenant, were the beauty of Israel and the footstool of Jehovah's throne: but now she was covered with a dark cloud from his indignation; the city and temple were cast down to the ground; nor did he so remember the temple, or even the ark, as to preserve it in the day of his fierce anger. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 2. Polluted, &c. The whole kingdom of Judah had a relative sanctity: but the Lord polluted it, by casting it out of his protection, leaving it in the power of the heathen, and destroying it, notwithstanding the covenant of royalty made with David and his seed. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 3. 'By the horn of Israel is meant his strength and glory, especially his kingly dignity.' (Lohn.)

(Marg. Ref.)

Drawn, &c. The Lord had been wont to stretch forth his right hand, to fight against the enemies of Zion; but he had now drawn it back, and left them to prosper in their attempts: now, his wrath burned against his people, like a consuming fire, in every place whither they fled for refuge.

V. 4. Slain, &c. Those who were in the flower of their age, the joy and delight of their parents. (Lohn.)

V. 5. Swallowed, 'As a lion devoured his prey.' (Marg. Ref.)

The verb signifies in a general sense to destroy.' (Lohn.)
in Zion, and hath despised, in the indignation of his anger, the king and the priest.

7 The Lord hath cast off his altar, he hath abhorred his sanctuary; he hath given up into the hand of the enemy the walls of her palaces; they have made a noise in the house of the Lord, as in the day of a solemn feast.

8 The Lord hath purposed to destroy the wall of the daughter of Zion; he hath stretched out a line, and he hath not withdrawn his hand from destroying; therefore he made the rampart and the wall to lament; they languished together.

9 Her gates are sunk into the ground; he hath destroyed and broken her bars; her king and her princes are among the gentiles: the law is no more; her prophets also find no vision from the Lord.

10 The elders of the daughter of Zion sit upon the ground, and cast up dust upon their heads; they have girded themselves with sackcloth; the virgins of Jerusalem hang down their heads to the ground.

11 Mine eyes do fail with tears, my bowels are troubled, my liver is poured upon the earth, for the destruction of the daughter of my people; because the children, and the sucklings swoon in the streets of the city.

12 They say to their mothers, Where is corn and wine? when they swooned as the wounded in the streets of the city, when their soul was poured out into the streets among the streets of the city.

13 ¶ What thing shall I take to wit for thee? what thing shall I liken to thee? O daughter of Jerusalem? what shall I equal to thee, that I may comfort thee, O virgin daughter of Zion? for thy breach is greater than the sea: who can heal thee?

V. 6. The temple was, with great violence, completely destroyed by the Chaldeans, as a tent is removed; and the Lord no more regarded it, than a man does a temporary hut, erected in a garden, and pulled down when it is done with. (Marg. Ref.) The kings of David's favoured race, and the priests of Aaron's consecrated seed, were alike despised by him in his indignation at their sins.

V. 7. As the people were accustomed to praise God in the solemn feasts with a loud voice; so now the enemy blasphemed him with shoutings and cries.

V. 8. A line, &c. (Marg. Ref.)

Lament. This is a figurative speech, as that was, when he said, “The ways of Zion lament,” (i. 4.) meaning that this sorrow was so great, that the insensible things seemed to have part in it.

V. 9. The gates of Jerusalem, or of the temple, were laid on the earth, and covered with ruins, as if they had sunk into the ground. The law was no more: for its ordinances could no more be observed; the temple and altar being destroyed, and the ordinances of worship suspended, as if no more to be attended on. Jeremiah himself seems to have survived the desolations of Jerusalem for a considerable time: yet it does not appear, that he delivered any encouraging prophecies to the Jews after that event; and the most of Ezekiel's predictions relating to Israel, (except the obscure vision of the temple, &c.) in the last chapters of his prophecy, were delivered about the time when Jerusalem was destroyed and Judea desolate:—Daniel delivered no prophecy immediately relating to the temporal state of his people, till the seventy years of the captivity were nearly expired. So that there seems to have been, at this period, a very peculiar suspension of information and encouragement, which the prophets had, for many ages, been employed to communicate to the people. Except Jeremiah, Ezekiel, and Daniel, no prophet is mentioned, from the beginning to the end of the captivity, when Haggai and Zachariah were raised up.—This chasm was an evident token of divine displeasure, and must have been a very sensible aggravation of the sufferings endured by the pious remnant.

V. 10. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 11. The prophet had wept over the calamities of his people, till he had no more power to weep, and his eyes failed to supply tears, or were almost blinded. (Marg. Ref.) His sorrow occasioned the most painful internal commotion, which greatly affected and disordered his vitals. Violent grief, or other vehement afections, are known to cause excessive bilious disorders, and great evacuations from the gill, which is placed on their liver, and to which the prophet is supposed to refer. He was particularly affected by beholding the young children, and even the sucking infants, fainting and dying for hunger and thirst in the streets of the city, whilst none had it in their power to relieve them. The scene is here laid just before the taking of the city.

V. 19. The case of the poor children was as desperate as that of the men, who lay wasting in their blood and expiring of their wounds: for, even whilst they were on the arms of their mothers, and supplicated them for nourishment, they expired for want, dying in a lingering and most deplorable manner.

V. 13. The prophet wanted to comfort his people by some suitable topic; but he could not have recourse to those which were commonly employed on such occasions. For who could be found to testify, that he had seen a city visited with so complicated and dire miseries as Jerusalem Thy prophets have seen vain and foolish things for thee: and they have not discovered thy captivity, to turn away thy captivity; but have seen for thee false burdens and causes of burden.

15 All that pass by clap their hands at thee; they hiss and wag their head at daughter of Jerusalem, saying, Is this the city that men call The perfection of beauty, The joy of the whole earth? All thine enemies have opened their mouth against thee: they hiss and gnash the teeth: they say, We have swallowed her up: certainly this is the day that we looked for; we have found, we have seen it.

The Lord hath done that which he had devised; he hath fulfilled his word that he had commanded in the days of old: he hath thrown down, and hath not pitied; and he hath caused thine enemies to rejoice over thee, he hath set up the horn of thine adversaries.

18 Their heart cried unto the Lord, O wall of the daughter of Zion, let tears run down like a river day and night: give thyself no rest; let not the apple of thine eye cease.

19 Arise, cry out in the night: in the beginning of the watches pour out thine heart like water before the face of the Lord: lift up thy hands toward him for the life of thy young children, that faint for hunger in the top of every street.

Behold, O Lord, and consider to whom thou hast done this. Shall the women eat the fruit, and children a span long? shall the priest and the prophet be slain in the sanctuary of the Lord? The young and old lie on the ground in the streets; my virgins and my young men are fallen by the sword; thou hast slain them in the day of thine anger; thou hast killed, and not pitied.

Thou hast called as in a solemn day my terrors round about, so that in the day of the Lord's anger none escaped nor remained: those, that I have swallowed and brought up, hath mine enemy consumed.

had been? What misery could he compare equal with her's, in order to comfort her? Indeed the breach made on her, (like those made by the irruptions of the seas,) was vast, and irreparable by any human power.

14. The false prophets flattered the people with assurances of peace, and thus encouraged them in their sins; and their false visions were the causes of their banishment or captivity; whereas, had they charged their crimes upon their consciences, and called them to repentance, the captivity might have been prevented. The word burdens, though it generally signifies prophecies of heavy judgments, here means predictions in general: for the false prophets spake peace when there was no peace.

15. The idolaters took the words out of the mouth of the Jews, and derided them for glorying in their holy city, and its peculiar protection and privileges. The combination of scorn, enmity, rage, and exultation, which the conquerors and spectators manifested, when gratified by the destruction of Jerusalem and the temple, are set before the reader with peculiar pathos and energy. The whole scene is presented to his view, as in some exquisitely finished historical painting; the incidents multiplied, and the multitude of circumstances, who surrounded the Redeemer's cross, could hardly be forgotten on the occasion.

17. He hath fulfilled those threatenings, which he denounced against us, in the law of Moses. This reference to the ancient predictions against Israel, for their sins, is of great importance; both as it shows that these prophecies were then extant and well known among the Jews, and that they were understood by the pious remnant exactly as we now explain them. (Notes, Lev. xxii. Deut. xxviii.—xxxi.)

V. 18. 19. In the depth of their calamities the people cried unto the Lord. out of the anguish and distress of their hearts: and called on others to lament over the wall of the daughter of Zion, which was about to be levelled with the ground, to complete the desolations. As the prophet permitted them to give vent to their sorrows, and to weep without intermission: but he also excited them to join their nocturnal lamentations with fervent prayers, pouring out their hearts before God, and lifting up their hands towards him; beginning when the night-watches used to be set, employing the hours in ceaseless prayers and tears, which others spent in sleep; and pleading for the life of the young children, that they might not all perish with hunger, and the rising generation of Israel be thus entirely cut off. As the wall and rampart are said to lament, (8.) because their ruins are objects of lamentation: so here devout persons direct their prayers to God, as if the ruins themselves did entreat him to take compassion on the miseries of that place, which he had chosen for his peculiar residence.— Offer up thy earnest prayers with tears to the throne of grace; and send up thy very soul, and thy devout affections with them. (Lenth.) (Marg. Ref.-)

V. 20—29. Jerusalem is here introduced as speaking
The prophet bitterly bewails his complicated sufferings, 1—20. He acknowledges the mercy and truth of God, and the benefit of afflictions to be a proper ground of patient hope, 21—36. He exhorts his people to submit to the sovereignty of God, and humbly to turn unto him, 37—41. He mingles complaints with confessions of sin, 42—54. He appeals to God against his enemies, and beseeches him to execute judgment upon them, 55—66.

She entreated the Lord to consider, that he thus afflicted the only people who worshipped him, and were called by his name. Could he then be unconcerned, whilst the women of Zion ate their own infants, as soon as they were born? This intimation thus given fills the mind with the utmost horror, and implies the greatest possible extreme of earthly misery, inducing desperation and barbarity; and our thoughts recoil from it, as too shocking to be dwelt upon. (Marg. Ref.) Hophni and Phinehas the priests were slain by the sword in the field of battle; but when Jerusalem was taken, the priests and prophets were slain in the sanctuary, and their blood mingled with that of their sacrifices: and to complete their other calamities, the enemies of their nation, at the call of Providence, flocked from all around, to profane the sanctuary, and terrify the worshippers; even as the people had been used to flock together to keep their solemn feast.

Span, &c. 'The margin reads, 'swaddled with their hands,' in which sense the word is used in the twenty-second verse. (Lownth.) All the affectionate care and assiduous attention of a mother seems to be meant; yet extreme hunger and desperation induced the most unnatural cruelty to the same endeared object!

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—12.

The mercy of God is perpetual and immense "towards them that fear him;" but no external relations, privileges, or profession, by which men may be exalted, as it were, to heaven, can avail those who have not the fear of God before their eyes: for they, who think to please the heart-searching God, by hypocritical services, are "a people that have no understanding;" and he that made "them will not have mercy on them." For this cause, the Lord "covered the daughter of Zion with a cloud in "his anger;" cast down from heaven to earth the beauty of Israel," swallowed up his habitations, threw down his strong holds, cut off his horn of defence, burned against him as a consuming fire, and fought against him as an enemy. And if he regarded not his temple, the ark of his covenant, or the families of Aaron and David; if he cast off his altar and abhorred his sanctuary, and let the heathen profane his most holy place, when the Jews had defiled them by their sins; what hope can there be, that he will regard any forms, where the power of godliness is wanting? These institutions were of divine authority and of great significance: whereas many of those things, in which men confide, are human inventions and traditions, unwarranted by the word of God, nay, contrary to it, yet are they persuaded that "the Lord will do them good, because "they have a Levite for their priest," an Ephod, a Ten Vol. III.—No. 21.
LAMENTATIONS.

1 I Am the man that had seen affliction by the rod of his wrath.

2 He hath led me, and brought me into darkness, but not into light.

3 Surely against me is he turned; he turneth his hand against me all the day.

4 My flesh and my skin hath he made old; he hath broken my bones.

5 He hath built against me, and compassed me with gall and travail.

6 He hath set me in dark places, as those that be dead of old.

7 He hath hedged me about, that I cannot get out; he hath made my chain heavy.

8 Also I cry and shout, he shutteth out my prayer.

9 He hath enclosed my ways with hewn stone; he hath made my paths crooked.

enemies of Jerusalem clapping their hands, wagging their heads, gnashing their teeth, and saying, “Is this the city, “that man call the perfection of beauty, the joy of the “whole earth?” and rejoicing in having at length obtained their advantage against her, and swallowed her up: and whilst on the other hand we consider, that in all this God performed what he had devised and predicted many ages before; and remember for what and to whom he did this: let us learn to shun false teachers, who speak smooth things and prophesy deceits; who do not detect men’s iniquities, but flatter them in their sins; and who thus bring ruin on churches and nations, and on the souls of multitudes. Let us fear being deceived; let us beware of hypocrisy, and of trusting in our privileges; let us watch and pray against temptation; and learn to fear God, and walk humbly before him; and whilst we think we stand, take heed lest we fall.”

NOTES.

CHAP. III. V. 1. The construction of this chapter differs from that of those which have been considered. It consists of the same number of stanzas, according to the number of the letters in the Hebrew alphabet: the first stanza is divided into three parts, or verses, each of which begins with the same Hebrew letter; the first three verses with Aleph, the three next with Beth, &c.; and in one instance the order of the letters varies from that which is elsewhere observed. It also forms a distinct elegy, or lamentation, arranged differently from those which precede. The prophet speaks throughout the whole of his afflictions, seeking out consolatory topics, and giving counsel and encouragement to his fellow mourners. Some indeed understand it to be the language of a chorus of Jews, speaking as one person; but so many passages evidently refer to Jeremiah’s own personal trials, that this interpretation seems inadmissible. The subject of the chapter is penitential meditations upon the prophet’s own calamities, as well as of the public; together with pious reflections upon the end which God proposes in sending afflictions, and the good use which men ought to make of such chastisements. (Lowth.) “I am the man that has seen this great affliction, which the Lord hath in just anger brought upon his people.” (Sp. Hall.) Probably he spoke of himself as the public character, for the common benefit; being one of many, who thus shared and mourned over the calamities of Israel. We before met with some passages in the writings of Jeremiah, like the bitter complaints of Job; (Marg. Ref.) and we here find various expressions similar to those used by that afflicted and tempted servant of God: and this favours the supposition, that he related the more gloomy and discouraging part of his own experience, and the way in which he found support and relief, as the best method of instructing and comforting his fellow sufferers. In this view of the chapter, we consider the prophet addressing the afflicted Jews, in order to counsel and encourage them; and speaking as one who knew the heart of a man, and who had been peculiarly conversant with affliction, having experienced the effects of God’s anger, both for his own sins, and as sharing the punishment inflicted on his people. (Notes, Heb. ii. 17. iv. 15, 16.) “It is worthy to be observed, that Jeremiah, in endeavouring to promote re-signation in his countrymen, represents his own deportment under afflictions, in terms which have a prophetic cast; so strikingly are they descriptive of the patience and conduct of our Saviour under his sufferings.” The prophet indeed, in the meek endurance of unmerited persecution, was an illustrious type of Christ. (Grey’s Key.) (Ps. xxii. xxxviii. lxix. lxxv. Marg. Ref.) V. 2—9. The Lord had not sent his word to the Jews by a man accustomed to ease and indulgence; but by one in whom he had led into great darkness and distress, both in his outward circumstances and his inward experience. He had always been acquainted with grief and sorrow. The Lord had so crossed him in every thing, that he had been thought, (in the hour of temptation,) that he was turned to be his enemy, and continually employed his power to afflict and punish him. By a succession of sorrows his body was emaciated, and he was put to great pain and anguish, as if his bones were broken. God had builded against him, (as the Chaldeans had done against the city,) to exclude all relief from being brought to him, and to prevent his escape. Thus he reduced him to extremities, and surrounded him with the most distressing troubles; which caused him to sink into such despondency, that he was like one cast into a dark dungeon or sepulchre, confined among the remains of the dead, and secluded from all the comforts of the living. The entrance of this dismal cage was so barricaded, that he could not get out; he was loaded with a heavy and galling chain to increase his misery; and when in this situation he cried to God for help, he shut out his
He was unto me as a bear lying in wait, and as a lion in secret places.

He hath turned aside my ways, and pulled me in pieces: he hath made me desolate.

He hath bowed his bow, and set me as a mark for the arrow.

He caused the arrows of his quiver to enter into my reins.

I was a derision to all my people; and their song all the day.

He hath filled me with bitterness, he hath made me drunken with wormwood.

He hath also broken my teeth with gravel-stones, he hath covered me with ashes.

And thou hast removed my soul far off from peace: I forget prosperity.

And I said, My strength and my hope is perished from the Lord.

My soul hath them still in remembrance, and is humbled in me.

This I recall to my mind, therefore have I hope.

It is of the Lord's mercies that we are not consumed, because his compassions fail not.

Shut them not out of your sight; remember the former things of old.

The Lord is my light and my salvation; whom shall I fear? the Lord is the strength of my life; of whom shall I be afraid?

He searcheth me out; yea, it is God himself who tryeth me.

Let the wicked be ashamed, and confounded together that seek after a lie.

The Lord is good, a strong hold in the day of trouble; and he knoweth them that trust in him.

The Lord is good; his mercy is for ever; and his truth is to all generations.

Let the wicked be ashamed, and confounded together that seek after a lie; let them vanish away.

The Lord is my strength, and he is my song; he also is become my salvation.

He helpeth me against mine enemies; he lifteth me up above the snares of them.
LAMENTATIONS.

B. C. 588.

29 He putteth his mouth in the dust; if so be there may be hope.
30 He giveth his cheek to him that smiteth him: he is filled with reproach.
31 For the Lord will not cast off for ever:
32 But though he cause grief, yet will he have compassion according to the multitude of his mercies.
33 For he doth not afflict willing-ly, nor grieve the children of men.
34 To crush under his feet all the prisoners of the earth, 35 To turn aside the right of a man before the face of the most High.
36 To subvert a man in his cause, the Lord approveth not.

V. 24, 25. It next occurred to the prophet, that whatever he lost or suffered, or witnessed of the sufferings of his people, his grand interest was secure. He was satisfied that the Lord was his all-sufficient Portion. He was conscious, that he had chosen him as his Portion, and expected his happiness from him, and not from the world: and therefore he determined still to hope in him, and refer all his concerns to his wisdom, truth, and love. In this he evidently proposed himself as an example to his people, that they might seek comfort from God, when all other comfort failed. And though they might not be able confidently to aver, that the Lord was their Portion; yet they might remember, that he was kind and merciful to those who wait for him and seek him.

V. 26—30. The wisest, best, and most comfortable way that the afflicted people could take would be, to watch against murmurs and despondency; to hope in God, and for support and deliverance; to submit resignedly to his will, and wait his time; to use appointed and proper means, and no other; and thus in composure and confidence to wait for the performance of his promises of temporal and eternal salvation. This would be good in itself, honourable to God, and profitable to them. It would also be good and wholesome to bear the yoke in youth: if it were allowed beneficial to young persons to be inured to hardship, subjection, and discipline; it must be also good for men to be habituated early to affliction, and resignation to the Lord's will; to learn subjection to his authority, and to bear his yoke. Such afflictions and disappointments would tend to take their thoughts off from the world, and to check the eagerness of their pursuits and expectations; thus the sufferer would learn to court solitude and retirement, and to employ himself in serious reflection; because he would perceive that God had laid these burdens upon him; or he would be led to take them patiently as from him. And when he considered that the Lord afflicted men for their sins, and to bring them to repentance, he would put his mouth in the dust through self-abasement, confessing his sins, and welcoming the chastisement; if so be there might be hope of deliverance from the wrath to come. In this temper, the afflicted penitent would most strongly yield to the injuries of men, as the correction of God; give his cheek to the smiter, and patiently endure the reproaches with which he should be loaded. This Christ did, though without sin; and the penitent sufferer will learn to imitate his example. The scope of the prophet was, to show the advantages, that might be derived from afflictions; and as this consideration tended to compose his own mind, he proposed it to his people, in order to reconcile them to their sufferings, and to teach them to profit by them.

V. 31—36. The sacred writer here suggested other consolatory topics. God had severely punished the nation of Israel, and cut off great numbers. But he never rejects the penitent, casts off the believer, or means to forsake his people: there was therefore still hope, both in their person and public concerns. For the honour of his justice, holiness, and truth, the Lord often caused grief; yet his manifold and infinite mercies designed him to compassionate the sufferers; and to relieve them, when their sorrows had produced a salutary effect. Even in his ordinary dealings with the children of men, he did not willingly afflict them from his heart, as taking pleasure in their sufferings, or without cause; but from a wise regard to his own glory, and the benefit of his universal kingdom. He was not like those oppressors, who delighted in crushing under their feet their prisoners or vassals; and who would thus enslave and trample down the whole earth, if they could. Much less would the Lord delight in afflicting his people, who submitted and humbled themselves before him. And as he used not his power to oppress, or to do injustice, by prerogative, so he would never authorize it in others; he could not approve of those who in his presence deprived others of their right, or supplanted them in their cause; and therefore, as the Chaldeans had done the Jews great injustice, the latter might be sure, that God would in due time plead their cause against their oppressors.
CHAPTER III.

37 Who is he that saith, and it cometh to pass, when the Lord commandeth it not?

38 Out of the mouth of the most high proceedeth not evil and good?

39 Wherefore doth a living man complain, a man for the punishment of his sins?

40 Let us search and try our ways, and turn again to the Lord.

41 Let us lift up our heart with our hands unto God in the heavens.

42 We have transgressed, and have rebelled; thou hast not pardoned.

43 Thou hast covered with anger and persecuted us: thou hast slain, thou hast not pitied.

44 Thou hast covered thyself with a cloud, that our prayer should not pass through.

45 Thou hast made us as the off-spring of jackals, and as the seed of wild beasts.

46 All our enemies have opened their mouths against us, desolation and destruction.

47 Fear and a snare is come upon us, for the destruction of the daughter of my people.

48 Mine eye runneth down with tears; I weep day and night.

49 Mine eye trickleth down, and doth not cease, until the daughter of my city behold from heaven.

50 Mine eye affecteth mine heart, because of all the daughters of my city.

52 Mine enemies have chased me sore, like a bird, without cause.

53 They have cut off my life in the dungeon, and cast a stone upon me.

54 Waters flowed over mine head; then I said, I am cut off.

55 Make thy face to shine upon thy servant; save me for thy mercies' sake.

56 O Lord, I cry unto thee; and mine eye speaketh in the morning.

57 O Israel, return unto the Lord thy God; for thou hast fallen by thine own iniquity.

58 Take with thee words, and return to the Lord thy God: for he is kind, and of tender compassion.

59 He will turn, and have compassion on thee; he will turn, and hear thy prayer, and will hear thy words.

60 Do not thou forsake the work of thine hands, nor the counsel of thy tongue.

V. 37. The king of Babylon, and such haughty tyrants, may boast of their power, if it were equal to their pleasures; but still it is God's prerogative to bring to nothing whatever he pleases. Nothing is brought to pass, but according to his determinate counsel and foreknowledge: as he makes men the instruments of his vengeance; so he can restrain their cruelty, when he sees fit. —Calamities come from his will and disposal, as well as prosperity. (Lowneth.) When therefore the calamities of the Jews had produced the proper effect, the purposes of their oppressors would be frustrated, and they would no longer be able to enslave, or afflic them.

V. 39. As all sinners deserve death and destruction, and are exposed to be crushed every moment; so none, whose life is prolonged, who is out of hell and may hope for heaven, hath either right or reason to complain, whilst suffering the temporal punishment of his sins, which is far less than he deserves. The prophet therefore checked his own complaints, and those of his people, and called them to join with him in self-examination and a serious trial of all their ways, that they might discover and repent of all their sins, and return to the Lord, trusting in his mercy and worshipping his name. He reminded them also to rest in formally lifting up their hands to God, but to lift up their hearts also, considering the greatness and holiness of Him whose glory filled the heavens, though he condescended to notice their worship on earth.

V. 42. Some connect these verses with the preceding, by the word, saying: ""Let us lift up, &c." Saying, "We have transgressed, &c." The prophet, however, proceeded to direct the confessions of his people, and to put words into their mouths. He humbly acknowledged, that as he had not pardoned, it was plain they had not repented; this was the cause of all their miseries, of which he led them humbly and submissively to complain to the Lord. He had covered them with his anger, pursued them by his judgments, and destroyed them without pity: and he had so covered himself with a thick cloud, that their prayers could find no admission. The hypocritical prayers of the people for deliverance were rejected; and even the fervent prayers of the prophet in that behalf were discouraged. Thus the Lord made them as the discouraging and refuse in the midst of the people; and as he had not pardoned, it was plain they had not repented; this was the cause of all their miseries, of which he led them humbly and submissively to complain to the Lord. He had covered them with his anger, pursued them by his judgments, and destroyed them without pity: and he had so covered himself with a thick cloud, that their prayers could find no admission. The hypocritical prayers of the people for deliverance were rejected; and even the fervent prayers of the prophet in that behalf were discouraged. Thus the Lord made them as the discouraging and refuse of the nations, who insulted and trampled upon them; and opened their mouths in reproaches, menaces, boasts, and blasphemies, against them and their holy religion; and they were overwhelmed with terrors, entangled in snares, and given up to desolation and ruin.

Offscouring. St. Paul plainly alludes to this text, 1 Cor. iv. 13. The apostles, in quoting the Scriptures do not always follow the Septuagint, but now and then make a new translation from the Hebrew. (Lownth.) If the apostle referred to this text, as it is highly probable, this must have been the case; for there is nothing in the Septuagint like his words, which accord entirely with the Hebrew.

V. 48-51. The prophet here again spake in his own person, and of his share in the public calamities. He wept incessantly for the destruction of his people, and of Jerusalem; and must do so, till the Lord should look down from heaven, to regard and redress their calamities. Every object that he saw affected his heart, and renewed his sorrows: but especially when he saw the children of Jerusalem fallen into the hands of the brutish conquerors, and exposed to every kind of violence, without any protection. (Marg. Ref.)
55 I called upon thee, O Lord, out of the low dungeon.
56 Thou hast heard my voice: hide not thine ear at my breathing, at my cry.
57 Thou drewest near in the day that I called upon thee: thou saidst, Fear not.
58 O Lord, thou hast pleaded the cause of my soul: thou hast redeemed my life.
59 O Lord, thou hast seen my wrong: judge thou my cause.
60 Thou hast seen all their vengeance, and all their imaginations against me.

61 Thou hast heard their reproach, O Lord, and all their imaginations against me;
62 The lips of those that rose up against me, and their device against me all the day.
63 Behold their sitting down, and all their rising up; I am their music.
64 Render unto them a recompense, O Lord, according to the work of their hands.
65 Give them sorrow of heart, thy curse unto them.
66 Persecute and destroy them in anger from under the heavens of the Lord.

V. 52—66. Jeremiah seems here more immediately to speak of his own trials; with reference to the case of his people, and the public calamities of the nation. He had given no cause to his enemies to hate him: and yet they eagerly chased him as a bird, in order to destroy him. They thought he had cut him off, when he had let him down into the dungeon, and covered him over with a great stone, as if buried alive; and he seemed to himself as certainly cut off, as if the waters had flowed over his head. Yet out of this low dungeon he had called upon the Lord: he had pleaded with him that he had heretofore heard his voice; and entreated him that he would not now hide his ear from his cries, and the breathings of his soul in prayer. God had been used to draw near to him when he prayed; to silence his fears, to plead his cause, and rescue his life; and to him he had appealed in that emergency. He had seen the wrong done to his servant, and knew the vengeance, the devices, and imaginations of his persecutors, with all their calumnies and reproaches; and that he was their constant derision and contempt. He had therefore besought the righteous Judge to plead his cause; which he thus unreservedly committed to him. The verbs in the concluding verses are all future, not imperative; a prophecy, and not an imprecation; what Jeremiah foresaw and foretold, not so much as a hint that he desired or prayed for it. "Thou wilt render them a recompense, &c., Thou wilt give them a sorrow, or oblation, of heart, thy curse upon them. Thou wilt persecute and destroy them," &c. Even the Septuagint renders the passage in this manner; and it is hard to say what has induced modern translators in general to give it the form of a most tremendous imprecation. The event had fully proved that the Lord had heard and answered Jeremiah's prayer from the dungeon; and this might well encourage the church, in her deep distress and misery, when she was as it were cast into the pit, overwhelmed, and ready to perish, amongst the insults and contempt of her enemies, to expect deliverance from the power and mercy of God, in answer to the prayers of her afflicted sons, and attended with the predicted vengeance on her persecutors. This seems to be the intention of the prophet. For if God had not disregarded the cries of one afflicted servant, could it be supposed that he would leave his whole church to sink for ever in her trouble, and not answer the prayers of all his people, and avenge them on their oppressors?

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS. V. 1—20.

They are best qualified to administer counsel and consolation to the afflicted, who have themselves experienced the smart and terror of the rod of divine wrath: and therefore ministers often pass through trials, that they may learn to speak seasonably to the afflicted; (2 Cor. i. 4—6.) It is very profitable, in speaking to the distressed and wounded in conscience, to show them what troubles and temptations we have been delivered out of; and in what way we have been led to peace and confidence in God. The suffering and tempted believer has very different views of the Lord's dealing with him, whilst in the midst of his conflicts, than at other times: the struggle between unbelief and faith, flesh and spirit, is often very sore: and outward troubles concur with inward discouragement. Indeed the Lord sometimes leads his most eminent servants into darkness and not into light; and they are apt to conclude that he is punishing them as an enemy, and not correcting them as a Father; his hand seems turned against them all the day; the body is affected with the disquietude of the mind; God himself seems to exclude their souls from comfort, to put them to pain, to hedge up their way, to shut out their prayers and earnest cries, to plunge them into perplexity, to envelop them in darkness, and to appear in every way formidable to them. But whether our God prove or our enemies deride and insult; or whether our comforts be turned into gall and wormwood, or our souls forget prosperity, we may be assured that it is our infirmity and temptation, if we think that "our strength and hope are perished from the Lord." Indeed, if we only consider our affliction and misery, or the power, justice, and holiness of God, compared with our guilt and pollution; and do not view him on a mercy-seat and ready to forgive; instead of being properly humbled before him, we shall sink into despondency. Thus conscious guilt may even swallow us up in over much sorrow, and give Satan an of the prophets and priests; and shows how their altars disappointed, and their enemies pursued, them, 13—20. He predicts the termination of Zion’s calamities, and judgments upon insulting Edom, 21, 22.

advantage against us; and it is of great importance to be aware of his devices. But if we properly recall to mind the Lord’s goodness, we shall yet have hope in our darkest hours; and we should consider how others have found comfort in similar circumstances, that when we too have found relief, we may point it out to our brethren also.

V. 21—41.

The due consideration of the evil of sin and our own sinfulness, will convince us that “it is of the Lord’s mercies that we are not consumed.” If they had not been more abundant even than our provocations, we should not now be in the land of hope, of pardon, of prayer. And how much more might it have been with us than now it is! How many have been cut off, and perished in their sins! How many on earth are suffering more severe pains than we are! How many sufferers have no acquaintance with their guilt and danger! and what severe and long-continued self-denial hath God often required of his most honoured servants, which they found it their wisdom and duty, and eventually their happiness, to submit to, in humble patience! How much then is it our’s to bear our lighter cross, and exercise that moderate self-denial to which he calls us! And how shameful if we repine, despond, or seek relief by sin! These and similar reflections will suggest reasons even for gratitude in our afflictions, and for hope in our dejections. He who hath hitherto spared us, and whose compassions are new to us every morning, yet waiteth to be gracious: great is his sincerity in his invitations, and faithfulness in his promises; and he hath promised to teach and help all who desire to come, as well as to receive all that do come to him. If we cannot then say, with unwavering voice, “The Lord is my Portion;” may we not say, ‘I desire to have him for my Portion and Salvation, and in his word do I hope?’ We may wait on and seek him, assured of success. Let us then watch against despendency, as well as presumption; and count it “good to hope and quietly to wait for the salvation of the Lord.” We should also remember, that many have found the galling yoke of affliction salutary and useful; and in the severe school of adversity have learned repentance, patience, and godliness. As that is always best for us which most tends to the salvation of our souls; we cannot too soon be initiated in this profitable discipline. Happy then is it, when disappointments and troubles teach young persons to retire, to sit alone, to keep silence from vain words, and to give themselves to meditation and prayer; whilst others of their age are running the round of folly and vice, and making work for future anguish and misery. And happy shall we all be, if we so learn to receive affliction, considering that it is laid upon us by the hand of God, as to extract good out of it. In order to this we must abuse ourselves before him, in the deepest humili-

If the Lord has not pardoned our sins, we may be sure, that it is because we have not repented and believed his Gospel: yet we may be forgiven, even though we have not the comfort of it. If we be covered with his anger, and our prayers be not answered: it may be, because we ask amiss, or have not patiently waited his time. If we be made the fifth of the world, treated as the refuse of mankind, and insulted by our neighbours: we should more earnestly look to our God, and expect him to plead our cause and deliver us. But indeed our own troubles, and those of the church and world around us, continually suggest causes of sorrow: and wherever we look, our eyes may affect our hearts, and cause our tears to flow afresh. Yet we may still hope and rejoice in the Lord: no dark dungeon, or deep pit, can exclude us from his throne of grace. If we cannot speak, he will hear our breathings and our sighs. He will draw near to encourage, to defend, and to plead the cause of his afflicted servants, and to redeem their souls. But at last what are all our sorrows compared with those of the Redeemer? “He” indeed “was the man who saw affliction, by the rod of the Lord’s wrath against our sins; and exclaimed, “My
How is the gold become dim! how is the fine gold changed! the stones of the sanctuary are poured out in the top of every street.

2. The precious sons of Zion, compareable to fine gold, how are they esteemed as earthen pitchers, the work of the hands of the potter!

3. Even the sea-monsters draw out the breast, they give suck to their young ones: the daughter of my people is become cruel, like the ostriches in the wilderness.

4. The tongue of the sucking child cleaveth to the roof of his mouth for thirst: the young children ask bread: and no man breaketh it unto them.

5. They that did feed delicately are desolate in the streets: they that were brought up in scarlet embrace dung-hills.

6. For the punishment of the iniquity of the daughter of my people is greater than the punishment of the sin of Sodom, that was overthrown as in a moment, and no hands stayed on her.

7. Her Nazarites were whiter than snow, they were whiter than milk, they were more ruddy in body than rubies, their polishing was of sapphire.

8. Their visage is darken than coal; they are not known in the streets; their skin cleaveth to their bones; it is withered, it is become like a stick.

9. They that be slain with the sword are better than they that be slain with hunger: for these pine away, stricken through for want of the fruits of the field.

10. The hands of the pitiful women have sodden their own children; they were their meat in the destruction of the daughter of my people.

God, my God, why hast thou forsaken me? He gave his cheek to the smiters, and was filled with reproach: he was cut off, and laid in the grave, and the stone covered him: yet his prayer was answered, his cause was pleaded, he rose triumphant, and his enemies have, many of them, perished miserably from under the heavens of the Lord. Thus will he deliver his people out of every trouble, and revive his church from every overthrowing persecution: thus will he raise our bodies from the grave, and save us with an everlasting salvation; whilst all his enemies will perish with an eternal destruction from his presence.

NOTES.

CHAP. IV. V. 1, 2. The nation of Israel, being devoted to and beloved of God, and Jerusalem, the holy city where he was worshiped at his temple, had exalted other nations and cities, as the most fine gold both the bases and pillars; which was intimated by the gold that overlaid the walls, and formed the vessels of the sanctuary. But they were now both polluted by their sins, and disgraced by their sufferings; they had lost all their distinguished splendour and excellency, and were become base and contemptible. The temple also was totally destroyed, and its stones were thrown among the common rubbish, and mixed with the ruins of other buildings. Nay, the sons of Zion, even the most honourable and eminent of them, who ought to have been, and had been, precious as fine gold, were disregarded and dashed in pieces like the meanest earthen vessel.

V. 3—5. Through urgent famine, the women of Jerusalem seemed to be deprived of all natural affections, and became more unfeeling to their offspring than the sea-monsters or other savage creatures. In endeavoring to preserve their own lives, they neglected to tend on their infants; and thus left them to perish, as the ostrich doth her eggs, which she leaves on the sand and looks no more after: and some of them were even far more cruel, (10.) Thus the sucking child was pained to death by thirst; the lisping children begging for bread were left to perish by hunger: and such as had been brought up most delicately and with every indulgence, lay neglected in the streets or upon dunghills, without lodging, or other food than they could rake out of them.

V. 6. Sodom was destroyed at once by fire from heaven, and its inhabitants did not suffer so much in this world, as those of Jerusalem did, when they died in a lingering manner by famine, like criminals who are kept long in torture. And, considering the superior advantages and privileges of Jerusalem, there can be no doubt but their guilt was more aggravated than that of Sodom. This indeed is the more obvious sense of the original; (Marx.) The punishment of Jerusalem was heavier than that of Sodom, because her guilt was more aggravated. (Marx. Ref.)

V. 7-8. (Notes, Num. vi.) The Nazarites, during the time of their separation, were considered as very distinguished persons; and probably they used to wear white clothing. Perhaps God had pleased to give a peculiar blessing to their diet, to render them more healthy than their brethren who did not abstain from wine, so that their appearance was more vigorous and comely; and they were considered as the ornament and honour of the city. (Notes, Dan. i. 8—15. Am. ii. 11.) But now the wrath of God had made such a change in their circumstances, that by famine, disease, and neglect, they were become base and sordid in their persons and apparel, not to be distinguished from the other wretched objects with whom they were surrounded; and they were emaciated and enfeebled, so that their very neighbours scarcely knew them.

V. 9. Stricken, &c. Their vitals are pierced through, as if with a sword; but with this difference, that it is by famine, the most cruel, because the most lingering, death. (Lownh.)
CHAPTER IV.

11 The Lord hath accomplished his fury; he hath poured out his fierce anger, and hath kindled a fire in Zion, and it hath devoured the foundations thereof.

12 The kings of the earth, and all the inhabitants of the world, would not have believed that the adversary and the enemy should have entered into the gates of Jerusalem.

13 For the sins of her prophets, and the iniquities of her priests, that have shed the blood of the just in the midst of her;

14 They have wandered as blind men in the streets, they have polluted themselves with blood, so that men could not touch their garments.

15 They cried unto them, Depart ye, it is unclean; depart, depart, touch not; when they fled away and wandered, they cried among the heathen, They shall no more sojourn there.

16 The anger of the Lord hath divided them; he will no more regard them; they respected not the persons of the priests, they favoured not the elders.

17 As for us, our eyes as yet failed for our vain help: in our watching we have watched for a nation that could not save us.

18 They hunt our steps, that we cannot go in our streets: our end is near, our days are fulfilled; for our end is come.

19 Our persecutors are swifter than the eagles of the heaven: they pursued us upon the mountains, they laid wait for us in the wilderness.

20 The breath of our nostrils, the anointed of the Lord, was taken in their pits, of whom we said, Under his shadow shall we live among the heathen.

V. 10. In themselves the women were disposed to compassion; but their anguish rendered them barbarous, and this added to the horror of their calamity and conduct. (A. T. ii. 20-22.)

V. 11. Devoured. It hath made an entire destruction, so as not to leave one stone upon another. (Lomth.)(Marg. Ref.)

V. 12. Jerusalem seems to have been well fortified both by nature and art; and those who had attempted to take it, had so often been miraculously baffled and destroyed; that all the surrounding kings and nations did not think that Nebuchadnezzar would succeed in his enterprise. Nor could he, if the Lord, the real Defender of Jerusalem, had not been provoked to depart from her,—These things are come to pass, contrary to all men's expectations.

V. 13-16. The sins of the false prophets and ungodly priests conduced to the total degeneracy of the nation; and their murder of the prophets and righteous servants of God, and even of children offered to idols, provoked him to give them up to destruction. Thus the prophets and priests caused such numbers to be slain, that when they walked in the streets, they could not avoid being polluted with blood; as blind men, when wandering about, could not shun those things, the touch of which rendered them unclean. Nay, they were even covered with the blood of the slain, so that men could not touch their garments without being defiled. The Jews had been wont to say to a Gentile, Stand by thyself, I am holier than thou; and to bid him depart, and keep at a distance as unclean: but now the very heathen drove them out of the city as unclean, and burned it as polluted: And they used the same words to express their abhorrence of this defilement of such persons, whose office it was to cleanse and purify others, as the lepers were by the law obliged to pronounce on themselves. (Lomth.) They considered them as monsters of wickedness; and in contempt of their former preciosity, or as loathing their vile conduct, they disdainfully shunned their company; nay, when they fled, or wandered from place to place, even the idolaters would not admit them to sojourn with them! Thus the Lord divided them into distant places: he no more regarded them as his people; and therefore their enemies no more respected their priests and elders, but considered them as the chief criminals, and the peculiar objects of their execration.

V. 17. Vain, &c. The Jews had long in vain expected help from the Egyptians. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 18, 19. These are the desponding complaints of the remnant of the Jews. Their enemies hunted those who remained in the city, from one street to another, that they expected death every moment; and if any of them fled to the mountains, or into the wilderness, their pursuers were as swift as eagles, and laid wait for them to destroy them. (Marg. Ref.) God hath brought upon us that judgment which he threatened by Moses, of bringing a nation against us as swift as the eagle flyeth. (Lomth.)

V. 20. This verse some expositors understand of Josiah; and thereupon ground their opinion, that the Lamentations were written on occasion of his death. But I rather conceive that Zedekiah was meant. As long as he was safe, we had hopes of perceiving some face of government, although we were carried into a foreign country. (Lomth.) Perhaps the hopes of the nation, when Zedekiah was first anointed king, are intended. He was raised to the throne by the king of Babylon; and therefore they might expect to be preserved by his power from the surrounding nations, and to continue in their own land; so that they considered their national existence, so to speak, to depend on Zedekiah. But when
21. Rejoice and be glad, O daughter of Edom, that dwellest in the land of Uz; for the cup also shall pass through unto thee: thou shalt be drunken, and shalt make thyself naked.

22. The punishment of thine iniquity is accomplished, O daughter of Zion; he will no more carry thee away into captivity: he will visit thine iniquity, O daughter of Edom; he will discover thy sins.

REMEMBER, O Lord, what is come upon us: consider, and behold our reproach. 2 Our inheritance is turned to strangers, our houses to aliens.

The glory of outward distinctions and privileges may soon be obscured; sin tarnishes the beauty of the most excellent gifts; and when the Lord leaves churches or nations, they are soon departed. But that “gold tried in the fire,” which Christ bestows, will never be taken from us; (Rev. iii. 18;) nor can its excellency be diminished.

The stones of the earthy sanctuary were repeatedly poured out into the streets, so that not one of them was left upon another; but the spiritual temple experiences no such demolitions; it is built upon a Rock, against which the gates of hell cannot prevail; and every believer being one with Christ, is “an habitation of God through the Spirit.” Indeed the most precious of the sons of Zion, incomparably more valuable in the sight of God than the finest gold, are esteemed by ungodly men as earthen pitchers, fit for nothing but the basest uses, or to be dashed in pieces; and not they were prophets and apostles treated in this manner, but even Christ himself was despised and vilified more than any of them. They who live themselves and bring up their children, in delicacy, elegance, and splendor, know not to what miseries they may be reserved; and such, as are most habituated to luxury and indulgence, must be doubly miserable, if reduced to the extremities of hunger, and thirst, and equal penury, to lie on the ground and to embrace dunghills. It is therefore our interest to accustom ourselves to hardship, to deny our appetites improper gratifications, and to fear contracting such habits as may afterwards prove sources of misery. Extreme necessity has a tendency to render the heart callous and unfeeling: they who have improperly indulged their children when in prosperity, have often been most regardless of them in distress; and the human species has frequently found more cruel and insensible than the most ferocious and stupid of the irrational creatures. The punishment of the most abandoned heathens will be light, compared with that of wicked nominal Christians: but, if the lingering pains of a tedious execution, of famine, or some fatal disease be so terrible; what will be the extenuating punishment of the wicked, when the Lord shall accomplish his fierce anger, and pour out his fury upon them as consuming fire? No enemy can prevail against us, unless he withdraw his protection: and if he do, no defence can avail. But the wickedness of those who are by office engaged to support religion, and yet betray her interests, is the great cause of national judgments, and of the ruin of flourishing churches especially, when they have shed the blood of the just in the midst of them. They who have thus polluted their garments, have commonly been recompensed in the same way; and rendered an execration even to the vilest of mankind. The eyes of those who have provoked the Lord to have no more regard to them, must fail, in looking for vain help from those that cannot save; but they that trust in him shall never be confounded. Such as are most presumptuous in prosperity, are most apt to despond in danger and trouble: and they who have before despised the warnings and counsels of the Lord’s ministers, are often excessively terrified, when their end draws nigh and their days are fulfilled; and when they can find no escape from the close pursuit of the king of terrors. If we so overrate any creature, as to account it as the breath of our nostrils, or to expect “to live under its shadow,” we shall surely meet with disappointments and confusion: but our appointed King is indeed the Life of our souls, and we may safely live under his shadow, and rejoice in him in the midst of all our enemies; for he is the true God, and Eternal Life. All the troubles of the church will soon be accomplished; and believers are long will have done with captivity, punishment, sin, and sorrow: but the downfall of our insulting enemies approaches; the Lord will soon bring their sins to light; he will put the cup of vengeance into their hands; and they shall drink it to the dregs, and lie down in eternal shame and sorrow.
CHAPTER V.

3 We are orphans and fatherless; our mothers are as widows.

4 We have drunken our water for money; our wood is sold unto us.

5 Our necks are under persecution: we labour, and have no rest.

6 We have given the hand to the Egyptians, and to the Assyrians, to be satisfied with bread.

7 Our fathers have sinned, and are no more; and we have borne their iniquities.

8 Servants have ruled over us: there is none that doth deliver us out of their hand.

9 We have bred our bread with the peril of our lives, because of the sword of the wilderness.

10 Our skin was black like an oven, ourlesh was basted in oil because of the terrible famine.

11 They ravished the women in Zion, and the maidens in the cities of Judah.

12 Princes are hanged up by their hand: the faces of elders were not honoured.

13 They took the young men to grinding, and the children fell under the wood.

14 The elders have ceased from the gate, the young men from their music.

15 The joy of our heart is ceased; our dance is turned into mourning.

16 The crown is fallen from our head: woe unto us, that we have sinned!

17 For this our heart is faint; for these things our eyes are dim.

18 Because of the mountain of Zion, which is desolate, the foxes walk upon it.

NOTE.

CHAP. V. V. 1-6. The title of this chapter in the Vulgate, is The prayer of Jeremiah. It is an address to God, respecting the calamities of his people, as the improvement of the preceding representation of them. It consists of the same number of stanzas, as the preceding chapters; but they are much shorter, and the alphabetical order is not observed. A chorus of the Jews, or the collective body of the nation, are represented as calling on God to remember their miseries, and the reproach to which they were exposed. The inheritance which he had given to their fathers, and the houses which they had builded on it, were possessed by the Chaldeans, and other aliens from the nation of Israel: they were bereaved of their fathers, and their mothers were left destitute widows, amidst the oppressions of their enemies: they were forced, in the land of their captivity, to pay dear even for water and fuel, which they formerly had for fetching: they were grievously oppressed and persecuted, and laboured for their tyrants, without respite for refreshment: they had repeatedly been obliged to submit to the Egyptians and Assyrians, through their urgent necessities; and at last some of them were made tribute strangers in Egypt, and others were captives in the regions formerly governed by the Assyrians.

(Marg. Ref.)

V. 7. (Marg. Ref.) The whole load of national guilt, which had been accumulating for ages, lay with incumbent weight on that generation of Israel: thus they bare the iniquities of their fathers, who were no more on earth to suffer the temporal effects of their own transgressions. Of this they were at length made sensible, and that it was the cause of their extreme miseries, which they could not escape, but by a national repentance, and conversion to God. It does not seem to have been spoken in a murmuring spirit; but in a humble acknowledgment of the justice of God, in his dealings with the nation.

V. 8-10. Even the servants of the Chaldeans dominated over the captive worshippers of God: and there was none to rescue them from their insolence and cruelty. Whilst the invasion of the land and siege of Jerusalem continued, and immediately after the city was taken, the people got their bread by hazarding their lives; as they were everywhere met with by their enemies, who destroyed them without mercy: and their skins were parched and turned black by the extremity of the famine that they had endured.

V. 12-16. After the city was taken, these outrages were there committed, as they had been before in the cities of Judah. Their princes were disgraced or put to death, in the most cruel manner, as slaves and malefactors: their elders, (either the members of the national council, or the aged and most venerable citizens,) were treated with indignity: their chosen strong men were enslaved, and employed in the hardest drudgery; and even the youths were loaded with wood till they fell under their burdens. So that the elders no more appeared in the gate of the city, to administer justice, or to give counsel; the young men more entertained themselves and others with music. All their mirth was ceased, and turned into mourning; all their honour was gone; their crown was fallen from their heads, and their miseries were come upon them because of their sins.

Young men from, &c. "The chosen ones have ceased from their Psalms." The termination of the sacred psalmody at the temple seems especially intended.

Crown. "All our glory is at an end, together with the advantages of being thy people, and enjoying thy presence among us, by which we have been distinguished from the rest of the world." (Louth.)

V. 17. 18. The most distressful circumstance of all to the pious remnant, was the desolation of Zion, which was become the resort of foxes, preying upon the dead bodies that were there left unburied: it was without temple, altar, or sacrifice; without priest or worshippers to drive them away.
LAMENTATIONS.

19 Thou, O Lord, * remainest for ever; thy throne from generation to generation.
20 Wherefore * dost thou forget us for ever, and forsake us * so long time?
[...]

V. 19—22. In this deplorable case, the people of God could apply to none but their everlastling and unchangeable King, whose throne remained from age to age. They therefore anxiously inquired of him, wherefore he had so long forsaken, and seemed to forget them? They besought him to convert them unto himself, by his renewing grace; that he might return to them in mercy, and renew those prosperous days, which their nation had annually enjoyed; and they complained, that he had utterly rejected them in his anger; or rather they inquired whether he meant thus to deal with them? 'Our only hope is in the eternity and unchangeableness of thy nature; and that thou still governest the world; whereby thou art able to help us, and art never forgetful of the promises which thou hast made to thy people.' 'Do thou give us the grace of conversion and amendment.' (Lowth.) (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

In all troubles prayer is our great duty and the best means of relief; and all our sorrows should lead us to beseech the Lord to remember and help us. Though our sins and his just displeasure have caused our sufferings: yet we may hope in his pardoning mercy, his sanctifying grace, and his kind providence. As wasting wars, terrible famines, and heavy oppressions or persecutions come upon nations, for the sins of former and present generations, when their appointed measure of iniquity is filled up: so the accumulating sins of a man's whole life will be punished with tremendous vengeance at last; except he obtain an interest in Him 'who bare our sins in his own body on the tree.' The wrath of God turns the sinner's mirth into mourning, his liberty into bondage, and his honour into disgrace: for this the crown is fallen from our heads, and we unto us that we have sinned! This first reduced the race of men to its present wretched condition; and the desolations of the church originate from the same source.—But though we should mourn over the miseries of the world and the low estate of the church: yet the true Zion, to which believers are come, cannot be desolated, but remaineth for ever, even as the throne of God in heaven. This inheritance cannot be forfeited or alienated; nor can our mansions be possessed by strangers; or our relation to God, as espoused and adopted into his family, abrogated; or the liberty, whereby with Christ hath made us free, taken from us; the freeness of our salvation disannulled; or our joy and glorying in Christ made void. Various tribulations may make our hearts faint and our eyes dim; but our way to the mercy-seat of our reconciled God is still open; and we may beseech him not to forsake or forget us; and plead with him to turn, and renew us more and more by his grace; that our hopes may revive and our consolations abound, as in the days of old. For the eternal and unchangeable God will not utterly reject his church or any true believer, whatever our trials, fears, or lamentations may be. Let us then, in all our troubles, put our whole trust and confidence in his mercy; let us confess our sins, and pour out our hearts before him; and let us watch against repinings or despondency, whatever we suffer, or witness of the troubles of our brethren; for this we surely know, that it shall be well in the event with all who trust, fear, love, and serve the Lord.
THE BOOK OF THE PROPHET EZEKIEL.

Ezekiel, (like Jeremiah,) was a priest as well as a prophet. He executed his office among the captives in Chaldea, during the latter part of the time that Jeremiah was employed at Jerusalem, and till some time after the destruction of that city. He seems to have been carried into captivity with Jechoniah, and he dates his prophecies from that event: though he was not called to the prophetic office, till the fifth year after; and probably, in the thirtieth year of his age (i. 1;) though some reckon this thirtieth year from Josiah's reformation, when he and Judah solemnly covenanted with God to be his people. The scope of his predictions was very similar to that of Jeremiah; but his manner was exceedingly different: for he delivered his messages with a vehemency, energy, and even terror and severity, peculiar to himself, but very suitable to the character of those to whom he prophesied: yet he seems to have been especially raised up, to animate and encourage the pious remnant among the captives, with the hope of returning prosperity; and to satisfy them that their condition was vastly preferable to that of their brethren in Judah, against whom he predicted still more tremendous judgments, terminating in the desolations of the temple of Jerusalem and Judah, and almost the extermination of the inhabitants. Some frivolous objections, grounded on gross mistakes, have been started to the authenticity, or divine inspiration of this book: but the prophecies contained in it, which have been most surprisingly fulfilled, and are fulfilling at this day, constitute a full demonstration, that Ezekiel "spake as he was moved by the Holy Spirit;" especially his prophecies concerning Tyre and Egypt, (Notes, xxvi.—xxxii.) It contains also many predictions, which are not yet fulfilled, relating to the restoration of Israel, and the triumphs of the Church over all her enemies; which on careful investigation, will be found entirely to coincide with many parts of Isaiah's and Daniel's prophecies; and those contained in the Revelation of St. John (Notes, xxxvi.—xxxix.) There are also several evident references to it, in the New Testament; though it is not expressly quoted. (Compare i. x. with Rev. iv. v.—ix. 4. with Rev. vii. 2, 3.—and ix. 6. with 1 Pet. iv. 18.) Nor is there any doubt, but its prophecy formed a part of the sacred canon, in the days of our Lord and his Apostles. Some have observed, that the prophet's name was happily expressive of his character; as it may signify, the strength, or courage of God. Many parts of the book, however, are very figurative and obscure; and some, of which no solution entirely satisfactory seems to have been hitherto given. It opens with an account of an emblematic vision of the Lord, by which Ezekiel was called to the prophetic office. It then contains several visions, representing the calamities coming on the Jewish nation, and the Lord's departure from his temple; connected with severe reproofs of the enormous wickedness both of the Jews at Jerusalem, of the captives, and the whole nation, with their kings, princes, priests, and prophets, and awful predictions against them. Having then predicted the judgments of God against the surrounding nations, the prophet changes his style, gives both Judah and Israel intimations of great mercies in reserve; and foretels the destruction of the enemies of the Church in the latter ages; and he concludes with a remarkable vision of the temple, city, and holy land; which it is probable is an emblematical description of the prosperity of the Church in the Millennium. The whole prophecy is suited to fill the mind with awe of God's purity and justice, and hope in his mercy, and with dread and hatred of sin; and to lead the thoughts to Christ and his kingdom; and to encourage our hopes of glorious success to the cause of God on earth.
CHAP. I.

The time, place, and manner, in which Ezekiel was called to the prophetic office, 1—3. The vision of four living creatures, and four wheels, 4—25; and of the glory of God above them, 26—28.

NOW it came to pass in the thirtieth year, in the fourth month, in the fifth day of the month, the captives by the river of Chebar, that the heavens were opened, and I saw visions of God. 2

In the fifth day of the month, the fifth year of king Jehoiachin’s captivity,

The word of the Lord came expressly unto Ezekiel the priest, the son of Buzi, in the land of the Chaldeans, by the river Chebar; and the hand of the Lord was there upon him. 4

And I looked, and beheld, a whirlwind came out of the north, a great cloud, and a fire infolding itself, and a brightness about it, and out of the midst thereof as the colour of amber out of the midst of the fire. 5

Also out of the midst thereof came the likeness of four living creatures, and four faces. 6

And this was their appearance; they had the likeness of a man. 6

And every one had four faces, and every one had four wings. 7

And their feet were straight feet; and the sole of their feet was like the sole of a calf’s foot: and they sparkled like the colour of burnished brass. 8

And they had the hands of a man under their wings on the four sides; and they four had their faces and their wings. 9

Their wings were joined one to another: they turned not when they went; they went every one straight forward. 10

As for the likeness of their faces, they four had the face of a man, and the face of a lion, on the right side; and the face of an ox, and the face of an eagle. 11 coming his reluctance to the arduous work, encouraging him to enter on it, and qualifying him for it. Or, that he was so impressed by the power of God, as to have his senses closed to external objects, and his mind prepared to contemplate the heavenly visions.

V. 4. The prophet having fixed his attention on the objects presented to his view, first “saw a whirlwind come out of the north;” this might denote the impetuous destruction, which from Babylon was about to overwhelm Jerusalem and Judah. (Marg. Ref.) This whirlwind brought with it a great cloud; an emblem of the darkness of the Lord’s dispensations, and of the heavy judgments that impended over the Jewish nation. Along with this was a fire infolding itself, or kindling itself, or burning incessantly; this might represent the justice and holiness of God, and the awful vengeance he was about to execute, for the glory of his perfections, and from motives taken from the transgressors of it. This fire diffused a brightness round about it; and from the midst of it was seen as the colour of amber, or, as some explain it, of a polished mixed metal; which might signify, that there is light enough afforded to discern something of the divine counsels and operations; and that, as far as we can understand them, they appear very splendid and glorious. Out of the midst of the fiery splendour, there was, as it were, a shining colour of amber, to signify the presence of God’s powerful grace and mercy, in the midst of the fiery trials of his Church. (Bp. HALL.)

(Marg. Ref.)
and they four had the face of an ox on the left side; they four also had the face of an eagle.

11 Thus were their faces; and their wings were stretched upward; two wings of every one were joined one to another, and two covered their bodies.

12 And they went every one straight forward; whether the Spirit was to go they went; and they turned not when they went.

13 As for the likeness of the living creatures, their appearance was like burning coals of fire, and like the appearance of lamps; for the appearance of lamps: it went up and down among the living creatures; and the fire was bright, and out of the fire went forth lightning.

14 And the living creatures ran, and returned, as the appearance of a flash of lightning.

15 ¶ Now as I beheld the living creatures, behold, one wheel upon the earth by the living creatures, with his four faces.

16 The appearance of the wheel, and their work, was like unto the colour of beryl: and they four had one likeness, and their appearance, and their work, was as it were a wheel in the midst of a wheel.

17 When they went, they went upon all four living creatures, the chief instrument of all artificial operations. (Lownh.) Their wings being joined together might denote the perfect unanimity which prevails among them; and their going straight forward without turning, their steadiness and constancy in obedience.—They needed not to turn their bodies, that their faces might stand the way they were to go; for go which way they would, they had a face that looked that way. This signifies that nothing ever diverted them from fulfilling God's commands. (Lownh.) Their wings, stretched upward, represented their promptitude to execute their Maker's orders; as those, with which they covered their bodies, did their conscious imperfection and meanness in his glorious presence. Their straight feet might be emblematical of simplicity and uprightness; as the sole of their feet, divided like that of the calf or other clean animals, might be of their perfect purity and holiness; and their sparkling like the colour of burnished brass, seems to represent their superior excellency and dignity. They were also represented as going whither the Spirit was to go: which might signify the subervience of their ministries in the provident government of the world, to the great concerns of religion and the prosperity of the Church. Their appearance was like burning coals of fire and the appearance of lamps: which might denote their ardent zeal and love, connected with equal knowledge and wisdom. The lamps, or light, going up and down among the living creatures, might intimate, that the Fountain of Light communicated to them severally, as he pleased; and the bright fire issuing forth, as lightning, might be an emblem of the terrible effects of their ministry on the objects of the divine vengeance: or it might signify the same as their running and returning like a flash of lightning, with inexpressible velocity. (Marg. Ref.) Each of the Seraphim in Isaiah, (vi.) had six wings; and so had the living creatures, seen by the apostle: but those seen by Ezekiel had but four. In those texts,—the Seraphim and the living creatures, use two of their wings to cover their faces, out of reverence to the divine presence, before which they stand; whereas here the living creatures are supposed to stand under the throne, as supporting it. (Grotius in Lownh.) their four sides; * and they turned not when they went.

18 As for their rings, * they were so high that they were dreadful; and their rings were full of eyes round about them four.

19 And when the living creatures went, the wheels went with them: and when the living creatures were lifted up from the earth, the wheels were lifted up.

20 Whithersoever the Spirit was to go, they went, thither was their spirit to go; and the wheels were lifted up over against them: * for the spirit of the living creature was in the wheels.

21 When those went, these went; and when those stood, these stood; and when those were lifted up from the earth, the wheels were lifted up over against them: * for the Spirit of the living creature was in the wheels.

V. 15—25. As the living creatures seem to be emblems of the hosts of angels, ministering to the God of Israel: so these wheels denote the mysterious dispensations of his providence. These are as the wheels of a chariot, in which Jehovah rideth to execute the purposes of his own will; and by them his presence and power are manifested in every place. The shape of wheels, and their aptitude for continual motion, represent the constant revolutions of human affairs, under the conduct of Providence. Those persons or communities, which to day are at the top of the wheel, may to-morrow be at the bottom, beyond all human expectation or prevention: yet in the midst of apparent confusion, and whilst every thing seems hurried on by blind chance or fatal necessity, the most perfect regularity is observed, and the changes are directed by fixed laws, as those which regulate the motion of wheels. Whilst the prophet was contemplating the living creatures, he saw, (upon the earth, to denote that the vision related to the affairs of this lower world,) one wheel by each of them, like the four wheels of a chariot. The appearance and work of the wheels was like unto the colour of a beryl; the wisdom, justice, truth, and goodness of God's providential government, might be denoted by the exquisite workmanship and beautiful colour of the wheels. The colour here intended is supposed to have been the green of the sea-water; which some think an emblem of the perpetual vicissitudes of human affairs; as the ocean is sometimes agitated by furious storms, and then sinks into a calm. The four wheels were all formed alike; for there is a consistency, and even uniformity, in the dispensations of Providence. But there was also, "as it were a wheel in the middle of a wheel," perhaps a smaller wheel connected with, and put in motion by, the larger; an emblem of the connexion of causes and effects, with great apparent intricacy and almost endless variety, which are governed by the sovereign will of God. Or, by one wheel passing through another of the same size at right angles, provision was made, that nothing should intercept or retard their progress. So that when the wheels moved, they went on their four sides; or moved steadily in their proper places, without deviating or being diverted from their course by any impediments. The rings of the wheels were so high, and their circumference was so immense, that they were dreadful to look upon: an emblem of the vast designs of Providence, full of incomprehensible mysteries, to be humbly adored by us, and involving many terrible judgments on the workers of wickedness. But these rings were full of eyes all round about: which signified, that infinite knowledge and wisdom ordered every dispensation, and that the purposes of God could not be dispointed by any unforeseen conjunction. As the living creatures went where the Spirit was to go, so the wheels followed the living creatures: for the same Spirit actuated both the living creatures and the wheels; and though the wheels were first seen on the earth, they often were lifted up above it: all which might signify, that the dispensations of God on earth are connected with heavenly things, and are all appointed in subordination to the concerns of his Church. The firmament, over the heads of the living creatures, was as the colour of the terrible crystal, (for as some render the word, i.e.): at once clear, splendid, and magnificent; and suited to impress the mind with solemn awe and terror. This might also denote that the ministry of the angels was entirely subordinate, and infinitely inferior, to the majesty and power of God. Whilst under this firmament the living creatures executed their commissions, the noise of their motion resembled that of the rushing of mighty waters, or of tremendous thunders, (called the voice of the Almighty,) or of the shout of an army; which may give us an idea of the number and power of these ministering spirits. But when they had executed their commissions, and let down their wings, a voice was heard from the firmament; perhaps denoting the divine approbation of their services, or the communication of further orders.

V. 26-28. The emblems of the attendants and providential appointments of Israel's God having been shown, some glimpses of his divine glory are here given; they are even more brilliant. Probably the Lord intentionally left these emblematic or hieroglyphical discoveries of himself and his works so obscure and intricate, in order that whilst they suggested the intended instruction, they might not be capable of being delineated by the painter, or tempt the stary to form a similitude of them, (though some have absurdly tried to do it.) There appeared to the prophet, (not a real throne, but) the likeness of a throne: an emblem of the sovereign authority of Jehovah over all creatures, over both the world and the Church; and it was as the appearance of a sapphire-stone: that is, it was exquisite in beauty and splendour. Upon this likeness of a throne was the likeness as the appearance of a man, or Adam; which evidently denoted the eternal Son, the second person in the sacred Trinity, who afterwards assumed human nature, (the second Adam, the Lord from heaven,) who before in the form of God was Israel's king. The appearance of amber and of fire round about the throne, and within it, and in every part of his manifested presence, being connected with the rain-bow, (a well-known emblem of the covenant of grace,) represented his mercy and covenant love to his people, as harmonizing with his awful justice and holiness; and showed that he administered all the affairs of his kingdom with reference to his new covenanted 'We may certainly conclude, that this was the appearance of the second person in the blessed Trinity;—because he appears under the resemblance of a man. The light reflected from this vision had the appearance of a rain-bow, a token of God's covenant of mercy; to denote that God, in the midst of judgment, would remember mercy. Especially this vision, being an evident representation of the Word that was to be made flesh, whose incarnation is the foundation of God's covenant of mercy with mankind, a rain-bow, the symbol and token of mercy, was a very fit attendant. (Lonel.) When the prophet saw this likeness of the glory of the Lord, he fell prostrate before it in adoration, and humble consciousness of his unworthiness. The whole of this introductory vision, when reported to the people, was suited to impress their minds also with solemn awe and fear of the divine displeasure; and yet to raise their expectations of blessings from their glorious Lord and King. (Marg. Ref.)

Vol. III.—No. 21.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-14.

When the ministers and ordinances of God have been despised and abused, he will sometimes render them precious: but he will never leave his people entirely destitute of instruction or encouragement. They are as dear to him in captivity, in poverty, and under severe oppression, as when more prosperous. Outward circumstances cannot preclude them from his gracious manifestations: and his providence and grace will concur in qualifying them for the services for which they are intended, and in calling them forth to them. We are reminded of the incomprehensible majesty of Jehovah and of his infinite perfections, in all the discoveries that he has made of himself. The humble and attentive believer may understand enough, to impress his mind with solemn awe, and to inspire filial confidence: but he must perceive such depths in every subject relative to the divine Being and perfections, as serve to teach him humility and adoration. Thus we may learn profitable lessons even from those representations which we cannot fully understand: for we may be reminded, that clouds and darkness are round about our God; whilst judgment and justice are the basis of his throne. A consuming fire goeth before him, and it is very tempestuous round about him, not only when he speaks from mount Sinai, but even when he shows his glory from mount Zion, as the God and Father of his people. Light enough is afforded us to discover, that he doeth all in wisdom, truth, justice, and goodness: but who can declare the depths of his counsels and operations? Let us then attend to those things, which relate to our peace and duty; and leave secret things to the Lord, to whom alone they belong. By faith we may behold him surrounded with an innumerable company of angels, who excel in wisdom and strength, and in all created and communicable perfections: and whilst we contemplate the discoveries of their character and services, we should pray to be made like them here, as we hope hereafter to be equal to them. We should study and copy the wisdom, zeal, alacrity, and diligence, by which they are constantly actuated and directed: and though we cannot reach the exalted strains of their worship, or the perfection of their services; though we have not their wings, but are clogged by these vile bodies, and unable to mount with their rapid flight, or obey with their celerity; yet we may labour with patience and constancy; we may fill up our stations with intelligence and skill; we may go about our work with boldness, and not fear the frown or wrath of man; we may set our Ezekiel.

CHAP. II.

Ezekiel’s commission and instructions, as a prophet to rebellious Israel, 1—5. He is warned neither to fear them, nor to imitate their rebellion, 6—8. He receives a roll, full of lamentations, mourning, and weeping, 9, 10.

And he said unto me, "Son of man, stand upon thy feet, and I will speak unto thee."

affections on heavenly things, and cultivate harmony and love with our brethren and fellow servants; we may go straight forward, undeviated from our path by the smiles or frowns of the world; we may be clothed with humility, and serve the Lord with gladness; we may exercise ourselves to have a conscience void of offence towards God and man; and simply give up ourselves to be disposed of, employed, and guided by his Spirit, according to his revealed will, without preferring our own inclinations, secular interests, or honour, to his glory. These things, ye grace of God, may be attained in some good measure here on earth; and then a blessed change may be expected; when sin shall be done away for ever, when our bodies shall be made spiritual, and we may emulate with success the worship and services of these blessed spirits before the throne, who run and return like a flash of lightning. At present we should consider them as the ministers of providence, both in justice and mercy; especially as sent forth to minister unto the heirs of salvation, who owe numberless deliverances to their condescending and watchful care. Whilst this should instruct us to imitate their conduct, in our attention to our poor and afflicted brethren, it should endear them to us, though unseen, and make us long for that time when we shall join their blissful society.

V. 15—23.

While we aim to know and fill up our proper place in the church and in the world; and to serve our generation with cheerful diligence; let us be satisfied with being informed in general, that the Lord guides the wheels of providence as well as of nature: amidst all the apparent intricacies and unnumbered vicissitudes, the whole is directed with an unerring hand: and whether at the top, or at the bottom of the wheel, our place is assigned by him: and for our good, if we be indeed his people. Nor need we despond in the lowest scenes of adversity; for the wheels keep turning round, and will raise us again in due time from our depression: whilst they, who presume upon prosperity, know not how soon they may be cast down. The dispensations of Providence are ordered under the influence of that Spirit, which sanctifies the Church and dwells in the heart of every believer: if then the vast designs of omnipotent wisdom dismay and perplex us; if the view of the Lord’s awful power and justice alarm us; let us look to Him, who filleth the mediatorial throne, and ruleth over all worlds, and who shall soon appear on the judgment-seat. And, considering that he dwells in our nature, and is our Brother and our Friend, and that he administers all things in subserviency to that everlasting covenant, the blessings of which he purchased with his blood; we may resume our confidence, and possess a cheerful hope tempering our reverence and godly fear.

NOTES.

CHAP. II. V. 1, 2. Daniel is once called "son of a man," (Dan. viii. 17.) but Ezekiel is the only prophet that is generally thus addressed. He had been admitted, as it were, to the society of the spirits before the throne: but this must not cause him to forget, that he was a son of man, a child of Adam, a sinful, frail, and dying creature; though the Lord was pleased to send him to his people, rather than any of the holy angels that ministered before him. As Christ commonly called himself, and was often called by others, "The Son of Man," the title may also be considered as an honourable distinction. It was indeed the Redeemer’s lowest style, as he is also "the Son of God," yet it was a peculiar honour to him to be the chief of all the sons of Adam, and the only one who was free from sin, and well pleasing to God on his own account. And, though this was not the case with Ezekiel, yet he was highly favoured, in being admitted to these visions of God, and employed in the prophetical office, while the nation and the priestly family were in so great affliction and disgrace. When he lay prostrate in an adoring posture upon the earth, he was not so well prepared to receive and execute the divine mandates: and therefore he was ordered to arise and execute his own feet; and the Spirit of prophecy, communicated to him, encouraged and enabled him so to do.
CHAPTER II.

V. 3—5. The Lord, appearing in vision in the likeness of a man, (i. 26.) commissioned the prophet to go in his name to the house of Israel. His personal ministry was confined to the captives in Chaldea: but the Jews in their own land and the dispersed Israelites were included in his commission; many of his predictions and reproofs related to them, and his writings would reach them; and though he delivered prophecies concerning other nations, yet they all had reference to the nations of Israel and Judah; (the original is rebellious nations.) For thus God described them; as from generation to generation they had continued to rebel against him, and were still disposed to do the same. They were a shameless, daring, and hardened race of obstinate transgressors: impudent in their countenances and hardened in their hearts; they must not be wholly given up, being favoured for their fathers’ sake, and because of the Messiah that was to rise up among them. A few might be better disposed; others especially of the rising generation might be reclaimed, and the rest would be left without excuse. The prophet was therefore to go to them, and to prefix his message, with Thus saith the Lord God.” And whether they would or would not regard his message; for they were so rebellious, that he might expect many of them to treat it with contempt; yet they would know by the event, that a prophet had been sent to them; for his predictions would assuredly be verified.

V. 9, 10. Whilst these words were speaking, the prophet saw a hand sent unto him, which had in it a roll of parchment, or of such other materials as were then used to write upon. This roll being opened before him, he saw it every where written with Lamentations, and mourning, “and wo.” This showed the heavy judgments, that he would have to denounce against his rebellious people; the performance of which would cause them to lament and mourn, and would render them most miserable.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We should attend to the word of God, with a disposition to yield a prompt obedience to it. When he calls upon the sinner to awake, arise, and attend to the concerns of his soul, to repent and be converted, and believe the Gospel; the Spirit of life and grace accompanies the call, and as it were sets him on his feet, and enables him to do what indeed before was his duty, but which he had neither will nor power to perform. The same blessed influence must be depended on by ministers and Christians, in every service to which they are called. Human depravity never appears so great, as in the impudent, daring, obstinate, and atrocious wickedness of those, who have been most
CHAPTER III.

Ezekiel, being made to eat the roll, finds it very sweet, 1—3. God encourages him for the work, and warns him to be faithful, 4—11. He is carried by the Spirit, in great bitterness, to the captive Jews, and remains with them seven days, 12—15. He is shown his duty, as a watchman to Israel, 16—21. He is ordered to shut himself up; and further instructed concerning the hardships which awaited him, and the shutting and opening of his mouth, 22—27.

Moreover, he said unto me, Son of man, eat that thou findest; eat this roll, and go speak unto the house of Israel. So I opened my mouth, and he caused me to eat that roll.

And he said unto me, Son of man, cause thy belly to eat, and fill thy bowels with this roll that I give thee.

Favoured with the means of grace. Yet the Lord will not forsake his Church, though multitudes of such base characters have in every age infested it. He knows how to discriminate between the precious and the vile, and to estimate the degree of men's rebellion: and he often sends his ministers to those whom he foresees will not regard their word. But whilst they rebuke and warn with all authority in his name, he will be glorified and they will be accepted, whether men will hear or whether they will forbear: and they, who have most despised the word of God when faithfully preached, will know, when condemned for neglecting so great salvation, that a prophet hath been among them. The more outrageous and insolent sinners are in wickedness, the more bold and faithful must ministers be in addressing them: they cannot please men and serve Christ; they must be armed with that mind which was in him, that they may be prepared to endure hardship and to bear the cross; they must expect to be harassed by liars and thorns, if not to dwell with scorpions; and it would be vain to look for ease, comfort, or safety, in such a situation, except from the Lord. They must not then bear the proud looks or blustering words, the mockings, revilings, or menaces, of powerful rebels; but must trust in God's protection, speak his words, and fear nothing but being numbered by him among the rebellious, or being seduced or terrified to copy, or contemne their ungodliness: and they must diligently bear the words of God, and meditate on them continually, that they may be earnest in their work and well qualified for it. They who are most acquainted with the Scripture will most clearly perceive, that it is every where filled with lamentations, mourning, and woe to impotent sinners, whether infidels, profligates, Pharisees, or hypocrites; and that all the grace and precious promises of the Gospel will eventually be confined to the penitent, believing, and obedient servants of God.

NOTES.

CHAPTER III. V. 1—3. The Lord Christ, the eternal Word, from his throne, here continued to speak to his prophet. He ordered him to eat what he found; that is, to receive into his mind and heart the revelations made to him, without objecting to any part of them. He was to receive the truths of God as the food of his soul; and to feed upon them by faith, and with a spiritual relish; and whatever he thus found would prove wholesome and nutritional. When he had eaten the roll of the book, he was ordered to go and speak to the house of Israel. Accordingly he opened his mouth, and the Lord fed him with the roll; as an emblem, that he communicates his truth to all whose hearts are prepared to receive it. He must also meditate on every part of this roll, that his judgment might be formed on it, his memory stored with it, and his affections regulated by it; as the stomach digests, and the bowels assimilate the food for the nourishment of our bodies. Accordingly he did so; and the roll, though written within and without with lamentations, and mourning, and woe, was in his mouth, as honey for sweetness. The revelation of future events, and the meditation on the truths of God's word, were very pleasant; and perhaps the first thoughts of being honoured as a prophet were agreeable: but when he afterwards considered what predictions and denunciations he was to deliver to the people; that these would increase their condemnation; and that he, being more than a Prophet, would be hated and persecuted on this account, his spirit was much embittered. (Rev. x. 8—11)
10 Moreover, he said unto me, Son of man, all my words that I shall speak unto thee receive in thine heart, and hear with thine ears.

11 And go, get thee to them of the captivity, unto the children of thy people, and speak unto them, and tell them, Thus saith the Lord God; whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear.

12 Then the Spirit took me up, and brought me into Jerusalem. And I heard behind me a voice of a great rushing, saying, 1 Blessed be the glory of the Lord from his place.

13 I heard also the noise of the wings of the living creatures that touched one another, and the noise of the wheels over against them, and a noise of a great rushing.

14 So the Spirit lifted me up, and took me away, and I went in bitterness, in the heat of my spirit; but the hand of the Lord was strong upon me.

V. 4—11. The prophet seems to have been very reluctant to his work; and therefore he was repeatedly urged to it. He was not sent, as (Jonah had been,) to Nineveh, or to any of the surrounding nations, whose language, not being understood by him, would have appeared strange and uncouth, nor could he have spoken to them but by an interpreter: but he was sent to his own people, even the nation of Israel. Yet had he gone to any of the nations who were strangers to the language and religion of Israel, they would have been better disposed to attend to him: their hearts were not so hard, nor their consciences so seared, as those of Israel were become, by continually sinning against convictions and abusing their peculiar advantages; and therefore they would have been more susceptible of terror or shame. But the Israelites would not hearken to the prophet, for they would not hearken to the Lord himself; being almost universally impudent and hardened in their impiety. At the same time that God informed Ezekiel of the ill success of his ministry, he assured him that he had prepared, or would qualify, him to encounter opposition, by giving him abundant intrepidity and firmness: so that with dauntless courage he should be enabled to oppose and reprove their sins; insomuch that their frowns and menaces should make less impression on him, than on an adamant, which is hardened as flint. (Marg. Ref.) And therefore, depending on this promise of support in the hour of trial, he ought to dismiss his present fears: and having heard and well understood all the words that God sent him to speak, he should go immediately to his captive brethren, and declare them with all plainness and authority. 1 He showeth, (10.) what is meant by eating the book; which is, that the ministers of God may speak nothing of themselves, but that only which they have received of the Lord.

V. 12—15. As the prophet seems still to have shown a reluctance to his work, he was supernaturally apprehehended by the Spirit of prophecy, and conveyed to the persons to whom he was to deliver his message; (Marg. Ref.) and the vision still continued, he heard, as he was departing, the voice of a great rushing. This some suppose to have been an emblem of the great commotions which he was about to predict. It, however, proceeded from the living creatures, the hosts of angels; who at the same time "blessed the glory of the Lord from his place;" or adored the displays of his glory, in all these dispensions and appointments. 1 The words imply, that though God 1 should for sake his temple (ix. 3.) and destroy the place that is called by his name; yet his presence will make a temple of every place, and multitudes of the heavenly host will always be ready to do him service. (Lomth.) —The noise of the wings of the living creatures, which touched each other, and the noise of the wheels, intimated that the unanimous ministrations of angels and the dispensations of Providence would concur with the predictions of the prophet. Thus he was lifted up and taken away: but he went in great bitterness and heat of his spirit. The joy which he first experienced, in receiving the divine message, was quickly turned into anguish and dismay; at the prospect of those calamities which were coming on his people; and probably because of the opposition which he had to encounter. But he was unable to withstand the divine power which constrained him to proceed. Then he came to the captives at Tel-abib, &c. 1 These seem to have been a distinct colony—from those that are mentioned i. 3. (Lomth.) Here he continued seven days among the captives, without delivering his message, either making observations on their conduct, or as some think, waiting for the sabbath, as the best time to speak to them. But he was filled with terror and astonishment at what he had seen and heard. (Marg. Ref.)
V. 17-19. (Marg. Ref.) For the admonition, as well as instruction, of the prophet; that he might understand the nature of his office, and the indispensable necessity of faithfully performing it; the Lord expressly declared that he had appointed him a watchman to the house of Israel. The watchmen were stationed to keep a constant look out, that they might discern the enemy or danger at a distance, and warn the people to avoid or repel them; but if they neglected to watch or to give warning, they would be chargable with the murder of such as perished through their negligence. In like manner, he was a watchman in the army, though often exposed to danger from the enemy, is in greater danger from his commander, if he desert his post or do not attend to his duty. But the watchman gave notice of the approaching danger, and the people neglected to profit by the warning, they might indeed be cut off, but he would be guiltless. Thus the Lord had appointed the prophet to observe, and to report to the people, the dangers to which their sins exposed them: this he was required to do, by hearing the word of the Lord, and warning them from him. And if he did not fairly report to the wicked the sentence of death and destruction, which the Lord had passed upon them, warning them to repent and turn from their wicked ways, that they might save their lives; they would then be cut off by divine judgments in their sins, and the prophet would be condemned as their murderer. But if he gave the wicked fair warning, and they still went on in their sins, and perished, he would be free from guilt, and not be considered as accessory to their ruin. So that there were sufficient reasons why he should be very faithful, though exposed to much contempt and persecution, and apparently unsuccessful; as this would be the only way, in which he could avoid being involved in the guilt and ruin of his people. The wicked man shall die in a state of sin, and be condemned to those punishments, to which death translates sinners. (John viii. 24.) Thou art not to be justly accountable for the loss of his soul, just as a man’s soul is laid to the charge of him, that is as necessary to his death. (Lowth) (Marg. Ref.)

V. 20, 21. ‘If he, that hath been instructed in the right way, turn back,’ His righteous deeds seemed to be done in faith, and were not. (Marg. Ref.) When a man who carries himself as righteous, and is in his whole course inoffensive, doth turn away from his holy profession, and give himself over to a trade of wickedness, and I meet with him in that sinful course, and surprise him with my judgments, he shall die, &c.— Those good actions, which he had formerly done, and his forepast holy carriage, shall not be so respected as to keep him from just condemnation. (Bp. Hall.) If one of the few righteous should turn aside from his religion and righteousness, to the commission of iniquity: if the heart-searching God should be pleased to lead him into such circumstances as tended to make trial of him, and to call forth his concealed lusts, and thus to prove a stumbling block in his way: and if the prophet should neglect to warn him of his danger, and through his neglect the man should fall and perish in his sins, notwithstanding all the righteousness that he had done, (which could not alone for his sins, and indeed could only be external;) in that case the prophet would be condemned as accessory to his destruction. But if he faithfully warned the righteous, and put them upon their guard against apostasy and iniquity, the Lord would bless his warnings, to preserve them from sin, and to promote their salvation; and the prophet would also be accepted, and be pure from the blood even of such as perished notwithstanding. The Scriptures speak of persons and characters, as they appear to men. Many, who have been thought true believers, have apostatized and died in sin, as far as man can see: and if indeed a real Christian should thus apostatize and die impenitent, his righteousness would not be remembered, and he would perish in his sins. But the security of the covenant of grace is this, “God will put his fear into the hearts of his people, that they shall not thus depart from him.” And the holy Scriptures are everywhere written in a popular style: and not with that studied regard to exact consistency, which appears in the works of very systematic divines.
V. 22—97. The prophet, being powerfully impelled to follow the divine direction, was led forth into the plain, that the Lord might further commune with him. There he had the same vision of the glory of God, with the same effects, as before. And he was ordered to go and shut himself up in his house; there to wait for more particular instructions, in solitude, prayer, and meditation. He was also informed, that they would put bands upon him; either his friends, as supposing him beside himself, or his enemies, as enraged by his predictions. Some, however, explain this of the transactions recorded in the next chapter. —His confinement and bands were emblems of the Jews, when shut up in Jerusalem by the Chaldeans; and of their bondage after the city was taken. Thus he was prevented from going among the people: nay, the Lord declared that he would cause him to be dumb, that he might not be a reprover to them, because of their rebellion. Probably these restraints were meant as a rebuke to the prophet, for his unbelieving fears and reluctance to his work; and to teach him submission to the divine will: but they were also intended to correct or punish the people, who were not disposed to welcome a faithful reprover; and probably they had shown some tokens of contempt and censure, whilst he sat amongst them at Tel-Abib. However, the prophet would not always continue thus silent; but it was not intended that he should speak when he pleased, or when the people required him; but when the Lord spake to him. Then he would open his mouth, and enable him to deliver his message with boldness and authority; and placing life, the blessing and the curse, before the people, to leave them to their choice, and the effects of it, whether they would hear or forbear.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.
V. 1—15.

We should readily receive the whole word of God; for every part of it is salutary and beneficial. Its doctrines, promises, precepts, warnings, examples, by faith and prayer; nay, the believer may deduce sweetness and comfort from those passages, which speak terror to the ungodly, whilst he thinks of Him, who hath delivered him "from the wrath to come." The word of Christ should therefore dwell richly in us; but especially in those, who are to speak it to others; for if they are not well acquainted with it, and experienced in it, they will not be able rightly to divide it, and apply it to their hearers. The Lord is always ready to communicate divine instruction to those, whose minds are open to receive it: and to assist their endeavours to understand the Scriptures. But, however sweet retirement, meditation, and communion with God may be, yet we must prepare also for active service. We may say upon the mount, it is good to be here; but we must descend to struggle with temptations, to endure hardship, to face opposition, to bear our cross, and to follow our suffering Lord. The work of the ministry generally appears very pleasant in the prospect, and whilst pious men are studying and preparing for it; and doubtless it is a good and most desirable work; yet they, who mean as ministers to be valiant for the truth in this rebellious world, must prepare for severe trials and conflicts. However, we need not hesitate to speak the words of God unto the people: for if we act by his commission, and according to his instructions, we may be sure that he will bear us out. But faithful ministers will often meet with more difficulties among the brethren, than among proselytes: and they, who are sent to poor Indians and Pagans, have frequently found them more open to instruction and conviction, than men in Christian countries. So that their hard language, not to be understood without an interpreter, has not so much impeded their success, as the daring and hardened impiety of persons brought up under the sound of the Gospel, would have done. When sinners are very bold in the service of Satan, we should not be cowardly in the cause of God: when impiety and infidelity wax insolent and impudent, we should grow more strenuous and zealous in opposing them: and if our enemies set their faces as a fiend, and make their bow as brass; the Lord can make ours as the adamant, and enable us to withstand deceivers and opposers to the face, without fearing their frowns, threatenings, or rage. But we should remember, that his promises are intended to encourage us to attend on our duty. Having therefore such assurances of strength and support in the hour of trial, we can have no just cause to fear any enemy: and if we receive in our hearts, as well as hear with our ears, all the words of God; and then speak to the people, as we have opportunity, whether they will hear, or whether they will forbear, it should not greatly disquiet us, if they, who despise the commandments of God, will not hearken to our words. But though these things be our evident duty; and though there be a disposition to attend to them; yet nature will object to, and struggle against, such difficult and perilous services. And though the Spirit of God powerfully operate on our fears, afflictions, and consciences, and we cannot but go whither he sends us, and speak what he bids us, yet we may often feel great impatience and uneasiness, and go in the bitterness and heat of our spirit. So that, whilst angels are adoring the condescension of our God, in employing such sinful worms in his honourable work, and blessing him for the displays of his glory in his gracious dealings with us; and all are unanimously concurring in the execution of his purposes; we poor sinners, though especially favoured and honoured, may be discontented and repining at the services allotted us! Indeed, it must be allowed to be very discouraging, when we are sent where there is little hope of being useful: and, especially, when the more our hearers are observed, the more desperate their wickedness appears to be. It may also astonish and almost alarm any con-
THOU also, son of man, take thee a tile, and lay it before thee, and pour upon it the city, even Jerusalem. 2 And lay siege against it, and build a fort against it, and cast a mount against it: set the camp also against it, and set battering rams against it round about. 3 Moreover, take thou unto thee an iron pan, and set it for a wall of iron between thee and the city: and set thy face against it, and it shall be besieged, and

What an awful, important, and arduous work, is the ministry of the Gospel? If we are faithful, we expose ourselves to the severest indignation of God, and become guilty of the murder of the souls which perish by our default: and if we are faithful, we must expect to excite the indignation of all who do not profit by our solemn warnings. These considerations should render every one cautious, from what motives, and in what manner, he engages; that he may be sure the Lord hath made him a watchman: they should teach us all to take heed to our selves, and to the ministry that we have received of the Lord, that we may fulfill it; and to guard against ambition, avarice, and every thing that may tempt us to unfaithfulness: they should excite us to continual prayer for the increase of faith, spiritual knowledge, and that sufficiency which the Lord alone can bestow; and to keep before our minds the awful account that must be rendered, if sinners perish by our fault; that the fear of him who is able to destroy both body and soul in hell, may subordinate all our fears of those who can only kill the body, and after that have no more that they can do.

We cannot indeed prevail with men to attend to the truths and will of God: but we may hear his word, and declare it unto them, showing them plainly both their danger and their remedy: and if we do this fully and faithfully, we shall deliver our own souls, even though they perish in their sins. We should also remember, that we are required, not only to encourage and comfort those who appear to us to be righteous: they too must be warned; for it is by such warnings, that the Lord puts the upright upon their guard, and thus they are preserved from sin unto salvation; and the minister is also exempted from guilt, as to those who deceive themselves, or turn back and perish in their evil ways. For many, of whom men have been most confident, have grown high-minded and secure; have met with stumbling-blocks in their way; and have fallen and died in their iniquity. So that nothing, except actual perseverance, absolutely evinces the reality of grace and soundness of heart: and the unfaithful preacher, who does not warn men of these dangers, becomes guilty of their ruin, and their blood will be required at his hands. Surely then we should study to be very explicit and particular in our ministry: and seek to profit, rather than to please or be commended by, our hearers! And surely the hearers of the Gospel should not expect from those who watch for their souls, and have such an account to give of their ministry, smooth and soothing discourses; but very alarming and distinguishing warnings, exhortations, and reproofs. Gentleness and caution are not the most requisite qualifications for a watchman; when the house is on fire, or the assassin is about to murder those who are asleep. They do not accuse, of imperimience or rudeness, if he awake them even with noise and violence; but in such a case prefer earnestness to courtesy: and should they not judge in like manner, when their souls are in danger? And ought not the feelings of the minister, who fears lest the blood of the people should be required at his hands, be consulted, as well as those of the auditors, who cannot endure to hear of the terror of the Lord?—But even whereby the minister does not allowedly temporize, but is obedient in many things to the word of God, he may in others expose himself to rebuke and chastisement, by rudity and procrastination: and the Lord sometime lays aside for a season such as have sinfully declined opportunities of usefulness. Where, however, the heart is upright, they will profit even by such rebukes and suspensions. The Lord's condensation in showing us his glory, and commingling with us sinful worms, notwithstanding our peevishness, is very wonderful: but he will convince us of our insufficiency, for any good thing, if he intend to use us as his instruments.—Meditation, study, and prayer, are proper preparations for service: yet, after all, we should be dumb, when called to speak in the Lord's name, if he did not open our mouths, give us our message, and supply us with utterance and boldness. By painful experiences his servants are taught humble submission, and dependence on him: and if they adhere to their instructions, they will be a sweet savour unto God, both in those who hear, and in those who rebelliously reject or abuse their word; and whoever attempts to silence them, takes the readiest way of bringing the heaviest judgments on himself, and on the community to which he belongs.
CHAPTER IV.

thou shalt lay siege against it. This shall be a sign to the house of Israel.

4 Lie thou also upon thy left side, and lay the iniquity of the house of Israel upon it: according to the number of the days that thou shalt lie upon it, thou shalt bear their iniquity.

5 For I have laid upon thee the years of their iniquity, according to the number of the days, three hundred and ninety days: so shalt thou bear the iniquity of the house of Israel.

6 And when thou hast accomplished them, lie again on thy right side, and thou shalt bear the iniquity of the house of Judah forty days: I have appointed thee a day for a year.

7 Therefore thou shalt set thy face toward the siege of Jerusalem, and thou shalt prophesy against it.

8 And, behold, I will lay bands upon thee, and thou shalt not turn thee from one side to another, till thou hast ended the days of thy siege.

9 Take thou also unto thee wheat, and barley, and beans, and lentiles, and millet, and fitches, and put them in a vessel, and make thee bread thereof, according to the number of the days that thou shalt lie upon thy side; three hundred and ninety days shalt thou eat thereof.

10 And thy meat which thou shalt eat shall be by weight, twenty shekels a day: from time to time shalt thou eat it.

11 Thou shalt drink also water by measure, the sixth part of an hin: from time to time shalt thou drink.

12 And thou shalt eat it as barley-cakes, and thou shalt bake it with dung that cometh out of man, in their sight.

13 And the Lord said, Even thus shall the children of Israel eat their defiled bread among the Gentiles, whither I will drive them.

14 Then said I, Ah Lord God! behold, my soul hath not been polluted: for from my youth up, even till now, I have not eaten of that which dieth of itself, or is torn in pieces; neither came there abominable flesh into my mouth.

15 Then he said unto me, Lo, I have besieged by setting his face against the picture of the city. For three hundred and ninety days he was ordered to lie on his left side: these days denoted so many years; and may be calculated from the establishment of idolatry by Jeroboam in the kingdom of Israel, to the final desolations of the whole land by Nebuzaradan, in the twenty-third year of Nebuchadnezzar, which the chronologers compute to have been exactly three hundred and ninety years. (Jer. liii. 30.) In the siege of Jerusalem, and the ruin of the nation, they bore the punishment of their iniquity committed during those years; and Ezekiel, by lying so long on his left side, as a sign to them, typically bore it for them. When he had accomplished those days, he was ordered to lie forty more on his right side: which represented the forty years, that intervened betwixt Josiah's reformation and the same final desolations of the land, and were the more immediate cause of that catastrophe. Some think that these four hundred and thirty days relate also to the days of the siege, deducting some time for the departure of the besiegers, when they went to fight with the Egyptians; but this is uncertain. The prophet was thus required to set himself against Jerusalem, and to make bare, or stretch out, his arm, to represent the force and fury with which the Chaldeans would conduct the siege. By this sign he prophesied against it: and the Lord would lay bands on him; that is, he would powerfully enable, and even constrain him, to lie quietly in the posture appointed him, till the days were accomplished. (Note, viii. 1.)

NOTES.

CHAP. IV. V. 1-8. The captives in Chaldea, as well as the Jews in their own land, vainly hoped that Jerusalem would be preserved, and that they should be delivered from the power of the king of Babylon: but Ezekiel by this sign was ordered to show them the contrary. It is probable that this occurred, whilst he was shut up in his own house, and unable to speak to the people: for by signs he might instruct such as came to him; and when his extraordinary conduct came to be known, many would go to see him from different motives. Thus the affair would become generally known amongst the captives; and in due time be published and explained to the whole nation. It seems to have been a real transaction, and not a vision: and all objections to this construction, taken from the unaeasiness of the prophet in the situation here described, arise from forgetfulness of the power of God, who can render his servants easy in any situation. — He was ordered to draw a picture of Jerusalem on a tile, (an emblem of the meanness to which sin had reduced that holy city, and the speedy destruction that awaited it;) that so by a general likeness every spectator might know what city was intended. He was then directed to place around it the similitude of those engines and works, that were used in sieges; and to take an iron pan, or a circular piece of iron, to place round the city as a wall; denoting the fortifications of Jerusalem, and the obstinate defence that would be made by its inhabitants. He himself represented the besiegers, by setting his face against the picture of the city. For three hundred and ninety days he was ordered to lie on his left side: these days denoted so many years; and may be calculated from the establishment of idolatry by Jeroboam in the kingdom of Israel, to the final desolations of the whole land by Nebuzaradan, in the twenty-third year of Nebuchadnezzar, which the chronologers compute to have been exactly three hundred and ninety years. (Jer. lii. 30.) In the siege of Jerusalem, and the ruin of the nation, they bore the punishment of their iniquity committed during those years; and Ezekiel, by lying so long on his left side, as a sign to them, typically bore it for them. When he had accomplished those days, he was ordered to lie forty more on his right side: which represented the forty years, that intervened betwixt Josiah's reformation and the same final desolations of the land, and were the more immediate cause of that catastrophe. Some think that these four hundred and thirty days relate also to the days of the siege, deducting some time for the departure of the besiegers, when they went to fight with the Egyptians; but this is uncertain. The prophet was thus required to set himself against Jerusalem, and to make bare, or stretch out, his arm, to represent the force and fury with which the Chaldeans would conduct the siege. By this sign he prophesied against it: and the Lord would lay bands on him; that is, he would powerfully enable, and even constrain him, to lie quietly in the posture appointed him, till the days were accomplished. (Note, viii. 1.) given thee cow's dung for man's dung, and thou shalt prepare thy bread there-with.

16 Moreover he said unto me, Son of man, behold, * I will break the staff of bread in Jerusalem, and they shall eat bread by weight, and with care; and receiving instruction from God, and in promoting his glory, as far as they are capable of it. In various ways he preaches to our senses: his word addresses our ears as the avenues to the heart; the sacramental signs and pledges of spiritual blessings preach to our eyes, that by them we may be instructed and affected. These external representations often appear mean and despicable to the proud, carnal, and ignorant, who look no further than the outward sign: but they are the humble, enlightened, and spiritual mind, they are replete with instruction, caution, and encouragement. For such persons will inquire into the meaning of every external observance, especially those which are of divine appointment; and search out their use and intention, that they may profit by them. The Lord often calls his most favoured servants to the sharpest sufferings and the hardest services; which would be very distressing to them, were they not assured of proportionable supports. But no self-denial, labour, scanty unsavoury fare, hard lodging, or uneasy posture, can render those uncomfortable, to whom the Lord manifests his gracious presence, and communicates his abundant consolations. When we consider what severe and long continued self-denial our gracious God of old required of his servants; and recollect that it was their wisdom and happiness as well as duty to render it; we shall be the better reconciled to the exercise of that moderate self-denial to which he calls us; and shall be shamed out of our reluctance to it, and impatience under it.—They who love the souls of men, would be ready to endure any temporal inconvenience or suffering, to bring them to a sense of their guilt and danger, and to take them off from presumptuous confidences: and, as example is more convincing than words, it behoves all, who desire to be useful ministers, to habituate themselves to a holy indifference about worldly pleasures and interests; that they may exemplify the duties which they inculcate, and, by their obedience to apparently hard commands, put those to shame who refuse obedience in the most favourable circumstances. Indeed, when we consider with what evils sin hath filled the earth, we should all prepare for the worst: we know not how soon we may be forced to eat our refuse food by measure, and to drink our short allowance of water with astonishment; and be glad of the meanest sustenance which we now loathe and throw away. But if Jesus have delivered us from the wrath to come, and we have long been habituated to the practice of holiness, we shall more fear sin and pollution than any external hardship: and whatever troubles we experience, we shall not be left to consume away in our iniquities.—

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

All our powers and capacities should be used, in re-
CHAPTER V.

The prophet is ordered to shave off his hair; and to divide, burn, cut, and scatter it, as an emblem of the dealings of God with the Jews, 1—4. The sign applied to Jerusalem and its inhabitants; their enormous crimes exposed, and dreadful judgments denounced, 5—17.

And thou, son of man, take thee a sharp knife, and take thee a barber's razor, and cause it to pass upon thine head, and upon thy beard: then takest thee balances to weigh, and divide the hair.

2 Thou shalt burn with fire a third part in the midst of the city, when the days of the siege are fulfilled: and thou shalt take a third part and smite about it with a knife: and a third part thou shalt scatter in the wind, and I will draw out a sword after them.

3 Thou shalt also take thereof a few in number, and bind them in thy skirts. 4 Then take of them again, and cast their torment, where not so much as a drop of water can be procured to cool the tongue; and they, who are connected with the wicked, often suffer many temporal afflictions in consequence of it. But Christ alone bare our sins, in his own body on the tree: to expiate our guilt, he fasted, thirsted, agonized, and died. They who believe in him, shall not come into condemnation; but are passed from death unto life: and as he shows such compassion even to his scruples; they should not attempt to impose on their brethren the most indifferent observances, which are professedly declined from a principle of conscience.

5 ¶ Thus saith the Lord God: This is Jerusalem: I have set it in the midst of the nations and countries that are round about her.

6 And she hath changed my judgments into wickedness more than the nations, and my statutes more than the countries that are round about her: for they have refused my judgments, and my statutes, they have not walked in them.

7 Therefore thus saith the Lord God: Because ye multiplied more than the nations that are round about you, and have not walked in my statutes, neither have kept my judgments, neither have done according to the judgments of the nations that are round about you; therefore thus saith the Lord God: Behold I, even I am against thee, and will execute judgments in the midst of thee, in the sight of the nations.

NOTES.

CHAP. V. V. 1—4. This command seems to have been given the same time as the foregoing. The barber's razor was to be used in shaving his head and beard; the sharp knife or sword, in smiting a division of the hair; or it may be rendered, "take thee a sharp knife, even take thee a barber's razor;" the former may be understood of any sort of sharp instrument, the latter describing the kind. Jerusalem had been the head of the nation of Israel, and the most favoured city upon earth: her numerous inhabitants were her ornament and strength, as the hair is the ornament of the head, and the beard is the token of manhood. But the city was to be desolated and levelled with the ground; as the head is bared when the hair and beard are shaven off. Then her ornament and strength were taken away; and as the shaving of the Nazarite disannulled his vow; so perhaps this indicated that the token of her consecration to God was destroyed by her sins. This showed the severity of the judgments of God: and the weighing of the hair intimated the strict justice and exact wisdom, in which the inhabitants of Jerusalem were consigned to their several punishments. The third part of the hair, which was burned with fire in the midst of the city, (that is, the picture of the city before mentioned,) at the end of the siege, (or the days which the prophet lay before it,) (Notes, iv.) denoted, that a third part of the Jews, who had taken refuge in Jerusalem, would perish by famine, pestilence, or confabulations, during the siege, or when it was terminated: the third part, smitten with a knife or sword, represented those who were slain by the besiegers in attempting to escape: and the third part scattered in the wind, represented those who fled, or were carried captives into other countries; who would be pursued by the justice of God and the cruelty of their enemies, into every place. A few hairs which the prophet bound in his skirts, as if they were to be preserved, of which some were afterwards cast into the fire, signified the remnant, who were left in the land under Gedaliah, and seemed to have acquired a settlement; till the murder of Gedaliah, and the flight of the rest into Egypt, overturned the whole design. Most of them perished miserably: and the Chaldeans, exasperated by their defection to the Egyptians, seem to have treated the other Jews with greater severity on their account, and to have utterly desolated the land. —

Maimonides observes, that the priests were forbidden to shave their heads, in the time of mourning, from whence he concludes that this was performed only in vision. But there is no need of such an evasion to answer the difficulty; for the immediate command of God to any prophet, is a sufficient discharge from any obligations of the ceremonial law. So Elijah offered sacrifice on mount Carmel, contrary to the rule of the law. (Deut. xii. 5. 1 Kings xviii. 20.) (Lowth.)

3 R 2
9 And I will do in thee that which I have not done, and whereunto I will not do any more the like, because of all thine abominations.

10 Therefore the fathers shall eat the sons in the midst of thee, and the sons shall eat their fathers; and I will execute judgments in thee, and the whole remnant of thee will I scatter into all the winds.

11 Wherefore, as I live, saith the Lord God; Surely, because thou hast defiled my sanctuary with all thy detestable things, and with all thine abominations, therefore wilt I also diminish thee; neither shall mine eye spare, neither will I have any pity.

12 A third part of thee shall die with the pestilence, and with famine shall they be consumed in the midst of thee; and a third part shall fall by the sword round about thee; and I will scatter a third part into all the winds; and I will draw out a sword after them.

13 Thus shall mine anger be accomplished, and I will cause my fury afterwards caused by the Romans to rest upon them, and I will be comforted: and they shall know that I the Lord have spoken it in my zeal, when I have accomplished my fury in them.

14 Moreover I will make thee waste, and a reproach among the nations that are round about thee, in the sight of all that pass by.

15 So it shall be a reproach and a taunt, an instruction, and an astonishment unto the nations that are round about thee, when I shall execute judgments in thee in anger, and in fury, and in furious rebukes. I the Lord have spoken it.

16 When I shall send upon thee the evil arrows of famine, which shall be for your destruction, and which I will send to destroy you: and I will increase the famine upon you, and will break your staff of bread.

17 So will I send upon you famine, and evil beasts, and they shall bereave thee; and pestilence and blood shall pass through thee; and I will bring the sword upon thee. The Lord have spoken it.

V. 5-10. The Lord here explained this sign, to be (that is, to represent) Jerusalem. He had placed that city in the midst of the most populous and prosperous nations then on earth, as the place of his temple, and the centre of his worship; that his perfections, truths, laws, and ordinances, might be known to others, for the glory of his name. Thus she was as the head among the cities and nations of the earth. It was a city set on a hill, on purpose that it might be a pattern of religion and virtue to them. (Lowth.) But the inhabitants of this favoured city had abused the ordinances of God, as the cloak or occasion of their sins: they had changed the glorious object of their worship for the most worthless idols and superstitions; they went further from his statutes, and more multiplied their abominations, than the Gentiles themselves: they were not content with copying the judgments, the rites, customs, or worship, of any one heathen nation: but they collected from them all, and improved upon them all. And as they thus dishonoured God among the heathen, he determined to vindicate his insulted honour in their sight, by executing vengeance upon the Jews with a severity as unexampled as their guilt. Insomuch, that in the extremity of famine they should eat one another; even parents should eat the flesh of their children, and children of their parents, without any distinction; while the wretched remnant of them would be dispersed into every part of the earth. The destruction of Jerusalem, and the captivity of its inhabitants by the Chaldeans, were primarily intended; and yet the desolations and dispensations of the Lord have spoken it by his word, to the ruin of all the heathen nations by the Romans.

V. 11, 12. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 13. Comforted, &c. Such expressions are used in accommodation to our apprehensions. If a man has been greatly injured and dishonoured, he is comforted when he obtains satisfaction for the injury, and can wipe away the disgrace. The Jews had greatly dishonoured God, and caused the heathen to blaspheme his holy religion; but his judgments executed on them manifested his power, justice, holiness, and truth; stopped the mouths of blasphemers, and reflected honour on his law and worship. Such ervice belongeth unto God; and he was determined not to rest, till he had satisfied his justice, and glorified his name, in their condition punishment; and in this he would take pleasure. For though he delight not in the death of a sinner; yet he delights in acting in a manner worthy of himself, even in taking vengeance on incorrigible rebels. This sentence he had denounced in his zeal for his own glory; and he would accomplish it, in most tremendous vengeance upon the Jews.

V. 14-17. (Marg. Ref.) The event would show,
CHAPTER VI.

A prediction of the destruction of the idols and idolaters of Israel, and that a remnant should be saved, 1—10.

The prophet is ordered to use vehement expressions, to show his detestation of the sins, and his sorrow for the calamities of his people, 11—14.

AND the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, set thy face towards the mountains of Israel, and prophesy against them,

3 And say, Ye mountains of Israel, hear the word of the Lord God; Thus saith the Lord God 4 to the mountains and to the hills, to the rivers and to the valleys; Behold, I, even I, will bring a sword upon you, and I will destroy your high places.

4 And your altars shall be desolate, and your * images shall be broken; and I will cast down your slain men before your idols.

5 And I will lay the dead carcasses of the children of Israel before their idols; and I will scatter your bones round about your altars.

6 In all your dwelling-places the cities shall be laid waste, and the high places shall be desolate; that your altars may be laid waste and made desolate, and your idols may be broken and cease, and your images may be cut down; and your works may be abolished.

7 And the slain shall fall in the midst of you; and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

It is so difficult to make men sensible of their guilt and danger, that we should employ for this purpose every expedient, argument, or illustration, that we can devise. The severest vengeance of God is regulated by the most perfect wisdom and justice: every distinction, when abused, increases guilt and condemnation: and to whatever refuge sinners flee, the fire and sword of the Lord’s indignation will overtake them. The professors of Christianity are as a city on a hill, in the midst of the nations of the earth; their conduct cannot be hid. If it consist with their holy profession, God will be glorified, his truth and worship recommended, and a blessing through them communicated to mankind. But, alas! too many of them are the vilest of men: they depart from God’s judgments and statutes more than the blind Pagans; they turn his grace into licentiousness, and exceed in fraud, oppression, cruelty, impurity, and iniquity, the worst of the idolaters, among whom they disgrace the Christian name. But let such persons read, in the temporal judgments executed on the Jewish nation, the awful sentence which will be denounced against them in the day of wrath, when God shall deal with them according to their abominations. However he may now spare guilty nations or individuals, he will then have no pity on those who have defiled his sanctuary, and disgraced his Gospel, with their detestable things. Nor will he rest or be comforted respecting them, till by their condign punishment he have wiped off the dishonour, which their crimes have cast upon his name and cause; and until he have satisfied his justice, in executing the most dreadful denunciations which he hath spoken in his zeal.

NOTEs.

CHAP. VI. V. 2, 3. The mountains in the land of Israel, or the whole land of promise, had been polluted with the idolatries of the people: the prophet was therefore ordered to look towards them, and address his predictions to them, as if present, and capable of hearing his word: but the hills and valleys, and other parts of the country, were concerned in it. This was a rebuke of the stupidity of the people; and intimated, that the Chaldeans would shortly desolate the whole land of Judah, as the Assyrians had done that of Israel.

V. 4. * This verse is plainly taken from Lev. xxvi. 30. 'The word Hamannah, images, is generally supposed to mean such as were erected to the honour of the sun.' (Lowth.) The peculiar, and, as it might previously have been thought, unlikely event, of the Babylonish captivity, in entirely terminating gross idolatries in Canaan, and among such Jews or Israelites as were not incorporated with the Gentiles, is here emphatically predicted.

V. 7. * The judgments God intended to bring on the Jews, would make the most hardened and stupid sinners sensible, that this was his hand.' (Lowth.)
8 Yet will I leave a remnant, that shall escape of the sword by the famine, and by the pestilence.
12 He that is far off shall die of the pestilence; and he that is near shall fall by the sword; and he that remaineth, and is besieged, shall die by the famine: thus will I accomplish my fury upon them.

3 Then shall ye know that I am the Lord, when their slain men shall be among their idols round about their altars, upon every high hill, in all the tops of the mountains, and under every green tree, and under every thick oak, the place where they did offer sweet savour to all their idols.
14 So will I stretch out my hand, and make the land desolate, yea, more desolate than the wilderness toward Diblath, in all their habitations: and they shall know that I am the Lord.

V. 8—10. The Lord did not intend that the nation of Israel should be utterly destroyed by these judgments. A small remnant should be reserved in mercy, though all deserved to perish: he would escape the sword that would be drawn out after the captives; and at length he would remember the Lord, and their obligations to him and rebellion against him. They would then recollect their proneness to idolatry from age to age, by which they had wearied out his patience and goodness; even as a beloved wife breaks the heart of her husband by her continual adulteries, and by showing a disposition to prefer every man she looks on to him. Thus they would learn to abhor themselves, and would become loathsome in their own sight, when they reflected on their own base and ungrateful conduct towards the Lord, who had so greatly favoured them: and they would know his power, truth, and justice, in the execution of these predictions upon them; and would confess, that they were not vain words, as they had once thought them, nor pronounced without cause; but that they deserved all that they endured. Then they would fear God, forsake all idolatry, and return to his worship and service.

V. 11. The exceeding wickedness and insensibility of the Jews, and the terrible calamities coming upon them, required that the prophet should express his concern in the most emphatical manner: he was therefore directed, as one carried away with the earnestness and vehemence of his mind, to smite with his hand and to stamp with his foot; whilst he exclaimed against the abominations of the people, and denounced the judgments of God upon them. This might give many of them an occasion to revile or accuse him, as enraged, or beside himself: but it might also tend to awaken some of them to a serious consideration of the predictions, which he delivered with so much earnestness.

V. 14. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Whatever men idolize or abuse to sin, will tend to their hurt, or be involved in their ruin; and they who hate the knowledge of God, through love of sin, shall be made to know him by experiencing the power of his wrath. The supersitions that many trust to for safety, often prove the immediate cause of their ruin; and it is as awful for a sinner to be cut off in the act of worshiping an image or a creature, as in the practice of the grossest immorality; for the Lord is a jealous God, and will not give his glory to another. However poor benighted Pagans may be spared in their idolatries, if the mountains of Israel, the countries favoured with the oracles of God, become the receptacle of such abominations, they may expect his severest vengeance: and it will not be long before idols and idolatry will be as awfully and effectually destroyed out of the Christian Church, as they were from among the Jews. Men’s wickedness springs from forgetfulness of God, and disregard to their relations and obligations to him. Whatever therefore brings them to remember him, and their sins, should be considered as a blessing. True repentance springs from the knowledge of God and of ourselves: this shows the evil and malignity of our transactions, the depraved propensity of our hearts to depart from him; and the innumerable provocations committed against him, in our thoughts, words, and works, by all our faculties and senses, our bodies and souls. These we perceive how much we have done to abuse his goodness, weary out his patience, and violate our engagements and obligations to him; our self-justification and self-admiration will be turned into humble confessions of guilt and self-abhorrence before God; and this will lead us to hope only in his mercy, to acknowledge his truth and justice in all our corrections, and to return to his service with uprightness of heart, renouncing all our formerly
CHAP. VII.

The desolations of Israel immediately to take place, 1—15. The penitent mourning and distress of them that escape, 16—19. The sanctuary given up to be defiled, for the abominations there committed, 20—22.

Moreover, the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

2 Also, thou son of man, thus saith the Lord God unto the land of Israel; An end, the end is come upon thee, the end is come, and there will be no latter end, neither will any rise of seed save to be consumed. 3 Now is the end come upon thee, and I will send mine anger upon thee, and will judge thee according to thy ways, and will recompense thee for all thy abominations.

4 And mine eyes shall not spare thee, neither will I have pity; but I will requite thy ways upon thee, and thine abominations shall be in the midst of thee; and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

5 Thus saith the Lord God; An only evil, behold, is come.

6 An end is come, the end is come; it watcheth for thee; behold, it is come.

7 The morning is come upon thee, O thou that dwellest in the land: the day of thy death is near, and the thing that thou hast done is done.

8 Now will I shortly pour out my fury upon thee, and will accomplish mine anger upon thee. 9 And I will judge thee according to thy ways, and will recompense thee for all thine abominations. 10 And mine eyes shall not spare thee, neither will I have pity; but I will requite thy ways upon thee, and thine abominations shall be in the midst of thee; and ye shall know that I am the Lord that smiteth.

11 Behold the day, behold, it is come: the mourning is gone forth, the rod hath blossomed, pride hath budged. 12 Violence is risen up into a rod of wickedness: none of them shall remain, nor of their multitude, nor of any of their evil, as shall comprehend all other calamities in it. An unprecedented evil, of itself sufficient to ruin the nation. (1 Sam. xxvi. 8.) This was come, or near at hand; for the prediction seems to have been delivered about three years before Jerusalem was besieged.

V. 6. (Note, 2.) A destruction, which shall be fatal to a great part of those that go into captivity; as well as to those who are consumed in their own country.

V. 7. The predicted day of vengeance, which watched for the Jews, was at hand: the day dawned, the tokens of approaching ruin were discernible: the report of the Chaldean invasion was no vain rumour; nor like the echo or reverberated sound upon the mountains, by which a single voice might be mistaken for the noise of a multitude; for the Chaldean army was indeed upon the march, and would soon arrive and bring destruction with them.

The Hebrew word properly signifies such a joyful sound as used to echo from the mountains, by which the treader of the grapes expressed their satisfaction, at the time of vintage.
V. 10, 11. The rod, or sceptre, of authority among the Jews had budded into pride, ambition, and tyranny, and blossomed into violence and oppression; and these produced such an increase of wickedness, as brought down the judgments of God upon them. Or Nebuchadnezzar, his rod of correction was grown exceedingly in power, pride, violence, and rapacity; and thus was prepared to punish the Jews; and their pride, violence, and iniquity, exposed them to this prosperous scourge of God. So that nothing would remain in Judah, or Jerusalem, of all their multitude and riches; nor any to lament those that were slain or carried captive. The word translated any of theirs, is by some supposed to mean, their boasters, or tumultuous ones.

V. 12, 13. In general men think they have reason to rejoice, if they are able to buy estates; and to lament, if obliged to sell their houses and lands: but this would be by no means the case of the Jews at that time; for the buyer would soon be driven from his purchased possession; and the seller would only part with what must in a very short time have been torn from him. For the wrath of God against the whole multitude would soon desolate the land: and even they that should survive these calamities, would not be able to return to their possessions at the year of Jubilee, being detained captive at Babylon. None of them would return, till the seventy years of the captivity were accomplished; and then many of them would not be able to claim and obtain possession of their inheritances: and in vain did any of them expect deliverance by their power or courage, whilst they hardened themselves in sin.

V. 14. In defiance of these warnings and predictions, the leaders of the Jews caused the trumpet of war to be sounded, to make all ready to withstand the invaders; but they found the people deprived of all courage and resolution; because God in his wrath had intimidated them.

V. 15. (Marg. Rf.)

V. 16—19. A small remnant would escape death by the sword, famine, and pestilence; but they would be driven out of the land, and scattered abroad as lost sheep upon the mountains: and there they would mourn for their calamities, and the calamities occasioned by them; as does of the valleys, (or tame doves,) which are driven to the mountains by the birds of prey, and there they mourn their separation from their mates, in the most disconsolate manner. Dejection of spirits would enfeebles the hands of this remnant, and render their knees weak as water, or encroach all their attempts to resist or escape their enemies; and they would express their grief and horror of mind, and their confusion and shame, by every customary token.

Then would they find the invidiousness of their silver and gold to purchase them bread, to preserve their lives, to give comfort to their desponding hearts, or to deliver them from the wrath of God and the executioners of his vengeance: and therefore, though they had before covetously idealized their riches, and the love of them had been the stumbling-block over which they had fallen into manifold impetuses and iniquities, which had exposed them to these calamities; yet they would then cast them into the streets, and leave them without concern to be rifled and removed by the victors, and even count them vile and polluted. For they had got them by injustice, hoarded them in avarice, and employed them in luxury, or in supporting idolatry, in making idols and adorning their temples. (Marg. Rf.)—Some few of them shall have the favour of escaping the common calamity, called elsewhere the escaped or the remnant; from whence the derived phrase, berecim, from whose first in the New Testament; such as are, or should be saved. (Lomt.) (Marg. Rf.)
V. 20—22. The temple had been the chief beauty and ornament of Jerusalem. Solomon had built and decorated it with vast magnificence; many of his successors had expended large sums in repairing and beautifying it; God had greatly honoured it, as the place in which he displayed his glory; and the people were vain of it and confided in it. But, as they had defiled the courts of it, and even the sanctuary itself, by their detestable idolatries, the Lord determined to remove them far from it into captivity; or to make it an unclean thing, being defiled by the presence of the Chaldeans, and by the slaughter there committed. These most wicked and impious strangers would be allowed to rifle its sacred treasures: nay, the Lord would turn away his face, as one who utterly disregarded what was doing, whilst they entered the holy of holies, his secret place, plundered it of the mercy-seat and the ark of the covenant, and utterly profaned and destroyed it. This is the general, and probably the true, interpretation, (Marg. Ref.) but the Septuagint connects the passage with the nineteenth verse, and renders the twentieth as follows. “They were proud of their chosen ornaments, and made them the images of their abominations; therefore I have given them up to be polluted.”

V. 23. This commandment to make a chain implied, that the Jews, as condemned criminals, would be delivered up into the hands of their enemies, and be led away captive and in chains, and cast into prison. “Bloody crimes” were either such as were punishable by the death of the criminals; or rather those of the oppressors and persecutors, that had filled Jerusalem with innocent blood. The original is, the judgement of bloods; unjust decisions of the magistrates, by which the innocent were put to death.

V. 24. Pomp of, &c. That is, the magnificence of their greatest and haughtiest princes.

V. 25. ▲ Destruction cometh; &c they shall seek peace, and there shall be none.

V. 26. Mischief shall come upon mischief, and rumour shall be upon rumour; ▲ then shall they see a vision of the prophet, ▲ but the law shall perish from the priest, and counsel from the ancients.

V. 27. The king shall mourn, and the prince shall be clothed with desolation, and the hands of the people shall be upon their heads: ▲ I will put unto them, after their way, and ▲ according to their deserts will I judge them; ▲ and they shall know that I am the Lord.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—15.

An end will soon come to all the prosperity and enjoyment of impetuous sinners, in every corner of the earth. Now is the day of the Lord’s patience and mercy: but the day is at hand, when he will send his anger upon ungodly men, and judge and recompense them according to their ways, without mercy or pity: then they that are filthy will continue filthy still, and their abominations shall be in the midst of them for ever. This destruction is indeed an evil, an only evil, a natural evil, of magnitude proportioned to the moral evil and desert of sin; and all other sufferings may be deemed trivial and scarcely worth notice, when compared with it. We should therefore loudly sound the alarm, and sternly and earnestly call on men to flee “from the wrath to come.” For this misery continually overtaketh one and another of the ungodly, and it watcheth for every one of them. The morning of our dying day, and of the day of judgment, will soon dawn: the time of the sinner’s trouble is at hand; and they, who have treated all the warnings of God’s word and providence as false alarms, will find them awfully realized; and no more consider them as the sounding of the mountains. What then will they think of their presumptuous delays and carnal security, when the day of life and of grace shall expire? when the anger of God shall be accomplished on them, when vain mirth, self-flattery, and false hope, shall terminate in weeping, wailing, and gnashing of teeth! Indeed, whilst men are indulging their pride and lusts, and these are budding, blossoming, and bringing forth fruit
EZEKIEL.

CHAP. VIII.

The prophet is, in vision, brought to Jerusalem and to the temple, 1-4. He sees the image of Jealousy by the gate of the altar; the elders of Israel worshipping base idols in a secret chamber of the temple; women weeping for Tammuz, and men with their backs to the temple worshipping the sun, 5-16. The Lord appeals to him, whether such abominations do deserve the severest punishment, 17, 18.

And it came to pass in the sixth year, in the sixth month, in the fifth day of the month, as I sat in mine house, and the elders of Judah sat before me, that the hand of the Lord was upon me, and he said, 2 Then I beheld, and lo, a likeness as the appearance of fire: from the appearance of his loins even downward, fire; and from his loins even upward, as the appearance of brightness, as the colour of amber. 3 And he put forth the form of an hand, and took me by a lock of mine head; and I the spirit lifted me up between the earth and the heaven, and brought me in the visions of God to Jerusalem unto death, the instruments of vengeance are also preparing: and thus sudden destruction cometh, from which there is no escape. Though we should continue to be favoured with national peace and temporal prosperity, yet how soon will the time arrive, when all our joys and sorrows about worldly gain and loss will be no more? The fashion of this world passeth away, and all our eagerness and anxiety about it are vain and useless. The wrath of God hath filled the earth with trouble and death: men must soon be torn from their possessions, to return no more to them: and how wretched must they be, who have no inheritance in that world, to which we are all hastening, and from which there is no return! nor can any man strengthen himself in iniquity, so as to outrage these tremendous evils.

V. 16-27.

All efforts to outrage or elude divine vengeance, in this world or in the next, must be unavailing; the wrath of God dismays the most intrepid; their hands hang down and their knees wax feeble, and inward horror accompanies their outward calamities and confusion. And if, in the siege and taking of cities, men cast away their gold and silver, as an encumbrance rather than a security, what judgment will sinners form of their value, in the final day of wrath and perdition of ungodly men? Even here they cannot comfort the wounded heart; nor can the burdened conscience, nor purchase health and ease; and in some cases they will not even procure food to satisfy the hunger of their famished possessors. Yet, after all that can be said, men will set their hearts on such lying vanities; and multiply crimes, and treasure up wrath, remorse, and horror, in order to increase such riches as will yield no comfort when they most want it, and which must be left for ever! Even in religion human folly and depravity are equally conspicuous: men value themselves on distinctions and forms, which, they disgrace by their crimes, and which must finally increase their condemnation! But whatever supposed decency, beauty, or majesty, there may be in our modes of worship, God will deem them polluted to all such as make them the cloak of their iniquities: and he hath often permitted the most impious, rapacious, and cruel, of the nations to plunder and waste those professing churches, which have dishonoured him by their crimes. In vain do they seek peace or deliverance from their enemies, if unrepented sins exclude them from the peace and protection of God. Mischief must at length come upon mischief, and rumour upon rumour; whilst neither prophet, priest, counsellor, nor prince can escape, or show others any way of deliverance. For they who will not mourn for sin with godly sorrow, must bear its effects with bitter lamentations, being covered with confusion and clothed with consolation. To this awful ruin the whole multitude of the human species is exposed; yet a remnant according to the election of grace shall escape. These may be known by their mourning for sin, with broken hearts and penitent confessions, like doves of the valleys; and by becoming harmless, pure, gentle, modest, and loving, according to that instructive emblem. Such penitents shall obtain pardon and peace by faith in Jesus Christ, and those riches, which will give comfort in the hour of death, and profit them in the day of wrath. May the Lord incline and enable us to choose and seek this good part, that shall never be taken from us!

NOTES.

CHAP. VIII. V. 1. Only fourteen months, or four hundred and twenty days, seem to have passed from Ezekiel’s first vision to the date of this chapter, (l. 2,) which would not allow time for his lying three hundred and ninety days on his left side, and forty on his right side, according to the interpretation given of that transaction, (Notes, iv.) But this might be their leap-year, to which a full month of thirty days was added, as it is well known: or this transaction might take place after the expiration of three hundred and ninety days, and before the forty days were entered on. At the time here mentioned, the prophet was sitting in his house, and was attended by some of the elders of Judah that were in captivity: perhaps it was the sabbath day, and they came to attend his instructions, as they had neither temple nor synagogue to resort to; or they came to consult him about some of their affairs. Whilst they were present, he was seized by a powerful divine impulse, and cast into an ecstasy or trance, and had the following vision presented to his mind.
rusalem, to the door of the inner gate that looketh toward the north; where was the seat of the image of jealousy, which provoked them to jealousy.

4 And, behold, the glory of the God of Israel was there, according to the vision that I saw in the plain.

5 Then said he unto me, Son of man, lift up thine eyes now the way toward the north. So I lifted up mine eyes the way toward the north, and behold, northward at the gate of the altar, this image of jealousy in the entry!

6 He said furthermore unto me, Son of man, seest thou what they do? even the great abominations that the house of Israel committed here, that I should go far off from my sanctuary? but turn thee yet again, and shalt see greater abominations.

7 And he brought me to the door of the court; and when I looked, behold, a hole in the wall.

V. 2—4. (Note, i. 26—28.) Doubtless this was the same appearance that Ezekiel had before seen: "a likeness, a ness, that is, of a man upon a throne, as the appearance of fire downwards," denoting the terrible and righteous indignation of God against the rebellious Jews; and of brightness and of the colour of amber upward, perhaps implying the essential glory and excellency of the eternal Son of God, as they appear to the inhabitants of heaven. This glorious person seemed, in vision, to put forth the form of a hand, and to take hold of a lock of the prophet's hair; and at the same time the Spirit lifted him up in the vision of God, and conveyed him to Jerusalem, to the entrance of the inner court of the temple from the north, by that gate which was called the altar-gate. There was a seat or niche, prepared for some base idol, perhaps Baal, or Molech, which was called the image of jealousy; because the open worship of this idol provoked the Lord to jealousy; even as the open adultery of a woman, in the house of her husband, would excite his jealousy. At the same time the glory of the Lord, according to what the prophet had formerly seen in the plain, appeared to him; which intimated that Jehovah had not yet withdrawn his presence from his temple, though he had been treated with such contempt by the open preference given by the Jews to a base idol. The whole was presented in vision before the prophet's mind, whilst he continued in his own house: but doubtless it was an exact discovery of the idolatries committed at the temple; and it was intended to show the justice of the predicted vengeance, and to represent the reason and manner of the Lord's departure from his professed worshippers.

10. That I, &c. The detestable idolatries, committed even at the temple of God, would constrain him to leave it and the people to the merciless ravages of their enemies. He could not consistently with his honour dwell any longer in his polluted sanctuary, or among such vile idolaters. They acted as if they had determined to exclude him from his temple, and drive him from among them: for the injured husband must put his wife away, when her adulteries became notorious and abandoned; or else his own reputation will suffer. But as if this one image, openly worshipped in the court of the temple, had been a small matter; the prophet was ordered to turn his eyes another way, and he would discover still more and greater abominations.

V. 7—12. When the prophet had been conducted to some door of the court of the temple, he found a wall, which seems to have been built in order to conceal the idolatries, secretly practised by the elders in the chambers of the temple, which had been converted into a sort of chapel, for that purpose. But when he had examined this wall, he discovered a hole: and being ordered to dig, or to work at it to make it larger, he found a door that had been walled up, by which he was commanded to enter. There he saw all kinds of reptiles and unclean beasts, such as the Egyptians used to worship; and all the idols, that Israel or Judah had ever worshipped, painted all around upon the wall: and before them seventy men of the elders of Israel, (according to the number of the sanhedrim, or great council of the nation,) were collected together. One of them he knew to be Jaazaniah, (who perhaps was president of the council, or a very eminent man among them,) and there were they, as consecrated priests of this rabble of dunghill-gods, every man with his censer in his hand, hawL by burning incense and presenting their adorations. This indeed was shown to the prophet in a vision; but such was the actual conduct of the rulers and elders of Judah, in their dark recesses in the chambers of the 13 He said also unto me, Turn thee yet againur: and thou shalt see greater abominations that they do.

14 Then he brought me to the door of the gate of the Lord's house which was toward north; and, behold, there sat women weeping for Tammuz.

15 Then said he unto me, Hast thou seen this, O son of man? Turn thou yet again, and thou shalt see greater abominations than these.

16 And he brought me into the inner court of the Lord's house, and, behold, at the door of the temple of the Lord, between the porch and the altar, were about five and twenty men, with their temple, which they secretly appropriated to their images; and, as some think, in the private chambers of their own houses also. For they concluded, that the Lord did not see them, and that he had forsaken the earth, or the land; He did not deliver the people out of their difficulties; because they continued in sin, and had not sought him with sincere repentance, faith, and prayer, but merely in hypocrisy; and they concluded that he either could not, or would not help them; and that they were authorized to seek help from some other quarter, as Saul did, to his own destruction. Nay, they seem to have questioned the existence, or the omnipresence and omniscience of Jehovah: they concluded that no good would come from waiting on him, nor any harm from forsaking him: and they determined to seek help from those idols, whose licentious characters and worship they loved, in proportion as they hated the holy character, worship, and service of God.

V. 14. Weeping, &c. It is not agreed who or what Tammuz was, or on what account this idolatrous ceremony was observed in honour of him. But it is generally allowed, that he was some very profligate man, who was deified after his death; and that this annual lamentation for him was attended with the most infamous licentiousness: and concerning such an union of impurity and immorality, the less we know the better.

V. 15. Greater, &c. Some learned men observe, that this expression may be rendered "great abominations bereft of these." And indeed we can scarcely conceive greater abominations, than those before mentioned.

V. 16. These twenty-five men are supposed to have been priests, who turned their backs on the temple of God to worship the rising sun! The Holy of Holies was at the west end of the sanctuary, and that was westward of the altar: so that they could not worship the sun with their faces to the east, without turning their backs on the Lord and his holy place. We cannot doubt but that the practice of turning to the east in some parts of public worship, which is still retained in many Christian Churches, was originally borrowed from idolaters, who worshipped the sun: and though it is possible for us to be superstitiously afraid of superstition, respecting any indifferenc posture or ceremony, yet they, who are very tenacious of this custom, would do well to consider its original, in order to abate their excessive attachment to it.

V. 17. They hate, &c. The Jews were not only guilty of these idolatries, but also of oppression and injustice equally atrocious. Thus they used every means to provoke the Lord to anger. Whether the stone in question, "They put the branch to their noses," refers to some idolatrous practice, or to some methods then in use, by which men endeavoured to exasperate others, and to show their contempt and defiance of them, is not certain. The Sepertuqant renders it, "They are as those that mock me;" "They add more fuel to my wrath, which will burst out as a flame to consume them; just as if one should lay a heap of dry sticks upon a fire." (Lightfoot in Lomh.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—6.

The wrath of God, revealed from heaven against sinners, appears rigorous and extreme, in proportion as men are ignorant of his perfections, of the evil of sin, and of the abominations that are everywhere committed. If it should please God to give any man a very clear view of his glorious majesty and authority, and of the evil that is in every one of rebellion against him; and should at once present before him, in vision, all the abominations that are continually committing in any one city; there can be no little doubt but he would be prepared to justify God in the severest vengeance which he could inflict upon it. But though we are not thus acquainted with all the wickedness which is present to his all-seeing eye, yet, if we carefully search the Scriptures, and compare them with all that we can recollect and are conscious of, in our own thoughts, words, and works; if we carefully watch our own hearts and experience; and if we diligently observe the conduct of the world around us, we shall enter into far more affecting views of human depravity, and of the justice of God; and in his temporal and eternal judgments, than we used to do; we shall learn to drop our objections, silently to submit to his righteousness, and patiently to wait for that day, when he will bring to light the hidden things of darkness, and show the reasons of all his dispensations: and this will make us thankful, that there is forgiveness with him, and plenteous redemption for hell-deserving sinners. The carelessness with which men provoke God, and prefer every worthless idol and base lust to his fav’r and service, sufficiently mark the apostacy, rebellion, ingratitude, and enmity of the human heart; but generally the nearer we come to the sanctuary, the viler iniquities we discover, by diligent investigation. It would peculiarly astonish and shock a pious mind, to be shown all the abominations which have been committed by the professes of religion, in every part of the world. The superstition and idolatry, the blasphemous pride and ambition, the fraud and imposture, the avarice, perfidy, persecution, cruelty, and licentiousness, by which the Lord hath been provoked to jealousy, as it were, in the inner court of the temple, have in too many instances been notorious to all the world. And thus many churches have provoked the Lord to forsake them, as he repeatedly did his temple at Jerusalem.

V. 7—18.

The abominations, which all men see and cry shame of, are not always the worst, and seldom the whole, that provokes the Lord to jealousy; sometimes still more horrid things are done in secret by those who "love darkness rather than light, because their deeds are evil." Such persons either forget or atheistically deny that the Lord see them; and act as if he had forsaken the earth. But he will detect their hypocrisy; and after all their care to conceal their crimes, they commonly leave some opening which leads to a discovery. No superiority in rank, dignity, learning, or worldly wisdom, no sacredness of character and office, will preserve men from the most galling lusts, or even from the most stupid idolatries, when they are left to their own deceitful hearts: nay, superior persons are commonly the ringleaders and examples of every abomination to their inferiors, who follow them at a humble distance. They, who grudge all expenses, and are soon wearied out in the spiritual service of God, and who deem themselves degraded by it, often grudge no expense, labour, or debasement, in following their own idolatries and superstitions. For true religion is contrary to their pride and lusts; but their own inventions consist with the indulgence of their several inclinations: and therefore we need not wonder, that they turn their backs on God's service, to keep human traditions, or "turn away their ears from the truth, and are turned unto fables." Thus idolatry and false religion, as well as impiety, connect with violence, oppression, and immorality. Therefore the Lord will deal with them in fury and without pity: and all his judgments on nations and churches are onlyearnest of his final wrath on the workers of iniquity; when they will indeed cry unto him with a loud voice, but he will not hear them; and when they will plainly appear to have merited their dreadful condemnation. For if some, who make a fair show in the house of God, could be followed to their secret chambers, they would be found committing the most abominable crimes: many, whose exterior is decent, have the chambers of their imagination continually occupied by licentious thoughts, in which they delight, and thus gratify their hateful passions with ideal indulgences: many who have for a time been restrained by natural modesty and regard to character, have afterwards shown their secret inclinations; when occasion being given them, they have run into the greatest excesses. In short, the more we know of ourselves and of human nature, the more and greater abominations shall we discover: and the longer the enlightened believer, (who is enabled to walk most uprightly before God, and most blamelessly before men,) examines himself and searches his heart, the more will he loathe and humble himself before God; and the more will he value and daily wash in the Fountain opened for sin and for uncleanness. Thus shall he be made whiter than snow: but how will they escape, who live and die neglecting this great salvation?

NOTES.

CHAP. IX. V. 1, 2. The same person, who before appeared in vision and spake to the prophet, here cried with a loud voice to those that had the charge of the city, to draw near. Accordingly six men came into the city from the north, with each a destroying weapon in his hand. Some understand, by these six persons, the angels, who before had been employed to protect Jerusalem, and were now commissioned to be her destroyers. But as there was no miraculous interposition in these divine judgments, it seems more obvious to consider them as representing the Chaldean army, or its six chief captains, who had a charge or commission against Jerusalem. With them there appeared one clothed with linen, the attire of a priest and 3 And the glory of the God of Israel was gone up from the cherub, whereupon he was, to the threshold of the house. And he called to the man clothed in linen, which had the writer's inky hand by his side:

4 And the Lord said unto him, Go through the midst of Jerusalem, and set a mark upon the foreheads of the men that sigh, and that cry for all the abominations that be done in the midst thereof.

5 And to the others he said in mine hearing, 'Go ye after him through the city, and smite: let not your eye spare; neither have ye pity:

6 Slay utterly old and young, both maidens, and little children, and women with child.

7 But come not near any man upon whom is the mark; * and begin at my sanctuary. Then they began * at the ancient men which were before the house.

8 And he said unto them, 'Defile the house, and fill the courts with the slain; go ye forth. And they went forth, and slew in the city.

not of a soldier, with an inky hand by his side. Many interpreters explain this to mean Christ, our High Priest and King, who presides over all the desolations on earth, in order to preserve his chosen people; and who seals them by his Spirit, and writes their names in his book of life. But if this were the Word, and Son of God, what shall we make of the likeness of a man upon the throne, from whence these orders were issued? It seems therefore more agreeable to the context to suppose that Christ the King of Israel, from that throne, gave these orders; and that the man with the inky hand represented an angel, or the angels, that were employed to protect the pious remnant of the Jews from the Chaldeans: and his priestly garment might denote, that their preservation was owing to the priesthood and sacrifice of him that was come. (Rev. xv. 5, 6.)

7 These persons went into the court of the temple, and stood beside the brazen altar. 'To denote that the men ordained to destruction, were offered up as many sacrifices, to make atonement to God's justice.' (xxxix. 17.)

V. 3, 4. The glory of the God of Israel, here mentioned, might either be the visible glory, which appeared in the holy of holies, above the ark, between the cherubim, and which the prophet saw removed from that situation to the presence of the door of the sanctuary: or that glory which he had seen in the visions of God, and which represented that token of the Lord's gracious presence with Israel. 'The word Cherub stands for Cherubim, as x. 2 — 4.' (Lomth.) This denoted, that the Lord was about to leave his place, his mercy-seat; to denounce judgment on the people as from his tribunal, to withdraw from his temple and Jerusalem, and to leave them to the profanation and ravages of their enemies. From this glory the Lord addressed the man who had the inky hand, and ordered him to go through the city, and set a mark upon the forehead of every one, who sighed continually, and earnestly protested against the abominable idolatries and iniquities that were there perpetrated. The forehead seems to have been mentioned, as the most conspicuous place in which a mark could be placed: and it might be supposed, that they who deeply lamented the abominations committed in Jerusalem, to the dishonour of God and ruin of religion, either had not committed such crimes, or had repented of them; they were decidedly on the Lord's part; they would have prevented, by their examples, prayers, and endeavours, the prevalence of wickedness, if they could, and were distressed that they could not. All pious persons at that crisis, no doubt, grieved to see the holy city and temple so horribly polluted. This would therefore take in all who feared God, whatever station they were placed in, or however feeble their gracious dispositions were; and it would exclude all others. 'When the number of such mourners is not sufficient to divest God's judgments from a nation, they shall at least deliver their own souls.' (Lomth.)

He called to the man. 'The second person in the sacred Trinity gave his commands to the angel before mentioned.'

Mark. This alludes to the custom of the eastern nations, to mark their servants in the forehead. (Lomth.) A general opinion long prevailed, which the original was thought to favour, that the letter Thau was the mark here intended; and great disputes have taken place, whether in the Samaritan characters, which are supposed to have been at that time used by the Jews, that letter was, or was not, made in the form of a cross. These disputes, however, only show, how early this use of the form of the cross prevailed in the Christian Church, which made way for the superstition and idolatry of the Papists in this particular. It may be supposed, that the vision in the Revelation made to the apostle John had some reference to this of Ezekiel; yet no mention is there made of the form of a cross, which would hardly have been omitted, if it had been used on that occasion. (Rev. vii. 2, 3.) Indeed, it is obvious, that in general the less humble believing regard has been paid to the doctrine of the cross, the greater respect has been rendered to the external form. This began to be introduced, when the simplicity of the Gospel had become greatly corrupted; it was at its height a short time before the reformation; and began to decline, when the doctrines of the Gospel became more generally understood and believed.

V. 5—7. The Lord next commissioned the executioners of his vengeance to follow the man with the inky hand, and to slay, without mercy or distinction, even to utter destruction, all they met with: only they might not come near, (either to hurt or affright,) any of those who were marked in the forehead. This foretold the merciless carnage, which the Chaldeans would make of the ungodly Jews; and the gracious protection afforded to the few pious servants of God among them. Thus Jeremiah, Baruch,
CHAPTER IX.

8 And it came to pass, while they were slaying them, and I was left, * that I fell upon my face, and cried, and said, Ah Lord God! wilt thou destroy all the residue of Israel, in thy pouring out of thy fury upon Jerusalem?

9 Then said he unto me, 'The iniquity of the house of Israel and Judah is exceeding great, and the land is * full of blood, and the city full of perverseness:

Then he measured me. (1 Pet. iv. 17, 18.)

V. 8—11. The prophet, in vision, beholding the havoc made of his people, whilst he was mercifully spared and left alone, as it seems, of all that were in the court of the temple, was greatly affected; and in humble adoration inquired of the Lord, whether he meant to cut off all the residue of Israel, in thus pouring out his wrath upon Jerusalem? The ten tribes were entirely destroyed or dispersed; only a remnant of Judah remained; and they seemed about to be utterly cut off. By this he intended to place in mitigation of the sentence, as the honour of God in his promises seemed to be concerned: but the Lord informed him, that the excessive wickedness of both Judah and Israel rendered this severity needful: the land had been filled with murder, as well as with idolatry; Jerusalem was full of obstinate and perverse wickedness, the fruit of the most desperate impiety and iniquity; and therefore the Lord was determined to show no mercy to the nation in general; though he had reserved a small remnant for himself, as the seed of his future Church. In the mean time the man with the iniquity reported the performance of the divine command: by which it appears, that he presided over and directed those, who executed the vengeance of God on the Jews.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The Lord hath always ready his instruments of judgment as well as of mercy: and when his glory departs from his people, and his power and presence no longer attend his ordinances, the form will seldom continue long; and the signal for his vengeance will commonly be given. But he departs reluctantly and gradually from those who have been long favoured with his presence; and his faithful servants readily perceive the tokens of that awful change. These are the most valuable friends and guardians of nations: and even when they are so few, that the Lord will not spare communities in answer to their prayers, he will rend the most terrible judgments harmless as to them. He has set his mark upon their forehead, and all things shall work together for their good. In times of prevailing wickedness they may be distinguished by their lamenting over those crimes, which others palliate and excuse. Their zeal for the honour and love to the cause of God; their compassion for souls; their hatred of sin and their spiritual-mindedness; will not suffer them to be unconcerned spectators of iniquity and iniquity. Their righteous souls must needs be vexed day by day, with seeing and hearing the works and words of ungodly men. Their prayers, examples, and endeavours, are opposed to the imputable torrent: and when they fail to stop its progress, they are grieved and alarmed. They mourn before God to see religion run down, souls deceived, and Satan and his servants triumphing: and though spiritual consolations reconcile them to their situation for the time, yet they often desire to leave a world, where iniquity so much abounds; and they especially lament the abominations committed within the Church, because these are peculiarly dishonourable to God and destructive to the souls of men. Such persons are the friends of God, and shall be preserved for ever: if it be good for them, their lives shall be spared amidst desolating judgments; or they shall be previously taken from the evil to come; or the calamities, which cut off others in their sins, shall safely transmit their souls to heaven. But they who neither mourn for their own sins nor the sins of others, must expect no mercy: nor can any be looked on as the servants of God, who are indifferent to his cause, and unconcerned at the abominations that are committed against him. In temporal calamities, even infants are often involved in the common destruction; in the eternal punishment of the wicked, no discrimination will be regarded, except with reference to degrees of guilt: and in this respect, they, who have been nearest to God in profession, privilege, or office, will be most severely punished. If we be saved whilst others perish, we must ascribe the difference wholly to the mercy of our God; for we too have deserved wrath: and we should still continue to plead in behalf of our fellow sinners, for the remnant of the Church, and for the continuance and revival of religion upon earth. But indeed the wickedness of man is.
CHAP. X.

The man clothed in linen takes coals of fire from between the wheels, and scatters them over the city. And he went in in my sight. Then I looked, and beheld, in the firmament that was above the head of the cherubims, there appeared over them as it were a sapphire-stone, as the appearance of the likeness of a throne.

2 And he spake unto the man clothed with linen, and said, Go in between the wheels, even under the cherub, and fill thine hand with coals of fire from between the cherubims, and scatter them over the city. And the latter ought to be and would be. Nor should it be overlooked, that the cherubim had "every one four faces and four names," (21.) whilst St. John's living creatures had the same faces divided among them. The wheels in Ezekiel are vastly different from the twenty-four elders in St. John, and admit of, may require, a different explanation. As therefore the whole of these visions and the context direct our thoughts to the dealings of God with the Jewish nation, especially in the destruction of the city and temple by the Chaldeans, and afterwards by the Romans; as the cherubim in the Scripture, generally at least, denote angels; and as wheels are a far apter emblem of the course of providence, than of any thing in the constitution of the Christian Church; insomuch that the heathen pointed fortune, (which we consider as the secret appointment of God,) with a wheel, as an emblem of the same vicissitudes of human affairs: the interpretation already given seems far more consistent with the scope of the passage, and more satisfactory than that referred to. The prophecy above the cherubim, as he had done before, (1:26.) the likeness of a throne, and double as the appearance of a man upon it, who spake to him that was clothed in linen, who had been employed in marking the servants of God in the forehead, and he ordered him to go in between the wheels, under the cherub, (for one was connected with each of the wheels,) and thence to take burning coals, and scatter them over the city. Thus the burning of Jerusalem, as well as the slaughter of its inhabitants, was emblematically predicted. We suppose him that sat upon the throne to have been the eternal Son of God, the second person in the sacred Trinity; and the vision to represent his glory as the King of Israel, appearing from above the mercy-seat: the fire therefore from between the wheels, under the cherubim, seems to have signified the wrath of God, to be executed by the Chaldeans upon Jerusalem, for their contempt of the Lord's mercy, their abuse of his favours, their profanation of his ordinances and temple, the wickedness of the priests, and their murder of the prophets.

NOTES.

CHAP. X. V. 1. 2. The living creatures, which were before described, (i.) are here called cherubim. The cherubim that covered the mercy-seat, and that were placed in the holy of holies, or were figured upon different parts of the tabernacle and temple, were evidently emblematic of the holy angels, as fellow worshippers of the God of Israel: and the same seems to be the meaning of the word in every other passage of Scripture. (Marg. Ref.) From the great similarity between the living creatures in the visions of Ezekiel, and of those in that of St. John, (Rev. iv.) commentators have generally concluded that they must be coincident. Hence many have explained the living creatures in St. John's vision of the holy angels; but their joining in the song, "Thou hast redeemed us to God with thy blood," forms an insuperable objection to this, as well as to the unaccountable opinion of some, who would explain them to mean the three persons in the Trinity, and the human nature of Christ. Hence others, perceiving that the ministers and churches of Christ must be meant in St. John's vision, have interpreted Ezekiel's cherubim and wheels of the same: yet the latter is not a prophecy of what would come to pass under the Christian dispensation, but a representation of what was about to take place at Jerusalem. No good reason can be given, why the two visions should mean precisely the same thing: angels, as employed in God's providential government of the world, and faithful ministers, as employed in the affairs of the Church, may well be supposed, in different degrees, endowed with the same gifts and actuated by similar principles; and so capable of being represented by the same emblems or hieroglyphics: for doubtless the former are, what wheels, from between the cherubims; then he went in, and stood beside the wheels.

7 And one cherub stretched forth his hand from between the cherubims unto the fire that was between the cherubims, and took thereof; and put it into the bands of him that was clothed with linen; who took it, and went out.

8 And there appeared in the cherubims the form of a man's hand under their wings.

9 And when I looked, behold, the four wheels by the cherubims, one wheel by one cherub, and another wheel by another cherub; and the appearance of the wheels was as the colour of a beryl-stone.

10 And as for their appearance, the four had one likeness, as if a wheel had been in the midst of a wheel.

11 When they went, they went upon their four sides; they turned not as they went, but to the place whither the head looked, they followed it; they turned not as they went.

V. 3-7. The cherubim stood on the right side of the temple, which is generally supposed to mean the north side; this might point out the quarter from whence destruction would come; or it intimated, that they stood at a distance from the idolaters before-mentioned. (viii.) The inner court also was filled with the cloud: the Lord had taken possession of his temple by this appearance, (Kings viii. 10, 11.) and he thus intimated that he was now about to withdraw from it. At the same time the visible glory removed to the threshold of the house; (Note, ix. 3, 4.) and then the court was filled with brightness, perhaps illuminating the cloud. Some think that it was the outer court that was filled with brightness, whilst the inner was filled with the dark cloud; denoting that the Lord would leave the Jews in darkness, and send his light unto the Gentiles. At the same time the sound of the cherubim's wings was heard without, as the voice of the almighty God "when he speaketh?" i.e. like the sound of most tremendous thunder, or like the voice heard from mount Sinai when the law was given; which might intimate their triumphant admiration of the glorious justice and holiness of God in these awful dispensations, or the report that would be made of them to distant nations. Accordingly, when the man clothed in linen proceeded to execute his commission, one of the cherubim handed to him the fire, and he took it and went out, prepared to scatter it over the city; and this may denote, that the holy angels concur with each other in executing the divine mandates, whether of mercy or of judgment.

V. 11. Head, &c. The Spirit, that directed their motions, or "the appearance of a Man upon the throne," who presided over them, (Notes, i. 5—14.)

12 And their whole body, and their backs, and their hands, and their wings, and the wheels, were full of eyes round about, even the wheels that they four had.

13 As for the wheels, it was cried unto them in my hearing, O wheel!

14 And every one had four faces; and the first face was the face of a cherub, and the second face was the face of a man, and the third the face of a lion, and the fourth the face of an eagle.

15 And the cherubims were lifted up. This is the living creature that I saw by the river of Chebar.

16 And when the cherubims went, the wheels went by them; and when the cherubims lifted up their wings to mount up from the earth, the same wheels also turned not from beside them.

17 When they stood, these stood; and when they were lifted up, these lifted up themselves also: for the spirit of the living creature was in them.

18 Then was the glory of the Lord departed.
parted from off the threshold of the house, and stood over the cherubims.

19 And the cherubims lifted up their wings, and mounted up from the earth in my sight: when they went out, the wheels (so were beside them; and every one stood at the door of the east gate of the Lord's house: and the glory of the God of Israel was over them above.

20 This is the living creature that I saw under the God of Israel by the river of Chebar: and I knew that they were the cherubims.

21 Every one had four faces apiece, and every one four wings; and the likeness of the hands of a man was under their wings.

22 And the likeness of their faces was the same faces which I saw by the river of Chebar, their appearances, and themselves: they went every one straight forward.

CHAP. XI.

The prophet is shown the persons who gave wicked counsel, and despaired of the word of God, 1—3. He prophesies against them, 4—12. He is alarmed at the sudden death of Pelatiah, 13. Encouraging promises to the captive Jews and Israelites, and denunciations of wrath on the impenitent, 14—21. The glory of God removes from the city, 22, 23. The prophet in vision brought back into Chaldea; reports what he had seen to the captive Jews, 24, 25.

MOOREVER, the Spirit lifted me up, and brought me unto the east gate of the Lord's house, which looketh eastward: and, behold, at the door of the gate five and twenty men; among whom I saw Zananiah the son of Azur, and Pelatiah the son of Be-niaiah, princes of the people.

2 Then said he unto me, Son of man, these are the men that devise mischief, and give wicked counsel in this city: 3 Which say, It is not near; let us build houses: this city is the chal- dron, and we the flesh.

which obscure the evidence of their reconciliation to God, and mar the comfort of their communion with him. Otherwise, what should Christians have to fear? All judgment is administered by him who loved them and gave himself for them, to redeem them to God with his blood; he is Head over all things to his Church, and all the angels are his ministering servants for their benefit. Let us then give diligence to make our calling and election sure; and in our several stations, as ministers or private Christians, let us copy the example of the holy angels, and walk circumspectly and intelligently; obey with promptitude and alacrity; and give up ourselves to be led by the Spirit of God, and disposed of in his providence, as he sees good. He will assuredly order every thing in perfect wisdom, truth, and love: we need fear nothing but hypocrisy, coming short of his grace, grieving the Holy Spirit, or dishonouring the Gospel. As the departure of God from Churches or nations must prove their ruin; so his departure, for a time and in part, from a believer who has offended him, must occasion great distress and anguish, and sometimes cause him to say, "The pains of hell have got hold of me." What then will be the case of those to whom the righteous Judge shall at last say, "Depart from me, ye cursed, into everlasting fire, prepared for the devil and his angels?" Let this consideration warn sinners "to seek the Lord, while he may be found, and to call upon him while he is near;" and also excite us all to walk watchfully and humbly with our God.

NOTES.

CHAP. XI. V. 1—3. The prophet was next shown some of the ring-leaders in wickedness. He saw twenty-Therefore 4 prophesy against them, prophesy, O son of man.
5 And 5 the Spirit of the Lord fell upon me, and said unto me, 5 'speak; Thus saith the Lord, 5 Thus have ye said, O house of Israel: 5 'for I know the things that come into your mind, every one of them.
6 Ye have 6 multiplied your slain in this city, and ye have filled the streets thereof with the slain.
7 Therefore thus saith the Lord God,
Your slain, whom ye have laid in the midst of it, they are the flesh, and this 7 city is the caldron, 5 but I will bring you forth out of the midst of it.
8 Ye 8 have feared the sword; and I will bring a sword upon you, saith the Lord God.
9 And I will bring you out of the midst of it, and deliver you into the hand of strangers, 5 and will execute judgments among you.

10 Ye shall 10 fall by the sword: I will judge you in the border of Israel; 5 and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

11 This 11 city shall not be your caldron, neither shall ye be the flesh in the midst thereof; 5 but I will judge you in the border of Israel:

12 And ye shall know that I am the Lord: 5 for ye have not walked in my statutes, neither executed my judgments, 5 but have done after the manner of the heathen that are round about you.

13 And it came to pass, 5 when I prophesied, that Pelatiah the son of Benaiah died. 5 Then fell I down upon my face, and cried with a loud voice, and said, 5 Ah Lord God! wilt thou make a full end of the remnant of Israel?

V. 5—12. Under the immediate impulse of the Holy Spirit, the prophet in vision seemed to himself to deliver the following message to these chosen of God: and this being afterwards written, and published, would come to their knowledge. He first reminded them of the wicked words which they had spoken; and assured them that the Lord was exactly acquainted with all their secret thoughts, counsels, and designs, their vain hopes, and rebellious devices. He next charged them, not only with shedding the blood of prophets and righteous men by their oppressions and persecutions; but also with murdering all the Jews, who had been or would be slain in the war, in which they so obstinately persisted: so that they multiplied their slain in the streets of the city. The city was indeed a caldron; and they who perished by their fault, by the sword and famine during the siege, were the flesh that should continue and be consumed in it; but that they themselves would be brought forth out of it: (Notes, xxiv. 1—13.) And as they had feared being put to death, if they surrendered to the Chaldeans, and had therefore determined to stand out to the last extremity, so they should be slain by the sword: the Lord would deliver them into the hand of the Chaldeans, and by their hands execute his judgments upon them; for Nebuchadnezzar would put them to death as criminals, at Riblah in the border of the land. (Marg. Ref.) Then it would appear that the city was not their caldron, and that they were not able to continue in it: seeing they had not obeyed the Lord, but had copied the idolatries and iniquities of all the surrounding nations.

V. 13. Whilst the prophet, in vision, was delivering this message to these princes, Pelatiah suddenly died. It is probable that he was actually cut off by some terrible death at Jerusalem at this time, or afterwards, when the prophecy was fulfilling; and in so remarkable a manner,
14 ¶ Again the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,
15 Son of man, say thou the word against the cities of Judah, and say unto the strongholds thereof, What mischief is this that ye have devised against me?
16 Ye shall fall by the sword: for this is a day of mischief; it is the day of those that were to fall.
17 And while they watched against me, lo, mine hand took upon me in the visions by the hand of the Lord.
18 And I said, What doth this? And the Lord said unto me, These are the cities of Judah, and the strongholds thereof: and they shall be given into the hand of the Chaldeans.
19 And I said, What are they? And the Lord said unto me, This is the iniquity of your cities that have committed unfaithfulness.
20 Therefore thus saith the Lord, The city that went out to seek the Lord shall not be delivered; but the city that trusted in her god shall be delivered; for her God will deliver her in that day, saith the Lord.

The Lord was graciously pleased to relieve the anxiety of his servant respecting his people Israel, by directing his attention to the Jews, who were already in captivity. They were his brethren in distress, as well as by blood; and thus more nearly connected with him, than those in the land of Judah: especially as he was raised up to prophecy among them. Nay, the dispersed Israelites were more the objects of the Lord’s special favour than the inhabitants of Jerusalem. Indeed, the latter treated the captives with disdain; they imagined that God had rejected them, and sent them into captivity as the greater sinners; or that their surrender to the Chaldeans was a forfeiture of their privileges, and even of their estates: they meant therefore to excommunicate and disinherit them, and to appropriate the city and land to themselves. But the Lord had other intentions; he had sent some of the people into captivity in order to their reformation; and though they were scattered among the Gentiles far from the temple, yet He would be as a little Sanctuary unto them in every place: that is, he would be their Protector and Support; he would answer their prayers, and give them the comfort of his presence: and when two or three of them met together, in a synagogue or a private house, their worship should be acceptable, as if they had sacrificed at the temple: so that whilst the Jews at Jerusalem possessed many external religious advantages, without the power and presence of the Lord, because of their pride and hypocrisy, those in captivity among the Gentiles should have his presence and power among them, being enabled, to exercise humble faith, and to worship God in spirit and truth. This would be as a little Sanctuary in every place, a refuge to a few people, which would not excite either the jealousy or rapacity of their enemies, as the magnificent temple at Jerusalem had done. Such a promise evidently implied the future introduction of a new and more spiritual dispensation, when men should worship God with acceptance in every place. But as this little Sanctuary must, as it were, be entered by faith in Jesus Christ, the Door and the Way; so the Jews in their present dispensations have not the benefit of it, because of their unbelief; which renders their present dispersion far more dreadful than the Babylonish captivity.

V. 17–20. The Lord further promised to the captives, that they, or their posterity, should be restored to their own land, and become decidedly set against idolatry and other abominable wickedness. Few, however, of them seem at this time to have been true believers; but God engaged to prepare them for the blessings which he intended for them, by giving them one heart, and by putting a new spirit within them. The one heart, may either mean, that oneness of judgment, disposition, and affection, which the grace of God produces in his people; or that singleness of heart which distinguishes them from others. (Mr. R. Ref.) The hearts of the Jews had been divided among different idols, and they had endeavoured to worship both Jehovah and their idols, to serve him and their idols; but this change would cause them to serve him singly, sincerely, and devotedly, and to renounce all idols, river, or wordly lusts. A new spirit would also be given them, that is, a new temper and disposition; a new light in the understanding and direction to the judgment; a new purity in their memories, imaginations, and affections; new desires, hopes, fears, joys, and sorrows; a new tenderness in the conscience, and submission in the will; the effect of the regenerating Spirit of God; for it is that which is born of the Spirit is spirit; and is, as it were, spiritual, according to the law, truth, and image of God; disposed to repentance, faith, love, and conscientious obedience, and holy worship. At the same time the Lord would take away the stone heart out of their flesh, or from their corrupt nature; for that which is born of the flesh is flesh, carnal, and enmity to God. The stone heart denotes the natural insensibility, obduracy, and obstinacy, 21 But as for them whose hearts walketh after the heart of their detestable things, and their abominations, I will recompense their way upon their own heads, saith the Lord God.

22 ¶ Then did the cherubims lift up their wings, and the wheels beside them, and the glory of the God of Israel was over them above.

23 And the glory of the Lord went up from the midst of the city, and stood upon the mountain, which is on the east side of the city.

24 Afterwards the Spirit took me up, and brought me in a vision by the Spirit of God into Chaldea to the captivity. So the vision that I had seen went up from me.

25 Then I spake unto them of the captivity all the things that the Lord had shewed me.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—13.

When those that are eminent in rank or abilities are destitute of the fear of God, and ridicule his truths and warnings, they are qualified to be extensively mischievous. Being ingenious in devising evil, plausible in counselling and vindicating it, and bold in carrying it into execution, they encourage numbers to harden themselves in rebellion against God, and to adopt and persist in the most pernicious and impious designs. But they should be reminded, that they must render an account to him, for all the mischief done by their influence; for all the blood shed in unjust and unnecessary wars, which their worldly policy has occasioned; and for all the murder that takes place in consequence of their oppression, persecution, and unrighteous decrees. How awfully do some men of this description multiply their slain, not only through the streets of a single city, or the districts of a kingdom, but through every quarter of the globe! and they will at length be as much distinguished by their punishment, as they now are by their crimes. But carnal policy is connected with in-delity; and such persons turn the oracles of God into ridicule, and persuade themselves and others that no evil shall happen unto them. If they cannot entirely shake off all regard to revelation, they conclude, that the wrath of God denounced against transgressors is doubtful, or at least distant; and that they may safely indulge their inclinations, and pursue their rebellious schemes for some time longer; that they have many years of life before them, and shall be able to take care of their souls at last. The love of the world, and dislike to religion, give Satan and his factors an amazing advantage against men, in tempting them to this procrastination: and thus they seduce, and ruin one another, until at last, when they are crying, Peace, peace, sudden destruction overtakes them, from which they cannot possibly escape. We should therefore plainly protest against these devisers of mischief, and wicked counsellors: we should show them the folly and impurity of their wicked words, and remind them that God knoweth all their thoughts and contrivances. We should also meditate on the same truths, with reference to ourselves: that we may watch our hearts and lips, and beg of God to examine and keep them for us. The worst fears of ungodly men will come upon them, and often by those sinful means which they use to secure themselves: and when sinners fear the word of man more than the wrath of God, he will sometimes expose them to both, and execute his judgments upon them in this world as well as in the next. Thus he often singles out the ringleaders in impiety, infidelity, and wickedness, and renders them warnings to others, that they may repent and avoid such destructive paths. But though these awful dispensations verify the words of God's faithful servants; yet they cannot but be deeply affected by them: and will still plead with him to have mercy on those who remain.
CHAP. XII.

Ezekiel is ordered, by removing his goods, and breaking through the wall of his house, to give the people a sign of the taking of Jerusalem, of Zedekiah's flight, and of the captivity of the Jews, 1-16; by eating and drinking with trembling and anxiety, to prepare the famine, and consternation of the Jews during the siege, 17-20; and to declare that this ruin was near at hand, as a rebuke to those who profanely spoke of it as distant, 21-28.

V. 14-25.

The Lord often reserves for himself those persons of whom we had little hopes: and leaves to their own pride and lusts, such as we had the best expectations of: while they whom he afflicteth and man despiseth, are commonly nearer the kingdom of heaven than their more prosperous and self-confident neighbours. Many are ready to imagine that they are exclusively the people of God, while others, opportunity afforded them.

T HE word of the Lord also came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, thou dwellest in the midst of a rebellious house, which have eyes to see, and see not; they have ears to hear, and hear not: for they are a rebellious house.

3 Therefore, thou son of man, prepare thee stuff for removing, and remove by day in their sight: and thou shalt remove from thy place to another place in their sight; it may be they will consider, though they be a rebellious house.
4 Then shall thou bring forth thy stuff by day in their sight, as stuff for captivity, and thou shalt go forth at even in their sight, as they that go forth into captivity.

5 ¶ Dig thou through the wall in their sight, and carry out thereby.

6 In their sight shalt thou bear it upon thy shoulders, and carry it forth in the twilight: thou shalt cover thy face, that thou see not the ground: for I have set thee for a sign unto the house of Israel.

7 And I said as I was commanded: I brought forth my stuff by day, as stuff for captivity, and in the even I digged through the wall with mine hand: I brought it forth in the twilight, and I bare it upon my shoulder in their sight.

8 ¶ And in the morning came the word of the Lord unto me, saying,

9 Son of man, hath not the house of Israel, the rebellious house, said unto thee, What doest thou?

10 Say thou unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; This burden concerneth the prince in Jerusalem, and all the house of Israel that are among them.

11 Say, I am your sign: like as I have done, so shall it be done unto them: they shall remove and go into captivity.

12 And the prince that is among them shall bear upon his shoulder in the twilight, and shall go forth, they shall dig through the wall to carry out thereby: he shall cover his face, that he see not the ground with his eyes.

13 My net also will I spread upon him, and he shall be taken in my snare: and I will bring him to Babylon to the land of the Chaldeans; yet shall he not see it, though he shall die there.

14 And I will scatter toward every wind all that are about him to help him, and all his bands; and I will draw out the sword after them.

15 And they shall know that I am the Lord, when I shall scatter them among the nations, and disperse them in the countries.

16 But I will leave a few men of you; from the sword, from the famine, and from the pestilence; that they may declare all their abominations among the heathen whither they come; and they shall know that I am the Lord.

NOTES.

CHAP. XII. V. 1-7. Ezekiel seems not, for the present, to have had any more visions of the divine glory; but to have received the revelations of the Lord's will, in the more ordinary manner of other prophets. Even the captives among whom he dwelt, were a rebellious house like their brethren in Judah; who would not use their senses and faculties, or avail themselves of the instructions of God's word and providence, for their advantage. After all that they had heard and experienced, they still expected that Jerusalem would be preserved from the Chaldeans, they deemed themselves unhappy in bondage, and hoped to be speedily restored to their country: this led them to neglect the duties of their situation, to listen to false prophets, to reject the word of God, and thus to rebel both against his commandments and providence. To certify them thereby of the vanity of their hopes, the prophet was ordered to make ready his furniture for removing to another habitation, in the sight of the people, and then to carry it, or some part of it, to a distant place; in hopes, (speaking after the manner of men,) "that the people would consider, though they were a rebellious house." Thus he was directed to spend the day about his furniture; and in the evening to go forth as one that was afraid of being carried away captive: and to render his conduct more significant, he was to dig or break through the wall of his house, and to go forth by that opening, carrying part of his property or some provisions with him, as desirous to escape the enemy; and to cover his face, not only as in distress, but to disguise himself for fear of being detected. Having received such orders, he punctually obeyed them; and thus set before the eyes of the captive Jews the plundering of Jerusalem of all its treasures, and the removal of them and of the inhabitants to Babylon; the vain endeavours of the Jews to escape, and to carry off their property; and especially the conduct and fate of king Zedekiah.

V. 8-16. Either the people had ridiculed the prophet's conduct, or they had contemptuously disregarded it. He was therefore commanded to inform them, that this burden, or prophetic sign of impending judgments, respecting Zedekiah the prince in Jerusalem, under whose shadow they hoped to live among the nations; as well as all those of the families of Israel, who yet remained in their own land. As Ezekiel had removed his furniture, and changed his habitation; so would their property and persons be removed into another land; and the king himself would flee from the conquerors in the midst of the evening, with a burden on his shoulder and a covering on his face, in order to disguise himself; whilst his attendants would break through the wall to forward his escape. But the Lord would spread his net for him, and take him in his snare: for the Chaldeans would overtake him, and carry him to Babylon; yet he should not see that city, though he should die there. Jeremiah had predicted, that his eyes should see the eyes of the king of Babylon. (Jer. xxxiv. 3) and here Ezekiel foretold, that he should not
Moreover, the word of the Lord came to me, saying,
18 Son of man, eat thy bread with quaking, and drink thy water with trembling, and with carefulness;
19 And say unto the people of the land, Thus saith the Lord God of the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and of the land of Israel: They shall eat their bread with carefulness, and drink their water with astonishment, that their land may be desolate from all that is therein, because of the violence of all them that dwell therein.
20 And the cities that are inhabited shall be made waste, and the land shall be desolate; and ye shall know that I am the Lord.
21 And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,
22 Son of man, what is that proverb that ye have in the land of Israel, saying, 'The days are prolonged, and every vision faieth'?
23 Tell them therefore, Thus saith the Lord God: I will make this proverb to cease, and they shall no more use it as a proverb in Israel; but say unto them, The days are at hand, and the effect of every vision.
24 For there shall be no more any vain vision, nor flattering divination within the house of Israel.
25 For I am the Lord: I will speak, and the word that I shall speak shall come to pass; it shall be no more prolonged: for in your days, O rebellious house, will I say the word, and will perform it, saith the Lord God.
26 Again the word of the Lord came to me, saying, 27 Son of man, behold, they of the house of Israel say, The vision that he seeth is for many days to come, and he prophesieth of the times that are far off.
28 Therefore say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God: There shall none of my words be prolonged any more, but the word which I have spoken shall be done, saith the Lord God.
And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, prophesy against the prophets of Israel that prophesy, and say thou unto them that prophesy out of their own hearts, Hear ye the word of the Lord;

3 Thus saith the Lord God: Woe unto the foolish prophets, that follow their own spirit, and have seen nothing.

4 O Israel, why prophesiest thou lies? They are the abominations of Ephraim, when they say peace to the land, when there is no peace.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—16.

It is often a painful trial to the faithful servants of God, to dwell among those who are most rebellious against him. Men, as fallen apostate creatures, have eyes, ears, and understandings; but they are utterly destitute of a disposition to make a proper use of them, or of the advantages which they enjoy. This is the essence of their rebellion, and cannot possibly be allowed as an excuse for it; it contradicts all the endeavours of God's servants to instruct, convince, warn, or affect them; and it often discourages them from repeating the unsuccessful attempt. They should not, however, yield to despair. They should devise or adopt more and other methods of engaging the attention, convincing the judgment, or reaching the heart and conscience; if peradventure God will give sinners repentance, for the acknowledging of the truth, that they may recover themselves out of the snare of the devil; for none can know but they may hereafter consider, though they have hitherto been rebellious. To this end, the minister must not shrink from any hardship or personal inconvenience, which can evince his own deep conviction of the truth and importance of his message; nor should he fear any ridicule or reproach, that he may incur in the performance of his duty. He should especially at all times speak, and act, as a man who is deeply convinced, that here he hath no continuing city, and who is constantly preparing for a removal; who expects changes, disappointments, and difficulties, until that period arrives; and who is assured, that there can be no peace for the wicked, in any place or station in life. He also should seek to explain the grounds of his hope and the reasons of his conduct; that he may be able to speak pertinently, and convincingly to the consciences of those who make such inquiries. The word of God concerns princes as well as their subjects. Indeed in great national calamities, superior stations only expose men to more imminent perils and more acute sufferings; and in the eternal world, they will expose ungodly men to the deeper condemnation. The greatest princes will sometimes submit to extreme hardships and debasement to save their lives; they will endure fatigue, appear disguised like the meanest of their subjects, and be glad to be mistaken for them: what then should we not be willing to venture, renounce, suffer, or stoop to, to save our souls from the wrath to come? This may certainly be effected by all who diligently seek it in the way of the Gospel: whereas men's most earnest endeavours to preserve their lives, often prove ineffectual; or they are so taken in the Lord's net, that life is rendered as bitter as death is dreadful. Whilst ring-leaders in rebellion against God are singled out, such as concur with them will not escape: and either the open detection of crimes, or men's penitent confessions, will justify God before the whole world, in all the threatenings of his word, and the judgments that he inflicts.

V. 17—28.

Abused plenty generally ends in pinching want; and we may profitably meditate on the horrors of famine, when men grudge each other, and even themselves, every morsel, and behold with terror and anguish the speedy approach of more dreadful extremities: for we may hence learn to be thankful, moderate, and liberal in our use of plenty; and the more to hate and dread sin, which thus forfeits or embitters all our comforts, and not only desolates cities and nations, but ruins the souls of unnumbered multitudes. It is a grievous sign of deep degeneracy, when profane, infidel, and immoral speeches, become proverbial: but the Lord notices them, and will call to account those who use them; and will at length put them to silence and shame. Because sentence against an evil work is not executed speedily, therefore the hearts of the sons of men are wholly set in them to do evil; but, however men may wilfully mistake reproofs for pardons, and the Lord's long-suffering for the failure of the vision, the days are at hand when they will find every word of God to take effect. Then flattering teachers and infidels will be confuted and condemned; and the execution of his threatened vengeance will form an awful demonstration to them of the truth of the Scriptures.

NOTES.

CHAP. XIII. V. 1—4. The Lord had before intimated his displeasure against the false prophets; (xii. 24;) but Ezekiel was here ordered more fully and directly to 5 Ye have not gone up into the gaps, neither made up the hedge for the house of Israel; to stand in the battle in the day of the Lord.

6 They have seen vanity and lying divination, saying, The Lord saith; and the Lord hath not sent them: and they have made others to hope, that with them they would confirm the word.

7 Have ye not seen a vain vision, and a lying divination, wherein ye say, *The Lord saith it; whereas ye have not spoken a lying divination, whereby ye say, *The Lord saith it? 8 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Because ye have spoken vanity, and seen lies, therefore, *behold, *I am against you, saith the Lord God.

9 And mine hand shall be upon the prophets that see vanity, and that divine lying visions: they shall not be in the assembly of my people, neither shall they be written in the writing of the house of Israel, neither shall they be mine. 10 They shall hold the vain vision, and divine lies: and they shall be upon the list, and upon the cup, and upon the dividers, and shall be consumed.

11 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Because ye trusted in your own counsels, and presumed in your own understandings;

12 And said, *I will return, and I will change my doing; return, I will return, saith the Lord God; according to thy ways, and according to thy doings, shall they do unto thee; they shall turn thee back, and cause thee to walk in all the ways which they have walked before thee; and they will do thee all good, and all evil.

13 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Because ye have trusted in your own counsels, and in your own doings, saying, *I will return, and I will change my doing; according to your ways, and according to your doings, shall ye be returned: your return shall be to be taken in the place where you were despised. Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will turn your works backward; and the transgressions that ye have transgressed shall ye remember; and ye shall beashamed of your counsels.

14 And they shall enter into the land of Israel, neither shall they enter into the land of Israel; and ye shall know that I am the Lord God.

10 Because, even because they have seduced my people, saying, *Peace; and there was no evil; and one built up a wall, and, lo, *others daubed it with untempered mortar:

11 Say unto them which daub it with untempered mortar, that it shall fall: and there shall be an overflowing shower; and ye G great hailstones, shall fall; and a stormy wind shall rend it.

12 Lo, when the wall is fallen, shall it not be said unto you, *Where is the daubing wherewith ye have daubed it?

13 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; I will even rend it with a stormy wind in my fury; and there shall be an overflowing shower in mine anger, and great hailstones in my fury, to consume it.

14 So will I break down the wall that ye have daubed with untempered mortar, and bring it down to the ground, so that it shall not be built up again; and they shall enter into the land of Israel, neither shall they enter into the land of Israel; and ye shall know that I am the Lord God.
the foundation thereof shall be discovered, and it shall fall, and ye shall be consumed in the midst thereof: and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

15 Thus will I accomplish my wrath upon the wall, and upon them that have daubed it with untempered mortar; and will say unto you, The wall is no more neither they that daubed it:

16 To nil, the prophets of Israel which prophesy concerning Jerusalem, and which see visions of peace for her, and there is no peace, saith the Lord God.

17 Likewise, thou son of man, set thy face against the daughters of thy people, which prophesy out of their own heart; and prophesy thou against them;

18 And say, Thus saith the Lord God; Woe to the women that sew pillows to all armholes, and make kerchiefs upon the head of every stature to hunt souls! Will ye hunt the souls of my people, and will ye save the souls alive that come unto you?

19 And will ye pollute me among my people; for handfuls of barley and for pieces of bread, to slay the souls that should not die, and to save the souls alive that should not live, by your lying to my people that bear your lies?

20 Wherefore thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against your pillows, whereby ye have there the souls to make them fly, and I will tear them from your arms, and will let the souls go, even the souls that ye hunt to make them fly.

21 Your kerchiefs also will I tear, and deliver my people out of your hand, and they shall be no more in your hand to be hunted; and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

22 Because with lies ye have made the heart of the righteous sad, whom I have not made sad; and strengthened the hands of the wicked, that he may not return from his wicked way, by promising him life:

23 Therefore ye shall see no more vanity, nor divine divinations: for I will deliver my people out of your hand; and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

V. 10–16. The peculiar guilt of these prophets consisted in their seducing the worshippers of God into idolatry and iniquity, and encouraging them to harden themselves in impenitence, by assuring them of peace and prosperity, at the very time when divine judgments were about to be poured out upon them. In this manner, perhaps, some of them courted the favour of the people: and the rest, finding him caressed and followed, supported his false predictions by their confident assertions and vain reasons. Thus they acted, as if a man were to build a wall with loose stones or bricks of earth, without cement; and others should labour to give it an appearance of stability, by daubing it over with mortar made of bad materials, and not properly mixed or tempered; and they should then expect that such a wall would protect them, or that a house built of such walls would serve for a secure habitation. The people supposed themselves safe from the assaults of the Chaldeans, because they vainly presumed, that, as the people of God, he was engaged by covenant to preserve them; not considering that they had forfeited the blessing by their crimes: and the prophets laboured to varnish over these presumptuous expectations by a variety of specious pretences. But the Lord by his prophet assured them that this worthless wall should certainly fall down, notwithstanding all their daubing. A tremendous shower of rain and hail would wash away all the untempered mortar, and then the stormy wind would rend the wall itself. This storm, arising from his righteous indignation, would level the wall to the ground and destroy its foundations, and consume those who builded it, or sheltered themselves under it, in its own destruction. That is, the Lord would send the Chaldeans to besiege and destroy Jerusalem, and desolate Judah: they would come with such force and fury as the Jews could by no means withstand; and their success would confute the lying predictions of the prophets, and subvert the false hopes of the people. When these events should take place, the false prophets would be reproached and taunted with their folly and presumption; till the Lord had accomplished his wrath upon them: and then they who trusted them, would be reminded by God and his prophets, that the wall was no more, neither they who daubed it. The latter part of the eleventh verse may be rendered thus: I will send great hailstones; they shall fall; and the storm of a whirlwind shall rend it.

V. 17–23. As the Lord endued some women with the Spirit of prophecy: so there were others, who pretended to it from secular motives. But the prophet was ordered to set his face against them too, and to charge them with prophesying out of their own hearts. As a token of the peace and security which they promised, they sewed pillows to their own armholes, or elbows, (20) and to theirs who consulted them; intimating that they might indulge and repose themselves in security, for no enemy would disturb them. The meaning of the kerchiefs, or coverings, which they put upon the head of every statue, (or of persons of every age indiscriminately,) is not so evident: some think that they were ornaments, with which they decorated those who consulted them, in token of victory and triumph; others suppose, that this was spoken figuratively, for their hoodwinking them, or keeping them in the dark by their delusions; but probably it was some superstitious observance, a kind of amulet or charm, that they employed to entice the people into their snares. These women would tell every man his fortune, giving them pillows to lean on, and kerchiefs to cover their head; to the intent they might the more allure them. For they thus hunt their souls; and, as it seems probable, not only promised the nation deliverance from the Chaldeans, but procured to protect by some spell or charm the lives of those who applied to them; nay, even to save their souls, by some absolution or indulgence which they vended. Thus they entangled the people in their deceptions, as if they could save the lives and souls of men, without any respect to their conduct and character. They seem to have been a company of fortune-tellers, who polled or profaned the name of God, by pretending to sell his gifts at the most contemptible price; and to deal in divination, and such like impositions, as have in every age found eager purchasers. And they likewise attempted to terrify with denunciations of wrath, those pious persons who refused to bribe them; as if life and death, heaven and hell, were at their disposal! Thus they worked upon the fears and hopes of those who attended to their lies. But the Lord declared that he was against them, and all their signs and charms with which they terrified souls, to cause them to fly into their entangling net: and he would certainly tear them from them, expose them to shame, and deliver the people from their influence and power. Because their lies counteracted the intention and tendency of his word; distracting the minds of upright godly men, or grieving them, whilst they saw God disdained and souls deceived; whereas the whole revealed will of God tended to encourage such persons, and to make them joyful. On the other hand, their diversions tended to harden and embolden wicked men, by encouraging them to expect and safety in their evil ways; contrary to the express declarations of God, that "there is no peace for the wicked." He would therefore speedily terminate their delusions, and deliver his people, and so make his power and glory known to all concerned. To slay and to make alive, signify here to promise men life, or threaten them with death: so the prophet saith, he "came to destroy the city," (xliii. 2.) "that is, to pronounce the sentence of destruction upon it." (Lorth.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.
V. 1—16.

Many possess great subtility and sagacity, who are utterly destitute of true wisdom: and whilst the world admires their abilities, the Lord brands them as fools. This is most awful the case with numbers, who make the sacred ministry a step to worldly consequence and influence. They pretend to speak in the name of God; but have seen nothing of his glory, of the evil of sin, the worth of souls, the preciousness of Christ, the way of salvation, or the beauty of holiness! they follow their own fancies, human traditions, or Satan's illusions; and then ascribe the whole to the God of truth! they are subtle, rapacious, and insinuating, in winding themselves into favour and preferment, and pursuing filthy lucre; but they are sure to do mischief in the fold and vineyard of the Lord. Instead of standing in the gap to turn away his indignation from the people, by their prayers, holy examples, and zealous endeavours to promote true godliness, they widen the breach by their wicked lives and erroneous doctrines, their soothing and flattering delusions, which cause men to think themselves deserving of eternal life, even when the wrath of God abideth on them! Numbers follow the pernicious ways of such false teachers, "by reason of whom the way of truth is evil spoken of;" and many are seduced to expect the accomplishment of their unscriptural assertions, but the Lord is against them, and hath not sent them: they shall not be written among the righteous, nor share the heavenly inheritance! Because, even because they seduce the professed worshippers of God, and promise men peace and salvation, without conversion, faith, or holiness. But indeed there are numerous ways, by which one heresiarch builds up a wall, and others daub it with untempered mortar! Some teach men to expect safety from a comparative decency of moral character; some on account of formal or superstitious observances; some because they belong to an orthodox party of the Church, and have got some notions of certain important doctrines; some because of their impious and enthusiastic reveries; and others even, by a direct abuse of the Gospel, and making Christ the minister of sin! Each of these descriptions can find specious reasons, or a few detached perverted testimonies of Scripture, to counteract their delusions: and men of learning and ingenuity employ themselves in daubing these tottering walls with untempered mortar, to prevent their weakness from being discovered. But they are all alike distant from Christ, the true Foundation: they build not on him by a penitent faith, that worketh by love and produce obedience; they either leave out his merits and atonement, or the work of his new-creating Spirit, or the substantial fruits of righteousness; and in different ways endeavour to varnish, paint, and repair the old building; instead of erecting a new one on a new foundation, for "an habitation of God through" the Spirit.? How far soever the wall, thus run up and
CHAPTER XIV.

THEN came certain of the elders of Israel unto me, and sat before me. 2 And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, 3 Son of man, these men have set up their idols in their heart, and put the stumbling-block of their iniquity before their face: should I be inquired of at all by them? 4 Therefore speak unto them, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God: Every man of the house of Israel that setteth up his idols in his heart, and putteth the stumbling-block of his iniquity before his face, and cometh to the prophet; b I the Lord will answer him that cometh according to the multitude of his idols; 5 That I may take the house of Israel in their own heart, because they are all estranged from me through their idols.
Therefore say unto the house of Israel, Thus saith the Lord God: Repent, and turn *yourselfs from your idols; and *turn away your faces from all your abominations.

For every one of the house of Israel, or of the stranger that sojourneth in Israel, which separateth himself from me, and setteth up his idols in his heart, and puttest the stumbling-block of his iniquity before his face, and cometh to a prophet to inquire of him concerning me; I the Lord will answer him by myself:

And I will set my face against that man, and will make him a sign and a proverb, and I will cut him off from among the midst of my people; and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

And if the prophet be deceived when he hath spoken a thing, I the Lord have spoken it; or if a prophet be deceived by a dream, then will I stretch out my hand upon him, and will destroy him from among the midst of my people.

And they shall bear the punishment of their iniquity: *the punishment of the prophet shall be even as the punishment of him that seeketh unto him;

That the house of Israel may go no more astray from me, neither be polluted any more with all their transgressions; but *that they may be my people, and I may be their God, saith the Lord God.

The word of the Lord came again to me, saying,

Son of man, when the land sinneth against me by trespassing grievously, then will I stretch out mine hand upon it, and will break the staff of the bread thereof, and will send famine upon it, and will cut off man and beast from it:

But they have actually setup idols and worshipped them. (Lowth.) Could it then consist with the glory of God to give a favourable answer to the inquiries of such hypocrites? On the contrary, the prophet was instructed plainly to inform them, that the Lord had determined to answer all Israelites, without respect of rank or station, who came with idolatrous hearts to inquire of him, according to the multitude of their idols; either denouncing vengeance upon them proportioned to their aggravated crimes, or giving them up to be deluded to their ruin. Thus he would encourage them in their own counsels, leave them to manifest the concealed wickedness of their hearts, show the world their abominable dispositions, and render them contemptible and miserable: seeing they were all totally alienated from him, through an infatuated attachment to idolatry.

That I may deal with them according to their deserts, and thereby convince them, that I am a Searcher of hearts, and know the secret wickedness of their thoughts. (Lowth.) He shall be led with lies, according as he deIGHTED therein.

V. 6-8. The only way to escape the threatened judgments was by repentance, and by turning themselves, and endeavouring to turn one another, from their idols to the worship and service of God; and by turning away their faces with abhorrence from all their abominations, that they might look another way, and act in another manner. Thus, and thus only, could they expect an answer of grace. For every Israelite, may, every proselyte or Stranger dwelling in the land, would be dealt with according to the foregoing rule. If in their heart they separated from the Lord, favoured idolatry, and looked towards that great occasion of iniquity; and then, out of curiosity or a desire to serve God and idols too; to save appearances, or to obtain reputation, they should consult the prophets; the Lord would answer every such inquirer, not by the mouth of his prophet, but by himself and his own powerful vengeance. He would execute such punishment upon him, as should render him an example and proverb to all others, who had been singing him out from his people, among whom he had impiously intruded; and making known his omniscience and omnipotence by detecting and avenging his crimes. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 9-11. These inquirers would soon be weary of consulting God's prophets, and he disposed to apply to those of another character, who would be left, (like Ahab's prophets,) to the illusions of a lying spirit; and thus being deceived themselves, to believe that prosperity would attend the inquirers, they would deceive them also. This the Lord warned such men to expect: for he meant thus to punish their hatred of his truth and service. Though not the author of the deceived prophet's sin; yet he having left to fall into Satan's delusions was the effect of a judicial sentence against him; and God thus used him as the instrument of blinding and hardening hypocrisies to their destruction. And, as the false prophet only sought his own interest or credit in his predictions, and for that sin was given up to strong delusions to believe a lie; as the man who consulted him only sought encouragement in his idolatry and wickedness; and as the enmity of their hearts against God prepared them to welcome these delusions, which emboldened them to further rebellion: so the Lord would punish them in awful indignation, and cause them to bear the load of their abominations guilt, which would involve both the deceived prophet and the hypothetical inquirer, in the same terrible destruction. Yet the severity to individuals would prove mercy to the house of Israel, by warning them against idolatry and iniquity, that they might still continue the people of God. (Marg. Ref.)
CHAPTER XIV.

14 Though these three men, Noah, Daniel, and Job, were in it, they should deliver their own souls by their righteousness, saith the Lord God.

15 If I cause noisome beasts to pass through the land, and they spoil it, so that it be desolate, that no man may pass through because of the beasts:

16 Though these three men were in it, as I live saith the Lord God, they shall deliver neither son nor daughter; they only shall be delivered, but the land shall be desolate.

17 Or if I bring a sword upon that land, and say, Sword, go through the land; so that I cut off man and beast from it:

18 Though these three men were in it, as I live saith the Lord God, they shall deliver neither son nor daughter, but they only shall be delivered themselves.

19 Or if I send a pestilence into that land, and pour out my fury upon it in blood, to cut off from it man and beast:

20 Though Noah, Daniel, and Job, were in it, as I live saith the Lord God, they shall deliver neither son nor daughter; they shall deliver their own souls by their righteousness.

21 For thus saith the Lord God; How much more when I send four sored judgments upon Jerusalem, the sword, and the famine, and the noisome beasts, and the pestilence, to cut off from it man and beast?

22 Yet behold, therein shall be left a remnant that shall be brought forth, both sons and daughters: behold, they shall come forth unto you, and ye shall see their way and their doings: and ye shall be comforted concerning the evil that I have brought upon Jerusalem, even concerning all that I have brought upon it.

23 And they shall comfort you, when ye see their ways and their doings: and ye shall know that I have not done it without cause that I have done it in it, saith the Lord God.
The atrocity wickedness of the captives; or from hearing their penitent confessions and declarations of the crimes, which filled Jerusalem and Judah. But probably many of them showed very plainly, by their abandoned conduct, for what crimes the Lord had executed vengeance on the nation; and some others, being brought to repentance, made such a report of the abominations which they had witnessed, as silenced all objections, and composed the minds of the pious remnant to cheerful acquiescence and confidence in the truth and mercy of God.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—11.

Very wicked men may assume such specious appearances of piety, as to impose upon the most discerning of God’s ministers; for who can know what secret abominations are practiced in the livers, or what uncorrupted lusts abound in the hearts, of some, who behave themselves devoutly under the preaching of God’s word, and the administration of his most solemn ordinances? But the Lord seeth through every disguise, and will certainly unmask every dissembler; and as his answers are addressed to men according to their characters; so we should show, as well as we can, to whom the comforts, and to whom the terrors belong; dividing the word of truth according to the character, conduct, and disposition of our hearers; and leaving the Lord, by means of their consciences, to make the application to individuals. All the wickedness of man springs from a heart estranged from the holy character, law, and service of God, through the idolatrous love of himself, and of the creatures. No external decency, form, or reformation, can be acceptable to God, so long as any idol possesses the heart and rivets him in our affections; yet how many sit to hear his word, and join in his worship and at his table, who idolize riches, pleasures, honours, and the praise of men! who seek happiness from such distinctions, and confide and rejoice in them, rather than in the love and service of God! And how many, who profess their own wisdom and righteousness to his glorious salvation! Thus, instead of saying “What have I to do any more with the idols?” and casting them away with abhorrence; they resolutely cleave to them; and these prove stumbling-blocks, over which they fall into iniquity and misery. (Marg. Ref.) By their secret attachment to worldly objects, they are prepared to be seduced by Satan, and to commit scandalous crimes; or, loving this present world, they apostatize from God; or cares, riches, and sensual lusts, render them unfruitful laborers of the ground, fit for nothing but to be hewn down and cast into the fire: and should the Lord be inquired of by such men, or give encouragement to them? Assuredly he will answer them according to the multitude of their idols and iniquities: he will set his face against them, and make them examples of his vengeance; while their hypocritical worship will only aggravate their guilt and punishment, and they shall know that the Lord cannot be imposed upon like their fellow mortals. Such persons often grow weary of faithful ministers, and want teachers after their own lusts, to comfort them in their evil courses; and they find others of like character ready enough to teach things which they ought not, for filthy lucrative sake. Thus evil men and seducers are multiplied, and grow worse and worse, deceiving and being deceived; but the Lord overrules the whole in awful righteousness to their mutual delusion and aggravated destruction. He sets his face against some such teachers and professors of the Gospel, for a warning to others; his punishments and threatenings have a tendency to alter the consciences of the unconverted, and to caution his people to go no more astray from him; and they are made useful to upright believers. The door of mercy is still open: sinners are still called on to repent and return from all their abominations: and all are admitted amongst the Lord’s people, and have him for their God, who seek to be cleansed by the washing in the Fountain which he hath opened for sin and uncleanness.

V. 12—23.

God will inflict many sore judgments on individuals and nations, who sin against him: a remnant of pious persons may indeed for a time aver, or retard national judgments; but they cannot possibly prevail with him to tolerate wickedness, or to save men in their sins; nor could they in their right mind desire it, even in behalf of their own sons and daughters. The Lord will certainly deliver his servants from all evil, and preserve them to his heavenly kingdom; and he will satisfy them as to his dealings with those for whom they pleaded in vain: but when the day of patience is expired, the same word and oath of God, which ensure the believer’s salvation, are engaged for the condign punishment of the wicked. At present the whole creation groaneth through the sins of men, and the very beasts of the field in various ways share the miseries of mankind. But in the future world sinners alone will suffer, and in proportion to their personal guilt. Then the assembled universe will see, that the Lord hath not done without cause, all that he hath done them: and his servants will be satisfied with his decisions, even against their nearest relatives. For the detection of men’s sins will manifest the justice of God in their punishment; even as the humble confessions of true believers now magnify the precepts and penalty of his holy law, and give all the glory of salvation to his grace. In a firm belief that we shall approve the whole of God’s dealings with ourselves and with all mankind, when it shall be fully made known to us, let us now impose silence upon our rebellious murmurs and objections, the offspring of pride, ignorance, and unbelief; let us discard our useless anxiety about the cause of others, assured that the Judge of all the earth will do right; and let us compose our minds into patient resignation to his will, which in all things is holy, just, and good.
CHAPTER XVI.

AND the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,
1 Son of man, What is the vine-tree more than any tree, or than a branch which is among the trees of the forest? 2 Shall wood be taken thereof to do any work? or will men take a pin of it to hang any vessel thereon? 4 Behold, d it is cast into the fire for fuel; 5 the fire devoureth both the ends of it, and the midst of it is burned. * Is it meet for any work?

5 Behold, when it was whole, it was meet for no work: how much less shall it be meet yet for any work, when the fire hath devoured it, and it is burned?

6 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; As the vine-tree among the trees of the forest, which I have given to the fire for fuel, so will I give the inhabitants of Jerusalem.

7 And I will set my face against them: they shall go out from one fire, and another fire shall devour them; 1 and ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I set my face against them.

8 And 2 I will make the land desolate, because they have 3 committed a trespass, said the Lord God.

CHAP. XVI.

The original state of Jerusalem is shown under the emblem of an exposed infant, 1—5; whom God is represented as rescuing, educating, espousing, and richly providing for, 6—14; but she commits the most abandoned and multiplied adulteries, 15—34; and is threatened with terrible punishments, 35—43. Her crimes shown to equal that of her mother, the Hittite, and to exceed those of her sisters, Sodom, and Samaria, 44—59. Yet at length she is received to

NOTES.

CHAP. XV. V. 1—5. Ezekiel, and his companions, seem not to have been easily satisfied about the predicted judgments on their city and nation, which they had been used to consider as holiness to the Lord. He was therefore graciously pleased to represent to them the propriety of these dispensations by an apt similitude; which would also counteract the presumptuous hopes of the people. The Church and nation of Israel had often been compared to a vine; (Marg. Ref.) Now a vine is most valuable if it be fruitful; otherwise it is almost as sightly and worthless as a Bramble; other fruit-trees may be of some use for timber: but the vine is of no value except for its fruit. "What is the vine-tree more than another tree, "or even than a branch of the trees of the forest?" Wood could not be taken from it for any work; not even for a pin, or peg to hang a vessel on. Only some parts of other trees are used for fuel: but the ends and the middle, the whole of the vine when cut down, as well as the prunings of it from year to year, are consigned to the fire, and nobody attempts to reserve any part of it for other uses. And if it be useless, before it be cast into the fire, what can it be good for when almost consumed? V. 6—8. The nation of Israel, of which the inhabitants of Jerusalem were the chief, was, in respect of other nations, as the vine in respect of the trees of the forest. Other nations were renowned for arts and arms, and became eminent and formidable, and the Lord used them in his providence as he saw good: but Israel was his vine, from which he looked for the fruits of spiritual worship and holy obedience. They, however, proved unfruitful, or brought forth poisonous berries like the wild vine. He would therefore at present make no use of them, except as fuel to the fire of his indignation, that his justice might be glorified in their punishment. By the ruin of the ten tribes, and the preceding judgments executed upon Judah, both ends of the vine were already burned, and the Lord meant not to preserve the middle. He had set his face against Jerusalem and Judah, as an adversary; and the people would be consumed by one calamity after another, till the land should be utterly desolated.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The condescension of God to the infirmity of his servants, in satisfying them of the equity and propriety of his dealings with sinners, is very great. Men are very prone to value themselves on those distinctions and advantages, which, not being productive of suitable effects upon their hearts and lives, render them doubly criminal. Unholiness of professors of the truth, and hypocritical worshippers of God, are, in his judgment, the refuse of the human species; for they dishonour his name more than other sinners do, and will be rendered by him proportionably contemptible. No eminency in other endowments can avail them any thing; for fruitfulness in good works is the proper excellency of a professed Christian: and indeed, in all other things the Church hath generally been eclipsed by the people of the world. When the worshippers of God therefore do not glorify him, adorn the Gospel, and serve their generation, by their holy lives, they are condemned as refuse wood, as thorns and briars, and prove as dry fuel to the flames: and when the Lord sets his face against them, they will go from one fire to another, till they be consumed. Let us then beware of an unfruitful profession; let us come to Christ and abide in him, and seek to have his words abide in us: then shall we bring forth much fruit, glorify God, and be approved as true disciples of the Lord Jesus; whilst the unfruitful branches will be broken off, gathered together, and cast into the fire.
favour, and is ashamed of her base conduct, 60—63.

AGAIN the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,
2 Son of man, * cause Jerusalem to know her abominations;
3 And say, Thus saith the Lord God unto Jerusalem; Thy birth, and thy nativity is of the land of Canaan; thy father was an Amorite, and thy mother an * Hittite.
4 And as for thy nativity, in the day thou wast born, thy navel was not cut, neither wast thou washed in water to supplie thee; thou wast not salted at all, nor swaddled at all.
5 None * eye pitied thee, to do any of these unto thee, to have compassion upon thee; * but thou wast cast out in the open field, to the loathing of thy person, in the day that thou wast born.

6 And when I passed by thee, and saw thee polluted in thy own blood, I said unto thee, when thou wast in thy blood, Live; yea, I said unto thee, when thou wast in thy blood, Live.
7 And I have caused thee to multiply as the bud of the field, and thou hast increased and waxen great, and thou art come to excellent ornaments; thy breasts are fashioned, and thine hair is grown, whereas thou wast naked and bare.
8 Now when I passed by thee, and looked upon thee, behold, thy time was the time of love; and I spread my skirt over thee, and covered thy nakedness; yea, I sware unto thee, and entered into a covenant with thee, saith the Lord God, and thou becamest mine.

were: and their posterity, when they had expelled these nations, and possessed their land, seemed to be their descendants, as resembling them in character and habits.
Thou boastest to be the seed of Abraham; but thou art degenerate, and followest the abominations of the wicked Canaanites, as children do the manners of their fathers. —The nativity of Israel, as a distinct people, may be dated from the time when the family of Jacob was multiplied into a nation. But at this period, they were reduced to abject slavery, and cruelly oppressed; they drudged in the brick-kilns, and were covered with the clay; their male children were ordered to be slain or exposed; they were apparently deserted of God, and in general forgotten, and polluted with the idolatries, superstitions, and vices of their oppressors. Thus the new-born nation, (so to speak,) was like an infant, that was cruelly cast out and exposed, (according to the barbarous custom of ancient times:) that had none to wash, cleanse, clothe, or do any thing for it; but was left, as unpitied and loathed, to perish in the day on which it was born. This was an apt representation of the wretched and pernicious condition of Israel in Egypt, and it is also a striking emblem of our original state of sin and misery.

V. 6—8. Whilst this perishing infant lay defiled and trampled on in its blood, a loathsome as well a miserable object, the Lord passed by, beheld it with compassion, and said to it, "Live." Nothing in the character of Israel deserved his favour or attracted his esteem; but every thing was suited to excite his abhorrence, and to merit his indignation: yet from mere compassion and good will he preserved the nation. He spoke with power; and by his word he restrained the rage of their Egyptian oppressors, and at length redeemed Israel from bondage. By his blessing they had multiplied exceedingly in Egypt: at length they were brought forth with an outstretched arm, and formed into a powerful nation under rulers and princes of their own. The Lord also adorned them, by giving them his righteous laws and statutes; and setting up his tabernacle, and manifesting his power and presence among them, by the ark of the covenant, the pillar of fire and cloud, the solemnities of mount Sinai, and the miracles which he wrought for them. Thus the out-cast infant grew up to be a marriageable woman, of comely form and excellently decorated: that is, Israel was prepared to be admitted into covenant with God, and espoused to him to bring up children to him. This he had in view from the first: when he passed by, and saw the perishing out-cast, it was a "time of love;" he intended first to be a Father, and then a Husband unto her: so that "he spread his skirt over her," and espoused her to himself, covering the shame of her former destitute condition, taking her under his immediate protection, and emblazoning her by this high and honourable relation. This covenant was confirmed with an oath, or engagement to fidelity, and thus Israel became the Lord's peculiar people. And as a wife, (especially when taken from so destitute a situation, and favoured in so extraordinary a manner,) is bound to the most unreserved fidelity, obedience, love, and regard to her husband; so Israel was bound by every possible obligation to a devoted attachment to God, and an entire dependence on him, as his holy worshippers and obedient servants. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 9-14. These verses enumerate the several benefits conferred on Israel, from their low estate in Egypt, to the height of their prosperity and greatness in the days of David and Solomon. The washing with water, might refer to the frequent ablutions and purifications appointed by the ceremonial law; but it included all the methods, which the Lord used to render Israel a holy nation, to purge them from the idolatries and defilements of Egypt, and to prepare them for his spiritual worship and service. The anointing with oil, though employed in preparing women among the heathen for thy beauty: for it was perfect through my comeliness, which I had put upon thee, saith the Lord God.

15 But thou didst trust in thine own beauty, and playedst the harlot because of thy renown, and pourdest out thy fornications on every one that passed by; his it was.

16 And of thy garments thou didst take, and deckedst thy high places with divers colours, and playedst the harlot thereupon: the like things shall not come, neither shall it be so.

17 Thou hast also taken thy fair jewels of my gold and of my silver, which I had given thee, and madest to thyself images of men, and didst commit whoredom with them; for their nuptials on some occasions, (Marg. Ref.) may refer to the holy oil used in the consecration of the priests and the vessels of the sanctuary: and it signified the gifts and graces bestowed on numbers, for the edification and benefit of the nation, in order to their consecration to the Lord. The various ornaments afterwards mentioned, (which doubtless accorded to the attire of females of the highest rank in those times,) represented Israel's settlement and prosperity in Canaan; the wealth, power, and honour to which they were advanced, especially under David and Solomon; the building and enriching of the temple; and all the temporal and spiritual benefits, by which the Lord distinguished them as a people dear unto him. So that the exposed infant, being rescued and educated, and espoused to the Lord, was advanced to be a princess, whose ornaments, raiment, and provisions, were suited to her high and distinguished rank. Israel from the most abject state, became a powerful kingdom, renowned among the nations for the wise and equitable administration of their princes, the excellence of their laws, and the prosperity and happiness of the people; this was all owing to "the comeliness" or honour which the Lord had put upon them; and it rendered them a complete pattern for other nations to copy after. In this the case differs from the espousals of the meanest woman to the mightiest monarch: she may owe all her rank and ornaments to him; but her beauty must be the gift of the Creator. No doubt this is emblematical of a sinner's conversion, and of the believer's privileges; but the external means, or the signs of spiritual blessings, rather than the blessings themselves, must be intended, as it is spoken of Israel. "As the child is always washed with water as soon as born. (4. 9.) is not this referred to, by the use of water in Christian baptism, as the case?" (Mede.)

18 And tookest thy broidered garments, and coveredst them; and thou hast set mine oil and mine incense before them.

V. 15—22. Adultery in every case has always been deemed a very heinous offence; but it has been peculiarly aggravated in a woman, who had been favoured and advanced in the manner above described. Thus idolatry in others might be deemed spiritual fornication; but in Israel it was adultery; a violation of the marriage-covenant, accompanied with the basest of ingratitude, and evidencing a most depraved state of the heart; inexpressibly dishonourable to God, when the basest idols were deliberately preferred before him; a provocation of his jealousy; a forfeiture of all the privileges of the nation, and an introduction to every other sort of wickedness. The sacred writers in general use this allusion, because of the sameness of principles from which idolatry and adultery originate; because both of them are extremely infamous and hateful; and perhaps because idolatry and lewdness commonly went together. But this prophet spake of it in an indignant manner peculiar to himself; and he exposed Israel's infamy in language taken from the conduct of the most shameless prostitutes, and suited to mark their crimes most loathsom and detestable. The wretched outcast, having been advanced, enriched, adorned, and prospered by her espousals to God, instead of making a suitable return for such singular favours, grew proud of her beauty; and, confiding in her attractions, courted the admiration of other lovers, committed adultery with them, and soon became a common prostitute. That is, Israel became proud of their numbers, strength, riches, reputation, and privileges; and thus departed from God, made alliances with the heathen nations, and worshipped their idols.

Pass through. The word signifies also to dedicate. (Er. xiii. 12. marg.) The Jews, instead of dedicating their first born to God, as the law required, offered them up as sacrifices to the devil, that was worshipped in their idols. (Luther.)
CHAPTER XVI.

V. 23—29. This adulterous wife is represented, as having less and less reserve in her licentiousness: after all her former adulteries, for which a dreadful word was pronounced on her, she builded for herself an eminent place, or a brothel, as well as made high places in every street of Jerusalem. This may refer to the conduct of Manasseh and other kings of Judah, who made the temple itself the scene of their open and abominable idolatries, in addition to all their other idol temples! Thus at length their relation to God, and the temple itself, tended to render them more odious and despicable; as even libertines despise women who are shameless in their conduct. Allured by the prosperity of the Egyptians, they connected themselves with them, and joined in their multiplied and abominable idolatries, for which they were noted above other nations. And though the Lord frequently corrected Israel for their crimes, by wars, famines, and other judgments; delivering them into the hands of their enemies; (as men confine, and treat harshly their adulterous wives;) though he especially punished them by the Philistines, who are represented as ashamed of the enormous idolatry of the Jews, though idolaters themselves; yet, instead of being amended by it, they formed alliances with the Assyrians and worshipped their gods: yea, they followed every idol, that was worshipped by the several nations betwixt Canaan and Chaldea; and still they were not satisfied, but sought out new objects of their abominable idolatry. Thou host defiled thyself with the idolatries of the heathen, beginning with those practised by the former inhabitants of Canaan, and by degrees learning new species of idolatry from distant countries, such as Chaldea. (Lomth.)

B. C. 593.

1. xiii. 14—18. 2 Kings xi. 2. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
2. Jer. i. 19. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
3. Jer. iii. 5. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
4. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
5. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
6. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
7. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
8. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
10. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
11. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
12. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
13. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
15. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
17. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
18. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
19. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
20. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
22. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
23. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
24. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
25. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
27. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
28. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
29. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
30. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
31. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
32. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
33. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
34. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
35. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
36. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
37. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
38. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
39. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
40. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
41. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
42. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
43. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
44. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
45. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
46. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
47. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
48. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
49. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
50. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
51. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
52. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
53. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
54. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
55. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
56. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
57. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
58. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
59. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
60. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
61. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
62. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
63. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
64. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
65. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
66. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
67. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
68. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
69. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
70. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
71. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
72. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
73. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
74. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
75. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
76. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
77. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
78. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
79. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
80. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
81. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
82. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
83. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
84. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
85. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
86. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
87. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
88. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
89. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
90. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
91. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
92. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
93. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
94. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
95. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
96. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
97. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
98. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
99. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
100. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
101. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
102. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
103. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
104. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
105. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
106. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
107. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
108. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
109. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
110. Jer. xxxii. 31. 2 Kings xxii. 2.
58 Thou hast borne thy lewdness and thine abominations, saith the Lord.
59 For thus saith the Lord God; I will deal with thee as thou hast done, which hast despised the oath in breaking the covenant.

60 Nevertheless, I will remember my covenant with thee in the days of thy youth, and I will establish unto thee an everlasting covenant.

61 Then thou shalt remember thy ways, and be ashamed, when thou shalt acknowledge thine iniquities which thou hast done in them: for I have heard all thine abominations, O Israel.

V. 56—59. Either the Jews entirely overlooked the example set before them in the desolations of Sodom; or, being proud of their privileges and prosperity, they would have disdained to mention so infamous a place, especially as standing in any near relation to them. This was peculiarly the case, before the iniquity of the Jews was discovered, by the punishments inflicted on them, during the invasions of the land by the Syrians and Philistines in the reign of Ahaz; but at that time the Gentiles reproached and despised the Jews, as a most abominable people. These, and other judgments had come upon them for their idolatries, of which they had openly borne the shame; but the Lord meant further to deal with them after their deserts, especially in violating their covenant-engagements, which they had so solemnly ratified, but now despised as of no value or obligation.

V. 60—63. The Lord did not, however, intend finally to cast off the whole people of Israel. Of his mercy and abundant grace, he would remember his covenant with Abraham and Israel, and even that made with the nation at mount Sinai; and he would establish with them a better and more enduring covenant. It is this at all refer to the return of the Jews from Babylon; for no doubt it more directly predicts the conversion of Jews and Gentiles to Christ, and their future restoration to the Church, when the fulness of the Gentiles also shall come in. At these periods the Jews would remember, and be ashamed of their former evil ways; they would willingly receive into communion with them the worst of the heathen, when converted to Christ; the Lord would then give unto Jerusalem for daughters, those very persons whom she had disdained to acknowledge as sisters; that is, the Gentiles converts would be brought into God's family, as the children of his ancient Church. This would not be effected by the national covenant made with Israel; but by the new covenant of grace in the hands of Christ our Mediator; a covenant established upon better promises, and they would then indeed know the Lord. All these events would concur in humbling them for their sins; and they would then remember all their shameful behaviour to their merciful God; which would cover them with confusion, and silence their boastings of being the peculiar and exclusive favourites of heaven; their complaints of the Lord's dealings with them; their self-justification, and their revilings and contemptuous abuse of the poor Gentiles. When the Lord had shown himself reconciled to them, they would scarcely be able to forgive themselves, and would only have their mouths open before him in humble confessions and fervent prayers, praises, and thanksgivings. This seems particularly to refer to the case of the Jews, at their future conversion to their long rejected Messiah; when their former enmity will effectually silence their proud boastings: but it may be applied to new converts, to returning backsliders, and to true believers, who are thus instructed and disciplined by their daily experience. The conclusion of this remarkable chapter clearly predicts the abolition of the Sinaï-covenant, the introduction of a new dispensation, and the union of Jews and Gentiles in the Church of Christ; events against which the Jews, in the time of our Lord and his apostles, entertained the most invincible prejudices. "They erred, not knowing the Scriptures."
A parable of two eagles and a vine, 1—10: explained of the captivity of Jeconiah; and of Zedekiah, who had broken his covenant confirmed by an oath, with the king of Babylon, and made an alliance with the king of Egypt; and of the judgments that were coming upon him, 11—21. An emblematic prediction of the person and kingdom of Christ, 22—24.

"grace," whose pious and quiet lives have not been much noticed in history. Otherwise, the annals of the Church are the most melancholy subject that can be contemplated. Let us turn our thoughts to the first establishment of Christianity in the Gentile world, and especially in the Roman empire. The state of the Gentiles was indeed such as rendered them a loathsome object in the eyes of a holy God; yet in a time of pity and love he passed by, and said to them, as they lay persisting in sin and pollution, "Live, yea, he said unto them. Live." He planted his Gospel among them, and caused Christians to multiply exceedingly. At length the Roman emperors becoming Christians, the Church grew great and honourable; Christianity became the established religion; abundance of liberty and encouragement was given to its preachers and professors; the places for public worship were multiplied, decorated, and enriched by ample donations and endowments, and the Church prospered into a kingdom. But what were the consequences? The pride, ambition, rapacity, and licentiousness, the various contests and cruel persecutions, the superstitions, blasphemies, impostures, and idolatries, which came in, and continued to increase for ages, at length rendered the Christian Roman empire a genuine daughter of the Pagan Roman empire; and all that used proverbs might well say, "As was the mother so is the daughter." Nor was there ever a heathen city or kingdom on the face of the earth, whose iniquities, cruelties, and unnatural lusts, whose whoredom and adultery, corporal and spiritual, have not been justified, and far exceed ed, by the Church of Rome, and her dependencies, which long formed so large a part of Christendom, as to give occasion to her assuming the arrogant title of the Holy Catholic Church!

If we turn our attention to the reformed and protestant Churches, which were brought forth out of this antichristian community, in a low, feeble, and despised condition, (as Israel was out of Egypt:) we shall again find cause of lamentation and shame. When they were ready to be overwhelmed in infancy by the merciless power of their enemies, and seemed to have no helper; when they were still polluted with many of the errors and superstitions of that Church, from which they had separated, as well as with other corruptions; the Lord in a time of love looked upon them, and said to them, Live: he rescued them from their oppressors, increased them abundantly, reduced them to some regular order, afforded them abundant means of grace, took them under his protection, espoused them to himself, and became his. And he continued to purify, instruct, prosper, and adorn them with eminent and excellent ministers and writers, until they became very "renowned among the nations, through the comeliness "which the Lord had put upon them." But though they have not run into the gross outward idolatries and enormities of the church of Rome; yet they have become proud of their beauty, and have played the harlot. In many places, forms, creeds, and establishments, are nearly the whole of what is left of their former excellency; and this dead carcass they idolize: in others infidelity and skepticism have discarded even the forms of truth and godliness. In covetousness, pride, luxury, and every worldly lust, they have grievously been guilty of idolatry: in impiety, perfidy, perjury, and licentiousness, many of them have vied with Rome herself: and though more free from the blood of persecution, yet the blood shed by unjust wars and cruel oppressions in different parts of the globe, from a sordid love of gain, renders the daughter too much like her base and abominable mother. It is not necessary to expiate further on the painful topic; the inference is obvious and unavoidable: no outward forms can change the propensity of man's heart to depart from God and rebel against him; but they often give it occasion to rage more vehemently. Whatever nation professing Christianity, whatever sect of Christians, we accurately survey, we shall soon perceive traces of the same spirit which led Israel into all their abominations.

Again, if we consider the subject with reference to ourselves, we shall here too find it applicable. When we recollect the mercies of God our Creator in giving us our being and rational powers; in protecting us in helpless infancy and bringing us to maturity; in supplying all our wants, and vouchsafing us innumerable benefits; we cannot but remember, at the same time, that we have been forgetful of him, and ungrateful and rebellious in numberless instances. How have we abused his bounty, in making provision for our pride and lusts? How have many of us proceeded from one iniquity to another, as we had time and opportunity? How have we stood it out against warnings, corrections, and convictions, and gone on in sin, though evidently exposed by it to manifold losses, troubles, and sorrows! And should we not have still continued in the same course, through our idolatrous attachment to worldly objects, and our aversion to the spiritual service of God, if we had been left to ourselves? Should we not indeed have done still worse, if our restraints had been removed, and we could have gratified our inclinations without fear or shame? Many have been educated amidst good instructions and edifying examples, and for a time have made some profession of religion; yet the lusts of their hearts have broken through all these obstacles, and hurried them away into apostacy, infidelity, and open wickedness. In various ways, the same cause produces similar effects, and it is evinced that we are all conceived and born in sin, carnally minded, and enmity against God.

And if we take a view even of true believers, we shall not fail to discover abundant evidence of the same mortifying truth. They know, that they were by nature children of wrath, even as others; they were depraved and polluted, and of the same original propensities as Amorites and Hittites. As they grew up, their innate depravity...
And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,
2 Son of man, set forth a riddle, and speak a parable unto the house of Israel: 3 And say, Thus saith the Lord God; A great eagle with great wings, long-winded, full of feathers, which had divers colours, came unto Lebanon, and took the highest branch of the cedar: 4 He cropped off the top of his young twigs, and carried it into a land of traffic; he set it in a city of merchants.

Brought forth its fruit in their words and actions, and proved them to be deserving of God's indignation, and met objects of his loathing and abhorrence. Unless he had saved them, they must have perished, without help or pity; and they had no claim on him: so that they were cast out to the loathing of their persons, from the day that they were born. But in a time of love and mercy, the Lord passed by them, when they lay in this polluted and perishing condition: "of his great love, wherewith he loved them, even when they were dead in sin," he said unto them, Live, and saved them by his grace: he rescued them from the power of Satan, brought them to repentance and faith in Christ, forgave their sins, and took them into covenant with himself, and they became his people. Thus were they "washed, and sanctified, and justified," in the "name of the Lord Jesus, and by the Spirit of our God;" they were consecrated to him by this sacred union; they were clothed with the robes of righteousness and salvation, enriched with the unsearchable riches of Christ, adorned with heavenly graces and privileges; and the God of Heaven became unto them both a Father and a Husband: it is his good pleasure to give them the kingdom, and they are made the excellent of the earth, "through the common foot which he puts upon them." For he it is from us to suppose, that many of those, who have been thus favoured and blessed, return to the habitual practice of any gross wickedness: but, alas! too often, even in them, pride and the carnal mind recover much force; they backslide from God, and pursue worthless vanities and idols. Some few have been left to fall from one evil to another, in a most awful manner, to show whither the bent of their hearts would carry them, if left to themselves, and if they should cease to watch and pray. Others have in an ungodly hour given such cause to the enemies of the Lord to blaspheme, as hath embittered all their future day. And even they who walk most uniformly in the Lord's ways, are conscious of such inward workings of pride and ambition; of such strong propensities to worldly objects; of such forgetfulness of God and ingratitude to him, and such rebellion against his appointments; of such unfaithfulness, unprofitableness, and want of love and zeal; of such weakness of heart and strength of passions; as render them daily more and more sensible that they equally need, and are equally unworthy of, the Lord's mercy, with the most prodigal of their neighbours. They have "the witness in themselves" continually, that they are naturally no better than others, and that all the difference in their state, character, hopes, and prospects, arises from the mere mercy and grace of God. They look upon those who are living without God in the world, in pride, idleness, luxury, licentiousness, and cruel oppression of the poor and needy, and are humbly sensible, that it hath been the Lord's doing, that they were not left to live, die, and perish in the same manner. They look at apostates and hypocrites, at proud Pharisees and proud infidels; and in condemning them, they condemn themselves; for such they have been, or were disposed to be. And though, through grace, they now are not such; yet they so often sin against light and love, that their conduct seems to themselves equally aggravated, even when no eye, but that of God and their enlightened consciences, can see anything culpable. This disposes them to justify God in all his corrections, which they find to be indispensably necessary for them, and to think upon them; and whilst they adore his justice in the final destruction of impenitent sinners, they have nothing to say in their own behalf; but feel, that, though more favoured, they are no more deserving. Thus the new convert remembers, and is confounded whilst he reviews the iniquities of his past life, and discovers the vanity of his heart against God and his word. The experienced believer is ashamed and confounded, whilst he reviews the evils of his heart and life, even since he was brought acquainted with the Gospel; and his mouth is stopped from impious murmurs, proud boastings, severe censures, and self-justification: and the more is he ashamed of his ingratitude and rebellion against so merciful a God and Saviour. This temper of mind distinguishes the true Christian from all other men: the Lord will bring all these to it, with whom he establishes his everlasting covenant; and will render them willing to be saved in the same way with the vilest outward offenders, and to receive them, when penitent, as their brethren in Christ Jesus. All others will have their mouths stopped in the day of judgment; and God will glorify himself, and satisfy his justice in their punishment. But let us rejoice, that, as the Lord would not break his covenant with his ancient servants, because of all the abominations of their descendants; so he will never forsake his Church, with whom he hath made a new covenant, and will never leave established upon better promises; nor will he ever leave the sinner to perish, who is humbled for his sins, and comes to trust in his mercy and grace through Jesus Christ; but will keep him by his power through faith unto salvation.

NOTES.

CHAP. XVII. V. 2. A riddle. That is, an emblematical representation, which requires attention and ingenuity to unravel it, but which aptly and elegantly depicts the transactions intended by it. This riddle seems to have been put forth about the time when Zedekiah was deposing to revolt from the king of Babylon, and to form an alliance with the king of Egypt.

V. 3, 4. (11, 12.) Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, was described under the emblem of a great eagle, because of his towering ambition, and his prey on all his neighbours. The great and long wings of this eagle denote the extent of his dominions, both in length and 5 He took also of the seed of the land, and planted it in a fruitful field; he placed it by great waters, and set it as a willow tree.

6 And it grew, and became a spreading vine of low stature, whose branches turned toward him, and the roots thereof were under him: so it became a vine, and brought forth branches, and shot forth springs.

7 There was also another great eagle with great wings and many feathers: and behold, this vine did bend her roots toward him, and shot forth her branches toward him, that he might water it by the furrows of her plantation.

8 It was planted in a good soil by great waters, that it might bring forth branches, and that it might bear fruit, that it might be a goodly vine.

9 Say thou, Thus saith the Lord God; Shall it prosper? he shall not pull up the roots thereof, and cut off the fruit thereof, that it wither? it shall wither in all the leaves of her spring, even without great power, or many people to pluck it up by the roots thereof.

10 Yea, behold, being planted, shall it prosper? shall it not utterly wither when the east wind toucheth it? it shall wither in the furrows where it grew.

11 ¶ Moreover the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, breadth: the feathers of divers colours signified, that he ruled over many countries abounding in people and riches, and of different languages and manners. This eagle came to Lebanon, and cropped off the highest branch of a cedar; that is, Nebuchadnezzar came to Jerusalem, and seized on Jecohiah, of the ancient and honourable family of David. And though he was the highest branch of the cedar, the heir of David's crown: yet, being very young, and newly raised to the throne, in a very enfeebled state of the kingdom, he was no more able to resist the victor, than the tender twig would be to resist the eagle. He therefore carried him and his princes to Babylon, which was become a city of merchants in a land of traffic, being very prosperous under the rule of Nebuchadnezzar. The word rendered traffic, is Cunam, which signifies trade or merchandise. (Zech. xiv. 21, John ii. 16.)

12 Say now to the rebellious house, Know ye not what these things mean? tell them, Behold, the king of Babylon is come to Jerusalem, and hath taken the kingdom thereof, and the princes thereof, and led them with him to Babylon; and hath taken of the land, that it might not lift itself up, that by keeping of his covenant it might stand.

The word, rendered a willow-tree, is translated by many, very circumstantly. Nebuchadnezzar took every precaution to prevent Zedekiah's revolting from him. (Marg. Ref.) (12, 13.) The conqueror did not further oppress or enslave the Jews, nor place over them any of his own princes: but he took Mattaniah of the family of David, Josiah's younger son, the uncle of Jeconiah; and having engaged him by covenant and by a solemn oath in the name of Jehov'ah, to be faithful to him; and having changed his name to Zedekiah, which signifies the righteousness of Jehov'ah, he made him king over the Jewish nation. Thus he planted of the seed of the land in a fruitful field, as a willow flourishes when planted by great waters. And though the kingdom was depressed and dependent; yet Zedekiah's situation was so favourable, and the conditions granted him so moderate, that by keeping of the covenant, it might have stood. Indeed for a time this twig grew, and became a spreading vine of low stature: and so long as Zedekiah and his princes were willing to depend on and submit to the king of Babylon, the Jews enjoyed peace and recovered strength, and Zedekiah prospered in his kingdom and family.

The other great eagle was Pharaoh-hophra king of Egypt, who was as ambitious and rapacious as Nebuchadnezzar, but not so powerful. This eagle had great wings and many feathers; but not equal to those of the other eagle. Yet the vine bent its roots, and shot its branches towards it; in order to be watered by the furrows of its plantation. Many suppose that this refers to the inundations of the Nile, and the manner in which Egypt was watered. Zedekiah planned a revolt from the king of Babylon, and entered into an alliance with the king of Egypt; either hoping to recover independence by his assistance; or preferring to be his vassal rather than Nebuchadnezzar's, as expecting greater prosperity and security under him. But he had no sufficient or even plausible reason for this conduct; being already in such a situation as would have enabled him to reign in credit, and to be useful to his people.

V. 9, 10. (15—21.) It could not be expected that the vine should prosper: the eagle that planted it would certainly root it up, destroy all its fruit, and cause all its leaves to wither, even in the spring when other trees looked green; and this would be done very easily, as the small force suffices to pull up a newly planted vine by the roots. Though it had been carefully planted and was well watered, yet it would soon wither in its place, as a tree by the blast of the unwholesome east wind.

V. 12. Know, &c. Will ye not apply your minds to understand what God speaks to you? and that, whether he direct his speech to you in plain words, or in riddles and parables? (Lomth.)
15 But he rebelled against him in sending his ambassadors into Egypt, that they might make him horses and much people. Shall he prosper? shall he escape that doeth such things? or shall he break the covenant, and be delivered?
16 As I live, saith the Lord God, surely in the place where the king dwelleth that made him king, whose oath he despised and whose covenant he brake, even with him in the midst of Babylon he shall die.

17 Neither shall Pharaoh, with his mighty army and great company, come for him in the war; by casting up mounts, and building forts, to cut off many persons:
18 Seeming he despised the oath by breaking the covenant, when, lo, he had given his hand, and hath done all these things, he shall not escape.
19 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; As I live, surely mine oath that he hath despised, and my covenant that he hath broken, even it will I recompence upon his own head.
20 And I will spread my net upon him, and he shall be taken in my snare, and I will bring him to Babylon, and will plead with him there, for his trespass that he hath trespassed against me.

21 And all his fugitives with all his bands shall fall by the sword, and they that remain shall be scattered toward all winds; and ye shall know that I the Lord have spoken it.

22 ¶ Thus saith the Lord God; I will also take of the highest branch of the high cedar, and will set it upon a tender one, and will plant it upon a high mountain and eminent.

23 In the mountain of the height of Israel will I plant it: and it shall bring forth boughs, and bear fruit, and be a goodly cedar: and under it shall dwell all fowl of every wing; in the shadow of the branches thereof shall they dwell.

24 And all the trees of the field shall know, that I the Lord have brought down the high tree, have exalted the low tree, have dried up the green tree, and have made the dry tree to flourish: that the Lord have spoken, and have done it.
CHAP. XVIII.

God reproves the Jews for the proverb of sour grapes, 1—4. He shows his dealings with a righteous man, 5—9; with the wicked son of a righteous father, 10—13; and with the righteous son of a wicked father, 14—18. He will deal with each individual according to his character, 19—21. The wicked, if he repent, shall live, 21—23; and the righteous, if he apostatize, shall die, 24.

was withered. Or the high and green tree may refer to the kingdom of Babylon, and all those other kingdoms, which have been, and will be, destroyed, to make way for the kingdom of Christ. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The greatest exploits of mighty conquerors, when impartially represented, resemble the ravages of birds and beasts of prey; except as their power and success render them more extensively destructive, and as they alone devour their own species. But they are employed by a righteous God, to perform a part of his grand design; and till their work be done, they prosper in their enterprises. It is more desirable to be like a spreading vine of low stature which brings forth fruit, than to prosper in doing evil; and if we be planted in the courts of the Lord, if our branches turn towards him, and our roots draw nourishment from him, we shall "be like a tree planted by the rivers of waters, which bringeth forth its fruit in due season." And should we be kept poor and obscure, and live hardly by honest industry, we shall notwithstanding be more comfortable, as well as more useful, than the most successful of the ungodly. But they who depart from God, can only vary and multiply their crimes, by exchanging one carnal confidence for another: and, notwithstanding their fair prospects and sanguine hopes, they never can attain to durable prosperity. Princes and politicians are apt to trifle with solemn oaths and treaties, and to devise specious pretences for violating them: but the Lord will not hold them guiltless who thus take his name in vain; and few of them will be able to plead more plausibly for perfidy and perjury, than Zedekiah might have done; against whom these awful threatenings were denounced, for breaking his covenant with the king of Babylon, and despising the oath sworn to him. Rulers and nations seldom prosper, who commit atrocious crimes; but no man shall escape the righteous judgment of God, who dies under the unrepentent guilt of such iniquity and impiety: for as sure as the Lord liveth, he will recompense them upon the sinner's head; and the sinfull methods which men take of extricating themselves out of difficulties, are sure to entangle them in snares and nets, to their greater misery or ruin. Blessed be God, our Redeemer, to whom all the prophets bare witness, differs wholly from these degenerate branches of the family of David. His word is truth, his arm is power, and his heart is love. He is planted upon a high and eminent mountain, that he may be conspicuous even to the ends of the earth: he is loaded with most precious fruit; sinners of every name find refuge from the wrath to come, and from every enemy and danger, under his shadow; and believers not only partake of his precious fruits, but are also made fruitful by him: yea, many of them are filled "with all the fruits of righteousness, which are through him to the praise and glory of God the Father." May every power, however flourishing and exulted, which opposes his cause, be brought low and withered; may his kingdom be exalted and prosper; and may the whole earth behold, and be filled with, his glory. Amen, and Amen.

NOTES.

CHAP. XVIII. V. 2. (Note, Jer. xxxi. 29, 30.) God had declared, both in the law and by the prophets, that he would punish the sins of the fathers upon the children unto several generations. He had traced back the ruin of the ten tribes to the idolatry of Jeroboam, who made Israel to sin, by establishing the worship of the golden calves; and he had charged the ruin of Judah on the sins of Manasseh. This was originally intended as an additional preservative from iniquity, especially from idolatry, which was likely to descend to their posterity, and entail judgments on them: it was an argument of the Lord's patience; for he would not immediately cast off his people, upon the first forfeiture of the covenant. It referred entirely to temporal calamities; and supposed that the generation on whom divine judgments were executed, imitated or exceeded the sins of their parents. God expressly threatens to visit the sins of the fathers upon the children, both in the Old and New Testament. (Marg. Ref.) but this is only to be understood with respect to the temporal punishments of this world, not with respect to the eternal punishments of the next. (Lowth.) —The Scripture takes notice of a certain measure of iniquity, which is filling up from one generation to another; till at last it makes a nation or family ripe for destruction. And although these persons on whom this vengeance falls, suffer no more than their own personal sins deserved; yet, because the sins of former generations, which they equal or outrivle, make it time for God utterly to destroy them, the punishment due to the sins of many generations are said to fall upon them. (Sherlock.) But
As I live, saith the Lord God, *ye shall not have occasion any more to use this proverb in Israel.

Behold, *all souls are mine; as the soul of the father, so also the soul of the son is mine: *the soul that sinneth, it shall die.

*But if a man be just, and do that which is lawful and right,

And hath *not eaten upon the mountains, neither hath lifted up his eyes to the idols of the house of Israel, neither hath defiled his neighbour's wife, neither hath come near to a menstruous woman,

And I have not oppressed any, but the Jews, being proudly disposed to justify themselves, and impiously to arrogate the divine conduct, spake and acted, as if they had been free from guilt, and suffered wholly for their father's sins: whereas their abominations far exceeded those of any former generation of Israel. With a mixture therefore of profaneness and wit, they invented a proverb, which soon came into common use. This implied that wickedness indeed merited punishment, and suffering might be expected as the effect of sin; even as the teeth being set on edge was the ordinary consequence of eating sour grapes: but that it was their hard case that their fathers had enjoyed the pleasure, (such as it was) of committing sin, and they had the pain of being punished for it, as if their guilty parents had wholly escaped with impunity; and as if themselves had been entirely blameless.

In the most solemn manner, the Lord assured the people, that he would bring this proverb into entire disuse, by exposing their crimes to public view, at the time when he executed vengeance upon them. It was absurd, as well as profane, to suppose, that he would punish the innocent instead of the guilty; seeing he had, as Creator, a sovereign right and power to deal with all men as he pleased. The life of one of a man was as much regarded by him as that of another: he had the soul of the father, no absolutely at his disposal: as that of the son; and he could have no motive for letting the one escape with impunity, in order to punish the other in his stead. But *the soul that sinneth it shall die. *According to the law, death, temporal and eternal, is the wages of every sin: and the improper sinner remains under this condemnation notwithstanding the Gospel. Some commentators explain this of the temporal death which was about to come on the wicked Jews, by sword, famine, and pestilence; and they would confine the whole chapter to these events. But it cannot be proved, that every righteous man escaped those temporal judgments, or that all who survived them were righteous: without which the whole interpretation must fall for want of a foundation. Many indeed of the pious Jews had "their lives given to them for a prey," but even what Jeremiah, Baruch, and others endured, in the siege and after the taking of Jerusalem, nearly equalled the external sufferings of many wicked men among them; and none of those who survived the siege, escaped captivity or exile. So that facts, in this particular, did not so fully ascertain the equality of the divine conduct towards these distinct characters, as this hypothesis requires. The miseries that the infants suffered during the siege; and the circumstances of such of them as survived and grew up in captivity, and at a great distance from the estates and comforts, which otherwise they would have inherited, demonstrate, that in temporal things the children actually did suffer far more than the sins of their parents, even though they did not imitate their crimes, nay, when they were themselves righteous persons. The same has always been the case as to temporal things: nor can even infidels deny the stubborn facts which prove, that the crimes of parents entail sufferings on their children. Indeed it must be allowed by men of all creeds and systems. Instead therefore of temporal dispensations being isolated: all that is intended in this remarkable chapter; it is evident that these were not at all meant, or in a very subordinate manner; for though Israel, as a nation, was under a peculiar dispensation as to temporal prosperity and adversity; yet it appears from various testimonies of the Old Testament, that individuals were not uniformly prospered or afflicted, according to their characters. (Ps. Lxxiii. Eccles. ix. 1, 2.) But in the great concerns of eternity every man was, and will be, dealt with according as his works evince him to have been under the old covenant of works, or the new covenant of grace; which is enough for the entire justification of the divine conduct, whatever temporal calamities men endure, through the sins of others: seeing they deserve for their own sins more than all which they thus suffer; and the Lord overrules everything for the eternal good of believers. The use of the singular number, through the whole of the argument, tends also to confirm this sentiment: as the case of individuals, and not that of the nation at large, was evidently intended.

V. 5—9. Some expositors explain these verses, as merely...
CHAPTER XVIII.

RELATING TO THE MANNER OF THE DIVINE JUDGMENTS.

10. If he beget a son, that is a robber, a shedder of blood, and that doeth all the like to any one of these things, he shall die for the sin of his father: he also that doeth not according to these judgments, shall not be cut off.

11. And he that doeth not all of these duties, but even hath eaten upon the mountains, and defiled his neighbour's wife, shall bear the iniquity of his father's.

12. Hath oppressed the poor and needy, hath spoiled by violence, hath not restored the pledge, and hath lifted up his eyes to the idols, he hath committed abomination, hath given forth upon usury, and hath taken increase: he shall not live: he hath done all these abominations: he shall surely die; his blood shall be upon him.

14. Now, lo, if he beget a son, that seeth all his father's sins which he hath done, and considers, and doeth not such like.

15. That hath not eaten upon the mountains, neither hath lifted up his eyes to the idols of the house of Israel, hath not defiled his neighbour's wife, hath not oppressed the poor and needy, hath not spoiled by violence, hath not given his bread to the hungry, and hath covered the naked with a garment,

17. Hath taken off his hand from the poor, hath not received usury nor increase, hath executed my judgments, hath walked in my statutes;

18. He shall not die for the iniquity of his father, he shall surely live.

The above passage describes the divine judgments and the manner in which they are to be carried out, emphasizing the importance of not engaging in certain behaviors such as robbery, violence, usury, and idol worship. The text also speaks to the inheritance of these sins, stating that if a child sees and considers the sins of their parent and chooses to follow a different path, they will not be punished for the sins of their ancestor. This passage provides a more distinguishing description of the believer's conduct to God and man. As, therefore, "He that doeth righteousness is born of God," and "He that doeth not righteousness is not of God;" and as living faith is known by its fruits, and distinguished from a dead faith; so God would certainly judge him whose character, in his sight, answered to this description, to be a righteous man, and an heir of eternal life. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 10-13. If this very man, who so satisfactorily had shown his faith by his works, had a son, whose character and conduct was the reverse of his father's; which might be the case, notwithstanding the good example set, and the good instructions given him: if he were a robber, a murderer, an adulterer, or idolater, an oppressor, or usurer, or guilty of other abominations: could it be expected that he should escape the vengeance of God on account of his father's piety? Surely no: though he might for a time fare better for the world; yet he would at last perish with deeper aggravation, and have himself to blame for his destruction. The cause of his ruin is in himself. Josiah was an eminently righteous father, whose children were notoriously wicked; yet the difference as to this world was not so great between him and them, as to accord to the vast difference in their character. He died in battle at the age of thirty-nine; and Jehoiakim, the most wicked of his sons, was slain at the age of thirty-six: but the one died in peace and went to glory; the other was cut off in his sins.

V. 14-17. It seems peculiarly absurd to explain this of the single generation of Israel in which the prophet lived, and of the temporal judgments that awaited them; when a succession of generations is expressly supposed in the illustrations given of the divine conduct. Should such a wicked man, as had been described, have a son, who, witnessing his father's sins, instead of imitating them, duly considered the evil of them: and so was led conscientiously to avoid them, and to walk before God as the righteous man before described did; relaxing even the hard impositions that had been laid upon the poor by his father, 18 As for his father, because he cruelly oppressed, spoiled his brother by violence, and did that which is not good among his people, lo, even he shall die in his iniquity.

19 Yet say ye, Why? doth not the son bear the iniquity of the father? When the son hath done that which is lawful and right, and hath kept all my statutes and hath done them, shall he surely live.

20 The soul that sinneth, it shall die. The son shall not bear the iniquity of the father, neither shall the father bear the iniquity of the son: the righteousness of the righteous shall be upon him, and the wickedness of the wicked shall be upon him.

21 ¶ But if the wicked will turn from all his sins that he hath committed, and keep all my statutes, and do that which is lawful and right, he shall surely live, he shall not die.

22 All that his transgressions that he hath committed, they shall not be mentioned unto him: in his righteousness that he hath done shall he live.

23 Have I any pleasure at all that the wicked should die? saith the Lord God; and not that he should return from his ways, and live?

V. 19, 20. Notwithstanding this condensation of the Lord, in explaining his dealings to the people, he foresaw they would still object, that it was evident the son did bear the iniquity of the father. To this he answered, that the son who had not copied his father's sins, but had lived a godly life, should surely be saved; and that they only should perish who had themselves deserved it. He that doeth righteously shall be graciously accepted; he that doeth evil shall reioce according to the wickedness he hath committed. (Bp. Hall.) (Notes, Is. iii. 10, 11. Rom. ii. 7—11.) Let it again be observed, that the question here is not about the meritorious ground of justification, but about the Lord's dealings with the righteous and the wicked. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 21, 22. In order to evince more undeniable, as well the justice of the Lord's dealings with his creatures, it is here further declared, that the wicked man himself, if he turned from his evil ways, would certainly be saved. (Note, Is. iii. 10, 19.) If that man, who hath been formerly wicked, shall now prove truly penitent, and turn from all his sins, and live holyly, he shall surely live and not die. (Bp. Hall.) He means the observation of the commandments with repentance; for no man can repent indeed, except he labour to keep the law. The true penitent is also a true believer; and as to the grand question of acceptance with God unto eternal life, none of his former transgressions shall be any more mentioned unto him; but in the righteousness which he hath done, as the fruit of faith and the effect of conversion, he shall surely live. How energetically it renders the passage, to explain it, that his sins should not be mentioned against him to his temporal punishment, though they might to his eternal damnation!
degree interrupt the perfect blessedness of the infinite God; may, many Scriptures show, that he takes pleasure in the display of his glory by punishing obstinate rebels; though he more delighteth in mercy. Neither must this general declaration be wrested by an application to those secret things which belong to God, and not to us. And we must not allow God to delight in mercy unless he show mercy in all possible cases, to the exclusion of his holiness, justice, truth, and wisdom, as the moral Governor of the world! Will they not allow him to be omnipotent, because he hath not created all the worlds which possibly might have been created? May he not be allowed to be good, because he hath not absolutely excluded evil from the creation, which he doubtless could have done? All such objections are the offspring of pride, ignorance, unbelief, and enmity: and whilst vain men would be wise, they are often little aware that they are running into direct blasphemy. In respect both of temporal and eternal retributions, infinite wickedness directs, and seems, (but only seems,) to limit the exercise of divine goodness and mercy. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 24. (Note, iii. 20, 21.) The question here is not, whether truly righteous men ever do thus apostatize. It is certain many who were thought righteous do; and dying without repentance, they must surely perish. This suffices to show the equality of the Lord's dealings with men, which is the subject of the chapter.

V. 25. Unequal, &c. The Jews rebelled against God, robbed him of his glory, and committed manifold abominations; and then they blasphemously charged the Lord with injustice in punishing them for the sins of their fathers. SO that their conduct was the very reverse of the justice, truth, goodness, and mercy of the Lord's dealings with them; and they had none to blame for their miseries except themselves.

V. 26. 27. 28. (Note, ii. 20, 21.) It is an opinion, that prevails among the Jews even till this day, that at the day of judgment a considerable number of good actions shall overbalance men's evil ones: so that they thought it a hard case for a man, who had been righteous the far greatest part of his life, if he did at last commit iniquity, that his former righteousness should avail him nothing. In opposition to this doctrine, God here declares, that a righteous man sinning and not repenting, should die in his sins, and that a wicked man, upon his repentance, should save his soul alive. (Lewth.) Notwithstanding this plain declaration, it is obvious, that the notion, current among the Jews, is equally current among the generality of professed Christians; though directly opposite to the whole doctrine of Scripture, and even subversive of it. For, the condemnation of every transgressor by the holy law; salvation by free grace, justification by faith, through the righteousness and atonement of Christ; the necessity of regeneration, the sinfulness of all the supposed good works of the unregenerate and unbelieving; and the great and many defects of the real good works of true believers, with many other doctrines essential to Christianity, must be entirely set aside, before such a scheme of final retribution can be made so much as plausible.

V. 27. We have here, as it were, the beginning and progress of repentance. The man is "come to himself," and he considers, where he is, what he hath done, and against whom he hath offended: he considers the evil, number, and desert of his sins; what cause he hath to be humbled and alarmed; and what need he hath of repentance, conversion, forgiveness, and newness of life. In consequence he turneth from all his transgressions, and obtaineth mercy. Is not this the very same repentance which is delineated in the parable of the Prodigal Son?
10. Thy mother is like a vine in thy blood, planted by the waters: she was fruitful and full of branches, by reason of many waters.

11. And she had strong rods for the sceptres of them that bare rule, and her stature was exalted among the thick branches, and she appeared in her height with the multitude of her branches.

12. But she was plucked up by fury, she was cast down to the ground, and the east wind dried up her fruit: her strong rods were broken and withered; the fire consumed them.

13. And now she is planted in the wilderness, in a dry and thirsty ground.

14. And fire is gone out of a rod of her branches, which hath devoured her fruit, so that she hath no strong rods to be a sceptre to rule. This is a lamentation, and shall be for a lamentation.

NOTES.

CHAP. XIX. V. 2—9. The inquiry and answer must not be understood of the mother of Zedekiah, or of the other branches of Josiah's family, but of the Jewish church and nation; which is represented under the image of a lioness, because of the cruelty and oppression which generally prevailed: for the rulers and people of Judah seemed to have lost their humanity, and to have been transformed into savage beasts. The lioness lay down among lions; that is, the Jews formed alliances with the heathen, and learned their manners. Thus she brought up her whelps with lions: that is, the sons of Josiah, though descended from so good a father, yet learned from the people and princes and the surrounding nations, to be ambitious, oppressive, and rapacious, like the tyrants and conquerors of the Gentiles. When Josiah was slain, the people of Jerusalem made Jehoahaz king in his stead: and this lioness, whelp, being advanced to royal authority, became a young lion, and soon learned to use his power in oppression and cruelty. But Pharaoh-neco and his allies came against him, and took him as a wild beast in a pit; and he was carried thence in chains into Egypt, where he died. And when the people saw there were no hopes of his return, they submitted to Jehoiasikm, whom Pharaoh had appointed to be king. Thus he became their young lion; and used his power for eleven years most cruely; desolating the palaces, cities, and country, by the terror of his oppressions. (Marg. Ref.) At length he drew on him the hatred and vengeance of the king of Babylon, and the surrounding nations; and he was taken prisoner, and ended his life miserably: so that the terror of his roaring, and no more disturbed the mountains of Israel. The captivity of Jeconiah, and of Zedekiah, are not here expressly mentioned: Jeconiah reigned a very short time, and Zedekiah seems rather to have been a timid than a tyrannical prince.

V. 10—13. The Jewish nation, and their princes, are here represented under the emblem of a vine, with many branches. This expression "in thy blood" is obscure, and differently interpreted. Some say, that blood was commonly put at the roots of vines to enrich the soil, and render them more fruitful: or, "in thy quietness." Thy mother is like a vine, in the time of her first peacable plantation. (Bp. Hall.) So long as Judah continued to behave peaceably, and her subjects quietly submitted to Nebuchadnezzar, they enjoyed many blessings, which they forfeited by revolting. (Notes, xix.) This vine was planted by many waters, became fruitful, had many branches, and amongst them strong rods for sceptres, that is, powerful princes had reigned over them, under whom Judah appeared very considerable among the neighbouring kings and nations. But when the Lord, in anger, had plucked it up, thrown it on the ground, and left it, with all its strong rods, to wither and be burned. That is, the strength and prosperity of the kingdom were decayed and come to nothing. The remnant of this vine was now planted in a barren and dry land: her branches were continually consumed; her princes were slain and carried away captive; and there were none left, except a successor of inexperienced, feeble, and worthless princes, who were speedily about to be entirely deprived of the throne.

V. 14. A destruction is risen from among themselves, even from the treachery of Zedekiah, which hath utterly destroyed the remainder of her hopes; so that now there is no more likelihood of any of the royal blood being exalted to the government. (Bp. Hall.) This is a matter of present lamentation, and shall be so in after times. (Luth.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

They who associate with ungodly and abandoned persons, will soon be assimilated to them; and when professors of religion form such connexions, their children generally grow up in conformity to the worst maxims and fashions of a wicked world. Having cast off the fear of God, they often seem to be divested even of humanity, and to be transformed into savage beasts: and that most noble and royal blood, of which so many are proud, only makes them distinguish them, as lions' whelps, from the other beasts of prey. Advancement to authority discovers the ambition and selfishness of men's hearts: and many know no use of power, except as it enables them to catch the prey, and devour their own species. But they who are thus the plague and terror of their neighbours, may expect to be hated and terrified in their turn: they are often hunted and laid wait for like wild beasts: and as they spend their lives in mischief, they generally end them by violence. Yet men proceed in the same bloody track, without profiting by the example of their predecessors! It is, and must be for a lamentation, that pious and useful families so soon degenerate, and flourishing churches and nations are so speedily rooted up and withered. But in all these events...
CHAPTER XX.

God refuseth to be inquired of by certain elders of Israel, 1—3. His dealings with the people, and their rebellions, in Egypt, 4—9; in the wilderness, 10—26; and in Canaan, 27—29; imitated by that generation, 30—32. While the rebels will be rigorously punished, a chosen remnant shall be gathered into their own land, as acceptable worshippers and humble penitents, 33—44. The destruction of Jerusalem foretold, by a parable of a forest, 45—49.

And it came to pass in the seventh year, in the fifth month, the tenth day of the month, that certain of the elders of Israel came to inquire of the Lord, and sat before me.

Then came the word of the Lord unto me, saying,

Son of man, speak unto the elders of Israel, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Are ye come to inquire of me? As I live, saith the Lord God, I will not be inquired of by you.

Wilt thou judge them, son of man, wilt thou judge them? cause them to hear the abominations of their fathers.

And say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; In the day when I chose Israel, and lifted up mine hand unto the seed of the house of Jacob, and made myself known unto them in the land of Egypt, when I lifted up mine hand unto them, saying, I am the Lord your God; in the day that I lifted up mine hand unto them, to bring them from the land of Egypt, into a land that I had espied for them, flowing with milk and honey, which is the glory of all lands:

Then said I unto them, Cast ye away every man the abominations of his eyes, and defile not yourselves with the idols of Egypt. I am the Lord your God.

But they rebelled against me, and would not hearken unto me; they did not cast out every man his abominations from among them, neither did they forsake the idols of Egypt; therefore I said, I will pour out my fury upon them, to accomplish my anger against them in the midst of the land of Egypt.

But I wrought for my name's sake, that it should not be polluted before the heathen, among whom they were, in whose sight I made myself known unto them, in bringing them forth out of the land of Egypt.

NOTES.

CHAP. XX. V. 1—3. 'All the prophets, reckoned from the sixth chapter to this, probably belong to the sixth year of Jehoiachin's captivity.' (Louth, Notes, viii. 1. xiv. 1—5.) Many conjectures have been formed about these elders and the subject of their inquiry: but it suffices for us to know, that they were addicted to idolatry, and that their inquiry was either a mere pretence, or they vainly attempted to serve God and idols also. Therefore the Lord saith by himself, that he would not be inquired of by them. (Marg. Ref.) 'You shall not receive such an answer as you expect, but such as your hypothesis deserves.' (Louth.)

V. 4. Some think, that the prophet attempted to plead with God in behalf of these elders, (according to the marginal translation;) but perhaps he was thus invited and required, to act as their judge, to bring them to a trial, and having proved their guilt, to denounce sentence in the name of God against them. In order to do this, he must set in order before them the abominations of their fathers, of which their own conduct was an exact copy. (Notes, xvi. xxiii. Marg. Ref.)

V. 5, 6. The Lord's choice of Israel, to be his people, was the source of all their privileges: in consequence of this, he made himself known to them by his word and works, when they had generally forgotten him; he did in order that they might become his worshippers and servants. He lifted up his hand to them, as was customary in solemn oaths, engaging himself to be their God, to effect their deliverance, and to bring them into Canaan; which he had, so to speak, searched out for them, as the most fertile and excellent land on earth; a type of heaven, that chosen inheritance of God's chosen people. (Lifted up, &c.) 'I assure thee that I would be their God, which manner of oath was observed from all antiquity, where they used to lift up their hands towards the heaven, acknowledging God to be the Author of truth, and the Defender thereof, and also the Judge of the heart; wishing that he should take vengeance, if they concealed any thing which they knew to be truth.' (Marg. Ref.)
10. Wherefore I caused them to go forth out of the land of Egypt, and brought them into the wilderness.

11. And I gave them my statutes, and shewed them my judgments, which if a man do, he shall even live in them.

12. Moreover also I gave them my sabbaths, to be a sign between me and them, that they might know that I am the Lord that sanctify them.

13. But the house of Israel rebelled against me in the wilderness; they walked not in my statutes, and despised my judgments; and they profaned my sabbaths.

V. 7-9. When the Lord had engaged himself to be Israel's God, and to confer every blessing on them; and whilst he was working so many miracles in their behalf, he reasonably commanded them to cast away all those abominable idols, which they looked up to and worshipped: and especially those of the Egyptians their oppressors, which could not defend their devotees against the power of Jehovah the God of Israel. But even there, the Israelites rebelled against him, and clave to their idols: insomuch that the reason he saw to say that he would pour out his fury on them in the land of Egypt; that is, he justly might, and certainly would, have destroyed them with the Egyptians, if he had dealt with them according to their deserts. But having called "Israel his son, and his first-born," and having undertaken his deliverance; the Egyptians would have imputed it to his want of power if he had not effected it; they would have concluded, that he was not the only true and living God, and hence been hardened in idolatry and blasphemy. Therefore, for the glory of his own name, and to make his perfections known among the Egyptians and the surrounding nations, he spared Israel, and delivered him with his mighty hand and out-stretched arm. The honour of his truth and mercy were also concerned, and required, that he should perform his promises made to their fathers.

V. 11. Gate, A favour not afforded to other nations—such a treasure as David prizes above thousands of gold and silver. (Lowth.) (Marg. Ref.)

—If a man, &c. (Note, Lev. xviii. 5.) The moral law showed Israel the extent of their duty to God and man; and proved their need of mercy and grace, as well as served for the rule of their conduct; the ceremonial law shadowed forth Christ, their Righteousness and Sanctification. They who properly attended to these judgments and statutes of the Lord, in a humble, believing, and conscientious obedience, would live in them, according to the covenant of grace; and a national observation of these laws and statutes would have ensured Israel's prosperity in Canaan. Yet the manner in which St. Paul quotes this expression, (Rom. x. 5. Gal. iii. 12.) implies, that it was intended to show the Jews, that righteousness could not be obtained by the works of the law: and this well suited the argument in this place; as it served to mark the contrary between the holy law, the rule of obedience, and Israel's rebellious conduct. So that evidently he had no claim either to temporal advantages or eternal life, by the law to which they trusted; as those blessings could only be claimed by such as had done according to the commandments, and not by those that had violated them all. (Note, Rom. ii. 13. 17—29.) If we understand the condition in its rigorous sense, as implying an exact and unsinning obedience, and as the word life contains the promise of eternal life under it; as it was impossible to be performed, so no person could lay claim to eternal life by virtue of any promise therein contained; from whence St. Paul infers the necessity of seeking to Christ and laying hold of the promises of the Gospel, for the obtaining justification and eternal life. (Lowth.) The promises in the Old Testament, of pardon, acceptance, and sanctification, and, in a word, of spiritual blessings, belong to the Gospel, as much as those in the New Testament. (2 Cor. i. 20. Heb. vi. 17, 18. viii. 10—12. xii. 13.)

V. 12. The Lord, as a special favour, gave Israel his sabbaths; (which included the holy rest of the weekly sabbaths, and also that of the solemnities and sabbatical years.) These were signs of their special relation to him, as his people: for at those stated times they met him with their worship, and he engaged to meet them with his blessings. They likewise marked and kept up the distinction and separation between them and the Gentiles; and served to bring them more acquainted with God, his perfections, truth, and holy will: so that they were appointed means of sanctification to their souls.

V. 13, 14. (Marg. Ref.) The people in the wilderness were continually rebelling against God; they seemed to think his service a mean and irksome employment. They preferred the worship of the golden calf, and the idols of Egypt and Moab, to his statutes, which were too spiritual to suit their carnal hearts. They also profaned greatly his sabbaths; neglecting the duties of those holy days, and employing them in worldly avocations, or in secret idolatry and wickedness. So that regard to his own glory alone, prevented him from utterly exterminating them in the wilderness.

V. 15. The Lord swore in his wrath, that none of 16 Because they despised my judgments, and walked not in my statutes, but polluted my sabbaths: for their heart went after their idols.

17 Nevertheless mine eye spared them from destroying them, neither did I make an end of them in the wilderness.

18 But I said unto their children in the wilderness, Walk ye not after your fathers' statutes, neither observe their judgments, nor defile yourselves with their idols:

19 I am the Lord your God; walk in my statutes, and keep my judgments, and do them;

20 And I hallow my sabbaths; and they shall be a sign between me and you, that ye may know that I am the Lord your God.

21 Notwithstanding, the children rebelled against me: they walked not in my statutes, neither kept my judgments, nor did they, even if a man do, he shall even live in them; they polluted my sabbaths: then I said, I would pour out my fury upon them, to accomplish my anger against them in the wilderness.

22 Nevertheless, I withdrew mine hand, and wrought for my name's sake, that it should not be polluted in the sight of the heathen, in whose sight I brought them forth.

23 I lifted up mine hand unto them also in the wilderness, that I would scatter them among the heathen, and disperse them through the countries:

24 Because they had not executed my judgments, but had despised my statutes, and had polluted my sabbaths, and their eyes were after their fathers' idols.

25 Wherefore I gave them also statutes that were not good, and judgments whereby they should not live;

26 And I polluted them in their own gifts, in that they caused to pass through the fire all that opened the womb, that I might make them desolate, to the end that they might know that I am the Lord.

that generation, that had despised the promised land and attempted to return into Egypt, should enter into his rest: but that they should all wander, and die, in the wilderness, except Caleb and Joshua. (Notes, Num. xiv.)

V. 16. Heart. They still had a hankering after the idolatries they had learned in Egypt; to which they added ed new idols, viz. the idols of the Midianites, Amorites, &c. (Lomth.)

V. 17. The Lord spared the rising generation, that his promises to their fathers might be fulfilled to them: whilst his wrath was poured out on those that were grown up. His purposes respecting the nation were similar in the time of Ezekiel: he was determined to destroy multitudes by his awful judgments, and to drive them all out of the land of Canaan; but he meant to preserve a remnant, whose children should again inherit the land; and to them he would fulfill his promises, especially that of the Messiah, who would be raised up among them.

V. 18. Whereby the Holy Ghost confuteth them that say they will follow the religion and example of their fathers, and not measure their doings by God's word, whether they be approvable thereby or not. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 21, 22. Even that generation which grew up in the wilderness, and lived in the midst of miracles both of judgment and mercy, was frequently rebellious against the Lord, as it appears by the history of their conduct, and by the reproofs given them by Moses. It is, however, evident, that they were much improved by the instructions and judgments of God; and that the generation that entered Canaan, was the best which there ever was of that favoured nation: and indeed the language concerning them, in this passage, is by no means so emphatical as that used concerning their fathers, (15.) Yet God might have justly destroyed them all, (as he did numbers in the matter of Baal-peor:) and he certainly would, had not a regard to his own glory among the surrounding nations, and to the honour of his own truth and grace, influenced him still to spare and bless them.

V. 23. The predictions of the dispersion of the Israelites, which were delivered by Moses just before his death, are evidently here referred to. They had a partial accomplishment in the Babylonian captivity; but they are far more exactly fulfilling at this day.

V. 25, 26. God in a just judgment for their disobedience to his own laws, gave them up to a reprobate mind, and suffered them to walk after the idolatries and impious practices of the heathen. And whereas, by obeying his laws, they might have lived happily, they became slaves to the vile and cruel practices of the heathen idolatries; so as to offer up their very children in sacrifice to idols. I suffered them to pollute themselves, in those very gifts, which by the law they were to dedicate to my service, (the form of Hiphil is elsewhere used in the sense of permission.) Their sin brought its own punishment along with it, destroying the hopes of families and bringing them to utter desolation. (Lomth.)

The first-born were by the law consecrated to God, but they devoted them to Baal or Molech. Because they would not obey my laws, I gave them up to themselves that they should obey their own fancies. It is astonishing to find, many very learned and able men contend, that the statutes which were not good, meant the law of Moses, or some part of it; when the prophet evidently spoke of a much later time than the giving of the law.
chapter 27

Therefore, son of man, speak unto the house of Israel, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Yet in this your fathers have blasphemed me, in that they have committed a trespass against me.

28 For when I had brought them into the land, for the which I lifted up mine hand to give it to them, then they saw every high hill, and all the thick trees, and they offered there their sacrifices, and there they presented the provocation of their offering: there also they made their sweet savour, and poured out there their drink-offerings.

29 Then said I unto them, What is the high place whereunto ye go? And the name thereof is called Baanah unto this day.

30 Wherefore say unto the house of Israel, Thus saith the Lord God; Are ye polluted after the manner of your fathers? and commit ye whoredom after their abominations?

31 For when ye offer your gifts, when ye make your sons to pass through the fire, ye pollute yourselves with all your idols, even unto this day: and shall I be inquired of by you, O house of Israel? As I live, saith the Lord God, I will not be inquired of by you.

32 And that which cometh into your mind shall not be at all, that ye say, We will be as the heathen, as the families of the countries, to serve wood and stone.

33 As I live, saith the Lord God; surely with a mighty hand, and with a stretched-out arm, and with fury poured out, will I rule over you:

34 And I will bring you out from the people, and will gather you out of the countries wherein ye are scattered, with a mighty hand, and with a stretch-

V. 29. The Lord frequently called the people to account by his prophets, for these provocations: he inquired of them. What the high place was, to which they went up, that they should so prefer it to his temple? he exposed the very word to odium, that it might sound as offensive in the ears of his worshippers, as a brodeth does in those of a virtuous woman; yet so attached were they to these high-places, throughout all their generations; that they still retained the name Banah, or the high place, as the favourite appellation for the places where they sacrificed. What is the high place, or Banah, which you frequent? Who bade you call it so? I named my altar Misbaach (the Hebrew word for altar;) but this place had its name from the heathen idolatry, and it still retains it. (Lomh.) (Marg. Ref.)

V. 30—32. The Jews ought not to conclude, that they were about to suffer only for their fathers' sins, for they were polluted with the same idolatries and abominations. Nay, the elders, that sat before the prophet, (by whom the Lord would not be inquired of,) were projecting entirely to cast off his worship, and to conform to the idolatries of the people among whom they lived; that they might obtain their favour, share their prosperity, and escape from present affliction and reproach. But the Lord solemnly assured them, that he would not prosper them in this impious attempt: their apostasy would expose them to far severer punishment, than the people would suffer to that had been educated in idolatry; they would not be considered as aliens, but as traitors and deserters, who had joined the enemy, and must expect no quarter or mercy.

God tells them, that he will prevent this purpose of theirs from taking effect: and we find, that from the Babylonish captivity, they have been very cautious of committing idolatry, and scrupulous in making the least approaches to it. (Lomh.)
ed-out arm, and with fury poured out.

35 And I will bring you into the wilderness of the people, and there will I plead with you face to face.

36 Like as I pleaded with your fathers in the wilderness of the land of Egypt, so will I will plead with you, saith the Lord God.

37 And I will cause you to pass under the rod, and I will bring you into the bond of the covenant:

38 And I will purge out from among you the rebels, and them that transgress against me: I will bring them forth out of the country where they sojourn, and they shall not enter into the land of Israel; ye and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

39 As for you, O house of Israel, thus saith the Lord God; Go ye, serve ye every one his idols, and after that also, if ye will not hearken unto me: but pollute ye my holy name no more with your gifts, and with your idols.

40 For in mine holy mountain, in the mountain of the height of beauty, saith the Lord God, there shall all the house of Israel abide, and no more of them shall be cut off from the house of Israel.

V. 33-38. The Lord further declared, that he would assert his authority over the inhabitants of the land, by the power and terrible vengeance that he would inflict upon them. He would separate them from among the inhabitants of the land, upon which they had been driven, with whom they attempted to unite themselves: he would bring them into a position like that of their fathers in the wilderness. There he would plead his cause with them, and make them pass under the rod, as the shepherd does the flock, while he distinguishes between the sheep and the goats, or marks out some of them for slaughter: and he would bring them into the bond of the covenant, or deal with them according to it; enforcing the bond, and exacting the penalty, as to the obstinate rebels; and again ratifying it with the penitent and obedient, and showing them mercy according to it. Thus he would destroy from among them the rebels; as he had done from among their fathers, previous to their entrance into Canaan; whom, having brought out of Egypt, he would not suffer to enter into the promised rest. The passage seems to refer to the whole of the Lord's dealings with Israel, from the time when this prophecy was delivered, to the establishment of a small remnant of them in their own land, after the captivity; from among whom the idolaters and idolatry itself were completely destroyed, by their manifold desolations, and the terrible havoc made among them. These events are accommodated to the history of Israel's being brought out of Egypt, and purged in the wilderness, before they entered Canaan; though we find not any thing in history, which seems literally to answer to the prediction: but there was a great resemblance in these two distant dispensations. Many, however, suppose, that the dealings of God with the Jews, in after ages, both of judgment and mercy, are foretold.

V. 39. An ironical permission, full of indignation and rebuke; sharply upbraiding them for despising those many warnings which God had given them; and implying that he was resolved to give them up to strong delusions, as a just judgment for their abuse of the means of grace, so long offered to them, and still rejected by them. (Lomth.) In abhorrence and disdain of their wickedness, he bade them follow their beloved idols, and take the consequent, both at the present and in future. Let them take the lead of them at their peril, seeing they would not hearken to him: but let them no more profane and affront his name by joining him with their dunghill gods, and offering sacrifices both to him and them.

V. 40-44. In the Christian Church, called God's holy mountain, in allusion to the temple at Jerusalem.

The prophet expresses the Christian worship by those religious observances, which were proper to his own time: as the other prophets frequently describe the Christian Church, by representations taken from the Jewish temple and service. (Lomth.) God promised to raise up to himself a large company of spiritual worshippers, when he had destroyed the rebels from among his people. He would restore Israel to their own land, and would worship him on mount Zion, the eminent and honourable place which he had chosen. There would they
Moreover the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

45 Son of man, set thy face toward the south, and drop thy word toward the south, and prophesy against the forest of the south field;

46 And say to the forest of the south, Hear the word of the Lord: Thus saith the Lord God: Behold, I will kindle a fire in thee, and it shall devour every fuel and oblation: he would be honoured in them among the heathen; and they would know and worship him alone, when he had gathered them from their dispersions into their own land: for they would remember their sins and abhor themselves for them, as true penitents; and they would acknowledge, that he had dealt with them in mercy and for the glory of his name, and not according to their deservings. This was fulfilled in part, by their restoration from captivity: but it seems to be a prediction of the establishment of the Christian Church: and also of the future conversion of the Jews, and their restoration to their own land. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 45-48. These verses are the beginning of another prophecy, and belong properly to the next chapter. The prophet was ordered to look southward toward the land of Israel: and though he was about to prophesy against it, his word would drop as the dew or rain; for he would speak with gravity and temper, as one who sought the conversion and not the ruin of the people. (Marg. Ref.)

The land of Israel, or the city of Jerusalem had been as a cultivated vineyard; but it was now become a forest, filled with unfruitful trees, abounding with beasts of prey, and about to be cut down and burned. For the Lord was determined to consume the whole forest, both green and dry trees together, that is, persons of all ranks and characters, (xxiv. 3, 4.) and all the inhabitants of the land, with all their allies, would be scorched or consumed by it; and thus it would be generally known, that the Lord had kindled the fire, and that it was in vain for man to attempt to quench it.

V. 49. They make this argument for disregarding what I say, that I use so many similitudes and metaphorical expressions, that they can't discover my meaning; (xxiv. 9.) whereupon God commands him in the next chapter to speak the same thing in plain terms. (Lowth.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-9.

It is incumbent on ministers to charge men's sins upon their consciences, as well as to pray for them, that they may be convicted and saved: when this is done in a scriptural manner, they judge and pass sentence on the wicked, and God will ratify their decisions in heaven, and produce them at last day; except the criminals judge and condemn themselves, and seek his mercy and salvation. It is a dreadful case, when sinners provoke God to swear in his wrath, that he will no more be inquired of by them; and when he gives them up to their lusts and idols: determines to receive no services from them, and says of the barren fig-trees, "Let no fruit grow on you henceforth for ever." Their condemnation then becomes irreversible, and nothing remains for them, but "a certain fearful looking for of judgment and fiery indignation." In ordinary circumstances, however, none can know this to be their case. Persons of this awful character are always hardened either in presumption or despair; and whilst these alarming subjects should teach us to beware of hypocrisy, no upright inquirer need be discouraged by them; for all who seek salvation in the Lord's way, shall certainly find it. If he had waited till some of our fallen race had merited his favour, or appeared meet objects of his complacency; may, till any of us had been disposed to inquire after him and return to him; not one have been saved. His free love to rebels and enemies moved him to promise and give the great Redeemer: he mercifully sent his word to us, as he did to Israel in Egypt; he made himself known to us, when we were "enemies in our mind by wicked works," and being thus found of us when we sought him not, he taught us to seek his favour, and an interest in his covenanted mercies. Thus he became our God and Portion, and we his worshippers and servants: he word and oath became the security of our souls, and the warrant of our consolations, when we "sought refuge to lay hold on this hope set before us." and we then learned to expect liberty and victory, and an inheritance in that heavenly country, which he hath searched out for his chosen people. But in the day, when the Lord thus makes himself known to sinners, and of his great love where with he hath loved them even when dead in sins," calls them to life and salvation; he also commands them to cast away all their idols and iniquities, and to defile themselves no more with the abominations of the ungodly world around them; that they may be his people "to show forth his praise." Yet if we look back to the important season, when we were first awakened to a sense of our guilt and danger; and remember our reluctance to part with our idolized interests, pleasures, and pursuits; and to bear the requisite cross, reproach, and self-denial: if we consider the opposition, that our hearts made to the blinding doctrines and holy precepts of God's word; or to our procrastination, and the sins which we persist in committing against the convictions of our consciences and the strivings of the Holy Spirit: we shall be constrained to confess, that the Lord wrought with us, "for his own name's sake," and "for the glory of his grace."
would have left us even then to our own perverseness and rebellion, or have cut us off in his righteous indignation. For many of us are conscious, that at no moment of our lives did more of the enmity of our hearts against God and his authority and sovereignty appear, than just before he made us willing by his power, to leave all and follow Christ.

V. 10—49.

It has been repeatedly observed, that the believer, all his journey through, is conscious of many evils in his temper and conduct; and is continually constrained to confess, that he never could have escaped destruction, if God had not wrought with him for his name’s sake, and not according to his own doings. He has deserved wrath in numberless instances: and he would have turned back and perished a thousand times over, had it been possible, if he had been left to himself. He is therefore more and more disposed to remember his ways and doings, and to loathe and abhor himself, and to give the whole glory of his salvation, from first to last, to the mere mercy and distinguishing grace of God alone. And when he enters heaven, that happy land of promise, (which differs from Canaan, as rebellion, pollution, enemies, and sufferings are for ever excluded;) he is prepared to cast his crown before the throne, and praise redeeming love; and to offer spiritual sacrifices, in that holy mountain, suited to his obligations and his love of his God and Saviour.

In like manner, had not the Lord wrought for his own name’s sake, his visible Church must long since have been destroyed: but his honour is concerned in its preservation, lest his name should be profaned amongst idolaters and infidels. The Lord hath given us his oracles and ordinances, his law and his Gospel, for the rule of our conduct and the foundation of our hope: and they are suited, in the proper use of them, to promote our present comfort, and to direct us in the way to everlasting life. He hath also given us his sabbaths, his own day to be kept holy, as a sign of our relation to him, our Creator and Redeemer; and that, in rendering him on it the worship due to his name, we may receive from him the sanctifying grace of his Holy Spirit, to “purify us unto himself a peculiar people zealous of good works.” But wherever we look, we observe multitudes that are called Christians, who do not walk in his statutes, but despise his judgments, and greatly pollute his sabbaths. For their hearts go after their idols: worldly gain, sensual or dissipated pleasure, or other carnal objects, are eagerly pursued even on the Lord’s day; and if men serve the devil, the world, and the flesh on this holy day: we cannot suppose, that they serve any better Master on other days.

Alas! it is a very small remnant, even in this highly favoured land, who delight in sanctifying the day of God because they honour and love his ordinances, truths, and precepts; and this remnant are despised as precise and narrow-minded, for obeying the plain word of God, which others generally profess to believe! Thus from time to time, the Church, or different parts of it, become greatly corrupted in every respect: and the Lord gives us vast numbers to follow their own traditions, lists, and delusions; until their very gifts and services become their greatest abominations. At length he executes his judgments upon them, as he did on Israel in the wilderness; and having by severe discipline destroyed many of the rebels from among them, and reformed the remainder, he commands them not to walk in the statutes of their fathers, but to keep his judgments and do them. Then perhaps for a time spiritual religion revives: but soon the power of godliness begins to decline, dangerous errors, abominable idolatries, or immoralities creep in; and it again becomes necessary by judgments and corrections to plead against them; again to purge out the rebels from among them, and to bring forth a company refined as gold from the furnace: or else to take away their privileges from them, and confound them on some other people.

In these ways, the Lord hath, from the beginning, wrought with his Church for his name’s sake; and hath purified her from time to time, instead of utterly destroying her: and his word engages and his honour requires, that he should still have a people on earth; that the gates of hell should never prevail against his Church; and that his cause should finally prevail. But they who remain so insensible and wicked amidst the means of grace, as to cast off his worship, that they may be like the heathen to serve wood and stone, or to live without Christ and without God in the world, may be assured, that they will never prosper in such an impious project. With a mighty hand and an out-stretched arm, the Lord will assert his authority; and if idolatrous Israelites were so severely dealt with, of how much more punishment will apostate Christians be thought worthy! The same gracious dispensation, which ensures the salvation of every believer, denounces deeper condemnation on the unbelieving and rebellious: if the rod of the covenant do not bring men to repentance, and to walk with God according to the gracious tenour of it, he will execute upon them the punishment due to the despisers of it: and if any part of his vineyard become a forest of unfruitful trees, he will soon burn it up with unquenchable fire.—Men often deride or revile the truths of God, as if they were obscure and unintelligible: when in fact they understand so much of them, as to hate the light that condemns them. But whilst others cavil at God’s word, or form projects of rebellion: it is our wisdom to humble ourselves before him, and to beg of him to glorify himself in our salvation.

4 A 2
2 Son of man, set thy face toward Jerusalem, and drop thy word toward the holy places, and prophesy against the land of Israel.

3 And say to the land of Israel, Thus saith the Lord; Behold, I am against thee, and will draw forth my sword out of his sheath, and will cut off from thee the righteous and the wicked.

4 Seeing then that I will cut off from thee the righteous and the wicked, therefore shall my sword go forth out of his sheath against all flesh, from the south to the north:

5 That all flesh may know that I the Lord have drawn forth my sword out of his sheath: it shall not return any more.

6 Sigh therefore, thou son of man, with the breaking of thy loins; and with bitterness of heart before your eyes.

7 And it shall be, when they say unto thee, Wherefore seest thou thus? say, It is because the house of Israel have sinned, and will not hear; therefore saith the Lord; Behold, my heart shall melt, and all hands shall be feeble, and the spirit shall faint, and all knees shall be weak as water: behold, it shall be, if every spirit shall faint, and all knees be feeble, as the Loard saith.

8 And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

9 Son of man, prophesy, and say, Thus saith the Lord; Say, A sword, a sharp sword, is sharpened, and also furnished: it is sharpened that it may glitter; it is furnished that it may slaughter; it is furnished that it may make a sore slaughter:

10 It is sharpened to make a sore slaughter; it is furnished that it may make a sore slaughter; it is furnished that it may make a sore slaughter; it is furnished that it may make a sore slaughter.

11 Behold, it is a sign unto thee, saith the Lord God.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXII. V. 2—5. These verses evidently explain the parable at the close of the former chapter. Jerusalem and the land of Israel were intended by "the holy places", etc., to mean the temple, its courts, the holy city, and the holy land. The Lord, who had so long been known as the prince of Judah "as a sure Refuge," was at length turned against them, and was about to draw his sword to cut off both the righteous and the wicked. As he had determined on this indiscriminate slaughter and devastation, he would commission his sword, with which he would destroy the Chaldean army, the same as the fire in the preceding chapter, that was to devour both the green and the dry trees.

CHAP. XXII. V. 6—7. To give these awful predictions the greater emphasis, the prophet was ordered to sigh deeply and frequently in the presence of the elders, or of the captive Jews; as if his heart would break, or his loins be racked with pain, like the anguish of a woman in travail; as afterwards he was ordered to cry and howl for the same reason.

V. 9, 10. The sword of war was given into the hands of the Chaldeans by the just indignation of God; and it was sharpened, that it might do the more terrible execution, and furnished, that its very glinting might cause the greater alarm. The Jews it seemed thought that this could not make the alarm generals prepare for the sword, and rusts in the scabbard: but they would soon learn, that it was made ready for use, and would be employed against them. Was it then a time for them to rejoice and indulge in sensual mirth? or to deride God's threatenings? and did not their circumstances rather call on them to join with the prophet in sighs and lamentations?

CHAP. XXII. V. 11. It was a sign unto thee, saith the Lord God. Nebuchadnezzar would disregard Israel's relation to Jehovah, (Ez. iv. 22) as well as the sceptre in the hand of the meek of the house of Israel.
11 And he hath given it to be punished, that it may be handled: this sword is sharpened, and it is furnished, to give it into the hand of the slayer.

12 Cry and howl, son of man: for it shall be upon my people, it shall be upon all the princes of Israel:

13 Because it is a trial, and what if the sword conspire even the rod? it shall be no more, saith the Lord God.

14 Thou therefore, son of man, prophesy, and smite thine hands together, and let the sword be doubled the third time, the sword of the slain: it is the sword of the great man that are slain, which entereth into their privy chambers.

15 I have set the sword point of the sword against all their gates, that their heart may faint, and their reins be multiplied: ah! it is made bright, it is ^3\textsuperscript{a} wrapped up for the slaughter.

16 Go thee one way or other, either on the right hand, or on the left, whithersoever thy face is set.

David's descendants; and the sword of God's righteous vengeance would cut down Zedekiah and his family like any other of the trees of the forest. Or, It is the rod of my Son, it desipeth every tree. (Marg.) The rod of the Son of God, by which he destroys his enemies, would pay no regard to any of the trees in that devoted forest. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 11, 12. (Marg. Ref. Notes, 6, 7, vii. 11.)

V. 13. These events would be a grievous trial of the faith and patience of God's people; rather or a trial of the Jews and their rulers, whether they would repent or not. And if the sword despised even the rod or sceptre in the hand of Zedekiah, what would be the event? Truly that sceptre would fall from his hands, the temporal kingdom in David's family would cease, and Jerusalem would be desolated. It may be rendered, "What if the sceptre despise it?" What if Zedekiah despise these warnings and trials, and persist in rebellion? Then he shall be no more, that is, no more king of Judah. Ezekiel, moved with compassion, thus complaineth, fearing the destruction of the kingdom, which God had confirmed to David and his posterity by promise; which promise God performed, although here it seemed to man's eye, that it should utterly perish. (27.)

V. 14. Be doubled, &c. This is by some interpreted to signify, that the third invasion of Nebuchadnezzar would complete the ruin of Jerusalem. He had taken Jehoiakim captive, and then Jehoiachin, and at the third time he would take Zedekiah, and lay the city in ruins and desolate the land. But perhaps it only refers to the repeated prophecies concerning the sword that was coming on the land. (Marg. Ref.) This sword would especially enter into the chambers of the great men, where they concealed their idolatries and iniquities; as they were the ring-leaders in rebellion, and would by no means escape.

V. 15. The point of this sword, exciting terror and multiplying destruction, would appear at all the gates of Jerusalem; so that the inhabitants would have no way left to escape.

Wrapped. That it might not lose its edge or polish, till it was to be used: some render the word sharpened. It occurs no where else in Scripture.

V. 16. The sword is here addressed, by a bold figure, as a messenger that was to go and execute his commission on every side.

V. 17. The Lord thus emphatically declared his purpose of encouraging and prospering the besiegers: till he had taken full vengeance on the Jews.

V. 19—22. The prophet was here ordered more plainly to declare, that the sword of the king of Babylon was intended by all these metaphors. He must describe on a tile, a parchment, or the ground, the road from Babylon to a place where it was parted into two roads, one leading to Jerusalem, the other to Rabbah the capital city of the Ammonites. As the people of Judah confided in the fortifications of Jerusalem, and were about to retire within them; so they were called "Judah in Jerusalem, the defenced." This plan would represent the conduct of Nebuchadnezzar. For that prince would march his army from Babylon, intending to destroy both Rabbath and Jerusalem, but undecided which he should first attack; so that when he came to the parting of the roads, neither his policy nor his resentment would decide the matter; but he had recourse to divination. This was an appeal to some superior power to determine for him: conducted with many superstitious and idolatrous rites. Three kinds of augury or divination seem to have been used on this occasion. They wrote on several arrows the names of the cities they intended to assault; and then putting them all together promiscuously in a quiver, they drew them out thence as lots are drawn; and that city whose name was writ on the arrow first drawn, was the city they first made war upon. (Jerom in Lomth.) He mingled his arrows, the teraphim, or little images that were carried with them, were consulted as oracles; some artificial answer was supposed to be returned by them; and, having offered sacrifices, the priests or augurs examined the intestines, especially the liver; from the state of which, in different animals, whether mutilated or complete, sound or unsound, or from its colour, they decided, according to the rules laid down among them. The Lord, however, so over-ruled it, that all these inquiries concurred in determining Nebuchadnezzar to march against Jerusalem, rather than Rabbath. And when this was settled, he appointed captains, and prepared every thing for the siege of that city. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 23. The Jews would treat these predictions as false; and disregard all the preparations of the Chaldeans, as if they were no more to be feared than their delusive divinations. They especially, who had sworn allegiance to Nebuchadnezzar, (along with Zedekiah,) and had broken their oaths, and sworn others to the king of Egypt, would be so infatuated as to despise all warnings. Thus they would be delivered into the hands of Nebuchadnezzar, who would remember against them their perfidy and perjury. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 24. Because, &c. The notorious sins of the Jews of that generation, which showed that all their professions were contaminated by impurity and iniquity, had caused the sins of their fathers also to be remembered against them, and rendered it requisite to the glory of God, that they should be delivered into the hands of their enemies. Because your sins cry to heaven for vengeance, ye shall fall into the hands and power of the king of Babylon. (Lomth.) (Marg. Ref.)

26 Thus saith the Lord God; Re- move the diadem, and take off the crown; this shall not be the same:

27 I will overturn, overturn, overturn it; and it shall be no more, 'till he come whose right it is; and I will give it him.

28 And thou, son of man, prophesy and say, Thus saith the Lord God concerning the Ammonites, and concerning their reproach; even say thou, Thy sword, the sword is drawn: for the slaughter it is furnished, to consume because of the gleaming.

V. 25-27. The Lord, by his prophet, next addressed himself immediately to Zedekiah, as the head of the conspiracy against his authority. He had shown his impurity and iniquity, especially in violating his solemn oath, and revolting from the king of Babylon. But the day was come, when his crimes would meet with condign punishment; and his iniquity and that of his people, would be terminated by their ruin. The Lord had given Nebuchadnezzar a commandment to divest him of the insignia of royal authority, and to reduce him to the condition of a blind wretched captive: when he would not appear in the same person that he had been; or the authority would not be in the same hands. Jecochiah, who was then low in a prison, would again be exalted, and his family would prosper: Zedekiah, who was then on the throne, would be abased: and the Lord would overturn repeatedly the family of David and the government of Judah, till the coming of the Messiah, whose right the kingdom was, and it should be given him for ever. This may also predict the repeated subversions of the Jewish nation by the Chaldeans, Macedonians, Romans, and many others, to the present day; which will not come to any happy termination, till they submit to their long rejected Messiah; may it seem to predict all the convulsions in states and kingdoms, which shall make way for the establishment of his kingdom throughout the earth. When the prophets speak to kings in the name of God, they lay aside those titles, and expressions of respect, which are otherwise due to regal dignity.

(1 Sam. xiii. 13. 1 Kings xviii. 18. 2 Kings iii. 14.)

(Lomth.) Diadem. The Chaldee paraphrase is thus, Remove the mitre from Seraiah the chief priest, and I will take away the crown from Zedekiah the king. (Lomth.) Overturn. After Zedekiah is deprived of regal authority, there shall be no more kings of that family, till Christ come. (Lomth.) (Marg. Ref.)

V. 28. The Ammonites, being reprieved by Nebuchadnezzar's decision to besiege Jerusalem, were ready to promise themselves security, and to insult over the Jews. But the prophet was ordered to predict their doom also. Their which Nebuchadnezzar a few years after executed. 'Tis their reproach, may either mean the reproach that awaited them, or their reproach of God's people.
29 Whilest they see vanity unto thee, whilest they divine a lie unto thee, to bring thee upon the necks of them that are slain, of the wicked, whose day is come, when their iniquity shall have an end.

30 Shall I cause it to return into his sheath? I will judge thee in the place where thou wast created, in the land of thy nativity.

V. 29—32. The diviners of the Ammonites encouraged them with vain predictions of victory and triumph, to trample on the Jews when suffering the punishment of their sins. It was not therefore proper, that the sword of vengeance should return into its scabbard, till they too were punished. The Lord would therefore judge and execute vengeance on them in their own land, where the nation first received its existence: (for the Ammonites seem to have increased from a family to a nation, in the same country which they then inhabited.) He would pour his vengeance on them as water: his wrath would burn against them as fire, made more vehement by being blown; he would deliver them into the hands of men, who were cruel and bloody like wild beasts, and used their understandings only for destruction. Thus he would destroy them; they would never recover their former dignity; and in process of time they would be entirely forgotten.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.
V. 1—17.

Dreadful is the case of those against whom God hath set himself as an adversary! yet all impenitent sinners are exposed to this misery. Even holy places and families, that have long been eminent in religion, will have God against them, if they apostatize or greatly degenerate.—In national judgments the sword of God often cuts off both the righteous and the wicked; but not one of the righteous will be involved in the condemnation of the wicked, at the day of judgment and in the eternal world. He often endures with much longer suffering the vessels of wrath, fitted for destruction: but when at length he draws his sword it will return no more, till it hath effected all his righteous purposes. But it behoves those who are employed to denounce the awful wrath of God against sinners, to show that they do not desire the woful day: and the example of Christ teaches us, that we ought to weep and lament over those whose ruin we foresee and declare. We should also endeavour to convince them, that we are greatly impressed with the reality, importance, and near approach of those invisible things of which we speak; and instruct them by our example, as well as by our doctrine. It scarcely seems necessary to inquire, whereabouts men sigh and wail in such a world as this: yet they who now mourn with penitent sorrow, and sympathize in the afflictions of God’s people, shall rejoice and be exceedingly glad, when all the hearts of ungodly men shall melt, and when they shall in vain call to the rocks to fall upon them, and cover them from the wrath of their offended Judge. But when his sharp and glittering sword is drawn against guilty nations or individuals; and when vengeance is at the door, doth it behove the criminals to make mirth? Would it not be more suitable to them to sigh and mourn, and even to howl and cry? at least to fast and pray, and humble themselves under the mighty hand of God, if so be he will be merciful unto them? In great national calamities his sword often disdains all the petty distinctions on which men pride themselves: the most exalted stations and sacred characters are then blended with the poor and obscure in one common ruin: except that the great are singled out as the principal criminals; and the sword often pursues them into their secret recesses of wickedness, and their most secure hiding-places. Even they who fill thrones, when distinguished by profaneness and iniquity, will be exposed to shame, and their punishments made proportionately conspicuous; if they escape such revolutions, as sometimes happen to the nations of old, they will be soon terminated their career, spoil them of their diadems and sceptres, and transmit them as criminals to the judgment-seat of God.

V. 18—32.

The most self-sufficient and ungodly, as well as the most sagacious and politic, sometimes find their counsels perplexed, as to feel the want of a superior direction: and the vain superstitions and divinations of idolaters proclaim how desirable it is to be directed by the word and Spirit of God. But whatever apparent chance or choice, whatever augury or divination, determine the measures which men adopt; the Lord secretly leads them to execute his wise designs: and even ambitious conquerors, and cruel tyrants, are the undersigning executioners of deserved punishment on condemned criminals. Wherever the sword of divine justice turns, it meets with men deserving of its stroke: but it commonly begins at the sanctuary, and first executes vengeance on those who profane it by their hypocrisy and iniquity. These are the last persons, in general, who give credit to the warnings of God’s word: their hearts are often hardened by repeatedly violating the most solemn vows and engagements, and attending on sacred ordinances in an impious and infidel manner; and they are left to themselves, till they ripen for vengeance: then their sins are made to appear, and they are brought to condign punishment. Next to such wicked professors of religion, they will be most severely punished who insult over the falls and miseries. What a frivorous advantage is it to a condemned malefactor to be executed the last of the company! How little reason has he to insult over his fellow-sufferers! yet this is the common conduct of profane men,
CHAP. XXII.

A catalogue of the crimes committed in Jerusalem, for which judgment was awarded against the Jews, 1—16. God will prove them as metals in the furnace, 17—22. The wickedness of prophets, priests, princes, and people, shown to be the cause of their ruin, 23—31.

Moreover, the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

2 Now, thou son of man, * wilt thou judge, wilt thou judge the * bloody city ? yea, * wilt thou shew her all her abominations.

3 Then say thou, Thus saith the Lord God, The city s sheddeth blood in the midst of it ; * that her time may come, and maketh idols against herself to defile herself.

4 Thou art become guilty in thy blood that thou hast shed ; and art filled thine self in thine idols which thou hast made ; and thou hast caused thy days to draw near, and art come even unto thy years : therefore have I made thee a reproach unto the heathen, and a mocking to all countries.

5 Those that be near, and those that be far from thee, shall mock thee, which art infamous and much vexed.

6 Behold, the princes of Israel, every one in thee to their own power to shed blood.

7 In thee have they set light by father and mother : in the midst of thee have they dealt by oppression with the stranger : in thee have they vexed the fatherless and the widow.

8 Thou hast despised mine holy things, and hast profaned my sabbaths.

9 In thee are men that carry tales to shed blood : and in thee they eat upon the mountains : in the midst of thee they commit lewdness : they discovered the father's nakedness in thee ; they humbled her that was set apart for pollution.

10 In thee have they discovered another's husband-in-law, and another's daughter, her father's daughter.

11 And one hath committed abomination with his neighbour's wife ; and another hath lifted up his hand against his daughter-in-law, and another in thee hath humbled his sister, his father's daughter.

when they see others punished whilst they are spared, though the sword will not be sheathed till it has consumed them also. But in the midst of the most tremendous predictions and denunciations of wrath, we still hear some report of mercy, and of Him through whom mercy is exercised to sinful men. All these dispensations are in the hand of the only begotten Son of God ; and all wars, convulsions, and revolutions, tend to bring forward the establishment of his kingdom. The Lord will overturn, overturn, overturn, till that great revolution takes place, when the kingdoms of the world shall become the kingdom of our Lord and of his Christ. This should satisfy all who love his rightful authority, and become his loyal subjects, "what he doeth, they know not now, but they shall know hereafter." But let us be thankful to be employed as instruments of his mercy ; let us use our understandings in devising methods of doing good ; and let us stand aloof from those brutish men, who are only skilful to destroy.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXII. V. 2. Jerusalem, instead of a holy city, was become "a city of bloods," filled with murder and every crime for which men were punishable by death. The prophet therefore, instead of speaking in her behalf, was summoned to sit in judgment on her : whilst the Lord himself assumed the office of an accuser and a witness, and showed that she merited the sentence of condemnation denounced against her. (Mal. iii. 5.)

V. 3—5. There is a peculiar emphasis in all these accusations brought against Jerusalem, which God had chosen for the place of his temple, and favoured with his oracles, ordinances, special presence, and protection, above all the cities upon earth. Yet the inhabitants of this very city were peculiarly guilty of murder and idolatry, the two most atrocious of all crimes. They shed much blood in sacrificing their children to idols, persecuting God's prophets and servants, and in cruelly oppressing the poor ; and probably by iniquitous laws and unrighteous decrees ; and probably by frequent assassinations, in perpetrating robberies, and in furious quarrels. So that the people seemed in haste to bring forward the time of vengeance. They also made idols to defile themselves : which was eventually to destroy themselves, as it was sure to provoke the Lord to destroy them. Thus they would speedily arrive at those years of desolation, that had been predicted ; when they would become the objects of scorn and reproach to the heathen ; for even the idolaters, whose gods they worshipped, having tenaciously adhered to the religion of their fathers, would mock them for forsaking Jehovah, and insult them under the miseries that their rebellion had exposed them to ; so that their infamy would equal their misery. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 6—11. (Marg. Ref.)
12 In thee have they * taken gifts to shed blood; * thou hast taken usury and increase, and thou hast * greedily gained of thy neighbours by extortion, * and hast forgotten me, saith the Lord God.

13 Behold, therefore * I will smitten mine hand at thy dishonest gain which thou hast made, and at thy blood which hath been in the midst of thee.

14 Can * thin heart endure, or can * thin hands be strong, in the days that I shall deal with thee? * I the Lord have scattered thee among the heathen, and wilt consume thy filthiness out of thee.

16 And thou shalt * take thin borne in trust in thy sight of the heathen, and thou shalt know that I am the Lord.

17 ¶ And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

18 Son of man, * the house of Israel, speak unto the rebellious of the house of Israel, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; The way you are going has made your land become desolate.

V. 12. * the judges have taken bribes, not only to pervert justice, but even to take away the lives of the innocent. (Lowth.) — All the immorality, as well as idolatry, of the Jews, arose from the forgetfulness of God, of his perfections, commandments, testimonies, promises, and wonderful works; and of their relations and obligations to him. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 14. (Marg. Ref.) The utter inability of sinners to stand against that God, whom they continually set at defiance, shows their folly to be equal to their impiety. V. 15. When Jerusalem was desolated and laid in ruins, her iniquity and idolatry were entirely purged out, as by fire, and idolatry was never after practised there, till the final destruction of the city by the Romans. V. 16. In thyself. Or, For thyself. The Lord had been the Portion of his people: and he had allotted Canaan to them for their temporal inheritance. But they had forfeited his favour, and were driven out of the country; they might therefore provide for themselves, and get what inheritance they could among the nations, by whom they were enslaved and carried captive: and thus they should know the Lord, by experiencing the misery of forsoaking his favour and incurring his indignation. (Marg. Ref.)

Thou shalt be profaned, &c. (Marg.) Thou shalt no longer enjoy the privileges of a city called by my name; but shall be profaned by infiles. (Lowth.) V. 18—22. Israel, compared with other nations, had been as the gold and silver compared with the baser metals. But they were now become as the dross or scum of silver, the refuse that is consumed in the furnace, or thrown away, when the silver is refined. Or they were become as brass, tin, iron, and lead, or a mixture of such metals as are comparatively of small value. These may mean different characters among them, all far beneath what Israelites ought to have been, and at best only equal to the heathen. The Lord intended therefore to gather them into Jerusalem, as metals are cast into the furnace; to make the fire exceeding hot under them by blowing it: and to leave them there to be melted and proved; that if there were any gold or silver, it might be separated and refined, and that the dross and base metal might be consumed. The wrath of God kindled and blew this fire, which consisted of the judgments inflicted on the Jews by the Chaldeans: by whom Jerusalem was entirely destroyed, and all orders and characters of men were either slain or reduced to a wretched captivity. The destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, and the long continued calamities of the Jews since that event, seem also to have been intended by the Spirit of prophecy, though the Chaldean invasion was primarily foretold.
V. 24. No cleansing, purifying, fertilizing showers of rain, attended on these tremendous storms: the land still continued polluted with idolatry and wickedness, after all the calamities which had been experienced, and notwithstanding the predictions of more entire desolations. The people were not led to repentance or reformation, but grew more and more wicked amidst them all.

V. 25. The false prophets, who were numerous, conspired together to maintain the authority of their lying predictions, to encourage the people in wickedness, and to run down the few who spake the Word of God. Perhaps they boasted of their unanimity, as a proof of the truth of their predictions; whereas it was a wicked conspiracy against the cause of God and the interests of true religion. They resembled "roaring lions ravening the prey": they were fierce, cruel, and rapacious, seeking only to enrich themselves, and be avenged on all who opposed them. They not only deceived the souls of men by false doctrine: but they procured the death of numbers, that they might take the treasure and precious things belonging to them: thus they multiplied the widows in Jerusalem, by the murder of their husbands on one pretence or other; and reduced them to beggary, by seizing their property as forfeited.

V. 26. The whole company of the priests were become like Hophni and Phinehas: they wrested the law of God from its true meaning, that it might seem to sanction their enormities: or they contemnously broke it for their own ungodly gain! They profaned the temple by their crimes; where the sacrifices and oblations were offered, or tended by them, in a most unholy manner. They disregarded the distinction between holy and profane, and between clean and unclean, both in respect of times, meats, persons, and actions; making every thing bend to their interest. They connived at, and joined in, the profanation of the sabbaths; and their sacred functions was so disgraced by their crimes, that the name of God was greatly profaned by them.

V. 27, 28. The prophets employed all their ingenuity to varnish over the crimes of the princes, who were like raving wolves, and took bribes to shed innocent blood. By these means the prophets shared the disdained gain with the princes, or availed themselves of their authority to gratify their avarice or revenge. And thus from them robbery and oppression were diffused through the land.

V. 29. I sought, &c. Jeremiah, and some few others, endeavored to bring the people to repentance, and to avert divine judgments by their prayers: but they were greatly despised; their efforts were generally and peremptorily opposed, and almost entirely unsuccessful; and their prayers were discouraged. There was not one, however, that possessed authority or influence, who made a good use of it. Neither the king nor any of his nobles; neither the high priest nor any of the chief priests; not one of the scribes, the members of the sanhedrin, or the magistrates; nor of those who possessed credit and influence. None of them all employed their abilities and authority to stop the progress of wickedness, and to bring the principal offenders to justice; or endeavoured by their labours and example to promote a reformation; or to interpose by their prayers to avert divine judgment. The Lord, (speaking after the manner of men,) sought for some Moses, or Phinehas, or Samuel, to stand in the gap on this occasion: but as he found none, the destruction of Jerusalem was inevitable.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-16.

How strong must the stream of human depravity be, when it can burst through so many powerful obstructions, and inundate even the city of God with such a torrent of horrible wickedness! We must not excuse nor condone to expose the crimes of men, because they live in holy places, or occupy sacred functions: for when professing Christians,
The idolatry of Israel in Egypt exposed by a parable of two sisters, Aholah, and Aholibah, 1—4. The subsequent whoredoms of Aholah, and her punishment, 5—10. The whoredoms and punishment of Aholibah, 11—35. As involved in the same guilt, they are visited by similar judgments, 36—49.

The word of the Lord came again unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, there were two women, the daughters of one mother:
3 And they committed whoredoms in Egypt; they committed whoredoms, 4 in their youth; there were their breasts pressed, and there they bruised the teats of their virginity.
4 And the names of them were Aho-

V. 17—31.

Whenever rulers and princes choose to be like ravenous wolves, and to shed blood in oppression or persecution; they will be sure to find profane priests and false prophets, to buoy up their confidence and keep them in countenance! There always were men of this stamp, who would violate God’s law, contradict his truths, explain away his precepts, prostitute his ordinances, see vanity, divine lies, confound all distinctions between holy and unholy, daub the wall with untempered mortar; and even become caterers to the lusts, or instruments of the cruelty and iniquity of wicked rulers, for a share of the spoil, and that they might be permitted to take the treasures and the precious things. Thus they destroy both the lives and souls of men for filthy lucre’s sake. By such professed ministers of religion, whose false doctrines are devised to hide the shame of their wicked lives, the Church of God becomes a den of thieves instead of a house of prayer; the gold and silver become dross and base metal; and nations are prepared to be melted or consumed by the fire of the divine indignation. And if lighter visitations be not sanctified, and rendered effectual to bring men to repentance and fruits meet for repentance; they will prove to be the forerunners of desolating judgments and irreversible destruction. But let every one, according to his measure of ability and influence, endeavour to make up the hedge and to stand in the gap, to stop the progress of iniquity, and to avert the judgments of God from our guilty land. The Lord seeks for such men, and will accept their prayers and efforts: and so long as any are found, especially among our princes, senators, magistrates, and rulers in Church or state, we may hope to be still preserved: but when none shall remain of this character, it may be expected that God will pour out his indignation upon us, and recom pense our ways upon our heads, as he hath spoken. Let them, all, who fear his name, unite to promote his truth and righteousness: even as zealously as wicked men of every rank and profession often conspire to run them down.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXIII. V. 2. The two nations, of Israel and Judah, were both descended from one common stock, and at first formed but one people or family.

V. 3. As soon as the family of Jacob was grown up into a people, they were seduced into idolatry, and initiated into those abominations to which they ever after were so exceedingly prone.

4 B 2
the elder, and Abihalab her sister; and they were mine, and they bare sons and daughters. Thus were their names: Samaria is * Abolah, and Jerusalem * Abolah.

5 And * Abolah played the harlot when she was mine; and she * doted on her lovers, on the Assyrians her neighbours,

6 Which were dressed in blue, captains and rulers, all of them desirable young men, horsemen riding upon horses.

7 Thus she * committed her whoredoms with them, with all them that were, * chosen men of Assyria, and with all on whom she doted: with all their idols she defiled herself.

8 Neither left she her whoredoms brought from Egypt: for in her youth, they lay with her, and they bruised the breasts of her virginity, and poured their whoredom upon her.

9 Wherefore * I have delivered her into the hand of her lovers, into the hand of the Assyrians, upon whom she doted.

10 These * discovered her nakedness; * they took her sons and her daughters, and slew her with the sword: and she became * famous among women: for they had executed judgment upon her.

11 And when * her sister Abihalah saw this, she * was more corrupt in her

m. 4. The kingdom of Israel, of which Samaria was the capital city, containing ten tribes, and occupying the larger part of Canaan, was called the Elder Sister in this

4. “Abolah,” the name given to her, signifies, “Her tent, or tabernacle;” and implies, that the whole of the religion established in Israel was a human invention, a temple and service of their own, and not of God’s appointment. “Abolahab,” the name given to the younger sister, or to the kingdom of Judah and the city of Jerusalem, signifies, “My tent in her;” and implies that the worship established in Judah, was from God, and that his temple was indeed at Jerusalem: for the proclamation of it was the grand aggregation of the sins of the Jews. Both these sisters belonged to the Lord: they were solemnly espoused to him at Mount Sinai, and bare sons and daughters to him: those children of God, true believers were raised up among them: and had they continued faithful to him, the whoredoms of their youth in Egypt would not have been mentioned against them.

V. 5—10. The kingdom of Israel not only revolted now so she was every where talked of as a remarkable instance of God’s vengeance, and set forth as an example from the family of David, but apostatized from God, to other cities and nations, to deter them from the like whose people they were by the most solemn engagements, in worshipping abominations. (Lowth.) (Marg. Ref.)
days of her youth, wherein she had played the harlot in the land of Egypt. 20 For she doted upon their paramours, whose flesh is as the flesh of asses, and whose issue is like the issue of horses.

21 Thus thou calldest to remembrance the lewdness of thy youth, in bruising thy tects by the Egyptians for the price of thy youth.

22 ¶ Therefore, O Aholibah, thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will raise up thy lovers against thee, from whom thy mind is alienated, and I will bring them against thee on every side;

23 The Babylonians, and all the Chaldeans, and all the Pekod, and Shoar, and the Koams, and all the Assyrians with them: all of them are despicable young men, captains and rulers, great lords and renowned, all of them riding upon horses.

24 And they shall come against thee with chariots, wagons, and horses, and with an assembly of people, which shall set against thee buckler, and shield, and helmet round about: and I will set judgment before them, and they shall judge them according to their judgments.

25 And I will set my jealousy against thee, and they shall deal furiously with thee: they shall take away thy nose and thine ears; and thy remnant shall fall by the sword: they shall take thy sons and thy daughters; and thy residue shall be devoured by the fire.

26 They shall also strip thee out of thy clothes, and take away thy fair jewels.

27 Thus will I make thy lewdness to cease from thee, and thy whoredoms brought from the land of Egypt: so that thou shalt not lift up thine eyes unto them, nor remember Egypt any more.

28 For thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will deliver thee into the hand of them whom thou hatest, into the hand of them from whom thy mind is alienated:

V. 11—21. All the time that the kingdom of Israel was ripening for judgments, and even after it was ruined, Judah was growing more and more corrupt, and devoted to idols: and in the reign of Ahaz, afterwards in that of Manasseh and Amon, and at last after the death of Josiah, the Jews were more mad upon their idols than the Israelites had been; so that the efforts of their pious princes to reform them only tended to show the inverteracy of the disease, which increased amidst the most powerful remedies used to abate it. They too connected themselves with the Assyrians, and were enamoured of them and their idols; and then with the Chaldeans, and followed their idols: still retaining also their attachment to the Egyptians and their idols. Thus they were like those abandoned women, who have cast off all regard to decency, duty, or consequences; and are given up in the most inattuated manner to their unbridled inordinate passions, and are ready to prostitute themselves to every man they see: and their conduct was represented by these allusions, to show how loathsome and hateful idolatry is in the sight of God. But after a short time they were as much alienated from the Chaldeans, as they had been attached to them; (as is frequently the case between bad women and their paramours;) and this made way for their tempters to become their executioners. For though they were alienated from the Chaldeans, they continued to provoke the Lord by their vile idolatries and heathen alliances, especially with the Egyptians: so that he was at length entirely alienated from them. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 24. I will set, &c. The Lord employed the Chaldeans to execute his judgments on the Jews: and they intended to judge and condemn them, for violating the solemn treaties and rebelling against them. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 25. Noise, &c. This refers to the severe vengeance, which enraged jealous husbands sometimes took on their adulterous wives; or to the ignominious and terrible punishment that was publicly inflicted on them: and it implied that God would employ the Chaldeans to destroy the king, princes, priests, and prophets of Judah; and, as it were, first to mutilate, and then to put to death, this infamous adulteress with her whole family.

V. 27. These severe judgments shall effectually deter thee from idolatry, and make thee abhor the least approaches to it. (Loud.) This prediction is frequently repeated; and the accomplishment of it has been most wonderful. It might have been expected, that a nation, ever prone to idolatry whilst in a country where the worship of the true God was established and none else tolerated, would have readily conformed to the idolatrous usages of the nations, among whom they were scattered by the captivity, and so have been incorporated with them. Yet neither the authority, the frowns, the examples, nor the favour of their conquerors or powerful neighbours; nor their own fears, hopes, interests, or predilection for the sensual, jovial worship of idols, could prevail with them to run into gross idolatry, during the captivity, or afterwards! Nay, they were instrumental to the proselyting of numbers of idolaters to the worship of Jehovah, in the countries where they were dispersed! And though, since their national rejection of Christ, the Jews have been as destitute even of the appearance of true religion, as can well be conceived; yet they have in general been preserved from gross idolatry, during almost eighteen hundred years! The fact itself is unparalleled in the history of mankind; but it must increase the astonishment of every reflecting person, who carefully compares it with these express predictions. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 28. The Chaldeans were thy lovers formerly:
29 And they shall deal with thee hatoriously, and shall take away all thy labour, and shall leave thee naked and bare, and the nakedness of thy whoresboms shall be discovered, both thy lewdness and thy whoresboms.

30 I will do these things unto thee, because thou hast gone a whoring after the heathen, and because thou art polluted with their idols:

31 Thou hast walked in the way of thy sister; therefore will I give her cup into thine hand.

32 Thus saith the Lord God; Thou shalt drink of thy sister’s cup deep and large: thou shalt be laughed to scorn and had in derision; it containeth much.

33 Thou shalt be filled with drunkenness and sorrow, with the cup of astonishment and desolation, with the cup of thy sister Samaria.

34 Thou shalt even drink it and suck it out, and thou shalt break the thresholds thereof, and pluck off thine own breasts: for I have spoken it, saith the Lord God.

35 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Because thou hast forgotten me, and cast me behind thy back, therefore bear thou also thy lewdness and thy whoresboms.

36 ¶ The Lord said moreover unto me; Son of man, wilt thou judge Aholah and Aholibah? yea, declare unto them their abominations;

37 That they have committed adultery, and blood is in their hands, and with their idols have they committed adultery: and have also caused their sons, whom they bare unto me, to pass for them through the fire, to devour them.

38 Moreover this they have done unto me; they have defiled my sanctuary in the same day, and have profaned my Sabbaths:

39 For when they had slain their children to their idols, then they came the same day into my sanctuary to profane it; and, lo, thus have they done in the midst of mine house.

40 And furthermore, that ye have sent for men from far, unto whom a messenger was sent: and, lo, they came: for whom thou didst wash thyself, paintest thy eyes, and deckedst thyself with ornaments,

41 And sattest upon a stately bed, and a table prepared before thee, whereupon thou hast set mine incense and mine oil.

42 And a voice of a multitude being at ease was with her; and with the men of the common sort were brought Sabians from the wilderness, which put bracelets upon their hands, and beautiful crowns upon their heads.

43 Then said I unto her that was old in adulteries, Will they now commit whoredoms with her, and she with them?

44 Yet they went in unto her, as they go in unto a woman that playeth the harlot; so went they in unto Aholah and unto Aholibah, the lewd women.
45 And the righteous men, they shall judge them after the manner of adulteresses, and after the manner of women that shed blood: because they are adulteresses, and blood is in their hands.

46 For thus saith the Lord God; I will bring up a company upon them, and a number of people will give them to be removed and spoiled.

47 And the company shall stone them with stones, and shall dispatch them with their swords; they shall slay their sons and their daughters, and burn up their houses with fire.

48 Thus will I cause lewdness to cease out of the land, that all women may be taught not to do after your lewdness.

49 And they shall recompense your lewdness upon you, and ye shall bear the sins of your idols: and ye shall know that I am the Lord God.

Chapter XXIV.

The prophet is informed of the day when Nebuchadnezzar laid siege to Jerusalem, 1. He is shown the miseries of the Jews and the destruction of the city, by the parable of a boiling pot, 3—14. He is forbidden to mourn for the sudden death of his wife; to denote, that the calamities of the people should ex-

V. 43, 44. The Lord repeatedly warned the Jews not to enter into alliances with idolaters, nor to join their idolatries: but though they were grown hoary in these practices, and had suffered so much by them, that it might have been hoped they would have been weary of them; yet they were as eager after them as ever!

V. 45. Righteous,. &c. As upright magistrates used to condemn and execute judgment on adulteresses and murderers, so did the prophets in the name of God denounce sentence against Jerusalem and Samaria: and even the heathen princes, who executed the sentence, were more righteous than the apostate sufferers. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 49. Bear,. &c. Ye shall bear the punishment due to your idolatry. To bear sin or iniquity, is a noted expression in Scripture, signifying the undergoing of the punishment due to it. (Lowth.) This observation is of great importance, in respect of our Lord’s sufferings, and the sense in which he bare our sins in his own body on the tree.

Practical Observations.

They who first draw others into wickedness will have a dreadful account to render; for when the fences of modesty, fear, and conscience are broken down, and habits of sinful indulgence are contracted, it is very difficult to reclaim the offenders. Bad customs and connexions so pollute the memory, the imagination, and the affections, and so weaken the authority of reason and conscience over the inferior inclinations; that, even after apparent reformation, the offenders are very prone to relapse into their former practices. Every object tends to bring them to remembrance, associated with the idea of pleasure, and separated from the recollection of the painful consequences; and thus they are again tempted to return to them. When sinful imaginations are indulged, and former scenes of vice reviewed with delight, there can be no true repentance or change of heart; for, true penitents reflect with loathing and remorse on the iniquities of their former years. Whilst our ears and minds are wounded with the mention of the practices of those who work all uncleanness with greediness; we are not generally aware, that these abominations have in them less turpitude, than our ingratitude to, and enmity against God, except as they partake of that criminality in common with more decent transgressions. If we would not be polluted with wickedness, we must avert our eyes from it, and close our senses against those objects which excite sinful thoughts and inclinations. So long as men are attracted with personal accomplishments and external embellishments, and with the pomp and pride of life, they will always be tempted to prefer worldly connexions, fashions, and maxims, to the worship and service of God, and the company of his people: and an intercourse with polished but irreligious nations always occasions an increase of vanity and iniquity. That love which is cemented by concurrence in sin, generally terminates in disgust, contempt, and enmity: and God commonly employs emperors to punish those who listen to them. When sinners will not take warning by the punishment of others, they will be made warnings themselves, to teach men not to copy their crimes. Contempt, astonishment, desolation, rage, and despair, will be the portion of the cup of all who forget God, turn their backs on him, and refuse to return: but they who are his people by profession, and by sacramental vows and engagements, and yet apostatize, will be punished most severely: and especially such as, after having done those abominable things which God hateth, venture to go into his sanctuary and profane his ordinances, to compromise for or cloak their crimes. If the grace of God do not change men’s hearts, old age will not cure them of the love of sin: nay, the filthiness of the heart often seems to increase with the decays of nature; and worn out debauchees, like rotten wood, become more inflammable when ready to moulder into dust! How dreadful must it be for men to enter the external world in such a temper of soul, and with such vile affections! Unrepentant, unmortified, unpardoned sin, must end in the destruction of body and soul, in time and eternity: families, churches, and nations are ruined by it continually; and all righteous men and holy angels, yea, the whole assembled world, will applaud the sentence, which at the last day the Judge shall pronounce against the workers of iniquity.
EZEKIEL.

B. C. 590.

Seed all expressions of sorrow, 16—24. When tidings were brought him of these events, his mouth would be opened, and he should be no more dumb, 25—27.

Again, in the ninth year, in the tenth month, in the tenth day of the month, the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, write thee the name of the day, even of this same day: the king of Babylon set himself against Jerusalem this same day.

3 And utter a parable unto the rebellious house, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Set on a pot, set it on, and also pour water into it.

4 Gather the pieces thereof into it, even every good piece, the thigh, and the shoulder; fill it with the choice bones.

5 Take the choice of the flock, and burn also the bones under it, and make it boil well, and let them see the bones of it therein.

6 Wherefore thus saith the Lord God;

NOTES.

CHAP. XXIV. V. 1, 2. The prophet resided many hundred miles from Jerusalem; yet on the very day when the siege of that city was formed, the Lord revealed it to him; and ordered him to make such a memorial of it, as would afterwards give authority to his word, that it was in truth the word of God. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 3—5. To represent to the rebellious Jews the certain event of the siege, the prophet was ordered to speak a parable to them. For the Lord gave repeated orders, (as in haste to be obeyed,) to set on a pot and pour water into it. Into this they were directed to gather the pieces of an animal, or of several animals, the choice of the flock; especially the choice pieces and bones. This represented Jerusalem besieged by the Chaldeans: all ranks of men were gathered into it, by taking refuge within the walls, especially the nobles and princes; and thus they were detained in the city to their destruction. Add this parable; though they seem resolved not to take heed to what thou deliverest, either in plain words, or in figurative expressions. Burn also the bones, &c. The bones of those who had been unjustly slain in the midst of the city, (xi, 6, 7,) whose blood cries for vengeance against it, and kindles God's anger like fire. (Lowth.) (Marg. Ref.)

V. 6—8. Jerusalem, that bloody city, (Marg. Ref.) was the pot, and the wickedness committed in it the scum. The judgments of God upon the Jews caused this scum to arise, by exciting convictions, and discovering their crimes. Under these dispensations they should have put away their transgressions; as the scum, which arises by the heat of the fire, is taken off from the top of the pot. But they grew worse and worse; their sins remained unrepented and unpardoned, and therefore their miseries would continue and increase. All the besieged would endure lingering and dire calamities, till it came to the turn of each to perish, or to fall into the hands of the besiegers: multitudes would die during the siege, by the sword, by famine, and pestilence; no lot would fall upon them, which should be slain, and which spared, (Marg. Ref.) but they would be involved in one common ruin; and all, who survived the siege, would either be slain, or enslaved by the conquerors, or driven as wretched exiles to wander and perish in other countries. For the guilt of Jerusalem's murders and other iniquities, remained in the midst of her. Indeed the murderers had avowed their crimes: the blood shed by them, as was, it were, set on the top of a rock, a conspicuous place, into which it would not sink, and where it could not be concealed; and they disdained even to cover it with dust, or to bestow the least pains to hide it. The words add to the command of the law, that they should cover the blood of any beast with dust: which was not only intended to prevent their eating of blood, but also to give men a sort of horror at the sight of blood. (Lowth.) (Note, Lev. xix. 10—16.) The Lord would therefore call up his hot displeasure, expose their wickedness to all the world, and make their punishment as notorious as their crimes had been.

V. 9—11. The great pile for fire represented the power, courage, violence, and indignation of the Chaldeans, which would exceedingly distress the Jews, and both prevent their escape and accelerate their ruin. The command to heap on wood, &c. denoted the commission given the besiegers to conduct the assault with increasing 12 She bath *weared herself with lies, and her great scum went not forth out of her: her scum shall be in the fire.

13 In *thy filthiness is lewdness: *because I have purged thee, and thou wast not purged, thou shalt not be purged from thy filthiness any more, *till I have caused my fury to rest upon thee.

14 I *the Lord have spoken it; it shall come to pass, and I will do it; I will not go back, *neither will I spare, *neither will I repent; *according to thy ways, and according to thy doings, shall they judge thee, saith the Lord God.

15 ¶ Also the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

16 Son of man, behold, I take away from thee the desire of thine eyes with a stroke: *yet neither shall thou mourn over him;

17 ¶ Forbear to cry, *make no mourning for the dead; *bind the fire of thine head upon thee, and *put on thine shoes upon thy feet, and *cover not thine *lips, and *eat not the bread of men.

18 So I spake unto the people in the morning; *and at even my wife died; and I did in the morning, as I was commanded.

19 And the people said unto me, *Wilt thou not tell us what these things are to us, that thou dost so?

20 Then I answered them, *The word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

21 Speak unto the house of Israel, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will profane my sanctuary, *the excellency of thy strength, *the desire of thine eyes, and *that which thy soul vigor, and to treat the Jews with marked severity: so that they were all wasted in the city like flesh in the boiling pot; and all their previous calamities would prepare them for a prey to the Chaldeans, as the meat is stewed, and seasoned for relishing food. For they would in this manner glut their revenge, cruelty, and avarice, as if enjoying the pleasures of a feast; and they would pursue the poor remains of the people with unrelenting rage, as men burn the bones, when they have eaten the flesh of off them. But as the pot was still polluted with the scum, or rust of the metal, (with the relics of their idolatry and iniquity,) it must also be heated, burned, and even melted by the fire, till wholly purified: that is, Jerusalem would be entirely levelled with the ground, as nothing short of this could purify it from its abominations; and then afterwards it would be rebuilt, free from those defections, a holy city, as in former ages.

V. 12, 13. Jerusalem had wearied herself, (or wearied God,) with lies. At a great expense, and with much labour, she had followed idols, which were lying vanities; she had sought the assistance of her heathen neighbours who deceived her; and she had professed to worship Jehovah, when it was mere hypocrisy. As no reformation took place, the Lord would consume her iniquity by his fiery vengeance. Her idolatry was no occasional offence, the effect of peculiar circumstances of temptation: but it was the result of a violent depraved propensity; an enmity to God and his holy worship; and a strong attachment to the sensual rites and worshippers of abominable idols: as the unfaithfulness of an adulterous wife is proved to arise from a rooted licentiousness of heart, when she grows more dissolute amidst all means to reclaim her. The Lord had used various methods to cure the Jews of idolatry, by reforming kings, holy prophets, and awful judgments; but they still continued obstinately attached to idols: they would therefore at length be given up to ruin, and nothing further would be done for their reformation till the Lord had caused his fury to rest upon them. (Note, Hos. iv. 16—19.)

V. 14. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 16—18. This was the last message which the prophet carried to the captives, respecting the destruction of Jerusalem and the temple; and it was introduced by a very affective dispensation to himself. The Lord informed him previously, that he would “take away the desire of his eyes with a stroke;” that is, his wife, whom he greatly loved, and whom we may suppose to have been in every respect worthy of his endeared affection, and a great comfort to him amidst his heavy trials: yet the Lord would take her from him by a sudden stroke, without any intervening sickness, which would aggravate the pain of this great affliction. Yet he was commanded to avoid every outward expression of sorrow: he was not allowed to shed tears, or to make any outcry, or to use any of the customary tokens of mourning: he was required to wear his turban, or bonnet, and his shoes, as usual; and not to cover his lips, the sign of silent distress. He was not allowed to eat the bread, which was commonly sent on such occasions to the mourners by their friends; as supposing their minds too full of perturbation to make provision for themselves; and perhaps consisting of such things as were deemed to correspond with their afflicted state, or suited to minister to their comfort. Accordingly, by the grace of God, he was enabled to acquiesce in the divine will, in this trying dispensation: and after having received this distressing information, he went to speak to the people, and to notify to them the affliction that was coming upon him, and the manner in which he was ordered to behave under it. For at even his wife died, and the next morning he was enabled openly to conform his conduct to the divine command, though it would probably expose him to the censure of being insensible, and devoid of tender affections.
pitieth; and thy sons and thy daughters whom ye have left shall fall by the sword.

22 And ye shall do as I have done: ye shall not cover your lips, nor eat the bread of men.

23 And your tares shall be upon your heads, and your shoes upon your feet: ye shall not mourn nor wEEP; but ye shall pine away for your iniquities, and lean one toward another.

24 Thus Ezekiel is unto you a sign according to all that he hath done shall ye do; and when this cometh, ye shall know that I am the Lord.

25 Y Also, thou son of man, shall it not be in the day when I take from them their strength, the joy of their glory, and the desire of their eyes, and that whereby they set their minds, their sons and their daughters, 26 That he that escapeth in that day shall come unto thee, to cause thee to hear it with thine ears?

27 In that day shall thy mouth be opened to him which is escaped, and thou shalt speak, and be no more dumb: and thou shalt be a sign unto them; and they shall know that I am the Lord.

V. 19—24. Some of the people would inquire the prophet's meaning, in derision or censoriousness; but others would suppose that he thus intended to fix their attention on his instructions, and their inquiry gave him an opportunity of delivering the message of God to them.

He had determined to profane his temple, which had been the chief defence, distinction, and honour of their nation; and which the idolatrous Jews still presumed upon as their safeguard, and gloried in as their pride; nor could they hear or think that it would ever be destroyed by the heathen. At the same time, the remainder of their children, the objects of their tenderest affection and compassion, would be slain before their eyes. And then they would imitate the prophet, when he had been bereaved of his most valuable earthly comfort; they would not show any of the ordinary tokens of sorrow; either lest they shoulcl give umbrage to the haughty victors; or because their troubles came upon them in such quick succession, that they had no space for lamenting each of them; or because their personal sorrows were swallowed up in the calamities of the nation; or the multitude, who had cause to lament, would render particular instances of affliction less noticed; or in short, their griefs would be too big for utterance. So that in sullen and stubborn despondency, without even the relief of freely giving vent to their sorrows, they would pine away in unrepented and unpardoned iniquities, or only fretfully complain and repine one to another in private. Though this was addressed to the captives, yet it related to the general concerns of the nation. For the prophet suffered this heavy affliction, in this composed manner, to be a sign unto them of their approaching condition and conduct; when they would know the power, truth, and justice of the Lord, and the accomplishment of these terrible predictions.

V. 25—27. When the city and temple should be destroyed, all the nobles and valiant men, that were the strength, confidence, haust, and rejoicing of the Jews, should be cut off; and their valuable treasures, and still more valued children, torn from them; the Lord would send one of those who had escaped the sword, to inform the prophet that the mouth would be again opened to speak with him that brought the tidings, concerning the affairs of the nation; and the people would perceive by the evidence that he had been a sign unto them, to make them know and fear the Lord. In the mean time he would be dumb, as to the Jews, and would not deliver any prophecies to them, during the continuance of the siege; though employed to deliver several predictions concerning the neighbouring nations. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—14.

The times before appointed, for thecondign punishment of ungodly men, may seem to approach slowly, but they will certainly and speedily arrive. In the mean while it behoves the ministers of God to use every method of exciting the attention and awakening the consciences of the careless and obstinate, to a sense of their guilt and danger.

—The refuges to which iniquitous rebels flee for safety, are often the occasions or the scenes of their destruction. —

Men weary themselves more in the pursuit of lying vanities, either in open wickedness, or hypocrisy, or superstition, than they need to do in seeking happiness and salvation in the service of God, and in the method of the Gospel. Some sinners are longer spared than others: but unless they repent and be converted, they will all perish, without respect to rank, abilities, or reputation.—

The wrath of God is sufficient to convert any place into a hell, for the torment of his obstinate enemies: even as his favour and consolations can change a dungeon into a heaven, for the benefit of his suffering servants. They who are shameless in their crimes, shall be rendered infamous in their punishment: and all the innocent blood, which ambitious warriors, cruel tyrants, oppressors, and persecutors have glorified in shedding, shall soon be required at their hands. When the instructions of God's word and the chastenings of his rod, leave men hardened in impenitence, he often condemns them to continue filthy still: and their filthiness will then no more be purged, till he hath caused his fury to rest upon them to their final destruction. However infulds may despise the denunciations of God's word, he will certainly accomplish them, and not go back, nor spare, nor repent; but will judge sinners according to their ways and their doings.
Prophecies against Ammon, 1—7; Moab and Edom, 8—14; and Philistia, 15—17.

The word of the Lord came again unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, set thy face against the Ammonites, and prophesy against them;

3 And say unto the Ammonites, Hear the word of the Lord; Thus saith the Lord God, Because thou hast sitten on the suborned thronethat was profaned, and hast sold thy sons and daughters into the hand of strangers, to provoke me to anger with their acts, and with their abominations which they have committed; therefore thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will stretch out mine hand upon thee, and will deliver thee into the hand of the Philistines, and will cut thee off from among the people; and I will cause thee to perish out of all the places that I gave unto the children of Israel; I will destroy thee; and thou shalt know that I am the Lord.

Marriage is honourable in all, not excepting either priests or prophets, or the most eminent servants of God: and an amiable and pious wife is justly valued and rejoiced in, as one of the chief of created comforts. Yet this honourable and ennobled affection must be subordinated to the love, and submitted to the will, of God. The faith which influenced Abraham to sacrifice his beloved Isaac, will cause us to submit patientely, should the Lord take away the desire of our eyes by a sudden stroke: for he hath a right to recall every loan, and is able to make up every loss to us. We cannot expect to retain very long our most valued earthly comforts; and should continually be seeking for grace, to enable us properly to bear such separating strokes: yet are we sure that our sovereign God will not take our relatives from us, without some wise and good reason. But should he see it conducive to his own glory, to our good, or the good of our brethren, to make us examples of suffering affliction and patience, if our hearts be in a proper frame, we shall say, “Thy will be done;” and shall find his grace sufficient for us. Nature must indeed feel exquisitely; but Christians should be careful not to sorrow as men without hope, or to copy the vehement language and expressions of grief, that are in use among those who know not God: and ministers especially should always endeavour so to moderate their passions on trying occasions, that they may be instructive examples to the numbers, who have their eyes upon them. They must not deviate from their duty to follow the fashions of a vain world; nor is it expedient to omit their work on account of personal troubles; for it hath often been observed, that their words on such occasions have proved peculiarly useful to the hearers. Every dispensation of Providence, and every action of the eminent servants of God, should lead us to inquire what we may learn from them; and it is very desirable, that the conduct of ministers should excite the people to hear the word of God from them. His ordinances, and the welfare of his Church, should be dearer to our hearts than our nearest relatives: for they are the excellence of the strength, and the most honourable and joyful distinction of every nation, that truly values them. But when men abuse and pollute divine institutions by their crimes; and yet confide in the outward form, as entitled them to acceptance and protection; the Lord will take away these privileges, or pour contempt upon them. Yet after all the scriptural examples of this truth, men still continue to confide and glory in externals, who yet hate the power of godliness! But if the case of sinners, under great temporal calamities, who remain unhumbled and desperate, and pine away in their iniquities, be very dreadful: what will be the case of those “whose worm never dieth, and whose fire is not quenched”? Blessed be God, we need not thus pine away in any of our present afflictions: for should all comforts fail and all sorrows combine against us; yet the broken heart and the mourner’s prayer are always accepted before our God. Mourning before him, confessing our sins, and seeking his help and grace, we need not despand, and shall not be left comfortless, in any situation during life, or in the approaching agonies of death.

Chapter XXV.

V. 15—27.

Notes.

Chapter XXV. V. 2. Look thou towards the coast of the Ammonites, and in this posture do thou prophesy against them.” (Bp. Hall.) (Marg. Ref.)

V. 3—7. The enmity of the Ammonites, Moabites, and Edomites against the Jews, seems to have originated from ancient competitions, and from covetous desires of their possessions; but it was augmented by their hatred of God and of his worship. They therefore rejoiced over the profanation and destruction of the temple, as well as over the miseries of the people and the desolation of the land; and they expressed their insulting triumph in the most

AC 2
8 q Thysaih the Lord God; because that Moab and Seir do say, Behold, the house of Judah is like unto all the heathen;

9 Therefore, behold, I will open the side of Moab from the cities, from his cities which are on his frontiers, the glory of the country; Beth-jeshimoth, Baal-meon, and Kirjathaim, 10 Unto the men of the east with the Ammonites, and will give them in possession, that the Ammonites may not be remembered among the nations.

11 And I will execute judgments upon Moab; and they shall know that I am the Lord.

12 Thus saith the Lord God: Because that Edom hath dealt against the house of Judah, by taking vengeance, and hath greatly offended, and revenged himself upon them;

13 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; I will also stretch out mine hand upon Edom, and will cut off man and beast from it; and I will make it desolate from Teman; and they of Dedan shall fall by the sword.

14 And I will lay my vengeance upon Edom, by the hand of my people Israel, and they shall do in Edom according to my anger, and according to my fury; and they shall know my vengeance, saith the Lord God.

15 Thus saith the Lord God: Because the Philistines have dealt by revengence, and have taken vengeance with a despighteful heart, to destroy it for the old hatred;

16 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will stretch out mine hand upon the Philistines, and I will cut off the Cherethims, and destroy the remnant of the sea-coasts.

Zep. 2 & Ch. 11 & 12.

indecent manner; as if they meant to encourage the Chaldeans in the work of carnage and destruction. The Lord therefore reminded them, (for it is probable, that these predictions would be sent to them or heard of by them,) that he was about to deliver them also into the hands of their enemies to be destroyed. It is likely, that Nebuchadnezzar subjugated the Ammonites some time after the destruction of Jerusalem: that the Arabians, and other nations, to the east of Judah, took possession of their cities and enjoyed the fruit of their hands: and that they made Rabboni their head-quarters, and there kept their camels and folded their flocks, of which they possessed vast multitudes. The Ammonites have long since perished from being a distinct nation: and the performance of these predictions was suited to convince the survivors, that Jehovah was indeed the only living and true God. By the men of the east may be meant the Chaldeans. Ammon is reckoned among the countries which God foretold by Jeremiah, should be delivered into the hands of the king of Babylon. (LXX. & Marg. Ref.)

V. 8. Judah had been distinguished from other nations, by the peculiar protection of Jehovah, as well as by the temple, and the worship there performed; but their idolatries had rendered them like the nations: and their calamities terminating in the destruction of their city and temple, seemed to indicate, that the Lord either could not or would not protect them any longer. Thus they appeared to be made like to the heathen; and Moab and Edom were greatly rejoiced at it.

V. 9. I will make a passage for his enemies to invade his frontier-cities, and from thence to possess themselves of the best of his country. (LXX.)

V. 10, 11. To the sons of the east, with the sons of Ammon, I have even given it for a possession; in order that the sons of Ammon may no longer be remem-...
17 And I will execute great vengeance upon them with furious rebukes; and they shall know that I am the Lord, when I lay my vengeance upon them.

CHAPTER XXVI.

The ruin of Tyre, for insulting over Jerusalem, is foretold, 1—6. The siege and taking of that city by Nebuchadnezzar, 7—14; and the consternation occasioned by its fall, 15—21.

And it came to pass in the eleventh year, in the first day of the month, that the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, because that Tyre hath said against Jerusalem, Aha, she is broken that was a gate of the nations; she is turned unto me: I shall replenish, now she is laid waste:

3 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against thee, O Tyrus, and will cause thee and thy nations to come up against thee, as the sea causeth his waves to come up.

4 And they shall destroy the walls of Tyre, and break down her towers; I will also scrape her dust from her, and make her like the top of a rock.

5 It shall be a place for the spreading of nets in the midst of the sea: for I have spoken it, saith the Lord God; and it shall become a spoil to the nations.

6 And her daughters which are in thee shall be slain by the sword; and they shall know that I am the Lord.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The hatred, which ungodly men bear to true religion, is so excessive, that they can rejoice in the desolations of the Church and the calamities of her children, even when ruin impends over them from the same quarter! Though God acts with perfect wisdom and justice, in permitting the profanation of his sanctuary, and the troubles of his professed worshippers, being influenced by abhorrence of their sins, and zeal for his own glory, yet their enemies are induced by far other motives, when they triumph and insult over them in such circumstances. They who rejoice at the calamities of their neighbours, out of avarice, ambition, resentment, or malignity, will be exposed to judgments for it: but they that rejoice with great delight in the afflictions of God's people, out of hatred to his truth and worship, may expect that he will stretch forth his hand against them, as his personal enemies. Gladly would such persons see the Church entirely destroyed, and made in character and circumstances like the rest of the world: but, notwithstanding all her corruptions and afflictions, a vast difference still remains, and will continue to the end of the world, and to all eternity. When rapacious men are about to seize upon the possessions of others, they often are deprived of their own: and such as disdain the afflicted will soon sink into contempt. Vengeance belongeth unto God; they who without his commission revenge themselves, greatly offend, and will be made to know his vengeance: and they who treasure up the old hatred, and watch for their opportunity of manifesting it, are "treasuring up for themselves wrath against the day of wrath, and revelation of the righteous judgment of God."

NOTES.

CHAP. XXVI. V. 1. It is probable that this was the first day of the first month of that year, in which Jerusalem was taken; though the month is not mentioned.

(Marg. Ref.)
7 Therefore saith the Lord God; Behold, I will bring upon Tyrus Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon, a king of kings, from the north, with horses, and with chariots, and with horsemen, and with the people, and with the multitude.

8 He shall slay the sword thy daughters in the field, and he shall make a heap against thee, and cast up a mount against thee, and lift up the buckler against thee.

9 And he shall set engines of war against thy walls, and with his axes he shall break down thy towers.

10 By reason of thy abundance of horses their dust shall cover thee; thy walls shall shake at the noise of the horsemen, and of the wheels, and of the chariots, when he shall enter into thy gates, as men enter into a city wherein is made a breach.

11 With the hoofs of his horses shall he tread down all thy streets; he shall slay thy people by the sword, and thy strong garrisons shall go down to the ground.

12 And they shall make a spoil of thy riches, and make a prey of thy merchandise; and they shall break down thy walls, and destroy thy pleasant houses; and they shall lay thy stones, and thy timber, and thy dust, in the midst of the water.

13 And I will cause the noise of thy songs to cease; and the sound of thy harps shall be no more heard.

14 And I will make thee as the top of a rock: thou shalt be a place of refuge to the nets upon thee; thou shalt be built no more; for I the Lord have spoken it, saith the Lord God.

15 Thus saith the Lord God to Tyrus; Shalt not the isles shake at the sound of thy fall, when the wounded cry, when the slaughter is made in the midst of thee?

16 Then all the princes of the sea shall come down from their thrones, and lay away their robes, and put off their broidered garments; they shall clothe themselves with trembling; they shall sit upon the ground, and shall tremble at every moment, and be astonished at thee.

flourishing city, as is here predicted, and has accordingly happened? The Lord, being against Tyre, declared that he would cause many nations to come up against her. This may mean the Chaldean army, composed with troops from several nations; but it seems rather to intend the Chaldeans, Macedonians and other nations, who successively weakened and have at length totally desolated Tyre. These shall bear down all before them, like an inundation of the sea: and not only destroy her walls and towers; but even reduce the ground, on which the city stood, to a bare and barren rock, a place for the spreading of nits, like some rocks found in the midst of the sea. The spoil and trade of Tyre would also be divided among many nations; and the dependent towns and villages, in the adjacent country, would fall before her by the sword of the conquerors. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 9-11. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 12. A spoil, &c. Though the Tyrians had carried off their most valued treasures; so that Nebuchadrezzar, when he took the city after thirteen years' siege, was greatly disappointed as to the value of the plunder; yet there could not but be great quantities of spoil left in so rich a city. (Note, xxix. 17-20.)

V. 13. Great cities are full of all kinds of gaiety and luxury; this shall be turned into a melancholy silence. (Lowth.) (Marg. Ref.)

V. 14. It has been commonly said, that when old Tyre was closely besieged, and was near falling into the hands of the enemy, that the Tyrians fled from thence, and built new Tyre on the island; but the learned Vitringa hath proved at large from good authorities, that New Tyre was founded several ages before, and was the station for ships. (Bp. Newton.) It was, however, the city on the continent which Nebuchadrezzar destroyed, and this was never rebuilt. He razed the whole to the ground, and slew all found therein. After this it never recovered its former glory; not rising any higher than to become a village by the name of old Tyre. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 15. The isles, &c. The countries of Europe bordering on the Mediterranean, which traded with Tyre and where her colonies were established, seem here to be principally intended. They were greatly interested in her fate, which must have exceedingly affected their trade and prosperity; probably they had much wealth in the hands of the Tyrian merchants, and in the warehouses of that city, when it was destroyed; and the fall of so prosperous a city, and the miseries endured by her inhabitants, were sufficient to make all others tremble for themselves, as well as mourn over her.

V. 16. (Marg. Ref.) The consternation, occasioned
B. C. 588.

CHAPTER XXVI.

17 And they shall take up a lamentation for thee, and say to thee, How art thou destroyed that wast inhabited of sea-faring men, the renowned city which wast strong in the sea, she and her inhabitants, which cause their terror to be on all that haunt it!

18 Now shall the isles tremble in the day of thy fall; yea, the isles that are in the sea shall be troubled at thy departure.

19 For thus saith the Lord God; When I shall make thee a desolate city, like the cities that are not inhabited; by the fall of Tyre, is described in language peculiarly impressive and affecting.

V. 17, 18. Terror, &c. Though the Tyrians never made extensive conquests by land; yet they claimed the sovereignty of the seas, and often made those who frequented them tremble, by their powerful fleets and superior skill in naval affairs: but they would at length cause them to tremble by their unexpected fall.

Departure. When thy people shall be carried captive. (Lomth.) Or, when they fled from the city, and emigrated to other countries.

V. 19. Bring, &c. The destruction of Tyre is here compared to a shipwreck. (Note, xxvii. 26—36.)

V. 20. Tyre would at length be so entirely destroyed, that her prosperity would no more be remembered, than men are when they have long been dead and buried. This would be at the time “when the Lord should set glory in the land of the living”; which may either mean, the display of his glory in the fulfilment of this prediction, or in the restoration of the Jews to their own land: or it may refer to the coming of Christ, and the establishment of the Gospel. Some make Tyre a type of Rome, the New Testament Babylon, or antichrist; at whose destruction the Lord will set glory in the land of the living, by making his cause triumphant all over the earth. (Notes, Rev. xviii—xx.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—14.

Many maxims, current in the commercial world, are diametrically opposite to the law of God, which requires us to love our neighbour as ourselves: for the selfish love of gain influences men to rejoice in the calamities of others, even of cities and nations, that interfere with this leading object; especially if they can hope to grow rich when others are impoverished. But God will show himself to be against such mercenary selfish traders, whose hearts grow callous to every humane feeling, through the love of riches. How then must he abhor those who increase their wealth by the sweat and blood of their brethren, whom they violently enslave and cruelly oppress for this only reason! Men have little cause to glory in those precarious advantages, which excite the envy and rapacity of other covetous persons, and are continually shifting from one to another; and in getting, keeping, and spending of which, they provoke that God, whose wrath turns joyous cities into ruinous heaps. Thus his justice is displayed and his purposes effected from age to age; and none can say how soon the most powerful and wealthy resorts of commerce, may become like Tyre, a place for the spreading of nets, and a spoil to the nations. We have abundant cause for gratitude on account of that exemption from war in our land, with which we are favoured; and to pray that it may be continued to us and our posterity; for the condition of invaded countries, and besieged and plundered cities, EZEKIEL.

B. C. 588.

CHAP. XXVII.

The riches and extensive commerce of Tyre, 1-25. Her dreadful and irrecoverable fall, 26-36.

THE word of the Lord came again unto me, saying,

2 Now, thou son of man, take up a lamentation for Tyre;

3 And say unto Tyre, O thou that art situated at the entry of the sea, which art a merchant of the people for many isles, Thus saith the Lord God; O Tyre, thou hast said, I am of perfect beauty.

4 Thy borders are in the midst of the seas; thy builders have perfected thy beauty.

5 They have made all thy ship-boards of fir trees of Senir: they have taken cedars from Lebanon to make masts for thee.

6 Of the oaks of Bashan have they made thine oars; the cedars of Lebanon have made thine benches of ivory, brought out of the isles of Chittim.

7 Fine linen, and broidered work, from Egypt, was that which thou spreadest forth to be thy sail; blue and purple came from the isles of Elishah that spreadeth her confidence.

8 The inhabitants of Zidon and Arvad were thy mariners: thy wise men, O Tyre, that were in thee, were thy pilots.

9 The ancients of Gebal, and the wise men thereof were in thee thy cariners: all the ships of the sea with their mariners were in thee to occupy thy merchandise.

most dreadful. Indeed nothing can reconcile the humane reflecting Christian to the horrors and carnage of war: but the consideration, that the righteous Lord is thus displaying his glory, and making way for the establishment of his kingdom of truth and holiness.

V. 15-21.

They who carefully study the Scriptures, will derive advantage even from the desolations of war, through successive generations and in the most distant regions; as they will thence deduce still fuller proof of the divine inspiration of that sacred book, which is the rule of their conduct and the foundation of their hope: every discovery of a remarkable fulfilment of any scripture- prophecy, is like an evident miracle wrought before their eyes for the confirmation of their faith; and this evidence is continually accumulating upon them, in connexion with the witness "in themselves" which they enjoy in their own experience. Being thus instructed and established in the faith, we should use redoubled diligence, to obtain and possess the full assurance of our citizenship in that city, which hath immovable foundations, unshakable treasures and joys increasing and eternal, and which no enemies can destroy. All else is vanity and vexation: they, who now terrify others by their power, may soon astonish them by their fall: they, who have now the most established prosperity, will soon be as dead men, out of sight and forgotten: and the wicked will not only go down into the grave, but into the bottomless pit of destruction. But the glory of God, the preservation and prosperity of his Church, and the everlasting salvation of his people, will be promoted by the destruction of all who oppose them.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXVII. V. 2. This alludes to the mourning duties used at funerals, wherein the mourning women recounted every thing that was valuable or praise-worthy belonging to the deceased, and lamented his loss.

V. 3. Tyre was situated upon the Mediterranean sea, and formed the nearest entrance to it from the interior of Asia. It was therefore every way conveniently placed, to unite in commerce Asia, Africa, and Europe, the whole of the known world at that time: especially it was the centre for the trade of Asia and the East Indies, with the many islands and countries of Europe. Old Tyre was built upon the sea-coast on the continent; the new city was upon an island about half a mile from the shore. In both, the builders had done their utmost to render every thing commodious, elegant, and magnificent, in the greatest degree: so that they seem to have perfected their beauty. Of these improvements in architecture, and in every thing connected with the most extensive trade and the most abundant prosperity, the Tyrians were exceedingly proud: and they thought their city a perfect model, and superior to all others in the world. (Marg. Rf.)

V. 5-9. In the subsequent description of the navigation and commerce of Tyre, the critics and antiquarians have found much employment; but a few brief hints must suffice in this place. The whole is suited to give us the enlarged idea of the wealth, luxury, and extensive commerce of this renowned city: and to render the prediction of its ruin and its accomplishment, the more affecting and instructive. The Tyrians or Phenicians, for Tyre was the principal city of Phenicia, were accounted the inventors of navigation; and it is certain, that they carried it to greater perfection than any of the ancients. We are here informed, that the planks for their shipping or the decks of their ships were of fir, brought from Shirin, or mount Hermon: their masts were made of cedars of Lebanon; their oars, (for oars as well as sails were used in most, if not all, of the ships of the ancients,) were of the oaks of Bashan: so that the land of Israel 10 They of Persia, and of Lud, and of Phut, were in thine army thy men of war; they hanged the shield and helmet in thee: they set forth thy comeliness.

11 The men of Arvad with thine army were upon thy walls round about, and the Gammadims in thy towers: they hanged their shields upon thy walls round about; they have made thy beauty perfect.

12 a Tarshish was thy merchant by reason of the multitude of all kind of riches; with silver, iron, tin, and lead, they traded in thy fairs.

13 a Javan, Tubal, and Meshech, they were thy merchants: they traded the persons of men, and vessels of brass, in thy market.

14 They of the house of Togarmah traded in thy fairs with horses, and horsemen, and mules.

15 The men of Dedan were thy merchants; many isles were the merchandise of thine hand: they brought thee for a present horns of ivory and ebony.

16 c Syria was thy merchant by reason of the multitude of the wares of thy making; they occupied in thy fairs with emeralds, purple, and brodered work, and fine linen, and coral, and agate.

17 Judah, and the land of Israel, they were thy merchants: they traded in thy market wheat of Minnith and Pannag, and honey, and oil, and balm.

18 b Damascus was thy merchant in the multitude of the wares of thy making, for the multitude of all riches; in the wine of Helbon, and white wool.

19 a Dan also, and Javan, || going to and fro, occupied in thy fairs: bright iron, k cassia, and calamus, were in thy market.

20 a Dedan was thy merchant in precious clothes for chariots.

21 a Arabia, and all the princes of Kedar, they occupied with thee in caravans, camels, and camels, and camels: these were thy merchants.

22 The merchants of Sheba and Raamah, they were thy merchants: they occupied in thy fairs with all spices, and with all precious stones, and gold.

23 a Haran, and a Cnehel, and a Eden, a Thime, a Shem, a Unto Chittim, their ships are come.

The Tyrians were also furnished with benches of ivory, or inlaid with ivory, by the company of the Ashurites. As ivory was brought out of the interior parts of Asia; and as Chittim signifies the countries adjacent to the Mediterranean sea; it is probable, either that some Europeans imported the ivory, and sold the benches when made to the Tyrians, or that artificers came to Tyre to manufacture them. But it does not appear how the Assyrians could be said to make these benches; and the clause is rendered by some, of box-wood inlaid with ivory. See also the margin. The fine linen of Egypt, which was renowned throughout the world, and richly embroidered too, was used by the Tyrians for their sails: or rather for their flags or colours, as the original may be rendered: for it can scarcely be conceived that their sails were generally formed of such materials; though such extravagance might occasionally be used in an ostentatious display of wealth and magnificence. Their clothes, or the tents and canopies upon the decks of their galleys, were formed of cloth of blue and purple from the islands of the Egean sea, or the Grecian colonies near the coast of Asia Minor. Purple was called the Tyrian colour: yet they were not contented with their own manufactures, but luxuriously used that, which was brought from far and at a great price. They had mariners from Zidon, the mothercity and from Arvad an island in Phoenicia: who did the laborious work on board their ships; whilst the Tyrians, being very skilful in navigation, acted only as pilots, or occupied the more honourable departments. The inhabitants of Gebal, a promontory in Phenicia, having been long skilful and experienced, in closing the joinings of the ships to prevent leaks, or in stopping them when made, were retained for this service: whilst ships and mariners from all nations came to Tyre to purchase their merchandise, and to dispose of their own for it. (Merg. Ref.)

V. 10, 11. The Tyrians were themselves chiefly employed in navigation and commerce, and in enjoying their alliance: but it was requisite that they should have forces ready to oppose hostile assailants. They had therefore an army of men, hired from Persia, Lydia, and Lybia; whose martial appearance and armour added to the comeliness of the city. The island of Arvad dispatched them with soldiers to guard their walls, as well as with mariners; and the Gammadims, who perhaps inhabited some part of Phenicia, garrisoned their towers; and their glittering shields, being hung upon the walls, made them have a still more magnificent appearance. (Merg. Ref.) The Lydians in Asia seem to have descended from Sheem: but Ludim is placed among the sons of Misraim, the son of Ham: and as Lud and Phut are elsewhere named together, it is probable that some tribe in Africa is meant; perhaps the Abyssinians. The conjectures about the Gammadims are altogether unsatisfactory.
the merchants of Sheba, Assur, and Chittim, were thy merchants.

24 These were thy merchants in all sorts of things, in blue cloths, and broderied work, and in chests of rich apparel, bound with cords, and made of cedar, among thy merchandize.

25 The ships of Tarshish did sing of thee in the midst of the sea.

26 Thy rowsers have brought thee into great waters: the east wind hath broken thee in the midst of the sea.

27 Thy riches, and thy fairs, thy merchant ships, thy mariners, and thy pilots, thy cackers, and the occupiers of thy merchandize, and all thy men of war that are in thee, and in all thy company, which is in the midst of thee, shall fall into the midst of the sea, in the day of thy ruin.

28 And all that handle the oar, the mariners, and all the pilots of the sea, shall come down from their ships, they shall stand upon the land.

30 And shall cause their voice to be heard against thee, and shall cry bitterly, and shall cast up dust upon their heads; they shall wallow themselves in the ashes:

31 And they shall make themselves utterly bald for thee, and gird them with sackcloth; and they shall weep for thee in bitterness of heart and bitter wailing.

32 And in their wailing they shall take up a lamentation for thee, and say, What city is like Tyre, like the destroyed in the midst of the sea?

33 When thy wares went forth out of the seas, thou filledst many people; thou didst enrich the kings of the earth with the multitude of thy riches, and of thy merchandize.

34 In the time when thou shalt be broken by the seas in the depths of thy merchandize, and all thy company in the midst of thee shall fall.

35 All the inhabitants of the isles shall be astonished at thee, and their kings shall be sore afraid, they shall be troubled in their countenance.

36 The merchants among the people shall hiss at thee; thou shalt be a terror, and never shalt be any more.

V. 12–25. We have here a particular account of the nations or cities, that traded with Tyre, and the commodities which they brought to her markets. Thus Tarshish, or Tartessus in Spain, as it is supposed exchanged various metals, which were either the produce of that country or fetched from others, for the rich luxuries of the eastern world. It is probable that the tin was brought from Britain, (out of Cornwall,) which was first known to the ancients, as yielding great quantities of that metal. The different parts of Greece, or the regions about the Euxine and Caspian seas, sold slaves, and vessels of brass to the Tyrians. Togarmah, or Phergias, Cappadocia, or some of the regions in Asia Minor, supplied them with horses and mules, and with servants skilful in managing them. The inhabitants of Dedan, supposed to be in Arabia, traded with them; and many islands or countries of Europe, bought of the Tyrians the goods which they brought them: especially their horns of ivory, or rather, horns, ivory and ebony, i.e. horns of some curious animals, ivory which is the teeth of elephants, and ebony, a very hard and valuable wood. These they brought for a present to the Tyrians, or rather as the price of the goods which they purchased. "Many islands bought the merchandize of thy hand," &c. (15.) The Syrians bought the manufactures, which the Tyrians made in abundance, and paid for them with precious stones and other articles of luxury. The land of Judah and Israel had no precious stones or metals to exchange, (though it was the glory of all lands;) but it supplied them with what was more valuable, namely, abundance of good wheat, honey, oil, and balm used in medicine: (it is uncertain whether Pannæus be the name of a place, or of some valued production of Canaan.) Damascus changed the wine of Hebron, and white wool, which were both in great repute, for the useful manufactures of Tyre. The inhabitants of Dan and Javan, (probably not the city Dan in the coasts of Israel, nor any part of Greece as before, but cities in the east,) brought polished iron or steel, with rich spices to Tyre, to exchange for the commodities of the western world: as another Dedan, (probably in Tuaméa,) did rich cloths to ornament or line their chariots. Some districts of Arabia supplied Tyre with cattle; others with spices, gold, and precious stones. The inhabitants of Mesopotamia, Media, and the adjacent regions, traded with Tyre, bringing clay of all kinds of rich apparel. In short, all the ships which sailed on the sea, and which were generally called the ships of Tarshish, celebrated the praises of Tyre: that city was replenished with all kinds of riches, and made glorious with all earthly decorations and magnificence. Upon a review of this account of the commerce of Tyre, it is plain that that city traded with every part of the then known world, either immediately, or through the medium of other nations. (Mary. Ref.)

V. 26–36. Tyre is here poetically described as a ship
CHAP. XXVIII.

The judgment of God on the prince of Tyre, for his iniquitous pride, i.-10. A lamentation over him, as fallen from his height of grandeur through iniquity, 11.-19. A prophecy against Zidon, 20.-23. The restoration of Israel, 24.-26.

at sea, and wrecked through the mismanagement of her pilots and rowers. When the rulers of Tyre provoked Nebuchadnezzar to make war upon them, and when they pertinaciously resolved to withstand that haughty conqueror, they rowed this gallant ship into perilous waters; and when the city was taken, it was "broken by the east-wind in the midst of the seas." The same was the case in the time of Alexander the great, and in those subsequent disasters, which terminated in the total ruin of Tyre. Thus the inhabitants and riches of Tyre, like the crew and cargo of a broken ship, sunk into the midst of the seas. The cry of the leading men in Tyre, when they saw that the city must be taken; (like that of pilots, when they perceive that the ship must sink,) would be heard in the extreme parts of the city, or even on the adjacent continent. All the rowers and mariners of the ships that had used to trade to Tyre, would come on shore to witness the fatal catastrophe, and would express their extreme sorrow by every significant token; and with great astonishment and deep regret contrast the former prosperity of Tyre, when kings and nations were enriched by her, with her present condition, now that she was utterly broken and ruined. But whilst most kings and nations would be astonished and troubled, some merchants would triumph and insult over her, (as she had done over Jerusalem,) expecting to be replenished, now she was laid waste. The whole of this is so correspondent to the lamentation made over the fall of the New Testament-Babylon, or Rome, that we cannot but suppose, there was something typical in the fall of Tyre. (Murf. Ref.) The vicissitudes of time, or rather the barbarism of the Greeks of the lower empire, and the Mahometants, have accomplished this prediction. Instead of that ancient commerce, so active and so extensive, Sour, (Tyre,) reduced to a miserable village, has no other trade than the exportation of a few sacks of corn and raw cotton, nor any merchant but a single Greek factor, who scarcely makes sufficient profit to maintain his family. (Folner.) This extract is taken from the writings of one, who published the observations, which he made on the spot; and who was very far indeed from favouring the cause of revelation.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS. V. 1.-25.

Whilst there are persons and books in abundance, ready to instruct us concerning the advantages of extensive commerce, about which the inhabitants of these nations are neither ignorant nor indifferent; it would be well, if more regard were paid to those Scriptures, which point out the sins and dangers, to which men are exposed by it. We should be thankful for our situation at the entrance of the seas, which renders our land as convenient a centre of modern commerce, as Tyre was of ancient commerce: and we possess singular advantages as an island, for excluding foreign invaders, as well as for a friendly intercourse with all the nations of the earth. At the same time we should by no means forget the wisdom and goodness of the Creator, in so dispensing his liberality, that each country has its valuable productions, which it can spare to other nations: and it would be happy for mankind, if the mutual destruction of wars were more generally exchanged for the reciprocal advantages of commerce, till all nations were united in one common bond of amity and mutual utility. It is also worthy our notice, how many things of small value in themselves, are by manufactures and commerce, rendered the means of honest industry and subsistence to many thousands. Yet commerce, beneficial as it is, hath its peculiar dangers and evils. Alas, that modern commerce, and even that of thisfavoured land, should have occasioned perhaps the shedding of more human blood, than the destructive wars of sanguinary conquerors! But we hope that God will ere long raise up to us a number of humane and philanthropic legislators to terminate these hateful abuses; and to establish such regulations, as shall render our commerce conducive to the happiness of the most distant nations, as well as to that of our own. Otherwise, whatever proflane politicians may imagine, our prosperity will soon be broken, like a ship-wrecked vessel. It is obvious likewise, that commerce tends to increase men's wants and inordinate gratifications, and their pride, self-confidence, and vain glory: as if it rendered cities and nations, perfect in beauty and sufficient for their own prosperity, independent of the providence of God. Too often men, eagerly pursuing riches, neglect justice, truth, and humanity; and deem every measure justifiable that proves lucrative, and every thing glorious that is prosperous. Yet more merchants and traders are just, generous, and benevolent, than humble, pious, and devoted to God. When riches increase, the possessors are apt to set their hearts upon them, and to forget the Lord, who alone giveth them power to get wealth: they prefer the wisdom of this world, to that which is from above: they study the ledger more than the bible: extending their trade is a far greater object in their view, than the propagation of the Gospel: religion is made subservient to worldly interest: and the maxims of the counting-house are employed in bartering for church-livings, and in managing designs, professedly intended for pious and charitable purposes. The beauty of holiness and the peculiar privileges of the children of God, have no splendour in their eyes, compared with large estates, fair houses elegantly furnished, and all the indulgence of pride and luxury, and of that avarice by which they are supported. And thus the religion, morals, and maxims of nations are corrupted and debauched: the sinews of their strength are relaxed, their policy degenerates into craft, and their councils into mercenary sophistry.

V. 26.-36.

When nations have filled up the measure of their sins, the Lord in anger gives up their rulers to be infatuated, to
THE word of the Lord came again unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, say unto the prince of Tyre, Thus saith the Lord God; Because thy heart is lifted up, and thou hast said, I am a god, I sit in the seat of God, in the midst of the seas; yet thou art a man, and not God, though thou set thine heart as the heart of God:

3 Behold, thou art wiser than Daniel; there is no secret that they can hide from thee:

4 With thy wisdom and with thine understanding, thou hast gotten riches, and hast gotten gold and silver into thy treasures:

5 By thy great wisdom and by thy riches, therefore they have set thine heart as the heart of God:

6 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Because thou hast set thine heart as the heart of God,

7 Behold, therefore, I will bring strangers upon thee, the terrible of the nations: and they shall draw their swords against the beauty of thy wisdom, and they shall defile thy brightness.

8 They shall bring thee down to the pit, and thou shalt die at the hands of them that dwell in the midst of the seas.

9 Wilt thou yet say before him that slayeth thee, I am God? but thou shalt be a man, and not God, in the hand of him that slayeth thee.

10 And they shall break the beauty of thy wisdom, and cast it off from thee; and they shall bring thee down to the pit of destruction:

NOTES.

CHAP. XXVIII. V. 2—5. Eboth or Ithobal, was the prince or king of Tyre at the time when this prophecy was spoken, and when the city was taken by Nebuchadnezzar. He seems to have been a man of eminent abilities, and under his government the Tyrians for a time prospered exceedingly. But being lifted up with the exaltation of his most excessive pride, he arrogated divine honours to himself, as many vain-glorying monarchs have done. His sovereignty over the seas was so uncontrolled, and his authority was so firmly established, that he seemed to himself to be a god; and to be placed on the throne of God, rather than on that of man. Yet was he a poor frail mortal man, and not God, though he affected to be absolute, independent, and honoured as a deity. Daniel, who was at this time not more than thirty-six years of age, being employed in the court of the king of Babylon, had become exceedingly renowned for his wisdom in all the concerns of government, as well as in interpreting dreams, and resolving difficult questions: but the king of Tyre supposed himself to be wiser than he, and that no secret could be hid from him. He was perhaps a man of learning, and understood many abstract subjects; or he had discovered the secret machinations of his enemies, which he ascribed to his own discernment, and supposed that nothing could elude his penetration. But the chief use of his wisdom was to increase his revenues and treasures, by protecting the trade and wealth of his subjects. This he ascribed to his own wise counsels; and thus his riches tended in every way to enhance his pride and add sufficiency. (Is. xliii. 7—10.)
V. 6–10. "Thou didst think in thine heart, that thou wast equal with God." (Old Tr.) (Jeh 18. 5. Phi. ii. 6.) This haughty prince was become the rival of the Lord of Hosts, and robbed him of his glory; who therefore resolved to resist and abase him. The Chaldeans were not numbered among the people who traded with the Tyrians, but were strangers; yet the Lord had chosen them to execute his sentence against that city and her king. They were the most terrible of the nations, and would oppose their victorious arms to Ethbaal’s self-wise politics. By besieging and at length taking and destroying, Tyre, they would tarnish and defile all his beauty and splendour; and they would bring him down to the grave, without any honour or ceremony; as those who are slain at sea, are thrown overboard to be devoured by the fishes. And would he still boast that he was a god, when in the hands of the executors of the Lord’s vengeance on him? Certainly his death would prove the contrary: and as he would die out of God’s covenant and under his wrath, and the death of the wicked, (which was meant by the death of the uncircumcised,) he would perish miserably in every sense. ‘Thou shalt come to the same ill end as befall the other enemies of God and of his truth.’ (Louv. Th.) Hiram king of Tyre, was the friend of David and Solomon, and probably a pious person: yet his successors had joined the enemies of God, and Ithobalus especially would have his portion among them. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 12–15. The prophet was directed to conclude the prediction against Tyre with a lamentation, or poetical elegy, over this haughty monarch; which would be the more memorable, as he was at that time at the height of pride and prosperity. Ithobalus’s opinion of his own dignity and his ostentation of magnificence, are described in very remarkable language. He vainly thought himself to be the sum of all excellency; that his abilities, personal accomplishments, authority, and splendour, comprised the fulness of wisdom and the perfection of beauty; and that they were his by an unalienable tenure, securely sealed up among his treasures. He thought his dignity as great, and his advantages as many, as those of Adam in Eden, in the garden of God. His crown was formed, and his garments decorated, with abundance of precious stones: of these nine are mentioned, which were set in gold, and were the same as nine of those that were placed in the breast-plate of the high-priest, whom some think he meant to vie with in this particular. Tabrets, and other musical instruments, had been prepared for him with exquisite skill; either to celebrate his coronation, the day when he was created king, or his birth, and afterwards his birth-day, as it annually returned. Perhaps he had been anointed king, according to the custom in Israel: it was his office to cover or protect his people, and for this purpose God had raised him to his throne: but he forgot his dependence on him, deemed himself able to do it by his own power, and shone in his own eyes, as an angel in heaven, or a deity. This refers to the cherubim that covered the mercy-seat, which were anointed with the holy ointment, along with the ark of the covenant, &c. (Marg. Ref.) or to those who guarded the entrance of Eden, and kept every way the tree of life. In this conceit of his own excellency, and counting himself equal to the inhabitants of heaven, the holy mountain of God, he walked upon and down, surrounded and decorated with precious stones, sparkling like fire. Indeed the affairs of Tyre had been managed by him with great prudence and success, from the beginning of his reign; till the detection of his iniquity brought down the wrath of God upon him, and then he was infatuated to his ruin. The expressions used in this poetical description of the excessive pride of this monarch, seem to allude to the fall of angels, and to that of Adam in Paradise; and they intimated that his ruin would be owing to the same cause, and attended with similar effects to him. (Note, Is. xiv. 4–20.) He is likewise supposed to have been a type of the Roman antichrist, of whom similar things are spoken in the New Testament; and almost the whole of this description may be accommodated to that proud enemy of God and his truth. But indeed the character, pretensions, and fall of one man, who has been intoxicated with power and pride, so resembles those of others of the same spirit, that it is not always easy to determine, whether the coincidence arises from this circumstance, or whether the one was intended to be a type of the other. Thou wast, &c. ‘An exact description of the angelical perfection in which the devil was created; and in which he continued, till, being lifted up with pride, he fell from his estate.’ (Louv.) (Marg. Ref.)
The inhabitants of Zidon, which was the more ancient but the less considerable city, and depended on Tyre. The Lord however was against Zidon also; and he determined to glorify his power, justice, and truth, in executing judgments on her, by pestilence and the sword; that his holy name might thereby be known and in honour. This seems to have been fulfilled by the Chaldeans. Zidon was at length utterly destroyed by Ochus, king of Persia. (Jewish.)

V. 24—26. These cities bordering on Israel, and peopled in great measure from the ancient inhabitants of Canaan, had been thorns and briers to them; had created them much trouble, and treated them with great contempt. But they were about to be finally deprived of their power to molest them. So that when the Lord should restore Israel to their own land, for the glory of his name among the nations, they would dwell in peace and prosperity, being delivered from their enemies, by the just judgments of God upon them. This was in part fulfilled, after the return of the Jews from captivity: but it is probable, that it will have a more striking accomplishment, when they shall be converted to Christ, and gathered from their present dispersions. The last clause (and many others to the same effect,) imply, that they shall know God and his perfections by their own experience.

V. 21—22. Tyre was built by the inhabitants of Zidon, which was the more ancient but the less considerable city, and depended on Tyre. The Lord however was against Zidon also; and he determined to glorify his power, justice, and truth, in executing judgments on her, by pestilence and the sword; that his holy name might thereby be known and in honour. This seems to have been fulfilled by the Chaldeans. Zidon was at length utterly destroyed by Ochus, king of Persia. (Jewish.)

V. 18—19. The policy of the king of Tyre had employed such methods of extending commerce, as led to much violence and oppression, and various transgressions of the divine law. And therefore, though he thought his city and throne sacred, as the mountain of God, being consecrated by his own divinity; yet the Lord would cast him out of it, as profane and abominable; he would destroy him from the midst of his ostentatious magnificence, as he had cast down the angels that sinned from their glorious state in heaven; and he should no longer think himself the protecting deity of Tyre. Seeing his heart was lifted up by his endowments and prosperity, and he had corrupted his wisdom, by employing it in base projects to increase his magnificence; the Lord would cast him to the ground, and render him a deplorable spectacle, and an instructive warning to other kings that should behold his fall. He had accumulated his palaces to be sanctuaries, or temples to his own divinity, in which he sat as in the seat of God: but he had deposited them by his crimes, and the iniquity allowed in his traffic; therefore they would be consumed with a fire kindled by his own folly; and he should perish with them amidst many spectators, for a terror and a warning to them, and never be restored. (Notes, xxvii.) The infamous traffic of antichrist, in the Church of God and about holy things, will certainly expose him to similar or more terrible destruction.
PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—10.

Pride is peculiarly the sin of our fallen nature, the essence of our apostasy, and the very poison which Satan’s temptation infused into the hearts of our first parents, and through them into those of all their children. Every possession, endowment, or distinction, which the Lord confers upon us, serves to excite and give energy to this hateful propensity: and we are disposed to idolize the gifts, or to glory in them as if from ourselves; and to forget the Giver, to become his rival, and to speak and act, as if we were independent of him and sufficient to our own safety and happiness. To such a tremendous excess has this disease sometimes arisen, that poor dying worms have fancied themselves deities; have demanded temples, sacrifices, and adoration; have dreamed, that they were able to save or to destroy; and have presumed to arrogate the style, and attempted to exercise the peculiar prerogatives, of the most High God! But the mightiest and the most accomplished monarch, whose heart is thus lifted up and intoxicated by dignity and prosperity, may be assured, that God will resist and abase him; and what a wretch will he be proved at last, who, having been honoured and flattered as more than human through life; dies in his sins, and has his eternal portion with the devil and his angels in the bottomless pit! Then, at least, the delusion will cease, and he will know himself to be a feeble and wretched, because a sinful, man. What then is that wisdom, of which so many boast, as if no secret could be hid from them? It may perhaps serve to amass riches and other incentives to their worldly lusts: yet even in this respect, both the exercise and the success of it depend on the providence of God. If in these things they were wiser and more prosperous than Daniel or than Solomon; yet the most illustrious and despised believer is far wiser than they, in the most important matters; for “the secret of the Lord is with them that fear him,” which can alone lead to happiness temporal and eternal. Whereas all the wisdom in the world, is in fact insufficient to save men’s bodies from the grave, or their souls from hell: it cannot secure their limbs from pain, or their hearts from anguish: and a fever or a blow may render the wisest man on earth an idiot or a lunatic to the end of his days.

V. 11—26.

How vain are all talents, beauty, dignity, or magnificence! How little would it avail us if we could seal all worldly accomplishments and distinctions among our treasures! Nay, were it possible to enter the garden of Eden, and to contemplate its beauties, feast upon its fruits; or even to enter heaven, that holy mountain of God, and base and abject condition through succeeding generations, 13—16. Nebuchadnezzar rewarded, for his labour in besieging Tyre, with the spoils of Egypt, 17—20. Israel shall again flourish, 21.

among his angels to behold the glories, and hear the harmony of that blessed place; we could enjoy no solid happiness, without a humble, holy, and spiritual mind. Should the brightest Cherub or Seraph there, who has been perfect since the day in which he was created, discover the least pride and iniquity, he must be cast out as profane, even as Satan the first offender was; so that all wisdom and prosperity, which elate the heart, or are corrupted in devising or compassing iniquity, will soon prove to be folly and misery: and all the brightness of earthly magnificence, and the vain joys of sensual ungodly mirth, will soon be exchanged for weeping, wailing, and gnashing of teeth; except “godly sorrow, which worketh repentance unto salvation,” intervene. Spiritual pride, however, is of all other most diabolical; and when men are puffed up with knowledge, gifts, or eminence in the Church of God; when they ambitiously usurp authority, and arrogate to themselves the power over men’s consciences, or pretend to change the laws of God; when they mistake external pomp for the beauty of holiness, carnal policy for heavenly wisdom, and gain for godliness, and shine as angels in their own esteem: they peculiarly resemble Satan in heaven, when iniquity was first found in him; and are near a similar destruction to his, when he was cast down to hell. Such men often defile sacred places and functions by their iniquities and their infamous traffic about spiritual things: and they may expect to perish by no common destruction, but to be made a warning to others not to copy their sacrilege, blasphemy, and presumption. It is exceedingly difficult to possess any distinction, without being proud of it; or to conduct extensive and lucrative trade, without covetousness, oppression, or iniquity: indeed this can be learned nowhere, except in the school of Christ, and by the teaching of his Spirit. In short, sin alone can run a holy creature: and only he who taketh away sin, is able to do real good to fallen man. Happy therefore is the true Christian: though poor, afflicted, and despised; though destitute of shining talents, and exposed to prickling thorns and briars, or terrible persecutions. For whilst the cup of the Lord’s indignation goes round, and he is glorified in executing judgments on his proud and prosperous enemies, he will display his truth, power, and mercy, in the salvation and everlasting honour and felicity of his redeemed people. Let others then celebrate the genius and learning of Greece, and the magnificence and riches of Tyre, Babylon, or Rome. Let us celebrate the praises of Zion, the city of our God, of which glorious things are spoken by the Lord himself: let us seek no other honours or distinctions than those which belong to all her citizens; and whatever else we remain ignorant of, let us seek the humbling sanctifying knowledge of God, and the enlarged experience of his salvation. Then we shall be enabled to say, “The lines are fallen upon me in a pleasant place: yea, I have a goodly heritage.”
In the tenth year, in the tenth month, in the twelfth day of the month, the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, set thy face against Pharaoh king of Egypt, and prophesy against him, and against all Egypt:

3 Speak, and say, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against thee, Pharaoh king of Egypt, the great dragon that lieth in the midst of his rivers, which hath said, My river is mine own, and I have made it for myself.

4 But I will put hooks in thy jaws, and will cause the fish of thy rivers to stick unto thy scales; and I will bring thee up out of the midst of thy rivers, and all the fish of thy rivers shall stick unto thy scales.

5 And I will leave thee thrown into the wilderness, thee and all the fish of thy rivers; thou shalt fall upon the open fields; thou shalt not be brought together, nor gathered; I have given thee for meat to the beasts of the field, and to the fowls of the heaven.

6 And all the inhabitants of Egypt shall know that I am the Lord, because they have been a staff of reed to the house of Israel.

7 When they took hold of thee by thy hand, p thou didst break, and rend all their shoulder; and when they leaned upon thee, thou brakest, and madest all their loins to be at a stand.

8 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will bring a sword upon thee, and cut off man and beast out of thee, and cut thee off from the land of Egypt; and I will scatter thee abroad among the nations, and will defoliate and waste; and they shall know that I am the Lord; because he hath said, My river is mine own, and I have made it for myself.

10 Behold, therefore, I am against thee, and against thy rivers, and I will make the land of Egypt utterly waste and desolate, from the tower of Syene even unto the border of Ethiopia.

11 No foot of man shall pass through it, nor foot of beasts shall pass through it, neither shall it be inhabited forty years.

12 And I will make the land of Egypt desolate in the midst of the countries that are desolate, and her cities among the cities that are laid waste shall be desolate forty years; and I will scatter the Egyptians among the nations, and will disperse them through the countries.

13 Yet thus saith the Lord God; At the end of forty years will I gather the Egyptians from the people whither they were scattered:

NOTES.

CHAP. XXIX. V. 1. The tenth, &c. This and the three following chapters contain predictions concerning Egypt, delivered at different times; (Marg. Ref.) V. 3—5. (Notes, Isaiah xvii. xix. xx. Jer. xliii. 8—13. xliv. 29, 30, xlvii.) Pharaoh-hophra, or Apries, king of Egypt was here represented by a great dragon, or crocodile, lying in the midst of his rivers. The river Nile, and the streams and canals which communicated with it, rendered Egypt peculiarly prosperous and wealthy: and that river abounds with crocodiles, which are very voracious, and domineer over the other inhabitants of the river, as if they were the sole proprietors, and placed there to devour all the rest. Such was Pharaoh-hophra; he was a man of a very haughty, tyrannical, and cruel disposition: and having prospered for several years, he grew exceedingly arrogant; and as Herodotus informs us, he boasted that no God could deprive him of his kingdom. This impiety was as awful as if the crocodile should think that the river was his own, and that he made it for himself. But the Lord was able to deal with this unruly monster, who lay fearless in his rivers, and set all the universe at defiance; he meant to destroy him and his forces, as if he had dragged the crocodile forth with a hook, and all the fish of the river had stuck to his scales, and they had been all cast altogether upon a dry and desert place, to be devoured by the wild beasts, and the birds of prey. Bochart observes, that the word Pharaoh signifies a crocodile, in Arabic. The Egyptians in process of time, wearied with the tyranny and cruelty of Hophra, revolted from him, and under Amasis they routed and destroyed his army, and all that adhered to him; at length he too fell into the conqueror's hands, and was strangling by him; and thus Amasis succeeded to the throne, after Egypt had suffered most dreadful miseries by these intestine dissensions.

V. 6, 7. These events, fulfilling this and other prophecies, would tend to convince the Egyptians that the God of the Jews was the Lord of the whole earth. They would be thus punished because they had seduced the Israelites into a dependence on them, and then deceived them to their ruin. Both Israel and Judah had very sullenly formed alliances with the Egyptians, and relying on them, had engaged in wars with the Assyrians and Chaldeans. But Egypt proved to them like a staff of reed, which will not bear the weight of those who lean on it; but breaking, pierces their hands or arms, and leaves them in pain to stagger or fall. (Marg. Ref.)
14 And I will bring again the captivity of Egypt, and will cause them to return into the land of * Pathros, into the land of their * habitation; and they shall be there a * base kingdom.

15 It shall be the basest of the kingdoms; neither shall it exalt itself any more above the nations: for I will diminish them, that they shall no more * rule over the nations.

16 And it shall be no more the confidence of Israel, which bringeth their iniquity to remembrance, when they shall look after them: but they shall know that I am the Lord God.

17 ¶ And it came to pass in the seventh and twentieth year, in the first month, in the first day of the month, the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

18 Son of man, * Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon caused his army to serve a great service against Tyrus: every head * was made bald, and every shoulder * was peeled; yet had he no wages, nor his army, for Tyrus, for the service that he had served against it:

19 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Behold, * I will give the land of Egypt unto Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon; and he shall take her multitude, and take her spoil, and take her prey; and it shall be the wages for his army:

20 I have given him the land of Egypt for his labour wherewith he * served against it, because they wrought for me, saith the Lord God.

his party by civil wars; this relates to the desolations occasioned by the victorious arms of Nebuchadrezzar, some years after. It is probable that the people had approved of the proud and imperious language of their king, and so were punished as accomplices in his crime. The Lord caused Nebuchadrezzar to invade Egypt; and gave him such success, that he put a stop to their commerce and intercourse with their neighbours, and to their agriculture and journeying, and even reduced the country to a desert, "from the lower of Siene," or rather "from Migdol to Siene," "even to the borders of Ethiopia," from the entrance into Egypt out of Asia, to Ethiopia, from one end of the land to the other. History informs us that Nebuchadrezzar conquered Egypt, and carrying multitudes of prisoners, thence, dispersed them in different parts of his dominions; and doubtless numbers perished or took shelter in other nations at the same time. But we are not sufficiently informed of the transactions of those ages, to show the exact fulfilment of this part of the prophecy, as it hath been done in other instances. It was, however, predicted that the land would continue desolate, and the inhabitants dispersed, till forty years were expired; the end of which term nearly coincided with the ruin of the Babylonish monarchy; and it is probable that Cyrus permitted the captive Egyptians to return, and re-people their own land, as well as the captive Jews. * The calamities that befell the Egyptians are passed over by Herodotus; because the Egyptian priests would not inform him of anything that tended to the disgrace of their nation. * (Scaliger.)

V. 14, 15. From a few years after this prophecy was delivered, to the present day, Egypt has been governed by foreigners, and been tributary to other nations. It was long the most renowned kingdom in the world: but it had first oppressed, and then seduced and deceived the people of God; and this sentence was therefore denounced against it. After the ruin of the Babylonish monarchy, it was subdued by the Persians, and though it frequently revolted, they always recovered their dominion over it. It afterwards fell under the dominion of the Macedonians; then it became subject to the Romans, and at length a province of that empire. The Saracens next subdued it: then the Mamulucks, and lastly the Turks, to whom it remains in the most abject servitude at this day. Thus for above two thousand years Egypt hath continued a base and tributary kingdom, not able to exalt itself above the nations, as formerly; nor have the inhabitants, during all these ages, been permitted to live under princes of their own race. So that when at any time they have attempted to shake off the yoke; the short space during which they aimed at independence, was as nothing to this long term of years; and even then they were rather unsuccessfully struggling for liberty than actually enjoying it. This is a most astonishing accomplishment of a most singular prophecy: for who could have conceived, that so renowned and powerful a country should remain for such a succession of ages under subjection to foreigners? (Note, Gen. ix. 24, 25.) (Marg. Ref.)

V. 16. The Egyptians being reduced into subjection, the Jews were never afterwards tempted to make any confidence in them, as they had before done. Their confidence in Egypt brought their iniquity to remembrance: either it provoked the Lord to call their sins to remembrance, that he might punish them; or when the Jews in after ages should look upon the abject state of Egypt, it would cause them to remember, and be ashamed of the sin committed by their ancestors in depending on that people.
to give them a suitable recompense. He would therefore employ them in the conquest of Egypt, which was weakened by civil wars, would be an easy prey, and abundantly enrich them with its spoil. This prophecy was a confirmation of the preceding, which had been delivered almost seventeen years before.

V. 21. This seems to refer to the increasing influence and authority of Daniel, in the court of Nebuchadnezzar; and to the more favourable disposition of that prince to the religion of the Jews, during the latter part of his life. It may also relate to the deliverance of Jehoiakim from prison, and the favour shown him by Evil-merodach, the son of Nebuchadnezzar; which was a token for good to the house of Israel, in that the family of David began again in some measure to prosper. But some think that that day, relates to the termination of the forty years of Egypt's desolations, when the captivity of the Jews would also cease. We may suppose, that Ezekiel continued prophesying, when Daniel was in authority, and after Jehoiakim's enlargement, with greater encouragement and effect than before; but this, as connected with the former part of the next chapter, seems to be the latest prophecy of his that is transmitted to us. When thy prophecies are made good by the event, this shall add a new authority to what thou speakest. (Lown.) (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Wherever we turn our attention, we discover evidences of the pride and folly of the human heart; and of the abhorrence with which God beholds those who forget their dependence on him, and rob him of the glory due to his name. Prosperous oppressors are amongst the human species, as crocodiles in a river, or sea-monsters in the great waters: and whilst they prey without remorse on their inferiors, they should be regarded as the common enemies of mankind. Yet they have commonly beset the greatest part of those whom they have enslaved into a stupid admiration of their power and success, and into a pertinacious adherence to them even to their own ruin! When princes and their subjects unite in impiety and iniquity, or instruments, of each other's punishment. For he is against, and will show himself above, the most powerful and insolent workers of iniquity; and can easily subdue those who set all others, and even him, at defiance. He fights against those who injure his people, and still more against such as seduce them from their confidence in him, and draw them into sin. And though they deserve to be deceived, wounded, and deserted by those in whom they have sinned, confided in; yet their tempters and deceivers must expect the severest punishment. The desolating judgments and the avenging sword, which the Lord hath sent forth to all parts of the earth, and in the inconsiderate miscalls and favours that war hath made in every age and nation, prove that the world is full of wickedness: and these lamentable scenes not only illustrate the justice of God; but they are the natural effect of man's pride, revenge, ambition, avarice, and callous selfishness: they prove him to be the child of the earth, and to bear the image of the arch-apepostle, "the child of the devil," as the herald, to come from the earth; and to possess the same nature with the first-born of fallen Adam, who murdered his righteous brother. But it is a relief to the pious and humble mind to discern traces of the superintending providence of God, and of the truth of his word, in reviewing these dark transactions. The history of nations, in their rise, progress, and decline, is the best explanation of ancient prophecies: all events, in one way or other, fulfill the Scriptures, and turn to the believer for a testimony; for he remembers, that "thus was written and thus it must be." All things work together for the good of the Church; even nations are reduced, to remove from the people of God the occasions of sin, and to promote their holiness: and in the midst of the most tremendous scenes of war and bloodshed, he is bringing forward those glorious times of truth, and righteousness, and peace, which he hath promised shall succeed these convulsions. Thus is the deepest scenes of our adversity sown the seed of our future prosperity. The Lord hath raised up for us a Horn of salvation in the house of his servant David: and he will shortly raise up ministers, and open their mouths to proclaim his Gospel throughout the earth. Like a rich and generous master, he will not let any man serve him for nothing: if he employ ambitious or covetous men as his executioners, he will recompense them according to the leading desires of their hearts: and verily every man shall have his reward. Happy are they, who desire his favour, grace and image, and exhibit the spiritual blessings of his new covenant; they will delight in his service, and not covet any recompense, except his merciful acceptance; while the riches, honours, and pleasures which they have chosen, shall be ensured for ever and ever.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXX. V. 2, 3. As the day of Egypt's desolation is here said to be near, and as Nebuchadnezzar
4 And the sword shall come upon Egypt, and great pain shall be in Ethiopia, and the slain shall fall in Egypt, and they shall take away her multitude, and her foundations shall be broken down.

5 Ethiopia, and Libya, and Lydia, and all the mingled people, and Chub, and the men of the land that is in league, shall fall with them by the sword.

6 Thus saith the Lord; They also that uphold Egypt shall fall; and the pride of her power shall come down: from the tower of Syene shall they fall in it by the sword, saith the Lord God.

7 And they shall be desolate in the midst of the countries that are desolate, and her cities shall be in the midst of the cities that are wasted.

8 And they shall know that I am the Lord, when I have set a fire in Egypt, and when all her helpers shall be | destroyed.

9 In that day shall messengers go forth from me in ships, to make the careless Ethiopians afraid, and great pain shall come upon them, as in the day of Egypt: for, lo, it cometh.

10 Thus saith the Lord God; I will also make the multitude of Egypt to cease by the hand of Nebuchadrezzar king of Babylon.

11 He and his people with him, the terrible of the nations, shall be brought to destroy the land: and they shall draw their swords against Egypt, and fill the land with the slain.

12 And I will make the rivers dry, and sell the land into the hand of the wicked: and I will make the land waste, and | all that is therein, by the hand of strangers: I the Lord have spoken it.

13 Thus saith the Lord God; I will also destroy the idols, and I will cause their images to cease out of Noph; and | Egypt shall be exceedingly populous and filled with cities than any other nation in the world at that time; which would render her desolation the more extraordinary.

14 The providence of God would take care, that messengers should be sent in ships by sea, or boats up the Nile, to inform the Ethiopians of the ruin of Egypt, and to alarm them with fears of similar calamities; from which they carelessly deemed themselves secure. Perhaps Nebuchadrezzar sent these messengers to summon the Ethiopians to surrender. They would however occasion them great distress and terror, similar to the astonishment of the nations, in the day when the Egyptians were destroyed at the Red Sea; (Ex. xv. 16, 17) or to what the Egyptians had just before endured.

15 If the rivers of Egypt had been dried up, that fruitful land must have become a barren desert; and the Lord was about as effectually to destroy all the sources of its power and prosperity: for he would as entirely deliver up the land into the possession of wicked and oppressing spoilers, as if he had sold it to them. Such were the Chaldeans, who first conquered, plundered, and enslaved Egypt; and the Persians, Macedonians, Romans, Saracens, Mamulucks, and Turks, who have successively domined over and oppressed that country, equally deserved this character. These strangers have wasted, and cruelly tyrannized over Egypt from that time to this present day; according to the word of God by Ezekiel.

16 The Egyptians were not more renowned among who are called "the stay of the tribes thereof." (Is. xix. 13.) (Lowth.)

From, &c. Or, "From Migdol to Syene." (Note, xxxix. 8—11.)

V. 7. Her cities, &c. Egypt was exceedingly populous and filled with cities than any other nation in the world at that time; which would render her desolation the more extraordinary.

V. 9. The providence of God would take care, that messengers should be sent in ships by sea, or boats up the Nile, to inform the Ethiopians of the ruin of Egypt, and to alarm them with fears of similar calamities; from which they carelessly deemed themselves secure. Perhaps Nebuchadrezzar sent these messengers to summon the Ethiopians to surrender. They would however occasion them great distress and terror, similar to the astonishment of the nations, in the day when the Egyptians were destroyed at the Red Sea; (Ex. xv. 16, 17) or to what the Egyptians had just before endured.

V. 10. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 12. If the rivers of Egypt had been dried up, that fruitful land must have become a barren desert; and the Lord was about as effectually to destroy all the sources of its power and prosperity: for he would as entirely deliver up the land into the possession of wicked and oppressing spoilers, as if he had sold it to them. Such were the Chaldeans, who first conquered, plundered, and enslaved Egypt; and the Persians, Macedonians, Romans, Saracens, Mamulucks, and Turks, who have successively domined over and oppressed that country, equally deserved this character. These strangers have wasted, and cruelly tyrannized over Egypt from that time to this present day; according to the word of God by Ezekiel.

V. 13. The Egyptians were not more renowned among there shall be no more a prince of the land of Egypt: and I will put a fear in the land of Egypt.

4 E 2

14 And I will make Pathros desolate, and will set fire in Zoan, and will execute judgments in No.

15 And I will pour my fury upon Sin, the strength of Egypt; and I will cut off the multitude of No.

16 And I will set fire in Egypt: Sin shall have great pain, and No shall be rent asunder, and Noph shall have distresses daily.

17 The young men of Aven and of Pi-beseth shall fall by the sword: and these cities shall go into captivity.

18 At Tehaphnehes also the day shall be darkened, when I shall break there the yokes of Egypt: and there the pomp of her strength shall cease in her; as for her, a cloud shall cover her, and her daughters shall go into captivity.

19 Thus will I execute judgments in Egypt; and they shall know that I am the Lord.

20 ¶ And it came to pass in the eleventh year, in the first month, in the seventh day of the month, that the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

21 Son of man, there hath broken the arm of Pharaoh king of Egypt; and, lo, it shall not be bound up to be healed, to put a roller to bind it, to make it strong to hold the sword.

22 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against Pharaoh king of Egypt, and will break his bands, and he shall be no more a ruler over his land; and that which was broken; and I will provide a sword for Egypt, which shall fall out of his hand.

23 And I will scatter the Egyptians among the nations, and will disperse them through the countries.

24 And I will strengthen the arms of the king of Babylon, and put my sword in his hand: but I will break Pharaoh's arms, and he shall groan before him with the groanings of a deadly wounded man.

25 But I will strengthen the arms of the king of Babylon, and the arms of Pharaoh shall fall down; and they shall know that I am the Lord, and I will put my sword into the hand of the king of Babylon, and he shall stretch it out upon the land of Egypt.

26 And I will scatter the Egyptians among the nations, and disperse them among the countries; and they shall know that I am the Lord.

the ancients for wisdom and learning, wealth, power, and prosperity; for the multitude of their idols, and the superstitions with which they worshipped even various reptiles and serpents. On these idols they depended for protection: but the Lord determined to destroy them with their worshippers, and the cities in which they were stationed. (More, Ref.) This has been remarkably fulfilled; for the ancient idolatry of Egypt gradually declined, or was exchanged for that of other nations, when the country fell under the dominion of foreign lords; and as there hath not been for above two thousand years a prince of the land of Egypt: (Note, xxix. 15.) so the Egyptians have long received their religion from their masters, and have been an abject servile race, greatly afraid of offending their cruel oppressors. The present Egyptians are either Mahometans; or an ignorant superstitious kind of Christians, who seem to have little more than the name of that holy religion. (Notes, &c. Jer. xliii. 8—13. xlv.)

Moph; was the same as Memphis. Zoa, or Tanis, was the metropolis of the kingdom in Moses's time. No, or Ham No, probably the same with Thebes, famous for its hundred gates. Hamon was either Ham, or one of his posterity advanced to divine honours. It is generally agreed that Sin is the same as Pelusium, the key of Egypt. Aven is the same as On mentioned in Gen. xlii. 45.
The prophet is ordered to show Pharaoh the prosperity and pride of the king of Assyria; and his dreadful fall, 1–17; and that he would be destroyed in like manner, 18.

AND it came to pass in the eleventh year, in the third month, in the first day of the month, that the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, 3 speak unto Pharaoh king of Egypt, and 4 to his multitude; 5 Whom art thou like in thy greatness?

Behold, 6 the Assyrian nasi, a cedar in Lebanon with fair branches, and with a shadowing shroud, and of an high stature; and his top was among the thick boughs.

4 The waters made him great; the deep set him on high with her rivers running round about his plants, and sent out her little rivers unto all the trees of the field.

5 Therefore his height was exalted above all the trees of the field, and his boughs were multiplied, and his branches became long because of the multitude of waters, when he was shot forth.

6 All the fowls of heaven made their nests in his boughs, and under his branches did all the beasts of the field bring forth their young, and under his shadow dwelt all great nations.

7 Thus was he fair in his greatness, in the length of his branches: for his root was by great waters.

8 The cedars in the garden of God could not hide him: the fir-trees were not like his boughs, and the cypress-trees were not like his branches; nor any tree in the garden of God was like unto him in his beauty.

9 I have made him fair by the multitude of his branches: so that the trees of Eden, that were in the garden of God, envied him.

PRAGTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

That power which renders men proud must come down; and that prosperity and peace, which lead to carelessness and carnal security, will terminate in terror and anguish.

The wrath of God consumes the prosperity and wealth of powerful nations, when the day of his vengeance comes: it desolates populous countries, or covers them with the carcasses of the slain: it turns a fruitful land into a barren desert, and flourishing cities into ruinous heaps: it fills all places with terror and misery, and reduces men to the most abject servitude: yet these are only present effects of the divine indignation, and not worthy of our fear, compared with the wrath to come, from which Jesus delivers his people. It is vain to endeavour to bind up the arm which the Lord is pleased to break, or to strengthen those whom he will bring down: a dark and cloudy day awaits his enemies, and all, who associate with them, or help them, will share their punishment. All power and success is from the Lord; and men prosper so long, as they are employed in executing his righteous purposes. Happy are his willing servants, who so know him “in Christ reconciling the world unto himself,” as to fear, love, trust, worship, and obey him. In one way or other, however, all shall know the Lord: and they who disregard the discoveries which he hath made of himself in mercy, will at length know his power, truth, and justice, in the punishment inflicted on them for their sins: whilst they will be for ever excluded from all hope of his favour; and groan and wail, because their wound is incurable. All earthly prosperity is fluctuating: they who to-day are at the top of the wheel, before to-morrow may be turned to the bottom, and their arrogant presumption changed into abject despair. But the everlasting mercy of our unchangeable God secures the final felicity of all that love his name.

CHAP. XXXI. V. 2. Pharaoh, &c. The prophet could not personally address Pharaoh, or his numerous attendants, forces, or subjects; but his prophecies would doubtless be made known in Chaldea, and by degrees in other countries; and they might come to the ears of the Egyptian king. This prophecy was delivered about a month before Jerusalem was taken. Pharaoh was very proud of his power and greatness: and the prophet inquired to whom he supposed himself to be like? Doubtless he thought himself, as equal to the greatest monarchs that had ever lived: but even if this had been true, it would not have secured the continuance of his prosperity; for the event had shown, that the most renowned and successful kings and kingdoms might soon be brought to destruction.

NOTES.
of the heaven remain, and all the beasts of the field shall be upon his branches:

14 To the end that none of all the trees by the waters exalt themselves for their height, neither shoot up their tops among the thick boughs, neither their branches stand up in their height, all that drink water: for they are all delivered unto death, to the nether parts of the earth, in the midst of the children of men, with them that go down to the pit.

15 Thus saith the Lord God; in the day when he brought me down to the grave, I caused a mourning; I covered the deep for him, and I restrained the floods thereof, and the great waters were stayed: and I caused Lebanon to mourn for him, and all the trees of the field the field fainted for him.

V. 3—9. The Assyrian monarchy was one of the most ancient and prosperous that we read of in history. It seems to have attained its summit of greatness under Sennacherib and Shalmaneser. But it is not certainly known when and by whom it was destroyed. Probably it was destroyed about the time that Nebuchadnezzar began his reign at Babylon, by him and Cyaxares, king of Media. Nineveh, the capital of that monarchy, which was one of the most extensive cities ever built, was then and from that time began to decay, until it was at last so entirely desolated that modern travellers are not agreed where it was situated. These events will be more particularly considered upon several passages in the prophecies of Jonah, Nahum, and Zephaniah. But here the prophet mentioned the fall of the Assyrian monarchy, as a fact which was well known to have lately taken place. The Assyrian king had been highly exalted in his kingdom and his great power, and extensive dominions, with the protection he afforded to his friends, resembled the spreading branches, the thick shade, and the high stature of a very flourishing cedar on mount Lebanon. The fruitful lands of Assyria; the large revenues which the king drew from vast multitudes all over his extensive territories; his extensive commerce, through the river Tigris, with the countries bordering on the Indian ocean; or in a word, the various sources of his wealth and prosperity, resembled the rivers and streams, which cause the trees planted by them to grow exceedingly. By these means this empire and its head were exalted above all the kingdoms of the earth; their power became more formidable, and their vassals more numerous than those of any other people: so that cities, provinces, and nations, courted their alliance; took shelter under their powerful protection; and increased and prospered under it, as the branches of the air amidst the boughs, and the beasts of the field under the covert, of the wide spreading lofty cedar. Thus the monarch became renowned and honourable: and this cedar in Lebanon grew more lofty, than any cedar in the garden of God, or in Eden; or any of the kingdoms or independent states, which might be compared to fir-trees, and chestnut-trees, or any other stately and beautiful trees. Perhaps the ascendancy acquired by the Assyrian monarchs over the kings of Judah likewise, may be alluded to by the expression, that "no tree in the garden of God was like unto him in his beauty." However, they were so prospered in the providence of God, that all other kings and princes envied them their great success and renown. (Notes. xvii.)

V. 10—13. The allegory and its interpretation are here interwoven. The Assyrian monarch though already destroyed, was pietically addressed; and probably the whole race of these princes who reigned in succession was intended, as the description so exactly suits the character of Sennacherib; (Notes. Is. x. xxxvi. xxxvii.) They were ambitious of reducing all other kings and nations to subjection, and of establishing an universal monarchy; and their pride increased in proportion to their power and success. The Lord had therefore delivered the last of that line into the hand of the mighty one of the heathen, or the conqueror of the nations, who was able to deal with him; even Nebuchadnezzar, the subverter of the Assyrian monarchy. By him the Lord had driven the king of Assyria from his throne, his palace, his royal city, and his kingdom, for his wickedness. The Chaldeans, a people who whom the nations had hitherto been strangers, (as they were but lately risen into eminence,) but who were most terrible for valour and fierceness, cut down this lofty cedar, and left him to wither and decay. So large was it grown, that its fallen branches covered the mountains and valleys, and its broken boughs were found near all the rivers: that is, the fragments of this vast dismembered empire formed many states and kingdoms. And when the nations found that the Assyrian king could no longer protect them, they renounced their allegiance to him: nay, the very persons, who had courted his friendship, now preyed upon him and insulted over him! Or literally, the birds and beasts of prey came to devour the carcasses of the multitudes, who were slain in these conflicts.
V. 14—17. The Lord destroyed the Assyrian monarchy, for a warning to all other kings and nations, not to be ambitious of dominion, or proud of pre-eminence, or secure in prosperity; and not to depend on themselves, or forget God as the Author of their advantages; for the rivers, whence they drank waters, came originally from that Ocean. All the monarchs of Assyria, or the last king and all his proud princes; and all those in every age, who had domineered over their neighbours, and despised God, had been delivered to death, and their bodies were gone under the earth, amidst the rest of the children of men, even like the meanness of them, who without funeral pomp are thrown into the pit: and this was the end of their greatness, to which many of them had been hurried by a violent and premature death. Indeed when the Assyrian monarch went down to the grave, the Lord so ordered it, that there was a great mourning for him. The deep, that nurtured up this fair tree, is described as mourning at its downfall; as if the floods had stopped their usual course, on purpose to lament his fate. The forest of Lebanon, sympathized with his misfortunes; that is, all his confederates and allies. His fall affected many nations and provinces, and vast multitudes of people, who had lived under his government and contributed to his greatness. A stop was put by his death to their enriching commerce, and to all the business connected with the government of so vast an empire: and all who grew rich by collecting the revenue, or by honourable and lucrative offices, would doubtless lament his fall. This seems to be meant by the Lord’s covering the deep, and restraining the floods, as in mourning for him: which denote a stagnation of that profitable circulation, which there must be in a prosperous empire, betwixt all parts of it and the seat of government. Especially the Assyrian nobles and people, the Lebanon where this cedar grew, doubtless deplored the loss of that empire which they had so long possessed, and felt for grief and for apprehensions of the fatal effects that might follow this catastrophe. The surrounding nations also shook at the sound, or report of this revolution, (as the fall of a mighty cedar may be heard at a great distance.) Yet when the Lord cast him into the grave and the invisible world, they who had formerly envied or rivalled him, and who had grown prosperous by similar resources, till he had reduced and ruined them, would be comforted and rejoice to see him ruined in like manner. This is represented under the bold figure of those that lay in the grave, or in the state of the dead, congratulating each other, when they saw their destroyer coming to join them in that abject situation! (Is. xiv. 9—12.) And they also, who confided in his protection, and were his support, (his soldiers, captains, and confederates,) had been slain with him, and were with him gone down into the grave and the world of departed spirits.

V. 18. Pharaoh is here called to look in this glass, and to see what his glory and greatness would speedily come to. Even if he were as honourable and powerful as the Assyrian king: he would soon be slain, and die a miserable death, and perish among those who were strangers and enemies to God. This sentence was irrevocably passed on Pharaoh and all his multitude, saith the Lord God.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—9.

What competition and striving is there among men about the precarious, unsatisfactory, and perishing distinctions of this world! But how few are candidates for that “crown of glory which fadeth not away!” Many of the most powerful, prosperous, and renowned, have also been the most abominable of mankind: and whilst millions have been subjected to their will, perhaps they had not one subject more vile in the sight of God than themselves. This consideration may serve to abate our admiration of those gaudy distinctions, which the Lord evidently deems so worthless and perilous; and may teach us to seek more valuable and enduring advantages. All greatness and success come from God, through whatever channels they are conveyed: but how few properly consider their dependence on him and obligations to him! Generally prosperity increases pride, presumption, and impudence, in regular proportion. They who have the most of those things which are supposed to constitute an earthly paradise, are either envied themselves, or envy others, or both; and this greatly interrupts the little enjoyment which otherwise they might find in them: but the blessings of the heavenly paradise are not liable to such alloy. How much better then is it to be a lowly tree of righteousness, yielding fruit to the glory of God and the good of men, and in the end to be transplanted into the garden of God above, to flourish for ever, than to be a lofty cedar, and at length to be cut down and cast into the fire of hell!

V. 10—18.

They who possess authority, should use it in protecting...
CHAP. XXXII.

EZEKIEL.

And it came to pass, in the twelfth year, in the twelfth month, in the first day of the month, that the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, take up a lamentation for Pharaoh king of Egypt, and say unto him, Thou art like a young lion of the nations, and thou art as a whale in the seas: and thou camest forth with thy rivers, and troubledst the waters with thy feet, and foulested thy rivers.

3 Thus saith the Lord God; I will therefore spread out my net over thee with a company of many people; and they shall bring thee up in my net.

4 Then will I leave thee upon the land, and cast thee forth upon the open field, and I will cause all the fowls of the heaven to remain upon thee, and I will fill the beasts of the whole earth with thee.

5 And I will lay thy flesh upon the mountains, and fill the valleys with thy height.

6 I will also water with thy blood the land wherein thou swimmest, even from the mountains, and the rivers shall be full of thee.

7 And when I shall put thee out, I will cover the heaven, and make the stars thereof dark; I will cover the sun with a cloud, and the moon shall not give her light.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXII. V. 1. This was about a year and a half after the destruction of Jerusalem; and at a time when Pharaoh continued in the undisturbed possession of his power and prosperity. It is remarkable, that there should be so many predictions concerning the ruin of this monarch, and the desolations of his kingdom. But Egypt had been the first oppressor of the Church, and was to be judged for it; and perhaps that kingdom typified antichrist, and the more dreadful ruin that awaits him: (Gen. xvi. 13, 14. Rev. vi. 8.)

V. 2—6. The Egyptian king had resembled a young and fierce lion, in his conduct both towards his subjects and his neighbours; or, in allusion to the seas and rivers, with which his kingdom was bounded and intersected, he was a sea-monster, or crocodile. (Marg. Ref.) In the height of his prosperity he raised a vast army, and made war upon the Cyprians; but he was vanquished, and his army cut in pieces; and the Egyptians, suspecting from his savage temper, that he had led them forth on purpose to be thus destroyed, made an insurrection against him; which he increased by further cruelties and rash measures, until it made way for his ruin. Thus the voracious crocodile went forth with, or from, his rivers, to trouble and foul those of his neighbours; but the Lord spread his net upon him, and used a company of many people to drag him out of his rivers; and he was then cast forth upon the open field, to be devoured by the birds and beasts of prey. To represent Pharaoh's great power, and the effects of his fall, it was figuratively stated, that the flesh of this overgrown monster was so vast, that it would cover the mountains and fill the valleys; and that his blood would be sufficient to drink the land even to the mountains, and to fill the rivers; and when the waters were turned into blood in the days of Moses. This denotes, that his ruin would be attended with terrible miseries to the Egyptians, and afford an immense booty to their enemies.

CHAPTER XXXII.

8 All the * bright lights of heaven will I make ♦ dark over thee, and set darkness upon thy land, saith the Lord God.

9 I will also vex the hearts of many people, when I shall bring thy destruction among the nations, into the countries which thou hast not known.

10 Yea, I will make many people amazed at thee, and their kings shall be horribly afraid for thee, when I shall brandish my sword before them: and they shall tremble at every moment, every man for his own life, in the day of thy fall.

11 For thus saith the Lord God: The sword of the king of Babylon shall come upon thee.

12 By the swords of the mighty will I cause thy multitude to fall; * the terrible of the nations, all of them: and they shall spoil the pomp of Egypt, and all the multitude thereof shall be destroyed.

13 I will destroy also all the beasts thereof from beside the great waters: neither shall the foot of man trouble them any more, nor the hoofs of beasts trouble them.

V. 7, 8. Pharaoh thought himself the great luminary of Egypt: but the Lord declared, that he would put him out by dethroning him. Then the whole land would be darkened, as if the sun, moon, planets, and stars were all eclipsed and hidden at once; and the darkness would be as evident, as in the plague that was inflicted in the time of Moses. These bold metaphors denote the total subversion of the state; the anarchy and civil wars which ensued; the miseries attending the Chaldean invasion; and the contempt, baseness, and abject slavery, to that once flourishing kingdom was about to be reduced. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 9, 10. When the report of the ruin of Egypt should reach many distant nations, and the fugitives, or exiles, should relate the particulars to those among whom they were dispersed, it would greatly disquiet their hearts; even though they had not been any ways connected with that kingdom: for it would be a most affecting instance of the instability of human affairs, and of God's wrath against the enemies of his people. They would thus see, as it were, the Lord brandishing his sword before their eyes, which would fill them with amazement and terror; and every one of them would tremble continually, lest the next stroke should destroy them in like manner.

V. 11-14. The desolations of Egypt were effected by the king of Babylon; and this was the sword which was hung over the head of Pharaoh, though his fall was immediately wrought by his own subjects. The Chaldeans, by invading Egypt, were about to destroy the multitudes of its inhabitants, and to terminate its splendour and dignity:

VOL. III.—No. 22.

14 Then will I make their waters deep, and cause their rivers to run like oil, saith the Lord God.

15 When I shall make the land of Egypt desolate, and the country shall be destitute of that wherein it was full, when I shall smite all that dwell therein, then shall they know that I am the Lord.

16 This is the lamentation wherewith they shall lament her: the daughters of the nations shall lament her: they shall lament for her, even for Egypt, and for all her multitude, saith the Lord God.

17 ¶ It came to pass also in the twelfth year, in the fifteenth day of the month, that the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, and enemies to God. Or the nation may be meant, the total ruin of which was described by the death and burial of an individual.

V. 20. Drum, &c. Let the Chaldeans drag Egypt, and her multitudes, like criminals to execution, or drag their corpses out to be buried disgracefully in a pit.

V. 21. Pharaoh is here poetically represented as entering the state of the dead, whither many mighty warriors and potentates had gone before him; and he is addressed, and welcomed by them to their dreary habitations. The bold imagery of eastern poetry abounds in these descriptions; yea, they imply the general belief that when the body is cast into the grave, the soul enters an invisible state where it retains its consciousness and capacities.

Here follows a poetical description of the infernal regions, where the ghosts of deceased tyrants, with their subjects, are represented as coming to meet the king of Egypt and his auxiliaries. Hell, signifies here the state of the dead. (Lomth.)

V. 22, 23. The king of Assyria was ready to meet Pharaoh, when he should be made "free among the dead." He is represented as surrounded by the graves of multitudes, that had been slain along with him. These were set in the sides of that pit, into which the Assyrian had fallen before it came to Pharaoh's turn. The subversion of the monarchy and the destruction of the people, as well as the death of the king, was intended by this representation. They had caused terror in the land of the living, but being slain and buried, they lay quiet in the pit, and none feared them. The Jewish expositors understand the land of Israel, by the land of the living, because the way of life and salvation was there known.

V. 24, 25. Nebuchadnezzar is supposed to have conquered the province of Elam, which formed a part of Persia. It is therefore represented as fallen with the multitude of its inhabitants into the grave, having been slain by the sword. They too had been renowned and terrible; but at length they bore the shame of being defeated and destroyed. A bed, or coffin, was placed for Elam, (the nation being represented as a deceased woman,) in the midst of all her multitude; and their king also was placed among those that were slain.

V. 26—28. Meshech and Tubal seem to mean the Scythians and northern nations, who frequently made inroads into the southern and more fertile countries of Asia, and caused great terror and devastation; but generally perished with as dreadful a slaughter. They too had caused terror in the land of the living; yet they would not lie with the mighty, or be numbered with the Assyrian or Egyptian monarchy. But they went down to death, with their weapons of war in their hands, as men who fought desperately and scorned to yield; and they were buried with their swords laid under their heads, as denoting their characters and exploits; whilst their insignities or depredations had brought their bones to the grave, and perhaps afterwards exposed them to insults from those whom they had injured. Among such persons would Pharaoh be broken, and slain, and perish. Some give another sense to the passage. They shall not lie among those graves in state; and had their achievements and other ensigns of honour affixed to their monuments for perpetuating their memory. (Lomth.)
29 There is Edom, her kings, and all her princes, which with their might are laid by them that were slain by the sword: they shall lie with the uncircumcised, and with them that go down to the pit.

30 There be the princes of the north, all of them, and all the Zidonians, which are gone down with the slain: with their terror they are ashamed of their might; and they are uncircumcised with them that be slain by the sword, and bear their shame with them that go down to the pit.

V. 30. The north. This may mean the Medes, Armenians, or other nations north of Babylon; or rather, the Tyrians and Syrians north of Judah, who were more likely to be mentioned with the Zidonians.

V. 31, 32. When Pharaoh should enter the state of the dead, and see all these kings and nations who had gone before him, he would the more willingly submit to his doom. This is spoken according to the common sentiments of mankind, who are better satisfied to suffer with a multitude than alone: though it can be no comfort to those who have perished in their sins, to find multitudes as miserable as themselves. In short, they had caused their terror in the land of the living; and the Lord was about to cause his terror to fall upon them.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS. V. 1—16.

How weak and helpless, in respect of the Almighty, are the most powerful and terrible of mankind! Whilst they rage on every side, devour their own species, and trouble the nations of the earth, to gratify their mad ambition or revenge, he spreads his net over them, entangles them, and disposes of them at his pleasure; and their former greatness only renders them a richer prey, or a more tremendous spectacle, to those around them! Thus "the lamp of the wicked is put out;" the pomp and splendour of kings and kingdoms are totally extinguished; their sun goes down at noon; and their boasted luminaries set to rise no more! Terror and amazement must needs seize the hearts of those against whom the Lord branishes his sword; and they must tremble every moment for their lives and souls. It is very mortifying to the pride of man, to consider what numbers, that once "caused terror in the land of the living," are now gone down to the grave. They who made the earth to tremble, and whose renown and power extended to the most distant regions, are now confined within the narrow limits of the tomb. They whose counsels and eloquence swayed the determinations of princes and nations, and had as extensive effects on human affairs as the sword of the mighty, now lie silent in the dust! Their wisdom, learning, beauty, wit, or politeness, were celebrated by numerous admirers, are now decayed and mingled with their original earth! Whilst the unnoticed multitudes, who go down obscurely to the grave, by thousands every hour, are vast beyond conception. All this is the punishment of sin, and the execution of the sentence, "Dust thou art, and unto dust shalt thou return."

V. 17—32.

It is inconceivable how great a proportion of the human race have been prematurely hurried into the grave, by the diabolical trade of war. As if men did not die just enough of themselves! or as if destruction were the most honourable and pleasing employment that the strong among the mighty of the earth could devise for themselves and their numerous retainers! The subject is in every view gloomy and horrid: but if we recollect, that when the body goes down to the dust, the soul enters into an unchangeable state of happiness or misery; that all who die uncircumcised in heart, unconverted and unbelieving, go down into the midst of hell, to bear for ever their shame and punishment; and that vast multitudes die in the very heat of their most malignant and diabolical passions, or in the midst of forbidden gratifications, with their unrepented iniquities upon their souls, and unmortified lusts dominieering in their hearts; many of them also answerable for the crimes and destruction of their fellow sinners; the view becomes tremendous in the extreme. Alas, what are men about! How are they blinded and deceived by Satan! What are those objects, which they thus pursue, through scenes of horror and seas of blood, and multiplied impieties and iniquities? Surely man walketh in a vain shadow, and disquieteth himself in vain; whether he pursue riches, renown, power, or pleasure! Soon must he be torn from all his possessions and gratifications, to join the multitude of the dead; and to "receive the things done in the body," whether they be good or evil; and it will be a wretched consolation to those who perish in their sins, that vast multitudes have gone, and are going, the same broad road to destruction: since as they were mutual tempters here, so they will be mutual tormentors hereafter; (Luke xvi. 27, 28.) As "the hour cometh when all that are in the graves shall hear the voice of Christ, and shall come forth, they that have done good to the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil to the resurrection of damnation;" we, that have known something of the terror of the Lord, would fain persuade men to hearken to the voice of the great and terrible Judge, now that he speaks to them as a compassionate and merciful Saviour; and to seek first the kingdom of God, and his righteousness. Then being pardoned, justified, and sanctified, in the name
CHAP. XXXIII.

The prophet is instructed in the duties of his office, as the watchman of Israel, —9; commanded to state the rule by which God dealt with them, and the equity of his conduct, 10—20; informed of the destruction of Jerusalem; and ordered to reprove the vain hopes and crimes of those who remained in the land, 21—29; and shown the hypocrisy and courtesies of those who came to hear the word of God from him, 30—33.

AGAIN the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

2 To man of man, speak to the children of thy people, and say unto them, When I bring the sword upon a land, if the people of the land take a man of their coasts, and set him for their watchman,

3 If when he seeth the sword come upon the land, he blow the trumpet, and warn the people;

4 Then he that heareth the sound of the trumpet, and taketh no warning; if the sword come, and taketh him away, his blood shall be upon his own head.

5 He heard the sound of the trumpet, and took not warning; his blood shall be upon him. But he that taketh warning shall deliver his soul.

6 But if the watchman see the sword come, and blow not the trumpet, and the people be not warned; if the sword come, and take any person from among them, he is taken away in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at the watchman's hand.

7 So thou, O son of man, I have set thee a watchman unto the house of Israel; therefore thou shalt hear the word at my mouth, and warn them from me.

8 When I say unto the wicked, O wicked man, thou shalt surely die; if thou dost not speak to warn the wicked from his way, that wicked man shall die in his iniquity; but his blood will I require at thine hand.

9 Nevertheless, if thou warn the wicked of his way to turn from it; if he do not turn from his way, he shall die in his iniquity; but thou hast delivdered thy soul.

10 Therefore, O thou son of man, speak unto the house of Israel; Thus saith the Lord God unto the house of Israel, O house of Israel, hear the word of the Lord God: thus saith the Lord God unto the house of Israel, Thus saith the Lord.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXIII. V. 2—9. (Notes, &c. iii. 17—19.) The prophet had before been thus shown the important responsibility of his prophetic office: but after the most awful part of his predictions was accomplished, he was again reminded of it, and ordered to declare it to the people; that they might be taught to approve his faithfulness, and that he might be warned to persevere in it. They were called "the children of his people," as if God would disown them because of their wickedness. The instruction is the same as before; but the illustrations are more full and explicit. The Lord himself had sent the sword upon the land: and the recent transactions in Judah, where such numbers had been taken away in their sins, notwithstanding all the warnings given them, tended to render these topics more affecting. The repetition of this and similar warnings, after Jerusalem was taken and destroyed, showed that they did not refer merely to the circumstances of those times; but were applicable to individuals in every place, especially to those who are favoured with the "oracles of God." He showed that the people ought to have continually governors and teachers, who may have a care over them, and warn them of the dangers which are at hand. The wicked shall not escape punishment, though the watchman be negligent: but if the watchman blow the trumpet, and then he will not obey, he shall deserve double punishment. (Marg. Ref.) V. 10. If, according to thy prophecies, God have determined to reckon with us for our sins, and to bring judgment upon us, to what purpose shall our conversion be? and how shall we live, when we must amend? (Bp. Hall.) Thus the wicked when they hear God's judgments for their sins, despair of his mercies, and murmur.

(XXIV. 23.)—The imminent Jews seem to have charged inconsistency and contradiction upon the prophet's messages: for whilst he warned them to repent and assured the penitent of forgiveness; he also predicted that people would pine away in their transgressions. Now, said they, "if this be the case, how should we live? And of what use are your exhortations and promises? You only tantalize us, and there is no sincerity in these pro-

B. C. 587.
11 Say unto them, * As I live, saith the Lord God, * I have no pleasure in the death of the wicked; but that the wicked turn from his way and live, * turn ye, turn ye from your evil ways; for why will ye die, O house of Israel?

12 Therefore, thou son of man, * say unto the children of thy people, * The righteousness of the righteous shall not deliver him in the day of his transgression: * as for the wickedness of the wicked, he shall not fall thereby, in the day that he turneth from his wickedness; neither shall the righteous be able to live for his righteousness in the day that he sinneth.

13 When I shall say to the righteous, that he shall surely live; * if he trust to his own righteousness, and commit iniquity, all his righteousness shall not be remembered; but for his iniquity that he hath committed, * he shall die for it.

14 Again, when I say unto the wicked, * Thou shalt surely die; * if he turn from his sin, and do that which is lawful and right; * if the wicked * restore the pledge, give again that he had robbed, * walk in the statutes of life, without committing iniquity; * he shall surely live, he shall not die.

V. 11. (Notes, xviii. 23—32.) The Lord had before demanded of the people, whether they supposed that he had any pleasure in the death of the wicked? But he here confirmed it with an oath, that he had none; as it was his delight that sinners should repent and live. The verse may be rendered, * As I live, saith the Lord God, I am not delighted * with the death of a sinner; but, I am delighted, when the wicked turns from his way and lives." (Marg. Ref.)

V. 12, 13. (Notes, &c. iii. 20, 21, xviii.) The same truths are here again stated that have been before considered, but with some variation of expression: especially it is here added, that if the righteous * man trust to his own righteousness and to the promises of life made to the righteous, and commit iniquity, his righteousness will not profit him. Men who think themselves righteous, and are so accounted by others, but who are not truly humble and spiritual, will, in one way or other, trust in their own righteousness. Some will so confide in their own supposed good works, as to neglect or despise the salvation of the Gospel: and yet whilst they trust to their own righteousness to justify them, the iniquities which they commit will most certainly condemn them. Others think, that as they are clear in their views, bold in their profession of the Gospel, zealous for its doctrines, and do much to promote them; it would be unbelief to doubt of their being true Christians, though they indulge their darling sins in secret, or grasp at immoderate or unlawful advantages. Thus they count themselves righteous persons, favourites of heaven, and interested in the promises of life: and yet they commit iniquity, and practically fall into the old detestable aphorism, * Let us sin on, that grace may abound." Others, having for a time made a plausible profession of religion, conclude themselves certainly converted: and then venture into sin upon the supposition that God will not damn them for it; and quiet their consciences by abusing the doctrine of final perseverance, and the examples of some believers, of whom it is recorded in Scripture, that they fell into the same sins. It is possible for a true believer to be caught in any of these snares for a time: the only question is, whether he will or will not eventually be delivered from them, though by sharp rebukes and corrections, and thus return to God with weeping and supplication?

V. 14—16. (Note, xviii. 21—23.) * The sin is not forgiven, unless what is taken away be restored." * Augustin.) * He condemneth all of them of hypocrisy, who pretend to forsake wickedness, and yet declare not themselves such by their fruits: that is, in obeying God's commandments, and by a godly life."
was escaped came; and had opened my mouth, until he came to me in the morning: * and my mouth was opened, and I was no more dumb.

23 Then the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

24 Son of man, * they that inhabit those wastes of the land of Israel speak, saying, 'Abraham was one, and he inhabited the land: but we are many; the land is given us for inheritance.

25 Wherefore say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; * Ye eat with the blood, and * lift up your eyes towards your idols, * and shed blood: and shall ye possess the land?

26 Ye * stand upon your sword, ye * work abomination, * and ye defile every one his neighbour’s wife: * and shall ye possess the land?

27 Say thou unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; As I live, * surely they that are in the wastes shall fall by the sword, and him that is in the open field will I give to the hea- * so- dored, and they that be in the forts, and in the caves, shall die of the pestilence.

28 For I will lay the land * most desolate, and the pomp of her strength shall cease, * and the mountains of Israel shall be desolate, that none shall pass through.

29 Then shall they know that I am the Lord, when I have laid the land most desolate, * because of all their abominations which they have committed.

30 ¶ Also, thou son of man, * the children of thy people still are talking against thee by the walls, and in the doors of the houses, and speak one to another, every one to his brother, saying, * Come, I pray you, and hear what is the word that cometh forth from the Lord.

31 And they come unto thee * as the people cometh, and she sit before thee, as my people, * and they hear thy words, but they will not do them: * for with their mouth they * show much love, * but their heart goeth after their covetousness.

32 And, lo, thou * art unto them as a very lovely song * of one that hath a pleasant voice, and can play well on an instrument: for they hear thy words, but they do them not.

33 And * when this cometh to pass, (lo, it will come,) then * shall they know that a prophet hath been among them.

V. 21. 22. According to the date here given, this fugitive Jew did not come to the prophet, with the intelligence of Jerusalem’s being smitten, till almost eighteen months after that event: and some learned men have supposed, that there is a mistake in the date, or that it ought to be calculated differently. No doubt, however, the prophet had heard of that event long before eighteen months had elapsed: but perhaps he had not received that full and authentic account of it from an eye-witness, which he was taught to expect, before he delivered any further messages from God to his people: (Note, xxiv. 25—27.) For above three years he had been dumb, in this respect at least: perhaps he had been able to converse with the Jews, concerning the predictions that he had formerly delivered to them; and perhaps he spake, or delivered in writing, to them, the prophecies which he uttered concerning other nations: but he had received no further revelation from God respecting their affairs; in this sense he had been dumb. But now his mouth was opened, and he prophesied to them as of old time.

V. 24—29. A small remnant continued in the land under Gedaliah after the desolations of Jerusalem; and, notwithstanding all their crimes and miseries, they flattered themselves that they were entitled to the inheritance of the whole land. The promise of it had been made to Abraham when he had no children; yet his posterity inherited it: but the remaining Jews were many; and they supposed themselves on that account more likely to keep possession of it. They, however, overlooked the contrariety of their character to that of Abraham: they forgot that they had forfeited the title by their crimes; and that both former and latter prophets had predicted these desolations of the land. Thus they presumptuously expected to prosper in sin, and to be enriched by the ruin of their brethren. But the Lord sent them a message which was widely different from their expectations. In defiance of his word, and in conformity to the abominable superstitions of the nations, they ate with the blood and worshipped idols; they committed murder and made their swords arbiter of their disputes, violently defending themselves in injustice: they were guilty of adultery and every abomination; and it was fitting that they should possess the land, from which their brethren had been driven for similar crimes! On the contrary, the Lord solemnly swore by himself, that they should all be destroyed by one or other of his judgments, wherever they took refuge; and that the land should be utterly desolated, and be deprived of all that pomp and strength in which they gloried. This was fulfilled, after the murder of Gedaliah, when the survivors fled into Egypt, where they miserably perished.

V. 30—33. Whilst the prophet was affectionately seeking the good of his people; they were continually
The shepherds of Israel are sharply re-talking of him, or against him, wherever they met together. He was their constant topic; and it was their recreation to animadvert on him, or to ridicule him. But he would perhaps never have known it; had not the Lord seen it good, that he should reprove them in his name for it. They invited each other to come and hear the word of the Lord from him; and they came and sat before him with the same apparent seriousness, as the most pious people could do: they gave him a patient and apparently an attentive hearing; yea, they professed much love to him and his discipline: but their hearts were possessed by covetousness; their leading affections and desires went forth after riches;
they loved their money more than either God or man, the prophet, his word, or their own souls: and therefore they would not part with one gainful sin, for all that he could say; but would rather cavil at it or ridicule it. Indeed his voice and manner, his graceful elocution, cogent arguments, or apt illustrations, rendered him to them "as a very lovely song of one that had a pleasant voice and a could play well on an instrument;" (in which the sound is commonly more attended to, than the meaning of the words sung;) but they did not receive his words as a message from God, with a reverential and obedient faith; as it appeared from their subsequent conduct. But when the preceding prophecies, concerning the total desolations of the land, were accomplished, as they certainly would be;
they would know, that he was not merely "a sounding brass, or a tinkling cymbal;" but that a prophet of the:
Lord had been among them, whose words would be verified in the ruin of all that despised or disobeyed them.—
They came to hear thee for their entertainment, not for their edification, as many go to hear famed and eloquent preachers. St. Augustine tells us, that he himself was such an auditor of St. Ambrose, before he was converted.
—"I heard him diligently when he discoursed in the congregation: but not with that application of mind which I ought to have done: but I came rather out of curiosity, to know whether his eloquence was answerable to that opinion the world had of him. I was very attentive to his style, and charmed with the sweetness of his delivery; but had little value or concern for the subjects he treated of." (Lomth.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.
V. 1—20.

How much wiser are men in their temporal, than in their spiritual and eternal concerns. They set watchmen to guard their houses from robbery or conflagrations; and centinels to give warning of the approach of the enemy; and they best approve of those who are most quick sighted and vigilant, who see the danger at a distance and give the most decisive alarm; and he who should not give warning, would be deemed of man, as well as of God, accessory to the death of those who were slain through his neglect.
But in the concerns of God and eternity, where the appointed watchmen are infinitely more concerned to be faithful, and to give the alarm in the plainest manner; they are sure to give offence to numbers, if they obey their Master's commands! When they cause the trumpet to give so certain a sound, that every sinner is made to feel himself to be the wicked man, who is "warned to flee from the wrath to come:" and when the terrors of the Lord are so placed before men's eyes, that they tremble at the prospect of eternal damnation, great will be the indignation and opposition excited against them. The most blind, drowsy, greedy, dumb watchman, that can be found, is preferred by an immense majority, to one that is thus awful in his warnings, and close in his application to their consciences: they are ready to say to their teachers, "Speak smooth things, prophesy deceits, cause the Holy One of Israel to cease from before us:" and any one of Abah's lying prophets will be more acceptable, than Michaiah the prophet of the Lord, whom they hate, because he always prophesies evil concerning them!—We cannot then "be men-pleasers and the servants of Christ:" but the faithful watchman alone will deliver his own soul; they who perish from under his ministry, will have none to blame but themselves; and he will doubtless have many seeds to his ministry, to be "his joy and crown in the day of Jesus Christ:" whilst the unfaithful watchman will be condemned, as the murderer of all those who perish in their sins, through his negligence, factories, and lies. We that are ministers should frequently meditate on these subjects, and state them to our hearers: that they may understand on what ground we stand, and on what principles we act; and perceive, that we must be plain and faithful, if we would either "save ourselves or those that hear us." But when ungodly men are determined to continue in sin, they will be very ingenious in devising some shadow of a reason for their most unreasonable conduct: and they will endeavour to fasten a charge of inconsistency on those who declare the whole counsel of God: they will pervert the most humiliating truths into a quietus to their con-sciences, and an excuse for their sloth and lusts; as if God were the Author of their sins, because he is the Giver of every good and perfect gift. Thus they rush out of presumption into a kind of desperation, which is often no more than a flimsy covering of downright infidelity: and they pretend that it is of no use to repent, or pray, or use the means of grace, because it is decreed that some sinners, (cannot know who,) shall be left to themselves, and perish in hardened impenitency and unbelief! It is hard to say, whether such men are more desirous of deceiving themselves, or Satan of deceiving them. But surely it proves a strong determination of mind to unbelief: when the Lord declares and confirms it with an oath, that "he hath no pleasure in the death of the wicked, but rather that he should repent and live," that men will not believe him; but instead of attending to his pressing exhortation to turn from their evil ways; as if they were in love with death and damnation, to employ themselves in multiplying cavils, and objections, which only tend to charge God with injustice, and are constructive blasphemy. For he who can do all other things, hath declared that it is impossible
And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying, slanderers, covetous persons, and such like, have no inhertance in the promised land; because "for these things the wrath of God cometh upon the children of disobedience." Wherever such men seek shelter, evil pursueth them; and they will assuredly perish because of all their abominations. But however unexceptionable the conduct and scriptural the doctrine be, of that man of God who commonly affirms such truths, he will be sure to be persecuted, at least with the scourgings of the tongue; it and it is generally well for faithful ministers, that they do not hear the contemptuous, malicious, and hard speeches, which ungodly men use of them behind their backs; for it would tend to exasperate or to discourage them. Such persons, however, should remember, that the Lord notes down all the words, which they speak by the walls or the doors of their houses; and considers them to be effusions of their contempt and enmity against him. (Jude 14, 15.) And their malice and scorn are aggravated by hypocrisy, when they come amongst God's people, to sit and hear his word, on purpose to quarrel with it or ridicule it; as Satan came amongst the sons of God, to obtain permission to do Job mischief. But indeed various corrupt motives induce men to frequent the places where the word of God is most faithfully preached. Many, who seem to come with alacrity and to hear with attention, are not so in fact; but by directly and indirectly, thus, that they may find some pretext to object to or oppose; and they even persuade others to accompany them, that they may join in the same profane opposition. Far more come out of curiosity. Some to exhibit themselves, to form connexions, to please their friends, or to establish a reputation. Others make a religion wholly of hearing:

and suppose themselves excellent Christians, because they attend on faithful preachers, commend their sermons, and with their mouth show much love to the men and their message; whilst they will not practise what they hear, but their hearts are wholly turned unto covetousness. Others have a taste for ingenuity, eloquence, or graceful delivery:
and they find out preachers who have titles of this kind;
and hearing them is their amusement, instead of a concert or an opera; especially at those long leisure-hours when no other places of recreation are open. Thus even the gifts, as well as the faithfulness of ministers, become a savour of death to those who hear, and are delighted with their words, as "with the very lovely song of one, that hath a pleasant voice, or can play well on an instrument," but will not do them. It often happens, however, that they who come at first from such carnal motives, are afterwards brought to a better sense of things, and become ears as well as hearers of the word. So that the minister may be encouraged to be faithful and instant in preaching the word; without anxiously inquiring what brought his auditor offering, together: and then whether men will hear, or forbear, Judge, with, "Well done, good and faithful servant,
"enter thou into the joy of thy Lord!"
2 Son of man, prophesy against the shepherds of Israel, prophesy, and say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God unto the shepherds; Woe be to the shepherds of Israel that do feed themselves! should not the shepherds feed the flock?

3 Ye eat the fat, and ye clothe you with the wool; ye kill them that are fed; but ye feed not the flock.

4 The diseased have ye not strengthened, neither have ye healed that which was sick, neither have ye bound up that which was broken, neither have ye brought again that which was driven away, neither have ye sought that which was lost; but with force and with cruelty have ye ruled them.

5 And they were scattered, because there is no shepherd; and they became meat to all the beasts of the field, when neither did the shepherds feed them any more.

6 My sheep wandered through all the mountains, and upon every high hill; yea, my flock was scattered upon all the face of the earth, and none did search or seek after them.

7 Therefore, ye shepherds, hear the word of the Lord;

8 As I live, saith the Lord God, surely because of my flock became a prey, and my flock became meat to every beast of the field, because there was no shepherd; neither did my shepherds search for my flock, but the shepherds fed themselves, and fed not my flock;

9 Therefore, O ye shepherds, hear the word of the Lord;

10 Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against the shepherds; and I will require my flock at their hand, and cause them to cease from feeding the flock; neither shall the shepherds feed them any more; for I will deliver my flock from their mouth, that they may not be meat for them.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXIV. V. 2—6. (Notes, &c. Is. liv. 9—13. Jer. xxiii. 1—4.) Jerusalem was destroyed, the land desolated, and the Lord’s flock scattered or destroyed; and the wicked shepherds were about to be called to account as the principal criminals who had occasioned so great an evil. “The shepherds of Israel” signifies their rulers and teachers; their kings and princes, priests and prophets, scribes and elders. The duty of the shepherd is to feed the flock, and to make that his principal object: but they were only careful to feed themselves. They had eaten the fat, or the milk of the flock, clothed themselves with the wool, and killed the fatted sheep, without regarding what became of the rest. They made every advantage they could from their offices; they exacted their tributes and taxes, their tythes and perquisites, with great earnestness; and they oppressed, and even destroyed the people to enrich themselves; but they bestowed no pains to provide for the welfare of the state, or of the souls of those intrusted to them. They resembled those shepherds, who utterly neglect the weak and sickly of the flock, and leave them to die without attempting their recovery; who, if any have their bones broken or are wounded, do not bind them up; and if any are driven away by robbers or wild beasts, or wander from the fold, never seek to bring them back; but treat them with great cruelty, and are more like ravening wolves, than careful tender shepherds. Thus the rulers of Israel had neglected to rescue the oppressed, to relieve the destitute, to remedy grievances, to provide properly for the public safety, to redeem those that had been driven into captivity, or to encourage the return of such as had taken refuge among idolaters. Their teachers also were equally negligent of their souls; they neither encouraged the weak and wavering; nor attempted to remove their error, ignorance, or wickedness, by wholesome instructions, counsels, and examples; nor reclaimed those that were turned aside to idolatry; but they employed their power in exacting upon the people, and made their sacred office a pretext for the most cruel oppressions and persecutions. By these means the people were scattered from the temple, as abhorring the sacrifices of the Lord; and from Jerusalem and Judah, to escape the tyranny of their rulers; and so became as sheep without a shepherd. And by the policy, impurity, and wickedness of their leaders, and the fatal effects of their bad use of their authority, they were at length given up to be a prey to the Assyrians and Chaldeans, and other nations, to be destroyed or carried into captivity; so that in the event the land was utterly desolated, and the Lord’s flock, his visible Church, was left to wander on the dark mountains of the heathen, and was scattered over the face of the earth. This was equally applicable to the rulers, priests, and scribes in the days of Christ, and to the subsequent doom and condition of the Jewish nation. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 7—10. For the crimes before charged on the shepherds of Israel, and here again repeated, the Lord declared himself to be against them, and threatened to require of them the flock which he had committed to them, and which had been ruined by their fault. He would discipline them from their office, and deprive them of all the emoluments of it; and as they would not feed, so they should not be allowed to devour the flock. The descendants of David were from this time excluded from the temporal kingdom; the family of Aaron and the tribe of Levi were at length laid aside from their sacred functions; and numbers, both of magistrates and teachers, were entirely dis

VOL. III.—No. 22.
prived of power to oppress the people and enrich themselves. I will require a severe account of their kings and princes, priests and prophets, of the damage my people have sustained through their ill management; and I will deprive them of their honour and pre-emience which they have made such an ill use of; as I have already displaced Zedekiah, and the princes and priests, and others that were in authority under him. (LIDTH.)

V. 11—16. The Lord having denounced sentence on the shepherds of Israel, next intimated his merciful intentions towards the scattered flock. He would search for and find out, wherever they were. As the shepherd, when his flock has been scattered by wild beasts, gathers them together as soon as he can: and having numbered them to see how many are still wanting, he spends the day in seeking for them and bringing them back; so the Lord would seek out his sheep, which had been dispersed by the Chaldeans, in that dark and cloudy day when they besieged and took Jerusalem. He would gather them from all countries, whither they had been driven as exiles and captives: he would bring them to their own land, and there perform towards them every part of the Shepherd's office. But at the same time he would punish their proud oppressors, and feed them with judgment, distinguishing between them according to their characters, as it is afterwards declared. Doubtless this primarily referred to the restoration of the Jews from captivity, and their re-establishment and prosperity in their own land; and it was typical of the good Shepherd's tender care of, and kindness to, the souls of his people and to his Church in every age even to the end of the world. (Marg. Ref.) But it seems to look further, even to the general restoration of the whole nation, which most of the prophets foretell shall come to pass in the latter days. (LIDTH.) (Marg. Ref.) The express promises here given, that Jehovah himself will feed his flock, in the predicted times, compared with the language of the New Testament concerning Christ, our good, and great, and chief Shepherd; contains an unanswerable argument in proof of his Deity, as one with the Father.

V. 17—22. The whole nation seemed to be the Lord's flock; yet they were of very different characters: but he knew how to distinguish betwixt them, as the shepherd divideth the sheep from the goats. The rams and he-goats, or the fat and strong, denoted the rich and powerful, the proud and self-sufficient, the wise and learned of this world. These had got possession of the best estates, and lived in magnificence, luxury, and sensuality: and not contented with this, they would not suffer the poor to use their leverings in comfort; but continually harassed them with usurious exactions and impositions, with suits and prosecutions, and by every means reduced them to the most abject penury and misery: as if strong and fat cattle, the rams and he-goats, having eaten up the best of the pasture and drank the deep waters; should wantonly tread down and spoil the residue of the pasture, and muddle the waters;
23 And I will set up one Shepherd over them, and he shall feed them, even my servant David; and he shall be their shepherd.

24 And I the Lord will be their God, and my servant David a Prince among them; I the Lord have spoken it.

25 And I will make them and the places round about my hill a blessing: and I will cause the stranger to come down in his season; there shall be sowers of blessing.

26 And the tree of the field shall yield her fruit, and the earth shall yield her increase, and they shall be safe in their land, and shall know that I am the Lord; when I have broken the yoke of their yoke, and delivered them out of the hand of those that served themselves of them.

28 And they shall no more be a prey of the heathen, neither shall the beasts of the land devour them; but they shall dwell safely, and none shall make them afraid.

29 And I will raise up for them a Plant of renown, and they shall be no more consumed with hunger in the land, neither bear the shame of the heathen any more.

30 Thus shall they know that I the Lord their God am with them, and that they, even the house of Israel, are my people, saith the Lord God.

31 And ye my flock, the flock of my pasture, are men, and I am your God, saith the Lord God. who, though infinitely excellent in himself, and adored by holy angels, was “as a tender plant out of a dry ground,” in his incarnation, humiliation, and death; but springing up in his resurrection, ascension, and heavenly glory, he became greatly renowned on earth, by the spread of the Gospel through the nations. And being indeed the Tree of Life, bearing all the fruits of salvation, he yields spiritual food to the souls of his people, on which they feed in their hearts by faith with thanksgiving. So that the true Israel shall not be destroyed by famine, or made ashamed among the heathen; as the nation of Israel has been—This could have but a typical accomplishment in the return of the Jews from captivity under Zerubbabel and the subsequent prosperity. Even the success of the Gospel in the primitive times and the preservation of the Church hitherto, form only partial completions of it. But the restoration of the Gentiles, the calling of the Gentiles to their own land, and the consequent peace and prosperity of the Church and of the world, fully answer to the energetic language of these predictions.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.
V. 1—10.

No rank or office in the Church, or in society, can exempt men from the reproofs of God’s word, when they neglect their duty and abuse the trust reposed in them: and if the shepherds of Israel, of the Lord’s own appointment, feed themselves and not the flock, who will do them! Indeed too many rulers, even in Christian countries, seem entirely to have forgotten the end of their appointment; and have acted as if they had been advanced to authority, to gratify their own ambition, cruelty, avarice, luxury, or lust, at the expense of those whose welfare they ought to have sought in every action, as their great object, in connexion with the glory of God and the salvation of their own souls. So that, whilst they have utterly neglected to protect the poor and industrious from the oppressions of the rich; to repress public grievances, to provide for the destitute, and to guard the peace and prosperity of the community, they have been driven into submission by force and cruelty; and thus forced into silence every murmur against their tyrannical measures, their oppressive taxes, and inhuman executions. Thus they have indulged the mean ambition, growing rich by impoverishing their subjects, and of governing over a company of abject miserable slaves with uncontrolled authority. Such attempts deplete and flourish kingdoms, and either scatter their inhabitants, by driving them for refuge to other nations; or cause them to be cut off, by exciting insurrections, encouraging invasions, or making way for destructive wars. Though there should be no man able or willing to remedy these evils; yet the Lord will show himself against such shepherds; he will soon deprive them of their abused authority, and call them to account for all the mischief which their crimes have occasioned; and deliver the people from their mouth that they may not be a prey for them. But when this negligence, avarice, and wickedness, are found in the pastors and rulers of the Church: when they feed themselves, but through sloth and ignorance take no care to feed the flock; when they are only intent upon obtaining and multiplying riches, that they may eat the fat and riot in luxury; when they never attempt to instruct the ignorant, to reclaim the erroneous, to alarm the careless, to encourage the broken-hearted, the distressed, and tempted; to reform the profligate or restore the backslider; or in any ways to bring men to repentance, to faith in Christ, to establish peace and holiness of life: but when they domineer over men’s consciences with force and cruelty, as if they were lords over God’s heritage; and flee and scatter the flock which he hath purchased with his blood: when they waste the Church by fierce persecutions or infect it with damnable heresies; when the shepherds are scattered, because there is no shepherd, but a wolf instead of one; and so fall into divisions and errors, forsake the word and ordinances of God, and are seduced into impiety or infidelity: in this case the guilt of the shepherd is, and his punishment will be, most aggravated. All the souls, that perish through the default of such men, will be required at their hands; the Lord will be against them, as they are evidently enemies to him; they will be driven from their office with contempt and detestation; and stripped of all their honours and emoluments; and their flocks will be delivered from such devourers.

V. 11—22.

The Lord will take care, that none of his true sheep shall finally wander or be lost, through the misconduct of those who are idle shepherds and greedy dogs. He will either raise up for them shepherds after his own heart; or he will supply the want of them by his own care; and will both seek and find every one of them, and convey them to his fold rejoicing. Thus the incarnate Son of God came into this dreary wilderness to seek and save that which was lost: personally, in the days of his flesh, he went about seeking the lost sheep of the house of Israel; and by his apostles and his ministers ever since, he hath also gone to search them out all over the Gentile world. Wherever his elect people are scattered, in the days of their darkness and ignorance, he finds them out and brings them into his fold. He also comes to their relief in the dark and cloudy days of persecution and temptation; he heals their backslidings, leads them forth in the paths of righteousness, feeds them in the rich pastures of his ordinances, folds them under his omnipotent protection, and causes them to rest and repose their souls upon his love and faithfulness. He seeks those that wander, and brings back to him. He binds up the broken-hearted and heals the diseased. And ought not his ministers then to do the same? Surely none but hirelings will value the emolument or reputation of the ministry more than this good and useful work; and the true pastor will be ready to endure hardship, to bear his reproach and persecution; and to spend and lay down his life for the same ends for which the chief Shepherd shed his precious blood. But, alas! how few in comparison have been hitherto, who have laboured and suffered in this
Moreover, the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

1 Son of man, set thy face against Mount Seir, and prophesy against it,

2 And say unto it, Thus saith the Lord GOD; Behold, O mount Seir, I am against thee, and I will stretch out mine hand against thee, and I will make thee most desolate.

3 I will lay thy cities waste, and thou shalt be desolate, and thou shalt know that I am the Lord.

4 Because thou hast had a perpetual hatred, and hast shed the blood of the children of Israel by the sword of the sword, in the time of their calamity, in the time that their iniquity had abounded, therefore will I kindle my wrath against thee.

5 And I will prepare thee into blood, and blood shall pursue thee; sith thou hast not hated blood, even blood shall pursue thee.

6 Therefore, as I live, saith the Lord GOD, I will prepare thee into blood, and blood shall pursue thee.

7 And I will make Mount Seir desolate; the whole land shall be desolate, because of the blood of their inhabitants, which they shed upon the ground, because they had regarded not the soul of their fathers, nor the soul of their brethren; therefore shall I make them desolate, saith the Lord GOD.

8 And I will make Mount Seir desolate; the whole land shall be desolate, because of the blood of their inhabitants, which they shed upon the ground, because they had regarded not the soul of their fathers, nor the soul of their brethren; therefore shall I make them desolate, saith the Lord GOD.

9 And I will make Mount Seir desolate; the whole land shall be desolate, because of the blood of their inhabitants, which they shed upon the ground, because they had regarded not the soul of their fathers, nor the soul of their brethren; therefore shall I make them desolate, saith the Lord GOD.

10 And I will make Mount Seir desolate; the whole land shall be desolate, because of the blood of their inhabitants, which they shed upon the ground, because they had regarded not the soul of their fathers, nor the soul of their brethren; therefore shall I make them desolate, saith the Lord GOD.

11 And I will make Mount Seir desolate; the whole land shall be desolate, because of the blood of their inhabitants, which they shed upon the ground, because they had regarded not the soul of their fathers, nor the soul of their brethren; therefore shall I make them desolate, saith the Lord GOD.

12 And I will make Mount Seir desolate; the whole land shall be desolate, because of the blood of their inhabitants, which they shed upon the ground, because they had regarded not the soul of their fathers, nor the soul of their brethren; therefore shall I make them desolate, saith the Lord GOD.

13 And I will make Mount Seir desolate; the whole land shall be desolate, because of the blood of their inhabitants, which they shed upon the ground, because they had regarded not the soul of their fathers, nor the soul of their brethren; therefore shall I make them desolate, saith the Lord GOD.

14 And I will make Mount Seir desolate; the whole land shall be desolate, because of the blood of their inhabitants, which they shed upon the ground, because they had regarded not the soul of their fathers, nor the soul of their brethren; therefore shall I make them desolate, saith the Lord GOD.

15 And I will make Mount Seir desolate; the whole land shall be desolate, because of the blood of their inhabitants, which they shed upon the ground, because they had regarded not the soul of their fathers, nor the soul of their brethren; therefore shall I make them desolate, saith the Lord GOD.

16 And I will make Mount Seir desolate; the whole land shall be desolate, because of the blood of their inhabitants, which they shed upon the ground, because they had regarded not the soul of their fathers, nor the soul of their brethren; therefore shall I make them desolate, saith the Lord GOD.

17 And I will make Mount Seir desolate; the whole land shall be desolate, because of the blood of their inhabitants, which they shed upon the ground, because they had regarded not the soul of their fathers, nor the soul of their brethren; therefore shall I make them desolate, saith the Lord GOD.

18 And I will make Mount Seir desolate; the whole land shall be desolate, because of the blood of their inhabitants, which they shed upon the ground, because they had regarded not the soul of their fathers, nor the soul of their brethren; therefore shall I make them desolate, saith the Lord GOD.

19 And I will make Mount Seir desolate; the whole land shall be desolate, because of the blood of their inhabitants, which they shed upon the ground, because they had regarded not the soul of their fathers, nor the soul of their brethren; therefore shall I make them desolate, saith the Lord GOD.

20 And I will make Mount Seir desolate; the whole land shall be desolate, because of the blood of their inhabitants, which they shed upon the ground, because they had regarded not the soul of their fathers, nor the soul of their brethren; therefore shall I make them desolate, saith the Lord GOD.

21 And I will make Mount Seir desolate; the whole land shall be desolate, because of the blood of their inhabitants, which they shed upon the ground, because they had regarded not the soul of their fathers, nor the soul of their brethren; therefore shall I make them desolate, saith the Lord GOD.

22 And I will make Mount Seir desolate; the whole land shall be desolate, because of the blood of their inhabitants, which they shed upon the ground, because they had regarded not the soul of their fathers, nor the soul of their brethren; therefore shall I make them desolate, saith the Lord GOD.

23 And I will make Mount Seir desolate; the whole land shall be desolate, because of the blood of their inhabitants, which they shed upon the ground, because they had regarded not the soul of their fathers, nor the soul of their brethren; therefore shall I make them desolate, saith the Lord GOD.

24 And I will make Mount Seir desolate; the whole land shall be desolate, because of the blood of their inhabitants, which they shed upon the ground, because they had regarded not the soul of their fathers, nor the soul of their brethren; therefore shall I make them desolate, saith the Lord GOD.

25 And I will make Mount Seir desolate; the whole land shall be desolate, because of the blood of their inhabitants, which they shed upon the ground, because they had regarded not the soul of their fathers, nor the soul of their brethren; therefore shall I make them desolate, saith the Lord GOD.

26 And I will make Mount Seir desolate; the whole land shall be desolate, because of the blood of their inhabitants, which they shed upon the ground, because they had regarded not the soul of their fathers, nor the soul of their brethren; therefore shall I make them desolate, saith the Lord GOD.

27 And I will make Mount Seir desolate; the whole land shall be desolate, because of the blood of their inhabitants, which they shed upon the ground, because they had regarded not the soul of their fathers, nor the soul of their brethren; therefore shall I make them desolate, saith the Lord GOD.

28 And I will make Mount Seir desolate; the whole land shall be desolate, because of the blood of their inhabitants, which they shed upon the ground, because they had regarded not the soul of their fathers, nor the soul of their brethren; therefore shall I make them desolate, saith the Lord GOD.

29 And I will make Mount Seir desolate; the whole land shall be desolate, because of the blood of their inhabitants, which they shed upon the ground, because they had regarded not the soul of their fathers, nor the soul of their brethren; therefore shall I make them desolate, saith the Lord GOD.

30 And I will make Mount Seir desolate; the whole land shall be desolate, because of the blood of their inhabitants, which they shed upon the ground, because they had regarded not the soul of their fathers, nor the soul of their brethren; therefore shall I make them desolate, saith the Lord GOD.

31 And I will make Mount Seir desolate; the whole land shall be desolate, because of the blood of their inhabitants, which they shed upon the ground, because they had regarded not the soul of their fathers, nor the soul of their brethren; therefore shall I make them desolate, saith the Lord GOD.
7 Thus will I make mount Seir* most desolate, and cut off from it him that passeth out, and him that returneth.

8 And I will fill his mountains with the slain men: in thy hills, and in thy valleys, and in all thy rivers, shall they fall that are slain with the sword.

9 I will make thee perpetual desolations, and thy cities shall not return: and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

10 Because thou hast said, These two nations, and these two countries shall be mine, and we will possess it; † whereas the Lord was there:

11 Therefore, as I live, saith the Lord God, ‡ I will even do according to thy anger, and according to thine envy which thou hast used out of thy hatred against them, • and I will make myself known among them, when I have judged thee.

12 And thou shalt know that I am the Lord, and that I have heard all thy blasphemies which thou hast spoken against the mountains of Israel, saying, They are laid desolate, they are given us to † consume.

13 Thus with thy mouth ye have boasted against me, and have multiplied your words against me:  ‡ I have heard them.

14 Thus saith the Lord God; † When the whole earth rejoiceth, I will make thee desolate.

15 As thou didst rejoice at the inheritance of the house of Israel, because it was desolate, so will I do unto thee; † thou shalt be desolate, O mount Seir, and all Idumea, even all of it; † and they shall know that I am the Lord.

1 and thou shalt fall into the hands of those that will be as eager to shed thine: the words imply more express (Lowth). The blood of the Israelites, shed from hatred of God and his people, is especially meant.

V. 7, 8. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 9. Cities, &c. The cities of Judah and Israel at that time lay desolate: but they were about to be rebuilt and replenished; the flourishing cities of Edom, on the contrary, would speedily be destroyed, and never return to their former condition. (Mal. i. 3, 4.) The Nabateans, having driven the Edomites out of their ancient abitations, in the time of the Babylonish captivity, they settled themselves in the southern part of Judea, where they afterwards conquered by Hyrcanus, and obliged to embrace the Jewish religion, and so became at length incorporated with that nation. (Prideaux.) (Marg. Ref.)

V. 10. The Edomites expected to get possession of the countries both of the Israelites and Jews, as living in the neighbourhood, or as allies for some time of the Chaldeans: and perhaps they were encouraged by some vague tradition concerning that land having been promised to the posterity of Abraham and Isaac; and concerning Esau, the elder brother having been supplanted by Jacob. This expectation seems to have excited their ardour in seeking the ruin of the Jews and in rejoicing over it. But the Lord, the Proprietor of the land, had dwelt there, in his temple, and by his ark and visible glory: he had given abundant proofs of his power, in putting the descendants of Jacob in possession of it and maintaining them in it; and though he had now for their sins given them into the hands of the Chaldeans: yet he reserved that holy land for his posterity, and the Edomites would not be able to deprive them of it.

V. 11. "I will make my people see, that I have not quite cast them off, by avenging their quarrel upon thee: " (Lowth.)

V. 12, 13. The Edomites not only coveted the fertile inheritance of Israel, and entertained a family and national antipathy against them: but they also hated and despaired them because of their relation to Jehovah. When the Lord therefore saw the land desolated, and the people dispersed or carried captive, they reviled the mountains of Israel, and thus blasphemed God, as if he had been unable to keep possession; and they boasted and gloried, as if the God of Israel had been overcome, as well as the nation of Israel.

V. 14. "When I shall restore other nations, conquered by the king of Babylon, to their former prosperity, thou shalt still be waste and desolate. The Edomites never recovered their country, after the Nabateans had expelled them. " (Lowth.) Perhaps the land of Israel is meant. When the whole land of Israel should rejoice, as being replenished, the land of Edom would be rendered desolate.

V. 15. Idumea. Or Edom, as it is in the Hebrew.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

It is of fatal consequence for parents to teach their children resentment or enmity against others; and still more so to instil into them prejudices against the Church of God: for these seeds will spring up and yield most pernicious fruit, after they have gone down to the grave. The wrath of God is loudly proclaimed against those, that have perpetual hatred to his people; and who take advantage of their calamities to insult over them and oppress them. They who do not hate blood, may be induced to shed it in ambitious wars and cruel persecutions, or by suitable temptations; and then blood will pursue them, or even a more dreadful punishment. The Lord himself will punish the crimes of ungodly professors of his holy religion, and chastise his offending children: but he will let his enemies know that he dwells in his Church, notwithstanding all her sins and sufferings: and when they think to gratify their malice, envy, or avarice, by oppressing and spoliating his worshippers, he will cease to afflict them, and make his
CHAP. XXXVI.

The insults and blasphemies of the heathen, over Israel’s desolations, rebuked with threatenings against them, 1-7. Promises of abundant and permanent blessings to the mountains of Israel, 8-15. God had cast out Israel for their sins, and he promises to restore them, not for their deservings, but for the honour of his own name, 16-24. Promises of abundant spiritual blessings, and of great temporal prosperity, 25-38.

ALSO, thou son of man, prophesy unto the mountains of Israel, and say, Ye mountains of Israel, hear the word of the Lord:

2 Thus saith the Lord God; Because the enemy hath said against you, Aha, even the ancient high places are ours in possession:

3 Therefore prophesy and say, Thus saith the Lord God; Because they have made you desolate, and swallowed you up on every side, that ye might be a possession unto the residue of the heathen, and ye are taken up in the lips of talkers, and are an infamy of the people:

4 Therefore, ye mountains of Israel, hear the word of the Lord God; Thus saith the Lord God to the mountains of Israel, and to the hills, to the valleys, to the desolate wastes, and to the cities that are forsaken, which became a prey and derision to the residue of the heathen that are round about:

5 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Surely in the fire of my jealousy have I spoken against the residue of the heathen, and against all Idumea, which have appointed my land into their possession, with my joy of all their heart, with despightful minds, to cast it out for a prey.

6 Prophesy therefore concerning the land of Israel, and say unto the mountains, and to the hills, and to the valleys, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I have spoken in my jealousy, and in my fury, because ye have borne the shame of the heathen:

7 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; I have lifted up mine hand, Surely ye, the heathen that are about you, shall bear their shame.

8 But ye, O mountains of Israel, ye shall shoot forth your branches, and yield your fruit to my people of Israel; for they are at hand to come.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXVI. V. 1. The whole land was at this time uninhabited: but the Lord had a peculiar favour to it; and the prophet was ordered to address himself to the mountains of Israel, as the most conspicuous parts of the land. This might be meant as a reproof to such as refused to hear his word; but it was a great encouragement to those who regarded it, and assured them that God had mercy in reserve for them.

V. 2. The Idumeans made their boasts, that they should soon become masters of the mountainous parts of Judea, where the ancient fortresses were placed, which commanded all the rest of the country. To the same sense, we are to understand the expression of “riding on the high places of the earth”? (Deut. xxxii. 13.) “that is, taking possession of the fortresses or passes which command the rest of the country,” (Loom.) (Margin. Ref.)

V. 3. The vain talkers among the heathen derided the pretensions of Israel, concerning a divine and exclusive right to the land of Canaan; as well as the language of the sacred writers, in calling it the glory of all lands, and the Lord’s holy mountain. Whereas it now lay desolate, uncultivated, profaned, and seized upon by idolaters. Nor did Jehovah interfere to make good his claim, in behalf of his people; and they therefore thought that it might more properly be called an infamous than a glorious land.

V. 5. Surely, &c. This expression seems equivalent to the more general form, by which the Lord swears by himself, “As I live,” &c. In burning jealousy from the honour of his name, which had been thus insulted by his enemies, he had spoken against them, and determined to put them to shame and to take vengeance on them; especially on the Edomites, who considered the land of Israel already their own possession; and who rejoiced exceedingly over the sufferings of the Jews, both from covetousness, and the malice and enmity of their despitful hearts; and they aided the Chaldeans to cast them out, that the land might be a prey unto them.

V. 8. At hand, &c. The predicted seventy years of the captivity were wearing away; and the time would soon arrive for the Jews to repossess and cultivate their own land, and to eat the fruits of it. If we suppose the words to relate to the general restoration of the nation;
9 For, behold, I am for you, and I will turn unto you, and ye shall be filled and sown:

10 And I will multiply men upon you, all the house of Israel, even all of you: and the cities shall be inhabited, and the wastes shall be builded:

11 And I will multiply upon you man and beast; and they shall increase and bring fruit: and I will set you after your old estates, and I will do better unto you than at your beginnings: and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

12 Yea, I will cause men to walk upon you, even my people Israel; and they shall possess thee, and thou shalt be their inheritance, and thou shalt no more henceforth beare them of men.

13 Thus saith the Lord God; Because they say unto you, Thou land devourest up men, and hast bereaved thy nations:

14 Therefore shall thou devour men no more, neither bereave thy nations any more, saith the Lord God.

15 Neither will I cause men to hear in thee the shame of the heathen any more, neither shall thou bear the reproach of the people any more, neither shall thou cause thy nations to fall any more, saith the Lord God.

16 Moreover the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

17 Son of man, when the house of Israel dwelt in their own land, they defiled it by their own way and by their doings: their way was before me as the uncleanness of a removed woman.

18 Wherefore I poured out my fury upon them, for the blood that they had shed upon the land, and for their idols which they had polluted it:

19 And I scattered them among the heathen, and they were dispersed through the countries: according to their way, according to their doings, I judged them.

20 And when they entered unto the heathen, whither they went, they profaned my holy name, when they said to them, These are the people of the Lord, and are gone forth out of his land.

21 But I had pity for mine holy name which the house of Israel had profaned among the heathen, whither they went.

22 Therefore say unto the house of Israel, Thus saith the Lord God; I do not this for your sakes, O house of Israel, but for mine holy name's sake, which ye have profaned among the heathen whither ye went.

23 And I will sanctify my great name, which was profaned among the heathen, which ye have profaned in the midst of them; and the heathen shall know that I am the Lord, saith the Lord God, the longest distance of time, that the things of this world can extend to, is but a moment compared with eternity. (Lomth.)

V. 10. The mercy, here promised, would be shown to Judah exclusively.

V. 11. Do better, &c. The outward state of the Jews was never so prosperous after the captivity, as it had been before that catastrophe: we must therefore understand this of their preservation from idolatry, and their adherence to the worship of God; and especially of the coming of the promised Saviour. Many interpreters think that these predictions refer also to a future return of the Jews to their own land, when converted to Christ; and then indeed the Lord will do better unto them and their land, than at their beginnings.

V. 13-15. The Canaanites had been extirpated by Israel; and Israel had been destroyed or driven out by the Assyrians and Chaldeans, and by sword, famine, and pestilence: the heathen, therefore, who probably were pleased to find a seeming contrariety between the Jewish Scriptures and these facts, represented the good land as unwholesome, unfruitful, and destructive of its inhabitants: yet they were ready to take possession of it for themselves! But the Lord declared that he would replenish the land, and not suffer it any more to be desolated, as it had been during the Babylonish captivity; and that he would not any more give the heathen occasion thus to reproach it. Though the whole land of Israel was not desolated after the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, as it had been after that by the Chaldeans: yet the slaughter made among the Jews was far greater; and they were entirely driven out of the land, and have continued in a state of exile from it for above seventeen hundred years. It seems therefore unavoidable, but that we must refer the full completion of this prophecy to some future event: when the land shall again become fruitful, and be inhabited by the nation of Israel to the end of time.

V. 17. 'A person, under a legal pollution, was forbidden to come within the court of the temple, or to attend upon God's worship there: so the defilements the Jews had contracted by their idolatries, and other heinous sins, rendered them unqualified to be his people, or to offer up any religious service to him.' (Lomth.)
27 And I will put my Spirit within you, and cause you to walk in my statutes, and ye shall keep my judgments, and do them.

28 And ye shall dwell in the land that I gave to your fathers; and ye shall be fruitful, and increase in the land, and ye shall multiply and be a nation.

29 And I will also save you from all your uncleanesses: and I will call for the corn, and will increase it, and lay no more famine upon you.

30 And I will multiply the fruit of the tree, and the increase of the field, that ye shall receive no more reproach of famine among the heathen.

31 For thus saith the Lord: When I have brought them again into the land of Israel, and shall have lifted up an ensign to them, to gather them from the nations, and shall bring them again to their land; then shall I make them one nation in the land upon which they came to be a people, and they shall be one nation unto me, and I will be their God.

32 And they shall dwell in the land that I gave unto Jacob my servant, and they shall possess it; and other nations shall服我 unto them.

33 For the land shall produce its fruit, and the heaven shall give its dew, and I will cause the Gentiles to give of the fruit of the earth, and the fulness of the Gentiles shall serve the Lord.

34 And I will make thee a light unto the Gentiles, that thou mayest be a blessing: and they shall curse him that curseth thee, and shall bless him that blesseth thee.

35 And it shall come to pass, that they that are written among the Gentiles, because of the land which they have transgressed, shall inherit the land which they despaired of; and thou shalt know that I am the Lord.
31 Then shall ye remember your own evil ways, and your doings that were not good, and shall loathe yourselves in your own sight, for your iniquities, and for your abominations.

32 Not for your sakes do I this, saith the Lord God; be it known unto you: be ashamed and confounded for your own ways, O house of Israel.

33 Thus saith the Lord God; In the day that I shall have cleansed you from all your iniquities I will also cause you to dwell in the cities, and the wastes shall be built.

34 And the desolate land shall be tilled, and inhabited, as it lay desolate in the sight of all that passed by.

35 And they shall say, This land that was desolate is become like the garden of Eden; and the waste, and the desolate and ruined cities are become fenced, and are inhabited.

3b Then the heathen that are round about you shall know that I the Lord build the ruined places, and plant the desolate.

37 Thus saith the Lord God; I will yet for this be inquired of by the house of Israel, to do it for them: a I will increase them with men like a flock.

38 As the holy flock, as the flock of Jerusalem in her solemn feasts, so shall the waste cities be filled with flocks of men: and they shall know that I am the Lord.
mankind shall show the truth of the Scriptures, the excellency of our holy religion, and the happiness of the people of God.

V. 16—27.

When we consider the abominations that have prevailed in the visible Church, we shall not wonder that the Lord hath repeatedly put away one part or another of it, with abhorrence and indignation; but shall rather admire at his patience and mercy, in still maintaining his cause amidst such multiplied provocations: and when we compare his justice and holiness with our guilt and pollution, and re-collect how we have defiled ourselves and all his goods, by our evil ways and doings we shall often be amazed, that he hath not ere this poured out his fury upon us, and punished us according to our deservings. But the glory of his own great name always supplies him with motives for doing good to his people: and even when he cuts off hypocrites and apostates, and severely corrects his offending children, he will not have his honour profaned among his enemies, by letting them wholly trample down his worshippers: so that he will render his cause triumphant in the event. Not that he will connive at the sins of those who are called by his name; for this would still more embolden the blasphemies of ungodly men: but he will save his people from all their sins: and when he separates them from the company of those that perish, he will also "redeem them from all iniquity, and purify them unto a peculiar people zealous of good works." Indeed he finds us all "foolish, disobedient, deceived, slaves to divers lusts and pleasures," and polluted with those abominable things which he loathes and abhors: but when the loving kindness of God our Saviour towards us is made manifest, he saves us by the washing of regeneration and the renewing of the Holy Ghost, which he pours upon us abundantly through Jesus Christ our Lord." These blessed influences, like purifying water, then bedew and cleanse all the powers of our souls; and our being cleansed from all filthiness, and from the love and power of every sin, and detached from idolatrous affections for every created object, proves our interest in the blood of sprinkling, and shows that our sins are forgiven. When the Lord speaks and says, "I will, be thou clean," the leprosy of our depraved nature is cleansed; he who first created our souls can new-create them to holiness, now that sin hath marred their beauty and ruined their health. He gives all his believing people a new heart, and puts a new spirit within them: the heart of stone is then changed for a heart of flesh, and becomes susceptible of every holy affection: then they are influenced in a proper manner by his word and providence: and the blessed Spirit of God, dwelling in his new creatures, as a Teacher, Sanctifier, and Comforter, gently leads them to walk, with increasing liberty and delight, in all his ordinances and commandments.

V. 26—30.

Our God is ever ready to fulfil his most precious promises to every one who perceives his need of them, and their suitableness to his case, and who pleads them by prayer in the name of our glorious Advocate: and thus the most polluted and invertebrate sinner may become a humble, holy, and spiritual worshipper and servant of God; one meet to be numbered with his people, and to enjoy his favour as his all-sufficient and eternal Portion. And when the Lord thus saves men from all their uncleanliness, he will supply all their wants, and cause every event to concur in doing them good. A humble disposition of mind, leading a man frequently to remember his evil ways with loathing and self-abhorrence, and cordially to confess his unworthiness of the least mercy; even whilst he expects the richest blessings from the abounding grace of God, is an essential and inseparable concomitant of the new heart and spirit bestowed on true believers. Nor is there any more decisive proof that a man is yet in his sins, than a disposition to justify himself, and to expect the divine favour as the reward of his own goodness. The Lord will make it known to all the heirs of salvation, and that in proportion to their growth in grace, that "boasting is for ever excluded," that shame and misery are all that such sinners can deserve; and that they are saved to the praise of the glory of his grace and for the honour of his great name. This conviction prepares them for every duty on earth: and when they shall come to glory, it will induce them to cast their crowns before the throne, and to ascribe salvation to God and to the Lamb for evermore. In some of these promises, the Lord, as it were, passes by, and says to the sinner, "Wilt thou be made clean? Ask me, and I will cleanse thee," and so waits to be inquired of by them to do these things for them; and to do them more and more perfectly for believers: others of them invite us to pray for the increasing purity, prosperity, and spread of true religion. He waits to be inquired of by his people to fulfil these prophecies, and to fill the earth with his holy flock and with the congregations of his saints. Let us then give ourselves unto prayer, and turn all these promises and predictions into petitions and supplications: and thus seek increasing holiness, fruitfulness, and comfort to our own souls, and expect more glorious times for the Church of God.
very many in the open valley; and, lo! they were very dry.

3 And he said unto me, Son of man, can these bones live? And I answered, 4 O Lord God, thou knowest.

5 Again he said unto me, Prophesy upon these bones, and say unto them, O ye dry bones, hear the word of the Lord.

6 Thus saith the Lord God unto these bones, Behold, I will cause breath to enter into you, and ye shall live:

7 And I will lay sinews upon you, and will put flesh upon you, and cover you with skin, and put breath in you, and ye shall live; and ye shall know that I am the Lord.

8 So I prophesied as I was commanded; and as I prophesied, there was a noise, and behold a shakings, and the bones came together, bone to his bone.

9 And when I beheld, lo, the sinews and the flesh came upon them, and the skin covered them above: but there was no breath in them.

10 Then said he unto me, Prophesy unto the wind, prophesy, son of man, and say to the wind, Thus saith the Lord God; Be not afraid, O wind, come from the four winds, O ye spirit, and breathe upon these slain, that they may live.

11 So I prophesied as he commanded me, and the breath came into them, and they lived, and stood up upon their feet, an exceeding great army.

12 Therefore prophesy and say among them, Thus saith the Lord God, Behold, my people, I will open your graves, and cause you to come up out of your graves, and bring you into the land of Israel.

13 And ye shall know that I am the Lord, when I have opened your graves, and brought you up out of your graves, 14 And I will put my Spirit in you, and ye shall live, and I shall place you

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXVII. V. 1—10. The predictions of the preceding chapter, taken in their fullest sense, seemed very unlikely and almost impossible to be fulfilled, considering the ruined and dispersed state of Judah and Israel. The prophet was therefore shown in a vision, by what power and in what way they would be performed. Under the influence of the prophetic Spirit, he was carried in a vision into the midst of a valley full of human bones, like those places in which great battles had been fought and vast multitudes slain. He who had been left unburied till the flesh was consumed, and the bones were dried, divided, and scattered about. When he had gone round and carefully surveyed these bones, and found them very many and very dry; the marrow from within, as well as the flesh from without being utterly wasted; the Lord inquired of him whether these dry bones could live? To which he answered with a proper mixture of humility and faith, Lorp, thou knowest. No created power could restore them to life; but if God should please to put forth his power, they might be raised from the dead and live. The Lord then ordered him to prophesy upon these bones; to predict their resurrection, to call upon them to hear his word, and to speak over them the promises that follow, concerning their being reunited, and restored to life, that they might know his power and Godhead. This would appear even a more hopeless service, than to prophesy the restoration of Israel to their ancient prosperity, or to preach to the most hardened sinners; yet he started no objections, but obeyed his orders. And whilst he was speaking, he seemed, in his vision, to hear a noise, and to see a great commotion among the bones; for behold, they were, so to speak, every one of them in quest of its kindred bone, and, under the divine direction and influence, each speedily found its proper place, and was joined to those bones that belonged to the same body, till the whole were formed into a vast number of complete skeletons; and then sinews, flesh, and skin covered them, and they became complete human bodies, but without life. The prophet was next ordered to prophesy to the wind, and to command it, in the name of the Lord, to blow from the four quarters of the heaven upon these slain men, that they might live: and whilst he obeyed his orders, they were restored to life, and he was surrounded by a vast army. The wind seems to have been the emblem of the Spirit of God, the Author and Giver of life; and the same original word signifies both wind, breath, and the Spirit. This therefore represented the prophet's calling upon God by his Spirit to quicken these dead bodies, that by his power they might become living men. The whole vision was an instructive emblem of the power of God operating by means, which of themselves must be entirely inefficacious, and thus producing most stupendous effects.

V. 11. The dry bones, indeed, aptly represented the ruined and desperate condition of both Israel and Judah; yet the language which they used was that of unbelief mingled with impatience; second causes seemed to give them no prospect of deliverance; and they overlooked the great first Cause of all: they therefore considered the state of the nation to be as desperate as that of these dead bones.
CHAPTER XXXVII.

B. C. 366.

15 ¶ The word of the Lord came again unto me, saying,

16 Moreover, thou son of man, take thee one stick, and write upon it, ¶ For Judah, and for the children of Israel his companions: then take another stick, and write upon it, ¶ For Joseph, the stick of Ephraim, and for all the house of Israel his companions:

17 And join them one to another into one stick, and they shall become one in thine hand.

18 And when the children of thy people shall speak unto thee, saying, Wilt thou not shew us what thou meanest by these?

19 Say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will take the stick of Joseph, which is in the hand of Ephraim, and the tribes of Israel his fellows, and will put them with him, even with the stick of Judah, and make them one stick, and they shall be one in mine hand.

20 And the sticks whereon thou wouldest write shall be in thine hand before their eyes.

21 And say unto them, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I will take the children of Israel from among the heathen, whither they be gone, and will gather them on every side, and bring them into their own land;

22 And I will make them one nation in the land upon the mountains of Israel, and one King shall be King to them all: and they shall be no more two nations, neither shall they be divided into two kingdoms any more at all:

23 Neither shall they defile themselves with their idols, nor with their detestable things, nor with any of their transgressions: but I will receive them out of all the countries whither they have sinned, and will cleanse them: so shall they be my people, and I will be their God.
24 And, David my servant shall be king over them, and they all shall have one shepherd: they shall also dwell in my judgments, and observe my statutes, and do them.

25 And they shall dwell in the land, wherein I have given unto Jacob my servant, to be his inheritance, and his children, and his children's children for ever: and my servant David shall be their prince for ever.

26 Moreover, I will make a covenant of peace with them; it shall be an everlasting covenant with them: and I will place them, and multiply them, and will set my sanctuary in the midst of them for evermore.

27 My tabernacle also shall be with them: yea, I will be their God, and they shall be my people.

28 And the heathen shall know that I the Lord do sanctify Israel, when my sanctuary shall be in the midst of them for evermore.

Israel from all the places where they had been living in sin; and bring them into his Church as true believers, both justified and sanctified; that they might be his people, and be the Object of their worship and the source of their felicity.

Transgressions. This expression comprehends in it, their being touched with a heavy compunction for their great sin of rejecting and crucifying the Messias, their King and Saviour. (Lowth.)

Ref. V. 24. And, etc. (Note, xxxiv. 23-31. Marg.)

V. 25. This cannot possibly be interpreted of any events, that took place before the coming of Christ; and after his coming, the Jews were soon driven from their own land, and have never regained possession of it. Yet the language is so expressive, that it seems plainly to mean, that the Jews should dwell in Canaan under the rule of Christ, from the time intended, through all generations to the end of the world.

V. 26. God will be reconciled to them through Christ, and admit them into that covenant of peace, of which he is the Mediator. (Lowth.)

Set, etc. This signifies, that the Lord would establish his true religion, and accepted worship, (of which the sanctuary had been so long the centre) in Israel, which was proscribed in the promised land. Here he promises his presence among them, by the graces of his Spirit and the efficacy of his word and sacraments. (Lowth.)

V. 28. The nations of the earth shall witness God's peculiar favour to Israel, and powerful interposition in behalf of that nation, according to his promise: and this probably will be the means of bringing them to believe the Scriptures, and to embrace Christianity.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-14.

As the Almighty power of God is engaged to perform his whole word; so our objections and doubts, arising from difficulties or apparent impossibilities, are the offspring of ignorance and unbelief. That omnipotent word, which once spake this fair creation into existence, and still upholds it; and which shall hereafter call forth from their grave the innumerable millions of the dead, to a life of endless happiness or misery, must be sufficient to remove all obstacles, and effect all purposes, that form a part of the divine plan. On this power ministers must absolutely depend when they preach the Gospel: for the state of those that are dead in sin and enmity against God, and of Satan and their own lusts, and habituated to various evils, is as desperate in itself, and they are as much without strength as these dry bones were, nor could any created power restore them to God and holiness. But the true minister has some experience of "the greatness of that mighty power which wrought in Christ, when he was raised from the dead," and which hath wrought and still works in every believer: and he knows it to be sufficient to soften the hardest and cleanse the most polluted heart. When he therefore considers the case of proud infidels and Pharisees, or of abandoned profligates and blasphemers: the Lord as it were asks him, Whether these dry bones can live? Whether they can be made his saints and servants? And his answer is, "Lord, thou knowest." If he please to work, the dry bones will live: nor can we make any exception to this rule, without limiting the power of our God. But though the work be wholly his; yet he commands us to use means: and if he ordered us to preach to the dry bones in a chamber, it would be our wisdom and duty to obey: and only pride and unbelief could start objections. If sinners were as devoid of life and sense as the dry bones, we ought to preach to them, and to call on them to hear the word of the Lord, and to set before them his truths, invitations, and promises: warning, exhorting, beseeching, and persuading them to come to Christ for salvation; and to be that God would powerfully work, whilst we were using the appointed means. But the incapacity of sinners, though equally entire, is of another kind: they are rational creatures, whose understandings, consciences, affections, and imaginations may be addressed, and who are capable of fears, hopes, and desires. Surely then we should be ready at the Lord's command to go to the highways and byways, in order to invite and even compel men to come in. As for our arguments and persuasions can do; to beseech rebels to be reconciled to God, and to command them to repent and believe the Gospel; accompanying all our entreaties with earnest prayers, that the Spirit of God may move our hearts, and that they may live. Under this kind of preaching various effects will be produced: many will be made to tremble, and to inquire.
CHAP. XXXVIII.

A prophecy of the formidable preparations of Gog and Magog, with their allies, to invade the land of Israel in the latter days, 1-17: and of the glorious power of God to be displayed in their destruction, 18-23.

And the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

2 Son of man, set thy face against Gog, the land of Magog, the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal, and prophesy against him,

3 And say, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against thee, O Gog, the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal:

4 And I will turn thee back, and put hooks into thy jaws, and I will bring thee forth, and all thy army, horses and horsemen, all of them clothed with all sorts of armour, even a great company with bucklers and shields, all of them handling swords:

what they must do to be saved? And a great commotion will sometimes be excited among those who have been careless and secure: there will be a gathering of the people to hear the word, and to confer about the matters of religion: numbers will be induced to attend on the means of grace; and even those who eventually are converted, often do many things outwardly before they are actuated by a vital inward principle. We should indeed be careful not to rest in any thing short of true conversion; and we should warn the people not to settle in forms, notions, or external reformation; yet this shaking among the dry bones may encourage us to proceed, preaching earnestly, praying fervently, and waiting patiently: and we may hope in due time to see a large company of spiritual soldiers, warring under the banner of Christ, against sin, the world and the devil, raised up from those who before were dead in trespasses and sins. Let us also remember, that the same power is equally engaged to raise the Church from her lowest depressions, and our souls from the deepest discouragements; and to perform all that for us and ours, which is truly good for us. Our part is to use proper means, to wait and pray, and not to yield to discouragements, because of difficulties, as if our hope were lost, or we were cut off, when our trials are heavy, and our prospects gloomy. But let us look to him, who will at last open our graces, and bring us forth to judgment, that he may now deliver us from sin, and put his Spirit within us, and keep us by his power through faith unto salvation: then we shall at last come forth victorious from all our conflicts, and for ever bless God for our present sharpest tribulations.

NOTES.

CHAP. XXXVIII. V. 2. 'The prophecy, contained in this and the following chapter, without question relates to the latter ages of the world, when the whole house of Israel shall return into their own land.—Gog, the land of Magog; or 'of the land of Magog.' Magog was the son of Japheth. (Marg. Ref.) From whence the Scythians are generally supposed to be derived. The Mogul Tartars are still called so. By Gog and Magog, may most probably here be meant the Turks. —The land of Canaan has been, for several years, in the possession of the Turks. The people here called Gog, and their allies, will attempt to recover it again out of the hand of the Jews. This may, probably, occasion the war and victory here spoken of. The Septuagint takes the word Rosh, commonly translated chief, for a proper name: so they render the sentence thus—r The 'prince of Rosh, Meshech, and Tubal.' 'Rosh, taken as a proper name, signifies those inhabitants of Scythia, from whence the Russians derive their name and original. (Lownh.) It is not indeed agreed what people or transactions are here predicted: but it seems evident, that they are not yet accomplished. Nothing occurred in the wars waged by the Syro-grecian kings against the Jews after the captivity, or in their conflicts with Antiochus Epiphanes, that answers to these predicitions: and it is foretold, that these events would be fulfilled in the latter days. It is therefore probably supposed, that the accomplishment will be posterior to the conversion of the Jews, and their restoration to their own land; and that the Turks, Tartars, or Scythians, from the northern parts of Asia, perhaps uniting with the inhabitants of some more 5 Persia, Ethiopia, and * Libya with them; all of them with shield and helmet:

6 * Gomer, and all his bands: the house of * Togarmah of the north quarters, and all his bands: and many peoples with thee.

7 Be: thou prepared, and prepare for thyself, thou, and all thy company that are assembled unto thee, and be thou a guard unto them.

8 After many days, thou shalt be visited: in the latter years thou shalt come ' into the land that is brought back from the sword, and is gathered out of many people, against the mountains of Israel, which have been always waste: but it is brought forth out of the nations, and they shall dwell safely all of them.

9 Thou shalt ascend and come like a storm, thou shalt be like a cloud to cover the land, thou, and all thy bands, and many peoples with thee.

10 Thus saith the Lord God; It shall also come to pass, that at the same time shall things come into thy mind, and thou shalt think an evil thought:

11 And thou shalt say, * I will go up to the land of unwalled villages: * I will go to them that are at rest, that dwell safely, all of them dwelling without walls, and having neither bars nor gates.

12 To * take a spoil, and to take a prey, to turn thine hand upon the desolate places that are now inhabited, and upon the people that are gathered out of the nations, which have gotten cattle and goods, that dwell in the midst of the land.

13 * Sheba, and Dedan, and the merchants of Tarshish, with all the young lions thereof shall come unto thee, Art thou come to take a spoil? hast thou gathered thy company to take a prey? to carry away silver and gold, to take away cattle and goods, to take a great spoil?

14 Therefore, son of man, prophesy and say unto Gog, Thus saith the Lord God; In that day when my people of Israel dwelleth safely, shalt thou not know it?

15 And thou shalt come from thy place out of the north parts, thou, and many people with thee, all of them.

---

always waste. * Long in a state of desolation; namely first by the Assyrians, Babylonians, Antiochus Epiphanes and the Romans: lastly, and at this time, by the Turks.

V. 9. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 10. The Lord foresees from ages and generations, every thought, good or bad, that will ever come into the mind of any of his creatures, and every purpose of their hearts; and all these infinitely numerous apparent contingencies form a part of his immense and glorious plan.

V. 11. The converted Jews will live in peace and holy confidence in God, without attempting to molest others, nor fear of being molested: they will therefore have neither walls, gates, nor bars; and this will tempt these despots to invade them.

V. 13. (Marg. Ref.) These merchants, as soon as they heard of this intended invasion, came into Gog's camp, as to a market, to buy both persons and goods, which should come into the conqueror's power. Their chief merchants, who are described as so many princes, (Rev. xxi. 28.) are called kinsmen, or the sons of the justice and oppression they too commonly practised in their commerce. (Lowth.) One enemy shall ensue another, because every one shall think to have the spoil of the church.

V. 14. As soon as the news of their being settled in their own country comes to thy knowledge, thou wilt certainly make preparations to invade them. (Lowth.)
riding upon horses, a great company, and a mighty army:

16 And thou shalt come up against my people of Israel, as a cloud to cover the land; it shall be in the latter days, and I will will thee against my land, that the heathen may know, when I shall be sanctified in thee, O Gog, before their eyes.

17 Thus saith the Lord God; Are thou be, of whom I have spoken in old time by my servants the prophets of Israel, which prophesied in those days many years, that I would bring thee against them?

18 And it shall come to pass at the same time, when Gog shall come against the land of Israel, saith the Lord God, that my fury shall come up in my face.

19 For in my jealousy, and in the fire of my wrath have I spoken, Surely in that day shall there be a great shaking in the land of Israel;

20 So that the fishes of the sea, and the fowls of the heaven, and the beasts of the field, and all creeping things that creep upon the earth, and all the men that are upon the face of the earth, shall shake at my presence, and the mountains shall be thrown down, and the steep places shall fall, and every wall shall fall to the ground.

21 And I will call for a sword against them throughout all my mountains, saith the Lord God; every man's sword shall be against his brother.

22 And I will plead against him with pestilence and with blood; and I will rain upon him, and upon his bands, and upon the many people that are with him, an overflowing rain, and great hailstones, fire, and brimstone.

23 Thus will I magnify myself, and sanctify myself; and I will be known in the eyes of many nations, and they shall know that I am the Lord.

CHAP. XXXIX.

God will glorify himself in the terrible destruction of Gog and Magog. 1—7.

The multitude of weapons burned by penetrates the deepest recesses of the human heart, through long series of ages; yea, from eternity; and who foresees what things will come into men's minds, and what evil thoughts they will think, is equally able to disappoint their devices. In vain do men prepare for the defence and success of themselves and their companions, when the Lord is pleased to fight against them; for "though hand join in hand, the wicked shall not be unpunished."—They who enjoy the Lord's protection are safe, and may be secure, though they have no other defence. It is most atrocious to devise mischief against those who serve God, in sinfulness and honesty, and who are harmless, inoffensive, and unsuspecting. But the love of riches, and the hatred of God and holiness, incite men to the most base and destructive enterprises: and when any dwell securely, bad men soon know of it, and mark them as their prey. Hence, alas! it is become necessary for those communities that desire peace, to learn and encourage war as a science and a trade! All opposition to the cause of God will eventually tend to sanctify his great name, and to fulfill the writings of his ancient prophets; and that in proportion as it is formidable. They, who love to terrify their neighbours, will be made to tremble at the power and indignation of the Lord. The whole creation will concur in the destruction of his devoted enemies: yea, they will help one their own and each other's ruin, till they are driven by the tempest of his jealousy into the lake that burneth with fire and brimstone; and thus he will be magnified and sanctified upon all those who refuse to submit to him and serve him.

41
Israel, 8—10. The burial of Gog and his multitude in Hamon-gog, 11—16. The birds and beasts invited to feast on the slain, 17—20. The heathen shall see God's judgments, and the reasons for which he punished Israel, 21—24; whom he will gather again with everlasting favour, 25—29.

THEREFORE, thou son of man, prophesy against Gog, and say, Thus saith the Lord God; Behold, I am against thee, O Gog, the chief prince of Meshech and Tubal:

2 And I will turn thee back, and leave but the sixth part of thee, and will cause thee to come up from the north parts, and will bring thee upon the mountains of Israel:

3 And I will smite thy bow out of thy hand, and will cause thine arrows to fall out of thy right hand.

4 Thou shalt fall upon the mountains of Israel, thou, and all thy bands, and the people that is with thee: I will give thee unto the ravenous birds of every sort, and to the beasts of the field to be devoured.

5 Thou shalt fall upon the open field;

For I have spoken it, saith the Lord God.

6 And I will send a fire on Magog, and among them that dwell carelessly in the isles, and they shall know that I am the Lord.

7 So will I make my holy name known in the midst of my people Israel; and I will not let them pollute my holy name any more: and the heathen shall know that I am the Lord, the Holy One in Israel.

8 ¶ Behold, it is come, and it is done, saith the Lord God; this is the day whereof I have spoken.

9 And they that dwell in the cities of Israel, shall go forth, and shall set on fire and burn the weapons, both the shields and bucklers, the bows and arrows, and the hand-swords, and the spears, and they shall burn them with fire seven years:

10 So that they shall take no wood out of the field, neither cut down any out of the forest; for they shall burn the weapons with fire: and they shall spoil those that spoiled them, and rob those that robbed them, saith the Lord God.

11 ¶ And it shall come to pass in that day, that I will give unto Gog a place vision its actual accomplishment. The plague is fully determined in my counsel and cannot be changed. It is the last and finishing stroke of God's justice upon the enemies of his Church. That is, before the millennium. (Note, xxviii. 2. marg. Ref.)

V. 9, 10. The language here used, seems to imply, that the army of Gog will be cut off by miracle, as that of Sennacherib had been: for the people are described, as going forth, not to fight and conquer, but merely to gather the spoil. The immense destruction of the invaders is illustrated by the (perhaps hyperbolical) circumstance of the weapons found among the slain, serving for fuel during seven years, at least to the inhabitants of the adjacent cities. But when it is considered how little fuel, comparatively, is needed in warm climates; we may even conceive of this being literally fulfilled. The Israelites, however, will neither reserve these weapons for their own use, nor form them into trophies of their victory: but use them for fuel. In token that such a lasting peace should ensue, that there should be no more need of warlike preparations. That it is supposed, that this prediction will be fulfilled just before the millennium; at which happy period, men shall everywhere keep "swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not rise against nation, neither shall they learn war any more." (Notes, Is. ii. 5—Rev.)
there of graves in Israel, the valley of the passengers on the east of the sea; and it shall stop the noses of the passengers: and there shall they bury Gog and all his multitude: and they shall call it, The valley of the Hamon-gog.

12 And seven months shall the house of Israel be burying of them, that they may cleanse the land.

13 Yea, all the people of the land shall bury them; and it shall be to them a renown, the day that I shall be glorified, saith the Lord God.

14 And they shall sever out men of continual employment, passing through the land to bury with the passengers those that remain upon the face of the earth, to cleanse it: after the end of seven months shall they search.

15 And the passengers that pass through the land, when any seeth a man's bone, then shall he set up a sign by it, till the buriers have buried it in the valley of Hamon-gog.

16 And also the name of the city shall be Hamonah. Thus shall they cleanse the land.

17 ¶ And thou, son of man, thus saith the Lord God; Speak unto every feathered fowl, and to every beast of the field, Assemble yourselves, and come; gather yourselves on every side to my sacrifice that I do sacrifice for you, even a great sacrifice upon the mountains of Israel, that ye may eat flesh, and drink blood.

18 Ye shall eat the flesh of the mighty, and drink the blood of the princes of the earth, of rams, of lambs, and of goats, of bullocks, all of them slain by Bashan.

19 And ye shall eat fat till ye be full, and drink blood till ye be drunken, of my sacrifice which I have sacrificed for you.

20 Thus shall ye be filled at my table with horses and chariots, with mighty men, and with all men of war, saith the Lord God.

21 ¶ And I will set my glory among the heathen, and all the heathen shall see my judgment that I have executed, and my hand that I have laid upon them.

22 So the house of Israel shall know that I am the Lord their God from that day and forward.

23 And the heathen shall know that the house of Israel went into captivity for their iniquity: because they trespassed against me, therefore hid I my face from them, and gave them into the hand of their enemies: so fell they all by the sword.

24 ¶ According to their uncleanness, and according to their transgressions have I done unto them, and hid my face from them.

25 Therefore thus saith the Lord God; Now will I bring again the captivity of Jacob, and have mercy upon the whole land of Israel, for his army and people; but the Lord will only give them a place of graves in some part of it; and not even that, till their bodies have lain some time unburied. The multitude of the slain will infect the air with their stench, and cause the travellers to stop their noses; or they will lie in the way, and obstruct those that are passing on the road. So that the Israelites must bury them, though they had neither trouble nor peril in vanquishing them. This will be the work of seven months to all the people of the land; that is, of all such as can be spared from other needful employments. But it will be necessary in order to cleanse the land. No doubt the prophet referred to the ceremonial law in this passage; though that law will not be regarded when this prediction shall be fulfilled: but it will be also needful to cleanse the land from the natural defilement, which might otherwise cause an infection. — This labour of Israel will bring great honour to them, as well as redound to the glory of God. The valley, near this sea, (of Gennesareth,) is called the valley of the passengers; because it was a great road, by which the merchants and traders from Syria, and other eastern countries, went into Egypt. All the people shall be employed seven months in burying the dead; and after they are ended, particular persons, appointed for that purpose, shall make a clear redemption. — A sign, &c. A stone, or some mark of distinction, that men may avoid passing over them. Hamonah. This is probably meant of a city that should be afterwards built near this valley, and called Hamonah, to perpetuate the memory of such a transaction. (Lowth.) No such city, however, has yet been built, of which we have any account. V. 17—20. It was the custom for persons that offered sacrifice, to invite their friends to a feast, that was to be on the remainder: so here the prophet, by God's command, invites the beasts and fowls to partake of the sacrifice of his enemies slain; they are called a sacrifice, because offered up as an atonement to God's justice. (Lowth.) (Marg. Ref.)
This is, as it were, already done: the day of which God hath spoken is about to be ushered in; his promises and judgments will soon be exactly accomplished: let us then go forth to meet him, and anticipate by faith and prayer the approach of his promised blessings to ourselves and to his Church. Speedily the weapons of war, which are so much in use all over the world, will be rendered needless. Indeed they might now be all burned, or buried in the depth of the sea, to the great benefit of mankind; and they would be thus disposed of, did not men more resemble Satan in pride, malice, and treachery, than the Lord in justice, truth, goodness, and mercy; and if they did not take more delight in robbing, murdering, and domineering over others, than in love and good works. Yet it is the common lot of spoilers to be spoiled and slaughtered, by those whom they seek to injure. After all the disturbance that is made by men of vast ambition or unstable avarice, and after all their mighty expectations and achievements, a place of graves is all that the Lord gives them on earth; and sometimes even this is denied, that the indignities exercised towards their dead bodies may be an emblem of the contempt and misery to which their guilty souls are doomed in the invisible world. It is our duty to show a humane disposition even towards the most injurious: yet self-love may suffice to induce the survivors to bury the dead. It should therefore moderate our regard to these mortal bodies, and their decoration and indulgence, and our attention to external accomplishments in others, to consider that commonly, in two or three days after death, the human body becomes too deformed a spectacle to be looked on without horror by those who used most to love and admire it. When the Lord is glorified in the ruin of his enemies, and in the good conduct and prosperity of his people, it becomes a day of great renown to them: but it is the chief renown of any land, when all ranks and orders of men concur in cleansing it from the filthiness of sin, which is far worse than any natural or ceremonial pollution whatever. This is a good work, which will require persevering diligence, that it may not be done superficially, but that search may be made into the secret recesses of iniquity, by persons severally for that service, and with the assistance of all that are able to give them information.

V. 17—29.

The most haughty and prosperous of sinners are only fattened for the slaughter, like the bulls and rams of Balshar: at length they will all be made a sacrifice to justice, for the display of the glory of God, before the nations of the earth: whilst the poor and afflicted people, that trust in him, shall certainly know and experience his power, truth, and love, in their timely deliverance and advancement. But even the professors of God often fall into the hands of their enemies, or into divers and sore calamities; because they have trespassed against him, and he deals with them according to their uncleanness and their transgressions. And indeed, if true believers yield to temptation, and commit deliberate wickedness, the Lord will hide his face, and inflict sharp correction on them; and they will walk in darkness, and their enemies will seem to insult over them. But though they may thus be deserted, tempted, corrected, and distressed; yet they have a sure refuge in the Lord’s mercy: for a season they bear their shame; till being truly penitent, he again hath mercy on them, for the honour of his own name; and then they dwell safely and comfortably under his protection, and none can make them afraid. For the name of God will finally be hallowed: his cause shall be triumphant on earth, and in heaven: he will yet have mercy on the dispersed house of Israel, and gather them out of their captivity: and he will never finally hide his face from any of those on whom he hath poured out his sanctifying Spirit. But we must not expect to be wholly exempted from temptation, distress, and trouble, till we come to heaven: then we shall be filled with the Spirit of holiness, and behold the face of our God, without one sorrow or intervening cloud for evermore.

NOTES.

CHAP. XL. V. 1. (Marg. Ref.) The prophet had this vision in the most gloomy season of the captivity, twelve years before Jehoiachin was released from prison by Evil-Merodach.

V. 2. (Note, i. 1.) The vision, contained in the remainder of this book, is allowed by commentators to be one of the most obscure in the sacred Scripture; so that it is not fully agreed what city, temple, and land were intended; or whether it had reference to former or to future times; whether it be understood literally or figuratively; whether it relate to the Church on earth, or that in heaven. Some think the following description of the temple was intended to show what Solomon’s temple had been, (Notes, 1 Kings vi. viii.) others explain it of the second temple, and of the city, after they were rebuilt and arrived at their greatest prosperity. There can, indeed, be little doubt, that the grand outlines of the description were taken from Solomon’s temple, with all the additions made to its courts and outbuildings in after ages; and that in many particulars it may be considered as a model of it, when destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar. We may also suppose, that Zerubbabel, Joshua, and the other Jews, had respect to it, as far as circumstances would permit, in rebuilding the temple after the captivity. There are, however, several circumstances, which conclusively show, that something vastly superior to either the first or second temple was intended; and that the external description must be considered as a figure and emblem of spiritual blessings. This will appear, in many particulars as we proceed: but especially the dimensions of the temple, city, and land; and the division of the land to the prince, priests, and tribes; and the river of water springing from the threshold of the temple, enlarging till it reached the dead sea, and sweetening its waters; with the trees growing on the banks of the river, bearing fruit: every month, cannot be literally interpreted, or made to accord with anything which has yet taken place, (xliv. xviii. xlviii.)—

The general scope of Ezekiel’s temple is, by giving a promise of restoring Solomon’s to preserve the Jews from defiling themselves with idolatry during their captivity; and when the time of that should be expired, to encourage them to go home and rebuild their temple, and observe the laws and ordinances prescribed by Moses, for performing God’s worship there; which yet was never to be equal to Solomon’s in every respect, before the Messiah should come, whose Church should resemble Solomon’s temple, in symmetry and beauty, in firmness and duration, in a regular, orderly, and decent worship of the true God; and in the manifestation of the divine presence, at first by the miraculous gifts of the Holy Ghost, and ever since by the inward assiduous, comforts, and protection of the same Spirit. (Loc. cit.)—The state of the Church, however, in that happy period which we are taught to expect, seems to be eminently predicted. ‘Nothing is more usual, than for the prophets to describe the state of the Christian Church, by representations taken from the Jewish temple and service.’ (Lomth.) (Notes, Is. xliv. lxv.) If we would judge of the propriety, with which those glorious days were pre-3 And he brought me thither, and behold, there was a man, whose appearance was like the appearance of brass, with a line of flax in his hand, and a measuring reed; and he stood in the gate:

4 And the man said unto me, Son of man, behold with thine eyes, and hear with thine ears, and set thine heart upon all that I shall shew thee; for to the intent that I might shew them unto thee, and that thou seest of the house of Israel, and of the house of the prophet:

5 And, behold, a wall on the outside of the house round about, and in the man's hand a measuring reed of six cubits long, by the cubit and an hand breadth:

6 So he measured the breadth of the building, one reed; and the height, one reed.

7 Then came he unto the gate which looketh toward the east, and went up the stairs thereof, and measured the threshold of the gate, which was one reed broad; and the other threshold of the gate, which was one reed broad.

8 And every little chamber was one reed long and one reed broad; and between the little chambers were five cubits; and the threshold of the gate by the porch of the gate within was one reed.

dicted under such allusion; we must place ourselves in the situation of the pious Jews, when in captivity, who favoured the very dust and stones of their city and temple; and who could not well detach their ideas of the Church's prosperity, from that of the external splendour of the sanctuary; or conceive of more glorious times for the worship of God, abstracted from the expectation of a larger temple or city. It is probable that the more immediate accomplishment of the prophecy will be subsequent to the conversion of the Jews, their restoration to their own land, the destruction of Gog and Magog, and the pouring out of the Spirit mentioned in the close of the foregoing chapter: and it will perhaps continue through the thousand years, during which Satan will be chained up in the bottomless pit. But whether there will be any external forms, analogous to these here predicted, cannot be determined; though in some respects it seems very improbable: it is, however, absurd to attempt laying down rules for Church-government, discipline, or modes of worship, from so obscure a vision: seeing men of lively imaginations, and contrary sentiments may, perhaps, with equal plausibility, accommodate it to their systems. In general the vision seems to have been intended, both to remind the Jews of what they had lost by their sins, and so to lead them to repentance; and to encourage their hopes of the final prevalence of that cause, which was at that time so greatly depressed.

A very, &c. Mount Moriah is called "a very high mountain," because it represents the seat of the Christian Church, foretold by the prophets, that it should be "established on the top of the mountains." Mount Moriah lay southward of the hill of Zion, though northward of the lower part of the city, commonly called Jerusalem. (Lomth.) The very high mountain, however, is not said to have been Moriah or Zion. The prophet saw on the south, the frame, or plan of the city, which would at length be built, and which he afterwards repeatedly mentioned, though he was directed first to describe the courts and the temple.

V. 3. A man, &c. Many suppose this man to have been the eternal Son of God, anticipating his incarnation by appearing to human form. He is the Builder, as well as the Foundation and Corner-stone of the spiritual temple; and his appearance as brass might denote his durable stability and glory, in his person and mediatorial government: yet, as the glory of God, in Christ, has been shown to be the scope of the introductory vision, (Notes, i. x.) and as the same glory appeared to the prophet in this vision, when the man here spoken of was present, (xili. 1-6,) it may be questioned, whether he were not a created angel, (Rev. i. 15.) The use of the line was to measure the land, and of the reed to take the dimensions of the buildings. (Lomth.) These may denote his revealed word, or secret decrees, according to which he will regulate every thing that relates to the doctrine, worship, and practice of his Church.

V. 4. He proposes to the prophet two duties, always necessary; that he should diligently learn from God, and faithfully deliver what he had received.

V. 5. A wall. This wall is supposed to have surrounded the temple and all its out-buildings; and it may be an emblem of the Church's separation from the world, and its security under the divine protection. The reed, with which the prophet's Instructor measured, is computed to have been nearly four yards long; though some think that the ordinary Jewish cubit is meant, and distinguished from that which was used in Chaldea; and that the reed was not much above three yards long. The outward wall is stated to have been one reed in breadth, or thickness, and one in height.

V. 6. The gate of the outward court, in which the Israelites worshipped, seems to be intended. The Angel passes by the court of the Gentiles, and does not measure it: (Rev. xi. 2;) perhaps signifying, that the multitude of the nations, flowing into the Church, could not be comprised in any measure or number. The word translated threshold, signifies the lintel, or upper part of the door-case, as well as the lower threshold. (Lomth.) They were equal in dimensions to the thickness of the wall.

V. 7. The entrance into the outward court seems to have been through a porch, with doors at both ends; and on each side of this porch were three small chambers, or rooms, a reed square in size, with a passage of five cubits between them. These rooms were for the use of the porters, that took care of the several gates, which led to CHAPTER XL.

8 He measured also the porch of the gate within, one reed.

9 Then measured he the porch of the gate, eight cubits; and the posts thereof, two cubits; and the porch of the gate was inward.

10 And the little chambers of the gate eastward were three on this side, and three on that side; they three were of one measure: and the posts had one measure on this side and on that side.

11 And he measured the breadth of the entrance of the gate, ten cubits; and the length of the gate, thirteen cubits.

12 The space also before the little chambers was one cubit on this side, and the space was one cubit on that side; and the little chambers were six cubits on this side, and six cubits on that side.

13 He measured then the gate from the roof of the little chamber to the roof of another: the breadth was five and twenty cubits, door against door.

V. 14. The word, rendered posts and post is by many supposed to mean pent-houses. Perhaps, the verse may signify, that the pent-houses to the chambers, and within the porch toward the court, when the several measures were added together, amounted to sixty cubits in extent. The angel is said to have made, what he delineated before the prophet.

V. 15. The whole length of the porch, from the outward court, unto the inner side which looks into the first court, was fifty cubits. Twelve, the thickness of the wall at each end; eighteen for the three chambers on each side; and ten cubits for the space between the chambers; allowing the same space between the chambers on each side, and the two walls. (Louth.)

V. 16. Every one of the little chambers had a narrow window to it, toward the inside of the gate where the passage was; and so there was over the side posts or fronts, or pent-houses placed at the entrance of each chamber. These were broad within to disperse the light, and narrow without. (Louth.) The arches seemed to have been built above each door, with a window in them; as it is generally practised in many cities at present. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 17. The outward court was within the porch above described; but without, or more distant from the temple than the inner court. It is supposed to have been surrounded by cloisters, or porticos, with a pavement under them; and over these were chambers, for the use of the priests and Levites; or rather for storehouses, in which to preserve the sacred oblations.

V. 18. Perhaps there was a pavement between the porticos on each side, facing the entrance called the lower pavement, because the pavement on each side, under the porticos, was raised higher than this was.
without, an hundred cubits eastward and northward.

20 ¶ And the gate of the outward court, that looked toward the north, he measured the length thereof, and the breadth thereof.

21 And the little chambers thereof were three on this side, and three on that side; and the posts thereof, and the arches thereof, were after the measure of the first gate: the length thereof was fifty cubits, and the breadth five and twenty cubits.

22 And their windows, and their arches, and their palm-trees, were after the measure of the gate that looketh toward the east; and they went up unto it by seven steps; and the arches thereof were before them.

23 And the gate of the inner court was over against the gate toward the north, and toward the east; and he measured from gate to gate an hundred cubits.

24 ¶ After that he brought me toward the south, and behold a gate toward the south; and he measured the posts thereof, and the arches thereof, according to these measures:

25 And there were windows in it and in the arches thereof round about, like those windows: the length was fifty cubits, and the breadth five and twenty cubits.

V. 19. The distance between the inner door, into the outward court, and the door at the other extremity into the inner court, was an hundred cubits. The way to the temple was a continued ascent; so that the door into the inner court was the higher, that into the outward, the lower, gate. The width of this part of the court from south to north was the same as the length from east to west. At least this seems the most obvious construction of the concluding words.

V. 20. The north-gate, into the outward court, which is next described, was made nearly, if not exactly, in the same manner as the east gate, &c.

V. 21, 22. (Notes, 13, 15, 16.) Before them. Or, suitable to them; that is, to those of the east-gate. (Lowth.)

V. 23. (Note, 19.) The north-gate of the inner court did exactly answer this north-gate of the outer court; and in like manner the east-gate of the inner court answered the east-gate of the outer court. (Lowth.) The gate of the inner court was over against the gate, (that is, of the outward court,) as well on the north side as on the east.

26 And there were seven steps to go up to it, and the arches thereof were before them: and it had palm-trees one on this side, and another on that side, upon the posts thereof.

27 And there was a gate in the inner court toward the south: and he measured from gate to gate toward the south an hundred cubits.

28 ¶ And he brought me toward the inner court: and he measured the south gate according to these measures;

29 And the little chambers thereof, and the posts thereof, and the arches thereof, according to these measures;

30 And the arches round about were five and twenty cubits long, and five cubits broad.

31 And the arches thereof were toward the outer court, and palm-trees were upon the posts thereof: and the going up to it had eight steps.

32 ¶ And he brought me into the inner court toward the east: and he measured the gate according to these measures.

33 And the little chambers thereof, and the posts thereof, and the arches

V. 24—27. (Marg. Ref.) It seems there were no gates on the west; though the courts may be supposed to have extended, by the sides of the temple, to the western wall: at least the square, at first described, within the surrounding wall, would admit of this. (5.)

V. 28. The outward court enclosed the inner, on the east, north, and south sides. Thus the prophet was led from the south-gate of the outward court, to the south-gate of the inner, which was over against it; and so into the inner court itself.

V. 29—31. (Notes, 8—13.) The entrance into the inner court seems to have been through a portico, like that at each gate of the outward court, with little rooms for porters, and spaces between, of the same dimensions, and with a pent-house towards the outward court: but the ascent was by eight steps; whereas the outward court had but seven. The fifteen Psalms from the hundred and twentieth, called Songs of degrees, or ascents, are supposed to have been sung on some of these steps. The arches, (30,) are supposed to have been built, over the spaces which separated the porter's lodges; and to have been twenty-five feet in height. thereof, were according to these measures: and there were windows therein and in the arches thereof round about: it was fifty cubits long, and five and twenty cubits broad.

34 And the arches thereof were toward the outward court; and palm-trees were upon the posts thereof, on this side, and on that side: and the going up to it had eight steps.

35 ¶ And he brought me into the north gate, and measured it according to these measures.

36 The little chambers thereof, the posts thereof, and the arches thereof, and the windows to it round about: the length was fifty cubits, and the breadth five and twenty cubits.

37 And the posts thereof were toward the outer court; and palm-trees were upon the posts thereof, on this side, and on that side: and the going up to it had eight steps.

38 And the entries thereof, were by the posts of the gates, where they washed the burnt-offering.

39 And in the porch of the gate were two tables on this side, and two tables on that side, to slay thereon the burnt-offering, and the sin-offering, and the trespass-offering.

40 And at the side without, as one goeth up to the entry of the north gate, were two tables; and on the other side, which was at the porch of the gate, were two tables.

41 Four tables were on this side, and four tables on that side, by the side of 42 And the four tables were of hewn stone for the burnt-offering, of a cubit and an half long, and a cubit and a half broad, and one cubit high: whereupon also they laid the instruments wherewith they slew the burnt-offering and the sacrifice.

43 And within were hooks, an hand broad, fastened round about: and upon the tables was the flesh of the offering.

44 ¶ And without the inner gate were the chambers of the singers in the inner court, which was at the side of the north gate; and their prospect was toward the south; one at the side of the east gate, having the prospect toward the north.

45 And he said unto me, This chamber, whose prospect is toward the south, is for the priests, the keepers of the charge of the house.

46 And the chamber whose prospect is toward the north is for the priests, the keepers of the charge of the altar: these are the sons of Zadok, among the sons of Levi, which come near to the Lord to minister unto him.

47 So he measured the court, an hundred cubits long, and an hundred cubits broad, four square; and the altar that was before the house.

48 And he brought me to the porch of the house, and measured each post of the porch, five cubits on this side, and five cubits on that side: and the breadth of the gate was three cubits on this side, and three cubits on that side.

V. 32—37. The east and north gates were built in the same manner as the south gate.

V. 38. Just within the portico of the north entrance, beyond the chambers, was the place, where the legs and entrails of the sacrifices were washed. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 40. "Two tables were on each side, as you come into the porch of that gate; and two on each side of the inner part of the gate that looked toward the altar." (Lambh.)

V. 43. Within the gate were iron hooks, for the hanging up the beasts, in order to slaying off their skins. (Lambh.)

V. 44. These chambers were placed at the north-east corner of the inner court, and so had their prospect towards the south: there were likewise chambers at the Vol. III.—No. 22.
PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

In the depth of the tribulations of the Church and of believers, the Lord commonly gives some distant glimpses of approaching deliverance and comfort, to support their faith and patient expectation. The great builder of our spiritual temple, whose power and glory are infinite and eternal, always works by rules, and whilst he performs his secret counsels, he requires us to compare our works with the standard of his word. This we should study carefully, that we may be fellow-workers together with him; and that our worship and obedience may be regulated by faith, and not by fancy or carnal wisdom. We should, therefore, "believe with our eyes, and hear with our ears," and set our hearts upon all that the Lord showeth us: attending to the whole revelation of his will, and seeking the teaching of his Spirit; that we may be thoroughly furnished for every good work; and, if employed as ministers, may be able to declare the whole counsel of God to the people. Every part of scripture is divine, useful, and important, in different ways, or to divers persons, but it may not all be so immediately useful to us: others have had, and others will have, the benefit of some portions, which are to us not so intelligible or full of instruction. But if we cannot understand, or edify by any part of scripture, we should humbly acknowledge our own ignorance, and adore the divine wisdom and knowledge; and not allow ourselves to start objections on that account. Yet as some portions are more clear and, to us at least, more important, than others: so a fondness for the study of the obscure parts in preference to the obvious, and for the tyring of mint and cummin, above the weightier matters of the law, is a folly and a temptation sometimes even of godly men. The Church of God and all Christians are separated from the world, and protected by God; they are built on an immovable foundation, and exalted in excellency and privilege above the nations of the earth; and they are continually and gradually ascending towards the Sanctuary above. A small chamber in this true temple is preferable to the most magnificent palace of the wicked: how glorious then must be the many mansions prepared in heaven for the disciples of Christ! There are even now more numbers of the churches of the saints; yet we may hope and pray, for their immense increase in numbers, and in grace and peace. They are all supported and sheltered by omnipotence: they have their measure of light, through ordinances and instruments, from Christ the Light of the world, by which they may walk and work comfortably: but it is not sufficient to gratify the thirst of knowledge of those who cannot be content to see through a glass darkly. Into these churches men have access as living members by faith in Christ; there they flourish as the palm-tree, by communion with God and his people; and they shall at length be made more than conquerors. The nearer we approach to God in profession or office, the more spiritual we should be. This will be best effected by daily looking to, and feeding on, our great Sacrifice, by faith in our hearts with thanksgiving: nor should we be slack to commemorate His death, who hath "washed us from our sins in his blood, and made us kings and priests to God," that we may here in the courts of his temple, ripen for our removal to the sanctuary above, there to rejoice in his love and glorify his name for evermore.

NOTES.

CHAP. XLI. V. 1. By the posts are meant the door-cases on each side of the entrance, (xl. 48.) These were six cubits thick, on the north and south sides; the same thickness had the upper lintel over the door. The word rendered tabernacle, sometimes signifies covering. In this signification it may not be usually applied to the upper lintel, which is a kind of covering to the door. (Lwvrth.) Some understand the verse of porticoes, in the front of the porch, on each side, six cubits wide, with a covering of the same dimensions.

V. 2. The door out of the porch into the sanctuary seems to have been wider than that out of the court into the porch. (Note, xl. 48. 49.) but the whole length of the porch is still made out to be twenty cubits, perhaps including the side-walls. The dimensions of the first sanctuary, and of the most holy place, accord with those in Solomon's temple. (4. Marg. Ref.)
3 Then went he inward, and measured the post of the door two cubits; and the door six cubits; and the breadth of the door seven cubits.

4 So he measured the length thereof, twenty cubits; and the breadth twenty cubits, before the temple; and he said unto me, This is the most holy place.

5 After he measured the wall of the house six cubits; and the breadth of every side-chamber, four cubits, round about the house on every side.

6 And the side-chambers were three, one over another, and thirty in order; and they entered into the wall which was of the house for the side-chambers round about, that they might have hold; but they had not hold in the wall of the house.

7 And there was an enlarging, and a winding about still upward to the side-chambers; for the winding about of the house went still upward round about the house: therefore the breadth of the house was still upward, and so increased from the lowest chamber to the highest by the midst.

8 I saw also the height of the house round about: the foundations of the side-chambers were a full reed of six cubits.

9 The thickness of the wall, which was for the side-chamber without, five cubits; and that which was left was the place of the side-chambers that were within.

10 And between the chambers was the wideness of twenty cubits round about the house on every side.

11 And the doors of the side-chambers were toward the place that was left, one door toward the north, and another door toward the south: and the breadth of the place that was left was five cubits round about.

12 Now the building that was before the separate place at the end toward the west was seventy cubits broad; and the wall of the building was five cubits thick round about, and the length thereof of ninety cubits.

V. 3. The partition wall, between the sanctuary and the holy of holies, is supposed to have been two cubits in thickness: the breadth of the wall on each side the gate seven cubits; and the entrance six cubits in width.

V. 5, 6. Six cubits. The thickness of the wall from the foundation; the first story of the side-chambers.

V. 7. So much of breadth was added to the side-chambers, as was taken out of the thickness of the wall; so that the middle story was one cubit, and the upper story two cubits, larger than the lower rooms. And winding stairs, which enlarged as the rooms did, went up between each two chambers, from the bottom to the top: and there were two doors at the top of each pair of stairs, one opening into one room, and the other into that over against it. By the house is meant these chambers three stories high.

V. 8. This may mean, that the prophet from the upper chamber had a view of the height of these buildings, which surrounded the temple: and considering the rests as a part of the foundation on which they were supported, it was a full reed, or six large cubits.

V. 9. This seems to be meant of the outward wall, which enclosed the side-chambers. The dimensions are large: but the whole structure was erected to be very strong and durable. The space of five cubits is thought by some to have been allowed as a wall before the chambers.

V. 12. A different word is here used for chambers than before: and some suppose that another row of buildings, at twenty cubits distance from the side-chambers, is intended. There was a row of chambers joined to the temple; and another row of buildings, parallel with them, with a passage of ten or eleven yards in breadth between them, besides the place that was left, before spoken of. But the description, and the various explanations of different commentators, are very obscure: and probable conjecture seems all that can be attained to on the subject.
13 So he measured the house, an hundred cubits long; and the separate place, and the building, with the walls thereof, an hundred cubits long;

14 Also the breadth of the face of the house, and of the separate place toward the east, an hundred cubits.

15 And he measured the length of the building over against the separate place which was behind it, and the galleries thereof on the one side, and on the other side, an hundred cubits, with the inner temple, and the porches of the court;

16 The door posts, and the narrow windows, and the galleries round about on their three stories, over against the door, that was ceiled with wood round about, and from the ground up to the windows, and the windows were covered;

17 So that above the door, even unto the inner house and without, and by all the wall round about, within and without, by measure.

18 And it was made with cherubims and palm-trees; so that a palm-tree was between a cherub and a cherub; and every cherub had two faces;

ninety cubits, and at the west end, to seventy cubits. —From north to south is called its breadth, as it corresponded with the width of the temple; from east to west its length, as it was parallel with the length of the temple.

V. 19—15. These verses seem to mean, that the temple, with the buildings and spaces above described, occupied an area of a hundred cubits square.

V. 16. (Marg. Ref.)

From, &c. He measured from the ground up to the windows of the temple, which were placed above the side-chambers. The windows were covered, either because the side-chambers hindered their being seen in the inner court; or else they were covered on the inside with curtains drawn before them. (Loomth.)

V. 17. The windows were placed above the height of the door, at the east end of the temple; and were continued at measured distances, at the same height along the wall, on both sides to the wall of the inner sanctuary; in which there were no windows. (Loomth.) The windows on the out-buildings seem likewise to be included, which were placed at regular distances, and made in exact proportion.

V. 18—20. (Marg. Ref.) The Cherubim had four faces; but only two of these appeared in the carved work; the other two faces, that of an ox or eagle being supposed to be hid in the plain or surface of the walls. (Loomth.) The two faces, which were most conspicuous, seem to be intended.

Up to above, &c. That is, to the windows.

19 So that the face of a man was toward the palm-tree on the one side, and the face of a young lion toward the palm-tree on the other side: it was made through all the house round about.

20 From the ground unto above the door were cherubim and palm-trees made, and on the wall of the temple.

21 The posts of the temple were squared, and the face of the sanctuary; the appearance of the one as the appearance of the other.

22 The altar of wood was three cubits high, and the length thereof two cubits; and the corners thereof, and the length thereof, and the walls thereof, were of wood: and he said unto me, 'This is the table that is before the Lohn.

23 And the temple and the sanctuary had two doors.

24 And the doors had two leaves a piece, two turning leaves; two leaves for the one door, and two leaves for the other door.

25 And there were made on them, on the doors of the temple, cherubim and palm-trees, like as were made upon the

V. 21. 'The linteles, both of the temple and the inner sanctuary, were not arched, but square; with a flat beam laid on the top of the side-posts.' (Loomth.)

V. 22. 'The altar of wood,' must signify that on which incense was burned. The dimensions are here much larger than those mentioned in Exodus; but that made by Solomon is supposed to have been larger than that made by Moses. Both of these, however, were covered with gold: and it is very remarkable, that in this temple described by Ezekiel, there is not the least mention made of gold or silver; though there was such a profusion of these metals, both in the tabernacle made by Moses, and in Solomon's temple. (Marg. Ref.) Does not this imply, that a glory of a more spiritual nature was intended under these emblems? Thus the glory of the second temple was greater than that of the first, because honoured by the personal presence of Emmanuel.

This, &c. Some suppose, that the altar of incense is here called a table, because of the incense laid upon it, and presented to God: and others that the table of shew-bread was pointed out to the prophet, when his Instructor said, 'This is the table,' &c. May not an intuition be here given, that under the New Testament, a table would be substituted for the altars of the Old Testament, in that ordinance, by which we are admitted to the nearest communion with our God and Father?

V. 23, 24. 'The two doors being exceedingly large, each of them had two leaves, that they might be more easily opened.' (Loomth.) walls; and there were thick planks upon the face of the porch without.
26 And there were narrow windows and palm-trees on the one side and on the other side, on the sides of the porch, and upon the side-chambers of the house, and thick planks.

CHAP. XLII.

The chambers within the wall of the court,
1—14. The dimensions of the ground, on which all these buildings stood, 15
—20.

27 Then he brought me forth into the outer court, the way toward the north; and he brought me into the chamber that was over against the separate place, and which was before the building toward the north.

V. 26. 'There was a wainscot-work of boards, fastened to the end of the great beams, which came out beyond the wall of the porch. These were hid so as to make a frieze-work over the entrance into the eastern porch. The figures of palm-trees were carved on that wainscot.' (Lowth)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

When we carefully improve our instructions concerning the introductory parts of religion, we shall be led forward by our great Teacher into the interior parts of divine truth; that we may go forward in knowledge, wisdom, and experience, till we arrive in the most holy place above.
The spiritual building, which the Lord is erecting, will prove both eminent and durable: our standing in the grace of God will be firmer, and our views and hearts more enlarged, in proportion as we mount upward in our affections and conversation: and all the windings and in-ticacies of a Christian's path still lead him upward.
The peace and enlargement of the Church, and the believer's comfort and growth in grace, commonly make progress together. The cause of God gains ground gradually amidst all revolutions, under every dispensation: the boundaries of the Church were vastly extended by the first preaching of the Gospel to the Gentiles: but they will be much more enlarged, when the Jews shall be converted, and all nations shall do service to the great Redeemer.—
We have fellowship with angels in our employment and felicity, in proportion as we grow devoted to the service of our God and Saviour. Prudence, affections, and fortu-tude should unite with fervency, in all our services. The ordinances of God have hitherto been rendered more simple and spiritual: the table of the Lord has succeeded to altars and sacrifices; and the worship of God in spirit and truth, and the beauty of holiness, to the burdensome rites,

2 Before the length of an hundred cubits was the north door, and the breadth was fifty cubits.
3 Over against the twenty cubits which were for the inner court, and over against the pavement which was for the outer court, was a gallery against gallery in three stories.
4 And before the chambers was a walk of ten cubits breadth inward, a way of one cubit; and their doors toward the north.
5 Now the upper chambers were shorter:
for the galleries were higher than these, 1 than the lower, and than the middlemost of the building.
6 For they were in three stories, but had not pillars as the pillars of the courts: therefore the building was straitened more than the lowest and the middlemost from the ground.

and costly ornaments of the old dispensation. We should therefore endeavour to grow more simple in our dependence, and in our intentions and pursuits, and more spiritual in our affections and worship; for these times evidently mark the progress of the Church and every believer, towards the perfection of the heavenly world.

NOTES.

CHAP. XLII. V. 1. This is, by many commentators, supposed to describe some buildings, not before mentioned. Chamber, in the singular, is thought to be used for chambers, or rows of chambers in three stories. These seem to have been situated in the inner court, (13, 14;) perhaps just before the separate place, at the entrance from the north. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 2. Perhaps this means, that the north door was a hundred cubits from the entrance into the court; and the door, or gateway, or portico, was fifty cubits in length.
(Marg. Ref.)

V. 3. 'One side of these buildings looked upon the void space about the temple, (xli. 10;) and the other toward the pavement belonging to the outward court.'
(xl. 17.) (Lowth.) There are difficulties in these delicinations, which none seem hitherto to have cleared up.
A reverence is due to the word of God; some instructive meaning is doubtless conveyed, which will one day be manifested: in the mean while, I would give any hints or conjectures that I can. I am, however, far from con-dent, that I have, in several particulars, shown the real meaning of the vision. But a hint or a conjecture, may give some other person a clue, which may help to lead him through these intricacies.

V. 4. There seems to have been two rows of these chambers, and a walk between of ten cubits width; with an entrance into it from the chambers, of one cubit in width.
And the wall that was without over against the chambers, toward the outer court on the forepart of the chambers, the length thereof was fifty cubits.

For the length of the chambers that were in the outer court was fifty cubits: and, lo, before the temple were an hundred cubits.

And from under these chambers was the entry on the east side, as one goeth into them from the outer court.

The chambers were in the thickness of the wall of the court toward the east, over against the separate place, and over against the building.

And the way before them was like the appearance of the chambers which were toward the north, as long as they, and as broad as they: and all their goings out were both according to their fashions, and according to their doors.

And according to the doors of the chambers that were toward the south, was a door in the head of the way, even the way directly before the wall toward the east, as one entereth them.

Then he said unto me, The north chambers and the south chambers which are before the separate place, they be holy chambers, where the priests that approach unto the Lord shall eat the most holy things: there shall they lay the most holy things, and the meat-offering, and the sin-offering, and the trespass-offering; for the place is holy.

When the priests enter therein, then shall they not go out of the holy place into the outer court, but there they shall lay their garments wherein they minister; for they are holy; and shall put on other garments, and shall approach to those things which are for the people.

Now when he had made an end of measuring the inner house, he brought me forth toward the gate whose prospect is toward the east, and measured it round about.

He measured the east side with the measuring reed, five hundred reeds, with the measuring reed round about.

He measured the north side five hundred reeds, with the measuring reed round about.

He measured the south side five hundred reeds, with the measuring reed.

He turned about to the west side, and measured five hundred reeds, with the measuring reed.

He measured it by the four sides: it had a wall round about, five hundred reeds long, and five hundred broad, to make a separation between the sanctuary and the propIce place.

V. 10. Thickness, or rather breadth; or the ground which that wall enclosed.

Over against. These south chambers had the same situation, in respect of the temple, as the north chambers had.

Such a way led to these chambers, as led to the chambers on the north side, (4.) the proportions of both were the same; and the windows, doors, and passages, were exactly uniform with those on the north side.

V. 13. The chambers above described, (3—12.) were appropriated to the priests, that in them they might eat the most holy things which must not be carried out of the precincts of the temple; and also to lay up any part of them, which was reserved for future use. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 14. They shall not go into the court of the people in their priestly vestments; but shall lay them up in some of these chambers. The priestly garments were only to be worn in the time of their administration, (xlv. 19, Ez. xxviii. 43.) (Lowth.)

Shall approach. Or, Shall come into the court being longing to the people.

V. 15—20. The temple and its out-buildings are here.
The glory of God returns to the temple, 1—5. He promises to preserve the people from those sins which had deprived them of his presence, 6—9. He commands the prophet to show them the pattern of the house, &c. for their instruction, 10—12. The measures of the altar for burnt-offerings, 13—17. Rules for consecrating it, and the priests, 18—27.

AFTERWARD he brought me to the gate, even the gate that looketh toward the east: 2 And, behold, the glory of the God of Israel came from the way of the east: and his voice was like a noise of many waters: and the earth shined with his glory.

3 And it was according to the appearance of the vision which I saw, even according to the vision that I saw when I came to destroy the city: and the visions were like the vision that I saw by the river Chebar: and I fell upon my face.

4 And the glory of the Lord came into the house by the way of the gate, whose prospect is toward the east.

5 So the Spirit took me up, and brought me into the inner court; and, behold, the glory of the Lord filled the house.

stated to be built on a square at least of very near an English mile on each side, or four miles in circuit. This is far greater than either Solomon’s temple, or that after the captivity ever was: or indeed than the mountain of the temple was capable of containing, according to the description of the Jewish writers. This shows that the temple cannot be explained of any temple that hath hitherto been built, nor indeed of any literal temple; but figuratively and mysteriously. Some learned men indeed, on the authority of the Septuagint, would substitute cubits for reeds in all these verses; whereas the word reeds is repeated four times. It is evident, that the Greek translators had Solomon’s temple in view, and changed reeds for cubits, in order to adjust the dimensions of this temple to those of Solomon’s: and that later writers have proposed the alteration in the text for the same reason. But, if men allow themselves to substitute one word for another, in the sacred text, because the alteration would render that consistent with their systems, which otherwise would be incompatible with them, there is no knowing to what lengths they may proceed. Surely it is better to acknowledge our ignorance, on such abstruse subjects, than to support a favourite scheme of interpretation by giving countenance to so dangerous a measure!

The Sanctuary. ‘The whole compass of ground, which was within the precincts of the temple, elsewhere called the holy mountain,’ ‘In comparison of which, the holy city itself was esteemed as but profane ground.’ (Lownth.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The public worship of God in his courts, the secret devotion of the closet, and the social intercourse of Christians, should all be attended to in their places; in order to produce a conversation becoming the Gospel of Christ. When true religion shall diffuse its benign influence through the nations, and the churches of the saints shall be exceedingly multiplied, we may expect greater unity in judgment, worship, and practice, than there is in the present low and divided state of vital godliness. Whilst as spiritual priests we approach to the Lord, through our glorified High Priest, feed on the sacrifice that he hath offered, and appear before God clothed in his robe of spotless righteousness, we should be careful to exemplify the tendency of our principles in the holiness of our lives. We should in every thing support the distinction between sacred and profane: the minister must not leave the sanctuary to pollute himself by sin, to involve himself in secular concerns, or to renounce his ministry. The man that hath put his hand to the plough, and looketh back, is not fit for the kingdom of God: true believers continue to the end in the ways and service of the Lord; this is their privilege, their desire, and their practice. Sacred things must not be made subservient to secular interests; but these must be subordinated to the concerns of religion, and kept distinct from, or rendered subservient to, them. However the privileges and liberty of believers may be enlarged, or the boundaries of the church extended, a separation still subsists between the righteous and the wicked, which will be manifested, and made final and eternal, in the approaching day of righteous retribution.

NOTES.

CHAP. XLIII. V. 2—5. (Marg. Ref.) ‘The word, Behold, is an expression of joy and admiration: as if the prophet had said, Behold a wonderful and joyful sight! The glory of the God of Israel, which had so long departed from this place, is now returned to it, and the same way by which it departed.’ (Lownth.)—It is not recorded, that the Glory of God visibly took possession of the second temple; as it had done of the tabernacle, and afterwards of Solomon’s temple, when consecrated. It therefore seems necessary to look beyond the return of the Jews from Babylon, and the rebuilding of the temple, for the fulfilment of these predictions. Indeed the personal presence of Immanuel, at the second temple, rendered it more glorious than that built by Solomon; (Hag. ii. 9;) yet this part of the vision rather relates to the times, which are supposed to be predicted in the whole of this description; namely, those that shall succeed the...
6 And I heard him speaking unto me out of the house; and the man stood by me.

7 And he said unto me, Son of man, the place of my throne, and the place of the soles of my feet, where I dwell in the midst of the children of Israel for ever, and my holy name, shall the house of Israel no more defile, neither they, nor their kings, by their whoredoms, nor by the carcases of their kings in their high places.

8 In their setting of their thresholds by my thresholds, and their post by my post, and the wall between me and them, they have even defiled my holy name by their abominations that they have committed: wherefore I have consumed them in mine anger.

The conversion of the Jews, and their restoration to their own land. The prophet saw the glory of the God of Israel coming from the east. Christ is the Sun of righteousness, and as the sun riseth in the east, so did he arise in the eastern regions, and thence his light had been communicated to the western world. It is not intended that a dark cloud attended this visible glory, as under former dispensations; for the full light of the Gospel dispels the darkness which before rested on heavenly things; it was however attended by a voice like the noise of many waters: which may denote the efficacy of the Gospel in alarming and converting sinners, or the terrible denunciations of the Lord's vengeance on all opposers of his people, whom he will overthrow by the roaring and vehemence of some great inundation. "The earth also shined with his glory; for the light of the divine truth, displaying the glory of God in Jesus Christ, shall illuminate all the nations when those times shall arrive. The glory of God, which the prophet saw, resembled that which had before appeared to him: (Notes, i. iii. x. xi.) He then foretold the destruction of Jerusalem with such exactness, that it might be said he came to destroy it: but now he predicted the Lord's return to the city, and its prosperity; and he had a renewal of the same vision, which caused him to prostrate himself in humble adoration of the divine majesty. Thus the glory of God filled the temple: and the divine Spirit brought the prophet into the inner court to witness that transaction.

V. 6. While the prophet was adoring the manifested glory of God, he was addressed by a voice out of the temple, and charged with the subsequent message. It is observed that the man who had been his instructor stood by him. If this was the Messiah, as many think, then the prophet had a vision of the three persons in the sacred Trinity manifesting in different ways their presence with him. (Notes, Matt. iii. 16, 17, xvii. 1-8.)

9 Now let them put away their whoredoms, and the carcases of their kings far from me, and I will dwell in the midst of them for ever.

10 Thou son of man, shew the house to the house of Israel, that they may be ashamed of their iniquities: and let them measure the pattern.

11 And if they be ashamed of all that they have done, shew them the form of the house, and the fashion thereof, and the goings out thereof, and all the forms thereof, and the comings in thereof, and all the forms thereof, and all the ordinances thereof, and all the laws thereof; and write it in their sight, that they may keep the whole form thereof, and all the ordinances thereof, and do them.

sanctuary and his holy name by their idolatries. "The carcases of their kings," may signify, either the idols worshipped by the kings of Judah, which were as lifeless and as loathsome before God as putrid carcases; or the dead bodies of the children whom they sacrificed to their abominable idols, upon high places erected within sight of the temple. But, indeed, they had brought their images even into the sanctuary itself: so that the thresholds and pillars of the places erected for idolatry stood close by, or over against, the threshold, pillars, and posts of the temple: and there was but a wall between the glorious God and these his contemptible and detestable rivals. Thus they provoked him, so that he consumed them in his anger. But the Lord here engaged, that this shall no more be the case: the house of Israel shall no more defile his sanctuary and his holy name, as they had done: "Now shall they," says he, "put away their whoredom and the carcases of their kings far from me, and I will dwell in the midst of them for ever." This is the literal translation of the ninth verse. It is evidently a prediction, or a promise, and not an exhortation. And thus it exactly accords with the prophecies in many of the chapters preceding this vision. (Margins, Ref.) After the return of the Jews from Babylon, they relapsed no more in gross idolatry: but they soon were led to prefer their old traditions and superstitions to the commandments of God; and they rejected Christ, to cleave to their own pharisaical righteousness. Thus "they set their thresholds by God's threshold." Thus the same hath been more or less done by every society of Christians and their rulers: but the Lord will shortly purge his whole church from all abuses, idolatries, superstitions, false doctrines, and human inventions: and when this is done, he will come gloriously to dwell in his Church for ever; on earth to the end of the world, in heaven to all eternity.

V. 10, 11. "Show the house of Israel, &c. and they shall be ashamed," &c. The Jews must be shown the measure and pattern of the house, in order to render them ashamed of their idolatries and iniquities; and when in this respect he had a throne and a footstool at his temple: but the people and their kings had defiled his this had produced its effect, they would be more fully
B. C. 574.

CHAPTER XLIII.

12 This is the law of the house; upon the top of the mountain, the whole limit thereof round about shall be most holy. Behold, this is the law of the house.

13 ¶ And these are the measures of the altar after the cubits: 'The cubit is a cubit and an hand breadth; even the bottom shall be a cubit and the breadth a cubit; and the border thereof by the edge thereof round about shall be a span; and this shall be the higher place of the altar.

14 And from the bottom upon the ground even to the lower settle shall be two cubits; and the breadth one cubit; and from the lesser settle even to the greater settle shall be four cubits, and the breadth one cubit.

15 So shall the altar be four cubits; and from the altar and upwards shall be four horns.

16 And the altar shall be twelve cubits long, twelve broad, one square in the four squares thereof.

17 And the settle shall be fourteen cubits long and fourteen broad in the four squares thereof; and the border about it shall be half a cubit: and the bottom thereof shall be a cubit about: and his stairs shall look toward the east.

18 ¶ And he said unto me, Son of man, thus saith the Lord God: These are the ordinances of the altar, in the day not appear, that the higher was broader than the lower, and the extent of it must have been less: but it would be most conspicuous on account of its height, and so more noticed. Above this upper settle the altar was raised four cubits, and on the corners four horns were fixed. The upper part of the altar was twelve cubits square; but the lower settle, measuring at the outside, was fourteen; for the two settles deduced two cubits on each side from the dimensions at the bottom. God commanded in the law, that the priests should not ascend by stairs, or steps, to the altar: and the original here only means ascents, probably by a sloping gradual rising. This ascent is directed to be placed at the east side of the altar, that they who went up should look toward the west and upon the temple; and should turn their backs to the rising sun, in opposition to the rites of those idolaters who worshipped the rising sun. Dr. Lightfoot remarks, out of the Jewish writers, that within two cubits of the top, or place where the heath was, there was another narrowing of a cubit in breadth, where the priests stood to officiate. The altar is mentioned under different names: Harel is the mountain of God, as some Rabbins think, in opposition to the idolatrous altars built upon high places: Ariel is the lion of God, because itdevoured and consumed the sacrifices. (Lowth.) Perhaps the hearth is particularly meant. The description of this altar materially differs from the account given of that which was made when Solomon built the temple. That was indeed nearly the same height as this, but it was twenty cubits square; and nothing is said about any settles or in-benchings; but the reader is led to suppose that it was as wide at the top as at the bottom: and the altar erected after the captivity was set upon his bases, probably on the very foundation of the altar made by Solomon, and of the same dimensions. These considerations confirm the supposition, that the state of the church, or of Israel, when converted to Christ and restored to their own land, is predicted, under emblems taken from the ceremonies of the Mosaical dispensation. But, perhaps, the precise meaning of each particular will not be understood, till explained by the fulfillment.

V. 12. This is the law, or rule, concerning the house; that the whole area above described, (xlii. 16-20,) should be most holy, and no part of it used for common purposes.

V. 13-17. The bottom of the altar, which lay on the ground, seems to have extended a full cubit beyond the rest of it; and a border of a span breadth was placed around it, as some think, to keep the blood of the sacrifices from running upon the pavement, and to confine it to the channel by which it was carried off. This was the higher place, or ground, compared with the rest of the court, being raised one cubit above it. From this bottom to the lower settle was two cubits. The settles seem to have been ledges of a cubit in breadth, on each side of the altar, on which the priests might walk to perform what was needful to be done. From the lower settle to the higher was four cubits. The lower settle, or in-benching, is called the lesser, and the higher, the greater: yet it does not appear, that the higher was broader than the lower, and the extent of it must have been less: but it would be most conspicuous on account of its height, and so more noticed. Above this upper settle the altar was raised four cubits, and on the corners four horns were fixed. The upper part of the altar was twelve cubits square; but the lower settle, measuring at the outside, was fourteen; for the two settles deduced two cubits on each side from the dimensions at the bottom. God commanded in the law, that the priests should not ascend by stairs, or steps, to the altar: and the original here only means ascents, probably by a sloping gradual rising. This ascent is directed to be placed at the east side of the altar, that they who went up should look toward the west and upon the temple; and should turn their backs to the rising sun, in opposition to the rites of those idolaters who worshipped the rising sun. Dr. Lightfoot remarks, out of the Jewish writers, that within two cubits of the top, or place where the heath was, there was another narrowing of a cubit in breadth, where the priests stood to officiate. The altar is mentioned under different names: Harel is the mountain of God, as some Rabbins think, in opposition to the idolatrous altars built upon high places: Ariel is the lion of God, because it devoured and consumed the sacrifices. (Lowth.) Perhaps the hearth is particularly meant. The description of this altar materially differs from the account given of that which was made when Solomon built the temple. That was indeed nearly the same height as this, but it was twenty cubits square; and nothing is said about any settles or in-benchings; but the reader is led to suppose that it was as wide at the top as at the bottom: and the altar erected after the captivity was set upon his bases, probably on the very foundation of the altar made by Solomon, and of the same dimensions. These considerations confirm the supposition, that the state of the church, or of Israel, when converted to Christ and restored to their own land, is predicted, under emblems taken from the ceremonies of the Mosaical dispensation. But, perhaps, the precise meaning of each particular will not be understood, till explained by the fulfillment.
23 When thou hast made an end of cleansing it, thou shalt offer a young bullock without blemish, and a ram out of the flock without blemish.

24 And thou shalt offer them before the Lord, and the priests shall cast salt upon them, and they shall offer them up for a burnt-offering unto the Lord.

25 Seven days shalt thou prepare every day a goat for a sin-offering: they shall also prepare a young bullock, and a ram out of the flock without blemish.

26 Seven days shall they purge the altar and purify it; and they shall consecrate themselves.

27 And when these days are expired, it shall be, that upon the eighth day, and so forward, the priest shall make your burnt-offerings upon the altar, and your peace-offerings: and I will accept you, saith the Lord God.

V. 18–27. These rules for the dedication of the altar, and consecration of the priests, in some things agreed with, in others differed from, those prescribed by Moses. But the instruction seems to be the same as hath been deduced from those types and shadows of the ceremonial law, in the books of Exodus, Leviticus, and Numbers: and the same evangelical truths are here prophetically proposed, as were there exhibited in the way of positive injunction. It is remarkable that the prophet is addressed as if he were personally to superintend the service in the same manner that Moses did, when the tabernacle was set up, and when Aaron and his sons were consecrated. Yet he was not employed at the consecration of the altar or temple, after the captivity: but probably was dead before that time.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1–12.

All external institutions of religion derive their excellence and efficacy from the presence and manifested glory of God in them; and as this glory is displayed by Christ, our Sun of righteousness, we sinners may behold it with comfort. His voice indeed is very terrible to his enemies, and at first excites great commotion and consternation in the heart of his chosen people: but when they are taught by the Holy Spirit, they experience its power accompanied with peace and comfort to their souls. Every display of the divine glory should inspire our hearts with reverential awe; and the condescension and multiplied visits of our gracious God, should never cause us to forget our own ungodliness and vileness. He may for a time hide his face from his Church or any of his servants, to rebuke their sins and to humble them for their good; but in due time he will return: and as his glory irradiates the soul of him that beholds it, so it will ere long illuminate the whole earth.

It is of the infinite mercy of our God, that he reigns upon "the throne of grace" over his redeemed people, and makes his Church the place of the solace of his feet. But if we would have the assurance and comfort of this his condescending love, we must seek his sanctifying grace; that we may no more defile his holy name, or our souls that are his temple, by our sins; or his Church by immoralities, impurities, or superstitions. For by thus setting up their thresholds and posts in opposition to the Lord's, even kings have often substituted a carcass of worthless, if not idolatrous, observances, in the place of vital and evangelical godliness. And for these things, God hath abjured the services of his professed people, and consumed them in his anger, from age to age. As every particular will be regulated and reformed in that happy period which approaches, according to the sacred scriptures: so we should now put away whatever hath displeased God in the conduct of his people in other ages, that we may personally anticipate those times, and do what we can towards preparing for them. The goodness of God towards us should lead us to repentance; and the discovery of the rule and pattern for our conduct will show us the necessity of it, and direct us in it; "for by the law is the knowledge of sin." But when Christ crucified, and the things "that are freely given us of God" through him, are shown to the soul by the Holy Spirit, they peculiarly fill us with shame for all our iniquities. This penitent frame of mind prepares us for fuller discoveries of the mysteries of redeeming love, and for a more distinct understanding of the ordinances and commandments of God. The whole of the scriptures are written, and should be opened and applied, that men may perceive their sins and repent of them, and their duties and do them: that all, which belongs to the Church of God, may be most holy, according to the law of the house.
CHAP. XLIV.

The east gate assigned to the prince alone, 1—3. The people reproved for admitting strangers to pollute the sanctuary, 4—9. Idolatrous priests to be excluded from their office, 10—14. The sons of Zadok, who had adhered to the worship of God accepted in it, 15, 16. Ordinances for the priests, 17—31.

Then he brought me back the way of the gate of the outward sanctuary, which looked toward the east; and it was shut.

2 Then said the Lord unto me; This gate shall be shut; it shall not be opened, and no man shall enter in by it: because the Lord God of Israel hath entered in by it, therefore it shall be shut.

3 It is for the prince; the prince, he shall sit in it to eat bread before the Lord; he shall enter by the way of the porch of that gate, and shall go out by the way of the same.

4 ¶ Then brought he me into the way of the north gate before the house: and I looked, and behold, the glory of the Lord filled the house of the Lord: and I fell upon my face.

5 And the Lord said unto me, Son of man, mark well, and behold with thine eyes, and hear with thine ears all that I say unto thee concerning all the ordinances of the house of the Lord, and of all the laws thereof; and mark well the entering in of this house, with every going forth of the sanctuary.

6 And thou shalt say to the rebellious, even to the house of Israel, Thus saith the Lord God, O ye house of Israel, let it suffice you of all your abominations.

V. 13—27.

We wretchen sinners can no more be holy, without the sanctification of the Spirit, than we can be righteous, or have access to God, except through Christ, our Altar, Priest, and Oblation. We now need offer no more atoning sacrifices, for by one offering he hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified: but the sprinkling of his blood is incessantly requisite to us, in all our approaches to God the Father. Even his royal and chosen priesthood, who minister unto him, could not be permitted to present their spiritual sacrifices, were they not cleansed from guilt through his precious blood; all their powers and faculties and senses need the same cleansing, before they can serve God acceptably in body and soul: their best services contract so much pollution from remaining sinfulness, that they can only be accepted, as sprinkled with that blood which cleanseth from all sin. But when they come in the appointed way to the mercy-seat, their Advocate pleads for them within the sanctuary above, and his blood is the propitiation for their sins: they themselves become living sacrifices, holy and acceptable to God through him; and being daily washed in his blood and seasoned with the salt of his purifying grace, they glorify him in body and spirit, which are his. All our approaches to God should be with recollection and deliberation: our hearts should be previously prepared for attending on solemn ordinances, especially for devoting ourselves to the Lord at his tabernacle; ministers should seriously prepare for entering upon, and continually executing, their important work: and we should all daily be preparing to meet our God in death and judgment; that we may then find his gracious acceptance, and render him our eternal Hallelujahs.

NOTES.

CHAP. XLIV. V. 1—3. He brought me to the gate of the outer sanctuary, which looked eastward; and that gate which I had seen formerly open, (as that by which the glory of God visibly entered into the temple,) was now shut. Then said the Lord unto me, this gate shall continue shut, and no ordinary person shall ever enter by it; because the Lord God of Israel hath honoured and hallowed it, by entering in thereby. (Bp. Hall.) Some suppose, that by the prince the high priest is meant; and others the civil governor, as Zerubbabel, or Nehemiah. But as no such rules were laid down in the Mosaic law, or prescribed concerning Solomon's temple: so there appear no traces of their having been observed under the second temple. The Prince, in many of the preceding prophecies, evidently means Christ. (Marg. Ref.:) And whatever be prophetically intended, the injunction may remind us, that none can enter heaven, the true sanctuary, as Christ did; namely, by virtue of his own excellency, and his personal holiness, righteousness, and strength. He who is the Brightness of Jehovah's glory entered this way: but it is now shut to the whole human race; and we all must enter as sinners, by faith in his blood, and by the communication of his grace. The prince, having entered by the portico of this gate, would there sit to eat bread before the Lord: and then return to his palace by the same way, (xlvii. 8, 9,) this may signify the Saviour's meeting his people, and communing with them in his ordinances, and especially at his table; and coming to them and returning to his heavenly palace, so to speak, by a way of his own; as the kings of the house of David did from their palace to the temple and back again. (Marg. Ref.) Jehovah, by an audible voice out of the sanctuary, is represented as thus speaking to the prophet.

V. 4. 'The east-gate being shut, there was no door into the house on the north side; but I could see the brightness of the divine glory shining through the windows.' (Lowe.)
7 In that ye have brought into my sanctuary strangers uncircumcised in heart, and uncircumcised in flesh, to be in my sanctuary, to pollute it, even my house, when ye offer my bread, the fat and the blood, and they have broken my covenant, because of all your abominations.

8 And ye have not kept the charge of mine holy things: but ye have set keepers of my charge in my sanctuary for yourselves.

9 Thus saith the Lord God: No stranger, uncircumcised in heart, nor uncircumcised in flesh, shall enter into my sanctuary, of any stranger that is among the children of Israel.

10 And the Levites that are gone away far from me, when Israel went astray, which went astray away from me after their idols; they shall even bear their iniquity.

11 Yet ye shall be ministers in my sanctuary, having charge of the gates of the house, and ministering to the house: they shall slay the burnt-offering and the sacrifice for the people.

12 Because ye ministered unto them before their idols, and caused the house of Israel to fall into iniquity; therefore have I lifted up mine hand against them, saith the Lord God, and they shall bear their iniquity.

13 And they shall not come near unto me, to do the office of a priest unto me, nor to come near to any of my holy things, in the most holy place: but they shall bear their shame, and their abominations which they have committed.

14 But I will make them keepers of the charge of the house for all the service thereof, and for all that shall be done therein.

15 But the priests the Levites, the sons of Zadok, that kept the charge of my sanctuary, when the children of Israel went astray from me, as they shall come near to me to minister unto me, and they shall stand before me to offer unto me the fat and the blood, saith the Lord God:

16 They shall enter into my sanctuary, and they shall come near to my table, to minister unto me, and they shall keep my charge.

17 ¶ And it shall come to pass, that when they enter in at the gates of the inner court, they shall be clothed with linen garments; and no wool shall come upon them, whilst they minister in the gates of the inner court, and within.

18 They shall have linen bonnets upon their heads, and shall have linen breeches upon their loins: they shall not gird themselves with any thing that causeth sweat.

19 And when they go forth into the outer court, even into the outer court to the people, they shall put off their garments wherein they ministered, and lay them in the holy chambers, and they shall put on other garments; and they shall sanctify the people with their garments.

20 Neither shall they shave their heads, nor suffer their locks to grow long; they shall only pull their heads.

21 Neither shall any priest drink wine, when they enter into the inner court.

22 Neither shall they take for their wives a widow, nor her that is put away: but they shall take maidens of the seed of the house of Israel, or a widow that had a priest before.

23 And they shall teach the people the difference between the holy and profane, and cause them to discern between the unclean and the clean.

24 And in controversy they shall stand in judgment; and they shall judge according to my judgments: and they shall keep my laws and my statutes in all their assemblies; and they shall hallow my sabbaths.

V. 15, 16. Zadok was made high priest by Solomon, when Abiathar was degraded for rebellion, according to the sentence denounced against the family of Eli. (Marg. Ref.) Zadok signifies righteous: and it is probable that his posterity in general supported the worship of Jehovah; when the other priests went astray from him; and therefore the priesthood was to be established among them; and they would be honoured by exclusively performing those services in which the priests had the nearest access to God. They typified faithful, holy, and conscientious ministers of Christ: and it is here predicted under this allusion, that such ministers shall greatly abound, and be encouraged in this happy period. It is observable, that the table in the sanctuary is mentioned rather than the altar of incense; perhaps intimating the change in the external institutions of divine worship, that would take place before the accomplishment of the prophecy. It is not easy to determine, whether any external regulations, in respect of divine ordinances, answering to these predictions, will be made among the converted Jews, when reinstated in their own land.

V. 17-20. The garments of the priests are here referred to; though with some variations. (Marg. Ref.)—The prescribed attire seems to denote, that every thing should be so devised, as to render Christians and ministers most unencumbered, and prepared for their work; and that they should avoid all appearance of evil, and whatever may prove offensive and dishonorable in their deportment and mismanagement. The putting off of their garments, that they might not sanctify the people with them, may refer to the superstitions in use among papists and others, which suppose some sanctifying efficacy inherent in the garments or relics of holy men. They shall not tie them to an expectation of sanctity to be derived from them. (Bp. Hall.) All these superstitions will be at length abolished; and yet a decent distinction will be preserved between things sacred and common. (Note, xlii. 14.) The way in which the priests were directed to wear their hair, in the medium between opposite extremes, might denote the attention that should be paid to gravity and decorum in their external appearance, as well as the simplicity and spirituality of their hearts.

Within. (17.) That is, in the temple itself.

V. 21. (Note, &c. Lev. x. 8—11.)

V. 22. According to the law, the high priest was not allowed to marry either a widow, or a divorced person: but here, all the priests are forbidden to marry any widow, except the widow of a priest. (Notes, Lev. xxi. 7, 13—15.) This regulation plainly intimates the superior sanctity of the times referred to. There is no reason, however, to induce us to a literal interpretation of this regulation, as if binding on Christian ministers, any more than for such an interpretation of the other rules of his vision: it only implies, that in the predicted period they would avoid all scandalous or suspicious connexions, and every thing that could lessen their characters amongst the people.

—It is observable, that marriage is always considered as consistent with the most sacred characters, and in the most holy persons, under every dispensation of the Church, and even in its highest state of earthly purity. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 23, 24. The priests and Levites under the Mosaic dispensation frequently acted as Magistrates. In allusion to which, it is perhaps here intimated, that controversies will, in the times predicted, be generally decided by arbitration; by reference to ministers and according to the law of God; and not by litigations before human tribunals, according to the laws of man. (6.)—The particular mention of hallowing the sabbath, in this emblematical prophecy of a future prosperous state of religion, implies the importance, as well as the perpetual obligation, of that sacred institution: when true piety most prevails, it will be most honoured by ministers and people.
And they shall come at no dead person to defile themselves: but for father, or for mother, or for son, or for daughter, for brother, or for sister that hath had no husband, they may defile themselves.

And after he is cleansed, they shall reckon unto him seven days.

And in the day that he goeth into the sanctuary, unto the inner court, to minister in the sanctuary, he shall offer his sin-offering, saith the Lord God.

And it shall be unto them for an inheritance: I am their inheritance, and ye shall give them no possession in Israel: I am their possession.

V. 25—27. Whosoever touched a dead body became unclean: this uncleanness continued seven days; and the priest went to reckon to him. (A priest.) seven days more. (Notes, Lev. xxvi. 6. Num. xix. 11—22.) The superiority of ministers in the church, in the approaching happy period, over their natural affections, is here denoted, with reference to the law of Moses: they are supposed to mourn for their near relations; but they are represented as moderating their grief, and not long permitting it to interrupt them in their important work. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 28—30. Theportion both of the land and of its increase, which were presented as a holy oblation to God, were by him given to the priests for their maintenance. Thus they would have no inheritance distinct from the portion which God reserved for himself. They would be maintained, so to speak, at his table; and would forfeit their support, if his worship should be forsaken. What particular regulations, concerning the provision for ministers in the predicted times, are thus foretold, the event must determine: certainly important alterations are needful in that respect.

V. 31. This was forbidden to all Israelites by the law; here only to the priests: perhaps because all Christians are spiritual priests; or as intimating a repeal, or alteration, of the ancient ceremonial institutions. In general it may intimate, that they would keep at a distance from all polluting, inordinate, or inexpedient indulgence of their appetites.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—16.

No man should presume, even in appearance, to arrogate to himself that glory which belongs to God alone. It is also very proper that Christ our Prince should in all things have the pre-eminence: but though the way by which he hath entered into heaven is for ever shut against the whole fallen race of Adam, yet he hath opened for us a "new and living way," by which we may find access and acceptance, through faith in his blood. He also graciously comes among his assembled people, to commune with them, before they go to be with him in heaven. Then the glory of the Lord filleth his sanctuary, and his people adore him with humble gratitude: and we should carefully meditate on these goings of our God and King, and hearken to all that he says to us, concerning the ordinances and laws of his house; and we must well consider how often the ministers in his courts, and all the goings out of them. Thus we shall be able to see how rebelliously even professed Christians have prostituted his sacraments and the sacred ministry, by throwing them open to strangers, enemies, and evidently unregenerate persons; to the disgrace of the Gospel, the grief of true believers, and the encouragement of wicked men. Alas! they to whom these charges have been committed, have not kept them: but have profaned them for secular interest or carnal affection; to feed hungry relatives, or to enrich or humour ungodly connexions. Or men have heaped to themselves flattering teachers after their own lusts; or they have made the seals of God's covenant the passport to preferment! These are gross violations of the covenant, and great abominations of which it should suffice all the parties concerned. They have always been the ruin of vital godliness, in proportion as they have prevailed: and, alas! they prevail almost universally. But whatever men may conbine and determine, the Lord will certainly exclude all such as are incircumcised in heart; and though they may enter into the outward sanctuary, they shall find no admission into heaven. Those professed ministers of religion who forsake God, and lead the people astray into idolatry, superstition, or wickedness, shall even bear their iniquity: and when they who sustain this sacred character fall into scandalous sins, they should not be hasty in returning to their public work: for even if they repent, and again serve God and enjoy communion with him, and be in some respects employed by him; yet they may not be able to recover their influence, or to be useful as before: and if they be degraded, and bear their shame, for an example to others, they should not complain, but be thankful for acceptance in the meanest place or most laborious services. But such as indeed keep the charge of the sanctuary, and closely adhere to the Lord when others go astray from him, and boldly protest against prevailing crimes, shall be peculiarly honoured of God, as instruments of glorifying him, and of doing good to his people, by their prayers, examples, and mis-
The holy oblation of the land, for the sanctuary, and the priests and Levites, 1—6. The portions of the Prince and the people, 7, 8. Ordinances of justice to be observed by them, 9—12. Oblations to be presented in the beginning of the year, at the passover, and in the feast of tabernacles, 13—25.

Moreover, when ye shall divide by lot the land for inheritance, ye shall offer an oblation unto the Lord; an holy portion of the land: the length shall be the length of five and twenty thousand reeds, and the breadth shall be ten thousand. This shall be holy in all the borders thereof round about.

Of this there shall be for the sanctuary five hundred in length, with five hundred in breadth, square round about; and fifty cubits round about for the suburbs thereof.

And of this measure shall thou measure the length of five and twenty thousand, and the breadth of ten thousand; and in it shall be the sanctuary and the most holy place.

The holy portion of the land shall be for the priests the ministers of the sanctuary, which shall come near to minister unto the Lord: and it shall be a place for their houses, and an holy place for the sanctuary.

And the five and twenty thousand of length, and the ten thousand of breadth, shall also the Levites, the ministers of the house, have for themselves, a possession for twenty chambers.

And he shall appoint the possession of the city five thousand broad and five and twenty thousand long, over against the oblation of the holy portion: it shall be for the whole house of Israel.

And a portion shall be for the prince on the one side, and on the other side of the possession of the city before the oblation of the holy portion, and before the possession of the city, from the west side westward, and from the east side eastward: and the length shall be over against one of the portions, from the west border unto the east border.

In the land shall be his possession in Israel: and my princes shall no more oppress my people; and the rest of the land shall they give to the house of Israel according to their tribes.

All who are employed in the important work of the ministry, should be of harmless and blameless conversation; sound in the faith, full of good works; of exemplary temperance, sobriety, and gravity; walking humbly before God and circumspectly in the sight of men; not arrogating honour to themselves, or leading the people into a superstitious veneration of them; yet acting honourably, and maintaining a sober peculiarity in their whole conduct. They should perform the most common actions of life, in a pious and sanctified manner; their apparel, and the whole of their style of living, should be plain, simple, frugal, and such as may manifest their indifference about worldly things: they should be careful in forming connexions, and in the choice of wives, and prudent in the management of their families; showing that they are governed by reason, conscience, and the fear of God, not by passion and humour, in all these matters. They should teach the people, both by word and example, the difference between the holy and profane, the clean and the unclean: they should study to be peace-makers, and should regulate their judgment and decisions in all cases by the commandments of God; and not according to their own humours, interests, or partialities: they should observe, and teach others to observe, the statutes of the Lord, in all the ordinances of his house and in hallowing his sabbaths: they should govern their passions and moderate their sorrows, by stricter rules than they expect others to do; not suffering their work to be interrupted, or improperly performed, whenever they can help it. They should delight in every part of their sacred services; and yet do all in a humble reliance on Christ our Sin-offering, and his precious blood and prevailing intercession: and they should be superior to all avarice and sensuality. The Lord himself is the Portion of such ministers: and they need not fear a temporal subsistence, though they have no possession in Israel. Their God will incline his servants to perform their bounden duty, by supplying their wants: and thus he will cause his blessing to rest on the houses of their benefactors, in answer to their prayers for them. So that they will not generally be obliged to involve themselves in worldly cares and employments for a maintenance: much less will they be driven to do any thing sinful or scandalous through urgent necessity: but trusting in God and doing his will, they shall be provided for as is good for them; and having food and raiment, they will learn to be therewith content. The Lord, increase the number of such faithful and exemplary ministers; and enlarge and prosper the spiritual priesthood, all over the whole earth!

NOTES.

CHAP. XLV. V. 1—8. The division of the land, appointed in these verses and in the forty-eighth chapter, 9 ¶ Thus saith the Lord God; * Let it suffice you, O princes of Israel: rise up, and move violence and spoil, and execute judgment and justice, take away your exactions from my people, saith the Lord God.

10 Ye shall have * just balances, and a just ephah, and a just bath.

11 The ephah and the bath shall be of the tenth part of an ephah of an homer of barley, and the ephah the tenth part of an homer: the measure thereof shall be after the homer.

12 And the shekel shall be twenty gerahs: twenty shekels, fire and twenty shekels, fifteen shekels, shall be your maneh.

13 ¶ This is the oblation that ye shall offer: the sixth part of an ephah of an homer of wheat, and ye shall give the sixth part of an ephah of an homer of barley.

14 Concerning the ordinance of oil, the bath of oil, ye shall offer the tenth part of a bath out of the cor, * which is an homer of ten baths; for ten baths are an homer:

15 And one lamb out of the flock, out of two hundred, * out of the fat pastures of Israel; for a meat-offering, and for a burnt-offering, and for a peace-offerings, to make reconciliation for them, saith the Lord God.
CHAPTER XLV.

16 All the people of the land shall give this oblation for the prince in Israel.

17 And it shall be the prince's part to give burnt-offerings, and meat-offerings, and drink-offerings, in the feasts, and in the new moons, and in the sabbaths, in all solemnities of the house of Israel: he shall prepare the sin-offering, and the meat-offering, and the burnt-offering, and the peace-offerings, to make reconciliation for the house of Israel.

18 Thus saith the Lord God; In the first month, in the first day of the month, thou shalt take a young bullock without blemish, and cleanse the sanctuary:

19 And the priest shall take of the blood of the sin-offering, and put it upon the posts of the house, and upon the four corners of the settle of the altar, and upon the posts of the gate of the inner court.

20 And so thou shalt do the seventh day of the month for every one that ereth, and for him that is simple: so shall ye reconcile the house.

21 In the first month, in the fourteenth day of the month, ye shall have the passover, a feast of seven days; unleavened bread shall be eaten.

22 And upon that day shall the prince prepare for himself, and for all the people of the land, a bullock for a sin-offering.

23 And seven days of the feast he shall prepare a burnt-offering to the Lord, seven bullocks and seven rams without blemish, daily the seven days; and a kid of the goats daily for a sin-offering.

24 And he shall prepare a meat-offering of an ephah for a bullock, and an ephah for a ram, and an hin of oil for an ephah.

25 In the seventh month, in the fifteenth day of the month, he shall do the like in the feast of the seven days, according to the sin-offering, according to the burnt-offering, and according to the meat-offering, and according to the oil.

V. 16. The prince shall join with the people in making these oblations; (Marg.) whereas those that follow in the next verse, are to be at the sole expense of the prince. (Lowth.)

V. 17. If Christ be meant by the prince, as some think, this signifies, that he alone is the atoning sacrifice for the sins of his people: and whatever obligations they present, or whatever services they acceptably perform, must be offered in his name. The feasts here specified were typical of Christ and his salvation, and represented the sacred seasons and instituted ordinances in the Church, by which they are commemorated, and the blessings of them applied to the soul; especially the preaching of the Gospel, the Lord's day, and the Lord's supper. The difference between these regulations and the ceremonial law, may intimate a change in the external constitution of the Church.

V. 18-25. The words are directed to the prince, he was to provide the sacrifices; and the priest was to offer them. (Lowth.) The marginal references show in what respect these regulations agreed with, and in what they varied from, those of the Mosaic law.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We should present to the Lord an oblation of the first and best of all our possessions, that we may honour him with our substance, and obtain his blessing on all our labours and comforts. It is the duty of Christians, according to their ability, to provide for the decent and comfortable subsistence of ministers, that they may attend to their work without distraction. But it becomes ministers to be content even with a scanty provision, and to suffer all things rather than hinder the Gospel of Christ. The interests of religion require that they should generally reside near their work, and as retired as may be from the vain hurry of the world: that they may give themselves to the word of God and prayer; and that every thing pertaining to them may savour of holiness and piety. Subjects also should willingly contribute what is requisite to the honourable support of their governors, and the charges of government: and princes, especially: the princes of Israel, ought to imitate the equity and lenity of Christ our King: they should use their authority for the good of the people, and lay no needless or oppressive burdens on them; that they may comfortably enjoy their possessions. If any have deviated, (as, alas! too many do,) from these salutary rules; they must be warned to proceed no further, but to let the past iniquity suffice; to remove all violence and spoil, and to terminate all exactions. These are the duties of men in every age: and the happy time is coming, when all ranks in every part of the earth will attend to them. Then there will be no more fraud, oppression, misery, war, or devastation; but universal righteousness, peace, and prosperity. It is an important part of the will of God, that men should deal with exact honesty in all the transactions of life: no zeal, orthodoxy, or diligence in religion can compensate for, (though they may for a time cloak) the want of truth and justice in our moral conduct: the Lord requires a just weight, and a true balance, and exactitude in every one of our dealings. All should use their influence, and improve their talents, in promoting the cause of godliness. The sabbaths and ordinances of God and THUS saith the Lord God; The gate of the inner court that looketh toward the east shall be shut the six working days; but on the sabbath it shall be opened, and in the day of the new-moon it shall be opened.

2 And the prince shall enter by the way of the porch of that gate without, and shall stand by the post of the gate, and the priest shall prepare his burnt-offering, and his peace-offerings, and he shall worship at the threshold of the gate: then he shall go forth; but the gate shall not be shut until the evening.

the commemoration of his benefits should be our chief delight and satisfaction: and we should aim to reduce our various duties to some regular method, that they may not interfere with each other; and to persist in it till it becomes habitual. And, though nothing we do can atone for sin, yet our zealour services testify our acceptance of the sacrifice of Christ, our Prince and High Priest, which, according to his part, he hath prepared for us, and to which we must have continual respect in all our approaches to God. For our very best duties are polluted with sin, and we pollute the ordinances in which we join, and all we are connected with, till they are cleansed in the fountain of his blood: and our errors, ignorance, and simplicity, as well as our wilful sins, need the same cleansing. But his oblation of himself once offered is of infinite sufficiency, and answers these and all other purposes of mercy to the whole multitude of believers, in every age and nation; and it would equally suffice for the whole human species, were they made willing to come to God by him, "who by one offering hath perfected for ever them that are sanctified." As therefore Christ our Passover is sacrificed for us; let us keep the feast of faith and communion with him, not with the old leaven of malice and wickedness, but with the unleavened bread of sincerity and truth: let us begin our years, our months, our weeks, and days, with self-examination, repentance, faith, prayer, and devotedness to God; and spend them in the same manner. Let us live like strangers and pilgrims on earth, rejoicing in Christ, as we pass through this desert to heaven; and then we shall soon arrive in those mansions above, "where is fulness of joy, and pleasures at God's right hand for evermore."

NOTES.

CHAP. XLVI. V. 1—3. The prophet had before observed, that "the way of the gate of the outward sanctuary, which looketh toward the east, was shut;" and had been informed, that it must not be opened, but for the prince. (Note, xlv. 1—3.) But "the gate of the inner court" on the east is here spoken of. This was to be shut on other days, but to be opened on the sabbaths and new moons, until the evening. According to this, it seems, that none were at any time to come into the sanctuary by the east-gate of the outward court, except the prince: and that the priests and Levites must go into the inner court by the north or south gates, except on the sabbaths and new moons: when, entering the outward court by the north or south gates, perhaps they might pass into the inner court by the east-gate: or they must open it, that the prince might enter, and that the people might worship before it, with the altar and sacrifices full in view. — "The prince only shall enter by the way of that gate; and when he is to enter, shall stand at the post of that gate, until the priests have prepared his burnt-offering and peace-offering; and when they have made this safe way for him, he shall come in, having first bowed down, and worshipped at the threshold of the gate. Likewise the people shall worship at the door of this gate, but they shall not presume to enter by it." (Bp. Hall.) This seems to denote the constant, reverential, and exemplary attendance of kings on the pure evangelical ordinances of religion, in the approaching flourishing days of the Church. But some interpret it of Christ's meeting his assembled people on their solemn festivals, especially on his own day, to apply them the benefits of his atonement and prevailing mediation. The gate on the sabbaths and new moons was not to be shut till evening; which implied, that those days should be wholly employed in religious exercises: whereas on other days men might attend as they had leisure, and then return to their ordinary employments. (12.)

V. 4—7. (Marg. Ref.) "This was a new ordinance; the number of the beasts, and the proportions of the 8 And when the prince shall enter, he shall go in by the way of the porch of that gate, and he shall go forth by the way thereof.

9 But when the people of the land shall come before the Lord in the solemn feasts, he that entereth in by the way of the north-gate to worship, shall go out by the way of the south-gate; and he that entereth by the way of the south-gate, shall go forth by the way of the north-gate; he shall not return by the way of the gate whereby he came in, but shall go forth over against it.

10 And the prince in the midst of them, when they go in, shall go in; and when they go forth, shall go forth.

11 And in the feasts and in the solemnities, the meat-offering shall be an ephah to a bullock, and an ephah to a ram, and to the lambs as he is able to give, and an hin of oil to an ephah.

12 Now when the prince shall prepare a voluntary burnt-offering, or peace-offerings voluntarily unto the Lord, one shall then open him the gate that looketh toward the east, and he shall prepare his burnt-offering and his peace-offerings, as he did on the sabbath day: then he shall go forth; and after his going forth one shall shut the gate.

13 Thou shalt daily prepare a burnt-offering unto the Lord of a lamb * of the first year without blemish: thou shalt prepare it every morning.

14 And thou shalt prepare a meat-offering for it every morning, the sixth part of an ephah, and the third part of an hin of oil, to temper with the fine flour; a meat-offering continually, by a perpetual ordinance unto the Lord.

15 Thus shall they prepare the lamb, and the oil, and the meat-offering, every morning for a continual burnt-offering.

16 ¶ Thus saith the Lord God; If the prince give a gift unto any of his sons, the inheritance thereof shall be his sons' ; it shall be their possession by inheritance.

17 But if he give a gift of his inheritance to one of his servants, then it shall be his to the year of liberty; after it shall return to the prince: but his inheritance shall be his sons' for them.

18 Moreover the prince shall not take of the people's inheritance by oppression, to thrust them out of their possession; but he shall give his sons an inheritance out of his own possession; that my people be not scattered every man from his possession.

1 meat and drink-offerings, are different from those prescribed by the law. (Lowth.)

2 Able, &c. According to the gift of his hand; that is, what he shall think sufficient.

8. 9. None but the prince could enter the sanctuary from the east, and there was no entrance from the west; so that all the people must enter from the north, or from the south. But they who entered from the north were to go out by the south; and they that entered by the south, to go out by the north. This may signify, that every thing should be regulated, in respect of divine worship, in that way, which may most effectually prevent disorder and interruption: but is generally supposed to intimate that men should go forward, and make progress in religion, and go through with it; and not be superficial, hypocritical, or apostate. There being no thoroughfare out of the temple westward, if the people had entered by the east-gate, they must have returned back the same way they came in; which would have been turning their backs upon God and his residence. (Lowth.) But as the prince was to return by the east-gate, this reason is scarcely conclusive.

10. Though the prince was to enter and return by a way of his own; yet he might enter the sanctuary at the same time, and continue as long there as the people; and thus testify his fellowship with them in the worship of God.

12. When the service is performed, he shall go back the same way (8); and the porter shall shut the gate after him; because it may not stand open on ordinary days. (Lowth.)

13—15. (Marg. Ref.) It is observable, that nothing is here said about the evening-sacrifice; or the additional lamb, morning and evening on the sabbath-days. Many suppose the evening-sacrifice to be included: but as the morning is repeated in a remarkable manner, and the evening is not once mentioned, it seems rather to be an intimation of that change in the external religion, which the coming of Christ would introduce.

16—18. This may signify that princes in those days would not waste their revenues, in enriching favourites and dependents: the prince might settle a perpetual inheritance on his son; but the grant made to any servant would expire at the year of jubilee. Some think that this signifies, that Christ our Prince gives his children, or true believers, their inheritance unalienably: but they whom he only endues with gifts and talents, and employs in some part of his service, whilst they remain ungovernable, will be deprived of all, when true Christians receive the full possession of their inheritance. And in this case,
19 ¶ After he brought me through the entry, which was at the side of the gate, into the holy chambers of the priests, which looked toward the north: and, behold, there was a place on the two sides westward.

20 Then said he unto me, This is the place where the priests shall boil the trespass-offering and the sin-offering, where they shall bake the meat-offering; that they bear them not out into the outer court, to sanctify the people.

21 Then he brought me forth into the outer court, and caused me to pass by the four corners of the court; and, behold, the eighteenth verse may be considered as descriptive of the character and government of our Prince of Peace.

(Marg. Ref.)

V. 19-24. The flesh of the sacrifices, which were to be eaten, was to be boiled, except the flesh of the passover. There was a place in the inner court for boiling the trespass and sin-offerings, (19, 20) and boiling places, for the peace-offerings, which perhaps were dressed by the Levites; whereas the former were boiled by the priests in the court belonging to them. The Hebrew word Keturah, translated joined, is rendered in the margin, made with chimney, which well agrees with the description. (Lownh.) About the walls of these little courts, which were as kitchens, were little chambers for the cooks. The most holy things, of which none but the priests might eat, were to be prepared in the inner court, the peace-offerings, of which the people partook, were to be boiled in these little courts, at the corners of the outward court. The direction, not to bear the most holy things out into the outer court, to sanctify the people, may intimate, that the peculiar privileges of believers must not be granted or left open to unconverted persons; and that they should not promiscuously be admitted to partake of the Lord’s supper; as this tends to induce in them the opinion, that they are holy persons, and need not conversion; and thus occasions much superstition and delusion.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 16-24.

We should worship and commune with God every day, in our closets and families, and in public, as we have time and opportunity. On six days of the week, indeed, we are called to serve him in our temporal employments; and we must not neglect those duties, even for the sake of spending all our time in the more immediate worship of the Lord. But on the sabbath day we must occupy ourselves wholly in his sacred service: and, laying aside all other employments and avocations, as much as may be; and shaking off sloth and inactivity, we must learn to delight in the succession of one religious exercise to another, as the proper business of the whole day; and it may be right occasionally to appropriate a day from the other six, to be spent in a similar manner. It behooves those in authority to use their influence and example, in promoting a general regard to the worship of God, and their own in preparing every thing for it; they should frequent his holy ordinances with reverence and attention, and without betraying any symptoms of weariness: for however they may be distinguished in other matters from their subjects, they are in the sight of God entirely upon a level with them; and every distinction admissible respecting his worship, between them and others, must be confined merely to external circumstances. But whether rulers will or will not join with us, in attending on the living ordinances, in which Christ is set forth as evidently crucified among us; he, our Prince of Peace, will surely manifest his presence amidst us; and especially when we spend his holy day with his assembled saints, and feed by humble faith on that sacrifice, which he hath prepared and offered for us. In expectation and assurance of his glorious and gracious presence, we should worship with reverence in his courts; abound in spiritual sacrifices; consecrate our talents and substance to him, according to our ability; and take care that every thing be done decently and in order. We should recollect, that Press forward is the Christian’s motto: we must still depart further and further from our sins, and sinful pursuits and connexions; and get further into the knowledge, practice, and experience of the Gospel; and we should dread a hypocritical profession and worship, which generally terminate in a man’s returning into his old course of sin and death. The Lord hath prescribed us many duties, as of indispensable obligation: he hath also graciously left many things to our voluntary choice; especially as to the proportion of our time or substance, to be appropriated to his immediate worship and service: that they who greatly delight in his commandments, may abound in them to his glory, the edification of their brethren, and their own benefit; without entangling their own consciences, or prescribing rules that might be inexpedient to others; or inducing them to formal services for which they have no heart, and in which God could have no pleasure. But we must never omit our daily worship, or to apply the sacrifice of the Lamb of God to our souls, for pardon, peace, and salvation.

V. 16-24.

Our King of peace and righteousness will enrich all his 2 Then brought he me out of the way of the gate northward, and led me eastward, about the way without unto the outer gate, by the way that looketh eastward; and, behold, there ran out waters on the right side.

3 And when the man that had the line in his hand went forth eastward, he measured a thousand cubits, and he brought me through the waters: the waters were to the ankles.

4 Again he measured a thousand, and brought me through the waters: the waters were to the knees. Again he measured a thousand, and brought me through; the waters were to the loins.

5 Afterward he measured a thousand; and it was a river that I could not pass over: for the waters were risen, waters to swim in, a river that could not be passed over.

spiritual progeny with an unalienable inheritance: nor will he let any man in any way serve him, without allotting him a suitable reward. But it will be dreadful to be put off with a revocable portion, and to be left utterly destitute, when the children shall receive their full liberty and eternal inheritance: let us then rest in nothing short of regenerating grace, and the Spirit of adoption witnessing with our spirits, that we are children and heirs of God.—If all princes had in them the mind that was in Christ, their peaceable subjects would never have cause to complain of being thrust out of, or scattered from, their possessions, in order that favourites and dependents might be enriched with the spoil. They would rather straighten themselves to relieve the people; as "knowing the grace of Christ, who though he were rich, yet for our sakes became poor, that we through his poverty might be made rich." The minister of the Gospel is as truly serving Christ and the people, when in his study he is searching the scriptures, meditating and preparing for his work, as when he is publicly preaching the word to the congregation. He should endeavour to get well acquainted with his instructions, and to speak from a matured judgment, and an experienced heart. and with fervency of spirit: he should be careful, both in dispensing the word, and in administering the sacraments, to guard the people against superstition and false confidence, and from mistaking the notion or form for the power of godliness: and every thing, in his outward accommodations, and manner of life, and his method of spending his time, should be so regulated, as may best tend to make him a "workman that need not be ashamed, rightly dividing the word of truth."

NOTES.

CHAP. XLVII. V. 1—5. This part of the vision must be understood figuratively; and this consideration is important, in forming a determination concerning the import of the whole vision. Doubtless both Solomon's temple and the second temple were well supplied with water, conveyed thither in order to wash the sacrifices, and for similar purposes; and to preserve every thing clean and wholesome: but these waters flowed originally from the temple, not as a common sewer, but as a delightful fertilizing river. The prophet had before surveyed the doors of the house; but he now first discovered a very springing forth from under the threshold of the house eastward, at his right hand, and at the south-side of the altar. These waters no doubt were an emblem of the "Gospel preached with the Holy Ghost sent down from heaven" to render it effectual; and conveying with it all spiritual blessings to the souls of believers, and to the nations of the earth.—The gradual rise of the waters, denotes the large effusion of the Spirit, which was very remarkable at the first publication of the Gospel, and in its wonderful increase from small beginnings; and will be so again, when God shall "pour out the Spirit of grace" upon the Jews, in order to their conversion. The supplies of grace are often represented, in the holy writers, under the metaphor of a river, and streams watering the dry and thirsty earth, both cleaning and making fruitful the ground where they pass. The metaphor is probably taken from the river that watered paradise. (Lowth.) When the prophet had been shown the source of these waters, he was led by his conductor to observe their progress and increase: and as the east gate was shut, he was brought out from the temple northward. When his conductor, with the line in his hand, had measured the length of the thousand cubits from the source, he led the prophet across the waters, which only reached to his ankles; but continuing to try their depth every thousand cubits, he found them grow still deeper every time, till they could no longer be forded, but were become a river impassable.
6 And he said unto me, Son of man, hast thou seen this? Then he brought me down to the bank of the river.

7 Now when I had returned, behold, at the bank of the river were very many trees on the one side, and on the other. 8 Then said he unto me, These waters issue out toward the east country, and go down into the n desert, and go into the sea: which being brought forth into the sea, the waters shall be healed. 9 And it shall come to pass, that every thing that liveth, which moveth, whithersoever the rivers shall come, shall live: and there shall be a very great multitude of fish, because these waters shall come thither: for they shall be healed: and every thing shall live whither the river cometh.

except by swimming. This was an emblem of the progress of Christianity, from small beginnings to a vast increase; and the latter part of the representation may relate to the times when the Gospel shall fill the earth, and produce the most extensive and important good effects on the state of mankind in every nation. Thus the river signifies the same as the "stone, cut out without hands, and becoming a great mountain and filling the whole earth," and the grain of mustard-seed becoming a large plant, like a tree in which the fowls of the air make their nests. (Marg. Ref.) The passage may also be accommodated to the progressive growth in knowledge and holiness of true Christians: and it is often applied to the holy Scriptures, in which are some things plain to the meanest capacity, and others incomprehensible to the most exalted created understanding; and only to be apprehended by faith, as a river that cannot be forded.

V. 7. Trees, &c. (Note, 12.)

V. 8-10. These waters ran eastward into the desert, and then into the sea; which is supposed to mean the dead sea, or the lake of Sodom, that lay east of Jerusalem. In this sea it is said no living creature is found; at least it is probable, that it does not abound with fish, as other seas do. But the prophet was informed by his conductor, that when the waters from the sanctuary should enter the sea, its waters also would become wholesome and fit for the production and habitation of fishes; and whithersoever they flowed they would communicate life abundantly; so that fishers would spread their nets from one side of this lake of Sodom to another, for En-gedi lay on one side, and En-eglaim on the other, of the lake) and take exceedingly great quantities of all those kinds of fish which they had been used to catch in the Mediterranean sea. This represented the efficacy of the Gospel, when attended by a divine influence, to communicate spiritual life to the most atrocious sinners, like those of Sodom; to render the Gentile nations productive of numerous converts; checking the progress of iniquity, undermining the foundations of idolatry, reforming cities and countries, and bringing men to know, worship, and serve the one living and true God, where his name had not before been known. So that the ministers of Christ would meet with abundant encouragement to labour, and to preach the Gospel, where before none ever thought of being so employed: till at length the most hopeless and bentneghted nations would be abundantly filled with the light and holiness of true religion.

V. 11. There would however still remain some marshes, creeks, or swamps, into which these healing waters could not find an entrance; and these must be left incurably sterile and worthless. This represents the case of those who reject or abuse the Gospel; or those countries which exclude it from among them. In short, it is the only healing medicine for the distempers of our fallen race; and they will be given up as reprobat to final ruin who are not healed by it.

V. 12. (Note, Rev. xxii. 2.) St. John hath almost transcribed this part of the vision, and applied it to the salvation of Christ, as perfected in the felicity of heaven. In his vision, the trees on each side of the river of the water of Life, seem to signify the several parts of the mediatorial work of Christ, and the sufficiency of his mediation to supply all the various wants of believers, and to complete their uninterrupted felicity. But many expositors interpret this verse of believers, who are "trees of righteousness" planted on the banks of this river in great abundance. Yet the plentiful provisions of the Gospel, the precious promises of the sacred word, and the privileges of believers, as communicated to their souls by the quickening Spirit, may be aptly thus represented. These abound on each side of the river, wherever the Gospel is successfully preached: they afford nourishment and delight to the souls of men; they never fade or wither; they are various, according to the variety of circumstances and occasions, in the Christian's experience: as if a tree should yield a succession of different kinds of fruit, through the months of the year: and even the leaves serve as medi-
CHAPTER XLVII.

13 Thus saith the Lord God; This shall be the border whereby ye shall inherit the land, according to the twelve tribes of Israel: Joseph shall have two portions.

14 And ye shall inherit it, one as well as another; concerning the which I lifted up mine hand to give it unto your fathers: and this land shall fall unto you for inheritance.

15 And this shall be the border of the land toward the north side, from the great sea, the way of Bethel, as men go to Zedad;

16 Hamath, Berothah, Sibraim, which is between the border of Damascus, and the border of Hamath, Hazar-hatticon, which is by the coast of Hauran.

17 And the border from the sea shall be Hazar-enan, the border of Damascus, and the north northward, and the border of Hamath. And this is the north side.

18 And the east side ye shall measure from Hauran, and from Damascus, and from Gilead, and from the land of Israel by Jordan, from the border unto the east sea. And this is the east side.

19 And the south side southward, from Tamar even to the waters of Jericho near to the great sea.

20 The west side also shall be the great sea from the border, till a man come over against Hamath. This is the west side.

21 So shall ye divide this land unto you, according to the tribes of Israel.

22 And it shall come to pass, that ye shall divide it by lot for an inheritance unto you, and to the strangers that sojourn among you, which shall beget children among you; and they shall be unto you as born in the country among the children of Israel: they shall have inheritance with you among the tribes of Israel.

23 And it shall come to pass, that in what tribe the stranger sojourneth, there shall ye give him his inheritance, saith the Lord God.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The more carefully we examine the things of God and religion, the more interesting will be our discoveries concerning them. All our invaluable privileges and advantages are conveyed to us through the Gospel; they flow from Christ, our Temple, Altar, and door of access to the Father; they all spring from the everlasting love and mercy of our God, through his atoning sacrifice, and by the sanctification of the Holy Spirit. No obstructions of men or fallen angels can intercept the communication of spiritual blessings from the fulness of Christ to the souls of his beloved people: and the course of the greatest rivers might far more easily be stopped, than the progress of his Gospel. It hath hitherto continued gradually to diffuse its influence; and it will still run wider and deeper in its energy and effects, till it shall fill, heal, and sanctify the whole earth. We may rejoice in the assured hope of this happy event: and in the mean time we may be satisfied, that the water, which Christ gives his praying people, shall be in them “a well of water springing up into everlasting life.”

While we wait for the completion of our felicity, and are conflicting with various trials and temptations; let us attend to the sacred Scriptures, beginning with the most obvious and practical truths, and proceeding gradually to those that are most difficult; remembering that many things will be found incomprehensible to us, which we must apprehend by faith and humbly adore, but not pretend to fathom, or to judge of by our limited powers or our proud reasonings. But we should chiefly mark the blessed effects which the word and Spirit of God are every where represented as producing on the souls of men; that we may CHAP. XLVIII.

The portions allotted to Dan, Asher, Naphtali, Manassæ, Ephraim, Reuben, and Judah, 1—7. The allotments for the sanctuary, the priests, Levites, city, and prince, 8—22. The portions of Benjamin, Simeon, Issachar, Zebulon, and Gad, 23—29. The plan of the city, its gates, dimensions, and name, 30—33.

Now these are the names of the tribes: From the north end to the coast of the way of Hethlon, as one goeth to Hamath, Hazar-enan, the border of Damascus northward, to the coast of Hamath; for these are his sides east and west, a portion for Dan.

2 And by the border of Dan, from the east side unto the west side, a portion for Asher.

3 And by the border of Asher, from the east side even unto the west side, a portion for Naphtali.

4 And by the border of Naphtali, from the east side unto the west side, a portion for Manassæ.

5 And by the border of Manassæ, from the east side even unto the west side, a portion for Ephraim.

6 And by the border of Ephraim, from the east side even unto the west side, a portion for Reuben.

7 And by the border of Reuben, from the east side unto the west side, a portion for Judah.

8 And by the border of Judah, from the east side unto the west side, shall be the offering which ye shall offer of five and twenty thousand firstlings in breadth, and in length as one of the other parts inquire whether they have wrought such a change in our judgments, dispositions, and affections? Into whatever place or heart of man these healing waters flow, they communicate divine life and holiness; they counteract the various evil propensities of our fallen nature, and teach men to deny ungodliness and worldly lusts, and to live "soberly, righteously, and godly in this present world." So that where they abound, knowledge, purity, piety, and equity, and every thing good and useful, abound likewise. How desirable then is it to be instrumental in sending the word of God to those regions which before were given up to ignorance, impurity, and vice! And to see the preachers of the Gospel encouraged to cast their nets, and to attend to their laborious work with patient hope, and some evident success, where before sin and Satan reigned with undisturbed sway! The time is coming when they shall thus labour and prosper in those distant regions which are now enveloped in Pagan or Mahometan darkness, with as much encouragement as the apostles did at Jerusalem, when numbers were daily added to the Church of such as should be saved; and their converts shall be of the same kind as those were, "when great grace was upon them all." Yet is this blessed Gospel of salvation the saviour of death to numbers in every age: and they who are not made holy by it, because they neglect, oppose, or abuse it, must die in their sins, and perish without remedy. As the Lord hath so amply provided in Christ Jesus all the rich variety of spiritual blessings, that can conduce to our comfort and holiness; and as these blessings lose no part of their beauty or excellency by the succession of ages, so Christians also should study to be useful and fruitful, the lights of the world and the healing power of the people; that their whole conduct and all their endeavours may tend to render men wise, holy, and happy, on every side of them. They should bring forth fruit suited to the seasons of adversity and prosperity, and to the various occasions and circumstances in which they are called to act: they should consider it their duty and privilege to have their leaf unwithering and their fruit increasing, because they are watered from the sanctuary of God: and they should delight in proceeding with increasing zeal and usefulness to serve him to the end of their lives. Surely none should deem themselves branches of the living vine, who do not in some measure bring forth such fruits as he did, when he went about doing good to the souls and bodies of men! And if all that bear the name of Christians and profess the doctrine of Christ, were of this character, his religion would appear to be most excellent and beneficial in the eyes of all beholders. Such Christians need not doubt of their inheriting the good land which Canaan typified, and which the Lord hath sworn to give to the seed of Abraham: all the Gentiles who believe in Christ, and are united to him by the supply of his sanctifying Spirit, are the children of Abraham, and heirs according to promise, and will share the privileges of Israelites, without marrying their inheritance: for there is room in the Church, and in heaven for all who come for an interest in the blessings of that new covenant, of which Christ is the Surety and Mediator.

NOTES.

CHAP. XLVIII. V. 1—7. This division of the land entirely differs from that which was made in the days of Joshua; and it is not probable that it should ever literally take place: but it seems to denote the equality of privilege which subsists amongst all the tribes of the redeemed, whatever their previous characters were, and their intimate union and communion with each other. This division of the land among the twelve tribes may imply, that all true Christians shall be equally sharers in the privileges of the Gospel. (Lowth.) A portion is laid out for each tribe, directly across the country from east to west. (Marg. Ref.) from the east side unto the west side; and the sanctuary shall be in the midst of it.

9 The oblation that ye shall offer unto the Lord shall be of five and twenty thousand in length, and of ten thousand in breadth.

10 And for them, even for the priests, there shall be this holy oblation; toward the north five and twenty thousand in length, and toward the west ten thousand in breadth, and toward the east ten thousand in breadth, and toward the south five and twenty thousand in length: and the sanctuary of the Lord shall be in the midst thereof.

11 * It shall be for the priests that are sanctified of the sons of Zadok; which have kept my charge, which went not astray, when the children of Israel went astray, as the Levites went astray.

12 And this oblation of the land that is offered, shall be unto them a thing most holy, by the border of the Levites.

13 And over against the border of the priests, the Levites shall have five and twenty thousand in length, and ten thousand in breadth: all the length shall be five and twenty thousand, and the breadth ten thousand.

14 And they shall not sell of it, neither exchange, nor alienate the first-fruits of the land: for it is holy unto the Lord.

15 And the five thousand, that are left in the breadth over against the five and twenty thousand, shall be a profane place for the city: for dwelling and for suburbs: and the city shall be in the midst thereof.

16 And these shall be the measures thereof; the north side four thousand and five hundred, and the south side four thousand and five hundred, and on the east side four thousand and five hundred, and the west side four thousand and five hundred.

17 And the suburbs of the city shall be toward the north two hundred and fifty, and toward the south two hundred and fifty, and toward the east two hundred and fifty, and toward the west two hundred and fifty.

18 And the residue in length against the oblation of the holy portion shall be ten thousand eastward, and ten thousand westward: and it shall be over against the oblation of the holy portion; and the increase thereof shall be for food unto them that serve the city.

19 And they that serve the city, shall serve it out of all the tribes of Israel.

20 All the oblation shall be five and twenty thousand, by five and twenty thousand: ye shall offer the holy oblation four-square, with the possession of the city.

21 And the residue shall be for the prince, on the one side and on the other of the holy oblation, and of the possession of the city over against the five and twenty thousand of the oblation toward the east border, and westward over against the five and twenty thousand toward the west border, over against the portions for the prince: and it shall be the holy oblation; and the sanctuary of the house shall be in the midst thereof.

22 Moreover from the possession of the Levites, and from the possession of the city, being in the midst of that which is the Prince's, between the border of Judah and the border of Benjamin, shall be for the prince.

23 As for the rest of the tribes, from the east side unto the west side, Benjamin shall have a portion.

V. 8—13. (Notes, xliv. 13, xlvi. 1—8.)

V. 14. This may intimate, that what hath been devoted to the immediate service of God should not be alienated from it; that ministers should be contented with their provision, and not show a fickle or mercenary disposition; and that the inheritance of believers is unchangeably secured to them.

V. 15—17. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 18. For food. * For those who perform inferior offices in the city. (Luther.) Perhaps for the Nethinims.

V. 20. Square. A square figure is the emblem of

V. 21. As for the rest of the tribes, from the east side unto the west side, Benjamin shall have a portion.

V. 8—13. (Notes, xliv. 13, xlvi. 1—8.)

V. 14. This may intimate, that what hath been devoted to the immediate service of God should not be alienated from it; that ministers should be contented with their provision, and not show a fickle or mercenary disposition; and that the inheritance of believers is unchangeably secured to them.

V. 15—17. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 18. For food. * For those who perform inferior offices in the city. (Luther.) Perhaps for the Nethinims.

V. 20. Square. A square figure is the emblem of

V. 21. As for the rest of the tribes, from the east side unto the west side, Benjamin shall have a portion.

perpetuity, strength, and solidity. A great part of the wisdom of the eastern nations was wrapped up in hieroglyphical emblems. This method God hath made use of to discover some mysterious truths in his word; such as perhaps he thinks not convenient to be more clearly revealed till the proper time or season; intending by such hints, to encourage men's searching into the more obscure parts of Scripture. (Luther.)

V. 22. The Lot of Judah was north of the holy oblation, and that of Benjamin south of it. The Marginal references show how different this was from the former division.

4 N
24 And by the border of Benjamin, from the east side unto the west side, of the city on the north side, four thousand and five hundred measures.

25 And by the border of Simeon, from the east side unto the west side, after the names of the tribes of Israel: three gates northward; one gate of Reuben, one gate of Judah, one gate of Levi.

26 And by the border of Issachar, from the east side unto the west side, and one gate of Joseph, one gate of Benjamin, one gate of Dan.

27 And by the border of Zebulun, from the east side unto the west side, and one gate of Simeon, one gate of Issachar, one gate of Zebulun.

28 And by the border of Gad, at the south side southward, the border shall be even from Tamar unto the waters of strife in Kadesh, and to the river toward the great sea.

29 This is the land which ye shall divide by lot unto the tribes of Israel, for inheritance, and these are their portions, saith the Lord God.

30 ¶ And these are the going out

V. 35. It is most obvious to interpret these measures, of the reed which the prophet's conductor held in his hand: for what was the use of it, but to measure with? Or what measure should we compute by, but that which the Spirit of God hath pointed out to us? By this measure the city would be near forty miles in circuit, or ten miles on each side of the square; which was vastly larger than Jerusalem ever was. Doubtless the large dimensions of the city and land were intended to intimate the great increase of religion, and the propagation of the Gospel in the times predicted. The land here divided is never called Canaan, nor the city measured, Jerusalem; probably because they were more figurative of spiritual blessings to the Church, but Jehovah-shammah, or, the Lord is there, is the name given to this holy city: signifying that his powerful and gracious presence with his Church is the source of all her peace, security, felicity, and holiness; and that at length these blessings will be abundantly communicated, and his presence and glory signally displayed among his people. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

When true converts enter the Church by faith in Jesus Christ, all their former sins are blotted out, every stigma is removed, all distinctions are swallowed up, and the vilest of them are admitted to a full participation of all the privileges of the children of God, and made heirs according to the hope of eternal life. Yet on earth some of them must be placed more advantageously than others for their spiritual improvement; and in proportion to their degrees of grace and fruitfulness on earth, so will be their capacity for, and enjoyment of, the glory and felicity of heaven—our inheritance, as the spiritual priests of the living God, cannot be forfeited or exchanged: nor should we desire to change the temporal portion, which our gracious Lord hath allotted us. Especially it behooves the ministers of Christ to be contented in their places, and with such things as they have: and as they must by no means waste or alienate the revenues appropriated to the maintenance of religion; so the Lord will call those to a strict account who plunder them, or make the concerns of religion to subserve their love of filthy lucre. In the visible Church on earth, there will still be some part profane; even believers must spend part of their time in those employments which do not immediately belong to religion; and though these must be performed from pious motives and in a conscientious manner, yet they should be kept distinct from spiritual concerns. All that belong to the Israel of God should serve the common cause, in their, proper places, and according to their abilities: and they who occupy themselves in so good a work, should not be left destitute of such things as are needful for them. The way of access into the Church is open on every side, that sinners may enter by faith, from all quarters of the globe, and from all the tribes of the earth: and all that belong to the true Church below, shall find at last admission into the holy city above: for all things are so regulated and established by the power, truth, and love of God, that no believer shall ever be ashamed of his confidence. Through the whole extent of the Church, even when it shall fill the earth, the Lord will vouchsafe his gracious presence and blessing. May we be found citizens of this holy city, and act consistently with that character; and have the benefit and comfort of the Lord’s presence with us, in life, death, and for evermore.
THE writer of this book was contemporary with, but probably younger than, Ezekiel; yet he began to prophesy before him, and continued in his prophetic office much longer. He was of the royal family of Judah; and having been early in life carried captive to Babylon, he soon became renowned for wisdom, and was advanced to great authority under Nebuchadnezzar: and he seems to have continued in an exalted station, and in offices of great trust and power, through the whole subsequent period of the Chaldean monarchy, and afterwards under Darius the Mede, and Cyrus the Persian: yet he was all along more eminent for wisdom and piet.y, than for rank and authority. Josephus, no doubt speaking the current opinion of his countrymen at that time, calls Daniel "one of the greatest of the prophets; for he was wont not only to foretell future things, as other prophets also did, but he likewise determined the time when they should come to pass." But since his time, the Jews, in order to invalidate the evidence that results from the prophet's writings in support of Christianity, have, on the authority of a few doctors, agreed to class him among the Hagiographi, which decision, however, does not, upon their own rules, affect his pretensions to be considered as an inspired writer. (Gray.)—It may further be noted, that this determination, and the frivolous reasons assigned for it, are strong proofs, that this prophecy, of seventy weeks, has created them exceedingly great difficulties; because, it so fixes the time of the Messiah's coming, that unless Jesus of Nazareth be He, all expectations of his coming must be finally disappointed, if Daniel was a prophet in the highest sense of the word.—Our Lord, however, called him "Daniel the prophet," with a special recommendation of his predictions, even the most difficult of them, to the attention of his disciples. (Compare viii. 13 ix. 27 xi. 34 xii. 11. with Matt. xxiv. 15. Mark xiii. 14.) And there is such a coincidence between his prophecies and those of St. John, that the latter, in his Revelation, doth more distinctly unfold those events, which the former foretells in general terms. (Mede)—But in his work hath been produced such instances of his having been a prophet, as an infidel cannot deny, or, if he denies, cannot disprove. (Bp. Newton.)—The first six chapters are chiefly historical, though indeed the second chapter contains the prophetic interpretation of Nebuchadnezzar's dream, concerning the kingdoms which were successively to illustrate the power of God, who removeth and setteth up kings as seemeth good to him—the four historical chapters which succeed, relate the miraculous deliverance of Daniel's companions from the furnace; the remarkable punishment of Nebuchadnezzar's arrogance, the impiety and portended fate of Belshazzar; and the divine interposition for the protection of Daniel in the lions' den. All these are written with a spirit and animation highly interesting. We seem to be present at the scenes described; and the whole is enriched with the most exalted sentiments of piety, and with the finest attestations to the praise and glory of God. (Gray.) The last six chapters are entirely prophetic; and a great part of them has generally been considered as extremely obscure. But it is the nature of prophecies not to be thoroughly understood, till they are thoroughly fulfilled. Not that such prophecies are therefore like the pagan oracles, of an ambiguous, equivocal, and delusive nature. Obscure they may be: but there is a wide difference between obscurity and equivocation. The pagan oracles were purposely worded in such a manner, that if they failed in one sense, they might hold good in another, though directly the contrary: the Scripture prophecies have a determined meaning; and though sometimes they may comprehend more events than one, yet they are never applicable to contrary events. The pagan oracles were delivered for the immediate direction of those who consulted them: and therefore a mistake at first was of more fatal consequence: the Scripture prophecies were intended more for the instruction of future ages; and therefore it is sufficient if time shall illustrate the particulars. The pagan oracles are no sooner understood, than they are despised: the reverse is true of the Scripture-prophecies; and the better you understand, the more you will admire them. The completion of the former, demonstrates their fraud and falsity, the completion of the latter, their truth and divinity. (Bp. Newton)—Some parts, however, of these predictions, are so exceedingly plain, and have been so exactly and circumstantially fulfilled, that Porphyry, a bitter enemy of Christianity, took occasion from this circumstance, to maintain that they were written after the predicted events. This is the most important testimony: for it shows, that the completion of those parts which relate to historical facts, terminating in the reign of Antiochus Epiphanes, was absolutely undeniable: yet it is capable of clear proof, that these prophecies were extant in the Greek language many years before Antiochus was born; and in the hands of the Egyptians, who had no kindness either to the Jews or their religion.

But, in fact, the prophecies of Daniel have in all succeeding generations received as undeniable accomplishments, as those which relate to more ancient events. They all take their beginning from about the prophet’s days: they all give a concise prophetic history of the Church and of the world, nearly to the end of time: for even the prophecy of the seventy weeks, though the first coming of the Messiah is the most prominent subject; yet shows the state of the Jewish nation to this day, and intimates events which have not yet taken place. They all, either expressly or by consequence, predict four great monarchies; the fourth of which shall last to the end of the age; “the end of the indignation.” They all foretell long continued calamities to the Jewish nation, and to the people of God; at length terminating in the restoration of Israel, and the final and universal triumph of true religion; the kingdom of Christ and of his saints, which must endure to the general resurrection. They are not insulated predictions: they all exhibit the same grand outlines of the plan of Providence, to the period of the Church’s calamities, varied in such a manner, as to reflect reciprocal light on each other. And for above two thousand years, the grand outlines of history constitute the best interpreter of the grand outlines of these astonishing prophecies. These four kingdoms have succeeded each other: they have answered the description given of them with the most surprising exactness. The Messiah came at the appointed period, and was cut off; the abomination of desolation was set up in the holy place; Jerusalem was destroyed; the poor remnant of the Jews were scattered, and remain so to this day. The fourth kingdom which thus desolated them, and persecuted the infant Christian Church, after a time, appearing in another form, has exactly answered the predictions of its blasphemy, tyranny, idolatry, and long continued dominion, given in this ancient book: and nothing now remains, but the destruction of this kingdom, the conversion of the Jews, and the final triumphs of true religion, to render the whole history of all those ages a clear comment on Daniel’s prophecies.—One great cause of the uncertainty, which numbers complain of, as to the real meaning of these predictions, arises from learned and ingenious men trying to accommodate the events of their own time, (important indeed to them, but small in the grand concerns of the world during revolving thousands of years;) to some detached particulars in the prophecy. But it should be remembered, that prophecy is a very small, though exact map; on which, not every country-town, or considerable place, is found, but merely those of pre-eminent consequence.—No city, so to speak, is marked in Britain but London. It should, however, be also understood, that any interpretation, which violates the geography or chronology of prophecy, must be “a priori interpretation,” and not the real meaning. Only the grand outlines are marked, and those in their due order and arrangement. It is also of great importance to note, that many of the prophets, perhaps all, in some measure, agree in the grand events predicted: the coming of a Saviour, to be the Light of the world, a great High Priest and a glorious King: “His sufferings, and the glory which would follow;” the present state of the Jews, the corruption and persecutions of the Church by a powerful and blasphemous enemy, the final restoration of Israel; and the victories, triumphs, and kingdom of the Redeemer. Some give one view of these subjects, and some another: but all agree in the general outlines; all confirm each other’s testimony; and in no one instance is there a discordant voice; or anything that can be thought so, by those who diligently examine and compare the whole. This combination of testimony gives prophecy its full force; and connected with its accomplishment, amounts to a complete moral demonstration, that the Scriptures are the oracles of God.

The prophecy is writ, part in Hebrew, part in Chaldee; for which this reason may be assigned: that those parts, in which the Babylonian empire was concerned, were writ in their language, viz. from ii. 4, to the end of the seventh chapter; a great part of which was probably entered in their public registers. (Lowth.)

From the consideration, that this eminent and greatly beloved servant of God was, to extreme old age, and probably till his death, a minister of state in a heathen court, we may conclude, with observing, that faith and piety are not confined to any place or station in life, but that the Lord can preserve his people humble and spiritual in the midst of all possible snares, and in the most entangling employments to which his providence calls them.
CHAPTER I.

Jehoiakim, with part of the sacred vessels, is carried captive, 1, 2. Nebuchadnezzar commits Daniel, and certain young Jews, to the master of the eunuchs, to be instructed in the Chaldaean learning; allotting them a daily portion, and changing their names, 3—7. They refuse to eat of the king's meat; and being permitted to live on pulse and water, they improve in vigour and comeliness, 8—16. God confers on them knowledge and wisdom; so that, being far superior to the wise men of Babylon, they are preferred by the king, 17—20.

In the third year of the reign of Jehoiakim king of Judah, came Nebuchadnezzar king of Babylon unto Jerusalem, and besieged it.

2 And the Lord gave Jehoiakim king of Judah into the hand of Nebuchadnezzar, king of Babylon, and carried him into the land of Shinar to the house of his god; and he brought the young Jews to be very ingenious, and of promising abilities; and he desired to avail himself of the talents both of his native subjects, and of those whom he had acquired by conquest. These young men were to be instructed in the language and learning of the Chaldeans, and in every science that could qualify them for service. Three years were allotted to finish their education: and to encourage them to be diligent and obsequious, they were to be supplied with viands and wines every day from the king's own table. This education would tend, and probably was meant, to detach them from the interests of their people and religion, and to attach them to those of their new masters. Amongst the number selected, there were four more distinguished and conscientious than the rest: their names were all compounded with the original words for God, or Lord: Daniel signifying "God my judge," Hananiah, the grace of the Lord, and Azariah, the grace of God. But the master of the eunuchs changed these names for others compounded with the names of the idols of Babylon; as intimating the change he expected, or desired, in their religion. The word rendered children is frequently used for young persons when come to maturity: and it is the common opinion, that Daniel was at this time twenty years of age. Indeed we must suppose, from the narrative, that both he and his companions were at least seventeen or eighteen. As these young men were of the seed-royal, it is probable that some of them were descended from Hezkaiah; and thus the prophecy concerning his posterity was exactly fulfilled. (Note; 2 Kings xx. 17, 18.)

NOTES.

CHAP. I. V. 1, 2. (Notes, 2 Kings xxiv. 1. E.r.a i. 1—4. Jer. xxv. 1.) This may be considered as the first date of the beginning of the seventy years' captivity: for it has been shown, that there were several. At this time Jehoiakim became tributary to the king of Babylon; and consequently the seventy years of captivity and vasalage began. (Lomth.) He carried the sacred vessels to the temple of his God; not so much for the ordinary use of his priests, as to be laid up for monuments in the treasure-house that pertained to his idol: even Bel, the god of the Babylonians, &c. (Br. Hall.) V. 3—7. It is evident, that Daniel and his companions were carried captive with Jehoiakim, though it be not here mentioned: for this was previous to the captivity of Jehoiachin. The eastern monarchs have in every age been accustomed to employ eunuchs in their palaces and about their persons: and as these frequently were advanced to the highest dignities, the original is sometimes used in general for a courtier, or officer in the palace. It is probable, however, that Daniel and his companions were eunuchs. The master of the eunuchs on this occasion, received orders from Nebuchadnezzar to select from the young men of Israel, and especially from those of royal and noble birth, such as were unblemished in their outward form, and of comely figure, who had good capacities, and had received the rudiments of a good education; and whose prudence, good sense, and learning, might render them fit to occupy some station at court. It was then, as well as at present, deemed a branch of magnificence to be served by foreigners: perhaps the king had observed several of the vessels into the treasure-house of his god.

3 And the king spake unto Ashpenaz the master of his eunuchs, that he should bring certain of the children of Israel, and of the king's seed, and of the princes;

4 Children in whom was no blemish, but well favoured, and skillful in all wisdom, and cunning in knowledge, and understanding science, and such as had ability in them to stand in the king's palace, and whom they might teach the learning and the tongue of the Chaldeans.
8 But Daniel purposed in his heart that he would not defile himself with the portion of the king's meat nor with the wine which he drank; therefore he requested of the prince of the eunuchs that he might not defile himself.

9 Now God had brought Daniel into favour and tender love with the prince of the eunuchs.

10 And the prince of the eunuchs said unto Daniel, I fear my lord the king, who hath appointed your meat and your drink: why should he see your faces worse liking than the children which are of your sort? then shall ye make me endanger my head to the king.

11 Then said Daniel to the whom the prince of the eunuchs had set over Daniel, Hananiah, Michal, and Azariah.

12 Prove your servants, I beseech thee, ten days: and let them give us pulse to eat, and water to drink.

V. 8—16. It is probable that Daniel first formed his determination, and then brought over his companions to his views and purpose. He did not consider it as unlawful to learn the sciences and language, as a preparation for future usefulness: and we may hence decidedly conclude, they were not required to study the arts of the magicians and astrologers. He resolved, however, not to defile himself with the king's meat. Many of the dishes would consist, in part at least, of those meats which were unclean according to the law; others of them would be such as had been offered to idols; and the wine, it is probable, had been presented to them, and a part from it poured out for a libation on their altars. Daniel no doubt concluded that by eating and drinking of these provisions he should have fellowship with idolaters; and be corrupted with the prevailing luxury and intemperance of the court, as well as induced to eat such meats as the law of God forbade; and that such a self-indulgent course of life was neither suited to the afflicted state of his country, nor to his own condition as a captive, or to his character as a devoted worshipper of the God of Israel. He was therefore resolved not to defile himself; yet he did not rudely refuse what was intended in kindness; but gently and modestly requested the prince, or master, of the eunuchs, to indulge him in this respect, as his conscience was concerned in it: yet it is hardly probable that he would have succeeded quietly in his purpose, had not that God whom he so conscientiously served, given him a place in the esteem and tender compassionate regard of this stranger; by means of the excellent abilities, discretion, courtesies, and amiable qualities, with which God had endued him. He was therefore disposed to gratify Daniel: but he feared lest the king, who had given orders about the diet of the young Jews, should observe any of them, Ez. ii. 21.)

13 Then let our countenances be looked upon before thee, and the countenance of the children that eat of the portion of the king's meat: and as thou seest, deal with thy servants.

14 So he consented to them in this matter, and proved them ten days.

15 And at the end of ten days their countenances appeared fairer and fatter in flesh, than all the children which did eat the portion of the king's meat.

16 Thus Melzar took away the portion of their meat, and the wine that they should drink; and gave them pulse.

17 ¶ As for these four children, God gave them knowledge and skill in all learning and wisdom: and Daniel had understanding in all visions and dreams.

18 Now at the end of the days that the king had said he should bring them in, the prince of the eunuchs brought them in before Nebuchadnezzar.

19 And the king communed with them, and found no fault in their manners, nor in their voice, nor in their countenance.

look unhealthy and dejected, (as he took it for granted they would, if they lived on pulse and water:) so that comparing their countenances with those who were not so scrupulous, he should inquire into the cause of the difference; and finding that his orders had been disobeyed, should in a rage order him to be put to death. The subsequent history shows that he had some ground, in the character of the king, for these apprehensions. It seems, however, that he was willing to connive at the desired change, though he would not order it; and perhaps he hinted to Daniel, that Melzar, his deputy, could do it with less danger: at least Daniel applied to him, and besought that a trial might be made for the space of ten days, during which time he and his friends would live upon pulse, or vegetables, and water, without any kind of animal food or wine: and if on this sparse diet they did not thrive as well as those who ate the king's portion, he might afterwards refuse his concurrence. This temperate diet would be in its own nature wholesome; yet it was not suited to render them fatter in flesh than the others: but doubtless Daniel's confidence was placed on the special blessing of God, to render it so nourishing, that he and his friends might not be tempted to defile themselves. It cannot, however, be supposed, that he would in any case have consented to eat furnished food, whatever sufferings his refusal might have exposed them to. But the Lord did not disappoint his expectation; for his looks and that of his friends point his expectation: on this the was fully satisfied Melzar, that he might safely leave them to their own plait, and he was taken away, perhaps as a prerequisite to himself, the portion that was allowed them from the king's table. This was a singular instance of conscientious temperance and self-denial in young persons, who had been brought up in affluence. (Marg. Ref. Note, them; and among them all was found none like Daniel, Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah: therefore stood they before the king. 20 And in all matters of wisdom and understanding that the king inquired of them, he found them ten times better than all the magicians and astrologers, that were in all his realm.

21 And Daniel continued even unto the first year of king Cyrus.

V. 17—20. It pleased God so to prosper the instructions given to Daniel and his friends, and their application to study; and so to communicate knowledge and wisdom from himself, that they far excelled their fellow students in every thing; and Daniel was early endowed with the supernatural ability of interpreting remarkable dreams, as Joseph had been in Egypt; (for he alone was chosen to be a prophet.) So that when they were brought before the king, (who appears to have been a man of learning and penetration,) they were found far better qualified for his service than any of the other students; nay, they far excelled in learning and in the satisfactory solution of difficult questions, all the magicians and astrologers, and other pretenders to extraordinary discoveries, with which his realm abounded. They were therefore speedily advanced to honourable stations in his palace; and Daniel continued to be employed in the affairs of government, and to be regarded as a prophet, through the whole duration of the Chaldean monarchy; and till Cyrus succeeded to the kingdom, on the death of his father-in-law, Darius the Mede. Thus he lived to witness the conclusion of the seventy years, which Jeremiah had predicted as the term of the captivity: and there can be no reasonable doubt, but that Cyrus' favourable decree was procured by his means. Indeed it is evident that he survived that event at least two or three years. (x. 1.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—7.

The successes of ungodly men, even in their enterprises against the worshippers of God, are to be ascribed to his interposition: they could have no power against them, “except it were given them from above”; though they either take the glory of it to themselves, or give it to their idols. The Lord will permit his enemies to profane even those things which have been consecrated to his service, when they have been polluted by the hypocrisy or crimes of those who have been favoured with them. It is the prudence of princes to employ the abilities and endowments of body or mind, and every qualification natural or acquired, which are to be found among every class of their subjects: and it is the wisdom of God thus to bring forth into scenes of usefulness, those whom he hath qualified to serve the public, or his Church. He will sometimes have a few of his servants to stand in king’s palaces, to direct the deliberations of senates, or to sway the affairs of kingdoms; as well as others to be employed in the work of the ministry, or in the obscure occupations of private life. We should therefore consider seriously what is our proper work, and do it diligently, and not censure others who aim to glorify God in a different sphere. Youth is the time for acquiring useful knowledge; nor is it superfluous for those who most simply seek wisdom from God, to apply their minds, and to employ their time, in pursuing various kinds of human learning. Kings, who would have able statesmen and servants, should encourage literature, and support men of abilities in prosecuting their studies; for they will find but few disposed to such pursuits, except they have a prospect of being comfortably supported, nay, liberally rewarded. How careful then should parents be, so to train up their children, that they may be qualified for future usefulness! But, alas! the education which is generally patronized by royal or public bounty, tends more to corrupt men’s principles and morals, than to improve them; and to lead them from scriptural sentiments, language, and behaviour, to adopt the names, notions, habits, and phraseology of heathens: and instead of teaching youth to bridle their passions, and to exercise self-denial, it commonly initiates them in luxury, or confirms them in habits of licentiousness.

V. 8—20.

If the Lord hath put it into the heart of any young person, from pure principles, to purpose not to defile himself by any unlawful or inexpedient indulgence, he will enable him to obtain the benefit, and to escape the dangers of every situation. But this will require much command over the appetites; and much firmness. Meekness, perseverance will also be requisite, to avoid giving needless offence: for, even where conscience and duty are concerned, modest persuasion and entreaty are preferable to impetuosity, moroseness, and obstinacy. When the Lord sees good, he can bring his servants into favour and tender love even with strangers to true religion: and indeed the genuine spirit of Christianity, when connected with the meekness of wisdom and superior abilities, is exceedingly amiable and conciliating even in the eyes of ungodly men, where it does not interfere with their pride, lusts, and interests. They who first form salutary designs will seldom be left alone in them; though few in general will concur, compared with the numbers who prefer present indulgence or interest to duty. Temperance, nay, abstinence, is more consistent with health, than men are apt to believe, who seek excuses for self-indulgence. Yet there may be reasons, when a degree of abstinence is needful, which in other circumstances would not be proper. If this be undertaken by any man in the fear of God, and not from Pharisical pride or affectation, or with a spirit of censurableness; but either that he may not defile himself by an improper intercourse with ungodly men, or that he may keep under his body and bring it into subjection; he may expect a peculiar blessing on his spare diet, to support his health, and to fit him for active service; without burdening his conscience or “making provision for the flesh to fulfill the lusts thereof.” And though a regard to health is a general duty; yet there may be cases, Daniel.

CHAP. II.

Nebuchadnezzar, perplexed with a dream which he had forgotten, requires, with menace and promise, his wise men to make it known to him, with the interpretation, 1—9. They acknowledge their inability, and are sentenced to die, 10—13. Daniel obtains reprieve, joins in prayer with his friends, has the dream revealed to him, and blesses God, 14—23. He stays the decree, and is brought before the king, 24—30. The dream and its interpretation, 31—45. The king honours Daniel; and confesses that his God is pre-eminent above all gods, 46, 47. Daniel and his friends are greatly preferred, 48, 49.

when the care of keeping a conscience void of offence will render even this a subordinate consideration; which may in a measure be overlooked, upon the same principle that the offending right hand must be cut off, and that the martyr yields up his life rather than sin against God. When men see it necessary to purpose such designs in their hearts, and to mention them even to those who have a tender love for them, they will often find them a hindrance to their designs, out of fear, either respecting them, or on their own account. When, however, the trial is made, such fears are often found to have been mere temptations; and conscientious temperance will always be found more beneficial, even to the comfort of this present life, than sinful indulgence. It also exceedingly tends to fit a man for study, or any great and continued mental exertion: and pious young men should endeavour to excel their fellows in every useful pursuit; not that they may be praised, but for the honour of the Gospel, and that they may be qualified for usefulness. For whatever station or service the Lord intends men, he will give them suitable endowments: and the wisdom, that he bestows, is ten thousand times better than worldly policy, curious arts, or the most admired attainments of human learning; both for the management of secular concerns, and with respect to the eternal world. It is a happiness to the realm, and an honour to the prince, when he is competent to judge who are best qualified to serve him, and when he impartially prefers them on that account. A youth spent in temperance and piety, and in departing from evil, conduces to durable usefulness and eminency, and treasures up joys for the future, either on earth, or in heaven, or both. Let then young men keep their eyes steadily fixed on the examples of this chapter: let us all count every thing but loss for the excellency of the knowledge of Christ, and the experience of his salvation; and always remember, that God will "honour those that honour him," but that they who despise "him shall be lightly esteemed."

NOTES.

CHAP. II. V. 1. Nebuchadnezzar was king of Babel when he came up to Jerusalem, and carried away Daniel and his friends to Babylon; which was in the first year of his reign: yet after Daniel had been three years educating, he is said to have had this dream in the second year of his reign. Hence it is concluded that he reigned some time along with his father; and that this was in the second year of his reigning alone. He was convinced that his dream was supernatural, and was troubled about it, though he could not recollect particulars: God so ordering it, that he might bring Daniel forth into notice, to make known his own glory, as the God of Israel, and of the whole earth. Though it was but one dream, it contained divers scenes of affairs, being a description of the succession of the four monarchies, which were to continue under different forms, to the end of the world. (Lowth.) Rather the fourth will continue, in one form or other, till all the kingdoms of the world become the kingdom of Christ.

V. 2. The word rendered Soererees is always taken in an ill sense by the holy writers, for those who consult evil spirits. The Chaldeans were so much addicted to the study of the heavenly motions, and to make prognostications from thence; that the word Chaldeus is used both in Greek and Latin writers for an astrologer.—Daniel and his companions did not appear among them: perhaps the Chaldeans despised them as youths and strangers. (Lowth.)

V. 4. In Syrac. Or, Chaldee; these were then the same language or, as some think, the Syrac was a more elegant dialect of the Chaldee, chiefly used by the learned. From this verse to the end of the seventh chapter Daniel wrote in Chaldee, and not in Hebrew; probably in order to include the Chaldeans to read the account of those transactions which so greatly concerned them. The expression, "O king live forever," was a customary salutation, implying a cordial desire of his life, health, and permanent felicity; it was used by Daniel and other pious men, as well as by the heathens, though probably with more extensive meaning; and was equivalent to "God save the king," as in use among us. (Marg.)

AND in the second year of the reign of Nebuchadnezzar, Nebuchadnezzar dreamed dreams, whereby his spirit was troubled, and his sleep brake from him.

2 Then the king commanded to call the magicians, and the astrologers, and the soererees, and the Chaldeans, for to shew the king his dreams. So they came and stood before the king.

3 And the king said unto them, I have dreamed a dream, and my spirit was troubled to know the dream.

4 Then spake the Chaldeans to the king in Syriac, O king, live for ever: tell thy servants the dream, and we will shew the interpretation.
CHAPTER II.

5 The king answered and said to the Chaldeans, The thing is gone from me: if ye will not make known unto me the dream, with the interpretation thereof, ye shall be cut in pieces, and your houses shall be made a dunghill.

6 But if ye shew the dream, and the interpretation thereof, ye shall receive of me gifts and rewards and great honour: therefore shew me the dream, and the interpretation thereof.

7 They answered again, and said, Let the king tell his servants the dream, and we will shew the interpretation of it.

8 And the king answered and said, I know of certainty that ye would gain the time, because ye see the thing is gone from me.

9 But if ye will not make known unto me the dream, there is but one decree for you: for ye have prepared lying and corrupt words to speak before me till the time be changed: therefore tell me the dream, and I shall know that ye can shew me the interpretation thereof.

10 The Chaldeans answered before the king, and said, There is not a man upon the earth that can shew the king's matter: therefore there is no king, lord, nor ruler, that asked such things at any magician, or astrologer, or Chaldean.

11 And it is a rare thing that the king requireth, and there is none other that can shew it before the king, except the gods, whose dwelling is not with flesh.

12 For this cause the king was angry and very furious, and commanded to destroy all the wise men of Babylon.

13 And the decree went forth that the wise men should be slain: and they sought Daniel and his fellows to be slain.

14 ¶ Then Daniel answered with counsel and wisdom to Arioch the captain of the king's guard, which was gone forth to slay the wise men of Babylon:

15 He answered and said to Arioch the king's captain, Why is the decree so hasty from the king? Then Arioch made the thing known to Daniel.

16 Then Daniel went in, and desired of the king that he would give him time, and that he would shew the king the interpretation.

V. 5—9. Nothing could be more unreasonable than this demand of Nebuchadnezzar, or more tyrannical and cruel than the sentence annexed to it. The whole narration displays the arrogance, impetuousity, and violence of his character; and illustrates the evil tendency and fatal effect of arbitrary power, constant homage and flattery, and uninterrupted prosperity, on the mind of fallen man. Being eager to recover the recollection of his dream, he required of the wise men, what was impossible, except by revelation from God! And he threatened them with the most terrible death; with the deepest ignominy to their characters and family, if they did not immediately perform what he required: but if they did, he promised to reward them in the most liberal and honourable manner. When they reasonably desired to be informed of the dream, and promised to give the interpretation by the rules of their art, (which they never could have performed,) he constrained this into a fraudulent intention of gaining time and opportunity for the execution of some corrupt design. Perhaps, being terrified by his dream, he expected some sudden revolution; and he might even suspect them of having formed some bad designs against him; so that he supposed they waited till the time was changed, and the event had deprived him of the power of punishing them: but he was determined to know it directly, or to execute his barbarous intentions. If they could discover the dream, it would give a sanction to their interpretation of it: but otherwise he should conclude them to be base impostors.

V. 10—13. The resolute conduct of the king led the Chaldeans and magicians, not only to confess the impotency of their arts, and to renounce that no king ever made such a demand on any who profess these sciences; but to declare that the discovery was beyond the reach of all human or created penetration, and only known and discoverable by the gods, whose dwelling was not with flesh, or among men. This they spoke of their gods: but the only living and true God, who alone could reveal the secrets contained in this dream, indeed corresponds to dwell among men: and he actually made known the dream to Daniel, and so showed the difference betwixt Jehovah and his prophets, and the idols and magicians of Babylon. Nebuchadnezzar was the more exasperated by this reply, and immediately issued a decree to destroy all the wise men of Babylon: and whether in his incon siderate rage he meant so, or whether he spoke in such general terms as to admit of this construction, Daniel and his fellows also were sought for to be put to death. Otherwise, the sorcerers would deservedly have been put to death, without rendering the city less wise than before. But the dream would have remained an impenetrable secret; which God had purposed it should not be.

V. 14—16. As Daniel and his friends had not been summoned with the other wise men; and yet were supposed to be involved with them in the condemnation pronounced against them, it was most reasonable, that they should have a hearing from the king. It seems that Daniel had, at times, access to him. Arioch appears to 17 Then Daniel went to his house, and made the thing known to Hananiah, Mishael, and Azariah, his companions:

4 O

18 That they would desire mercy of the God of heaven concerning this secret; that Daniel and his fellows should not perish with the rest of the wise men of Babylon.

19 Then was the secret revealed unto Daniel in a night vision. Then Daniel blessed the God of heaven.

20 Daniel answered and said, Blessed be he the name of God for ever and ever: for wisdom and might are his:

21 And he changeth the times and the seasons: he removeth kings, and setteth up kings: he giveth wisdom unto the wise, and knowledge to them that know not:

22 He revealeth the deep and secret things: he knoweth what is in the darkness, and the light dwelleth with him.

23 I thank thee, and praise thee, O thou God of my fathers, who hast given me wisdom and might, and hast made known unto me now what we desired of thee: for thou hast now made known unto us the king's matter.

24 Thereupon Daniel went unto the king, and said, I will give the interpretation of the thing which the king hath demanded cannot be made known unto the wise men, the astrologers, the magicians, the scribes, or to any wise man: and it pleased the king to answer Daniel, and he made known to Daniel what he desired of him.

25 Then Arioch bringeth Daniel before the king in haste, and saith thus unto him, I have found a man of the captives of Judah, that will make known unto the king the interpretation.

26 The king answered and said unto Daniel, whose name was Belteshazzar, Art thou able to make known unto me the dream which I have seen, and the interpretation thereof?

27 Daniel answered in the presence of the king, and said, The secret which the king hath demanded cannot be made known unto the wise men, the astrologers, the magicians, the scribes, or to any wise man; but it is made known unto me, because I am made wise and great in learning and in gazing and wisdom was given to me; and I know such an interpretation, and make such knowledge known to the king.

28 But there is a God in heaven who revealeth secrets, and maketh known to the king Nebuchadnezzar, what shall be in the latter days. Thy dream, and the visions of thy head upon thy bed, are these;

29 And as for thee, O king, thy thoughts came into thy mind upon thy bed, what should come to pass hereafter;

30 But as for me, this secret is not great affairs of the world; and his might and power in bringing them to pass. (Lamb.)

31 The revelation made to Daniel, gave him not only wisdom, but power, to save many lives, and do immense good to his people.

32 The rash decree of the king had doomed to one common destruction, not only the sorcerers, but all those in Babylon who were considered as wise and learned men: but Daniel was honoured as the willing instrument of preserving all their lives. The Lord, in answer to the benevolent prayers of his life and his friends, spared the whole company. (Acts xxvii. 24.)

33 Daniel undertook to do it, of his own accord: but this officer, according to the manner of counterfeiters, takes this opportunity of ingratiating himself with the king: as if the discovery of Daniel's ability in this kind was owing purely to his diligence. (Lamb.)

34 Indeed Arioch seems to have claimed some merit to himself; yet he also spoke as one that was glad to be excused from the bloody and odious service that had been assigned him.
revealed to me, for any wisdom that I have more than any living, but for their sakes that shall make known the interpretation to the king, and that thou mightest know the thoughts of my heart.

31 *Thou, O king, *sawest, and behold a great image. This great image, whose brightness was excellent, stood before thee; and the form thereof was terrible.

32 This image's head was of fine gold, his breast and his arms of silver, his belly and his thighs of brass.

33 His legs of iron, his feet part of iron and part of clay.

34 Thou sawest till that a stone was cut out without hands, which smote the image upon his feet that were of iron and clay, and brake them to pieces.

35 Then was the iron, the clay, the brass, the silver, and the gold, broken to pieces together, and became like the chaff of the summer-threshing-floors; and the wind carried them away, that no place was found for them: and the stone that smote the image became a great mountain, and filled the whole earth.

36 This is the dream; and we will tell the interpretation thereof before the king.

37 Thou, O king, art a king of kings: for the God of heaven hath given thee a kingdom, power, and strength, and glory.

38 And wheresoever the children of men dwell, the beasts of the field and the fowls of the heaven hath he given into thine hand, and hath made thee ruler over them all. *Thou art this head of gold."

39 And after thee shall rise another kingdom inferior to thee, and another third kingdom of brass, which shall bear rule over all the earth.

V. 27—36. Daniel plainly told the king, that none of his wise men could possibly declare to him his dream; (thus gently intimating that his anger against them had been unreasonable;) but that the God of heaven revealed such secrets as he saw good; and that he had shown the king, by his disquieting dream, the events of future and distant ages. As for himself, he had not discovered this secret by his own extraordinary wisdom: but God had made it known to him, that he might interpret it to the king, in order that more favour might be shown to his people; and that the king might recollect and understand his own thoughts and dream, and be convinced that Israel's God was the only true and living Lord of all.

V. 31—33. This image made a splendid appearance before the imagination of Nebuchadnezzar, whose mind was attached to worldly magnificence; but the same events were afterwards represented to Daniel, under the appearance of fierce and devouring wild beasts; as the monarchies thus foretold were the great supporters of idolatry, tyranny, and persecution in the world. (Notes, 37—45.)

V. 34, 35. "The Jews unanimously agree that the stone is here meant the Messiah. His kingdom from small beginnings, should proceed to fill the whole earth; as if a stone could grow to a mountain. (Marg. Ref.) Mr. Mede has judiciously observed, that this kingdom is described here in two states, as the kingdom of the stone, and the kingdom of the mountain. (Lowth.) The small and progressive success of Christianity is meant by the former: the universal triumph of it by the latter."

V. 36. Daniel modestly allows his friends a share in the honour of his discoveries; because they were made in answer to their united prayers.

V. 37. Nebuchadnezzar, proud of his extensive dominions and extraordinary prosperity, as having kings for his vassals and tributaries, and meeting with none, any disgraced human nature. The third kingdom, represented by the belly and thighs of the image, formed of brass, must be that of the Macedonians, or Greeks, which succeeded to the Persian monarchy. This was established by the conquests of Alexander the Great, and continued under his successors. It had less external magnificence than those which preceded; and it was founded and supported by force of arms, many of which were annually made of brass: but it was more extensive than either of the others, including many dominions in Europe, as well as those of the Persians in Asia and Africa, and many regions further to the east, than they had ever penetrated. It was therefore foretold, that this kingdom would bear rule over all the earth; which may also allude to the unglorious boast of Alexander, that he had subdued the whole world. ‘The Persians were not inferior in dignity, power, and riches; but were worse, touching ambition, cruelty, and all kinds of vice; showing that the world would grow worse and worse, till it was restored by Christ.’

V. 40-43. These verses evidently describe the Roman empire, as succeeding to that of the Macedonians. It was as strong as iron, and like iron it brake and subdued all before it. No people ever made such extensive conquests, through so many ages, as the Romans did; in the former part of their prosperity, they were remarkable only for valour, hardness, frugality, and poverty, of which iron is a proper emblem. The two consuls by which they were long governed, and the eastern and western empires, into which their dominions were at length divided, might be denoted by the two legs and feet on which the image stood: and the ten toes, into which the feet divided, represented the ten kingdoms into which at length the whole empire was broken. The civil wars which weakened the state, and the conjunction of the Romans with the conquered nations, and afterwards with the Goths, Vandals, and other barbarians who subdued the empire, was denoted by the compounding of the iron with the potter’s clay, which cannot unite or strengthen each other. Thus the Roman empire decayed in strength, even when it was growing more extensive: at length it began evidently to decline, till it was divided into many subordinate kingdoms. This is also represented by the Romans mingling themselves with the seed of men, or of other nations, by alliances and intermarriages, which tended to the subversion of the empire. Yet this monarchy still subsists in the embers, or kingdoms into which it was broken, and of which we shall hereafter have occasion to speak more particularly. (Marc. 12.) The chief power in these ten kingdoms shall be partly secular, and partly ecclesiastical: and the interchanging of the ecclesiastical power upon the secular, shall be the occasion of frequent clashings between them, to the weakening of both parties, and endangering their breaking to pieces. (Luke 12.) These four monarchies, probably the mightiest which ever appeared on earth, have certainly been more celebrated than any others. The story of them, in fact, comprises the grand transactions of mankind from the days of Daniel to this present time. The Church of God likewise has had vastly more concern with these, than with any other empires; the countries belonging to them having been the chief seat of the Redeemer’s kingdom, which will be the universal subversion of the last of them. It cannot therefore be wondered, that so many prophecies should be inserted in the sacred scriptures, concerning these four kingdoms, than about other nations and empires.

V. 44, 45. In the days of these kings, or during the prevalence of the Roman authority, the God of heaven had determined to set up another kingdom, which would never be destroyed, or fall under the power of any conquerors; seeing it would break in pieces, and consume all these kingdoms, and stand for ever. This was represented by ‘a stone cut out without hands,’ which smote the image and utterly destroyed it, and became a great mountain filled the whole earth. (Note, 34, 35.) The stone was entirely distinct from the image, neither opposite to it and all its interests: it must therefore be a kingdom set up by the power of God, without the concurrence of human policy or force, and in opposition... to all the authority and combined efforts of the princes of this world. The kingdom of Christ was evidently intended: from small beginnings, it hath already made a vast progress: it hath subdued, and will continue to subvert, Pagan and Antichristian kingdoms, and to entirely destroy and disperse them: and at length it will triumph over all opposition, and become a great mountain, and fill the whole earth. This part of the prophecy yet remains to be accomplished: so that we have in this dream a most extraordinary prophetic abstract of the most signal events, that would take place, through all succeeding ages, nearly to the consummation of all things. As far as the accomplishment hath proceeded, it hath been most exact and undeniable; and future ages shall be filled with astonishment and awe, by witnessing this Stone, cut out without hands, destroying the remaining toes of this image, and universally triumphant. Thus the great God made known to this heathen prince what was afterwards to come to pass; and the dream was certain, and the interpretation thereof sure.

V. 46—49. Nebuchadnezzar was so astonished by Daniel’s so exactly declaring his dream, and showing him such wonderful events conjured up, that he thought him a deity, and attempted to render him adoration with sacrifices and incense. Doubtless Daniel withdrew him from his purpose, and informed him more fully, to whom the honour was due; upon which he acknowledged the God of Daniel to be “a God of gods, ” &c. Yet he seems not to have been convinced, that it was necessary for him to renounce idolatry, and to become his worshipper and servant. He however greatly preferred and enriched Daniel, and at his request he preferred his companions also; but Daniel became one of his chief ministers. No doubt they accepted of these preferments, in hopes of rendering some service to their people and religion, as well as of doing some general good to mankind. Hence it is plain, that hitherto there were no religious tests or observances required by the king, previous to their admission to places of trust and authority.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—13.

No greatness or prosperity can secure so much as an undisturbed night’s sleep; and when the Lord pleases he can render men miserable even by uneasy dreams. He hath various methods of making known his purposes; in order to manifest his own glory, to draw men’s attention to his servants, and to evidence the authenticity of his sacred oracles. Men are generally more eager to gratify their curiosity, or to dive into futurity, than to learn the way of salvation or the path of duty; yet all foreknowledge of future events tends to increase anxiety and trouble: except as it is counterpoised by submission to the will, and confidence in the wisdom, truth, and love of God. They who attend on the courts of princes, learn the language of benevolence; but the most emphatical wishes of health, life, or salvation, are frequently unmeaning compliments, which run counter to the real desires of their hearts. Yet Christians may often use the same words in sincerity; praying for kings and all in authority, that they may properly fill up their high stations on earth, and also live for ever in the felicity of heaven. It is a great evil, when multitudes are subjected to the arbitrary sway of one capricious and haughty tyrant, who may imperiously command the most absurd and impossible things; who having been long honoured, can brook no denial or delay; and who deals about death, without feeling or remorse, on the most inoffensive of his subjects. Such rulers are generally extremely jealous and suspicious, and apt to misconstrue the most reasonable actions or expressions into rebellion and treason: and the rewards that they confer when gratified, are a very inadequate counterbalance for the miseries they inflict when enraged; in which they generally involve the innocent with the guilty. We should therefore be thankful to live under a limited monarchy, in which our sovereign is authorized and enabled to do as much good as he will, but has no legal power of doing injustice. Yet we should remember that God is just, even when men are most unjust; and that they who fall victims to the cruel jealousy of unreasonable tyrants, often on other accounts deserve their doom. The Lord also orders every event, as may best detect the folly and imposture of those varied delusions, which succeed one another in the world, and the insufficiency of all human power, wisdom, and penetration: that by the confession even of those who oppose his truth, when baffled in their devices, it may appear; that the discoveries he makes and the operations he performs, are impossible to all others. But the views of the most sagacious of ungodly men are strangely confused, in respect of the glorious Lord of all; they have a faint idea of his pre-eminence, and of some of his perfections; but his majesty and mercy, his exaltation and condescension, his dwelling with human flesh to save and bless sinful men, and all the glories displayed in the great work of redemption, are wholly hidden from them; and they are more apt to conceive of God as distant, and as not interfering in the affairs of men; than to suppose that not "a sparrow falls to the ground," nor "a hair from our heads without him."

V. 14—30.

The furious rage of men who cannot, or will not distinguish between "the pure, peaceable, and holy wisdom which is from above," and that "which is earthly, sensual, and devilish," may involve the servants of God under the same condemnation with the vilest impostors; but he knows how to rescue them, and even to make their dangers the means of their greatest good. He directs them to a gentle and cautious deportment in the midst of the greatest injuries and perils: but whatever methods they adopt for detecting the purposes, or pacifying the rage, of wicked men; their grand means is to excite one another to prayer for mercy to the God of heaven, who is able to extricate them from every difficulty, and to keep them from perishling with the wicked. "The secret of the Lord is with them that fear him," and though we do not expect such immediate revelations from God as Daniel was favoured with; yet he will answer our believing prayers for direction in every perplexity, show us whatever is for our good, and turn our fears and sorrows into grateful praises.

Every renewed mercy should lead us to renew our admissions: we should remember the glorious perfections of our God, the honour of his kingdom, and the wise and righteous dispensations of his providence, who changes times and seasons, and removeth and seeth us kings: we should celebrate him as the Giver of knowledge and wisdom, as knowing what is in the darkness, and dwelling in inaccessible light, whilst we thank him for the favours bestowed on us, and for granting us the instruction, help, and encouragement, that we sought from him in our tribulations. But when the Lord peculiarly honours us before men, we must be sure to remember and acknowledge, that it is not for our sakes, but for his name's sake, and for the benefit of his Church, and for the conviction of his enemies, that there is indeed a God in heaven, that can reveal such secrets, and perform such works, as it never entered into the heart of the wisest man to conceive possible: of this the prophecies contained in the sacred scriptures, and fulfilling through the successive ages of the world, are a full demonstration to every considered mind.

The flame of which killeth those who throw them in, 20—23. The king is astonished, at seeing them walk unharmed in the fire, with a fourth like to the Son of God, 24, 25. They come forth; and all the vast company see that the fire has not touched them, 26, 27. He blesses God, and decrees severe punishment on those who speak against him, 28, 29. Their subsequent promotion, 30.

NEBUCHADNEZZAR the king made an image of gold, whose height was three score cubits, and the

V. 31—49.

The most powerful and renowned empires, that have been erected on earth, are but as the baseless fabric of a disjointed vision, which vanisheath when we awake: they may excel in brightness and be very terrible, but they are only a vain pageant of glory and excellency; for these are substantially to be found in God and heavenly things alone. The kings and conquerors of the earth have in every age kept the nations in an uproar, by their ambitious projects, and the revolutions which they have occasioned. Some have been more eminent for wealth, some for power, some for hardy courage and ruinous success: their delight has been in destroying, subduing, breaking in pieces, and crushing mankind: one form of tyranny hath often been superseded by another still more base and barbarous: and men in general have been groaning under the effects of their contests and vices! But all human power and prowess tend to decay: many mighty empires have gradually been weakened, till they have been subverted by open enemies, or by intestine convulsions. In the midst of all these events the God of heaven is setting up his kingdom, not by human might or power, but by his word and Spirit. This does not interfere with the proper exercise of any human authority: but it will, by its secret operation, overturn and destroy all opposing or intervening power, break in pieces every antichrist, fill the earth, and continue for ever.

May we be the willing subjects of this kingdom, and spend our lives in seeking its peace and prosperity! It is natural for men to run into extremes; and either to despise and injure, or to idolize, those who speak the word of God to them: but our business is to direct their attention to the great Author and Giver of every good gift. Many have some general apprehensions of the power and majesty of God, and that others ought to serve him, who yet have no serious thoughts of worshipping him themselves. He, however, overrules even such convictions to bring his servants into those stations, in which they are to be employed: and they may, consistently accept the favours offered them, when they give them an opportunity of doing good, and are not clogged with any sinful conditions. It behoves those who are advanced to be mindful of their former friends; but far more to use their influence in promoting the wise and righteous, that God may be glorified, and the best interests of mankind furthered by them.
CHAPTER III.

breath thereof of six cubits: he set it up in the plain of Dura, in the province of Babylon.

2 Then Nebuchadnezzar the king sent to gather together the princes, the governors, the captains, the judges, the treasurers, the counsellors, the sheriffs, and all the rulers of the provinces, to come to the dedication of the image, which Nebuchadnezzar had set up.

3 Then the princes, the governors, and captains, the judges, the treasurers, the counsellors, the sheriffs, and all the rulers of the provinces, were gathered together unto the dedication of the image that Nebuchadnezzar the king had set up; and they stood before the image that Nebuchadnezzar had set up.

4 Then an herald cried a loud, To you full is the commandment: O people, nations, and languages,

5 That at what time ye hear the sound of the cornet, flute, harp, sackbut, psaltery, dulcimer, and all kinds of music, ye fall down and worship the golden image that Nebuchadnezzar the king hath set up.

6 And whoso falleth not down and worshippeth, shall the same hour be cast into the midst of a burning fiery furnace.

7 Therefore at that time, when all the people heard the sound of the cornet, flute, harp, sackbut, psaltery, and all kinds of music, all the people, the nations, and the languages, fell down and worshipped the golden image, that Nebuchadnezzar the king had set up.

8 Wherefore at that time certain Chaldeans came near, and accused the Jews.

9 They spake and said to the king Nebuchadnezzar, O king, live for ever.

10 Thou, O king, hast made a decree that every man that shall hear the sound of the cornet, flute, harp, sackbut, psaltery, and dulcimer, and all kinds of music, shall fall down and worship the golden image.

11 And whoso falleth not down and act of adoration by the striking up of all kinds of musical instruments at once, might be intended to allure them by soothing strains to join in the worship, and inspire fervour into their supposed devotion. But to secure uniformity in this vast company, it was also proclaimed that every one who refused compliance, should immediately be cast into a burning fiery furnace. It does not appear that any were obliged to attend, who did not hold places under government; others would doubtless be there, and then they must comply; but these were constrained to be present, at a vast trouble and expense from every part of the empire; so that it was a sort of religious test, by which they were to approve themselves proper persons to be employed in the king's service; and as it is common on such occasions, there was a general conformity observed. Almost every person concerned was so overawed by the menaces and power of the king, or so allured by the hopes of ingratiating themselves with him: or so devoid of principle, knowledge, or conscience: or so attached to a pompous idolatry, that they unanimously observed the signal, and prostrated themselves in adoration of the golden image.

The several words, by which the different officers, and the various kinds of musical instruments, are enumerated, seem not to admit of any satisfactory explanation: for, without referring to ancient usages, they cannot be distinctly made intelligible, except to those few who are fully acquainted with those usages, and perhaps scarcely even to them. The idol is not known for an idol, so long as he is with the workman: but when the ceremonies and customs are recited and used, and the consent of the people is there: then of a block they think they have made a god.
12. There are certain Jews whom thou hast set over the affairs of the province of Babylon, Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego; these men, O king, have not regarded thee: they serve not thy gods, nor worship the golden image thou hast set up.

13. Then Nebuchadnezzar in his rage and fury commanded to bring Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego. Then they brought these men before the king.

14. Nebuchadnezzar spake and said unto them, Is it true, O Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-nego, do not ye serve my gods, nor worship the golden image which I have set up?

15. Now if ye be ready that at what time ye hear the sound of the cornet, flute, harp, sackbut, psaltery, and dulcimer, and all kinds of music, ye fall down and worship the image which I have set up; well: but if ye worship not, ye shall be cast the same hour into the midst of a burning fiery furnace; and who is that God that shall deliver you out of my hands?

16. Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego answered, and said to the king, O Nebuchadnezzar, we are not careful to answer thee in this matter.

17. If it be so, O king, as thou dost require, ye be able to deliver us from the burning fiery furnace, and he will deliver us out of thine hand, O king.

18. But if not, be it known unto thee, O king, that we will not serve thy gods, nor worship the golden image which thou hast set up.
Then Nebuchadnezzar the king was astonished, and rose up in haste, and spake, and said unto his 7 counsellors, Did not we cast three men bound into the midst of the fire? They answered and said unto the king, True, O king.

He answered and said, Lo, I see four men loose, walking in the midst of the fire, and they have no hurt; and the form of the fourth is like the Son of God.

Then Nebuchadnezzar came near to the mouth of the burning fiery furnace, and spake, and said, Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, are servants of the most high God, come forth, and come hither. Then Shadrach, Meshach, and Abednego, came forth of the midst of the fire.

And = the princes, governors, and captains, and the king's counsellors, being gathered together, saw these men, upon whose bodies the fire had no power, nor was an hair of their head singed, neither were their coats changed, nor the smell of fire had passed on them.

The destruction of all that belonged to them. Thus they were cast bound into this tremendous furnace of fire, at the time when it was heated to that extreme degree, that the executioners were slain by the vehement flame which issued out of it. It is not improbable that they had been forward to comply with the king's orders, and to show their malice against the Jews; and thus they fell victims to their own evil dispositions. Every circumstance, however, served to illustrate the greatness of the miracle, in the preservation of those who fell down bound into the fiery furnace.

Some think that Nebuchadnezzar was astonished by the death of his mighty men, or by the terrors of his conscience: but it is more likely, that he saw at a distance the young men walking loose in the fiery furnace. It seems, that it was large enough to admit of their walking about in it, and was probably formed like those in which lime is at present burned. He called his councillors to witness this astonishing incident: they had thrown three men bound into the fire; but now four were walking about, in the midst of the furnace; and the fourth was so glorious that he was like to a Son of God, or a holy angel. The fire, it seems, had power to burn their bonds, though not to singe their garments: they found no inconvenience, and felt no terror in the midst of this most vehement fire, nor any desire to come forth from it; they probably were employed in thankful praise and adoration of the great Deliverer, though the song ascribed to them in the Accad-Iphna is not genuine: and, whatever the king might mean by the fourth person being like the Son of God; it is probable, that it was indeed the eternal and coeval Son of the Father, and not a created angel. (Marg. Ref.)
28 Then Nebuchadnezzar spake, and said, *Blessed be the God of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-ego, who hath sent his angel, and delivered his servants, that trusted in him, and have changed the king's word, and yielded their bodies, that they might not serve nor worship any god, except their own God.

29 Therefore *I make a decree, that every people, nation, and language, which speak any thing amiss against the God of Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-ego, shall be cut in pieces, and their houses shall be made a dung-hill; *because there is no other God that can deliver after this sort.

30 Then *the king promoted Shadrach, Meshach, and Abed-ego, in the province of Babylon.
chap. iv.

nebuchadnezzar proclaims to all nations the lord's dealings with him, adding benedictory salutations and admiring praises, 1-3. he states that he had a dream which the magicians could not interpret, 4-7; and that he related it to daniel, 8-18; who interpreted it, 19-27. the dream fulfilled in nebuchadnezzar's loss of dignity, reason, and almost the human form, for a season, 28-33; but being restored, he humbly and fervently adores and prais-es god, 34-37.

if the religious tenets of the persecuted do not deserve punishment, yet their obstinacy and contempt of legal authority do. thus princes have often been wrought up to the highest pitch of rage and fury against their most useful and inoffensive subjects, and their most faithful servants: and christians have been dragged as the vilest malefactors before kings and rulers; and put to the dreadful alternative, either to risk the everlasting wrath of god by deliberate disobedience to his commandments, or to suffer every torture that the infernal rage and cruelty of man could devise. they who have been long accustomed to be obeyed with unreserved servility, and to overpower all opposition, can often scarcely conceive of a power above them, or a god able to deliver his servants out of their hands: but their impious boasts and proud menaces are real kindnesses to the persecuted, who need not be careful or fearful, in answering under such circumstances. indeed these fiery trials will not suit the superficial or hypocritical; their fear of man, and love of the world, and want of fear or love to god, and above all, their want of faith, will concur in rendering them apostates in the time of temptation. nor will every real believer be able to stand with serene and unshaken fortitude, when first cast into such a trying situation. but the lord will strengthen his people's faith in the time of need: and a firm reliance on the divine wisdom, power, truth, and mercy, together with peace of conscience, and an assured joyful hope of heaven, will gradually compose their minds, and determine them to venture all consequences rather than sin against the lord. he is as able as ever to preserve the lives of his servants, in the most eminent perils, to support them under the most exquisite sufferings, and abundantly to recompense all their losses for his sake. a firm persuasion of these truths will fortify the soul against temptations to prevaricate, or to be ashamed of christ: for no plea of necessity, danger, obligation, or example, will be sufficient, if we deliberately break god's commandments for the sake of temporal safety or advantage. we should be meek in our replies, "not rendering railing for railing," for the wrath of man worketh not the righteousness of god; but we must also be decisive, that we will obey god rather than man, and take the consequences.

v. 24-30.

a firm and resolute conduct, however calm and prudent, will greatly enrage proud persecutors, whose furious countenances both show the misery of being the slaves of their own passions, and prove whose children they are, and what master they serve; but this does not render them more to be feared; for at most they can only kill the body, and by increasing the intenseness, they decrease the duration of the sufferings that they inflict, and only expose their own folly, and impotency. but what unknown guilt have persecutors to answer for! the crimes of their numerous instruments will in some sense be chargeable on them: and the souls of the murderers, (if not their lives also,) as well as the blood of the murdered, will be required at their hands. it must then be infinitely dangerous to all, whether principals or accessories, to meddle with this diabolical business: and could we see into the eternal world, we should behold the persecuted believer safe from the malice of his foes: and the willing executioners of the unjust rage of persecutors, enduring the wrath of god in unquenchable fire. the lord can render every furnace of affliction, and the bed of death, nay, the rack, or the flames, the scenes of sweet communion betwixt him and his people. their sufferings only tend to loosen their bonds, and to set them at liberty from sin and the world: they may be comfortable in any situation, by the manifested presence of the son of god; and this may be so evident, as even to fill their persecutors with astonishment and dismay. the lord can soon convince the most proud that he is above them, and show them the madness and folly of their rebellion: he will effectually "cause the wrath of man to turn to his praise, and restrain the remainder of it," he can exert adorations even from his enemies; and make all men see how wise, safe, and happy they are, who adhere to his service, in seasons of peculiar danger and difficulty. he can make those instrumental in stopping the mouths of blasphemers, and in promoting the knowledge of his great name, who have no real love to him: and he can render the sufferings of his people conducive to their temporal as well as eternal good. "o lord god of hosts, blessed is the man, who putth his trust in thee!" finally, let us remember, that he, who preserved these pious jews in the fiery furnace, is able to uphold us in the hour of sharp temptation, to keep us from falling into sin, in the most unfavourable circumstances, and to present us faultless before the presence of his glory with exceeding joy.

4 p 2
NOTES.

CHAP. IV. V. 1—3. This chapter no doubt contains the exact words of Nebuchadnezzar's proclamation, which Daniel was directed to insert in his prophecy; and thus it received the sanction of divine inspiration. Nebuchadnezzar was induced to send the wonderful narrative of those things that had happened to him, connected with his sentiments concerning them, into every part of his extensive dominions, whilst he was under that impression of divine things which they had made upon his mind.—We have repeatedly found this haughty monarch under some general convictions, concerning the pre-eminent power and majesty of Jehovah; yet it was also evident, that there was no gracious change in his disposition and conduct: but the beginning and the conclusion of this chapter lead us, at least, to hope that he was at last made a monument of the victorious power of divine grace, and the exceeding riches of divine mercy. Without any such pompous additions to his name, and style of king, as were generally customary: (Nasa. v. 12.) he addressed himself to all the inhabitants of the earth, meaning chiefly, but not exclusively, those of his own dominions. He began by wishing them peace, as the sum of all earthly blessings; which is the more observable, as he had spent his life in embroiling them in wars: he deemed it good thus publicly to declare the miraculous dealings of God with him; it was proper, reasonable, becoming, and useful: and he concluded with breaking out into admiration of the greatness and power of the wondrous works of the Lord, and an acknowledgment of his everlasting authority and kingdom. If we consider Nebuchadnezzar's previous character, and the most humiliating and distressing calamity which the chapter records, we shall be convinced that sudden silence, or outrageous blasphemy, was more to be expected from him, than such an adoration as this, of that God who had so exalted and abased him.

V. 4—7. God's particular judgment often resembles the general one, in coming suddenly and unexpectedly, when men indulge themselves in carnal security. (Lam. viii.) After Nebuchadnezzar had successfully finished his wars, and the vast improvements and buildings which he made at Babylon, of which many authors have written copiously and as men filled with astonishment; he had an uninterrupted peace, rest, and prosperity in his palace, and probably expected to end his days in tranquil enjoyment: but he was suddenly alarmed by a remarkable dream, and by his thoughts upon his bed concerning it. According to custom, therefore, he published an edict, commanding the attendance of all his wise men, that they might interpret the dream to him; but, though on a former occasion they had promised to interpret his dream if he would declare it to them; yet they were not able at this time to do it. Perhaps they thought that some calamity was foreboded, but not being able to determine anything distinctly about it, they did not choose to risk the consequence of a conjectural interpretation, but rather to submit to the disgrace of not being able to interpret it, as no other punishment was denounced.

V. 8—9. Whether the king consulted the other wise men to prove them, before he applied to Daniel; or whether he would rather have received the desired information from them, than from him; he could scarcely avoid recollecting, that Daniel had formerly shown him both his dream and the interpretation of it. In relating this conference he observed, that Daniel was also called Belteshazzar, according to the name of his god, Bel, or Belus; as he had formerly worshipped this idol as his god, though when he wrote this he worshipped the God of heaven; (37;) and that in Daniel was the Spirit of the holy Gods, or of the Holy God: the name of God being plural in the Hebrew, though generally used with a singular adjective or verb. He next noticed, that he had addressed Daniel, as the master of the magicians; as being pre-eminent among all the reputed wise men of Babylon; for he had not at that time learned to distinguish between a prophet of the Lord and these impostors, except as he deemed Daniel more skillful than they. Convinced however, that he spoke by the Spirit of the holy Gods, or the Lord God of Israel, and that no secret was so concealed from him, as to occasion him any perturbation of mind, he earnestly desired him to interpret his visions.
the fruit thereof much, and in it was meat for all; the beasts of the field had shadow under it, and the fowls of the heaven dwelt in the boughs thereof, and all flesh was fed of it.

13 I saw in the visions of my head upon my bed, and, behold, a watcher and an holy One came down from heaven;

14 He cried aloud, and said thus, Hew down the tree, and cut off his branches; shake off his leaves, and scatter his fruit; let the beasts get away from under it, and the fowls from his branches.

15 Nevertheless, leave the stump of his roots in the earth, even with a band of iron and brass, in the tender grass of the field; and let it be wet with the dew of heaven, and let his portion be with the beasts of the grass in the field.

16 Let his heart be changed from man's, and let a beast's heart be given unto him; and let seven times pass over him.

17 This matter is by the decree of the watchers, and the demand by the word of the holy ones: to the intent that the living may know that the highest ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will, and setteth up over it the basest of men.

18 This dream I king Nebuchadnezzar have seen. Now thou, O Belteshazzar, declare the interpretation thereof, forasmuch as all the wise men of my kingdom are not able to make known unto me the interpretation: but thou art able; for the Spirit of the holy Gods is in thee.

19 ¶ Then Daniel, whose name was Belteshazzar, was astonished for one hour, and his thoughts troubled him. The king spake, and said, Belteshazzar, let not the dream, or the interpretation thereof, trouble thee. Belteshazzar answered and said, My lord, the dream be to them that hate thee, and the interpretation thereof to thine enemies.

V. 10–18. As the king lay asleep, he dreamed that he saw a tree, in the centre of the earth, (conceiving of it as of a wide extended plain) of so enormous a height and size, that its top reached to heaven, and it was visible to the extremity of the earth. This tree was covered with an exuberance of beautiful leaves, and loaded with immense quantities of fruit; its branches formed a covert for the beasts of the field, and places for the nests of the fowls of the air, and all the inhabitants of the earth fed upon its fruit. This represented the exceedingly prosperous condition of Nebuchadnezzar, the height of his exaltation, the extent of his dominions and renown, the splendour of his kingdom, the multitude of his subjects who received protection from him, and the peace and plenty which they enjoyed under his administration. (Marg. Ref.) He then saw a watcher and a holy One, either a holy angel, or a divine person, who was called a watcher, as watching over the affairs of men, (23, 24,) who spake with great authority and energy, and as giving orders to his servants, to hew down the tree, &c: yet, when the branches, leaves, and fruit should be destroyed or scattered, and the beasts and fowls driven away, the stump of the tree was to be preserved in the earth, as if girt round with iron and brass, being overgrown with grass, and wet with the dew of heaven. Here a transition was made from the tree, to Nebuchadnezzar, who was represented by it; the tree being lost sight of, a person came in its stead; (as the imagination in dreams frequently passes from one thing to another, in a wild and incoherent manner.) This person was represented as living on the grass of the field, as weted with the dew of heaven, as having his portion with the beasts; and as having lost the heart or disposition of a man; being estranged from the pursuits, employments, and manners of life peculiar to the human species, and fitted to associate with the beasts of the field. Thus he would continue, till seven times or years passed over him; and then this condition would be terminated, and he restored to his former capacities and situation. All this would take place by the decree of the watchers, and by the demand of the holy Ones, which some understand of the holy angels, the ministers of Providence; who obtained from God this decree, and commission to carry it into execution, for the manifestation of the divine glory in abasing this proud man. Others by holy ones understand the saints of God, true believers, in answer to whose earnest prayers for deliverance from oppression, this decree was made. But some think that the Holy, Holy, Holy Lord God of Hosts, the triune Jehovah, was meant by the watchers and the Holy Ones: and indeed Daniel's interpretation gives great sanction to this opinion: as he says that this was the decree of the most High, (23, 24,) By his appointment this event would take place, and he notified to all that lived on the earth, that they might know, that the most High was the ruler in the kingdom of men; that he was above the mightiest monarchs, and disposed of them and their dominions as he pleased: and that he frequently placed over them the meanest and basest of men. This dream Nebuchadnezzar desired Daniel to interpret; as he, and he alone, could do it, by the inspiration of the Spirit of God.
20 The tree that thou sawest, which grew, and was strong, whose height reached unto the heaven, and the sight thereof to all the earth:

21 Whose leaves were fair, and the fruit thereof much, and in it was meat for all; under which the beasts of the field dwelt, and upon whose branches the fowls of the heaven had their habitation:

22 It is thou, O king, that art grown and become strong: for thy greatness is grown, and reacheth unto heaven, and thy dominion to the end of the earth.

23 And whereas the king saw a watcher and an holy One coming down from heaven, and saying, Hew the tree down, and destroy it; yet leave the stump of the roots thereof in the earth, even with a band of iron and brass, in the tender grass of the field; and let it be wet with the dew of heaven; and let his portion be with the beasts of the field, till seven times pass over him;

24 This is the interpretation, O king, and this is the decree of the most High, which is come upon my lord the king:

25 That they may dwell with the beasts of the field, and they shall make thee to eat grass as oxen, and they shall wet thee with the dew of heaven, and seven times shall pass over thee; that thou know that the most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will.

26 And whereas they commanded to leave the stump of the tree roots; thy kingdom shall be sure unto thee, after that thou shalt have known that the heavens do rule.

27 Wherefore, O king, let my counsel be acceptable unto thee, and break off thy sins by righteousness, and thine iniquities by shewing mercy to the poor; if it may be a lengthening of thy tranquillity.

under perturbation of mind. This the king noticed, and bade him not be troubled at the dream, or its interpretation; intimating that he should not be offended at him, for declaring the heaviest tidings to him. Accordingly Daniel introduced the subject with a very courteous, yet doubtless sincere expression of his good will: had the matter rested with him, the dream and its interpretation would have concerned only his enemies; but the most high God had otherwise determined. He was troubled for the great judgment of God, which he saw ordained against the king: and so the prophets used, on the one part, to denounce God's judgments, for the zeal they bare to his glory; and on the other, to have compassion upon man, and also to consider, that they should be subject to God's judgments, if they did not regard them with pity.

One hour. The word hour, as measuring time, occurs first in the writings of this prophet. (iii. 15.)

V. 20—26. The application of the dream to Nebuchadnezzar was very obvious. He was the flourishing tree, which in various respects was emblematical of his power, fame, wealth, and prosperity. The hewing down also of this tree, with the circumstances attending it, showed his loss of these advantages, through that judgment of God that was coming upon him: for being smitten with a most extraordinary madness, and becoming for a time like a brute, he would be utterly incapable of all the functions of government; and being consequently set aside, others would assume the direction of public affairs: and so remedy being found for his malady, and discovering in every thing the propensities of an animal, he would be driven from the dwellings of men, and left to associate with the beasts, feeding with them upon grass, and exposed without shelter or covering to the inclemencies of the weather. This would continue for seven times, or years; till at length he would be made to know, that the most High ruled in the kingdom of men, and gave it to whom he pleased. It is observable, that Daniel omitted the last expression used by the king; and setteth up over it the basest of men; thinking perhaps the application mortifying enough without repeating it. He also showed him, that the kingdom would be restored to him, after he was convinced, that however high any of the kings of the earth might be exalted, the heavens, or the God of heaven, alone ruled with independent and absolute authority. This dream and its interpretation would become known in the court of Nebuchadnezzar; and as Daniel was in great authority there, when the former part of it received so remarkable an accomplishment, he would use his influence to lead all parties concerned in the fulfilling of the latter part also; and thus God wonderfully inclined their hearts to wait for that event, managing the affairs of the empire by a regency, and not advancing any other person to the throne; that it might be open for Nebuchadnezzar's restoration, when he recovered the use of his rational powers.

V. 27. Daniel concluded by entreaty the king to take in good part the counsel that he was about to give him; and in good earnest to repent and renounce his sins, and begin to lead a life of righteousness; to cease from all oppression and injustice, and show mercy to his poor subjects and captives, especially the poor worshippers of Jehovah; that so renouncing idolatry, he might become the servant of the most High God; for perhaps this might prove a lengthening of his tranquillity. Daniel could not be sure but that this judgment was conditionally denounced, (as the destruction of Nineveh by Jonah,) or it might at least be retarded, or alleviated. Wherefore, O king,
CHAPTER IV.

28 All this came upon the king Nebuchadnezzar.

29 At the end of twelve months, he walked in the palace of the kingdom of Babylon.

30 The king spake and said, Is not this great Babylon, that I have built for the house of the kingdom, by the might of my power, and for the honour of my majesty?

31 While the word was in the king's mouth, there fell a voice from heaven, saying, O king Nebuchadnezzar, to thee it is spoken; The kingdom is departed from thee.

32 And they shall drive thee from men, and thy dwelling shall be with the beasts of the field: thou shalt eat grass as oxen, and seven times shall pass over thee, until thou know that the most High ruleth in the kingdom of men, and giveth it to whomsoever he will.

33 The same hour was the thing fulfilled upon Nebuchadnezzar: and he was driven from men, and did eat grass as oxen, and his body was wet with the dew of heaven, till his hair was grown like eagles' feathers, and his nails like bird's claws.

34 And at the end of the days Nebuchadnezzar lifted up mine eyes unto heaven, and mine understanding returned unto me, and I blessed the most High, and I praised and honoured him that liveth for ever, whose dominion is an everlasting dominion, and his kingdom is from generation to generation:

35 And all the inhabitants of the earth are reputed as nothing: and he doeth according to his will in the army of royal city, the centre of his kingdom, and the seat of his government: this he supposed he had done by his own power; and he aimed in doing it to promote the honour of his majesty. Thus he took all the glory to himself, and overlooked entirely his obligations and accountableness to God, and his dependence on him: he regarded all as his own, to be used according to his own will, and for his own glory, without any respect to the will and glory of God. This was the language of a proud apostate rebel, of one who aspired to the throne of God and was his rival; according to the first temptation, "Ye shall be as gods," and according to the character of the ambitious tempter, who aspires to be the god and prince of this world; (Marg. Ref.) But whilst this proud word was in the king's mouth, and probably known to none but God and himself; a voice came from heaven directed to him by name, and denouncing the immediate execution of the sentence predicted in the dream. These seem to have been the last words that he understood, before he was deprived of his reason; and they were attended with such terror, as might concur in bringing the judgment upon him: however, he well recollected them, when at length he recovered his senses. Immediately the sentence was carried into execution; and he continued brutalized, (so to speak,) till his hair, (probably over his whole body,) were grown like eagles' feathers, and his nails like birds' claws. It is of no use to inquire particularly into the nature and causes of this strange malady, or to show that ought of the kind ever befell any other person. Nothing is too hard for the Lord: it was immediately from him, in execution of his righteous sentence, for the display of his own glory, and for other most merciful purposes, though it had the appearance of severity. The previous notice, given by the dream and its interpretation, would tend to dispose the persons concerned to concur with the divine appointment, and to leave him for the time to the life of a brute.
established in my kingdom, and 4 excellent majesty was added unto me.

37 Now Nebuchadnezzar praised and extolled and honored the King of heaven, who all whose works are truth, and his ways judgment: and those that walk in pride he is able to abase.

V. 34—37. At the end of the predicted season, Nebuchadnezzar was suddenly restored to the perfect use of his reason. He lifted up his eyes to heaven, as a rational creature, and in adoration of the glorious majesty of God, who have reigned over all the kings of the earth; and, (instead of raging like a wild bull in a net, as so proud a man under so mortifying a dispensation would have been apt to do,) he blessed and praised the most high God; acknowledging the justice, wisdom, and mercy of his dealings with him; thanking him for sparing and recovering him; giving him honour and worship, as the living and true God, the universal, almighty, and everlasting Sovereign; in comparison of whom all the inhabitants of the earth, even the mightiest monarchs and conquerors, are regarded as nothing; who doeth according to his own will both in the glorious armies of heaven, and among the inhabitants of the earth: and as none can withstand his power, or defeat his counsels; so none may find fault with any thing he doeth, or call him to account; seeing he hath an unalterable right to do what he will, and cannot deviate from the most perfect wisdom, justice, truth, and goodness. This acknowledgment was the first evidence that his reason was restored to him; and it showed that he was far more rational than he had ever been before; and more fit for ruling others, seeing he understood his subordination to God, as his Ruler and Lord. Accordingly he was reinstated in his honour and prosperity, that his kingdom might be rendered more glorious and renowned than ever: his counsellors and princes, (induced probably by Daniel,) perceiving the predicted change, sought to him, and replaced him on his throne; and he was more honoured and prospered than he had ever been, as he probably ruled more in righteousness, and for the general good of his subjects. And now he declared to the whole world, that instead of seeking his own glory, or worshipping Belus, it was his business and constant practice to worship and honour the king of heaven; all whose works verify his holy word; all whose dealings with his creatures are in justice and wisdom, and who knows how to humble in repentance, or to abase in contempt and destruction, those who walk in pride, and have been most habituated to it or most odious in it. No better words could possibly have been spoken on the subject, nor can any: comment reach their energy and full meaning; and though we cannot perhaps certainly conclude any man's conversion from his words, without we witness his works coincident with them: yet there can be no reasonable doubt, but he was a true penitent, a convert to God, and a believer. The simplicity and humility with which he recorded his own proud and vain-glorious language, and the diligence with which he circulated this mortifying narrative throughout his empire, concur with his excellent discourse of God and his works and his dealings with him, in establishing this conclusion. And the exceeding riches of God's mercy and grace in rendering such a proud, tyrant, idolater, and oppressor, one of his children and servants, should not be veiled from our view. Nor does this instance materially differ from the case of other sinners, who have given evidence of their humiliation, repentance, faith, reconciliation to God, love to him, and zeal for his glory, even when connected with their own disgrace: for, where sin hath abounded grace much more abounds. Nebuchadnezzar exposes himself to shame before the whole world, that he may glorify God. This is the true way of praising God. It is computed that Nebuchadnezzar did not live above a year after this restoration: and though the imperfect histories which remain of those times, give no distinct account of these events; yet they mention that he prophesied of the conquest of Babylon by the Medes and Persians, and of other remote transactions. This must have arisen from the attention that he paid, towards the close of his life, to the prophecies of Daniel, and the assurance with which he declared his expectation of their accomplishment.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS. V. 1—9.

The dispassionate language of those who have most disturbed the earth by their ambition, implies that peace is the greatest of all blessings; and that they are the best friends to mankind, and the most honourable characters, who do most towards promoting and multiplying peace, temporal and spiritual, between God and man, between man and man, and in men's hearts and consciences. When a sinner comes to himself, whatever his previous character and conduct have been, he will deem it good to promote the welfare of mankind, by diffusing the knowledge of God, and of his glorious perfections and wonderful works; and if occasion require, he will be ready to declare the very things which most disturb the sinfulness and folly of his own conduct, and the pride of his own heart. The more men get acquainted with God and his works, the higher their admiration will be of his greatness and glory; and the less they will think of their own attainments and exaltation: and we should account it our privilege to propagate our discoveries on such interesting subjects according to our measure of ability, influence, or authority. When carnal men have accomplished their projects, and have arrived at the degree of prosperity and influence to which they aspired; when they are at rest in their houses or palaces, and flourishing in their external circumstances; when they are saying to their souls, in the king's prospered rewards, and sharply reproves his pride, idolatry, and impiety, 17—23. He explains the hand-writing of the king's impending ruin, and the translation of his kingdom to the Medes and Persians, 24—28. The promised honours are ordered him, 29. That very night Belshazzar is slain, and Darius the Mede takes the kingdom, 30, 31.

V. 10—18.

The utmost worldly prosperity and exaltation, is but as that of a tree growing out of the earth, to a great height, very conspicuous, covered with leaves and branches, and such fruit as may profit men in their temporal interests; and which must soon be cut down, destroyed, or cast into the fire: but the "trees of righteousness," which the Lord hath planted, when they cease to flourish and bear fruit on earth, shall be transplanted to heaven, and be fruitful and flourishing there for ever. Monarchs should use their power to protect and diffuse good among their subjects; but how feeble is their protection, and how trivial their good, compared with that of Christ our Prince and Saviour! The degree andcontinuance of human prosperity depend entirely on that glorious Lord, who "orders all things according to the counsel of his own will," for the honour of his great name; often by the ministration of angels, and in answer to the prayers and for the good of his people. He mercifully corrects, when he might justly destroy: and the most severe and durable of all temporal calamities is unspeakable mercy to a sinner, if it conduceth to the salvation of his soul. And though every kind and degree of insanity be justly dreaded, as the most terrible affliction to which we are here exposed: yet should the most entire madness, idiosm, or even degradation to the rank of the brutes, for years, preserve a sinner from multi-

V. 19—27.

It may well astonish and trouble a benevolent mind, to reflect on the miseries, which impend over ungodly men; and even over many of those, with whom we are most nearly connected, and to whom we are under the greatest obligations. We should, as opportunity offers, be faithful to the greatest of men; yet recollection and caution should precede our addresses, as they must give pain or offence; and they should be delivered with such expressions of goodwill, as may evince, that we are grieved to speak what we dare not conceal, and would gladly avert what we cannot but perceive to be coming upon them. They who are in superior stations should encourage the servants of God to deal plainly with them, as they will be much tempted to the contrary, which would be the loss of both parties. A great part of the minister's faithfulness consists in applying general truths to particular persons or characters; that every sinner may discern himself to be intended, and not others only as his self-love may suggest. This should be so clearly stated, that men may see how the case and BELSHAZZAR the king made a great feast to a thousand of his lords, and drank wine before the thousand.

2 Belshazzar, while the wine was in his hand, commanded to bring the golden and silver vessels, which his father Nebuchadnezzar had taken out of the temple which was in Jerusalem; that the king, and his princes, his wives, and his concubines, might drink therein.

3 Then they brought the golden vessels, that were taken out of the temple of the house of God which was at Jerusalem; and the king, and his princes, his wives, and his concubines, drank in them.

4 They drank wine, and praised the gods of gold, and of silver, of brass, of iron, of wood, and of stone.

character described in the word of God agree with their own; and how the doom denounced belongs to them, except they repent: for the decree of the most high God will be executed upon kings, as well as upon their meanest subjects. It may be doubtful, whether temporal calamities can by any means be averted; but final misery will certainly be escaped by all who repent and turn to God, and do works meet for repentance. And if it be the “Father’s good pleasure to give us the kingdom,” it will be made sure to us, as with a hand of iron and brass; all our trials and losses will work together to prepare us for it, and put us in possession of it; and to bring us to that knowledge of God, that submission to his righteousness, teaching, and authority, and that humble love of his name and zeal for his glory, which constitute the meekness for that inheritance. It behooves those, who declare God’s judgments against sinners, to call them to repentance; and to show them what they must cease from, and do; what they ought to renounce, and what to choose: for there can be no true faith or forgiveness, where men do not break off their sins by righteousness, and learn justice, equity, and mercy to the poor and afflicted. These things duly attended to may lengthen our temporal tranquillity; and if they spring from an upright heart, they will evidence our interest in heavenly blessings.

V. 28—37. When the Lord gives time for repentance as well as warnings, and calls to repent, and men grow hardened in pride; when they persist and increase in self-sufficiency and self-idolatry; in contempt of God, and his authority, justice and mercy; and in sacrilegiously robbing him of his glory: the sentence that has been long suspended over them, must be executed suddenly and without remedy. The voice of his condemning word will silence all the proud speeches, which sinners are uttering to themselves, or to one another. Whatever dreadful misery, or place men fall into on earth, they will one way or other get out again; but they, who lift up their eyes in hell, will never be able to pass that gulf which separates betwixt them and the heirs of salvation. The Lord can increase, extend, limit, and terminate our troubles, as he pleases: and as he can deprive men of, or restore them to, the use of their understandings, and disqualified or again fit them for, every place and service; as he can renew, humble, and soften the heart, and bring the proud, revengeful, and sullen, to become his most devoted supplicant and faithful worshipper and servant: so he can restrain the ambition of men, and lead those who know him not to fulfill his purposes; even where that requires such an exactness in their conduct, as seems only capable of being produced by the most conscientious, unreserved, and self-denying obedience. When sinners recover from that state of infatuation, to which they are reduced by Satan and their lusts, and through which they pore and grovel upon the earth, like the beasts that perish, they will first show it, by lifting up their eyes to heaven, adoring, and expecting help from God, and setting their affections on things above: and when believers are delivered from sanctified affliction, instead of repining at the Lord’s dealings with them, they will, with their restored health and faculties, bless the most high God for his gracious chasiment, as well as for the removal of it; and endeavour to honour him who liveth and reigneth for evermore. In proportion to our near and distinct views of his holy and righteous sovereignty and almighty power, the manner will all the inhabitants of the earth appear in our estimation; for they are reputed as nothing before him. As he doth what he will in heaven and on earth, and none can stay his hand, or call him to account for his conduct; we should learn to receive every thing as his appointment, to submit to his will, to seek his favour, and to rejoice that his counsel shall stand, and he will do all his pleasure. Thus our trials and deliverances will prove mercies; and we shall use every gift of God to promote the glory of the giver. This is our highest privilege, and the sure path to immortal happiness; wherein “excellent majesty will be added to us.” In every circumstance of life and death, we should bless, praise, and honour our God and Saviour, and excite others to do the same; for all his works are done in truth, and his ways are judgment: he knoweth how to abuse those who walk in pride, but he giveth grace and consolation to the humble and broken-hearted sinner, that calls upon him.

NOTES.

CHAP. V. V. 1—4. Belshazzar signifies Bel is his riches: he was the grandson of Nebuchadnezzar, and not his immediate successor, (Note, Esra i. 1—4.) (Marg. Ref.) He reigned seventeen years; and was all that while engaged in unsuccessful war with Cyrus and the Medes and Persians, having succeeded to it along with his kingdom. Cyrus had driven the Chaldean armies out of the field, and at this time besieged Babylon: but the king and people, confiding in their impregnable fortifications, the abundance of provisions stored up in the city, and the extent of cultivated lands within the walls, derided his attempts. Indeed it seemed scarcely possible that he should succeed: but he was raised up by God for that service, and was
 CHAPTER V.

5 In the same hour came forth his fingers of a man's hand, and  wrote over against the candlestick upon the plaister of the wall of the king's palace: and the king saw the part of the hand that wrote.

6 Then the king's *countenance was changed, and his thoughts troubled him, so that the 2 joints of his loins were loosed, and his knees smote one against another.

7 The king cried aloud to bring in the astrologers, the Chaldeans, and the soothsayers. And the king spake, and said to the wise men of Babylon, Whosoever shall read this writing, and shew me the interpretation thereof, shall be clothed with 2 scarlet, and have a chain of gold about his neck, and shall be the third ruler in the kingdom.

8 Then came in all the king's wise men: but they could not read the writing, nor make known to the king the interpretation thereof.

9 Then was king Belshazzar greatly troubled, and his *countenance was changed in him, and his lords were astonished.

10 Now the queen, by reason of the words of the king and his lords, came into the banquet-house: and the queen spake, and said, 1 O king live for ever: let endued with extraordinary capacity, vigour, and perseverance; whilst Belshazzar was a feeble and negligent prince, given up to pleasure, and leaving the affairs of his kingdom to others. Cyrus had already formed his plan, and had privately made preparation for draining off the waters of the Euphrates into adjacent lakes and reservoirs; that he might march his army on its channel into the city: and he waited for this feast, as the proper time for the execution of his design. It was a stated festival, probably observed in honour of some idol, on which it was customary for the people of all ranks to give a full loose to their appetites, in every kind of indulgence: and Cyrus reasonably expected on that occasion to find them off their guard and in the utmost confusion; nor was he disappointed. For, regardless of so potent and vigilant an enemy at the gates, Belshazzar set his subjects the example of riot and excess, and they copied it. He entertained a thousand of his nobles at his own table, and it was considered as a great condescension that he would eat and drink with them; for these princes did not generally mix with their subjects. Whilst they were thus regaling themselves with generous wines, he purposed to fetch the sacred vessels of the temple to drink out of, in contempt of Jehovah and his worshippers. The seventy predicted years of the captivity, from Jehoiakim's first reduction, drew near to an end; and Belshazzar might intend this to show his disregard of the prophecies respecting the restoration of the Jews. The vessels seem hitherto to have remained unmolested in the treasury of Belus: some indeed think, that they had been dedicated to that idol, and used in his worship; but this does not appear from the history. Belshazzar, however, at this time determined to appropriate them to his own use, and to pollute them by idolatry and intemperance. For whilst the company drank out of these sacred vessels, they celebrated the praises of their images, which were mere lifeless gold, or silver, &c.; probably singing songs of their pretended exploits, and to their honour; pouring out libations to them; and ascribing all the victories of their ancestors and the greatness of their city, to their assistance; especially praising them as the authors of their success against the worshippers of Jehovah. Thus they seemed ambitious of carrying impious and blasphemous THEOCRACY to the greatest extreme. Many expositors seem to consider sacrilege as almost exclusively Belshazzar's crime. But the spoiling of the sacred treasures by Nebuchadnezzar, and no doubt appropriating them to his own use, was sacrilege in the same sense, as Belshazzar's employing the sacred vessels to common purposes: and the peculiarity of Belshazzar's sin, seems to have consisted, in studiously and publicly insulting the God of Israel, by using the sacred vessels of his temple, when feasting in honour of the idols of Babylon.

V. 5—9. Whilst the king, his nobles, and women, were rejoicing with impious mirth, in defiance of the power, providence, and word of God; there appeared on the wall of the room, the fingers of a man's hand, employed in writing, over against the candlestick, that it might be more distinctly seen. This no doubt was effected by the ministration of an angel: as the king first saw the hand, so the writing afterwards remained on the wall; and though he did not understand what was written, yet conscious guilt led him to forebode some dreadful meaning. His thoughts troubled him; his remorse of conscience caused him to turn pale; his whole frame was disordered, so that the joints of his loins were loosed through terror, and his knees smote against each other; (Notes, Is. xxi. 2—5, xlv, 1—3.) in great anguish and agitation therefore, he called to his servants to bring in the astrologers, &c.; and with large promises of honour and preferment, he assured them to exert their utmost skill to read and interpret the hand writing. But they were not able to do it; and some not very probable conjectures have been formed concerning the reason of their inability: but we only know, that God was pleased, for the honour of his own name, to hide it from them. This restrained, or increased, Belshazzar's consternation; and his nobles also, notwithstanding their numbers, mirth, and wine, were dismayed and astonished exceedingly. It was probably written in the old Hebrew letters, now called the Samaritan, which the Chaldeans were ignorant of. (Length.) It is, however, hardly conceivable, that no learned man in Babylon should be acquainted with the old Hebrew alphabet. But perhaps the difficulty lay, not in knowing the characters, but in finding out any consistent meaning in them. (Note, 25—28.)

4 Q 2
not thy thoughts trouble thee, nor let thy countenance be changed.

11 There is a man in thy kingdom, in whom the Spirit of the holy Gods; and in the days of thy father, light and understanding, and wisdom, like the wisdom of the gods, was found in him; whom the king Nebuchadnezzar thy father, the king, I say, thy father, made master of the magicians, astrologers, Chaldeans, and soothsayers;

12 Forasmuch as an excellent spirit, and knowledge, and understanding, interpreting of dreams, and shewing of hard sentences, and dissolving of doubts were found in the same Daniel, whom the king named Belteshazzar: now let Daniel be called, and he will shew the interpretation.

13 Then was Daniel brought in before the king. And the king spake and said unto Daniel, Art thou that Daniel, which art of the children of the captivity of Judah, whom the king Belteshazzar, from the name of his idol, he was it seems generally known by his original name. He was not among the magicians, &c. when called by Belteshazzar: and both these circumstances show, that he was well known as a zealous worshipper of Israel’s God, and as entirely estranged from the practices of the magicians; though erroneously considered by Nitocris as the master of them.

17 Then Daniel answered and said before the king. Let thy gifts be to thyself, and give thy rewards to another; yet will I read the writing unto the king, and make known to him the interpretation.

V. 10—12. The queen, here spoken of, was not the queen-consort, as Belteshazzar’s wives and concubines were present at the feast; but the queen-mother, Nitocris, the widow of Evil-merodach, the son of Nebuchadnezzar and the father of Belteshazzar, is generally supposed to be meant. She was a woman of great capacity and reputation; and her active and prudent management had been for some time the chiefstay of the empire. She had not attended this riotous banquet; but hearing the tidings of the handwriting, she came into the room: and, after the customary salutations, exhorted the king to resume his courage, and not to yield to terror or despondency; for though the wise men of Babylon could not read the writing, he had a man in his kingdom who could. She spoke of Daniel in language similar to what Nebuchadnezzar had used, and which she probably had learned from him; for she was aged, and Nebuchadnezzar had not been dead above twenty-four years, so that she no doubt well remembered the extraordinary events which occurred towards the close of his life. Having mentioned, that “in him was the Spirit of the holy Gods,” she spoke with admiration of the variety of knowledge and wisdom that he possessed, like those of the gods, (according to her confused ideas on that subject;) she mentioned his being advanced above all the other wise men of Babylon; as having been repeatedly proved superior to them in excellency of knowledge and disposition, and in interpreting dreams, or solving difficult questions; alluding no doubt to the instances that have been considered. (B. iv.) And she observed that if he were called, he would certainly read and interpret the handwriting. Probably, she knew where to find him, though Belteshazzar did not; and might tacitly intend to censure his neglect of so extraordinary a person. Though Nebuchadnezzar called Daniel

V. 13—16. Some infer from Belteshazzar’s ignorance of Daniel, that he had not been employed by him; but this rather proves that the king minded pleasure more than business; and was better acquainted with those who ministered to his sensuality, than with such as managed affairs of state. It is certain that Daniel did “the king’s business” in the former years of Belteshazzar, (viii. 27,) and it seems probable, that he was never quite laid aside, though comparatively neglected. Indeed Belteshazzar spoke to him with less respect, than Nebuchadnezzar had been used to do; and seems even to have reflected on him as a stranger and a captive, whilst he acknowledged his extraordinary endowments. As, however, the wise men could not read the writing, and he had been informed that Daniel could, he was willing that he should on that condition have the promised recompense.

V. 17. Daniel evidently behaved in a very different manner to Belteshazzar, on this occasion, from what he had formerly done to Nebuchadnezzar; both omitting the customary expressions of respect and goodwill, and slighting his offers of honour and preference. But it should be considered, that Nebuchadnezzar was his senior, as well as his superior in authority, and his benefactor: whereas he spoke to Belteshazzar as a very aged and eminent person, (being at this time about ninety years old,) to one much...
CHAPTER V.

18 O thou king, the most high God gave Nebuchadnezzar thy father a kingdom, and majesty, and glory, and honour.

19 And for the majesty that he gave him, all people, nations, and languages, trembled and feared before him; whom he would he slue, and whom he would he kept alive, and whom he would he set up, and whom he would he put down.

20 But when his heart was lifted up, and his mind hardened in pride, he was deposed from his kingly throne, and they took his glory from him:

21 And he was driven from the sons of men; and his heart was made like the beasts, and his dwelling was with the wild asses: they fed him with grass like oxen, and his body was wet with the dew of heaven; till he knew that there was no God high ruler in the kingdom of men, and that he appointeth it whosoever he will.

22 And thou, O Belshazzar, king, that hast not humbled thine heart, though thou knewest all this; through pride and presumption, in arrogant contempt and defiance of God: for which diabolical sin he was degraded as it were to a brute, till he was brought to submit and worship the Lord; which at length he did in language almost angelical. (Notes, iv.) But though Belshazzar had been fully informed of all these facts, yet he had not humbled himself before God: but had been guilty of an insult on him, more flagrant than any of Nebuchadnezzar's crimes; having sacrilegiously used the consecrated vessels in honour of his base idols, and thus refused to glorify the God, in whose hand his breath was, and whose were all his ways. (Harr. Ref.) And it was at the very time, when he was thus setting Jehovah at defiance, that the handwriting was seen on the wall.

23 But hast lifted up thyself against the Lord of heaven, and they have brought the vessels of his house before thee, and thou, and thy lords, thy wives, and thy concubines, have drunk wine in them; and thou hast praised the gods of silver, and gold, of brass, iron, wood, and stone, which see not, nor hear, nor know: and the God whose hand thy breath is, and whose are all thy ways, hast thou not glorified.

24 Then was the part of the hand sent from him; and this writing was written.

25 c And this is the writing that was written, MENE, MENE, TEKEL, and UPHARSIN.

26 This is the interpretation of the thing: MENE; God hath numbered thy kingdom, and finished it.

27 TEKEL; Thou art weighed in the balances, and art found wanting.

28 PERES; Thy kingdom is divided, and given to the Medes and Persians.
B. C. 538.

29 Then commanded Belshazzar, and they clothed Daniel with scarlet, and put a chain of gold about his neck, and made a proclamation concerning him, that he should be the third ruler in the kingdom.

and Persians, who would possess it between them. It is remarkable, that Daniel never exhorted Belshazzar to repentance, for he knew that his doom was fixed; (Note, 1 Sam. xxviii. 12-19.)

V. 29. Belshazzar seems not to have understood that the sentence was to be executed immediately: but whether he believed Daniel or not, he made a point of showing no resentment, and of ordering him the promised recompense: and though Daniel had previously expressed his contempt of the honours intended him, yet he did not refuse them, though he foresaw the immediate termination of that authority by which they were conferred. Some, however, suppose, that the orders were indeed given immediately; but they were not necessarily adhered to till the morning, which the intervening transactions of course prevented.

V. 30, 31. Whilst these things were transacting in the palace, two divisions of Cyrus's army had marched on the channel of the river into the city, from each end of it; and finding the gates of brass, intended to bar the entrance from the river into the streets, left open, through the carelessness and intoxication of the besieged, they met, and marched into the heart of the city without opposition, and surprised the palace before the alarm was given. So that, having broken in and slain Belshazzar, and proclaimed peace and safety to all who laid down their arms, a general submission followed, and the city was taken, and the empire reduced, almost without further bloodshed.

(Marg. Ref.) Cyrus was son-in-law and nephew to Darius, or Cyaxares, the Mede; to whom the title of king and the civil authority belonged till his death, which happened about two years after: but Cyrus still retained the command of the army, and great power over the whole empire. It is computed, that Darius was born that very year in which Jeconiah was carried captive to Babylon, and a fatal blow given to the kingdom of Judah.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-9.

Carnal men are often most secure, and given up to excessive indulgence, when destruction impends over their heads. Ostrftime and studied magnificence unite with sensuality in stifling their consciences and hardening their hearts; and if we could see how such joyous and luxurious revels are exchanged for "weeping, wailing, and gnashing of teeth," we must view those who "frequent them with a mixture of pride and aversion; as we should a company of condemned malefactors, whom we saw intoxicated, and dancing in their chains, immediately before the hour appointed for their execution. Such drunken carousals were very consistent in the worshippers of lifeless images and of unclean spirits: for it might have been expected, that these objects and ordinances of religious worship would lead men to impiety and blasphemenous defiance of the God of heaven; as well as into every excess in sensual gratification. But what have Christians to do with such revellings, banquets, and abominable idolatries? And what better are the songs used in many modern feasts, extolling intemperate indulgences and licentious amours, than the praises formerly sung to Bacchus, and Venus, or any other of the filthy group of Pagan Deities? Or what are these things but a direct insult on that triumphant God, in whose name we have been baptized? Yet many "think it strange, that we will not run with them to the same excess of riot, speaking evil of us?" Nay, some seem to imagine that no pleasures have their highest relish, unless seasoned with impiety or sacrilege; and they not only sin for the gratification of their sensual passions, but for the sake of sinning; as if their oaths, blasphemies, and profaneness, were paid to them, in proportion as they are provoking to God! and the more they join together in such outrages, the bolder they grow in them. But how easily can the Lord dismay such daring enemies! He has no need to commission thunders, lightnings, or earthquakes: he can do it effectually by a handwring on a wall, or by showing them what he hath written in his word. One glimpse of his glorious and holy majesty, one realizing apprehension of "his wrath revealed against all ungodliness and unrighteousness of men," is sufficient to appall the heart, to change the countenance, and to agitate the whole frame, of the stoutest rebel on earth. But no bodily pain or anguish can give an adequate conception of that inward agony, which sometimes seizes the sinner, in the midst of mirth and jovial company, when enjoying all the delights of sense, with all the magnificence of a palace, or the exultations of a banquet-house. For if God is pleased merely to let a man's conscience loose upon him, his own thoughts will so trouble him, that his feelings will be an anticipation of the sorrows of death and of the pains of hell. How important then is it, that we, above all things, seek to be at peace with him, and with our own consciences? Sometimes indeed such terrors are salutary, and cause a man to cry out. "What must I do to be saved?" and so lead him to Christ for pardon and peace. But many cry out, through horror of conscience and fear of wrath, who are not humbled for their sins, and who seek relief from anguish by yielding vanities. These will liberally reward such as can help them to forget their misery, or assure them with vain hopes, or gratify their curiosity, pride, or sensuality.—But when the Lord lays his hand on men, these expedients do not afford so much as a temporary relief: and he often blinds and infatuates the wise men of this world, that he may bring into notice those whom he hath endued with heavenly wisdom; nor can all human sagacity develop the plainest matter that he is pleased to conceal. Yet the ignorance and uncertainty, which professedly wise men manifest concerning the meaning of sacred Scripture, tends to drive awakened sinners to despair.
CHAPTER VI.

The king shows much grief: but Daniel is miraculously preserved; his accusers are devoured by the lions, 18—24. Darius commands all his subjects to fear before the almighty God, whom Daniel served, 25—27. Daniel's subsequent prosperity, 28.

IT pleased Darius to set over the king's dominion an hundred and twenty princes, which should be over the whole kingdom:

2 And over these, three presidents, of whom Daniel was first: that the princes might give accounts unto them, and the king should have no damage.

it in tyranny and oppression; they have become terrible in proportion as they have been powerful; and they have been hardened in proud contempt of God, instead of being rendered thankful to him. Perhaps he hath made examples of them in the view of others, by some signal judgments till they have learned to submit and to adore: yet the persons who have known all this, have in similar circumstances imitated and exceeded their pride, tyranny, and impieties; regardless of that God “in whom they live and move, and are!” Thus men fill up the measure of their iniquity, and bring upon themselves “the judgment that is written.” Whatever be their rank or situation, persons of this description cannot reasonably expect to hear of any thing, except severe rebukes and awful denunciations, from the servants of God. Soon will every impudent sinner find the hand-writing of God's word, that now stands out against him, executed upon him; whether he be weighed in the balance of the law, as a self-righteous Pharisee, or in that of the Gospel, as a painted hypocrite. His days will soon be numbered and finished; he will be judged and condemned, and all that he seems to have will be taken from him, and divided among his enemies, or successors; whilst nothing will remain for himself but indignation and wrath, tribulation and anguish, for evermore. Ere the uncertain term of life then be finished, let us judge ourselves according to the word of God; let us weigh our characters in his impartial balances: that though the law condemn us as sinners, yet we may not be adjudged unbelievers by the Gospel, but may find an interest in those blessings, which will be perfected in a kingdom that cannot be moved, or taken from us. Having these good things, we may despise the honour that cometh from man; and we shall rejoice and be exalted, whilst sudden and inevitable destruction overtake all the workers of iniquity.

NOTES.

CHAP. VI. V. 1. “These, (hundred and twenty provinces,) were enlarged to an hundred and twenty seven; by the victories of Cambyses and Darius Hystaspis.” (Esth. i. 1.) (Lowe.)

V. 2. “Darius came not to Babylon, but tarried at Ecbatane in Media, whither he sent for Daniel, that he might be always near him.” (Josephus.) The words

V. 10—17.

In this evil world the most excellent and useful persons are often left in obscurity, like diamonds in the rubbish of the quarry, because their value is not perceived: yet if the Lord have work for them, he will, by one means or other, bring them forth to do it. The encouragement given, by persons in other respects of great abilities, to ungodly sinners, not to let their thoughts trouble them, often goes upon as erroneous principles as those on which the queen comforted Belshazzar. Alas! what did it avail him, that Daniel could read the writing, when it contained his irrevocable condemnation? And what else can the holy law do for transgressors, when men are taught to seek righteousness and salvation by their own obedience? Many have heard of, and been led to admire, and applaud, the light understanding, and wisdom of some eminent servant of God; to ascribe his attainments to a divine influence, and to consider him as of a more excellent spirit than other men; who yet wish to consult him, only as a superior kind of magician, to interpret their dreams, to solve curious questions, and to explain difficult and controverted subjects, without inquiring after the way of salvation, or the path of duty! But if any one hath, even by such means, access to the great and powerful, when under tribulations or convictions, at whatever distance he may be kept, or however they may soothe him by promises or flatteries, he must remember his own character and work, and not be content with gratifying the humour of princes or nobles, or his own love of lucre or honour. In some cases it is right to reject their proffered kindness with decision, or even disdain; at all times to show an indifferency about such matters, and be far more earnest to do them good, and declare the whole counsel of God.

V. 18—31.

When sinners have long neglected to profit by the judgments of God on others, their own aggravated destruction may be supposed to approach. Their ancestors, or neighbours, have prospered and forgotten their Maker; they have been intoxicated with exaltation, and have abused...
B.C. 537.

3 Then this Daniel was preferred above the presidents and princes, because an excellent spirit was in him; and the king thought to set him over the whole realm.

4 Then the presidents and princes sought to find occasion against Daniel concerning the kingdom; but they could find none occasion nor fault; forasmuch as he was faithful, neither was there any error or fault found in him.

5 Then said these men, We shall not find any occasion against this Daniel, except we find it against him concerning the law of his God.

6 Then these presidents and princes assembled together to the king, and translated "that the king should have no damage," may be rendered "that the king should not be troubled."

V. 3. We may suppose that Daniel's interpretation of the hand-writing, just before the taking of Babylon, made him known to Darius. His renown, however, for wisdom and integrity was very great, and he was found upon trial to deserve all the reputation which he had acquired; so that Darius, when he made a new arrangement of his dominions, upon this vast accession of territory, with three presidents, thought good to make Daniel the chief of them, and as it were the vicere of the whole empire.

V. 4, 5. The great reputation and preferment of a stranger, who had also been a minister of state for many years under the kings of Babylon, could not but give umbrage to Daniel's own subjects. The nobles of his court, especially the presidents and princes, would envy his prosperity, disdain subjection to him, and covet his high station, as well as hate him for his religion; and probably his circumspection, integrity, experience, and penetration, would preclude many of the courtiers from the iniquitous advantages, which they had expected, and would tend to expose their impious practices. Thus various passions would concur in producing a combination against him. But such was his unexceptionable conduct, such his unbiased impartiality, his strict integrity, and consummate prudence, that they could find no handle against him, or discover so much as a fault, or mistake, of which to accuse him before the king. And they were constrained to confess to each other, in their secret confabulations, that they should never be able to substantiate an accusation against him, except they could render his religion criminal: and in this they knew him to be very exact, and one who would notdeviate from his plan for any interest, or to avoid any danger.

V. 6-9. We can scarcely imagine a more absurd decree, than this proposed to Darius, to be by him rendered irreversible. And at first sight, it seems almost inconceivable that any man could be induced, by influence and persuasion, and without the shadow of an argument, to pass such an edict. But power and prosperity are intoxicating; this decree seemed to make the king, for a month, the sole deity and benefactor in his empire; and thus it addressed itself to his pride and vanity. His nobles would doubtless pretend, that it was thought a proper honour to be conferred on so illustrious a prince, and that it would conduce to the public tranquility. At the instance therefore of so many chief men, and perhaps deeming it a sort of a compliment, and having but faint impressions of a Supreme Being, to whom all have constant need to present their petitions, he heedlessly signed the decree, without suspecting the malice concealed under it. They pretended, that all the presidents were consulted, and concurred in proposing this matter to him; but Daniel the chief of them knew nothing of it; and so all signified no more than to be! Probably the rest of the persons mentioned had yielded assent to it, some needlessly, others maliciously. Thus, not only was all the exercise of every kind of religion suspended by law, through this vast empire, for the space of a month; (except any chose to worship the king, who, in a contemptible, or impiously, suffered himself to be regarded as the only deity of his subjects;) but no request might be made by one man to another; the edict was so framed, that a child might have been condemned by it, for asking bread of his father, or a starving beggar for craven relief. But they who framed the law had one object in view, and did not mean to make any further use of it. We have consulted, which way we may do thee the most honour, and most ingrate thee with thy subjects, now at thy first entrance on thy throne; and we have found no way more plausible than this; we have deemed, that none of thy subjects shall for the space of thirty days, make any petition, to any god or man, save thee, O king: that by this means they may be hurried to an awful and divine concord of thy greatness, and be more encouraged to have access to thee, for the more enduring of thee to them by the granting of their suits. (Hyp. Hall.)

Law of &c. Here the words are, "The law of the Medes and Persians." out of regard to the king who was a Mede; there (Est. i. 18.) it is styled "the law of the Persians and Medes," the king being a 10 Then when Daniel knew that the writing was signed, he went into his house; and his windows being open in his chamber toward Jerusalem, he kneeled upon his knees three times a day, and prayed, and gave thanks before his God, as he did aforetime.

11 Then these men assembled, and found Daniel praying, and making supplication with his face toward the land, and toward Jerusalem.

12 Then they came near, and spake before the king concerning the king's decree; Hast thou not signed a decree, that every man that shall ask a petition of any God or man within thirty days, save thee, O king, shall be cast into the den of lions? The king answered and said, The thing is true, according to the law of the Medes and Persians, which altereth not.

13 Then answered they and said before the king, That Daniel, which is of the children of the captivity of Judah, regardeth not thee, O king, nor the decree that thou hast signed, but maketh his petition three times a day.

14 Then the king, when he heard these words, was sore displeased with himself, and set his heart on Daniel to deliver him; and he laboured till the going down of the sun to deliver him.

15 Then these men assembled unto the king, and said unto the king, O king, that the law of the Medes and Persians is, That no decree nor statute which the king establisheth may be changed.

16 Then the king commanded, and they brought Daniel, and cast him into the den of lions. Now the king spake and said unto Daniel, Thy God whom thou servest continually, he will deliver thee.

17 And a stone was brought, and laid upon the mouth of the den; and the king sealed it with his own signet, and with the signet of his lords: that the purpose might not be changed concerning Daniel.
18 ¶ Then the king went to his palace, and passed the night fasting: neither were * instruments of music brought before him, and his sleep went from him.

19 Then the king arose very early in the morning, and went in haste unto the den of lions.

20 And when he came to the den, he cried with a lamentable voice unto Daniel: and the king spake and said unto Daniel, O Daniel, servant of the living God, * is thy God, whom thou servedst continually, able to deliver thee from the lions?

21 Then said Daniel unto the king, O king, live for ever.

22 ‘My God hath sent his angel, and hath shut the lions’ mouths, that they have not hurt me; ‘forasmuch as before thee, O king, have I done no hurt.’

23 Then was the king exceeding glad, and commanded that they should take Daniel up out of the den. So Daniel was taken up out of the den, and no manner of hurt was found upon him, because he believed in his God.

24 And the king commanded, and they brought those men which had accused Daniel, and they cast them into the den of lions, them, their children, and their wives: and the lions had the mastery of them, and brake all their bones in pieces, or ever they came at the bottom of the den.

---

V. 18-23. No doubt Daniel spent a far more pleasant night among the lions, whilst employed in fervent prayer and admiring grateful praise, than either the king, or his malicious prosecutors. As for the former, he was so

---

B. C. 537.
CHAPTER VI.

25 Then king Darius wrote unto all people, nations, and languages, that dwelleth in all the earth; Peace be multiplied unto you.

26 I make a decree, That in every dominion of my kingdom men tremble and fear before the God of Daniel: for he is the living God, and steadfast for ever; and his kingdom that which shall bring upon the innocent; for this has been a satanic provision in many nations. The ringleaders, however, of the conspiracy were cast into the den: for we cannot suppose that all the great men before mentioned were thus condemned, nor indeed could the lions have devoured so great a number at one time; if he had thus punished the criminals alone, and had not cast in their wives and children with them, the sentence had been unexceptionable: but this was both unjust and cruel. Yet by this means the reality and greatness of the miracle wrought in Daniel's deliverance were evidenced: for the lions soon mastered and destroyed all that were cast into the den; by which it appeared, that they were exceedingly fierce and ravenous, and only restrained by a supernatural power; which being removed, they became as hunger the more voracious.

V. 25—28. After this, Darius, perhaps by Daniel's counsel, and in imitation of Nebuchadnezzar's example, published an account of these facts to all his subjects, in their several languages; and decreed, that they should all fear and tremble before the God of Daniel. He spake, in this address, very honourably of the Lord, as the living God; of the immutable steadfastness of his purposes, laws, and authority; and of his power to work miracles, and to deliver his servants; and he required his people to do him honour. But we do not find that he renounced idolatry, to become his worshipper; and his language is not comparable to that of Nebuchadnezzar's after his restoration to his reason and his throne; especially it wants that savour of humiliation, and self-abasement which appears in the other.

These events, thus authoritatively made known through so many nations, must have exceedingly tended to prepare the way for the diffusion of further light, by the Jews who went to sojourn in different countries, and at length by the preaching of the Gospel. After this Daniel continued in authority and prosperity under Darius, and his successor Cyrus, who reigned seven years. Daniel was living in the third year of Cyrus; but probably he died not long after. (x. 1.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—9.

Piety, wisdom, and integrity, will be profitable to a man, in all possible circumstances: and they will often induce others to favour such as possess them, merely from regard to their own interests. In large kingdoms numbers must be employed in managing public affairs: but, alas, how seldom are many of them devotedly of an excellent spirit! And how seldom do kings prefer men entirely on that account! Yet nothing else can fully prevent damage to both prince and people. In some cases men may continue in favour and power, notwithstanding repeated and entire revolutions; not by a criminal fickleness, but through an immovable adherence to integrity and prudence, and a readiness by every lawful means to do good to mankind. Extraordinary honour, wisdom, or exaltation, always excites envy and enmity; but especially when one man's inflexible honesty disappoints or deекторs the integrity and avance of numbers. They, that are thus exposed to the view, malice, and severe scrutiny of multitudes, who are their competitors and enemies, have need to act with great circumspection and wisdom; that no fault or error, no evil, or appearance of evil, may be found in them: and it is very honourable to God and religion, when the most enraged and pertinacious opponents can find no fault with any part of the conduct of an eminent believer, except they can convert his piety and steadfastness in the faith, into an accusation against him. He, who enabled Daniel thus to "walk in wisdom towards them that were with me", in his difficult situation, and thus wrought more powerfully than he protected him in the den of lions, is equally able to give us wisdom and grace sufficient for us, that we may copy his example, and by well-doing put to shame and silence those that would falsely accuse our good conversation in Christ. Yet the conduct of believers often drives their enemies to open persecution as their only weapon. How much are powerful princes surrounded by designing men, whose flatteries are the covering of their malice and selfishness! and how Pride and vain-glory lay men open to be imposed on by the grossest artifices! Whilst they affect to be honoured as gods, they are proved to want the understanding of men; and the palpable absurdities, which have been sanctioned by the authority of renowned monarchs, and by the approbation of senates and councils, are a libel on human nature, as if intended to expose the folly and impiety of our fallen race. It is well that no human laws can deprive us of the privilege of asking petitions of the God of heaven; for except he continually upholds, protect, and supply us, with all things needful for soul and body, we must sink into extreme misery. Were the Lord as regardless of men, as they are of him, and did he withhold his communications as long as they do their petitions and thanksgivings, they would speedily be left without comfort or hope. Yet how little is this considered! Indeed, it is to be feared, that they who, (without any prohibitory decree,) present no hearty and serious prayers to God, for more than thirty days together, are far more numerous than they who serve him

4 R 2
Daniel, 9–14. An angel interprets the vision of four kingdoms succeeding each other; and shows the nature of the fourth kingdom, and the destruction of it, to make way for the kingdom of God, 15–28.

continually, and worship him with bended knees and humble thankful hearts, praying and giving thanks to him three times a day. No wonder then that laws have been more frequently made to restrain, than to encourage, serious godliness: for, alas! the majority even of legislators have been strangers or enemies to the truth, and have hated it for interfering with their worldly pursuits and pleasures.

V. 10–17.

Persecuting and sanguinary laws are always enacted on false pretences, and are replete with absurdity, impurity, and injustice: but it does not behove Christians to vent bitter complaints or sardastical revellings. We should quietly obey God rather than man, and commit the keeping of our lives and souls to him in well-doing; and instead of interrupting the exercise of our religion to escape the cross, we should count ourselves called to make a more open profession of it: for the conduct, which in ordinary cases might appear ostentatious, becomes in other circumstances a proper protest against prevailing impurity, and an edifying example to our brethren. Such Christians, and ministers especially, as are of eminent reputation, should deem themselves, on these emergencies, called on to stand forth in the most intrepid and decided manner, and to risk all consequences by a conduct that may not be required of more obscure persons. But the most eminent servants of God will see cause to prostrate themselves before him, with every expression of the most profound reverence, humility, and self-abasement, and the most entire reliance on his mercy through the mediation of Christ. They that fill the most exalted stations, and are most extensively useful, must not only find time for communion with God, but should abound in it more than others; having more to pray and return thanks for: and with advancing years, they should grow more fervent and constant in their devotions; that the consolations of God may make up the loss of other comforts, or the want of relish for them, and that they may constantly be in a proper frame for joining the worship of the saints in light. But in this evil world, that conduct which most accords with the will of God, will often be turned into matter of accusation against us. It is, however, far better to suffer for well-doing than for evil-doing,” for though pious persons cannot place much confidence in the protection even of those princes whom they have most faithfully served, and who are most convinced of their wisdom and uprightness; yet they may in all cases be assured of the divine favour and consolation. Various personal and political interests may render kings irremissible in defending their best friends against the assaults of their enemies. They may inconsiderately give the occasion of injuring them: and however displeased with themselves, or earnest in labouring to ex-

V. 18–28.

Even the most powerful of men may pity where he cannot deliver, and mourn over those oppressions that he cannot redress; and be constrained or seduced into those measures which fill his heart with anguish, his conscience with remorse, and mar all his enjoyments. So vain is all earthly greatness! And so unavailing all the materials of earthly satisfaction! But the persecuted believer may be happy in the most dreary dungeon, or the most perilous situation; as nothing can exclude him from the throne of grace, or from that “peace of God which passeth all understanding.” Through faith even the mouths of lions may be stopped: if temporal safety be good for us, we shall be preserved in the very jaws of destruction: hungry lions shall be harmless as lambs, and their presence shall only tend to increase our admiration of the Lord’s power, and our gratitude for his goodness; and even Satan, that “roaring lion, who goeth about seeking whom he may devour,” shall be so restrained, that he shall not be able to harm, or even to frighten us, whilst we rest on the promises, and attend to the commandments of our God. We should then exercise ourselves to have a conscience void of offence towards God and man, that we may rejoice in its testimony in difficult circumstances: we should be ready to answer with meekness and kindness even those that have injured us, especially if they are sensible of their fault. However our temporal trials may end, we shall come forth of them all: and no hurt will be found on those who have believed in God and kept his way. But whilst their troubles terminate in their greater honour, comfort, and felicity: the short-lived triumphing of the wicked will end in their unfruitful and irreversible ruin; in which their relatives are often involved along with them. Thus “the Lord taketh the wise in their own craftiness,” and their devices against him give him an occasion of making known his own eternal power and Godhead among the nations, and of bringing such as were far off to adore the name, and to tremble before him. He is the living and unchangeable God, who alone is steadfast for ever: his decrees, purposes, and laws, are, and must be, established so that none can change them: “His is the kingdom, the power,
IN the first year of Belshazzar king of Babylon, Daniel had a dream; and visions of his head upon his bed: then he wrote the dream, and told the sum of the f matters.

2 Daniel spake and said, I saw in my vision by night, and, behold, the four winds of the heaven strove upon the great sea.

3 And four great beasts came up from the sea, diverse one from another.

4 The first was like a lion, and had five heads; and they had even ten horns.

5 And out of one of their heads as it were a man's heart; and the angel said unto me, "The holy one of God.

6 And after this I beheld, and behold another, like a leopard, and it had upon the back of it four uneasy: and one breast was high over another;

7 And on his head was something written, which was written, and I knew the writing of it; Daniel 7:8, but the man who had the pen of a writing man.

8 And there was another like a bear, and he was raised upon one side, and he had three ribs in the mouth of it between the teeth of it: and the devour much flesh.

9 After this I beheld, and behold another, like a leopard, which had upon the back in acquiring the dominion over his neighbours; and perhaps of his superior generosity and magnanimity, with which he ruled over the nations. The eagle's wings denoted the rapidity and unabated vigour with which he prosecuted his victories. But as the prophet saw this, he observed, that the wings thereof were plucked. After the death of Nebuchadnezzar, the Chaldeans made no more conquests; several of the subject nations revolted; the Medes and Persians soon began to straiten them; till at length Babylon was besieged and taken, and so that monarchy was terminated. No longer did this beast appear rapid in conquest, as an eagle, or courageous and terrible as a lion: but it was changed as it were into a human creature; it stood on its feet as a man, and had a man's heart given to it. After Nebuchadnezzar's death, the kings of Babylon became less terrible to their foes and subjects, and more cautious and even timid: till at length Belshazzar shut himself up in Babylon, not daring to face Cyrus: as a man would not venture to face a raging bear, which a lion would despise. (Marg. Ref.)

7. Whilst Daniel beheld how the first beast was weakened, he saw another beast come up out of the sea, to subvert and supplant him. This represented the kingdom of the Medes and Persians. Its emblem was a bear: less noble and courageous, but more voracious and savage, than a lion. This beast raised itself on one side; for the Medes and Persians extended their conquests almost wholly to the west of their own countries: or, it raised up one dominion, (Marg.) that is, the Medes and Persians united to form one kingdom; or the Persians who were the inferior people, would acquire the chief dominion. It had also three ribs between its teeth: this is interpreted of the three kingdoms of Babylon, Lydia, and Egypt, which the Persians conquered, and grievously oppressed: thus taking the prey, as it were, out of the mouth of the Chaldeans. And there were those standing by, who called on the beast to arise and devour much flesh: this may be explained of the providential dispensations, which invited the Medes and Persians to attempt such extensive conquests, and of the cruelty of the Persian kings, which hardly ever was exceeded or equalled: but may it not also denote their attempts to subdue the Thracians, Macedonians, Greeks, and other European nations, which at length occasioned the ruin of their monarchy? 'Their success made them more greedy of dominion.' (Loph.) of it four wings of a fowl; the beast had also four heads; and dominion was given to it.

7 After this I saw in the night-visions, and, behold, a fourth beast, dreadful and terrible, and strong exceedingly, and it had great iron teeth: it devoured and brake in pieces, and stamped the residue with the feet of it: and it was diverse from all the beasts that were before it; and it had ten horns.

8 I considered the horns, and, behold, there came up among them another little horn, before whom there were three of the first horns plucked up by the roots: and, behold, in this horn were eyes like the eyes of man, and a mouth speaking great things.
9 I beheld till the thrones were cast down, and the Ancient of days sat, whose garment was white as snow, and the hair of his head like the pure wool; his throne was like the fiery flame, and his wheels as burning fire.

10 A fiery stream issued and came forth from before him: thousand thousands ministered unto him, and ten thousands times ten thousand stood before him: the judgment was set, and the books were opened.

11 I beheld then, because of the voice of the great words which the horn spake: I beheld, even till the beast was slain, and his body destroyed, and given to the burning flame.

12 As concerning the rest of the beasts, they had their dominion taken away: yet their lives were prolonged for a season and time.

13 I saw in the night visions, and, behold, one like the Son of man came with the clouds of heaven, and came to the Ancient of days, and they brought him near before him.

14 And there was given him dominion, and glory, and a kingdom, that all people, nations, and languages, should serve him: his dominion is an everlasting dominion, which shall not pass away, and his kingdom that which shall not be destroyed.

because it belonged to the body of the third. (Sir Is. Newton.) Whilst the prophet was considering these ten horns, he saw another little horn springing up among them. This evidently points out the power of the Church and Bishop of Rome, which, from small beginnings, thrust itself up among the ten kingdoms, and at length got possession of three of them, having turned out those who held them: viz. the Exarchate of Ravenna, the kingdom of the Lombards, and the state of Rome, according to the most probable opinion; and the dominion of the Roman Pontiff over these three kingdoms has ever since been declared by his triple crown. In this horn, as the Church of Rome became, when it obtained temporal authority, were “eyes like the eyes of a man.” This circumstance denoted the policy, sagacity, subtility, and watchfulness, by which the little horn could spy out occasions of extending and establishing its interests, and advancing its exorbitant pretensions; and the court of Rome has been ever remarkable for this above all the states in the world, as every person at all acquainted with history must know. It had also a mouth speaking great things: and we shall have frequent occasion to speak of the arrogant claims, blasphemous titles, and great swelling words of vanity, of this horn. The style of “his holiness,” and the claim of infallibility, and of a power to dispense with God’s laws, to forgive sins, and to sell admission into heaven, may serve for a specimen of the great things which this mouth had spoken. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 14. The prophet continued to contemplate the scene till at length all these thrones were cast down: and the Ancient of days, or the eternal God, who existed before time was, even from everlasting, was emblazoned as if seated on his throne. “His garment white as snow,” was the emblem of his most perfect justice and holiness; “the hair of his head like the pure wool,” denoted his unerring wisdom and awful majesty; “his throne like the fiery flame,” signified his terrible vengeance on the wicked; and “his wheels” (on which it was fixed as a chariot) “as burning fire,” showed that his providence would execute the awful sentence of his justice on his enemies. (Marg. Ref.) This was also denoted, and its terror illustrated, by “the fiery stream that came forth from before him.” An immense multitude of angels ministered unto him: and innumerable millions of his creatures were gathered before his tribunal; for “the judgment was set, and the books were opened,” the book of his law, and of these prophecies, and the register of the offences of the criminals to be judged, &c. This language is applicable to the general judgment, but that cannot be the prophetic meaning of the passage; for it is plain that God the Father is here spoken of as the Judge: whereas the Son will appear as the sole Judge in the day of final retribution: the fulfillment of this prophecy will precede the introduction of the millennium, the final judgment will succeed to the consummation of all things here on earth. In short, this was spoken of the coming of the Lord to destroy the kingdom of antichrist, and to set up the kingdom of God on earth. For the great God, being filled with indignation at the blasphemous words of the little horn, will destroy all the remains of the power of the fourth beast, to which it belongs; that is, the Roman empire, as inimical to the cause of Christ: and his body shall be destroyed and given to the flames, because the little horn was the ringleader to the beast, in tyranny, cruelty, and idolatry; and because of the close connexion between it and the other ten horns. Rome will be wholly desolated, and her hierarchy abolished; every antichristian power will be crushed; and the whole will be reduced under the government of Christ, and those who rule under and for him. The other beasts had indeed been deprived of dominion, yet their lives were prolonged for a season: the countries that had been governed by the Chaldeans, Persians, and Macedonians, though no longer in possession of empire, yet continued under the government of idolaters, enemies to true religion; for a time, in the prophetic language, an idolatrous or persecuting power; but when the fourth beast shall lose his authority, his life as a will be taken away, and no idolatrous or antichristian power shall remain in any nation; for then the other beasts must be slain, which is intimated by their lives being spared for a season. The prophet further saw one like the Son of man coming with, or in, the clouds of heaven; that is, with divine majesty and glory; this must point out Christ to us, as the eternal Son of God, appearing in human nature, ascending to heaven, the throne of God, to receive the kingdom covenanted to him; (Ps. ii. 8, 9.) He came to the Ancient of days, who sat on the throne, and was brought in before him by the angelic attendants; and he received a glorious, universal, and everlasting kingdom, which would never vanish, or be subverted, or succeeded by any other. This passage not only shows, that the setting up of the everlasting kingdom, was to happen in the times of the fourth, or Roman, monarchy; but also, that it would happen when the Son of man would ascend from earth to heaven. The prophet does not represent him as coming in the clouds from heaven to earth, (as at the general judgment;) but as coming with the clouds of heaven from his former residence, towards the throne of God; which according to the Scripture-style is heaven.

And this is confirmed by the words immediately following; that “they brought him near before him,” viz. before the Ancient of days. Though the immediate Ruler of this kingdom is called the Son of man; yet it is obvious, that there is something very amazing in the prophetic description of the high honour and glory that should be given to him! Whoever considers these expressions (in the fourteenth verse,) with impartiality, will never be his sentiments otherwise about the Person spoken of, must own, that there is at least some difficulty in conceiving how such everlasting glory and dominion should belong to any one who should be no more than the son of man, or a mere creature; and particularly in conceiving how such magnificent things should be ascribed to one who was no more than the son of man, by the prophets, who incalculated so strongly and justly, that all mere creatures are, before God, as nothing, and less than nothing.” (Maclaurin.) When Christ was about to ascend into heaven, he said, “All power is given to me in heaven and earth.” Then his kingdom began to be set up, and the power of the fourth kingdom to decline: but it is plain from the eleventh verse, that the grand event predicted in this passage, is, his glorious coming to destroy the kingdom of Antichrist, and to render his own kingdom universal upon earth. (Marg.)
23 Thus he said, The fourth beast shall be the fourth kingdom upon earth, which shall be diverse from all kingdoms, and shall devour the whole earth, and shall tread it down, and break it in pieces.

24 And the ten horns out of this kingdom are ten kings that shall arise: and another shall rise after them; and he shall be diverse from the first, and he shall subdue three kings.

25 And he shall speak great words against the most High, and shall wear out the saints of the most High, and think to change times and laws; and they shall be given into his hand until a time, and times, and the dividing of time.

26 But the judgment shall sit, and they shall take away his dominion, and destroy and consume it unto the end.

27 And the kingdom and dominion, and the greatness of the kingdom under the whole heaven, shall be given to the people of the saints of the most High, whose kingdom is an everlasting kingdom, and all dominions shall serve and obey him.
28 Hitherto is the end of the matter.
As for me Daniel, my cogitations much troubled me, and my countenance changed in me: but I kept the matter in my heart.

such thing; and has multiplied his holy days, till scarcely four of the six working days have been left for man's labour: at the same time he has licensed intemperance and excess on his festivals and carnivals, and authorized licentious diversions on the Lord's own holy day. He hath pretended to change God's laws, or to dispense with obedience to them, that his own new laws might be observed, forbidding to marry, and licensing fornication, and many things of this sort. Thus matters would be left in his hands, till a time, and times, and the division of time, that is, for three years and a half, or forty-two months, which, reckoning thirty days to a month, and this was the general computation, make just one thousand two hundred and sixty days; and those prophetical days signify one thousand two hundred and sixty years; a number we shall repeatedly meet with in the revelation of St. John. (Marg. Ref.) At the expiration of this term, which is now not far distant, the dominion of this horn will cease; he will be judged, condemned, and consumed, and his authority never revived to the world. Then the kingdom under the whole heaven will be given to "the people of the saints". The most High will set up his everlasting and universal kingdom, all other rulers and governors will serve and obey him. Can this mean anything less, than an universal prevalence of true religion, under the countenance of Christian princes, even to the end of the world, without any remarkable declension, or successful opposition? And hath not enough of this extraordinary prophecy been already fulfilled, to warrant our assurance, that the remainder will be so too, as well as to demonstrate the divinity of the Scriptures?—Thus the second as well as the first prophecy of this book, relating to the four empires, reaches down below the end of the Roman empire, and to the universal empire of the Messiah.—The great things said to be done by the little horn, and the continuance of his power to the time of the universal conversion of the nations, put it beyond all question, that it is not one particular person that is meant, but a very long succession:—He is never called any other than a little horn. His greatness is chiefly placed in great words and looks, joined with singular penetration and cunning, which is of itself a presumption, that the great things he was to accomplish would be owing to the power of others, voluntarily giving their power to him, after having been seduced by him. —The following small number of characters, to be gathered by plain and easy reasoning from a few passages in one prophet, (Daniel,) make up a singular description, not applicable to any power, that ever was, or will be, but one. — A seducing power that was to arise, after the conversion, the downfall and division of the Roman Empire, established in the western parts of that empire, which was divided into so many, (ten) several principalities; little, in comparison of these others, as to secular authority; but claiming and obtaining an universal spiritual authority over the body of the western kingdoms; acquiring and maintaining this through policy and craft,—procuring a voluntary surrender of power from really superior sovereigns; improving it so as to be a ringleader to these others in apostacy, persecution, and various kinds of opposition to the truth; and continuing to exert such power for such ends, during a considerable number of ages. (Macaulay.)

V. 28. Daniel, from this interpretation, foreseeing the calamities of the Church, for so long a season previous to the joyful termination of them, was greatly troubled in mind, which affected his body also. He, however, laid up the matter in his memory and heart, that he might meditate on it, and derive instruction from it.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.
V. 1—14.

Those splendid achievements, and that extensive authority, which excite admiration, applause, envy, or ambition, often raffle men with destructive hurricanes and savage beasts, in the judgment of God and of his saints. They are the instruments of divine vengeance on a guilty world, which is kept in perpetual agitation by their contests; as the great sea by the raging of the conflicting winds. They are indeed diverse from each other; but they agree in their aim to aggrandize themselves, and to gain the dominion, by making havoc of the human species, and trampling men under their feet; and many around them, by their flattering encomiums and delusive oratory, call on them to arise and devour much flesh. The greater renown such chieftains receive with posthurry, the more miserable were they to their contemporaries: and whilst our youth are taught to admire the exploits of the Greeks and Romans! they are seldom led to reflect on the dire carnage and wide-spread desolations, which their wars occasioned. No savage beast, nor even the worst qualities of them all put together, can equal the odious constituents of an ambitious conqueror's character: and an Alexander, or a Julius Caesar, may be considered as a compound of pride, ambition, selfishness, rage, and cruelty; whilst he can glory in the slaughter of a million of his own species, for the sole purpose of advancing his own reputation and greatness, or of extending the dominions and wealth of his idolized country. But when we look at such beasts as dreadful and terrible, and exceedingly strong, and consider their fatal successes: we should recollect, that they are under the secret direction of God, whose counsel shall stand, and he will do all his pleasure sure; and thus we shall be preserved from either adoring or dreading them. For these lions, and monsters more savage breed, are all chained: the dominion of such given them has its appointed extent and duration; their wrath shall turn to the praise of the Lord, and the remainder of it he will restrain. Whilst he has work for come up in its stead, 9. A little horn springs up from one of them, and becomes exceedingly great, and does great mischief, 10—12. The duration of these events, 13, 14. Gabriel interprets the vision, and shows Daniel that it related to the kingdom of the Medes and Persians as conquered by the Macedonians, and to a power that would thence arise to persecute the church, 15—25. The certainty and remote futurity of the events, with Daniel's grief, astonishment, and sickness, 26, 27.

CHAPTER VIII.

In the third year of the reign of king Belshazzar, a vision appeared unto me, even unto me Daniel, after that which appeared unto me at the first. 2 And I saw in a vision; and it came to pass, when I saw, that I was at Shushan in the palace, which is in the province of Elam; and I saw in a vision, and I was by the river of Ulai.

always been odious and pernicious; but never so odious and pernicious, as when covered with a mask of religion. There have been and will be many Antichrists: but he that sits in the temple of God, and exalts himself above all that is called God, or is worshipped, hath been more fierce and stout than his fellows; and hath worn out the saints of the Most High, and thought to change times and laws, more than they all: and this condemnation will be proportionably dreadful; for the judgment shall sit, and the Lord will destroy him with the breath of his mouth, and with the brightness of his coming. Other tyrants and persecutors may be spared for a season, even when dethroned; but this enemy shall be wholly destroyed and cast into the fire. Then all idolatry and false worship shall cease, and our Redeemer shall receive dominion and glory, and a kingdom over all people, nations, and languages, which shall never pass away nor be destroyed.—We must not indeed be ambitious of temporal power, nor use unallowed means to subvert even Antichristian tyranny: but we may pray to the Lord to plead his own cause, and fulfil his word, and to make his truth victorious; we may desire to be instrumental in forwarding these happy events, in any way in which it may please God to employ us: and we may anticipate with joy those glorious times, when all nations shall fall down before our Redeemer, and all kings shall do him service; and when every throne on earth shall be filled by those that do his will and seek his glory. We should make serious inquiry into these matters, as well as into other parts of God's word: and, by proper examination and humble prayer, we shall thence deduce encouragement to our hope, and find strength added to our faith. We should keep them in our hearts, and expect the approaching period, when the saints shall receive the kingdom, and their cause shall finally triumph over all opposition: and the trouble, arising from the views which we receive of the sufferings to be endured by God's people, will be counterbalanced by the expectation of so glorious a catastrophe. May we be numbered with the saints, now they are under the cross, that we may share all their triumphs, and be numbered with them in glory everlasting.

NOTES.

CHAP. VIII. V. 1. The Chaldeans were not particularly concerned in the subsequent prophecies; and therefore they were written in the Hebrew tongue, as more useful to the Jews.

V. 2. Shushan, or Susa, was afterwards the capital of Persia.
3 Then I lifted up mine eyes, and saw, and, behold, there stood before the river a ram which had two horns; and the two horns were high; but one was higher than the other, and the higher came up last.

4 I saw the ram pushing westward, and northward, and southward; so that no beasts might stand before him, neither was there any that could deliver out of his hand; but he did according to his will, and became great.

5 And as I was considering, behold, an he-goat came from west on the face of the whole earth, and touched not the ground: and the goat had a notable horn between his eyes.

6 And he came to the ram that had two horns, which I had seen standing before the river, and ran unto him in the fury of his power.

7 And I saw him come close unto the ram, and he was moved with choler against him, and smote the ram, and brake his two horns; and there was no power in the ram to stand before him, but he cast him down to the ground, and stamped upon him: and there was none that could deliver the ram out of his hand.

8 And the he-goat did according to his will, and became great.

9 Then I beheld till the calfs were grown up: and, behold, the calfs took the horns from the he-goat; but he cast him down to the ground, and stamped upon him; and there was none that could deliver.

10 And the he-goat waxed very great, and strong toward the south, and east, and toward the glorious land.

11 And he did according to his will, and went up northward, and touched the waters of the south, and did as he will.

12 The he-goat came to the ram that was before the river, and touched his knee and his rib, and rent them as in a potter's vessel; and the ram was wakened, but was not able to do anything because of the power of his hand.

13 So he cast off also the two he-goats that were before the ram; and the ram spake and said unto the two he-goats, 'Domine, revertis me et regnabo.' Then he cast them down to the ground, and stamped upon them: and none delivered them out of his hand.

14 And he said, 'The God of Israel has given the kingdom to a child of David, and has set him on his throne, as the days of old: that he may execute the vision of Jeremiah concerning Jerusalem and Judah. In the vision a ram was cast down, and smote the two he-goats; and the he-goat took away the horns from the ram, and the ram was wakened, but was unable to do anything because of the power of his hand.

15 And he said, 'The God of Israel has given the kingdom to a child of David, and has set him on his throne, as the days of old. And the vision of the ram with two horns is fulfilled, for the ram is cast down and smote the two he-goats; and the he-goat takes away the horns from the ram, and the ram is wakened, but is unable to do anything because of the power of his hand.' And the vision of the ram with two horns is fulfilled, for the ram is cast down and smote the two he-goats; and the he-goat takes away the horns from the ram, and the ram is wakened, but is unable to do anything because of the power of his hand.

16 And the vision of the ram with two horns is fulfilled, for the ram is cast down and smote the two he-goats; and the he-goat takes away the horns from the ram, and the ram is wakened, but is unable to do anything because of the power of his hand.

17 And the vision of the ram with two horns is fulfilled, for the ram is cast down and smote the two he-goats; and the he-goat takes away the horns from the ram, and the ram is wakened, but is unable to do anything because of the power of his hand.
8 Therefore the he-goat waxed very great: and when he was strong, the great horn was broken; and for it came up four notable ones, toward the four winds of heaven.

9 And out of one of them came forth a little horn, which waxed exceeding great, toward the south, and toward the east, and toward the pleasant land.

10 And it waxed great, even to the host of heaven, and it cast down some of the host and of the stars to the ground, and stamped upon them.

11 Yea, he magnified himself even to the prince of the host, and by him the daily sacrifice was taken away: and there was a place of his sanctuary cast down.

12 And one host was given him against the daily sacrifice, by reason of transgression, and it cast down truth to the ground; and it practised, and prospered.

Afterwards Alexander with unexampled celerity marshaled his forces into every part of this vast empire, bearing down all opposition, and receiving the submission of cities and nations; till the ram, the Medo-Persian kingdom, was cast down to the ground, and trodden under foot by the victor, and none could deliver it, or any part of it, out of the hands of the Macedonians. When Alexander first menaced Asia with an invasion, Darius treated his proposals and designs with the most affronting contempt; and he afterwards attempted to bribe his physician to poison him: these injuries had so exasperated the king and his troops, that they pursued Darius rather as an assassin, than as a competitor for honour and empire; and the he-goat attacked the ram, as moved with choler against him. It is recorded, that this prophecy was shown to Alexander by the high-priest on the following occasion. Whilst Alexander besieged Tyre, the high-priest of the Jews refused to pay tribute to him, because he had sworn allegiance to Darius; and this refusal so enraged the conqueror, that he set out in great haste to avenge himself on that nation. But in answer to the prayers of the high-priest and people, the conqueror was directed in a vision to go forth to meet Alexander, in his pontifical vestments, attended by other priests in their sacred apparel; and when the enraged victor met this procession, he bowed down before the high-priest, and in religious awe and veneration. This behaviour astonished all present; but it informed them, that whilst he was planning his expedition at Dio in Macedonia, he had seen in a dream this very person in this very habit, inviting him to come into Asia, and promising him success in his expedition; and that he now meant to adore the God of the Jews, (who had directed and prospered his expedition,) in the person of his high-priest. Accordingly he peaceably entered Jerusalem, and offered sacrifices at the temple, where the high-priest showed him these prophecies of Daniel, in which it was foretold that a king of Greece should subvert the Persian empire. It is certain that Alexander granted many peculiar privileges to the Jewish nation; and this can hardly be accounted for without admitting the truth of these events as recorded by Josephus.

V. 9—12. (23—25.) The generality of expositors have interpreted this little horn to mean Antiochus Epiphanes, of whose persecutions we have an account in the books of Maccabees: and some have considered him as a type of Antichrist. Others, however, have attempted to show that this interpretation is not at all satisfactory; and they have given us quite another view of the subject. According to the first opinion, this part of prophecy may be interpreted as follows. From one of the four kingdoms, into which the dominions of Alexander were divided, came forth a little horn; which represented Antiochus Epiphanes, descending from the kings of Syria. This would occur in the latter time of their kingdom, (23.) and Antiochus Epiphanes lived but a little time, before the Romans subdued the several divisions of the Grecian empire: it would also be when the transgressors were come to the full, that is, when the Jews had made themselves ripe for judgment by their crimes. This horn denoted a king of fierce countenance, and Antiochus was of a most ferocious cruelty; and one that understood dark sentences; and he was a man of designing subtility. His power would become mighty, but not by his own power: which may mean, that from very low beginnings he would arise to great prosperity, not by the strength of his own kingdom, but by the assistance of his allies. For after the Romans had conquered his father Antiochus the Great, and exceedingly weakened his dominions; and Seleucus, his brother, had drained all his treasures to pay the sums stipulated to the Romans; Antiochus, who had been a hostage at Rome, hearing of his brother's death, returned home in a very obscure manner and low condition; but being favoured by Eumenes, king of Pergamus, and by others, he obtained the kingdom in preference to his brother's posterity, and became in time powerful and formidable: carrying war into Egypt, to the south, and into Persia, Armenia, &c., to the east; and especially he subdued and oppressed the land of Judah, called the PleniLand, because of the temple and ordinances of God.
Thus he waxed great, and grew very proud, and employed his power against the house of heaven, and cast down some of the stars to the ground, and stamped on them; this figuratively described his persecution of God's worshippers, and the cruelties which he exercised against many of the brightest, most excellent, and eminent persons among them. And he not only magnified himself against the high-priest, and the rulers of the Jews; but against God himself, the Prince of this world, the Prince of princes: for he set up the image of Jupiter Olympus in the temple, profaned every thing with swine's flesh, compelled the Jews to blaspheme God; put a stop to the administration of all the sacred institutions, and desolated and polluted the whole sanctuary. For, to punish the sins of the Jews, he gave him power against it; so that the truth was by him cast down upon the ground, and he practised wrongs, and prospered in it: destroying the mighty and holy people of God, and accomplishing his design and dark machinations, by the most crafty policies; behaving with the utmost contempt and arrogance; and making and infringing solemn treaties and agreements, to compass the destruction of multitudes.

But at length, when he was coming, full of rage to execute vengeance on the Jews, who opposed his tyranny, he was seized with a most loathsome and dire disease, and died miserably, by the evident judgment of God, without the intervention of any human power. But many strong objections may be made to this interpretation, even supposing Antiochus be allowed to have been a type of Antichrist.

A horn of a beast is never taken for a single person; it always signifies a new kingdom; and the kingdom of Antiochus was an old one. Antiochus reigned over one of the four horns; and the little horn was a fifth, under its proper king. This horn was at first a little one, and waxed exceeding great; but so did not Antiochus. It is described great above all the former horns; and so was not Antiochus. His kingdom on the contrary was weak, and tributary to the Romans; and he did not enlarge it. The horn was a king of fierce countenance, and destroyed wonderfully, and prospered and practised;—but Antiochus was frightened out of Egypt by a mere message from the Romans, and afterwards routed and baffled by the Jews. The horn was mighty by another's power; Antiochus acted by his own. The horn cast down the sanctuary to the ground; and so did not Antiochus, he left it standing. The sanctuary and host were trampled under by the two thousand and three hundred days, (144) and in Daniel's prophecies days are put for years; the profanation of the temple in the reign of Antiochus did not last so many natural days. These were to last till the end of the indignation against the Jews; and then the sanctuary which should be cast down should be cleansing; and the sanctuary is not yet cleansed. (Sir) 14 countenance, and understanding dark sentences; being ever notorious for savage cruelty, and dark machinations against their opponents. By craftily engaging the princes of their communion to fight their battles, and destroy heretics, (as they call them,) and by a succession of most insidious schemes, they "have cast down the truth to the "ground, and practised, and prospered." Their pro- "fessed friendship, peace, or alliance, has often proved more destructive than their open enmity; as they have not scrupled to violate the most sacred engagements, and to massacre and murder, in defiance of oaths, covenants, and safe conducts. Thus have they stood up, and "mag- "nified themselves against the Prince of the host?; they "have desolated the sanctuary of God, put a stop to the pure administration of his ordinances, and cast down his truth to the ground. But in due time this power will be broken "without hand, by the immediate judgment of God. "The expression, that the "vision was to be shut up," for it should be "for many days, leads our thoughts to later times than those of "Antiochus Epiphanes, whose persecutions commenced about three hundred and eighty years after Daniel had his "vision: and to more continued oppressions than those which "he occasioned, which were as nothing, compared with what "both Jews and Christians have experienced from Rome, "Pagan, and Antichristian. As Rome imperial cast down "the city of Jerusalem and the temple to the ground, to be "trampled under-foot of the Gentiles; so Rome papal hath cast down, and "trampled upon the "truth, ordinances, and people of Christ, more than any other power ever did. Indeed Rome has hitherto been the grand enemy to Christ and true Christianity, under whatever form that enmity hath been "exercised: and the prophecy will not be wholly accomplished, "till that Antichristian power shall be finally destroyed.

V. 13, 1. "The word rendered here "certain saint," "is translated in the margin, "the numberer of secrets," "or, "the wonderful numberer," and must mean a person of "extraordinary rank, as being able to unfold thosecrets "which were hid from ages; and is therefore "justly supposed to mean the Son of God, called the "Wonderful Counselor, as being acquainted with "all God's purposes and designs, 'John i. 18.' The words "may be rendered, "For how long a time shall the vision "last, the daily sacrifice be taken away, and the "transgression of desolation continue." The computation "of "time, in its obvious sense, contains something more "than six years and four months, reckoning three hundred "and sixty days to a year; and, if we explain it with relation to "the persecution set on foot by Antiochus, we must "date it, not from the height of the persecution, when the "daily sacrifice was actually taken away; for that con- "tinued but, just three years, '1 Macc. i. 64, iv. 52;' but— "from the rise of those transgressions which occasioned "the desolation." But since it is generally agreed, that "the persecution of Antiochus was an imperfect repre- "sentation of a greater desolation, which Antichrist should "make in the Church: (Compare 13. with xii. 11;) it is "the opinion of some learned men, that these two thou- "sand three hundred days are a line of time, that is to be "extended to the end of the times of Antichrist; taking "each day for a year," (Lomth.) 'The difficulty, of "impossibility rather, of making these two thousand three "hundred years accord with the times of Antiochus, I "suppose, obliged the ancients to consider Antiochus as "the type of Antichrist. The question was asked, not "only how long the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, "and the transgression of desolation continue, but also "how long the vision shall last? So the answer is to be "understood; and these days the whole time from the "beginning of the vision to the cleansing of the sanctuary, "These days, or years, I conceive,—are to be computed "from the vision of the lie-goat, or Alexander's invading "Asia, before Christ 334. Two thousand three hundred "years from that time will draw towards the conclusion of "the sixth millennium of the world; and about that period, "an old tradition, which was current before our Saviour's "time, and was probably founded on the prophecies, great "changes and revolutions are to be expected; and parti- "cularly as Rabbi Abraham Sebach saith, Rome is to be "overthrown, and the Jews restored, (Hp. Newton.)— "Some difficulty is found, in determining the precise time "from which to date these two thousand three hundred "years: and the case is the same, in respect of the thousand "two hundred and sixty years, in different ways repeatedly "stated to be the term of the desolations or captivity of the "Church, both by Daniel and St. John. But nearly a thou- "sand years must be allowed, as intervening between the "former and the latter: the two thousand three hundred "days, or years, may be supposed to have distinct dates, "both for commencement and termination, according to the "several steps, by which the predicted events had their "beginning, and will at length come to an end. Thus it was "with the Babylonish captivity, and the event alone, it is "probable, will clear up all the difficulties, in which these "calculations must of course be previously involved. It "may perhaps be worthy of notice, that it is now about "two thousand three hundred and fifty-eight years since Daniel "had this vision; and no doubt the end of the two thousand "and three hundred days, or years, is not very distant. The "marginal references show, that the words rendered "the "transgression of desolation," are referred in the New "Testament to events which occurred long after the perse- "cution of Antiochus; and especially to the siege and de- "struction of Jerusalem by the Romans, 17 So he came near where I stood: and when he came, I was afraid, and fell upon my face: but he said unto me, 21 And the rough goat is the king of Grecia: and the great horn that is between his eyes is the first king.

18 Now as he was speaking with me, I was in a deep sleep on my face toward the ground: but he touched me, and set me upright.

19 And he said, Behold, I will make thee know what shall be in the last end of the indignation: for at the time appointed the end shall be.

23 And in the latter time of their kingdom, when the transgressors are come to the full, a king of fierce countenance, and understanding dark sentences, shall stand up.

24 And his power shall be mighty, but not by his own power: and he shall destroy wonderfully, and shall prosper, and practise, and shall destroy the mighty and the holy people.
25 And * through his policy also he shall cause craft to prosper in his hand; and he shall magnify himself in his heart, and by * peace shall destroy many: he shall also stand up against the Prince of princes; * but he shall be broken without hand.

26 And * the vision of the evening and the morning which was told is true:

"wherefore shalt thou shut up the vision; for it shall be for many days.

27 And I Daniel fainted, and was sick certain days; afterward I rose up, and did the king's business; and I was astonished at the vision, but none understood it.

people to whom they were specially addressed; so ought they to be faithfully translated into the vulgar tongue of every country to which they are sent; that men may have free access to them, and by them be made wise unto eternal salvation. Indeed every thing in religion should be made as plain as possible to the meanest capacities of the most illiterate; and whatever counteracts this intention, savours more of the subtility of Antichrist, than of the wisdom and simplicity of Christ.

No wonder, when holy men of God spake as they were moved by the Holy Ghost, that they declared future events as if they had been eye-witnesses of the performance of them. To this light, that shineth in a dark place, we shall do well to take heed, until the day of glory dawn in our hearts, and the witness in ourselves establish at once our belief of the truth of the Scriptures, and of our own interest in the blessings therein revealed. The most feeble of the creatures would become formidable enemies, if God were pleased to employ them against us; and it often happens, in providence as well as in grace, that the first become last, and the last first. Powerful men commonly employ themselves in pushing down their neighbours, and trampling upon them; they are not willing that any should stand before or escape them; but they desire to do their own will, and become unrivalled in greatness, whatever mischief they bring upon others. But such men lay the axe to the root of their own greatness: they multiply enemies along with their successes: and thus others are excited to avenge the cause of the oppressed, and to fulfill God's righteous judgments; even when urged forward by their own impetuous ambition, rapacity, or resentment. Whilst prosperous warriors thus drive furiously, and carry all before them, and millions admire their consummate valor and conduct, or their good fortune; perhaps their enterprises are little better than madness, though rendered successful by Providence, till they have reached their appointed limits, and then in the midst of their career of prosperity they are suddenly removed; and whilst men dispute about the second causes of the disaster, it is plain that the great first Cause of all had no more of his plan for them to execute, and therefore he cut them off, to make room for other instruments. We perceive this clearly by comparing these prophecies with the records of their accomplishment: and under Alexander, if we steadily exercise our faith on the word of God, and judge of every event by that rule.

V. 9—14.

When turbulent conquerors are suddenly broken without remedy, their anger, ambition, and ostentation cease; and the earth might be quiet, but that others arise in their

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—8.

As the Scriptures were written in the languages of the Vol. III.—No. 25.
Daniel, being assured that the end of the captivity was near, humbled himself in confessing his sins and those of his people, and earnestly prays for the restoration of Jerusalem, 1—19. Gabriel informs him that the city, being rebuilt, shall continue for seventy weeks of years; when the Messiah, being cut off for the sins of his people, and the covenant confirmed with many; the legal sacrifices would be terminated, and desecrating judgments overwhelm both the city and nation, 20—27.

In the first year of *Darius the Son of *Ahasuerus, of the seed of the Medes, 2 * which was made king over the realm of the Chaldeans; 3 In the first year of his reign, 1 Daniel understood by books the number of the years, whereof the word of the LORD came to Jeremiah the prophet, 4 that he would accomplish seventy years in the desolations of Jerusalem. 5 And *I set my face unto the Lord, 6 Go, to seek by prayer and supplications, with fasting, and sackcloth, and ashes, 7 that the Lord our righteousness 8 might have in us, 9 distance hath sin placed us from the world of spirits, to which otherwise we should have been most nearly allied! But amidst all our doubts and discouragements, on our own account, or that of the Gospel, we may, if true believers, look forward with a cheerful hope of a happy event; and we should thus endeavour to compose our minds for attending on the business, to which we are severally appointed, in the Church and in the world.

NOTES.

CHAP. IX. V. 1. *Darina. *This is the same person who is called Cyaxares the son of Astyages by the heathen historians. Astyages had the name of Ahasuerus among the Jews, as appears by a passage in Tobit (xiv. 15) where the taking of Nineveh is ascribed to Nebuchadnezzar and Astyages, who were the same with Nebuchadnezzar's father, and Astyages. (Lomh.)

V. 2, 3. It is probable that Daniel received the answer to his prayer, which is recorded in this chapter, a short time before he was cast into the den of lions; and it was an excellent introduction to that trial of his faith and piety.

—He learned from the books of the prophets, especially from the writings of Jeremiah, that the desolations of Jerusalem would continue seventy years, which he understood were drawing to a conclusion. (Marg. Ref.) *We may observe from hence, that the prophets studied the writings of those prophets who were before them, for the more perfect understanding of the times when their prophecies were to be fulfilled. (Lomh.) *These seventy years were dated from the latter end of the third, or beginning of the fourth year of Jehoiakim, when Daniel was carried captive, and this was the sixty-ninth of them.

—The prophet was much above eighty years of age at this time, and chief President of the whole kingdom: yet he diligently set himself to seek from God, by prayer and fasting, with every token of sorrow, humiliation, and self-denial, the performance of his promised mercy to his afflicted people, and his future blessings upon them. He had his regular hours of prayer three times a day, and we may be sure that he did not forget the people on those occasions; yet he regarded it as a duty incumbent on him to set apart stated seasons for mortification and devotion, in the distressed state of his people and the church of God! (Marg. Ref.)
CHAPTER IX.

4 And I prayed unto the Lord my God, and made my confession, and said, O Lord, b the great and dreadful God, keeping the covenant and mercy to them that love him, and to them that keep his commandments;

5 We have sinned, and have committed iniquity, and have done wickedly, and have rebelled, even by departing from thy precepts, and from thy judgments:

6 Neither have we hearkened unto thy servants the prophets, which spake in thy name to our kings, our princes, and our fathers, and to all the people of the land.

7 O Lord, a righteousness belongeth unto thee, but unto us confusion of faces, as at this day; to the men of Judah, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, and unto all Israel, that are near, and that are far off, through all the countries whither thou hast driven them, because of their trespass that they have trespassed against thee.

8 O Lord, &c. 8 as to us belongeth confusion of face; to our kings, and to our praps, and to all Israel.

V. 4. We may suppose that Daniel enlarged very much on these particulars, in his copious supplications, of which he hath given us a compendium. In these he first confessed the sins of himself and his people, and professed his belief of the terrible greatness and power of Israel's God, and his covenanted mercy and favour to those who loved him and kept his commandments; for others were only nominal Israelites, who had forfeited their privileges by their crimes, and by impenitence and unbelieving. (Marg. Ref.) 'The better men are, the greater is the sense of their guilt, and the deeper their humiliation.' (Loxth.)

V. 5, 6. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 7-10. 'He showed, that whereas God punished, he doeth it for just cause: and thus the godly never accuse him of rigor, as the wicked do; but acknowledge that in themselves there is just cause why he should so entreat them.' But Daniel also recollected, that abundant mercies and forgivenesses, as well as perfect justice, belonged to God: so that even the rebellious might hope in him, when brought to a sense of their guilt and danger.—The kings of Judah and Israel were dead, and there were at that time no inhabitants of Judah or Jerusalem; but the prophet considers not only the generation of Israel then living, but also the several orders of men, who, in former ages, had provoked God to pour out vengeance on the nation. He shows that the whole blame lay on them, and that they had all acted a most shameful part. Some had been covered with confusion of face, as true penitents, and the rest would inherit everlasting shame and contempt, (xlii. 2. Marg. Ref.)

Set before us, &c. Or, "Placed before our faces." The instructions and pressing exhortations of the prophets are thus described, in order to aggravate the guilt of those who, notwithstanding, persisted in rebellion.

V. 11. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 12. (Marg. Ref.) The destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, and the condition of the Jews during almost eighteen centuries, have far more exceeded all the miseries of the Babylonish captivity, than those miseries exceeded the judgments inflicted on other nations: and is it not then evident, that the guilt of crucifying the Messiah, and rejecting his Gospel, was immensely more atrocious, than all their previous transgressions? (Note, 25—27.)

V. 13. As if, &c. 'A devout acknowledgment of God's justice, in making his judgments exactly fulfil the threatenings denounced many ages ago by Moses.' (Loxth.) Thus every succeeding part of the sacred writings attests and preserves the divine authority of these parts which preceded. The history relates the fulfilment of former predictions; and these new prophecies are added, which future events accomplish. (Ps. xlii.)

Yel, &c. Few, comparatively, of the Jews humbly prayed for deliverance from their troubles, as expecting it from the power and mercy of God; and some, who prayed to him for help in addiction, did not seek for his converting 14 Therefore hath the Lord watched upon the evil, and brought it upon us: for the Lord our God is righteous in all his works which he doeth; for we have obeyed not his voice.

15 And now, O Lord our God, that hast brought thy people forth out of the land of Egypt with a mighty hand, and hast gotten thee renown, as at this day; we have sinned, we have done wickedly.

16 O Lord, according to all thy righteousness, I beseech thee, let thine anger and thy fury be turned away from thy city Jerusalem, thy holy mountain; because for our sins, and for the iniquities of our fathers, Jerusalem and the people are become a reproach to all that are about us.

17 Now therefore, O our God, hear the prayer of thy servant, and his supplications, and cause thy face to shine upon thy sanctuary that is desolate.

18 O my God, incline thine ear, and hear; open thine eyes, and behold our desolations, and the city which is called by thy name: for we do not present our supplications before thee for our righteousnesses, but for thy great mercies.

19 O Lord, hear; O Lord, forgive; O Lord, hearken, and do: defer not for thine own sake, O my God: for thy city and thy people are called by thy name.

20 ¶ And whiles I was speaking, and praying, and confessing my sin, and the sin of my people Israel, and presenting my supplication before the Lord my God, for the holy mountain of my God;

21 Yet, whiles I was speaking in prayer, even the man Gabriel, whom I had seen in the vision at the beginning, being caused to fly swiftly, touched me about the time of the evening-oblation.

22 And he informed me, and talked with me, and said, O Daniel, I am now come to shew thee; for thou art greatly beloved. Therefore understand the matter, and consider the vision.

23 At the beginning of thy supplications the commandment came forth, and I am come to shew thee; for thou art greatly beloved. Therefore understand the matter, and consider the vision.

V. 18. We do not, &c. Declaring that the godly flee only unto God's mercies, and renounce their own works, when they seek for remission of their sins.

V. 19. He could not content himself with any vehemency of words; for he was so led with fervent zeal; considering God's promise made to the city, in respect of the Church, and for the advancement of his glory.

Perhaps Daniel feared lest the promised blessing should be delayed, through the neglect of the people; supposing that few of them earnestly prayed for it. (Jer. xxix. 12, 13; Ez. xxxvi. 37.)

V. 20. My sin, &c. Daniel's character stands so fair in Scripture, for wisdom and piety, from early youth to extreme old age, that we should scarcely have known that he was a sinner if he had not told us so: yet doubtless he was proportionately humbled before God for his sins of heart and life; and considered the continued calamities of the nation as a chastisement of his offences, as well as those of his countrymen.

V. 21-23. Whilst Daniel was thus humbling himself before God, and earnestly pleading in behalf of his people and Jerusalem, and for blessings on the Church of God; the angel Gabriel, called the man whom, because he appeared in human form, whom he had seen in a former vision, (viii. 16) came flying swiftly, as on in haste, and earnest to answer his prayers and relieve his anxiety. He touched Daniel about the time of the evening oblation, the hour when it had been used to be offered; or about three 24 Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people, and upon thy holy city, to finish the transgression, and to reconcile for iniquity, and to make an end of sins, and to make reconciliation for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up the vision and prophecy, and to anoint the most Holy.

25 Know therefore * and understand, that from the going forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem, unto the Messiah the Prince, shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks: the street shall be built again, and the wall, even in throublesome times.

26 And after threescore and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off, but not for himself: and the people of the prince that shall come shall destroy the city and the sanctuary; and the end thereof shall be with a flood, unto the end of the war desolations are determined.

27 And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week: and in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease, and for the overspreading of abominations he shall make it desolate, even until the consummation, and that determined shall be poured upon the desolate.
Therefore hath the Lord watched upon the evil, and brought it upon us: for the Lord our God is righteous in all his works which he doeth: for we have obeyed not his voice.

15 And now, O Lord our God, that hast brought thy people forth out of the land of Egypt with a mighty hand, and hast gotten thee renown, as at this day; we have sinned, we have done wickedly.

16 O Lord, according to all thy righteousness, I beseech thee, let thine anger and thy fury be turned away from this thy city Jerusalem, thy holy mountain, because for our sins and for the iniquities of our fathers, Jerusalem and thy people are become a reproach to all that are about us.

17 Now therefore, O our God, hear the prayer of thy servant, and his supplications, and cause thy face to shine upon thy sanctuary that is desolate.

18 O my God, incline thine ear, and hear; open thine eyes, and behold our desolations, and the city which is called by thy name: for we do not praise present grace, or desire to be turned from all their iniquities, and to understand his truth and will.

V. 14. Watched, &c. The Jews had watched for opportunities of committing wickedness; and therefore the Lord watched his opportunity of executing deserved punishment upon them: that is, he did at the proper time and in the most effectual manner, in order to make known the glory of his holy name.

V. 16. Thy righteousness. The Lord had glorified his righteousness in punishing the people for their sins, but his justice would also consist with the exercise of mercy towards them: and as he had promised to deliver and restore them, it was become in some sense an act of righteousness to do it; the honour of his word and of his holy name required it, and it involved in it all the interests of truth and righteousness on earth. "According to all thy merciful promises and the performance of them." (Marg.)

Ref. V. 17. Lord's, &c. That is, either for his own name's sake, and not for their sake; (Ez. xxxvi. 22, 31.) or for the sake of Christ the Lord, as most Christian interpreters have understood it. "For the sake of the Messiah, (26.) known by the title of the Lord among the Jews, the sake of Christ; (2 Cor. i. 20.) (Lowth.) Jerusalem must be rebuilt and the Jews restored, in order to the performance of the promises concerning the Lord Christ.

V. 18. We do not, &c. 'Declaring that the godly flee only unto God's mercies, and renounce their own works,' when they seek for remission of their sins.'

V. 19. 'He could not content himself with any vehemency of words; for he was so led with fervent zeal, considering God's promise made to the city, in respect of the Church, and for the advancement of his glory,'—Perhaps Daniel feared lest the promised blessing should be delayed, through the neglect of the people; supposing that but few of them earnestly prayed for it. (Jer. xxix. 12, 13. Ez. xxxvi. 37.)

V. 20. 'My sin, &c. Daniel's character stands so fair in Scripture, for wisdom and piety, from early youth to extreme old age, that we should scarcely have known that he was a sinner if he had not told us so: yet doubtless he was proportionately humbled before God for his sins of heart and life; and considered the continued calamities of the nation as a chastisement of his offences, as well as those of his countrymen.'

V. 21 - 23. 'Whilst Daniel was thus humbling himself before God, and earnestly pleading in behalf of his people and Jerusalem, and for blessings on the Church of God; the angel Gabriel, (called here the man, because he appeared in human form,) whom he had seen in a former vision, (viii. 16.) came flying swiftly, as one in haste, and earnestly to answer his prayers and relieve his anxiety. He touched Daniel about the time of the evening oblation, the hour when it had been used to be offered; or about three 24 Seventy weeks are determined upon thy people, and upon thy holy city, to finish the transgression, and to make an end of sins, and to reconcile for iniquity, and to bring in everlasting righteousness, and to seal up the vision and prophecy, and to anoint the most Holy.

25 Know therefore and understand, that the goings forth of the commandment to restore and to build Jerusalem, unto the Messiah, the Prince, shall be seven weeks, and threescore and two weeks: the streets shall be built again, and the wall, even in a few, bountious times.

26 And after threescore and two weeks shall Messiah be cut off, but not for himself: and the people of the prince that shall come shall destroy the city and the sanctuary; and the end thereof shall be with a flood, and unto the end of the war desolations are determined.

27 And he shall confirm the covenant with many for one week: and in the midst of the week he shall cause the sacrifice and the oblation to cease, and for the overspreading of abomination shall he make it desolate, even until the consummation, and that determined shall be poured upon the desolate.
Daniel, after long mourning and fasting, sion, and in very turbulent times: and after the expiration of the sixty-two weeks (making sixty-nine in all), or in the seventh week, the Messiah would be cut off, by a violent death, but not for any offence of his own: (Marg. Ref.) and then the people of a prince that should come would destroy both Jerusalem and the temple, and bear down all before them like a deluge of waters; for unto the end of that war desolations of the most dreadful kind were determined upon. But before this, the Messiah, (the Messenger of the Covenant,) who was to be given as a Covenant to the people,) would confirm the Covenant with many for one week: the last week of the seventy, whether ending at the death of Christ, as some compute, and extending to two or three years after that event. For, by his own personal ministry, and afterwards by that of his apostles, multitudes of the Jews would accede to the new covenant mediated by him, and way would be made for the calling of the Gentiles also. And his sacrifice of himself, offered during this week, (perhaps towards the middle of it,) would virtually terminate the Mosaic dispensation, and vacate the ceremonial law: so that all other sacrifices and oblations would thenceforth be in every respect inefficacious. (Heb. x. 26.) But the Jewish nation in general, adhering to these sacrifices, and acromenly rejecting that of the Messiah, would in consequence see the idolatrous standards of hostile invaders, (which they justly counted an abomination,) appear in the land and about Jerusalem; as a token of the desolations which were about to overspread the whole city and country, and to pursue the devoted inhabitants, till all the vengeance which had been determined and predicted had been poured out upon them: and by the destruction of Jerusalem and the temple, the sacrifices there offered would actually be caused to cease. This seems a general outline of the events here foretold; and historical records sufficiently show its general accomplishment, though some difficulty in subordinate matters should still remain.—

There are four edicts, recorded in Scripture, to which these words, (the going forth of the commandment, &c.,) may seem applicable: viz. the edict in the first year of Cyrus, (Ezra vi. 1;) the second of Darius, (Ezra vii. 1.) in the seventh of Artaxerxes, (Ezra vii. 7.) and in the twentieth, (Neh. i. 1.) — There are some things in the prediction which, when duly adverted to, give good ground for passing by the two first edicts. And as to the two last, it has been well observed, that Christ’s death happened seventeen weeks of solar years after one of them, and as many weeks of lunar years after the other. The two first edicts speak only about the rebuilding of the temple,—without one word about rebuilding the city: whereas the prediction speaks about an edict for rebuilding the city and the walls and streets of it, without one word about rebuilding the temple; though in foretelling the second destruction of the city, that of the temple, is also mentioned.—

But the third edict, that of the seventh of Artaxerxes, though it does not contain the very expressions of Daniel’s prediction, yet it contains things to which these expressions are applicable. Sir Isaac Newton justly observes, that the dispersed Jews became a people and a city, when they returned into a body politic; and that was in the seventh year of Artaxerxes Longimanus; when Ezra, by the king’s commission, erected magistrates over the land, to govern the people according to the law of God and of the king: under Ezra they first became a polity or city by a government of their own.—But there is another character, which is perhaps yet more decisive. According to the prediction, the edict must be only seven weeks before completing the building of the city: for one and the same event, viz. the appearance of the Messiah, which is placed only sixty-two weeks after the building, is placed only sixty-nine after the edict: which demonstrates, that the distance between the edict and the building could be no more than seven weeks. Now the two first edicts were made long before; for in the twentieth of Artaxerxes, (above eighty years after the latest of those edicts,) it was told Nehemiah, that the wall was broken down, the gates burnt with fire, and the place of his father’s sepulchre was burned up. (Maclaurin.) The date of the going forth of the decree to restore and rebuild Jerusalem cannot therefore be reckoned from the time of Cyrus’s decree, or that of Darius. It is generally fixed to the commission granted to Ezra by Artaxerxes in the seventh year of his reign; though some prefer the commission granted to Nehemiah by the same prince, in his twentieth year, and so reckon the years by the shorter computation. But the former seems more satisfactory, and is only objected to, because Nehemiah’s commission especially related to the rebuilding the walls of Jerusalem; whereas Ezra’s was of a more general nature. But the expressions here used may be understood figuratively, of re-settling the whole Jewish constitution in Church and state, which Ezra began and Nehemiah carried on or finished; as well as of rebuilding and fortifying the city. (Marg. Ref.) The most eminent chronologists compute it to have been nearly four hundred and ninety years, from the commission granted to Ezra to the death of Christ; and some contend that it was so with the greatest exactness. This period was divided into three subordinate ones. During seven weeks, or forty-nine years, the street and wall, or rampart, were to be built in troublous times. This takes in the space that intervened between the granting of Ezra’s commission and the completion of Nehemiah’s work, as recorded in the last chapter of his book, and which contains the last history in the Old Testament, or perhaps some time longer. From the time of the Jews, in virtue of Cyrus’s decree, till the days of Artaxerxes Longimanus, (though the temple had been rebuilt, and some parts of the city;) the affairs of the Jews continued in great disorder, both as to the state of the city, and the regulation of their civil and religious concerns. From Ezra’s commission, however, they began to assume a more promising aspect; and notwithstanding the troubles excited by various enemies, matters were at length brought opposition of the prince of Persia, the assistance of Michael, and the coming into better order, both as to the temple and its worship, and to the police and defence of the city; and the state was guarded with wholesome laws impartially executed.
These things were accomplished in very troublesome times, as the histories of Ezra and Nehemiah show: but afterwards the nation became populous and powerful, and Jerusalem very strong and almost impregnable. These were the events that occurred in the first seven weeks; and from the expiration of that term to the beginning of the Gospel by the ministry of John the Baptist, as some compute, or to that of our Lord, was four hundred and thirty-four years, or sixty-two weeks; and the last week, or seven years, is allotted to the ministry of John and of Christ himself, until his crucifixion: for he was to be cut off after the seven and the sixty-two weeks, or in the seventieth week; but as it is said, that in the midst or in the half part of the week he should cause the sacrifice to cease; some conclude, that the last week extended beyond his crucifixion, to the time when the Gospel began to be preached to the Gentiles also. We cannot, however, be absolutely certain in respect of minute calculations: but whether before, or just after, the death of Christ, everything was done within this last week, or seven years, which was requisite for introducing the Gospel-dispensation, for confirming the new covenant of grace, and for the calling of multitudes to partake of its blessings. The legal sacri-cifices then lost their obligation and efficacy; the condemnation of the Jewish nation was denounced and ratified by Christ himself; and preparation was soon made for its execution, though it was not fully completed till about forty years afterwards: these intermediate years being like the time which intervenes between the condemnation and the execution of a malefactor. Those insurrections, however, soon began, which induced the Romans to make war upon the Jews. Then their armies under Vespasian and Titus erected their idolatrous standards in the holy land, and surrounded Jerusalem: the city was besieged, taken, and desolated, and left to be trodden down by the Gentiles; immense multitudes perished miserably; the temple was destroyed by the soldiers, contrary to the orders of the general: the remnant of the Jews were dispersed through all nations; and those judgments were poured as an irresistible deluge on that people, which have continued to this day. Thus the general interpretation is plain, notwithstanding some difficulties. It is very useful to observe, that (supposing all these things to be real causes of some kind of obscurity; namely, of that obscurity which is impenetrable by superficial attention, but is consistent with convincing evidence upon due search;) — the veil of apparent obscurity, which distinguishes prophesy from history, is a proof of wise contrivance; — seeing, what on first view increases the obscurity, on due inquiry, increases the evidence, and determines the meaning of the prediction. (Maucleriu.) Indeed, inattention to the words of the prophecy itself has been the chief cause of those differences of opinion which prevail in explaining it; it contains internal characters, which carefully noted fix the time of its accomplishment very satisfactorily. It is, however, undeniable, that Daniel foretold, that the Messiah would come within less than five hundred years from a decree granted for rebuilding Jerusalem; he showed that he would be put to death, by a legal sentence (for so the word implies;) and he expressly predicted, that in consequence, Jerusalem and the temple would be desolated, and the nation of the Jews exposed to tremendous punishments, of which no termination is mentioned. With in that time, Jesus of Nazareth appeared: he answered in every respect to the description given of him by all the prophets; he was put to death as a deceiver; yet vast multitudes became his disciples, and Christianity gained a permanent establishment. After a time Jerusalem and the temple were destroyed; and the state of the Jews to this day is a striking comment on this prediction. How can it then be denied, that Daniel spake by divine inspiration, or that Jesus is the promised Messiah? Both these important points might be fully demonstrated by this one prophecy, even if it stood single: how much more, when it is only one star, so to speak, in a resplendent constellation; or one among a vast number of predictions, all of which combine with united evidence to demonstrate the same grand truths! (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.
V. 1—19.

They who are most eminent in wisdom and piety, and favoured with most frequent communications from heaven, will pay the greatest reverence to the written word of God: and only spiritual pride or enthusiasm render men regardless of this sacred standard, because of superior knowledge or supposed new revelations; for the genuine spirit of prophecy would have a contrary effect. The most exalted in rank, and they that are most occupied in important employments, should spare time for the study of the Scriptures and prayer. The promises of God are intended to encourage our petitions for their accomplishment.
No personal ease or prosperity can render the believer regardless of the desolations, or indifferent about the prosperity, of Zion; and no constancy in stated exercises of devotion, should prevent us from sometimes setting apart extraordinary seasons for prayer and fasting; that we may more deeply humble ourselves before God for our sins and those of our people; and with more earnest and undivided attention seek his blessing on our undertakings and on his cause. Nor will the aged believer, if growing in grace and not prevented by bodily infirmities, wish to excuse himself from these self-denying and humiliating duties.—
Our addresses to the Lord our God should always be attended with humble confessions of our own unworthiness, and reverence awe of his holy, great, and terrible majecty; even whilst we plead before him, as the God who keepeth covenant and mercy with his people. Love to him, shown by obeying his commandments, is the proper evidence that we are interested in these blessings; nor can they who live in sin, and are conscious that they have committed iniquity, and done wickedly, and rebelled in departing from his precepts, take comfort from his covenant and mercy; till they repent and seek forgiveness, and have their hearts thus inclined to love and obey him. But such as freely confess their sins, and labour for language to express the sense of the malignity and multitude of their transgressions, give a hopeful evidence that they are prepared for returning peace, and for a gracious answer to all their supplications. No rank or order of men in the community is free from blame, in respect of the accumulation of national guilt: and if kings or princes refuse to hearken to the faithful ministers of God, they render the mercy of God, in thus warning them, an occasion of deeper guilt and condemnation. In all our sufferings we should acknowledge the justice of the Lord, and that he is glorious even in our punishment; and that shame and confusion of face are our portion, as we have sinned away our mercies and exposed ourselves to his severe rebuke. Yet we must not yield to despondency: for “to the Lord belong mercies, and forgivenesses, though we have rebelled against him;” nay, his pardoning grace is vaster than all our crimes. He will indeed execute his threatened judgments on guilty nations, and pour out his curse on impenitent sinners, according as it is written in the book of the law: he will thus establish his word, that he hath spoken against the wicked, in bringing a great evil upon them, even far greater than befiel Jerusalem: and so long as men neglect prayer, or do not pray to be turned from their iniquities, and to be made to understand the truth of God, he will watch upon the evil to bring it upon them, being “righteous in all his works.” Yet he is ever ready to deliver those who humble themselves before him, and call upon him, and to exert that power that he so gloriously displayed, when he brought Israel out of Egypt. When we humbly confess our sins, and plead his promises, and beseech him, for the honour of his name and the credit of his cause, to help and deliver us, that Jerusalem may not become a reproach, we may confidently expect in due time an answer of peace: and we never pray more acceptably, than when we are satisfied about our own concerns, and earnestly entreat our God and Father to cause his face to shine on his sanctuary, for the sake of Christ “our Righteousness,” and when we present our supplications before him, not for our righteousness, but for his great mercies.
I

V. 20—27.

The fervent and importunate cries of zealous Christians are well pleasing to the Lord: he will forgive, and hearken, and do: whilst they are speaking he is preparing an answer; and all his angels, though invisible, are his ministering spirits to convey blessings to the heirs of salvation. They fly swiftly to execute every one of his commands; but they especially delight in performing kind services to praying souls; who, being accepted in Christ, are “greatly beloved,” in proportion to the degree in which they resemble him and seek his glory. The Lord gives skill and understanding in answer to prayer, and they who well consider his words shall receive instruction, in every thing which concerns them. All blessings bestowed on sinners centre in Christ, and come to them through his all-sufficient atoning sacrifice: and the most eminent believers need frequently to be reminded to look off from forms, and types, and shadows, and outward privileges, unto the appointed Holy One, who was cut off by an ignominious excruciating death. “suffering once for sins, the just for the unjust, that he might bring us to God.” Thus he finished whatever the types prefigured, the prophets foretold, or the justice of God and the honour of the law required, in order to the pardoning and subduing our transgressions, the atoning for our iniquity, our reconciliation to God, our everlasting righteousness and sanctification. Here is the foundation of our hope, our Fountain opened for sin and uncleanness, our Way of access to the throne of grace, and our entrance into heaven. This seals the sum of prophecy, and confirms the covenant with many: and whilst we rejoice in the blessings of salvation, we should remember the groans which the purchase of them cost our Redeemer. But “how shall they escape who neglect so great salvation”? The desolations of Jerusalem, and the slaughter or long-continued dispersion of the Jews, by the overspreading of abomination; and the pouring out of divine vengeance on the murderers of Christ, not only evince the truth of the Scriptures, but loudly warn others not to copy so fatal an example. When the Lord commands, the city will be built, and its prosperity secured, even in turbulent times; and as his word desolations rush in like a flood, from which no outward privileges can defend us: but the streets and walls of the true Jerusalem, which hath been so long building in troublesome times, will at length be completed by the rain of every adversary; and “peace will be within her walls, and prosperity within her palaces.” Let us pray for this peace of Jerusalem, for they shall prosper that love her.

NOTES.

CHAP. X. V. 1. This chapter begins Daniel’s last vision, which was about four years after the preceding one. It is continued to the end of the book: and as the things revealed would certainly take place, so the time would be long before they would all be accomplished. To the death of Antiochus Epiphanes, of whom exclusively many interpreters the latter part of the vision, was no more than three hundred and seventy years; and Daniel had predicted events vastly more remote: but on another interpretation, which is supported by the highest authorities, and by the most conclusive reasonings, it will appear that many of them are not yet accomplished, and indeed that they look forward almost to the end of time; and thus Daniel himself seems to have understood them. “And he understood the matter, and obtained knowledge of it by the vision.” Thus the concluding words may be literally rendered; he acquired much knowledge of these events, in addition to
In those days Daniel was mourning three full weeks. He ate no pleasant bread, neither came flesh nor wine in his mouth; neither did I anoint myself at all, till three whole weeks were fulfilled.

And in the fourth and twentieth day of the first month, as I was by the side of the great river, which is Hiddekel;

Then I lifted up mine eyes, and looked, and beheld a certain man clothed in linen, whose loins were girded with fine gold of Uphaz.

His body also was like the beryl, and his face as the appearance of lightning, and his eyes as lamps of fire, and his arms and his feet like in colour to polished brass, and the voice of his words like the voice of a multitude.

And Daniel alone saw the vision; for the men that were with me saw not the vision: but a great quaking fell upon them, so that they fled to hide themselves.

Therefore I was left alone, and saw this great vision, and there remained no strength in me: for my comeliness was turned into me into corruption, and I retained no strength.

Yet heard I the voice of his words: and when I heard the voice of his words, then was I in a deep sleep on my face, and my face toward the ground.

And, behold, an hand touched me, which set me upon my knees and upon the palms of my hands.

And he said unto me, O Daniel, a man greatly beloved, understand the words that I speak unto thee, and stand upon the word, and stand upon the word of mine hand, which I have spoken unto thee, I stand over thee.

And he said unto me, Fear not, Daniel: for from the day that thou didst set thine heart to understand, and....

what he had before, by this vision; though some things still remained obscure to him. (xii. 8.)

V. 2-3. Daniel had been at this time seventy-three years in captivity; and could not be less than ninety years of age: yet he spent three weeks, in mournfully humbling himself before God. It is probable, that he was much affected at witnessing the backwinds of the Jews, to avail themselves of Cyrus's proclamation; perhaps fearing, lest his example, in serving the king of Persia, should be misunderstood by them. He doubtles would hear from time to time discouraging accounts of the difficulties, which his brethren in Judea had to encounter: and many think, that machinations were then carrying on against them in the Persian court, which might throw still greater obstacles and discouragements in their way. (Notes, Ezra iv.) But, whatever induced him thus to observe so long a season of fasting and prayer, he abstained, during the whole time, from all relishing food, and from wine, subsisting on bread and vegetables, drinking only water, and avoiding the use of those ointments and other indulgences, which his station and time of life seemed to render necessary. (i. 8-16.)—This was very different from those fasts of later ages, in which men indeed abstain from flesh, but eat other delicacies, and drink strong liquors without restraint.

V. 4-9. Part of the time of Daniel's fasting must have coincided with the season appointed for the passover and the feast of unleavened bread: but the passover could not be observed in any other place than Jerusalem; and the distressed state of the nation rendered fasting peculiarly proper at that time. Hiddekel, or Tigris, (Gen. ii. 14.) was near Shusan, where, it is probable, Daniel at that time resided. Whilst he walked on the banks of that river, for contemplation or devotion, with attendants at a distance, he lifted up his eyes and saw one in the form of a man, who could be no other than the Son of God. (xii. 16.) The description St. John gives of Christ, as High Priest of the Church, (Rev. i. 12-20.) seems to be taken from this place of Daniel; which proves that the person here described can be no other than the Son of God, which may be further confirmed by comparing the person described here, and XII. 5, 6, with Rev. x. 2-6.; who is there represented as setting his right foot on the sea, and his left upon the land, as Sovereign Lord of both elements. (Lowth.) His priestly garment of linen was an emblem of his purity, and the equity of his administration, and the excellency of his ministerial work. His girdle, of the finest gold, might denote his faithfulness to his word, and readiness to perform all things which he had undertaken, for his Church: his body like the beryl, might signify his heavenly beauty and excellency: his face as lightning, and his eyes as lamps of fire, might show the terror of his frown, and his discernment and knowledge of all hearts and all events: his arms and feet as polished brass, might imply his glorious power, as engaged to defend and support his people, and to tread down their enemies: and the voice of his words, like the voice of a multitude, might signify the extensive efficacy of his word to save or to destroy. Daniel alone saw the vision of this glorious Person; for his attendants were so alarmed, that they fled to hide themselves; and even he was so overwhelmed by it, as to be deprived of strength and courage; and his countenance was changed to a pallid and ghastly hue, like that of a corpse. Yet was he not wholly incapacitated for hearing the words of the Lord; though he lay prostrate on the ground in humble adoration of his glorious majesty, his senses and faculties being closed from all other objects, as in a deep sleep. (Marg. Ref.)
to chasten thyself before thy God, thy words were heard, and I am come for thy words.

13 But the prince of the kingdom of Persia withstood me one and twenty days: but, lo, Michael, one of the chief princes, came to help me; and I remained there with the kings of Persia.

14 Now I am come to make thee understand what shall befall thy people in the latter days: for yet the vision is for many days.

15 And when he had spoken such words unto me, I set my face toward the ground, and I became dumb.

16 And, behold, one like the similitude of the sons of men touched my lips: then I opened my mouth, and spake, and said unto him that stood before me, O my lord, by the vision my sorrows are turned upon me, and I have retained no strength.

17 For how can the servant of this my lord talk with this my lord for as yet strength is not in me.

18 Then there came again and touched me one like the appearance of a man, and he strengthened me.

19 And said, O man greatly beloved, fear not: peace be unto thee, be strong,竖, be strong. And when he had spoken unto me, I was strengthened, and said, Let my lord speak; for thou hast strengthened me.

20 Then said he, Knowest thou wherefore I come unto thee? and now will I return to fight with the prince of Persia: and when I am gone forth, lo, the prince of Grecia shall come.

21 But I will shew thee that which is noted in the scripture of truth: and there is none that holdeth with me in these things, but Michael your prince.

Daniel, was detained all this time, to defeat the machinations of the enemies of Israel; and yet could not have prevailed, but that Michael, one of the chief princes, whom many think to denote Christ, came to his assistance, (Marc. Ref.) while employed to watch the measures of the Persian rulers: but he was at that time sent to make known to Daniel what would befall his people in future ages and in the latter days.

V. 15-19. This angel, that was helped by Michael, appeared so glorious to Daniel, that he was astonished and struck dumb by what he saw and heard: but one like to a man touched his lips, and then he was enabled to speak; and he complained, that, instead of deriving comfort from the vision, his sorrows were renewed by it, and he was utterly overcome; for how could the poor servant endure to speak with his glorious Lord? so that it was no wonder that he was left fainting and breathless. Again therefore one touched him, in appearance as a man; and communicated strength to him; and the prophet was enabled to hear the words which he spake to him.

How ren. &c. "How can the servant of this my Lord talk with that my Lord?" that is, with so majestic a person, at whose sight I was perfectly con founded." (Lomth.) This supposes, at least with probability, that the angel mentioned in the preceding verses is here meant; not that glorious Person before described, but an angel deputed by him.

O man, &c. Thou needest not be under such terrible apprehensions, as if this vision did portend thee some mischief: for it is a peculiar token of God's favour to thee." (Lomth.)

V. 20, 21. The angel next inquired whether Daniel well understood for what purpose he came to him? Thus reminding him, that he was sent to instruct him concerning
CHAPTER XI.

The Persian empire overthrown by the Grecian, and that divided into four parts, 1—4. The kings of the south and of the north, through several generations, 5—30. The dominion, success, and destructed of a power hostile to the people of God; supposed to be Roman, Pagan, and Antichristian, 31—45.

Also 1. in the first year of Darius 42. 31. 32. 1.
the Mede, even I, stood to confirm and to strengthen him.

the things which would befall his people: but when he had executed this commission he would return back, and continue to counteract the devices of the Persian kings against the Jews, even till that monarchy should terminate; by which means many fatal effects would be prevented, and many troubles averted. And when that commission was executed, the prince of Grecia would come; or the Macedonian empire under Alexander and his successors would be established, and the chief danger and trouble to the Jews would arise from that quarter. But he would proceed more fully to open, and enlarge upon, the prophecies of the former Scriptures to the same effect; or rather to show what was written in the book of God's secret purposes, of which all prophecies are as an abstract. God's decrees are spoken of, as if they were committed to writing, and registered in a book. (Lonth.) But Daniel might be assured, that he had not one friend in the court of Persia, who would concur with the angel, to forward the prophet's designs in behalf of his people, but Michael their Prince: and that he must depend on him alone to disappoint the devices which were forming against them. This forms the introduction to the prophecies in the next chapters, which were not proposed as emblems, but in plain language. A great deal is advanced by responsible expositors on these verses, about tutelary and guardian angels presiding over different countries, as if they strove one against another, each for his favourite country. This may indeed consist with either paganism or popery, but it is utterly incompatible with Christianity. The passage is allowed to be difficult: but perhaps careful consideration may allow the interpretation above given to be satisfactory. Daniel was chief president in Persia: yet not one of the princes or counsellors of that empire cordially united with him in doing good to the Jews: he must therefore look above to Michael, his Prince, and his mighty angels, who would at length effect a revolution, by turning the dominion from Persia to Greece, which would be more favourable to the Jews, than Persia in after-times was.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

This world will continue to be a vale of tears to the greatest and best of men, as long as they live in it: for when they are most exempted from personal trials, they often see most cause to mourn over the calamities of the Church, and the sins which occasion them. When we duly lay these things to heart, and diligently seek to understand wherefore God conteddeth with us or his people, and, as consciously guilty, afflict and humble ourselves by self-denial in things lawful, dissembling earthly comforts, while such important concerns engross our attention, we may expect peculiar answers to our prayers. The more we delight in communion with God, the less we shall be attached to the pleasures of sense, and the more willing we shall be to forego them, that we may be at liberty for nobler joys. They who accustom themselves in youth to self-denial, will find it less grievous when they grow old: and in all cases, fasting, temperance, meditation and prayer, are happy means of obtaining discoveries of the glory of Christ to our souls. But we are better fitted to receive these discoveries by faith, than to behold with our bodily eyes the fulgurance of his personal and mediatorial excellencies: and the secret defence and support of his Providence and Grace are more suited to our state in this world, than the thunder of his power manifested in our behalf; or his majestic word audibly spoken to us. Our frail and vile bodies are not able to support such glorious displays; nor will be, till corruption shall be swallowed up of life: the least intimations of the visions of God would fill us with terror; nor could we behold them (unless supernaturally appoorted,) without being overwhelmed with astonishment, and even reduced to corruption. We may then be thankful to be spoken to by men like ourselves, and by the small still voice of his teaching and comforting Spirit: and we should learn from these records to adore the unseen glorious Majesty of God our Saviour, and to be humbled under the sense of our meanness and sinfulness; seeing one of the best beloved of our race could not find courage and strength even to converse with a ministering spirit of the world above, in whom he saw such superior excellence and glory. The Lord will, however, support his servants under the discoveries of his Majesty and the sense of their own vileness, and he will prepare them to bear his word; when he hath cast them down, he will again raise them up, and make them know that he hath loved them; and he will gradually turn their trembling and sorrow into holy joy and confidence in him.—When we judge and chasten ourselves before God, we are most likely to escape his chastening. Whilst Satan, and his angels, and various evil counsellors, excite princes to devise mischief against his Church; we may rejoice that Christ our Prince, and all his mighty angels, hold with us in these things, and counteract the machinations of our enemies: but we should not expect that many others will favour us in this evil world, or in the courts of the princes of this world. All things, however, that are written in the Scriptures of truth, will certainly be accomplished, and the whole counsel of God shall be established. Our prayers are often put in a way of being effectually answered, before we have any assurance of their being accepted: let us then not be weary of well-doing, but continue in prayer; and we shall certainly prevail, if we faint not.

NOTES.

CHAP. XI. V. 1. The angel here continues his discourse; and to what he had before said of his superin-
And now will I shew thee the truth. Behold, there shall stand up yet three kings in Persia; and the fourth shall be far richer than they all: and by his strength through his riches he shall stir up all against the realm of Greece.

And a mighty king shall stand up, that shall rule with great dominion, and do according to his will.

And when he shall stand up, his kingdom shall be broken, and shall be divided toward the four winds of heaven; and not to his posterity, nor according to his dominion which he ruled: for his kingdom shall be plucked up, even for others beside those.

And the king of the south shall be strong, and one of his princes; and he shall be strong above him, and have dominion; his dominion shall be a great dominion.

And in the end of years they shall join themselves together; for the king's daughter of the south shall come to the king of the north, and make an agreement: but she shall not retain the power of the arm; neither shall he stand, nor his arm; but she shall be given up, and they that brought her, and he that begat her, and he that strengthened her in these times.

tending the affairs of Persia, he adds, that in the first year of Darius, (when perhaps it was debated whether the Jews should be freed or not) he was employed to confer and establish him in his favourable dispositions. This measure was then in contemplation, but it was not determined on till after the death of Darius, and the succession of Cyrus.

V. 2—4. I will shew thee the succession of the Persian and Grecian empire, in plain naked truth, not in symbolical or figurative representations, as it was showed before. (Luth.) The memorable events, which were revealed to Daniel in the vision of the ram and the goat, are here again more clearly and explicitly revealed, in his last vision, by an angel: so that this city revealed, in his last vision, by an angel: so that this latter prophecy may not improperly be said to be a comment and explanation of the former. (Bp. Newton.)

—The three kings of Persia, here mentioned, were Cambyses, the son of Cyrus, Smerdis the Magian, who falsely pretended to be another of his sons, and Darius Hystaspis, who married Cyrus's daughter. Xerxes, the son of this Darius, was the fourth king in Persia after Cyrus, who having inherited, or acquired, immense riches beyond conception, stirred up all his subjects and allies to invade Greece.

For this expedition he collected the largest army that is read of in history, consisting of all sorts, of more than five millions of men: besides the Carthaginians, and others, whom he excited to war against the Grecians in other quarters. But though this tremendous invasion exceedingly wasted Greece; yet it was resisted by a very small number of the inhabitants, with the most determined valour, and the most decided success. The Persian troops were shamefully routed and dispersed, incredible numbers perished, and Xerxes returned home in disgrace, and almost unattended. This was one of the most memorable expeditions recorded in history: and it gave rise to those long wars and that inveterate hatred, between the Grecians and Persians, which ended in the subversion of the Persian empire by Alexander. So that the prophecy, touching upon the principal events, passes over the nine subsequent Persian kings to the time of Alexander, as less worthy of notice; and contrasts his successful expedition against Persia, with Xerxes's unsuccessful invasion of Greece. Alexander is here called "a mighty king, that should stand up, and rule with great dominion, and do according to his will," which implies not only his extensive conquests and absolute authority, but his capricious tyranny, which cost some of his most faithful followers their lives, when they ventured to oppose his inclinations. But when he had acquired the summit of success, power, and renown, he was suddenly cut off, as we have seen; and his dominions were divided into four parts, not to his posterity, but his captains: and that did not equal the honour of his kingdom; which was thus plucked up, for the benefit of others, and not of his own family. The natural brother and the sons, with the mother and wife, of Alexander, in about fifteen years, perished, chiefly by treachery and murder; and then no remains of his family were left: and his captains, after some destructive wars, were all destroyed or reduced, except four, who became heads of four subordinate kingdoms.

Cassander reigned in Greece and the west, Lysimachus in Thrace and the north, Ptolemy in Egypt and the south, and Seleucus in Syria and the east. (Bp. Newton.)

V. 5. Though the dominions of Alexander were divided into four parts; yet two of these kings soon became more eminent than the others, and often seized upon a great part of their dominions: namely, the kings of Egypt and of Syria, called in this prophecy the kings of the south and of the north, as Egypt lay to the south and Syria to the north of Judea. These two kingdoms alone are noticed in what follows: because Judea lay betwixt them and was affected by all their contests and transactions. This verse is rather obscure: it is, however, generally allowed to mean, that Ptolemy Lagus, king of Egypt, would soon become powerful, as one of Alexander's princes; but that another of them, (even Seleucus Nicator, king of Syria,) would be strong above him; for he was the conqueror of the conquerors, and gained the ascendency over them, engrossed a vast proportion of Alexander's dominions, and outlived all his competitors.

V. 6. Antiochus Soter succeeded Seleucus, and was succeeded by Antiochus Theus, in the kingdom of Syria: and Ptolemy Philadelphus reigned in Egypt after his father Ptolemy Lagus. During this time, there were frequent wars between these neighbouring and rival monarchs.
CHAPTER XI.

7 But out of a branch of her root shall one stand up in his estate, which shall come with an army, and shall enter into the fortress of the king of the north, and shall deal against them; and shall prevail.

8 And shall also carry captives into Egypt their gods, with their princes, and with all their precious vessels of silver and of gold; and he shall continue more years than the king of the north.

9 So the king of the south shall come into his kingdom, and shall return into his own land.

10 But his sons shall be stirred up, and shall assemble a multitude of great forces: and one shall certainly come, and overflow, and pass through: then shall he return and be stirred up, even to his fortress.

11 And the king of the south shall be moved with choler, and shall come forth and fight with him, even with the king of the north: and he shall set forth a great multitude: but the multitude of the south shall be given into his hand.

12 And when he hath taken away the multitude, his heart shall be lifted up; and he shall cast down many ten thousands: but he shall not be strengthened by it.

13 For the king of the north shall return and shall set forth a multitude greater than the former, and shall certainly come, after certain years, with a great army and with much riches.

14 And in those times there shall many stand up against the king of the south: also the robbers of thy people shall exalt themselves to establish the vision; but they shall fall.

15 So the king of the north shall come, and cast up a mount, and take the most fenced cities: and the arms of the kingdom shall be broken; and also he shall determine the arm of the south.

But at length they entered into a treaty of peace; to confirm which Antiochus agreed to put away his wife Laodice with her sons, and to marry Berenice the daughter of Ptolemy. Thus the daughter of the king of the south came to the king of the north, to make an agreement with him, and brought with her an immense dowry: but she could not retain the power of the arm, the interest that she had acquired: for Antiochus recalled Laodice, and put away Berenice; and Laodice fearing another change poisoned her husband, and caused Berenice to be murdered, with her attendants. So that Antiochus himself could not stand his ground, or retain his power; and Berenice was delivered to destruction, and those that brought her, and he whom she had brought forth, or her sons (for so the words are generally rendered) nor was her father able to defend her, for he died about the same time. Such were the consequences of this disastrous marriage and alliance.

V. 7—9. Ptolemy Euergetes, brother to Berenice, a branch out of the same root, standing up in his father's estate, came with a great army to avenge his sister's death on Seleucus Callinicus, son of Laodice, who had succeeded to the throne of Syria. And he entered forcibly into the fortresses, or provinces of that kingdom, and easily prevailed against Seleucus. So that, when a sedition in Egypt recalled him home, he carried away with him many captives: and not only the nobles, but the gods, of Syria were thus brought into Egypt. It is said that he took home with him no less than two thousand five hundred idols; among which were some that Cambyses had formerly carried out of Egypt: and for this service the superstitious Egyptians honoured him with the title of Euergetes, or Benefactor. With these captive princes and images, he also carried off vast treasures; and having avenged himself on Seleucus, he continued more years than he, surviving him four or five years, and remaining un molested in his own kingdom.

V. 10—12. Seleucus Cæræmus and Antiochus the Great, the sons of Seleucus Callinicus, were stirred up to war against the king of Egypt, in hopes of recovering the territories which had been taken from their father. But Cæræmus was poisoned by one of his discontented captains; and Antiochus was left to pursue the war alone. This circumstance was marked in the prophecy; for after mention had been made of his sons, it is added, "He, or one of them, shall certainly come, &c." Ptolemy Philopator had succeeded Euergetes his father in the kingdom of Egypt, before these events took place: and Antiochus made war upon him, overran the countries that he held in Asia, and spread desolations like a flood wherever he passed through. Then making a truce with Ptolemy, during which both parties treated of peace and prepared for war, Antiochus returned to attack Ptolemy's forces, and overcame them, and carried the war even to the borders of Egypt, which he threatened with an invasion. This exceedingly exasperated Ptolemy, who marched against him with a great army, gave him battle, entirely defeated Antiochus' numerous forces, obliged him to retreat to Antioch, and thence to send ambassadors to treat of peace. But Ptolemy did not pursue the advantages of this decisive victory; for, being elated with his success, he gave himself up to the most shameful debaucheries. After the retreat of Antiochus, he visited the cities of his Asiatic dominions, and Jerusalem among the rest; and being with difficulty restrained from entering into the holy of holies, he was so displeased with the Jews, that he destroyed, some say, forty thousand, others sixty thousand, of his Jewish subjects in Egypt, by a most furious persecution; and his casting down so many tens of thousands of his own subjects would of course weaken his kingdom, and conduct to its ruin.
south shall not withstand, neither his chosen people, neither shall there be any strength to withstand.

16 But he that cometh against him shall do according to his own will, and none shall stand before him: and he shall stand in the full glorious land, which by his hand shall be consumed.

17 He shall also set his face to enter with the strength of his whole kingdom, and upright ones with him; thus shall he do: and he shall give the daughter of women; corrupting her: but she shall not stand on his side, neither be for him.

18 After this shall he turn his face unto the isles, and shall take many; but a prince for his own behalf shall cause the reproach offered by him to cease; without his own reproach he shall cause it to turn upon him.

19 Then he shall turn his face toward the fort of his own land: but he shall stumble and fall, and not be found.

20 Then shall stand up in his estate one that causeth an altar to pass over into the nations: and a raiser of taxes in the glory of the kingdom: but within few days he shall be destroyed, neither in anger, nor in battle.

V. 13-16. After some years, Antiochus recovered from the effects of his late defeat; and Ptolemy Philopater, being dead, and succeeded by his son Ptolemy Euphrasines, who was only four or five years of age, Antiochus raised a greater army than before, and amassed vast sums of money to defray the expenses of the war, by which he hoped to deprive the minor king of his dominions. And at the same time that Antiochus marched his army to attack the Egyptian provinces, many other enemies stood up against the young king. For the conduct of his father, and of those abandoned ministers who now governed in his name, had so disgusted the Egyptians, that they were ready to join Antiochus; and Philip, king of Macedon, made a league with him against Ptolemy, stipulating to divide his kingdom betwixt them. The persecuted Jews also became refractory, and broke off from their allegiance to the king of Egypt, to join Antiochus; for this seems to be the meaning of the words translated, “the robbers of thy people.” These recollers excited themselves against their former masters, and so helped to establish, or accomplish, this vision, or prophecy: but they were reduced by Ptolemy’s forces, who under Scopas gained many advantages against those of Antiochus. However, the presence of that prince turned the scale in his favour; for he soon recovered what Scopas had taken, and besieged and took Zidon, and others of Ptolemy’s best fortified cities. So that the king of Egypt could not withstand his arms, even with the choicest troops; but he carried all before him, and succeeded in his designs, and established his authority in the land of Judah, the glorious land of God’s chosen people, and of his special presence; which was by him consumed, in furnishing subsistence to his troops: or rather it was by him perfected or established, as some render the word; for it was favoured, and prospered greatly under his government.

V. 17. Antiochus after this success set himself, with all the strength of his kingdom, to possess the kingdom of Judah. Being assisted by the Jews, called upright ones, as worshipping Jehovih, in contradistinction to idolaters: or, as the phrase may mean, making an agreement with him, that is, with Ptolemy: for he attempted to circumvent him by treaty, as well as to subdue him by arms. Thus he undertook to accomplish his purpose: and to induce Ptolemy to enter into treaty with him, he gave him his daughter Cleopatra in marriage; whose singular beauty is supposed to be intimated by the expression, the daughter of women, that is, the most accomplished daughter of women. This offended the Romans, who deemed themselves insulted by this treatment of their allies: and in their own behalf, to vindicate the honour of their state, they proclaimed war against him; and their generals soon drove him out of Europe, pursued him into Asia, and by a most decisive victory deprived him of a great part of his dominions, and compelled him to submit to a very hard and dishonourable peace. Nor did he long survive this disgrace: for finding difficulty in raising the sums of money which the Romans exacted from him, he attempted to plunder a rich temple of Jupiter Belus, in the province of Elymais, where he was slain by the enraged inhabitants. Thus he returned from his rash European expedition to Antioch, his strong-hold, and soon after stumbled, and fell, and was no more.

V. 20. “Then shall stand up one in his estate, who causeth an exactor to pass over the glory of his kings: dom; thus the words may be rendered. Seleucus Philopater, who succeeded his father, being obliged to pay a large annual tribute to the Romans, performed nothing memorable, except levying money from his subjects for this and other purposes. These exactations tarnished the glory of his kingdom; and within a few days or years, (for he reigned twelve years,) he was slain by Heliodorus, whom he had employed to rob the temple of God at Jerusalem. Thus he was destroyed, neither in anger, nor in battle, but by treachery: for Heliodorus hoped to succeed to the throne; as Demetrius the son of Seleucus was a hostage at Rome, and Antiochus his brother was absent from the Syrian court. This project however was disappointed.
CHAPTER XI.

21 And in his estate shall stand up a vile person, to whom they shall not give the honour of the kingdom; but he shall come in peaceably, and obtain the kingdom by flatteries.

22 And with the arms of a flood shall they be overthrown from before him, and shall be broken; yea, also the prince of the covenant.

23 And after the league made with him he shall work deceitfully: for he shall come up, and shall become strong with a small people.

24 He shall enter peaceably even upon the fattest places of the province; and he shall do that which his fathers have not done, nor his fathers’ fathers; he shall scatter among them the prey, and spoil, and riches: yea, and he shall forecast his devices against the strong holds, even for a time.

25 And he shall stir up his power, and his courage against the king of the south with a great army: and the king of the south shall be stirred up to battle with a very great and mighty army; but he shall not stand: for they shall forecast devices against him.

26 Yea, they that feed of the portion of his meat shall destroy him, and his army shall overflow: and many shall fall down slain.

27 And both these kings’ hearts shall be to do mischief; and they shall speak lies at one table; but it shall not prosper: for yet the end shall be at the time appointed.

28 Then shall he return into his land.

V. 21. Antiochus, who succeeded his brother Seleucus, was returning from Rome when he heard of his murder by Heliodorus. "The honour of the kingdom was not given to him;" for Heliodorus intended to seize it for himself, others offered to give it to the king of Egypt, and Demetrius the son of Seleucus was the proper heir of it; so that no party thought of placing Antiochus on the throne. But "he came in peaceably, and obtained it by flatteries." He flattered Eumenes, king of Pergamus, and his brother Attalus, and by fair promises engaged them to support him: he flattered the Syrians with a fair show of clemency; and, as some say, by pretending to hold the crown for his nephew till his return from Rome, by which he obtained peaceable possession: and he flattered the Romans, with the assurance of being a faithful and good ally; and thus he came in, to the exclusion of all his rivals. He was also in turn flattered with the title of Epiphones, or the illustrious; though some more justly called him Epimanes, or the madman. However, the expression of the angel to Daniel, a vile person, best befitted him; for his frantic, idempt, and contemptible behaviour, in many respects, proved him to be all that can be implied in such a title.

V. 22, 23. Antiochus was at first successful in war: for "with the arms of a flood they shall be overthrown before him;" or, "the arms of the overlord shall be overwhelmed before him;" that is, Heliodorus and his other opponents, whose power seemed ready to bear all before it, were speedily borne down by Antiochus, and entirely destroyed. "Yea, also the prince of the covenant." Most expositors understand this of the Jewish high-priest, the prince of God’s covenantated people: for as soon as Antiochus was seated on the throne, he expelled Onias from the high-priesthood, and sold it to his younger brother Jason for a large sum of money; and Onias was soon after cruelly murdered by Antiochus’s deputy. But after his agreement with Jason he acted deceitfully: for induced by another sum of money, he by force of arms deposed Jason, and advanced Menelclus his brother to that dignity. "For," or rather, "and he shall come up and shall become strong with a small people." He had come from Rome with few attendants: his power in Syria was at first incon siderable; yet from small beginnings he became exceedingly strong. Some, however, explain this of Ptolemy Philadelphus; between whom and Antiochus a league, or covenant of peace, had been ratified; yet afterwards he was deceived, and at length, when become sufficiently strong, he made war upon Ptolemy.

V. 24–26. Antiochus had greater success both against the Egyptian provinces in Asia, and against that kingdom itself, than any of his predecessors had had: and be also exceeded them in liberality, or rather extravagance; for he scattered among the people, wherever he went, the prey that he had taken from his enemies, the spoil of cities and temples, the riches of his friends, and his own revenues; so that his profusion exceeded that of any of his predecessors. Thus he fixed the people in his interests: and when his authority was established at home, he began to forecast devices against the strong-holds of Ptolemy, that still held out against him; and he was preparing during some years for the war that he contemplated. At length with all his power and courage he led a great army against the king of Egypt, who sent his generals, with a mighty force to oppose his progress: but Antiochus prevailed, through the fraudulent counsels and treacherous conduct of Ptolemy’s partizans. And the next year Antiochus obtained still more decided advantages, and got possession of almost all Egypt. For Ptolemy’s ministers and servants helped in different ways to ruin his interests; as some of them betrayed his cause, and others exasperated the people to revolt by their base and abominable practices: and thus Ptolemy Physon his brother was set up for king in opposition to him. By these means Antiochus’s forces prevailed, and great numbers of Ptolemy’s were slain.

Overflow, &c. "The arms of Antiochus shall overrun the whole kingdom of Egypt, like a sudden inundation." (Loweith.) with great riches; and his heart shall be against the holy covenant; and he shall do exploits, and return to his own land.

29 At the time appointed he shall return, and come toward the south; but he shall not be as the former, nor as the latter.

30 For the ships of Chittim shall come against him: therefore he shall be grieved, and return, and have indignation against the holy covenant; so shall he do; he shall even return, and have intelligence with them that forsake the holy covenant.

31 ¶ And arms shall stand on his part, and they shall pollute the sanctuary of strength, and shall take away the daily sacrifice, and they shall place the abomination that maketh desolate.

V. 27, 28. By what means Ptolemy Philometor came into the hands of Antiochus is not known; he seems, however, to have been his prisoner. Thus they frequently sat at the same table, or met at the same council-board, and pretended to be amiably disposed, and to enter into a treaty; but they were both bent on mischief, and to do lies to each other. Antiochus pretended a great regard to Ptolemy's interest, and to secure him against the designs of his brother; and Ptolemy professed to confide in Antiochus, and to deem himself bound to him by the strongest ties: whereas Antiochus only meant to weaken the two brothers by lomenting their discord, till he should be able to seize upon the whole kingdom; and Ptolemy was aiming to effect a reconciliation with his brother, that they might unite in expelling the invader. But this fraud did not fully prosper on either side: Antiochus could not get possession of the whole kingdom; and Ptolemy could not drive him out of it. Antiochus was at length induced to leave Egypt and return to Syria, with immense treasures that he had seized; and his heart was turned against the holy covenant; for the report being spread of his death, it occasioned great rejoicings and some insurrections among the Jews; which so exasperated him, that he resolved to be revenged on the nation. Accordingly he besieged and took Jerusalem, slew forty thousand of its inhabitants, and sold twice that number for slaves; he then polluted the temple with swine's flesh and various defilements; he even entered with violence into the holy of holies; he plundered the sacred treasures; and having succeeded thus far, he returned home to Antioch.

V. 29, 30. After an interval of two years, in the time before appointed of God, Antiochus returned to renew his attempts against Egypt, and finding that the two brothers were amicably providing for their common safety, he made war upon them with great impetuosity and success. However, this expedition terminated in a different manner, from either of the preceding; for the Roman state sent ambassadors to him, at the request of the Ptolemies, commanding him to lay down his arms, and not to molest their allies. Perhaps these ambassadors came in Grecian ships, or the name Chittim signifies the several European countries that border on the Mediterranean sea. They executed their commission in the most peremptory and decisive manner; for one of them made a circle with his came round Antiochus, and insisted on his answer before he passed out of that circle; being determined to declare war against him, if he hesitated to comply with his demands; and Antiochus, not daring to bring upon himself the whole power of the Romans, who were then free from other wars, was forced to submit. Thus he was checked in his full career of victory, to his extreme vexation; and returning home full of grief and shame, he vented his indignation against the Jews, the covenant-people of God: for he detached Apollonius with an army of twenty-two thousand men, who, coming to Jerusalem, slew great multitudes, plundered the city, set fire to it in several places, and pull'd down the houses. Then they built up a strong eminence in the city of David, a strong fortress, which they called the temple; and issuing from thence, they fell on those that came to worship, and shed innocent blood on every side of the sanctuary, and defiled it: so that the temple was deserted, and the whole service omitted; the city was forsaken of the natives, and became an habitation for strangers. "So he did it at the time; and after his return to Antioch he published a decree, which obliged all persons under pain of death to conform to the religion of the Greeks; and so the Jewish law was abrogated, and the heathen worship was set up in its stead, and the temple itself was consecrated to Jupiter Olympus. In transacting these matters, he had intelligence with them that formerly took the holy covenant; that is, with Menelaus, and other apostate Jews of his party." (Bp. Newton.) Indeed, the distresses of the Jews in those days arose principally from the machinations of their countrymen, who joined the enemies of their nation and religion. There is not so complete and regular a series of these kings, nor so concise and comprehensive an account of their affairs, to be found in any author of those times. So little is known of their action, that it is necessary to have recourse to several authors, Greek and Roman, Jewish and Christian, to collect something from one, and something from another, to explain and illustrate the great variety of particulars contained in this prophecy. "No one could thus declare the times and seasons, but he who hath them in his own power." (Acts i. 7.) (Bp. Newton.)

V. 31. Thus far the prophecy is clear, and the interpretation satisfactory; but the subsequent part is very difficult, and commentators have differed exceedingly about it. Some have explained the whole of Antiochus Epiphanes; some have made him a type of Antichrist; and some, especially those who follow the窜 text, say, "they extend some parts of it to the subsequent kings of Syria": nay, some expositors decline giving any interpretation of these predictions; except as they stop to show us how impossible it is to apply many things in it to Antiochus. But though all that follows in this vision cannot be explained of the short-lived exploits of this "vile person," yet a similarity of character and conduct, between...
And such as do wickedly against the covenant shall be corrupt by flatteries; but the people that do know their God shall be strong, and do exploits.

33 And they that understand among the people shall instruct many: yet they shall fall by the sword, and by flame, by captivity, and by spoil, many days.

him and future oppressors of God's people, might give occasion to the inspired writer, or to the angel, to glide from one to the other by an almost imperceptible transition. As Antiochus had the power of the sword on his part, his captains seized on and polluted the sanctuary, which had been strongly fortified, and which was itself the defence of the people; and they entirely suppressed the stated worship, and placed a base idol in the temple of God, which was an abomination that desolated the city and sanctuary, by driving thence all pious Jews: they also built idol-altars in all the cities of Judah. This therefore may apply to Antiochus. But very eminent expositors suppose, that the transition before-mentioned begins here to take place: and that, as it must shortly be admitted, it cannot be better introduced, than here. In the same year that Antiochus, by the command of the Romans, retired out of Egypt, and set up the worship of the Greeks in Judea, the Romans conquered the kingdom of Macedon, the fundamental kingdom of the empire of the Greeks, and reduced it into a Roman province; and thereby put an end to the reign of Daniel's third beast. This is thus expressed by Daniel: And after him shall arise, (that is the Romans,) who shall stand up, Arms are everywhere in this prophecy put for the military power of a kingdom; and they stand up, when they conquer and grow powerful. Hitherto Daniel described the actions of the kings of the north and the south: but upon the conquest of Macedon by the Romans, he left off describing the actions of the Greeks, and began to describe those of the Romans in Greece. (Sir Is. Newton.) In support of this interpretation, it may be further added, that the Jews themselves, as Jerome informs us, understood this passage neither of Antiochus Epiphanes, nor of Antichrist, but of the Romans; of whom it was said above, that "the ships of Chittim shall come," &c. After some time, says the prophet, out of the Romans themselves, who came to assist Ptolemy, and menaced Antiochus, there shall arise the emperor Vespasian; there shall arise his arms and seed, his son Titus with an army, and they shall pollute the sanctuary, and take away the daily sacrifice, and deliver the temple to eternal desolation. (Hyp. Newton.) "We must know, that after the death of Antiochus Epiphanes, the third kingdom cometh no more into the holy reckoning: none of the Greek kings after him be of all prophesied of. The reason of this is, because during the reign of Antiochus, Macedonia, (whence that kingdom sprang,) with all the rest of Greece, came under the Roman obedience. From thence therefore the Holy Ghost begins the rise of the fourth kingdom, yea, the Roman historians themselves mark out that time for the rise of their empire." (Med.) "Our Saviour himself, making use of the same phrase, the abomination of desolation, in his prediction of the destruction of Jerusalem, may convince us, that this part of the prophecy relates to that event." (Hyp. Newton.) The emphasis which our Lord quotes this prophecy of Daniel (Marg. Ref.) greatly confirms this argument. Indeed, the concluding verse of the ninth chapter contains nearly the same language, in an express prediction of the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans. There can remain no doubt with any one, who carefully compares the concluding part of this chapter and the next chapter with the other scriptures; accurately examines the import of the words employed; and attentively considers the records of history; that the fourth kingdom, even that of the Romans, is predicted. First Rome Pagan, then Rome Christian. and then Rome Antichristian, must be intended; whether the transition be made at this verse, or not till the thirty-sixth: for no other power, that has hitherto appeared on earth, at all answers to the description here given, or has had dominion during so long a term of time, as the angel plainly marks out. The persecutions and profanations of the temple, by Antiochus Epiphanes, began about one hundred and sixty-eight years before the Christian Era: he died not more than four years afterwards: the Romans soon began to disturb the Jews: at length Pompey, about sixty-three years before the Christian Era, took Jerusalem, and entered into the holy of holies. He, however, in other respects, neither plundered nor profaned the temple. But from that time, Jerusalem was dependent on the Romans, and subject to those whom they made kings or governors, till the destruction of the city and temple by Titus: and in the year of our Lord one hundred and thirty-two, the emperor Adrian caused a temple to be erected to Jupiter Capitolinus, on the very spot where the temple of God before stood, and banished the Jews from Jerusalem and its neighbourhood. Thus the abomination that maketh desolate, was effectually placed in the sanctuary of strength, to pollute it; and the daily sacrifice was taken away. Yet these events seem also to have been, in some degree, figures of the corruptions introduced into the Christian Church, by the idolatries of Antichristian Rome. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 32, 33. Antiochus doubtless corrupted many of the Jews to do wickedly, by his flattering promises and rewards: and the remnant that knew, trusted, and loved their God, were greatly strengthened, and did wonders, both in supporting his cruel tortures, and resisting his unjust and abused authority; but it cannot so well be said, that they instructed many, or made numerous converts to their religion. And though they endured severe things, yet it was not for many days: three years and a half being a very short time in the language of prophecy. But the Romans not only destroyed Jerusalem, and took away the daily sacrifice; but during their dominion they brought Christ, persecuted his followers, and also set themselves to extirpate Christianity; and their magistrates used the most alluring promises and flatteries, as well as the most terrible threatenings, to prevail with Christians to apostatize and worship idols. Many were thus corrup ted and did wickedly. But the real Christians were enabled to resist all these temptations, and to adhere to their religion with the most heroic constancy: and through the whole extent of the Roman empire, as well as in other places, Christianity was propagated. At the same time they were exposed to death by the sword and flame, and to be carried captive, and spoiled, for many days; for the ten persecu tions of the Roman emperors lasted almost three hundred years, with only short intermissions of rest and peace.
The dispersion of the apostles, teachers, and Christians, in the primitive times, by persecution, greatly promoted the propagation of the Gospel. They understood, and were wise, and carried their wisdom with them, and instruc ted in immense multitudes. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 34, 35. When the Jew fell under the persecutions of Antiochus, Mattathias of Modin, and his son Judas Macceabees, revolted from the persecutors; and after the death of Mattathias, Judas several times vanquished the armies of Antiochus with very inferior forces; at length he recovered Jerusalem, cleansed the sanctuary, restored the worship of God, and survived Antiochus; and both the priesthood and sovereignty remained in that family for several generations. The small force of these Jewish heroes might be called "a little help," yet in fact it proved a most effectual help. But if we advert to what succeeded the persecutions before-mentioned, we shall per ceive a more unexceptionable interpretation. After the Christians had longfallen under the power of their persecu tors, the conversion of Constantine gave them a deliver ance: they were no longer persecuted, but favoured by the Roman emperor and his deputies. Yet this proved but a little help to the cause of true religion; it added much to the temporal prosperity of the Church, but it greatly attended to debase the character of professing Christians.
Especially it caused many to cleave to them with flatteries;
for hypocrisy became prevalent amongst both the clergy and laity, who were intent on flattering the emperor and those in authority, for their own interest. And indeed persecution soon revived within the Church, the different parties cruelly harassing each other by turns: and they who had most understanding in true religion were commonly most oppressed; being permitted to fall into calumny, to try and prove them, and to distinguish them from false professors, as well as purged away their defile ment and made them white. This was to continue to the time of the end; because it was yet for an appointed time. These expressions cannot be applied to the per secuted Jews in the days of Antiochus; for that did not bring either their calamities, or those of the Church, to an end: but the persecutions that Christians have suffered from their professed fellow Christians, began from the days of Constantine, and have continued more or less to this day; and they will continue till the appointed time of the Jews' conversion, the ruin of every antichristian power, and the last great spread of the Gospel.

V. 36. After the Romans had stopped the progress of Antiochus in Egypt, he was no more able to do according to his will, or to exalt himself; except he cruelly oppressed the Jews; and even in this he was finally baffled: he indeed spoke marvellous things against the God of gods; but he could not be said to magnify himself against every god, for he was remarkable for his superstition and idolatry.
The prophecy therefore could not receive accomplishment in him. "Then a king shall according to his will," &c.
Under the same king must be under stood the Roman state, under what kind of government soever. (Medcr.) The prophet was speaking of the persecutions, which would be permitted for the trial --of the Church, after the empire was become Chris tian; and now he proceeds to describe the principal author of these persecutions. After the empire was become Christian, there would spring up in the Church an antichristian power, that should --exalt itself above all laws human and divine; dispense with the most sacred and solemn obligations; and in many respects enjoin what God had forbidden, and forbid what God had com manded. This power too was to continue in the Church; and "prosper, till the indication was accomplished;"
"for that is determined shall be done." This must denote some particular period; otherwise it is no more than saying, that God's indication shall not be accom plished, till it be accomplished. This is the same that was called, (viii. 19,) "the consummation of the last of the indication," and, (iv. 27,) "the consummation;" and it means the last of his indication against his people, the Jews,' (xii. 7.) (By. Newton.) St. Paul seems to have referred to this prophecy of Daniel, in his extraordinary predictions of "the Man of Sin," and in great measure foretold the general outlines of the above interpretation; and to have still more fully elucidated it; especially in respect of marvellous things broken against the God of gods. (Marg. Ref.) The series of the pre dicted events also leads us to the same interpretation.
After the empire became Christian, a king, (or kingdom,) gradually sprang up in it, of a most absolute and tyrannical nature, doing according to his own will, with the most avowed defiance of God's laws; and requiring the most Neither shall he regard the God of his fathers, nor the desire of women; nor shall he regard any god: for he shall magnify himself above all.

33 But in his estate shall he honour the God of force: and a god whom his fathers knew not shall he honour, with gold, and silver, and with precious stones, and pleasant things.
34 Now when they shall fall, then shall they be holpen with a little help: but many shall cleave to them with flat-teries.

35 And some of them of understanding shall fall, to try them, and to purge; and to make them white, even the most alluring promises and flatteries, as well as the most terrible threatenings, to prevail with Christians to apostatise and worship idols. Many were thus corrupted and did wickedly. But the real Christians were enabled to resist all these temptations, and to adhere to their religion with the most heroic constancy: and through the whole extent of the Roman empire, as well as in other places, Christianity was propagated. At the same time they were exposed to death by the sword and flame, and to be carried captive, and spoiled, for many days: for the ten persecutions of the Roman emperors lasted almost three hundred years, with only short intermissions of rest and peace. The dispersion of the apostles, teachers, and Christians, in the primitive times, by persecution, greatly promoted the promotion of the Gospel. They understood and were wise, and carried their wisdom with them, and instructed immense multitudes. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 34, 35. When the Jews fell under the persecutions of Antiochus, Mattathias of Modin, and his son Judas Maccabaeus, revolted from the persecutors; and after the death of Mattathias, Judas several times vanquished the armies of Antiochus with very inferior forces: at length he recovered Jerusalem, cleansed the sanctuary, restored the worship of God, and survived Antiochus; and both the priesthood and sovereignty remained in that family for several generations. The small force of these Jewish heroes might be called "a little help" yet in fact it proved a most effectual help. But if we advert to what succeeded the persecutions before-mentioned, we shall perceive a more exceptionable interpretation. After the Christians had long fallen under the power of their persecutors, the conversion of Constantine gave them a deliverance: they were no longer persecuted, but rewarded by the Roman emperor and his deputies. Yet this proved but a little help to the cause of true religion: it added much to the temporal prosperity of the Church, but it greatly tended to debase the character of professed Christians. Especially it caused many to cleave to them with flatteries; for hypocrisy became prevalent amongst both the clergy and laity, who were intent on flattering the emperor and those in authority, for their own interest. And indeed persecution soon revived within the Church, the different parties easily hating each other by turns: and they who had most understanding in true religion were commonly most oppressed; being permitted to fall into these calamities, to try and prove them, and to distinguish them from false professors, as well as purge away their defilements, and make them white. This was to continue to the time of the end; because it was yet for a time appointed.

36 And the king shall do according to his will; and he shall exalt himself, and magnify himself above every god, and shall speak marvellous things against the God of gods, and shall prosper till the indignation be accomplished: for that that is determined shall be done.

V. 36. After the Romans had stopped the progress of Antiochus in Egypt, he was no more able to do according to his will, or to exalt himself; except as he cruelly oppressed the Jews: and even in this he was finally baffled: he indeed spoke marvellous things against the God of gods; but he could not be said to magnify himself against every god, for he was remarkable for his superstition and idolatry. The prophecy therefore could not foresee its accomplishment in him. "Then a king shall do according to his will," &c. Under the name king must be understood the Roman state, under what kind of government soever. (Medr.) The prophet was speaking of the persecutions, which would be permitted for the trial of the Church, after the empire was become Christian; and now he proceeds to describe the principal author of these persecutions. After the empire was become Christian, there would spring up in the Church an antichristian power, that should—exalt itself above all laws human and divine; dispense with the most sacred and solemn obligations; and in many respects enjoin what God had forbidden, and forbid what God had commanded. This power too was to continue in the Church, and "prosper, till the indignation be accomplished; for that that is determined shall be done." This must denote some particular period; otherwise it is no more than saying, that God's indignation shall not be accomplished, till it be accomplished. This is the same that was called, (viii. 19), "the last end of the indignation," and, (iv. 27), "the consummation;" and it means the last end of his indignation against his people, the Jews, (vii. 7.) (By. Newton.) St. Paul seems to have referred to this prophecy of Daniel, in his extraordinary prediction of "the Man of Sin," and in great measure to have both sanctioned the general outlines of the above interpretation; and to have still more fully elucidated it; especially in respect of marvellous things spoken against the God of gods. (Marg. Ref.) The series of the predicted events also leads us to the same interpretations. After the empire became Christian, a king (or kingdom,) gradually sprang up in it, of a most absolute and tyrannical nature "doing according to his own will," with the most avowed defiance of God's laws; and requiring the implicite obedience from men of all ranks, orders, and nations. The emperors first exercised, or excited, this power by their ecclesiastical councils: but it gradually passed into the hands of the clergy; and the bishop and church of Rome at last carried it to the most enormous height, exalting and magnifying themselves above every god. These have long prospered, and will, more or less, do so, till the Lord's indignation against his people shall be accomplished, and the determined period of the calamities of the Church be expired.

V. 37. In what sense could it be said, that Antiochus did not regard the god of his fathers when he compelled the Jews to worship Jupiter Olympus? Or, that he regarded not the desire of women; when, besides being married, he was excessive and shameless in his indulgence of his lust, and did nothing to restrain others from the same? The desire of women and of the married life, the Romans ought to bejun and when he shook off the gods of his ancestors. (Mede.) It is certain that Constantine, the first Christian emperor, in various ways discouraged marriage and honoured celibacy, thus acting in direct opposition to the ancient policy of Rome; and that the subsequent idolatry and blasphemy of the antichristian power were accompanied by a proportionate discouragement of marriage, till it was totally prohibited to the ministers of religion. By the desire of women, or wives, as it may be rendered, beyond all doubt, the desire of marriage is meant: and where on earth has any power, or government, permanently and avowedly stigmatized marriage as dishonourable and almost idolized celibacy and virginity, except that of Rome, even from the conversion of the emperors to this day, and those who have retained some measure of her antichristianity? (Marg. Ref.) Most interpreters, however, suppose, that the virtual apostasy of the antichristian power from the true God, is meant by his not regarding the god of his fathers.

V. 38. For together with God, in his seat shall he honour Mahuzim; even together with that God whom his ancestors knew not, shall he honour (them) with gold and with silver, and with precious stones, and with pleasant things. (Mede.) Mahuzim is the plural of the word translated a fortress, a strong tower, or a rock, in very many places of Scripture. True Christians have, with David, but one Mahoz, the "Mahoz of salvations," but apostate Christians have their many Mahuzim. By the strange and foreign God, to whom the Romans at length acknowledge, is meant Christ: for though to the Jew every strange and foreign god was a false god; yet to the Gentiles, who worshipped none but idols, the foreign God was the true. Therefore the philosophers at Athens, when St. Paul preached Christ to them, said he preached a foreign God. (Mede.) To this it may be added, that the true God was to them the Unknown God; whom their fathers knew not. (With this foreign God, he shall honour the God of forces: and they worshipped Mahuzim, gods-protectors, such as saints and angels are supposed to be.) (Mede.) The translation of this verse, as above given, seems more literal than our version: and it is certain, that from the time when the Roman power began to profess the worship of the true God, and of Christ his coequal Son, (whom their fathers knew not;) they began to corrupt Christianity, by substituting saints and angels, as protectors and mediators, in the place of the geni and demons of paganism. They did not renounce the worship of God, or the mediation of Christ; but along with this one God and one Lord, they worshipped "gods many and lords many." and the reader may find in Mr. Meade's works, and in Sir Isaac Newton's observations on this prophecy, most astonishing instances of the early introduction of this idolatry, and the gross language used by the fathers even of the fourth century in respect of it. Mr. Meade's interpretation of this clause seems indeed well grounded; but it has not been generally admitted. "And the god Mahuzim, in his estate shall he honour; even a god whom his fathers knew not." (Bp. Newton.) But Mahuzim is plural, and denotes towers, or fortresses; whereas the word translated god, in the second clause, is singular, and cannot mean the same with Mahuzim; but must signify either the true God, or some particular idol or false god. The verse may be translated thus: "And with God, or instead of God, Mahuzim in his estate shall he honour; even with God, or instead of God, those whom his fathers have not known shall he honour." (Bp. Newton.) If this translation be adopted, then the objects of worship, which the fathers of those concerned had not known, are the same as Mahuzim. It should, however, be observed, that the translation or interpretation of this clause, in either way, does not in the least detract from the certainty of the exposition in other respects. The meaning evidently is, that the worship of Mahuzim of protectors, and guardians, instead of God, as God, or with God, is indisputably predicted, if there be any meaning in words; and the practice of the church of Rome from very early ages to this day is plainly intended; while the profusion of rich oblations, at the shrines of their saints, fully explains and illustrates the concluding part of the verse. And who is there so little acquainted with ecclesiastical history, as not to know, that the worship of saints and angels was established both in the Greek and Latin church. They were not only invoked and adored, as patrons, intercessors, and guardians of mankind; but festival days were instituted to them, miracles were ascribed to them, churches were erected to them; their very relics were worshipped, and shrines and images were adorned with the most costly offerings, and were honoured with gold, and silver, and with precious stones, and desirable things. And what renders the completion of the prophecy more remarkable is, that they were adored under the title of Mahuzim, of bulwarks, fortresses, of protectors and guardians.
39 Thus shall he do in the most holy places with a strange god, whom he shall acknowledge and increase with glory: and he shall cause them to rule over many, and shall divide the land for gain.

40 And at the time of the end shall the king of the south push against him: and the king of the north shall come against him, like a whirlwind, with chariots, and horsemen, and with many ships; and he shall enter into the countries, and shall overflow and pass over.

of mankind. (Bp. Newton.) Even the dead bodies of saints were called by the fathers of the fourth century, "great towers of the martyrs, fortifying cities more strongly by than any impregnable wall of adamant," and much more to this effect. Such expressions are to be found in many ancient, and even modern, liturgies and manuals of prayers, applied to the virgin Mary, and to saints and angels; and in the eighth century this idolatrous worship was fully established by law.

V. 39. "And he shall make, or appoint, or prepare, for his strong-holds of Mahuzzim, along with the foreign God, to whom? (Mahuzzim.) "acknowledging, he shall multiply honour; and he shall cause them to rule over many, and shall divide the earth for a reward." Thus the verse may be translated, perhaps as literally as the construction will admit of. The word rendered do, in our version, is known to have a most extensive meaning, and may well be supposed here to signify appoint or prepare: and except the preposition to, nothing varies in the least from the most literal translation in other respects; now the relative in numerous places is thus used in the Hebrew without the prefix, which is supposed to be understood. If this be admitted, then the interpretation is plain. The strong-holds of this antichristian power are his churches and monasteries, which he would consecrate to saints, or angels, or to God and his saints. Having once acknowledged the Mahuzzim, as objects of religious worship, as gods-protectors, he would honour them more and more, from age to age. He would invest them with a dominion, (as far as he could do it,) not only over men on earth, but over those who have entered the unseen world, and induce vast multitudes to seek deliverance out of purgatory, for their deceased relations and friends, from their powerful intercession, and to purchase, at a vast expense, masses and prayers from the priests and monks for that purpose. Let it here be remembered, that this power hath invested the apostle Peter with the keys of heaven itself, that as his successor he might claim the same authority over the eternal state of mankind at large! And, finally, he would divide the earth among them. St. George shall have England, St. Andrew, Scotland, St. Dennis, France, St. James, Spain, St. Mark, Venice, &c.; and bear rule as presidents and patrons of their several countries. (Mede.) It must be remembered, that the secular possessions of the Pope, are called St. Peter's patrimony: and, doubtless, this dividing of the earth among the Mahuzzim was made a source of great gain accruing from the several countries thus placed under the guardian care of these several saints.

41 He shall enter also into the glorious land, and many countries shall be overthrown: but these shall escape out of his hand, even Edom, and Moab, and the children of Ammon.

42 He shall stretch forth his hand also upon the countries: and the land of Egypt shall not escape.

43 But he shall have power over the treasures of gold and of silver, and over all the precious things of Egypt: and the Libyans and the Ethiopians shall be at his steps.
44 But tidings out of the east and out of the north shall trouble him: therefore shall he go forth with great fury to destroy, and utterly to make away many.

45 And he shall plant the tabernacles of his palaces between the seas; in the glorious holy mountain, yet he shall come to his end, and none shall help him.

CHAPTER XI.

V. 44, 45. All the attempts of commentators to apply this to Antiochus have proved fruitless: for though he went forth with great indignation to subdue some revolted provinces in the east and in the north; yet he never returned into Judea, which land alone can be intended by "the glorious holy mountain." It is more probably concluded, that this part of the prophecy relates to events yet future. Some conjecture that the Persians, who border on the Turkish dominions to the east, and the Russians who lie north of them, will unite against the Turks; that in the land of Canaan the latter will fix their camp with great ostentation, as well as wage the war with great fury; and that there they shall receive such a defeat, as shall end in the utter subversion of their monarchy. But it may perhaps refer to events, which have been before mentioned, (Notes, &c. Ez. xlviii. xxxix.) namely, the return of the Jews to their own land after their conversion, and the assistance to be given them by the Christian European powers; which tidings from the east and north might excite the Turkish princes, who possess the country that is again to be restored to the Jews. And thus going forth with great fury to war against the Jews, and having pitched their camp between the Mediterranean sea and the Dead sea, in the mountains of Judea, they will be suddenly and surprisingly ruined without help or recovery. Thus the ruin of the eastern antichrist will not be far distant from that of the western, both of which seem to be predicted in this chapter. The word rendered, "to make away," signifies to curse, and seems to intimate, that the war would be on a religious account. As, however, this part of the prophecy is certainly yet unfulfilled, we ought not too freely to indulge conjecture, where the evident meaning of the prophecy does not fully authorize our conclusions.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-19.

The predictions of the Scripture not only confirm the doctrines contained in it; but they tend to establish our faith in the over-ruling providence of God, which is thus sensibly demonstrated to us. Little do men in general imagine, how much even the determinations of princes and senates are influenced by the agency of good or bad spirits. In mercy to his people, the Lord employs his mighty angels to strengthen and confirm those who know him not, in every determination of his own, and measure that he sees will prove for the good of his servants: and they are thus imperceptibly directed by an external agent, when they most entirely follow their own inclinations. Whilst wealth and power animate men to engage in ambitious projects, they are sure, whether successful or not, to involve multitudes in ruin: and the projectors only continue for a few
Michael will deliver the people of God out of extreme trouble, 1. The resurrection of the dead, and the happiness of the righteous, 2, 3. Daniel is ordered to shut up these words, till a time when they would be better understood, 4. The duration and end of these predicted events, 5—12. The prophet is bidden to go and enter his rest in peace, 13.

And at that time shall Michael stand up, the great Prince which shall standeth for the children of thy people: and there shall be a time of trouble, such as never was since there was a nation even to that same time: and at that time thy people shall be delivered, every one that shall be found written in the book.

V. 36—45.

How dreadfully do the transactions of the visible church illustrate the doctrine of man's depravity! The blasphemies and impious abrogations of God's laws to make way for men's inventions, the denying of the Head, in order to worship creatures; the most diabolical pride united with voluntary humility; the most carnal and abandoned conduct cloaked under the appearance of the greatest mortification: the most lavish profusion joined with the most extreme avarice and extortion, have been found in the greatest degree among the rulers of the professedly Christian Church: but these are Antichristian abuses, which will soon come to an end, however men may now practise and prosper in them. The end of the Lord's indignation against his people, and of his patience towards his enemies, approaches: and if we would escape the ruin of the infidel, the idolater, and the superstitious and cruel persecutor, as well as that of the profane, we must make the oracles of God our standard of truth and duty, the foundation of our hope, and the light of our paths, through this dark world to the glorious inheritance above.

NOTES.

CHAP. XII. V. 1. Michael signifies, Who is like God? And this name, with the title of "the great Prince, which standeth for the children of thy people," most clearly points out the divine Saviour: and cannot properly be understood of a created angel. If the words "at that time" be referred to Antichrist's persecution, Christ stood up in his providence merely to deliver the Jews from their persecutors; if to the destruction of Jerusalem by CHAPTER XII.

2 And many of them that sleep in the dust of the earth shall awake, some to everlasting life, and some to shame and everlasting contempt.

3 And they that be wise shall shine as the brightness of the firmament; and they that be righteous shall shine as the stars for ever and ever.

4 But thou, O Daniel, shut up the words, and seal the book, even to the time of the end: many shall run to and fro, and knowledge shall be increased.

5 ¶ Then Daniel looked, and, behold, there stood other two, the one on this side of the bank of the river, and the other on that side of the bank of the river.

6 And one said to the man clothed in linen, which was upon the waters of the river, What long shall it be to the end of these wonders?

7 And I heard the man clothed in linen, which was upon the waters of the river, when he held up his right hand and his left hand unto heaven, and swore by him that liveth for ever, that it shall be for a time, times, and an half; and when he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy ones of the Most High; for a time, times, and a half; and when he shall have accomplished, he shall speak a words against the Most High, and shall wear out the power of the holy ones of the Most High.
half; and when he shall have accomplished to scatter the power of the holy people, all these things shall be finished.

8 And I heard, but I understood not: then said I, O my Lord, what shall these things be? 9 And he said, Go thy way, Daniel; for the words are closed up and sealed till the time of the end. 10 Many shall be purified, and made white, and tried; but the wicked shall do wickedly: and none of the wicked shall understand; but the wise shall understand.

11 And from the time that the daily sacrifice shall be taken away, and the abomination that maketh desolate set up, there shall be a thousand two hundred and ninety days. 12 Blessed is he that waiteth, and cometh to the thousand three hundred and five and thirty days. 13 But go thou thy way till the end be: for thou shalt rest, and stand in thy lot at the end of the days.

V. 5—9. When the angel had finished his discourse, Daniel was led to look around him, and he saw two other angels, on each side of the river Tigris. He saw also upon, or rather above, the waters of that river, a man clothed in linen; this was doubtless Christ our spotless High Priest; who ruleth over many people, of which sitting or standing upon waters is an emblem. One of the attending angels asked him, How long it was to be to the end of these wonders? In answer to which inquiry, He lifted up his hands to heaven, as charging the eternal Jehovah, that it would be for a time, times, and a half. This is the same period, that we before met with (vii. 25) and which we shall repeatedly find in the Revelation of St. John. It signifies three years and a half, or twelve hundred and sixty days. These are to be calculated from the time when the king, before prophesied of, began to scatter the power of the holy people, until that scattering shall be accomplished; for then all these things will be finished. This period must not be calculated from the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, and the subsequent dispersion of the Jews; for they then ceased to be the holy people: but from the time, when the anti-Christian usurpers began to scatter the power of true Christians, by false doctrines, persecutions, massacres, and religious wars, to the approaching period when these powers shall be subdued. It has been seen, that the imposition of Mahomet, and the papal usurpation, began about the same time; and we may allow both to be included, as a twofold attack upon the Church under the secret direction of the devil and his angels. When Daniel heard this, he found that he did not understand it: and therefore made further inquiries respecting it: and was again reminded, that the words were to be closed, and sealed up to the time of the end.

What shall, &c.? Or as Mr. Mede translates the words, What are these latter times, thou speakest of? Be content with what has been made known unto thee: for the fuller explanation of the prophecy is deferred to the time of its accomplishment. (Lam.)

V. 10. During the long-continued troubles of the church, the Lord intended to carry on his work, and to purify and sanctify a great multitude, even by means of these trials: and whilst the wicked would practise their wickedness without remorse, none of them would understand the meaning of these prophecies; they would gradually be unveiled to the wise and righteous, by the concurrent teaching of the Holy Spirit, and the accomplishment of them in Providence. (Larg. Ref.)

V. 11—13. The taking away of the daily sacrifice, and the abomination that maketh desolate, seem to be expressions applied to various different events of a similar nature. When Antichrist put a stop to the temple-worship, and set up his idols, they were in some sense accomplished; and also when the Romans destroyed the temple, and terminated its worship, and left the holy city to be inhabited by idolaters; but they are here evidently applied to the establishment of idolatry and persecution within the church, by the tyranny of Antichrist. These twelve hundred and ninety days must be calculated from the same time as the thirty years and a half before-mentioned; and the thirty years beyond them. The subversion of the kingdom of Antichrist, and the destruction of the seat of the beast, (Rev. xvii. xix.) will probably be at the end of the twelve hundred and sixty years; thirty years more may be taken up in wholly extirpating the Antichristian powers; and the last number of thirteen hundred and thirty years, which reaches forty-five years beyond that time, may predict the complete introduction of the millennium, when the earth shall be filled with the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea: and happy will they be, who wait and live to see that time. Without doubt this period is approaching, and not very distant: though I dare not hazard an opinion about the exact time whence these years are to be dated. Daniel having received thus much information, was to prepare for death and rest in heaven, for he would stand in his lot, as a glorified saint, to witness the accomplishment of these predictions. Let any one carefully compare the terms and dates in these two concluding chapters of Daniel, with the scriptures referred to in the margin, and it is probable, that he will no longer doubt, but the prophet Daniel, and the apostle John in Revelation, speak of the same transactions. What an amazing prophecy is this, comprehending so many various events, and extending through so many successive ages, from the first establishment of the Persian empire, about five hundred and thirty years before Christ, to the general resurrection! How much nobler and more exalted the sense, more important and more worthy to be known by men, and to be revealed by God, when taken in this extended view, and applied to this long and yet regular series of affairs, by the most easy and natural construction than when confined and limited to the times and
CHAPTER XII.

"Actions of Antiochus, to whom yet it cannot be reconciled by the most strangled and unnatural interpretation?" (Bp. Newton.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—4.

Our glorious Prince and Saviour, who once appeared on earth to make atonement for our sins, and who now is at the right hand of the Father, as our Advocate to plead our cause; will be sure to stand up in behalf of his people in the extremity of their trials and temptations, and to make them triumphant over all their enemies: nor can any troubles prevent the everlasting felicity of a single person, whose name is written in the book of life. But none of our deliverances will be complete till that hour cometh, when, "all that are in the graves, shall hear the voice of the Son of God, and shall come forth, they that have done good, to the resurrection of life, and they that have done evil to the resurrection of damnation." At that decisive season, when the multitude of the wicked shall not only be the objects of disdain and abhorrence to the righteous Judge of all and his saints and angels, without any mixture of compassion or mercy, but shall even loathe and despise each other; the righteous shall obtain glory, honour, immortality, and eternal life. Let us then seek wisdom and righteousness, resist temptation manfully, bear up under troubles cheerfully, and wait for a happy issue of all our conflicts and sorrows. But what special encouragement may the faithful preachers of the Gospel derive from this subject, amidst all their fatigue and difficulties, and the contempt and persecution which they encounter in this evil world! For they are truly wise, and shall shine in glory as the brightness of the firmament; and every one, whom they are the instruments of turning unto righteousness, will be an addition to their crown of glory and rejoicing in the day of Christ. Let us "not then be weary of well doing, for in due season we shall reap, if we faint not."

V. 4—13.

If we be enabled to obtain a well grounded assurance of eternal happiness, and be diligently employed in our proper work; we may be satisfied, though a part of the sacred Scriptures should be sealed up from us: for God hath so ordered it, that some things are to be closed from our view, and reserved for the use of future generations. However, we should not be willingly ignorant of any part of revelation, but should with modesty and humility, bestow much pains to understand and explain the sacred oracles, that knowledge may be increased: and when many are thus employed, some will discover one thing, and some another, and the whole will become better understood. And may the Lord send forth many preachers, "who may run to and fro all over the earth," to guide those who sit in darkness, into the ways of truth and righteousness!—Our Lord and Saviour, who ruleth over the raging of the waters and the madness of the people, is the sole Proprietor of this knowledge: even angels, when they desire to look down and inquire into the affairs of his Church, seek all their information from him; and he gives his servants on earth wisdom and knowledge, answerable to their occasions. We should then apply to him continually for instruction; what he communicates we should thankfully receive; but we should inquire no further into those things which he conceals. We know in general that the prevalence of his enemies, to scatter the power of his saints, hath an appointed period: and that he is continually "purifying to himself a peculiar people "zealous of good works," even when wickedness most abounds and prospers: that all the trials of believers, yea, and all their temptations too, (though they often for the moment blacken and defile them,) shall eventually combine to purify and make them white: and that when persecution stops the public administration of divine ordinances, and idolatry renders the visible Church an abomination and a desolation; yet still there is a scattered, or hidden remnant, who are wise to understand the ways of God, which none of the wicked can understand.—But glorious times approach. Happy will they be, who live to see them! yea, happy are believers at all times! they rest in God by faith now, and a rest is reserved for them in heaven at last. They may then cheerfully look forward to a dying hour; when the Lord will bid them depart in peace, for their eyes have seen, and their hearts have experienced his salvation; they may expect to rest in their happy lot in the end of their days; and in heaven to share the triumphs of the Church on earth, which they here re- saw, longed, and prayed for, but did not live to witness.
THE BOOK OF HOSEA.

The twelve remaining prophecies have long been considered as one book. It is thought, that St. Stephen referred to this arrangement, when, quoting a passage from Amos, he says, "As it is written in the book of the prophets." (Acts vii. 42.) And it is certain, that in the first ages of Christianity, both Jews and Christians numbered up the books of the Old Testament, according to it. This may help to show what those books were, to which Christ and his apostles referred, as The Scriptures, and The oracles of God. The writers of this part of Scripture are generally called The Minor Prophets; not that their writings were inferior in excellency or authority to the larger works of the other prophets: but merely on account of their brevity. They do not seem to be placed exactly after the order in which the prophets delivered them. Nine of them prophesied before the captivity, three prophesied after the Jews were returned from Babylon; and some of the former were as early, or more so, than the prophet Isaiah; especially Jonah, who evidently preceded all the others. As to the rest, the various schemes formed, and the different opinions held, by very learned men, and the slender grounds on which in some cases they rest their opinions, show that it is a subject of more difficulty than ease. The dates affixed to each prophecy and its several parts must suffice here.

It may be supposed that these prophets, and many who wrote nothing, were eminent and useful preachers of righteousness to their own generations; and perhaps some of them did more service in their own time, than those who have left more behind them for the benefit of posterity: at least the Lord generally dispenses his gifts and services in this manner.

Hosea, whose prophecy we now enter upon, exercised his sacred office for a great many years: he predicted the captivity of the ten tribes long before it arrived, yet he probably lived to witness its near approach. He is supposed to have been of the kingdom of Israel, though his prophecies frequently relate to Judah also. His style is remarkably concise, sententious, and unconnected, though some parts are peculiarly pathetic, animated, and sublime. His general scope was to convince his people of their exceeding sinfulness, and to warn them of the terror, and lead them by the goodness, of God to repentance. His prediction of events which soon took place, are numerous: but those relating to the state of Israel and Judah, for many ages; the conversion of the Gentiles; and the future restoration of the Jews, are peculiarly distinct and striking; they coincide with those of the other prophets; and the extraordinary fulfilment of several, both proves the divine inspiration of the writer, and gives assurance that the rest will in due time be accomplished. Considering the brevity of this prophecy, few parts of the Old Testament are more fully attested, by quotations, or clear references, than in the New. (Comp. i. 10, 11. ii. 23. Rom. ix. 25, 26. 1 Pet. ii. 10.—vi. 6. Matt. ix. 13.—x. 8. Luke xviii. 30. Rev. vi. 16.—xi. 1. Matt. ii. 14.—xiii. 14. 1 Cor. xv. 14, 54.) Very strong language has been used, by some learned men, on the corrupt state in which the original text of the minor prophets in general, and of Hosea in particular, has been sent down to us; and abundant corrections, some on but slender authority, others purely conjectural; some where they might seem to render the sense more clear, others where, to me at least, they appear to render it more obscure, have been proposed. But this method, if freely encouraged, is a desperate remedy: it tends to add to, and take from, the word of God, and to substitute the conjectures of men, in the place of his infallible oracles. In a few instances, with great caution and sobriety, on the united authority of manuscripts and versions, a slight alteration may be admissible: but in general, it is probable, that the humble, diligent, and pious student of Scripture will find, that the text as it now stands, contains in every part an important and instructive meaning. Industry, (with earnest prayer,) in endeavouring to understand the sacred oracles, in their present state, would perhaps do more to render the meaning of them intelligible, explicit, and impressive, than all the labour which is taken to correct and improve the text: and if at last, a few passages remained obscure, or ambiguous, this would by no means be of such bad consequence, as conjectural alterations, or alterations on dubious authority.

The translation of this prophecy, likewise, has been much complained of: and perhaps some passages are less exactly and clearly rendered, than usual. But it is no easy matter to give an unexceptionable version to so concise an ancient book, which is on many accounts peculiarly difficult: and it is very doubtful, whether, all things considered, a better translation could at present be made, than that which we already possess; at least such attempts, in this and other instances, do not appear to have been very successful.

CHAPTER I.

An account of the prophet, and of the times when he lived. 1. At God’s command and to expose the idolatry of Israel, he takes a wife of whoredoms; and calls his children, by names expressive of the judgments that were coming on his people, 2—9. The increase and restoration of Judah and Israel, under one head, 10, 11.

THE word of the Lorn that came unto Hosea the son of Beeri, in the days of Uzziah, Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, kings of Judah, and in the days of Jeroboam the son of Joash, king of Israel.

2 The beginning of the word of the Lorn by Hosea. And the Lorn said to Hosea, 2 Go, take unto thee a wife of whoredoms and children of whoredoms; for the land hath committed great whoredom, departing from the Lorn.

3 So he went and took Gomer the daughter of Diblaim; which conceived, and bare him a son.

NOTES.

CHAP. I. V. 1. This is the general title of the book: Hosea wrote The word that came to him from the Lorn. His name is the same as Joshua, or Jesus, except as these are compounded with the first syllable of the word Jehovah. It signifies salvation. All the kings of Judah, that succeeded each other during Hosea’s ministry, are mentioned: but Jeroboam of Israel alone, under whose reign he began to prophecy; for after Jeroboam’s death the affairs of Israel fell into the utmost confusion. (Notes, 2 Kings xiv. 21. xv. 8.) If we suppose, that the prophet exercised his ministry for a few of the last years of Jeroboam, and of the first of Hezekiah, we shall find that he laboured in the work nearly 70 years, and must have lived to a very great age. No information is given of the time in which he delivered any one of his predictions.

V. 2, 3. The prophet was called to enter on his prophetic office in a very remarkable manner. When he was, as it seems, a very young man, he was commanded by the Lorn, to marry a wife of whoredoms, one notorious for that vice, and whose children would be considered as children of whoredoms. This was intended to be an emblem of the Lord’s dealings with the idolatrous Israelites, whom he had espoused to himself. And accordingly Hosea married Gomer the daughter of Diblaim. It hath been much disputed, whether this was done in reality or in vision; or whether it were anything more than a parable that he spake to the people. But it seems to be taking an unauthorized liberty with Scripture, to explain narrative into vision, or parable, without absolute necessity, or any intimation of it in the text. If we consider it as a reality, many difficulties remain to be obviated. It is argued that it would have been inconsistent with the prophet’s character, to marry a notoriously bad woman: and therefore some have conjectured, that she was previously reformed, (as Rahab the harlot had been, before she was married to Salmon;) others imagine, that she had a good character when the prophet married her, but afterwards became a wife of whoredoms; and her children were brought under the suspicion of being children of whoredoms: and this is more plausible than the former, which by no means accords to the thing signified. But perhaps it may be shown, that it was not unlawful or immoral for the prophet to marry a licentious woman, on such an occasion. Some restrictions were laid upon the priests in these respects, but he was not concerned in them; Gomer was an Israelite, and not included in the prohibitions of intermarrying with Gentiles. The rule in the New Testament, of believers marrying only in the Lord, was doubtless always obligatory, as to the spirit of it, in ordinary cases; because most important consequences depend on it: but, (like the laws against the marriages of near relations,) though generally and highly expedient, it cannot be deemed of immutable and indispensable obligation; for cases may be imagined, in which it must be violated, or other moral laws of God be broken. The express command of God would suffice to authorize any deviations from ordinary rules, which were not of immutable and moral obligation; and it is impossible, that he...
4 And the LORD said unto him, Call his name Jezebel; for yet a little while, and I will cause his house to be as我喜欢
And I will cause the blood of Jezreel to cease the kingdom of the house of Israel.

5 And it shall come to pass at that day, that *I will break the bow of Israel in the valley of Jezreel.

6 And she conceived again, and bare a daughter. And God said unto him, Call her name Jael; for I will give thee a spouse of the city of blood.

7 But *I will cause the children of whoredoms, and children of whoredoms, to be a reproach, and a scandal, to Israel, in the sight of all the people, that they may know that they are Israelite.

8 And the daughter of Jezreel came up to facebook.com, and stoned Jezebel to death, and they buried her under a fig tree, according to the word of the LORD.

9 Then said God, My servant, the prophet, is in the house of Zadok the priests, which are of the children of Abiathar, and his son Shallum is with him, and his sons.

10 Yet the number of the children of Israel shall be as the sand of the sea, which cannot be measured numbered; and it shall come to pass, that *in the place where it was said unto them, Ye are not my people, there it shall be said unto them, Ye are the sons of the living God.
11 Then shall the children of Judah and the children of Israel be gathered together, and appoint themselves one head, and they shall come up out of the land: for great shall be the day of Jezreel.

CHAP. II.

Israel is convicted of aggravated idolatry and base ingratitude, and threatened with heavy judgments, 1—-13. God allureth them with promises of reconciliation, and of many blessings to them, and to others by their means, 14—23.

SAY ye unto your brethren, Ammi; and to your sisters, Ruhamah.

NOTES.

CHAP. II. V. 1. God had promised that "where it had been said to them, Ye are not my people, there
2. Plead with your mother, plead: for she is not my wife, neither am I her husband: let her therefore put away her whoredoms out of her sight, and her adulteries from between her breasts.

3. Lest I strip her naked, and set her as in the day that she was born, and make her as a wilderness, and set her as a dry land, and slay her with thirst.

4. And I will not have mercy upon her children; for they be the children of whoredoms.

5. For their mother hath played the whore; the eldest daughter is of Israel; she is moved from her husband."
8 For she did not know that I gave her corn, and wine, and oil, and multiplied her silver and gold, which they prepared for Baal.

9 Therefore will I return, and take away my corn in the time thereof, and my wine in the season thereof, and will recover my wool and my flax given to cover her nakedness.

10 And now will I discover her lewdness in the sight of her lovers, and none shall deliver her out of mine hand.

11 I will also cause all her mirth to cease, her feast-days, her new moons, and her sabbaths, and all her solemn feasts.

12 And I will destroy her vines and her fig-trees, whereof she hath said, These are my rewards that my lovers have given me: and I will make them a forest, and the beasts of the field shall eat them.

to preserve them from total idolatry; so that whilst numbers would perish, a remnant would be cured of that sin. When the ten tribes were carried into Assyria and the Jews to Babylon, neither their idols nor their idolatrous altars did them any good; and not being able to overtake them, or to find protection and deliverance from them; they would be convinced of their folly, in forsaking the living God for dead idols, their first Husband, for these worthless lovers; and so coming to themselves, they would be led to return home, to repent, to seek reconciliation, and re-admission to their former privileges. This seems immediately to predict the restoration of the Jews and many Israelites with them, from the Babylonian captivity, when they were effectually cured of gross idolatry: but the future conversion of the nation may also be intended.

V. 8, 9. The people did not understand, consider, or acknowledge, that the Lord gave them all their temporal mercies; and this foolishness exposed them to be tempted to abuse them in sacrifices, oblations, or vestments, prepared for Baal, and other idols. To convince them of this, the Lord intended to resume his grant; it had been but a loan to them, which he would recover by distraining upon them for it, seeing they had thus most evidently forfeited it. 'At the same season when she expects to receive the fruits of the earth, her enemies shall invade her and destroy them.' (Lomth.)

V. 10-13. God himself determined to cause all the nations, whose idols Israel had worshipped, to witness their wickedness and shame; nor should any deliver them from deserved punishment. The Israelites observed festivals in honour of their idols; yet they seem to have paid regard to some of those appointed in the law, and to have made them seasons of carnal mirth and sensual indulgence; and the Jews came from the worship of idols, to celebrate them at the temple. (Jer. vii. 9, 10.) But the Lord would turn their mirth into mourning: when by his desolating judgments he destroyed all their vines and fig-trees, they which the nation the sin of all those days and years, during which they had worshipped Baalim, or idols; when they had resembled an adulteress, thatadopts herself with her most costly attire at the expense of her injured husband, that she may be the more agreeable to her vile paramours: for they were entirely forgetful of the authority of God and their obligations to him. Jehu had destroyed Baal out of Israel; but the people had substituted other idols in his place; and so had filled the measure of their fathers' crimes. It is probable, that the idolaters adorned themselves with great care, as well as wore peculiar garments, when worshipping their idols. (2 Kings xiii. 22.) By showing how harlots trim themselves to please others, he declareth that superstitious idolaters set a great part of their religion in decking themselves on their holy days.'
and I will betroth thee unto me for ever: yea, I will betroth thee unto me in righteousness, and in judgment, and in loving-kindness, and in mercies.

I will even betroth thee unto me in righteousness and in judgment, and in loving-kindness, and in mercies.

And I will also betroth thee unto me for ever; yea, I will betroth thee unto me in righteousness, and in judgment, and in loving-kindness, and in mercies.

And I will betroth thee unto me in righteousness and in judgment, and in loving-kindness, and in mercies. afterwards the rain of this nature, and defend it from invaders, and make it a quiet and secure habitation for them. Nay, he would betroth himself to them, as their Husband, their kind Friend, Protector, and Companion, in the most solemn and public manner; and he would engage them to a union of his righteousness, wisdom, lovingkindness, mercy, and truth, for their security; which he would employ these attributes for their good, and glorify himself in his dealings with them; and he would communicate to them wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption; and he would enrich, ennoble, adorn, and rejoice them, with all the comforts and blessings of the marriage-relationship; and perform all his precious promises to them; and thus he would cause them to know him as their Lord and God. This can only be understood, in its highest sense, of the conversion of the Jews to Christ; and of the inestimable blessings and privileges of the spiritual Israel, of all true believers, to which they are admitted by faith in Christ, and union with him; and a participation of his righteousness, unsearchable riches, and mediatorial blessings.

Know, &c.; Thou shalt find that I am, and will be, a gracious Lord unto thee. (By. Hll.)

V. 21-23. When this happy change should take place in Israel's condition, that had been before such desolate and perilous, all things in heaven and earth would contribute to their advantage. This is represented in very bold figurative language: the heavens are introduced as beholding the Lord to fill their clouds with water to the land, and he promises to hear them; the earth is represented as calling on the heavens to pour down rain, and they hear; the fruits of the ground call also on the earth to furnish them with supplies, and are heard; and these again regard the desires and wants of Jezebel, and what people, who had been the seed of God, yet by his scattered, but are now to be gathered to him. All nature seems here alive and active in helping the converted Jews; and the supply of their spiritual wants, in answer to the prayers of the people and ministers of Christ, and through the ordinances of his appointment, may also be thus typified. The dispersion of the Jews would at length prove like the scattering of seed upon the earth, in order to a large increase; for God would, through them, or by means of his believing people, who are dispersed as seed in the from finding any pleasure in their sins, or from committing them; but are the means at length of bringing them to themselves, to perceive and lament their folly in departing from God, and to return to him, humbly seeking forgiveness and salvation; the mercy is inestimably precious. When professors of the Gospel depart from the ways of God, and go on with such thorns-hedges and strong walls to improve their sinful course, and to bring them back ashamed, and humbled, and as if their case looks very dark; but if the elders are by such discourses led to say, 'I will go, and return to the Lord, that I may again have the comfort of communion with him,' and of my relation to him; for then it was far better with me than now? we should encourage and exhort them to decision in so doing. If men forget or consider not, that their comforts come from God, and so they use them in a sinful manner; he will often in mercy take them away, to bring the offenders to reflect on their folly and danger. When he turns unjust stewards out of their stewardship, and calls them to give an account of it, none of their friends or idols can deliver them out of his hand; and all shall see, and be constrained to confess, that they deserve their ignominy and misery. In this our land of affluence and abundance, what numbers prepare their corn, wine, oil, gold, and silver for Baal, by their excess, luxury, and ostentation! And often the behaviour of those that are employed in gathering in the precious fruits of the earth, seems to be an attempt to revive the bacchanalian riots of ancient idolaters. Men, who live in allowed sin, and pretend to rejoice in God's ordinances, or on religious festivals; (as many ungodly persons do in their carnal way of celebrating Christmas, &c.) are most awfully deceived; all such rejoicing is vain, and tends to weeping and gnashing of teeth.
The Lord's intended future kindness to Israel, notwithstanding their wickedness; illustrated by the emblem of Hosea's conduct towards his adulterous wife, 1—5.

When sinners seem ripe for vengeance, the Lord sometimes shows his sovereign grace, in having mercy on them. To bring them to repentance, he both drives them from their sins by his terrors and judgments, and allures them by discoveries of his love, and hopes of acceptance and happiness. He often deprives them of all hope and comfort in the world and from themselves; and when their humiliation, terrors, and sorrows tend to desperation, he speaks comfortably to their hearts. He brings them into a desolate wilderness, where no joy can be found, except from his mercy; and thence he gives them all the provisions of his grace, and the comforts and privileges of his salvation. He makes the valley of deep dejection and extreme trouble, to be a door of hope to them; and drives them to despair of earthly joy, and help from themselves; that being shut out from every other door, they may knock at mercy's gate until it be opened. Then their terrors and sorrows are terminated; he brings them out of the horrible pit, and puts a new song into their mouths, and they sing, 'O Lord, I will praise thee; though thou wast angry with me, yet thine anger is turned away, and thou..."
Then said the Lord unto me, Go yet, love a woman beloved of her friend, yet an adulteress; according to the love of the Lord toward the children of Israel, who look to other gods, and love flagons of wine.

2 So I bought her to me for fifteen pieces of silver, and for an homer of barley, and an half homer of barley:

3 And I said unto her, Thou shalt abide for me many days; thou shalt not play the harlot, and thou shalt not be for another man: so will I also be for thee. For the children of Israel shall abide many days without a king, and without “comfortest me: behold God is my Salvation, I will trust, and not be afraid.” Though the Lord loses none of his authority by his condescending love to us; yet his awful majesty thus becomes the object of our confidence and delight: and believers are enabled to expect all that tenderness and kindness from their holy God, which a beloved wife can expect from the most affectionate husband, yes, far more. But he saves them from their idolatry, and sets them against their sins, and disposeth them to walk before him in newness of life; as well as gives them the joy of his favour and salvation. If his new covenant be made with us, he will make all things to work together for our good, and every creature shall help us: for all things are ours, even death itself; and we may lie down with peace and security in his clay-cold bed, having committed our spirit into the Redeemer's hands. Happily then are they, who are thus betrothed to the Lord, in righteousness, judgment, loving-kindness, mercy, and faithfulness; though in themselves poor and polluted, weak and foolish, yet in him they have wisdom, strength, and righteousness, and they are enriched, ennobled, arrayed with garments of salvation, and made most blessed for evermore. Even the vilest of transgressors are now invited to seek, and encourage to hope for, union with the Lord of life and glory, in this honourable and endeared relation; nor can too much be expected from his grace, who shed his precious blood for rebels and enemies. Let us then seek an interest in these blessings, compared with which all others are worthless: let us remember, that we are sown in the earth as seed, that in several places we may conduce to the conversion of our fellow sinners: that they may seek and obtain mercy, who had not obtained mercy; and that they may say to the Lord, “Thou art my God,” who have been strangers and enemies. Let us keep this object in view in all our actions and our whole conversation; and let us continually pour out our supplications for ourselves and all around us, to God, who will “give grace and glory, and withhold no good thing from those that walk uprightly.”

Notes.

Chap. III. V. 1-3. Some interpret this, as a vision, or parable which the prophet spake to the people, but they who consider it as a fact, have some hesitation in deploring, whether it related to Hosea’s former wife, or to another woman on whom he was to fix his affections. It seems, however, most probable, that it is the continuation and conclusion of the prophet’s account of the transaction, with which his prophetic office began; and which was a picture of the Lord’s dealing with Israel. He had married a woman of bad character, and had treated her with affection and kindness; yet she afterwards became an adulteress and departed from him. She had been beloved of her friend and husband, but proved unfaithful: yet he continued to love her; and he was directed to go and show his love by his conduct towards her. Instead of a public prosecution or a private divorcée, he went with overtures of reconciliation, and only required that she would remain in a state of separation from him, for many days, a competent time to evince the sincerity of her repentance; and that she would no more renew her adulteries, but reserve herself for him: and then he promised to consider himself as her husband, and length to take her back to him. The money and the barley, with which he bought her to him, accorded to the customs of those times, when they often gave dowries for, instead of receiving them with, their wives. This implied, that the marriage had been virtually dissolved by her adulteries: and perhaps it served, or was intended, for her maintenance during the days of her seclusion, and to keep her from the temptation of becoming a harlot for subsistence. And the small sum of money, (about 11. 7s. 6d.; and the costliness of the provisions, being barley, not wheat, might denote the disgrace and abject condition, to which her sin had reduced her; and might intimate, that she ought to submit to present inconveniences, and wait patiently the time of being restored to favour. We may conclude from the things signified by this transaction, that she submitted to the terms, was received again by the prophet, and behaved better afterwards. For this was “according to the love of the Lord for the children of Israel.” Some interpret this almost wholly of the kingdom of Israel: but the prophecy seems to require us to understand it of the whole people descended from Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob. They had been espoused to the Lord in the wilderness, notwithstanding their idolatries in Egypt; and yet, after all the displays of his love to them through their successive generations, they were always prone to fix their eyes on base idols: this was adulterous a violation of their marriage-covenant. They “also loved flagons of wine,” they were attached to idol-worship, because in it they gave unbridled license to their sensual appetites. But the Lord still had love for the nation, and through he meant to deprive them of their privileges, exclude them from his Church for many days, and to debase and reduce them to great distress; yet they would still subsist as a distinct people, and at length he anew betrothed him, and remarried in his favour and the full enjoyment of their privileges. The words which our translation renders “flagons of wine,” may be translated “cakes made of grapes.” Such were the cakes, probably, which the Jews offered to the queen of heaven. (Jer. vii. 18. xlv. 19.) The expression signifies in general, those entertainments, which they were partakers of, in the idol-temples.” (Looms.)
V. 4, 5. The kingdom of Israel was soon after this entirely ruined, and the people were incorporated, either with the Jews, or the nations among whom they resided; and have had neither king, prince, priest, sacrifice, nor religious establishment, from that day to this. The Jews remained for several years without these advantages, during the Babylonish captivity; yet their civil and religious constitution was again restored. But since the rejection of that nation at the introduction of Christianity, and the destruction of their city and temple by the Romans; they have continued to this time, for much above seventeen hundred years, without king or prince of their own nation; and without priest and sacrifice, or any thing substituted in the place of the temple-worship: and, (what is still more remarkable,) they have also remained without an high-priest, ephod, or teraphim, without any of those idolatrous observances and apparatus, to which they were so generally attached when this prophecy was uttered. — From the time of the destruction of Jerusalem by Vespasian to this day; they have had no civil government of their own; but live every where as so many exiles; only upon sufferance; they have had neither priests nor sacrifice, their temple being destroyed, where only they were to offer sacrifice. And yet the want of a place, where to perform the most solemn part of their public worship, does not tempt them to idolatry, — which was the epidemic sin of their forefathers. (Louth.) — This is surely a most astonishing prophecy, of events directly contrary to all human probability; yet undoubtedly taking place, not on a particular occasion, or for a short time, but through very many revolving centuries! How could Hosea have foreseen this, had not God inspired him? And does not this demonstrate, (in the only way by which such things can be demonstrated,) the divine inspiration of this prophecy, and of those by whom it is quoted? (Marg. Ref.)

It was also predicted, that afterwards they should return, (from their state of rejection and unbelief,) and seek the Lord their God and David their king. This even their own writers explain of the promised Messiah, and doubtless it foreshadowed their future conversion to Christ; for which they are evidently preserved a separate people, neither a part of the true Church, nor yet given up to spiritual adultery; but put aside on a separate sanctuary, or as it were, a state of degeneracy, for a long time, (like Hosea's wife,) to be at length received to favour again. It is added, "they shall fear the Lord and his goodness," the discovery which these events shall make of the Lord's goodness, and of his unmerited kindness and mercy to them in Christ Jesus, will fill them with reverential awe of him and a fear of offending so kind a Friend, and will fix their hearts in the spiritual worship of him and conscientious obedience to his commandments. This would be in the latter days under the Gospel-dispensation, at that approaching period, when they shall be converted to Christ, and gathered from their present dispersedness. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

When we consider the ingratitude and folly even of believers, their frequent backslidings after, and idolatrous attachment to, worldly objects and sensual gratifications; which is proportionably an unfaithfulness to God and a departure from him: we shall admire his persevering love to them, almost as much as his condescension and compassion to sinners, in the glorious salvation provided for them, and the price with which it was purchased. And as far as consists with other duties, we should consider his example in our readiness to forgive, and be reconciled to those who have most ungratefully and grossly injured us. — The dislike of men to true religion arises from their preference of sensual to spiritual pleasures: they therefore love an object and a form of worship, which allow them to indulge, instead of requiring them to mortify their lusts. But he will cure the objects of his special love of these base propensities; he will rebuke, disgrace, and addict them for their sins; he will unite his overtures of reconciliation and tokens of love with various humiliating dispensations; he will bring them to repentance, to submit to correction, to separate from sin and worldly idols, and patiently to wait for him; and when they are thus willing to reserve themselves for him alone, he will give himself to them as their God and Portion. The objects of his special love are often left, for a time, in a state of humiliating desertion, without any comfortable communication with him, in order to prove their faith and patience, many of them live a great while in an unconverted state; yet are they restrained from such crimes as would utterly ruin them, or prevent them from filling up their appointed stations in the Church. In due season they are brought to seek the Lord, to trust in the divine Saviour, and to rejoice in his holy comfort. And though their first fear of God arise from a view of his terrible holy majesty, and his righteous and powerful vengeance: yet the discovery of his goodness and his love to sinners through Jesus Christ, and the experience of his mercy and grace, sweetly lead their hearts to a filial reverence of so kind and glorious a friend and Father; to an habitual fear of offending and dishonouring him; to a dread of his frown and correcting rod, and an admiring awe of him, when they present their worship and services before him. May we, who live in these latter days, thus fear the Lord and his goodness; and may both Jews and Gentiles thus seek and worship the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ.
CHAP. IV.

God denounced judgments on Israel, for their impieties and iniquities, 1-11. He exposes the ignorance and wickedness of the priests, and determines to reject them, 6-11. To punish the idolatry and profaneness of the people, he will leave their wives and daughters to commit lewdness, without present punishment, 12-14. He warns Judah not to imitate Israel's crimes, which are further pronounced, 15-19.

HEAR the word of the Lord, ye children of Israel: for the Lord hath a controversy with the inhabitants of the land, because there is no truth, nor mercy, nor knowledge of God in the land.

NOTES.

CHAP. IV. V. 1-3. Hosea is here supposed by expositors in general, to address the kingdom of Israel exclusively. And perhaps he spake immediately to those of the ten tribes, as living among them; yet his reproves and exhortations were so framed, as to suit the case of the Jews also when they came into their hands. The former chapters seem to have formed one general subject, consisting of several messages delivered to the people, when at God's command he married Gomer; when her children were born and named; when she departed from him; and when he proposed to her terms of reconciliation. But he here began to speak to them in direct language, concerning their immoralities and idolatries. The children of Israel, or the whole family of Jacob, are called upon to hear the word of God, who had a controversy with all the inhabitants of the promised land; for though he meant first to proceed against Israel, Judah would not escape, without repentance and entire reformation. The ground of this controversy was, 'because there was no truth, nor knowledge of God in the land'; there was hardly any sincerity, veracity, or fidelity to be found amongst them; they were dissemblers in religion, and they were deceivers and impostors in their commerce with each other. As there was no honesty among them, it could scarcely be expected there should be any mercy, or compassion and kindness to the poor and afflicted; and in fact they were cruel and selfish extortioners and oppressors of the poor; and they neither knew the character of God, nor his truth or will, so as to be influenced by it, to piety, justice, or charity. But their desperate inward wickedness broke out into multiplied and aggravated perjuries, blasphemies, lies, murders, thefts, and adulteries; the whole body politic was become like one putrid ulcer, or bleeding cancer, or many all running into one. Especially the whole land was full of murders, which were committed in the conspiracies of one usurper against another, in which the adherents of each slaughtered ruler were cut off by the victorious party in great numbers, one company after another. Therefore the most distressing calamities were coming on the land, which would reduce all the inhabitants to the extremest misery, and end in its total desolation, till neither beasts, fowls, nor fishes were left. These are figurative expressions denoting the entire destruction or dispersion of all the people.

V. 4-5. 'Yet no man contendeth; and no man reproveth.' This is a natural rendering, and gives a very usual sense to the Hebrew future. (Bp. Newcome.) While wickedness of all kinds was openly committed; there was no one either magistrate, or priest, or prophet, who protested at this, or steadily opposed it. According to our version the words imply, that the case was desperate; all were too wicked to be employed as reprovers, or too proud and obstinate to endure reproof. Nay, they were ready to turn against and rend their reprovers, even when authorized by God himself; being of the spirit of Korah and his company. When they strove against Aaron the priest of the Lord; or like Joash king of Judah, who stoned Zechariah the priest, the son of his benefactor Jehoiada, when he reproved him for his sins. (2 Chr. xxiv.) Some object to this interpretation, because it could not be a crime to contend with idolatrous priests; but the conduct of Israel towards the prophets of God, and others who reproved them, might resemble that of such as contended with his priests. They 'would therefore fall in the approaching day of vengeance, or when they thought themselves most secure; and the ruin of their false prophets would be like that of those who are surprised with calamity in the night; when the terror and distress are more affecting than in the day-time; yea, the Lord would slay 'the mother as well as the children; the whole constitution of the Church and nation, as well as individual Israelites, or Samaria the capital of Israel. It was a capital offence or Somaria the capital of Israel. It was a capital offence for any to behave in a presump- tuous manner against the injunctions of the priests.'— (Deut. xvii. 12.) (Lambeth.) If thou fallst in the day, 'the prophets shall not propound thee; they shall fall in the night; and I will destroy the very Church and kingdom, whereto thou art appointed.' (Bp. Hall.)
6. My people are destroyed by lack of knowledge; because thou hast rejected knowledge, I will also reject thee, that thou shalt be no priest to me: seeing thou hast forgotten the law of thy God, I will also forget thy children.

7. As they were increased, so they were sinned against me: therefore will I change their glory into shame.

8. They eat up the sin of my people, and they set their heart on their iniquity.

9. And there shall be, like people, like priest; and I will punish them for their ways, and reward them for their doings.

10. For they shall eat, and not have enough: they shall commit whoredom, and shall not increase, because they have forsaken the Lord.

V. 6. The professed worshippers of Jehovah were perishing in the most entire ignorance of true religion: this was in great measure the fault of the priests and teachers, who utterly neglected their duty, and indeed were incapable of performing it. The whole company of priests seem to be here addressed as one person: as he had despised and rejected knowledge, and willfully forgotten the word of God; therefore God would reject him and take no care of his posterity. We cannot suppose that this was exclusively addressed to the priests of the golden calves, and other perversity in Israel, whom God had never acknowledged: but it must be remembered of the family of Aaron, whom he had appointed to the priesthood, but would at length reject for their ignorance and wickedness. Some of these might reside in Israel, but most of them were in Judah, which must therefore be here included.

V. 7-11. In proportion as the priests increased in numbers and prosperity, they grew notorious for wickedness: the Lord would therefore render the honour, which had been conferred on them, an occasion of their deeper disgrace; by exposing their crimes and inflicting ignominious punishments upon them. They did not attempt to reform the people, but were well pleased to have the sins of the priests multiplied: they used the flesh, and had many perquisites from them; and they therefore delighted in the misfortune of the people as increasing their incomes. Thus absolutions, indulgences, and dispensations have long enriched the Romish clergy; and spiritual courts have prosecuted such offenders, as could afford to pay fines and fees, apparently for no other reason; and many such things have been, and are, perpetrated by the professed ministers of religion! As these priests were the patterns of the people in their crimes, they would be involved with them in punishment, without distinction. At length they would be reduced to punishable famine and unsatisfied hunger; their multiplying of wives and concubines, contrary to the original law of marriage, and their other scandalous lewdness, would prevent the increase of their families: and seeing they had left off to take heed to the Lord, manifold evils would come upon them. This shows, that the priests of Aaron's family were chiefly intended: for the priests of the calves, and those of Baal, had not, at any time, taken heed to the Lord. Indeed the whoredom and intemperance both of priests and people deprived them of understanding and judgment, and rendered their hearts and consciences unfeeling, and utterly unfit for any thing good. The people's sins deserved to be punished with such priests; and such priests had helped to make the people thus wicked. (Bp. Hall.)

V. 12-14. The professed worshippers of Jehovah were so infatuated by their indulgences and idolatrous practices, that they preferred consulting their wooden images, to inquiring of God by his word, his prophets, or the high priest; and they even divided by means of their animals in some superstitious manner: being utterly given up to idols, and alienated from God. Because they take away God's honour, and give it to idols: therefore he will give them up to their lusts to dishonour their own bodies. (Rom. i. 28.) They therefore preferred the mountains and groves, where the idols were worshipped, to his temple; because they afforded an agreeable shade and secret recesses, for their abominable impurities. To punish these enormities the Lord determined to lead his daughters and wives to disgrace and distress them, by committing whoredom and adultery: nor would he inflict on them any immediate judgment for these crimes; which would eventually embolden them to proceed, and others to imitate them, and so to become the scourgings of their idolatrous fathers and husbands. And indeed this would be the natural consequence of their crimes: for themselves, (the original}
15 ¶ Though thou, Israel, play the harlot, y [et let not Judah offend; and her father shall not be ashamed, neither let her be cast up to Beth-aven, nor swear, The Lord liveth.

16 For Israel slideth back as a backsliding heifer: now the Lord will feed them as a lamb in a large place.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—11.

The Lord has a controversy with us on account of our sins; and if he contend, either in judgment or in battle, he will overcome. It is therefore our interest as well as duty, to submit and humble ourselves before him. Dreadful is the case of that land, which being favoured with the graces of God, yet remains devoid of truth, mercy, and piety, and abounds in gross immoralities. We hope this is not absolutely the case with our country: yet we cannot but perceive, that many of these reproofs are too applicable to our national character: our distempered consti-

The word "conscience," (as to religion and morality,) breaks out most grievously, by perjuries, profaneness, falsehood, murders, thefts, and shameful adulteries and lewdness; and the additional prevalence of avowed infidelity and irreligion, renders the nation as one continued leprosy; except as the Lord hath yet reserved to himself a despised remnant of another character. He, however, hath doubtless a controversy with the inhabitants of this favoured land; and what mourning and desolating judgments he may see good to bring upon us, we cannot tell. Yet there is encouragement for us to protest and strive against sin, and to repose transgressors: and though many prove refractory and incorrigible, and revile those that speak to them by the authority of God; thus exposing themselves to swift and sudden destruction, with their flattering teachers and the societies to which they belong: yet others are found more teachable. But before we venture to reproach others, it behoves us to inquire, whether the reproved persons may not retort on us "Physician heal thyself!" and surely a beam in our own eye will incapacitate us for taking a mote from our brother’s eye: we must not, however, be discouraged by lamented imperfections from so good a work, provided we be not conscious of any allowed wickedness. But, alas, what multitudes, even in this enlightened land, are perishing for lack of the knowledge of God, of his law, his Gospel, and of their own state, interest, and duty! —Ignorance only can be the parent of superstition or enthusiasm; without divine illumination the heart cannot be good, and the ministry of the word is the grand means of that illumination. When the professed teachers of Christianity therefore reject knowledge, and forget the word of God, to pursue other studies, pleasures, or interests, the Lord will reject them, and pour contempt on their families also. The wealth and temporal grandeur of the clergy hath commonly proved an inlet to their increasing iniquity; and their glory in this sense hath proved their shame. At all times this sacred function is a reproach to masculine;) though fathers and husbands, separated from their families, to associate with abandoned harlots, even with such as were initiat 0d, or convert e d, to be prisoners of their abominable lusts, and prostitutes to their worshippers. Thus they set their wives and daughters as an example of the vilest licentiousness, even in religion; and did what they could to corrupt their principles and morals. And a people, that had become thus besotted and infatuated, notwithstanding all their religious advantages, could not long escape destruction. The marginal references show, that many of the same charges were brought by the prophets against Judah, though Israel is here supposed to be principally intended.

V. 16—19. Here Israel and Judah are separately addressed. The former where wholly given up to idolatry and iniquity, but let not Judah thus offend; they yet have many advantages, and from them the Messiah was to arise. But if the Jews meant to avoid from the crimes and ruin of Israel, let them not come near the places where idolatry was practised; Gilgal had been in many instances peculiarly distinguished; but it was become notorious for idolatry. (Marg. Ref.) Beth-aven was the same as Bethel; it had been the house of God, but it was at that time the house of vanity, for so Beth-aven signifies. Neither let them dare to swear by the name of Jehovah whilst worshipping their idols, for he abhorreth such a coalition: or before the calves, as if they had represented him. God complaineth that Judah is infected, and willeth them—to return in time.

V. 16—19. Israel was become utterly intractable, and obstinate in rebellion; like a refractory heifer, that hangs back and will not draw in the yoke. The Lord therefore intended to disperse them throughout the Assyrian empire; where they would be as much exposed to injury and violence, as a single deserted lamb in a large wilderness to the wild beasts. Ephraim, or the kingdom of Israel, was incurably devoted to idols; and the people should no more be molested by the unwelcome warnings of prophets, or other means of reformation, but be left alone to ripen for destruction. "He, (Ephraim,) is gone after his wine." He is gone after the wine or banquet of idols, (Bp. Newcome.) Or, he is lost through drunkenness. The people were continually given up to whoredom, corporeal and spiritual: their rulers were shamefully corrupt, and showed evidently their love of bribes, even demanding them of the people, as the price of deciding in their favour; and therefore they were hurried into captivity, as by a furious irresistible tempest; and then they would be ashamed of depending on their idolatrous or hypocritical sacrifices.
CHAPTER V.

The judgments of God denounced against the priests, people, and princes, both of Israel and Judah, for their manifold sins, —14. An intimation of mercy on their repentance, 15.

Hear ye this, O priests; and hearken, ye house of Israel; and give ye ear, O house of the king; for judgment is toward you, because ye have been a snare on Mizpah, and a net spread upon Tabor.

2 And the revolters are profound him, who is a scandal to it; and his honourable office renders him doubly contemptible. Too many of the clergy regard nothing but the emoluments of their office; they are not grieved at the sins of their people, provided they regularly pay their dues; and the increase of their livings pleases them more than the spiritual good of their flocks. Thus they, as it were, feast on the sins of the people; and leave them unmolested in their evil courses, that they may have less trouble in collecting their dues. For priest and people, being both of the same nature, are liable to commit the same crimes, and incur the same condemnation; except as the same offences are more heinous, and will be more severely punished in the former than in the latter. Abused wealth tends to poverty, andavarice to disgrace and ruin; and when the clergy leave off to take heed to the Lord, no wonder they are left by him to disgrace themselves by the most scandalous excesses Sensual lusts, stupidly the understanding, harden the heart, and scar the conscience: how then can they who indulge in them, be fitted for the weighty and holy work of the ministry, or indeed for any thing important and useful?

V. 12—19.

They who "like not to retain God in their knowledge," are often given up to strong delusions, and left to lead others into the same judicial iniquity. Thus they train up their families, by example, influence, and sophistry, in error and impiety, which always tend to vice and immorality. But how can they who are unsuited to God, expect their wives and children to be faithful to him? Or how can they expect others to maintain their chastity, while notoriously guilty of lewdness in their own conduct? In this way men prepare scourgery for themselves, and vice and misery are diffused through whole cities and communities. Let us then watch against all approaches to those abuses, which have gradually led to greater impurity; and keep our religious worship wholly free from all mixture of superstition and sensual indulgence. Whilst sinners obstinately reject the easy yoke of Christ, they are bringing down the heavy load of his vengeance upon themselves; and when they have proceeded to a certain degree of hardness and determination in their crimes, the Lord says to make slaughter, though I have been a rebuker of them all.

3 I know Ephraim, and Israel is not hid from me: for now, O Ephraim, thou committest whoredom, and Israel is defiled.

4 They will not frame their doings to turn unto the Lord; for the spirit of whoredoms is in the midst of them, and they have not known the Lord.

5 And the pride of Israel doth testify to his face: therefore shall Israel and Ephraim fall in their iniquity; and Judah also shall fall with them.

6 Let them alone;" then they receive no more warnings, feel no more convictions; are visited with no more corrections, or are left to despise them; their conscience lies dormant, and the Spirit of God suffers no more with them. From the brink of this precipice may we be kept at the greatest distance! God will abhor the sacrifices and services of those who neglect honesty in their dealings, and when magistrates and rulers love to be bribed to pervert justice, it is not only most shameful and abominable, but it is a grievous symptom of approaching national judgments. And when the wrath of God, like an impetuous tempest shall hurry sinners into everlasting ruin; they will be as much ashamed of their pharisical or hypocritical services, as of their open impieties and iniquities.

NOTES.

CHAP. V. V. 1, 2. These idolatrous priests, and the courtiers and servants of the king of Israel, with himself at the head of them, were warned to expect the speedy approach of the judgment of God against them: because they had bestowed as much pains, and used as much art, to entangle the people in idolatry to their ruin, as the fowler employed in spreading snares and nets upon the mountains to take the birds. They doubtless used arguments, persuasions, flatteries, menaces, and persecutions, to induce them to conform to the established worship of the golden calves, or of Baal. Some think, that they also set spies to watch that none of the people went up to worship at Jerusalem, in order to ensnare and punish them. These apostates from God's worship were very deep, designing, and crafty, as well as cruel, in promoting the persecution and murder of those who adhered to God, or opposed them: though the Lord, by his prophets and in his providence, frequently and sharply rebuked and chastised them for their crimes.

V. 3, 4. Ephraim, the principal tribe in the kingdom of Israel, is frequently, by a figure of speech, said for the whole. The Lord knew, not only that the Israelites had revolted from him and polluted themselves with idols; but also, that they were so attached to these abominations, and so alienated from him, that they were not at all disposed to "repent and turn to him, and do works meet for repentance.'
HOSEA.

6 They shall go with their flocks and with their herds to seek the LORD; but they shall not find him; he hath withdrawn himself from them.

7 They have dealt treacherously against the LORD; for they have been forgotten strange children: now shall a month devour them with their portions.

8 Blow ye the cornet in Gibeah, and the trumpet in Ramah; cry aloud at Beth-aven; after thee, O Benjamin.

9 Ephraim shall be desolate in the day of rebuke: among the tribes of Israel I have made known that which shall surely be.

10 The princes of Judah were like them that remove the bound: therefore I will pour out my wrath upon them like water.

11 Ephraim is oppressed and broken; they are healed, and there is no mourner among them: they are made glorious, and sit in thrones.

V. 5. The idolatrous Israelites proudly refused to submit to God, to return to his worship, or to seek forgiveness: they insolently justified themselves, and as it were set him at defiance, by their impenitent rebellion and self-confidence; and this arrogance, which was visible even in their looks, would prove the immediate cause of their ruin: and as Judah also was treading in their steps they would at length fall with them, under the same condemnation. (Note. v. 15.)

V. 6. This verse is meant of Judah, though they did frequent the temple-worship: yet they came therewithout any true sense of religion. God is said to hide or withdraw himself when he will not answer men's prayers, nor afford them reasonable help in time of need. (Lowth.) (Marg. Ref.)

V. 7. The people married idolatrous, and brought up their children as heathens, estranged from God and his worship: this ripened them for destruction; so that a month, or a short and limited time, would destroy both them, and the idols which had chosen for their portion.

V. 8-10. The prophet called after the watchmen of Israel and Judah to blow the trumpet of alarm: for the enemy was just at hand: and when the Assyrians had desolated the cities of Israel, even to Bethaven, the principal seat of idolatry, they would fall upon Benjamin also, which belonged to the kingdom of Judah. Ephraim would be totally desolated by the enemy, in the approaching day of retribution: for the prophet had declared among the tribes of Israel, that only which would surely come to pass, the princes of Judah, by violating God's law, had broken down the fence of his protection; and made way for his wrath to be poured out upon them, as an inundation of waters. When Ahaz, king of Judah, with his princes, called on the kings of Assyria to help him against Syria and Israel, he removed the bound, and opened the way for that inundation, which desolated Israel, and reduced Judah to deep distress. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 11-12. The Israelites suffered exceedingly from the exactions and oppressions of their rulers, and of victorious invaders. This was permitted in order to punish them for their willful and persevering obedience to the laws of Jeroboam and his successors, which required them to worship the golden calves at Dan and Bethel, and to conform to such other established idolatries, in express contradiction to the law of God. He would therefore, insensibly, yet assuredly, waste their strength and prosperity, as a moth eats holes in the garment: and as Judah had proved equally submissive to the will of their idolatrous kings; he would consume them, as rottenness and worms do the wood.

V. 13-14. When Israel and Judah, at different times, found themselves pressed by enemies and dangers; instead of humbling themselves before God and seeking his help, they sought the protection of the Assyrians, and sent to king Jareb, (perhaps another name for Pul, or Tiglathpileser;) but instead of healing their wounds, or doing them any service, they helped to make them incurable. (Marg. Ref.) This obstinacy provoked the Lord to become their open enemy, and to destroy them, as a fierce young lion would tear and carry away the helpless calf, whilst none of their idols or allies could rescue them from his hands. Jareb signifies He shall plead. The king of Assyria perhaps undertook to be arbitrator between Judah and Israel, and to mediate a peace.

V. 15. The mercy-seat was properly the Lord's place among his people; which he left when he came forth to execute vengeance upon them; but having done this, he meant to return to his place, and there to wait and to leave them under their punishment, till they should repent, or plead guilty, and confess his sins, and seek his favour
CHAPTER VI.

Exhortations to repent and hope in God, 1-3. A lamentation over those who had sinned after conviction, 4. Reproofs of obstinate sinners, and threatenings against them, 5-11.

COME, and let us return unto the Lord; for he hath torn, and he will heal us; he hath smitten, and he will bind us up.

and protection. And he knew that, however they had despised him, in their affliction they would feel their need of him, and seek him without delay or remissness.—(Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

All ranks of men must stand before God in judgment; and all ought to yield an obedient ear to his word, and to the warnings of his ministers to "flee from the wrath to come"; for as all have sinned, all should repent, and humbly seek his pardoning mercy. None are exposed to severer punishment, than they who artfully entice men to sin and ensnare them in fatal errors; and kings and priests have often been peculiarly guilty of this great transgression. They who apostatise from God and his truth, commonly become the bitterest enemies to such as adhere to him: they have often employed most profound dissimulation and diabolical malice, to make slaughter of them, as enemies to the Church and state; and rebukes and corrections have seldom deterred them from persecuting projects. The Lord perfectly knows men, and none of their designs or motives are concealed from him; though they deeply disguise them from others, and even from themselves, and cover their grossest delusions with specious pretensions. Our doings must be carefully framed to return to the Lord, if we would be at peace with him: for he delighteth not in a vain profession, and empty forms or notions; but he requires that our repentance and faith be manifested in our whole temper and conduct. But they who know not the Lord, nor "the power of his anger," the value of his favour, and the efficacy of his converting grace; remain under the influence of that "spirit which worketh in the children of disobedience;" and will never frame their doings to return to God." Pride makes men obstinate in other sins, and rivets the chains which sensual or worldly lusts have forged: for "the wicked through the pride of their coun- tenance will not seek after God," or submit to him in sincere repentance; and therefore, having fallen into, they must perish in, iniquity. With such unhumbled, unbelieving, and rebellious hearts, men may go with their flocks and herds, and the most expensive and ostentatious services, to seek the Lord: but they will not find him; for he withdraws himself from proud Pharisaes and hypocrites to commune with broken-hearted publicans and sinners.—By dealing treacherously with the Lord men only deceive themselves. The educating of children, as strangers to God and his truth, exceedingly hastens the doom of guilty nations: when tokens of approaching ruin appear, ministers ought to give the alarm before evil overtake the criminals; and when some are cut off in the day of the Lord's rebuke, they must warn others to expect the same punishment unless they repent. Such things will be generally among the tribes of Israel; and the watchman must give warning, if he mean to deliver his own soul. When princes break down the fence of the divine law, by their own decisions, or examples, they open the flood-gates of God's wrath: and when subjects willingly obey ungodly and persecuting statutes, they may expect to be given up to grievous oppressions and executions; for God will disregard the interest, liberty, and security of those who disregard his honour and renounce his service. His more ordinary judgments insensibly waste men's prosperity and comfort; but when under rebukes they trust to an arm of flesh, and have recourse to sinful expedients, they will not only find that they cannot bring cure or deliverance, but that God will visit them with more terrible displays of his indignation. Yet he will return to his place, his mercy-seat, and wait there to be gracious to all who acknowledge their offences and seek his face. Many, indeed, who despise him in their prosperity, appear to seek him under their afflictions: but he knows how to distinguish the upright from the hypocrite; and they who are first led by severe tribulations to seek him earnestly, diligently, and sincerely, will find him a present Help and an effectual Refuge; as with him is mercy and plenteous redemption, for all those who call upon him in truth.

NOTES.

CHAP. VI. V. 1-3. The prophet took occasion from the intimation of mercy at the close of the former chapter, to exhort the people, without delay to come together, and with one accord to return to the worship of the Lord. As this referred to the events predicted in the former chapter; that is, to the desolations that were coming on the people, by the Assyrians and Chaldeans; the exhortation may be considered as the language of the petitioners to each other and to their neighbours, calling on them to unite in humiliation, repentance, and works meet for repentance. They considered their miseries as the effect of God's righteous indignation. He had torn and smitten them, and their enemies were his instruments; and from his mercy, truth, and power alone, they hoped for deliverance; he alone could, and they trusted he would, heal their distempers and bind up their wounds. Instead therefore of fleing from him as an enemy, they encouraged each other to apply to him as their Physician. For some time they would have to wait for his interposition; the nation of Israel was as it were dead, but after two days, that is, on the third day, the Lord would revive them, and they would live in his sight, as his people, upon their return from the Babylonish captivity, after the appointed time of its continuance. The language is generally supposed to be prophetic of the resurrection of Christ on the third day, with whom as her Saviour the whole Church virtually arose from the dead, to live unto God; with him the hopes of all believers revived; his power, as risen, quickens their souls when dead in sin; and his resurrection was the earnest of the resurrection of their bodies unto everlasting life. In the persevering exercise of faith, and by waiting on the Lord, in every means of becoming acquainted with him and his perfections, truth, and will, they would obtain an experimental knowledge of his mercy and faithfulness, and a comforting knowledge of their own pardon and acceptation. For "as going forth was prepared as the morning," the time that intervened between the promise of a Saviour to fallen man, unto his coming, and exalation at the right hand of the Father, resembled that which intervenes between the dawning of the day, and the meridian brightness of the sun; and he would come and effect the redemption of his Church, as sun-rising follows the dawn. His coming likewise to save and comfort every penitent, would be gradual and certain, from his first sense of his guilt to the completion of his salvation in heavenly felicity. (Note, Prov. iv. 18, 19.)

In neither sense, doth his going forth resemble a meteor of the evening sun; but the increasing brightness of the morning from the first dawn, which can scarcely be discerned, or distinguished from other appearances, to the noon-day brightness. The Lord would also descend upon the souls of those who waited on him, as the former and latter rain upon the earth; purifying, softening, comforting, and refreshing them, by the influences of his Holy Spirit.

V. 4. 5. Neither Ephraim nor Judah would thus wait for and on the Lord; and he spake as one that was at a loss what to do with them. He was not willing wholly to give them up; yet he did not deem it honourable to save them from ruins in their present state of mind, and all means used to reform them had proved ineffectual. While they were smiting under the rod or filled with terror, when their reforming kings were exerting their pious endeavours, or the prophets were labouring among them, they seemed favourably disposed to repent and return to the Lord; but this their goodness, (unlike the morning light, or the stated rain,) vanished like the empty morning-cloud and the early dew, and produced no abiding effect on their conduct: and when the traces of these transient impressions ceased, they relapsed into idolatry and iniquity, and were as vile as ever. In the night of adversity, they seemed religious; but the rising sun of returning prosperity dispelled all these promising appearances. Therefore it was, that the Lord sent them such awful messages by the prophets, as were suited either to have them into shape or to have them in pieces; nay, "he slew them by the words of his mouth," which were like pronouncing the sentence of death on a criminal, and giving orders for his execution; and the judgments, that were denounced against them were gradually and certainly approaching, as the sun glimmered and gradually ascended, instead of that favour from the dawning of the day, instead of that favour which was arising upon true penitents: nay, the justice of God would be as clear as the morning light.

V. 6. All the appointed sacrifices were typical of Christ's atonement, external signs of the offerer's faith and repentance, acts of worship towards God, and means of grace to believers. But the people deemed them the substantial part of religion; presented them in unbelief, pride, and impenitence; and thought to compensate by them for their entire neglect of justice, mercy, and piety, and for all their scandalous crimes: and when they omitted these institutions, they thought the Lord's controversy with them was chieflly on that account. He therefore informed them, that he "desired mercy and not sacrifice," or rather than sacrifice; and the knowledge of him, which produced holy fear, dependence, submission, obedience, and love, more than burnt-offerings; because they were of superior excellence and immutable obligation. He was displeased with them for their injustice, oppression of the poor, idolatry, and impiety: and no number of sacrifices could avail them, whilst they continued in sin. This no way interferes with the great doctrine, of the sacrifice of Christ being the sole meritorious cause of a sinner's pardon and acceptance with God; or with that of faith alone interesting us in his atonement, or with the necessity of our attendance on instituted ordinances. But it exposes the folly of such a trust in external observances of any kind, to compensate for their want of love to God and man; it shows, that nothing can profit which does not spring from repentance and faith, and is not attended with a sober, right-thinking, and godly life; and that externals may safely be omitted or postponed, when the exercise of mercy and kindness to our brethren requires it. (Marv. Ref.)

V. 7. (Marv.) They have transgressed the covenant, which I solemnly contracted with them; just as Adam did in Paradise. (Lowth.) The Israelites had also
CHAPTER VI.

10 I have seen an horrible thing in the house of Israel: there is the blood of Ephraim, Israel is defiled.

11 Also, O Judah, he hath set an harvest for thee; when I returned the captivity of my people.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

In all our troubles we should place our whole confidence in the Lord's mercy; and should take warning and encouragement to return to him, and exhort others to do the same. He afflicts us in providence, that we may look to him to restore our prosperity; he convinces and humbles our hearts by his Holy Spirit, and often fills the conscience with remorse and dismay, in order to prepare us for the sweet balm of salvation, and the consolations which he bestows on the contrite believer. No affliction or temptation therefore, no guilt or power of sin, no wounded spirit or terrified conscience, should induce us to despair of help and comfort from God. He may suffer us for a time to be seized on with "the sorrows of death or the pains of hell," and to be "like those that go down into the pit," but as he raised the Redeemer from the grave, so will he revive the hearts and hopes of all that trust in him, and cause them at length to walk before him, and to rejoice in his manifested presence and love. Let us then begin and "follow on to know the Lord," that we may experience the fearlessness and efficacy of his grace, the faithfulness of his promises, and the felicity of his people. The feeblest glimpse of hope in his word, which dwells upon the hallowed sin-distressed soul, is a sure earnest of increasing light and comfort, till "the Sun of righteousness shall arise upon him with healing in his wings;" and till he shall arrive in the presence above, and possess the fulness of knowledge, purity, love, and joy for evermore. Increasing light and hope shall be afforded to the waiting soul, with showers of purifying, fortifying, and comforting grace; and he, who sent the former, will send the latter also, and perfect the good work that he hath begun. But we have not the same reason to depend on our own resolutions, convictions, or hopeful beginnings, as we have to trust in the truth and mercy of our God: alas! these are as mutable, as the others are unchangeable. Under the rod of affliction, under terrors of conscience, or under the awakening word of some Bonnergies, many seem deeply impressed and well disposed to religion; but when the restraint, the scourge, the terror is removed, their transient goodness vanishes like an empty cloud, or is exhaled by temptation as the dew by the burning sun; and we mourn our disappointed expectations respecting them. What shall be done with such persons? For "if any man draw back, the Lord will have no pleasure in him." Or what shall he do to us, who are prone to a similar, if not an equal, inconsistency? May he put his fear into our hearts, and set up his kingdom within us, and never, never more, leave us to ourselves, or suffer us to be overcome by temptation! Obstinate transgressors must not expect soothing messages from a holy God: he will "hew them by the words of his prophets;" and if this do not prevail to bring down to the dust of self-abasement, he will slay them by the words of his "mouth;" and, by executing his threatened vengeance on them, convince them of the truth of his holy word. All oblations and external services are more pride and hypocrisy, whilst justice, mercy, truth, and piety are neglected: and that confidence even in the sacrifice of Christ is mere presumption, which encourages any one to continue in sin. If men had the true knowledge of God, they sone time they would have to wait for his interposition: the nation of Israel was as it were dead, but after two days; that is, on the third day, the Lord would revive them, and they would live in his sight, as his people, upon their return from the Babylonian captivity, after the appointed time of its continuance. The language is generally supposed to be proleptic of the resurrection of Christ on the third day, with whom as her Saviour the whole Church virtually arose from the dead, to live unto God; with him the hopes of all believers revived; his power, as risen, quickened their souls when dead in sin; and his resurrection was the earnest of the resurrection of their bodies unto everlasting life. In the persevering exercise of faith, and by waiting on the Lord, in every means of becoming acquainted with him and his perfections, truth, and will, they would obtain an experimental knowledge of his mercy and faithfulness, and a comforting knowledge of his own pardon and acceptance. For "as his going forth was prepared " as the morning: the time that intervened between the promise of a Saviour to fallen man, unto his coming, and exaltation at the right hand of the Father, resembled that which intervenes between the dawning of the day, and the meridian brightness of the sun; and he would as surely come and effect the redemption of his Church, as sun-rising follows the dawn. His coming likewise to save and comfort every penitent, would be gradual and certain, from his first sense of his guilt to the completion of his salvation in heavenly felicity. (Note, Prov. iv. 18, 19.)

In neither sense, doth his going forth resemble a meteor, or the evening sun; but the increasing brightness of the morning from the first dawn, which can scarcely be discerned, or distinguished from other appearances, to the noon-day brightness. The Lord would also descend upon the souls of those who waited on him, as the former and latter rain upon the earth; purifying, softening, fructifying, and refreshing them, by the influences of his Holy Spirit.

V. 4, 5. Neither Ephraim nor Judah would thus wait for and on the Lord; and he spake as one that was at a loss what to do with them. He was not willing wholly to give them up; yet he did not deem it honourable to save them from ruin in their present state of mind, and all means used to reform them had proved ineffectual. While they were mourning under the rod or filled with terror, or when their reformation kings were exerting their pious endeavours, or the prophets were labouring among them, they seemed favourably disposed to repent and return to the Lord: but this their goodness, (unlike the morning light, or the stated rain,) vanished like the empty morning cloud and the early dew, and produced no abiding effect on their conduct; and when the causes of these transient impressions ceased, they relapsed into idolatry and iniquity, and were as vile as ever. In the night of adversity, they seemed religious; but the rising sun of returning prosperity dispersed all these promising appearances. Therefore it was, that the Lord sent them such awful messages by the prophets, as were suited either to "him them into shape or to "them in pieces; nay, "he slew them by the words of his mouth," which were like pronouncing the sentence of death on a criminal, and giving orders for his execution; and the judgments, that were denounced against them were gradually and certainly approaching, as the light from the dawning of the day, instead of that favour which was arising upon true penitents: nay, the justice of God would be as clear as the morning light.

V. 6. All the appointed sacrifices were typical of Christ's atonement, external signs of the offerer's faith and repentance, acts of worship towards God, and means of grace to believers. But the people deemed them the substantial part of religion; presented them in unbelief, pride, and impudence; and thought to compensate by them for their entire neglect of justice, mercy, and piety, and for all their scandalous crimes: and when they omitted these institutions, they thought the Lord's controversy with them was chiefly on that account. He therefore informed them, that he "desired mercy and not sacrifice," or rather than sacrifice; and the knowledge of him, which produced holy fear, dependence, submission, obedience, and love, more than burnt-offerings; because they were of superior excellency and immutable obligation. He was displeased with them for their injustice, oppression of the poor, idolatry, and impiety: and no number of sacrifices could avail them, whilst they continued in sin. This no way interferes with the great doctrine of the sacrifice of Christ being the sole meritorious cause of a sinner's pardon and acceptance with God; or with that of faith alone interesting us in his atonement: or with the necessity of our attendance on instituted ordinances. But it exposes the folly of such as trust in external observances of any kind, to compensate for their want of love to God and man: it shows, that nothing can profit which does not spring from repentance and faith, and is not attended with a sober, righteous, and godly life; and that externals may safely be omitted or postponed, when the exercise of mercy and kindness to our brethren requires it. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 7. (Marg.) "They have transgressed the covenant, which I solemnly contracted with them; just as Adam did in Paradise." (Lomh.) The Israelites had also renounced Jeroboam for base idols, as a wife treacherously forsakes her husband for strangers.

V. 8. Ramoth-gilead, beyond Jordan, was one of the cities of refuge, and allotted to the priests; but it was totally given up to wickedness and polluted with murder.

(Marg. Ref.) The company of priests also, that dwelt there, was a mere banditti; consenting together in robbery, murder, and every enormity; standing by each other in doing, and vindicating their evil deeds. (Marg.) —

The Hebrew word
Aven, translated iniquity, frequently signifies idolatry; and the blood which Gilead is said to have been polluted with, may mean the blood of their children which they sacrificed to Moloch. Dr. Wells interprets it, of those Gileadites who assisted Pekah in the murder of Pekahiah, (2 Kings xv. 25.) The phrase translated here, “polluted with blood,” literally signifies with bloody footstep, being taken from such as are found with their shoes stained with the blood they have shed. (1 Kings ii. 5.) (Loovth.) The word rendered “by consent,” seems to mean towards Shechem. The priests bestow the road to Shechem, as robbers and murders.

V. 10. An horrible thing. Such an apostasy from God, as cannot be mentioned without horror. (Loovth.)
The idolatry began by Jeroboam, the tribe of Ephraim, had opened the way for all the subsequent abominations, by which the kingdom of Israel was polluted.

“He made Israel to sin.”

V. 11. The seeds of idolatry, from Israel, had been sown plentifully in Judah; and thus he, (that is, Ephraim,) had prepared a harvest for Judah also. The nation was become ripe for divine judgments, which would be inflicted by the Assyrians and Chaldeans; until the time when God would turn away the captivity of his people.

(Ps. xiv. 7. liii. 6. cxviii. 1.) “When I would have turned away the captivity of my people;” when I would, upon their repentance, have averted my judgments, which will end in their captivity. (Loovth.)

“A among those who lead away the captivity of my people.” (Bp. Neumebr.) This translation requires only a trivial change of the pointing.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

In all our troubles we should place our whole confidence in the Lord’s mercy; and should take warning and encourage ment to return to him, and exhort others to do the same.
He afflicts us in providence, that we may look to him to restore our prosperity: he convives and humbels our hearts by his Holy Spirit, and often fills the conscience with remorse and dismay, in order to prepare us for the healing balm of his salvation, and the consolations which he bestows on the contrite believer. No affliction or temption therefore, no guilt or power of sin, no wounded spirit or terrified conscience, should induce us to despair of help and comfort from God. He may suffer us for a time to be seized on with “the sorrows of death or the pains of hell,” and to be “like those that go down into the pit;” but as he raised the Redeemer from the grave; so will he revive the hearts and hopes of all that trust in him, and cause them at length to walk before him, and to rejoice in his manifested presence and love. Let us then begin and follow on to know the Lord, that we may experience the freeness and efficacy of his grace, the faithfulness of his promises, and the felicity of his people. The feebliest glimpse of hope in his word, which dawns upon the humbled sin-distressed soul, is a sure earnest of increasing light and comfort, till “the Sun of righteousness shall arise upon him with healing in his wings;” and till he shall arrive in the presence above, and possess the fulness of knowledge, purity, love, and joy for evermore. Increasing light and hope shall be afforded to the waiting soul, with showers of purifying, fertilizing, and comforting grace; and he, who sent the former, will send the latter also, and perfect the good work that he hath begun.
But we have not the same reason to depend on our own resolutions, convictions, or hopeful beginnings, as we have to trust in the truth and mercy of our God: alas! these are as mutable, as the others are unchangeable. Under the rod of affliction, under terrors of conscience, or under the awakening word of some Bonnergies, many seem deeply impressed and well disposed to religion: but when the restraint, the scourge, the terror is removed, their present goodness vanishes like an empty cloud, or is exhausted by temptation as the dew by the burning sun; and we mourn our disappointed expectations respecting them. What shall be done with such persons? For “if any man draw back, the Lord will have no pleasure in him.” Or what shall we do to us, who are prone to a similar, if not an equal, inconstancy? May he put his fear into our hearts, and set up his kingdom within us, and never, never more, leave us to ourselves, or suffer us to be overcome by temptation! Obstinate transgressors must not expect soothing messages from a holy God: he will “hew them by the words of his prophets;” and if this do not prevail to bring down to the dust of selfabasement, “he will slay them by the words of his mouth” and, by executing his threatened vengeance on them, convince them of the truth of his holy word. All oblations and external services are mere pride and hypo-critry, whilst justice, mercy, truth, and piety are neg-glected; and that confidence even in the sacrifice of Christ is mere presumption, which encourages any one to con-in sin. If men had the true knowledge of God, they CHAP. VII.

Heavy charges of atrocious crimes, against the kings, nobles, and people of Israel, 1-10; and awful denunciations of the wrath of God against them, 11-16.

WHEN I would have healed Israel, then the iniquity of Ephraim was discovered, and the wickedness of Samaria: for they commit falsehood; and the thief cometh in, and the troop of robbers spoileth without.

2 And I, they consider not in their hearts that I remember all their wickedness: now their own doings have beset them about; they are before my face.

3 They make the king glad with their wickedness; and the princes with their lies.

4 They are all adulterers, as an oven heated by the baker, who ceaseth from rising after he hath kneaded the dough, until it be leavened.

5 In the day of my king the princes have made him sick with bottles of wine; he stretched out his hand with scorners.

6 For they have made ready their heart like an oven, whilst they lie in wait.

7 They are all hot as an oven, and have devoured their judges; all their kings are fallen: there is none among them that calleth unto me.

8 Ephraim, he hath mixed himself among the people; Ephraim is a cake not turned.

9 Strangers have devoured his strength, and he knoweth it not: yea, and his judges are pure.

V. 4. The whole company were adulterers as well as idolaters, and were most eagerly bent upon the indulgence of their unlawful lusts. Their hearts were inflamed with sensual desires like a heated oven. Satan or his agents had kindled this fire; and they cherished and kept it burning; waiting for the opportunity of gratifying it without regard to duty or decency. The tempter had only to prepare the occasion of sin, as the baker prepares the dough for the heated oven; and they were ready to seize upon it. (Marg.) "He will cease from waking, after &c." (Marg.) The baker may take his rest, till the dough be ready. (6, 7.)

V. 5-7. On the king's birth-day, or coronation-day, or some other public occasion when he made a royal feast, his nobles tempted him to drink to the most shameful excess, "making him sick with bottles of wine," (the heat of wine;) and when he was thus intoxicated, "he stretched out his hand with scorners," treated every thing sacred with the most impious contempt, and perhaps employed his authority to persecute the worshippers of Jehovah. Some recent and notorious act of contempt to God, or to his prophets, or to public justice, is here alluded to. (Bp. Newcomb.) Thus they prepared themselves and each other for every daring wickedness; and perhaps as the king discovered that he had their hearts inflamed with ambition and revenge, and lay in wait for that opportunity to murder the drunken king and usurp his throne. Their furious passions rendered Satan's temptations unnecessary. Their baker might sleep all the night, and in the morning find his oven as hot as he could wish it. That is not against the role as ready for any wickedness he should be designed. For, being heated with wine and sinful passions, they murdered their magistrates and kings one after another; yet neither the people nor any one of their kings, amid these distractions and miseries, would seek help from God. (Notes, 2 Kings xv. 28.) gray hairs are here and there upon him, yet he knoweth not.

10 And the pride of Israel testifieth to his face: and they do not return to the Lord their God, nor seek him for all this.

11 ¶ Ephraim also is like a silly dove without heart: they call to Egypt, they go to Assyria.

12 When they shall go, 'I will spread my net upon them; and I will bring them down as the fowls of the heaven; and I will consume them, as their congregation hath heard.'

V. 8—10. Ephraim, (or the kingdom of the ten tribes,) had intimately connected himself with the surrounding nations, by alliances, intermarriages, and communion in idolatry: yet he still pretended to worship Jehovah. Thus he became a cake not turned, half burnt and half dough, and none of it fit for use; a mothily mixture of idolatry and the worship of God. But he was eager in iniquity, and lukewarm in the worship of God, and partial in every attempt to reform. The strange gods and heathen alliances weakened him continually; and the neighbouring nations by hostile invasions devoured his strength: yet he perceived no danger, and never suspected the cause of his decay, namely, that the hand of God was lifted up against him. (Marg. Ref.) In short, he had as evident tokens of approaching ruin, as gray hairs are of old age and of the decay of the constitution: and the prophets evidently saw these symptoms, and pointed them out to him, but he took no notice. This arose from his pride, which openly testified against him; seeing neither judgments, warnings, nor mercies could induce him to return and seek the Lord.

V. 11—12. In another view of the subject, the conduct of Ephraim might be likened to that of a dove; Ephraim was become like a silly dove; not in innocence and gentleness, but in folly and timorousness, having neither understanding, courage, nor resolution. He was frightened at every appearance of danger: but instead of fleeing to the Lord for refuge, as the doves fly to their windows; he was like the silly dove, that fliteth here and there for safety till she is taken in the fowler's net. Sometimes he applied to the Assyrians, and sometimes to the Egyptians, without prudence, or prospect of safety: and thus he would be entangled in the net which the Lord had spread for him; and be overtaken with inevitable ruin, as the doves are ensnared and destroyed by the fowler. For God would certainly punish them, as the congregation of Israel had repeatedly heard from the prophets; and specially, as had been foretold in the books of Moses. (Marg. Ref.) "When they hearken to their assembly."

because they have transgressed against me: though I have redeemed them, yet they have spoken lies against me.

14 And they have not cried unto me with their heart, when they howled upon their beds: they assembl themselves for corn and wine, and they rebel against me.

15 Though I have bound and strengthened their arms, yet do they imagine mischief against me.

16 They return, but not to the most High: they are like a deceitful bow, whose princes shall fall by the sword for the rage of their tongue: this shall be their desirion in the land of Egypt.
providential dispensations, only serve to detect and aggra-ivate their wickedness; except they be accompanied with his special blessing. The whole salvation of the righteous is therefore of the Lord: but the condemnation of the wicked is of themselves, and justly deserved. Men commit numerous and heinous crimes, without reflection, recollection, or remorse: because they consider not that the Lord remembers all their wickedness, and will produce the whole of it as evidence against them, and show all the world the justice of their punishment by discovering the disgrace of their crimes. Alas, how poor an object do men attain, who ingratiate themselves with ungodly kings and nobles, by wickedness and lies; and thus expose themselves to the condemnation of their wicked patrons! The depraved hearts of men and the temptations of Satan are so congealed as fire and fuel, and concur in preparing sinners for the practice of every crime: and want of opportunity, ability, or courage prevents more wickedness, than perhaps all other causes combined.
So that the open, and even the secret, enormities of men's lives, atrocious as they are, bear a very small proportion to the desperate wickedness of their hearts. But when lust is inwardly conceived and cherished, it will more or less break forth into outward sin: he, who first suggests the idea of forbidden indulgence, will assist in devising the means of gratification and then sinners will proceed without further temptation, "having made ready their hearts like an oven," whilst they lie in wait for the opportunity. Thus adulteries, murders, and all horrible crimes are perpetrated, without hesitation or remorse, when they can be done with present impunity. Days of public festivity are commonly attended with much wickedness, and followed with many fatal effects. Intoxication leads men to every kind of impiety and immorality: but what an infamy is it for a king to be made sick with bottles of wine, and to be a companion and an example to scorners and blasphemers?
They who tempt rulers to such a degrading vice, can never be their friends: and not unfrequently the event shows that they were plotting their ruin; and that they were lying in wait, with hearts full of malice or ambition, to murder both body and soul, by an exquisite refinement in cruelty. Whilst men thus execute the vengeance of God on each other, how seldom do those that witness such transactions, call upon God, who alone can preserve them from being involved in similar ruin! Thus nations reign for destruction: and such are called Christians, often differ in nothing from pagans, except in the worthless attempt to form a coalition between religion and the world; that is between God and the devil! But we are so blind to ourselves, that neither nations, churches, nor individuals can see, in their own case, those symptoms of decay and approaching ruin, which are visible to all around them.

The same pride, that emboldens men to break the law of God, leads them to self-flattery, and to continue impenitent amidst the rebukes of providence, and the warnings of his word. "They will not return to the Lord, nor seek him for all this."

V. 11-16.

When sinners are terrified, and driven from one scheme to another for safety; they are so devoid of understanding, that the mercy and grace of God are frequently the only refuge to which they never think of fleeing! But whatever other expedients they have recourse to, the Lord will take them in his net, and execute upon them those judgments, of which all his congregations have heard. Wo then be to those transgressors, who attempt to flee from God! for in this way destruction is inevitable. But to him, as the Redeemer of Israel, the chief of sinners may approach with acceptance; and they who perish in their sins, speak lies against him, if they charge his ruin either on his secret purposes, or his refusal to have mercy on them.
Yet numbers, when in deep distress they bow forth their errors in the form of prayers, do not cry to God with their hearts, for the blessings of his complete salvation.
Even their prayers for temporal mercies only require provision for their laments, and are united with rebellion.
Whether God afflict or weaken, or bind up and strengthen them, they continue to devise mischief against him. Their very repentance, and conversion from one sect, sentiment, form, or vice to another, leave them far short of conversion to Christ and holiness: for "they return, but not to the most High," and rest in some plausible scheme of hypo-crasy or false religion. When they speak fair, their prosessions are deceitful; but when they vent outrageous blasphemies and lies, their tongues agree with their hearts:
and their destruction will be attended with the decision and contempt of their tempters and companions in impiety.
Such is human nature! Such is the progress and end of impiety! Such shall we prove if left to ourselves!
"Create in us a clean heart, O God, and renew a right spirit within us."

NOTES.

CHAP. VIII. V. 1. The prophet, as Israel's watchman, was commanded to blow the trumpet, and give warning of the coming of the Assyrian king with speed and violence, like an eagle, against the people among whom God had dwelt: because they had now provoked him by violating his covenant to depart from them. Give notice of the approaching enemy, (v. 2.) who is coming with speed and swiftness, like a bird of prey against the city and temple of Jerusalem.
(Marg. Ref.) By "the house of the Lord," may CHAPTER VIII.

2 Israel shall cry unto me, My God, we know thee.

3 Israel hath cast off the thing that is good; the enemy shall pursue him.

4 They have set up kings, but not by me: they have made princes, and I knew it not: of their silver and their gold have they made them idols, that they may be cut off.

5 Thy calf, O Samaria, hath cast thee off: mine anger is kindled against them: how long will it be ere they attain to innocency?

6 For from Israel was it also: the workman made it; therefore it is not God: but the calf of Samaria shall be broken in pieces.

7 For they have sown the wind, and they shall reap the whirlwind: it hath possessed them, Ps cxv. 9

8 The king shall be as he that is bound in bonds: he shall be acolour of crocodiles in Egypt; his princes as zebu-cows shall be delivered unto the nations: his officers shall be delivered into the power of the sword, and his wise men shall not be a help unto him: therefore will I pres-ent my wrath upon them.

9 Israel is swallowed up: now shall they be among the Gentiles as a vessel wherein is no pleasure.

10 For they are gone up to Assyria, a wild ass alone by himself: Ephraim hath hired lovers.

11 Ye, though they have hired among the nations, now will I gather them, and they shall sorrow a little for the burden of the king of princes.

12 Because Ephraim hath made many altars to sin, altars shall be unto him a snare.

13 I have written to him the great things of my law, but they were counted as a strange thing.

V. 7, 8. All the expense and trouble of the people in their worship, and all their crimes, politics, and heathen alliances, by which they attempted to secure themselves, were only sowing the wind; and if they had any increase, they could only reap the whirlwind. Such seed could produce nothing valuable: and if a little transient prosperity seemed to result from it, it would soon be torn from them by strangers, who would swallow them up with their property; and they would be left among the nations, as a broken or mean vessel, which a man throws away, or uses for the basest purposes.

V. 9, 10. When the Syrians attacked the Israelites, they applied for help to the kings of Assyria; and they ran about as a headstrong wild ass when separated from his companions. At a vast expense they hired the assistance of idolaters, and conformed to their mode of worship. But though they seemed to have obtained their purpose, and to have engaged powerful allies; yet the Lord would gather them together against them as their enemies; and would begin to punish them by the burden or tribute laid on them by the king of Assyria, who called himself a king of princes. Yet this would be a light affliction, compared with those that would follow. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 11, 12. The Israelites, having, in the days of Jeroboam the son of Nebat, forsaken the temple and altar at Jerusalem, erected altars at Bethel and Dan, and at several other places, both to the golden calves and to Baal, &c.; as if they had purposely intended to add sin to sin: therefore their altars and sacrifices would be imputed to them as aggravated crimes, and expose them to just and dreadful punishment. The Lord had caused the great and important truths and requirements of his law, respecting himself and the worship and service which he required, to be written for their instruction, and he had sent his prophets to enforce it upon the people; but they continued to treat it as a strange thing; they knew scarcely anything of it, they disregarded and despised it, and adhered to their own devices. (This
They sacrifice flesh for the sacrifices of mine offerings, and eat it: but the Lord accepteth them not: now will he remember their iniquity, and visit their sins: they shall return to Egypt, for Israel hath forgotten his Maker, and built up temples; and Judah hath multiplied fenced cities: but I will send a fire upon his cities, and it shall devour the palaces thereof.

CHAPTER IX.

Israel is sentenced to a variety of miseries.

Israel is sentenced to a variety of miseries.

the idolaters count the word of God as strange, in respect of their own inventions." Alas, in how many places, even among protestants, is a minister, who inculcates the great doctrines of Christianity, as stated at the reformation, accused of preaching a new religion, and bringing strange things to the ears of the people!

V. 13. The people professed to sacrifice unto God while they "made void his commandments, that they might keep their own traditions?" but the feast which they made on the sacrifice, was their sole advantage: for the Lord, instead of accepting their worship, was determined to punish their obstinate disobedience and idolatry; and to reduce them to as grievous a bondage as their fathers had endured in Egypt. "Going into Egypt was a proverbial speech for extreme misery." (Lowth.) (Marg. Ref.)

V. 14. When the Israelites were wholly forgetful of God, and regardless of his authority, they erected temples to the golden calves and to other idols. Judah also, instead of confining in the Lord, multiplied fenced cities, as their security against invaders; thus both Israel and Judah were provoking God to pour out his judgments upon them, which would soon destroy their cities, temples, and palaces, as by one general conflagration.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Great earnestness and boldness are especially required, when ministers are called to warn degenerate professors of religion of approaching ruin, and exhort them to repent of transgressing God's law, and despising his covenant. In times of great danger, and especially in the day of judgment, many will say, "My God we know thee," and "Lord, Lord, open to us," to whom he will answer, "Depart from me, ye workers of iniquity." For evil will overtake all that cast off that which is good, and rest in a mere form of godliness. No comfort can be expected in any of the relations of life, which we form without consulting God: good rulers, masters, or servants, as well as more intimate relatives, should be sought from him and valued as his gift. Nor can we expect success in any undertaking, even in our temporal concerns, in which we do not acknowledge him, and seek to know and do his will. They who covetously idolize gold and silver, are nearly as criminal as they were who formerly made images of them to worship; and in various ways men act, as if they were bent upon their own ruin. All our carnal confirmations will one day fail us; because we provoke God to jealousy by putting them in his place. But how long will it be, ere we any of us "attain unto innocence." And God will one day pronounce all our idols? No human inventions can form an essential part of our religious worship, any more than the work of the carpenter or goldsmith can be a god. Let us then be not deceived: what a man soweth, that also shall he reap: and they who sow vanity shall reap destruction and confusion. No good can come from impiety, idolatry, and wickedness, whatever pains or expenses men bestow upon them, whatever the prospects of fools will not only soon terminate, but it will destroy them. Apostates will be confounded in punishment with other evil doers, and except as they will be more disgusted than they, and become among ungodly men, as a vessel in which the Lord hath no pleasure. Men are often more brutal than the most stupid of the animals, and more obstinate than the most untractable: they are so enslaved to their vile affections, that they pay very dear for the gratification of them even in this world; but this is only a little sorrow, compared with the punishment prepared for them hereafter.

So long as men despise the truths and precepts of God's written word, and count the mysteries of his nature, the demands of his law, the doctrines of his Gospel, and the ordinances of his worship, a strange thing; all the observances and costly oblations of their own devising, will be unto them for sin: for the Lord accepteth nothing which is not done in faith; and he will remember and punish the sins of all men, except those of the true believer. And whether they who forget God, multiply temples or palaces, or castles; they can by no means secure themselves against the wrath of that "righteous Judge," whose justice they have provoked, and whose salvation they have neglected, despised, or abused.

NOTES.

CHAPTER IX. V. 1-3. "Thou shalt not rejoice for a joy," &c. Perhaps the Israelites were joyfully celebrating some public success, or gathering in their vantage or harvest, when the prophet published this message to them. They had no right to rejoice, as Judah had, where they were still considerable remains of true religion; or even
They shall not offer wine-offerings to the Lord, neither shall they be pleasing unto him: their sacrifices shall be unto them as the bread of mourners; all that eat thereof shall be polluted: for their bread for their soul shall not come into the house of the Lord.

What will ye do in the solemn day, and in the day of the feast of the Lord!

For, lo, they are gone because of destruction: Egypt shall gather them up, Memphis shall bury them: the pleasant places for their silver, the nettle shall possess them: thorns shall be in their tabernacles.

The days of visitation are come; the days of recompence are come; Israel shall know it: the prophet is a fool, the spiritual man is mad, for the multitude of thine iniquity, and the great hatred.

The watchman of Ephraim was with my God: but the prophet is a snare of a fowler in all his ways, and hatred in the house of his God.

They have deeply corrupted themselves, as in the days of Gibeah: therefore he will remember their iniquity, and he will visit their sins.

I found Israel like grapes in the wilderness; I saw my fathers as the firstripe in the fig-tree at her first time: but they went to Baal-peor, and separated themselves unto that shame, and their abominations were according as they loved.

as other nations, which had not forsaken God, in so aggravated a manner, or been guilty of such deep contempt or so base and ungrateful an apostasy, as they had. Their prosperity therefore would be more transient and ruinous, than that of other nations; for like an adulterous woman, they had violated their covenant with God, and preferred the most worthless idols to him. They loved even to receive the fruits of the earth, as from these their paramours; as festivals in honour of their idols were more suited to their state of heart, than presenting the sacrifices of thanksgiving to God, and honouring him with more substance, (ii. 12.) He therefore would visit them with famine; so that their corn-floor and wine-press would not suffice for their support, instead of supplying their luxurious revels; and the “new wine would lie to her,” by disappointing her expectations, that is, those of the nation, considered as a harlot. Nay, the people would not be allowed to inhabit the Lord’s favoured and good land, where he designed to dwell among his worshippers: some of them would migrate into Egypt, either in the time of famine or when pressed by the Assyrians: the rest would be carried into Assyria, and be constrained to live on food that was ceremoniously unclean, or even refuse and vile, being pressed with extreme necessity.

The Israelites would have no opportunity of pouring out wine-offerings to the Lord, nor any wine to do it with; neither could they present any acceptable service, or have any communion with him, (as the word may signify.) Their sacrifices would be either totally interrupted, or would be as the bread of mourners; who being unclean could not eat of the holy things without violating the law. (Marg. Ref.) The show-bread would no longer be presented in the house of the Lord in their behalf; nor sacrifices offered for them. And what would they do, on their solemn feasts, when both the spiritual and carnal joy of them had ceased? For the prophet, as it were, beheld, and saw the people gone out of the land, to avoid impending destruction: and they would be collected together into Egypt, to die and be buried there; whilst their pleasant places, which were decorated or filled with silver, (as well as their other more humble tabernacles,) would soon be overgrown with nettles and thorns.

The prophets had long foretold these days of visitation and retribution, and Israel would soon know the truth of their predictions; though they now counted the prophet a fool, and the inspired servant of God a madman, because of their extreme depravity, and enmity to the Lord and his cause. Or the event would show their false prophets and pretenders to inspiration to have been fools and madmen, to whose delusions God had given up Israel, to punish the multitude of their crimes and their great hatred of him. The prophet observed that the watchmen of Ephraim, (as Elisha, Elisha, Micahiah, &c.) had communed with his God, had him with them in their work, and wrought with him in turning many to righteousness; but these nominal watchmen, or prophets, were in all their ways like the snare of a fowler, to entangle men to their ruin; as they increased the people’s hatred of God and his worship, and thus brought down vengeance upon themselves and them, by their idolatry or hypocrisy. The marginal reading, “hatred against the house of his God,” gives the clearer sense. Some give another turn to the verse, “Ye falsely imagined that these prophets of Ephraim were sent of God, and had familiar acquaintance with him: but ye shall find them to be but as the snare of a fowler.” (Bp. Hall.)

The people of all the tribes of Israel were become as deeply corrupted as the men of Gibeah, who abused and murdered the Levite’s concubine; or those of the tribe of Benjamin, who defended the perpetrators of that detestable crime, and so were almost wholly cut off: and in like manner God would remember and visit the crimes of the generation, to whom the prophet spake. Indeed Israel in his first and best days, just before his entrance into Canaan, was as pleasing to God, as grapes would be to a weary traveller in 5 B 11 As for Ephraim, their glory shall fly away like a bird, from the birth, and from the womb, and from the concep-

12 Though they bring up their children, yet will I bereave them, that there shall not be a man left: yea, woe also to them when I depart from them!

13 Ephraim, as I saw Tyrus, is planted in a pleasant place: but Ephraim shall bring forth his children to the murderer.

14 Give them, O Lord: what wilt thou give them? a miscarriage of womb, and dry breasts.

the parched desert; or as the first ripe figs, when being scarce they are the more valued; yet even when the nations followed the Lord in the wilderness, a multitude of thm were seduced by the Midianitish women, to frequent the temple of Baal-peor, and to separate themselves from God's ordinances unto that shameful idolatry, and that abominable whoredom, which they loved better than the spiritual and holy worship of Jehovah. The Hebrew word yezazzarom, were separated, is plucked to the order of the Nazarites, who were in a peculiar manner set apart for God's service. Whereas these dedicated themselves to the service of that filthy idol Baal-peor, Jerub-besheth, shame, was a nickname for Baal, so Jerub-baal is called Jerub-besheth. (2 Sam. xi. 21.) (Note, Judg. vi. 31, 32.)

V. 11—14. Ephraim signifies fruitfulness: and the vast number to which this tribe had increased, was its peculiar glory. (Marg. Ref.) By this distinction, the Ephraimites seemed to have been greatly elevated, but it was about to fly away, speedily and irrecoverably, as a bird let loose. Their children would as soon as they were born, or be still-born or abortions; by which the nation would be gradually enfeebled and diminished: and of the small number, that should grow up to maturity, the Lord would so bereave them by various judgments, that there should be scarcely any left of them: for nothing but misery could ensue, when God had been provoked to depart from them in anger, and to deprive them of his gracious presence and protection. Indeed Ephraim had been as prosperous and replenished, and as pleasantly situated, as even the flourishing city of Tyre, which excited the admiration of all beholders: but from this time they would bring forth and educate children, merely to be butchered by their enemies. So that the prophet scarcely knew what to ask in their behalf; or could only entreat the Lord to give them a miscarriage womb and dry breasts, as a less calamity than bringing forth children for the murderer, or to be trained up in idolatry. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 15—17. Gilgal, where their fathers first pitched with God, after they had entered the promised land, and where his tabernacle once stood before it was removed to Shiloh, (Josh. v. 9, 10, x. 41.) was at the time when the prophet wrote, become the repository or all kinds of idolatry and iniquity, whence they diffused through the land on each side of Jordan: therefore the Lord abhorred them, and resolved to drive them out of his house, as an adulteress woman when divorced. (Note, iv. 15.) Not that, would he any more love them, or specially favor them; but seeing all their princes were revolters, rebels, and apostates. Indeed the calamities were beyond their worst expectations. When the Israelites dried up, and their fruit would wither. When the Israelites word yezazzarom, were separated, alludes to the order of the Nazarites, who were in a peculiar manner set apart for God's service. Whereas these dedicated themselves to the service of that filthy idol Baal-peor, Jerub-besheth, shame, was a nickname for Baal, so Jerub-baal is called Jerub-besheth. (2 Sam. xi. 21.) (Note, Judg. vi. 31, 32.)

V. 11—14. Ephraim signifies fruitfulness: and the vast number to which this tribe had increased, was its peculiar glory. (Marg. Ref.) By this distinction, the Ephraimites seemed to have been greatly elevated, but it was about to fly away, speedily and irrecoverably, as a bird let loose. Their children would as soon as they were born, or be still-born or abortions; by which the nation would be gradually enfeebled and diminished: and of the small number, that should grow up to maturity, the Lord would so bereave them by various judgments, that there should be scarcely any left of them: for nothing but misery could ensue, when God had been provoked to depart from them in anger, and to deprive them of his gracious presence and protection. Indeed Ephraim had been as prosperous and replenished, and as pleasantly situated, as even the flourishing city of Tyre, which excited the admiration of all beholders: but from this time they would bring forth and educate children, merely to be butchered by their enemies. So that the prophet scarcely knew what to ask in their behalf; or could only entreat the Lord to give them a miscarriage womb and dry breasts, as a less calamity than bringing forth children for the murderer, or to be trained up in idolatry. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 15—17. Gilgal, where their fathers first pitched with God, after they had entered the promised land, and where his tabernacle once stood before it was removed to Shiloh, (Josh. v. 9, 10, x. 41.) was at the time when the

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—10.

They who abide under the wrath of God, and continue to accumulate guilt and condemnation, can have no good cause to rejoice in temporal prosperity: but such as apostatize from the religion of pious ancestors, violate their solemn engagements, and run into wickedness in opposition to the convictions of their consciences, and the stirrings of God's Spirit with them, have no reason for joy than any other sinners: for to them belongs the deepest condemnation. Abundance received as the reward of serving Mammon, or abused in making provision for men's lusts, will end either in most ruinous prosperity, or most CHAPTER X.

Reproofs of Israel's manifold sins, denunciations of terrible judgments, and exhortations to repentance, 1—15.

Israel is an empty vine, he brings forth fruit unto himself: according to the multitude of his fruit he hath increased the altars; according to the goodness of his land they have made goodly images.

distressing calamities. They whose pampered bodies are rendered unclean by their unlawful indulgences, may perhaps be reduced to the necessity of eating the most unclean and unwholesome food, through the extremity of indigence. But no famine is so dreadful as that of the soul: awful is the case of those who can perform no acceptable service to the Lord, but must either utterly neglect him, or render him such worship as he abhors: yet in this case we should all have been, had not the Son of God, by his incarnation, atonement, and intercession, opened us a door of access and acceptance through faith in his name. Men may now despise the solemn days and ordinances of God, and disbelieve every feast that cannot gratify their sensuality. But the utter want of every means of grace and hope of mercy, will make them know their value, and what will they then do? Thus multitudes hurry on to destruction: their bodies are gathered into the grave; their souls sink into hopeless misery; and their pleasant places for their silver, as well as their commodious habitations, (if not covered with thorns and nettles,) yet pass into the hands of those who neither know nor care what is become of them. But the ministers of God, who foresee, and openly declare, these approaching days of visitation and recompense, must expect to be reviled as wild enthusiasts, or as weak and foolish men: for God leaves sinners under delusion, because of the greatness of their crimes and their enmity against him. But if carnal men deem the servants of God fools and madmen; these know, and can prove, them and their flattering teachers to be so. Happy are they that have watched men over them, who walk with God, seek his glory, do his work, and enjoy his assistance and blessing: many such there have been, and are; may the Lord increase their numbers and prosper their labours! But more have been found crafty and selfish, ensnaring men in error and iniquity, and misleading them into the ways of ruin for their own mercenary ends; increasing men's hatred of God, and of each other, and thus disturbing and defiling even the house of the Lord. Alas! many parts of the Church are as corrupted as Benjamin was in the days of Gibeah, and may expect similar visitations. At some times and in some places, a people are formed by divine grace, who are peculiarly delightful to our holy God; but then are falling off commonly succeeds, and some separate themselves to this shame, and others to that, according to the different abominations which they have loved. Thus, they go out from true believers, because they were not of them; and their glory soon vanishes and appears no more.
5 The inhabitants of Samaria shall fear because of the calves of Beth-aven: for the people thereof shall mourn over it, and the priests thereof that rejoiced over it, for the glory thereof, because it is departed from it.

6 It shall be also carried unto Assyria for a present to king Jareb: Ephraim shall receive shame, and Israel shall be ashamed of his own counsel.

7 As for Samaria, her king is cut off as the foam upon the water.

8 The high places also of Aven, which are in the sin of Israel, shall be desolate: and thorn and thistle shall come up on their altars; and they shall say to the mountains, Cover us; and to the hills, Fall on us.

9 O Israel, thou hast sinned from the days of Gibeah: there they stood.

10 It is in my desire that I should chastise them; and the people shall be gathered against them, when they shall bind themselves in their two furrows.

11 And Ephraim is as an heifer that is brought up: and though I have brought up Ephraim, I will cast off the horn of their glory; but I have passed over upon her fair neck: I will make Ephraim to ride on her colt.

12 Sow to yourselves in righteousness, reap in mercy; break up your fallow ground: for it is time to seek the Lord, till he come and rain righteousness upon you.

13 Ye have plowed wickedness; ye have harvested iniquity; ye have eaten the fruits of lies: because thou didst depend upon the multitude of thy chariots, and put trust in the multitude of thy high places; therefore have the spoiler come to the outermost part of thy border, to set thee as a desolation.

14 The inhabitants of Samaria shall fear, because they have been witchcraft; and all their craft and iniquity, shall be far from me.

15 They shall be benched upon the earth, and upon the earth shall be laid: this shall be the place of them that slayeth them.

16 Then shall she say, I am undone: I am undone, my soul; mine enemies are upon me, they have stretched out their hand against me.

17 0 Lord, God of hosts, the rock my strength, why are you silent? why do you hide your face, that we may be taken into captivity?

18 The king is in an exceeding sore distress: the messenger is a lie: none of the streets are safe: its watchers shall fall; its young men shall be pulled down in iniquity.

19 The king is in an exceeding sore distress: the messenger is a lie: none of the streets are safe: its watchers shall fall; its young men shall be pulled down in iniquity.

20 0 Lord, God of hosts, the rock my strength, why are you silent? why do you hide your face, that we may be taken into captivity?
trust in thy way, in the multitude of thy mighty men.

14 Therefore shall a tumult arise among thy people, and all thy fortresses shall be spoiled, as Shalman spoiled Beth-arbel in the day of battle: the mother was dashed in pieces upon her children.

15 So shall Beth-el do unto you because of your great wickedness: in the morning shall the king of Israel utterly be cut off.

V. 12, 13. No way remained to the Israelites and Jews of escaping these judgments, except by sowing to themselves in righteousness. Repentance and conversion from sin, attendance on God's ordinances, and obedience to his commandments, would be like sowing good seed, which would yield an increase for their own advantage; and in this way, though they could not merit any thing from God, they might hope and wait for his merciful acceptance, as their harvest. But their hearts resembled fallow ground, hard and unbroken, and covered with noxious weeds: so that, without they were humbled and broken for sin, and cleansed from vile affections, they could not receive the good seed of God's word, nor bring forth the fruits of righteousness: but self-examination, watchfulness, prayer, confession, and mortification of sin, would break up this fallow ground, and eradicate these weeds. They had too long delayed this needful duty; and it was full time for them to seek the Lord, and his favour and help by earnest prayer: thus they might expect, that he would give the increase by the influences of his Spirit, and come and rain righteousness upon them. But on the contrary they had long bestowed abundant pains in the practice of wickedness; as if they had plowed and sowed, in order to get a crop of iniquity: and in consequence they had eaten the fruit of their own lies and hypocrisy. They trusted in their own projects and heathen alliances, and in numerous and valiant forces: but as they had neglected God and his service, these confidences would certainly fail them.

V. 14, 15. Intestine divisions and foreign invaders, would soon combine to ruin Israel. All their strong holds would fall into the hands of the enemy, and their inhabitants would be treated with the same cruelty, with which Shalman, (or Shalmaneser,) had desolated Beth-arbel, when he took it by assault, and slew indiscriminately all the inhabitants. Nor could Bethel and its idols do any thing for them better than this; for it was the source and substance of their enormous wickedness. And after a night of adversity, when they thought the morning of prosperity was come, under the government of Hoshea, he would suddenly be cut off, and the whole people left defenseless in the hands of their enemies. Beth-arbel, (or Arbel,) was a place in Armenia, famous afterward for the defeat of Darius—by Alexander. The Hebrew reads, because of the evil of your evil. That language expresses the greatness of any thing by repeating the word over again. The same expression is used by St. Paul, (Rom. vii. 13;) that sin might become exceedingly sinful; that is, hereby it might appear how full of evil our natural corruption is. (Latham.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

They who only seek their own credit or profit, in religious duties, will be accounted unfruitful branches of the true Vine; for, all that abide in Christ bring forth fruit to the glory of God and the benefit of mankind. Alas, in this view, how empty a vine is the visible Church even to this very day! How little of the genuine fruits of righteousness grow upon it!—Human nature is propens to multiply crimes, as God multiplies his favours: and a fruitful kind, a good estate, or a flourishing trade commonly occasions more pride, sensuality, and impiety. They who attempt to share their hearts between God and Mammon will surely be found faulty, and condemned as hypocrites: for we should give the Lord the whole; and then, love his sake, and according to his commandment: and so love him in all, and do all to his glory. Every idolized dependence will soon be torn from those who fear not God: and what indeed could a king, or even a kingdom, do for those who have him for their enemy?—Hypocrisy, perfidy, or treachery in oaths and covenants, converts the most sacred observances into vilest crimes, and corrupts the very fountain of law and justice. They who rejoice in iniquity, prepare terror and sorrow for themselves; for all created glories are transient, and soon depart, pass into other hands, and leave those ashamed who confided in them. All earthly prosperity is but a collection of bubbles, and is soon destroyed like the foam upon the water: and soon will haughty sinners call upon the rocks and mountains to hide them from the face of that angry Judge, whom they now despise, when he speaks to them in the mild language of a merciful Saviour. In every age, in the visible Church, we meet with those who copy and emulate the crimes and infamy of the most atrocious sinners of ancient times: nor can any judgments on earth so extirpate the children of iniquity, that none shall be found who do evil and stand to it. But the Lord will punish all such; and their sins will form those chains, in which they shall be bound, and delivered up into the hands of their enemies. They who love only the privileges of the Gospel, or the temporal advantages of religious profession, and do not love to draw in the voice of evangelical obedience, and will not be induced to it by fatherly corrections, must expect to meet with severe treatment; and such as refuse the liberty of God's service, must fall into the drudgery and oppression of Satan and their own lists. However men may deceive themselves, it is most certain, that accordingly as a man sows, so also shall he reap; and though our sowing unto righteousness be not deserving of a reward; yet it will abound to our own account, and we shall reap in mercy. Men should then be exhorted to break up the fallow ground of their hearts, that they may be prepared to receive the seed of God's word, and to give it root and nourishment, that it may produce an abundant increase. It is time that sinners entered upon this: for none can tell how soon the seed time may be lost, and the hopes of the harvest gone, for ever: and though the Lord alone can come and rain righteousness upon us; yet it is our CHAPTER XI.

Israel's ingratitude to God for his benefits, 1—4. His judgments on them, 5—7. Intimations of mercy, 8—11. Judaism's fidelity, contrasted with Israel's treachery, 12

WHEN Israel was a child, then I loved him, and called my son out of Egypt.

2 As they called them, so they went from them; they sacrificed unto Baalim, and burned incense to graven images.

3 I taught Ephraim also to go, taking them by their arms; but they knew not that I healed them.

4 I drew them with cords of a man, with bands of love, and I was to them as they that take off the yoke from on their jaws, and I laid meat unto them. 5 He shall not return into the land of Egypt, but the Assyrian shall be his king, because they refused to return.

6 And the sword shall abide on his cities, and shall consume his branches, and devour them, because of their own counsels.

7 And my people are bent to back sliding from me: though they called upon me they went after Baalim; and they offered incense to images.

CHAP. XI. V. 1. In the infancy of the nation, when Israel was weak and enslaved in Egypt, the Lord manifested his special love of him, acknowledged him for his son, and called him out of Egypt by the hand of Moses and Aaron. As this was typical of the true Israel's conversion from the bondage of sin and Satan, to the liberty of God's children, through his peculiar love to them; so it also prefigured the bringing up of the only begotten Son of God out of Egypt, whither he had been driven by Herod's cruelty, that he might in the Lord's land perform the whole work of our redemption. (Matt. ii. 15.)

This prophecy is applied by St. Matthew, to our Lord's return out of Egypt—and the literal sense of the words does more properly belong to him than to Israel: which is observable in many other prophecies, which can but improperly be applied to those of whom they were first spoken, and, taking them in their true and genuine sense, are only fulfilled in Christ. (Lomth.)

V. 2. The perverse and ungrateful Israelites, after their deliverance, refused to hearken to the Lord's prophets, who called them to cleave to his service; no, they were rather impelled by resentment and enmity to more decided rebellion and apostacy, and to run into various kinds of idolatry. In like manner the Jews afterwards walked contrary to the preaching of Christ and his apostles.

V. 3. 4. The Lord had all along treated Israel, even the revolted ten tribes, with the tenderness of a nursing mother to her young child. He upbraid them for falling, carried them above their difficulties, and taught them how they ought to walk in order to please him; as a mother doth teach her child to go, leading by the arms. He had also healed their breaches and afflictions, though they did not know or thankfully acknowledge him as their healer. Indeed he still drew them towards him, not by those violent methods, which are used with brutes, but by such gentle arguments, such tender persuasions, such constraining motives and obligations, as were suited to work on the understanding, will, and affections of rational creatures. Especially his continued love towards them was suited to draw them to repentance, confidence, and obedience: for he not only plentifully provided for their wants, but carefully removed every impediment to their comfortable enjoyment of his bounty; as the husbandman takes off the yoke and unmuzzles the ox, which hath finished his labour, as well as lays the provender before him.

V. 5—7. The Israelites had a strong attachment to Egypt: they would not however be sent back as a nation, to that house of bondage, (though many individuals fled thither;) but the Assyrian king would acquire the dominion over them; seeing they refused to return to the worship of Jehovah: and his authority would be that of the sword, whirling on, and desolating, their cities and villages, and devouring the inhabitants. This would be the effect of their own counsel, in refusing submission to the Assyrians, and in seeking help from the Egyptians. Though they were called the Lord's people, they were bent to have their own ways, and not to be guided by the prophets earnestly called them to the worship of the most high God, none of them would exalt or honour him, but all of them preferred their worthless idols to him.
8 "How shall I give thee up, Ephraim? how shall I deliver thee, Israel? how shall I make thee as Admah? how shall I set thee as Zebaloth? Mine heart is turned within me, my repentances are kindled together.

9 I will not execute the fierceness of mine anger, I will not return to destroy Ephraim: for I am God, and not man; the Holy One in the midst of thee: and I will not enter into the city.

Bent to, &c. "My people are in suspense because of their backsliding from me." Either they are in continual anxiety, because of God's displeasure; or, they are irresolute in what is calculated between God and their idols. (Lomh.)—Perhaps the invitation, which Hezekiah sent to the three tribes, to come and join in celebrating the passover, may be alluded to.

V. 10-11. Strict justice demanded, that Israel should be rendered as Admah and Zebaloth, which were destroyed with Sodom and Gomorrah, by fire from heaven; so that none escaped, and the place where they stood was rendered ever after a monument of divine vengeance. But mercy objected to this righteous severity: for how could the Lord give up his Israel to such universal and dire destruction? Speaking after the manner of men, his bowels were moved, and his heart pained and even turned within him at the thought; so that his repentances, or disposition to relent and mitigate the sentence, were excited along with his holy indignation. He would not therefore execute the fierceness of his anger, in so undistinguishing a manner, nor return by one stroke after another utterly to destroy Ephraim. For being God and not man, of infinite perfection in wisdom and mercy, as well as in justice and holiness, he knew how to moderate and regulate his indignation, and to glorify all his attributes in his dealings with them. He had dwelt in the midst of them, as the Holy One of Israel; and it would not consist with his glory to destroy them as he had done Sodom, without leaving any remnant, or to make them perpetual desolations; he would not enter Samaria, or their other cities, in this tremendous manner; some of the people should survive the catastrophe, and be incorporated among the Jews, or otherwise he brought into the Church, who in future times would walk after the Lord. When his terrible and powerful voice should be heard among them, as the roaring of a lion, Israel in after-times would tremble throughout their dispersions, like the birds of the air, or the dove, the most timid of them: and being thus brouht to fear and to submit to him, they would be reinstated in the Church, and perhaps in their own land. This evidently looks forward to the future conversion and restoration of Israel; as well as to the times subsequent to the Babylonish captivity, and to the days of Christ and his apostles. (Marr. Ref.)

12. The religious professions and services of Israel were lies and hypocrisy, with which they compassed and offended God. But in Judah the princes wrought with God and ruled for him; and as regard was paid to his laws, they had great influence with him: and the people were faithful with the saints, or followers of their pious progenitors. This was probably written at the time of Hezekiah's reformation, and was an intimation of his deliverance from Sennacherib's invasion.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The care of the Lord over us from our earliest infancy should induce us to grateful obedience and holy worship; and it will tend to our condemnation if it have not this effect. But his love to his Church of redeemed sinners from the beginning, and especially in giving his Son to become incarnate, and to pass through hardships and sufferings, from his birth in the stable to his death upon the cross, should principally encourage our hopes, and engage our affections to him. Yet, alas, many who are favoured with abundant means of becoming acquainted with this love of God our Saviour, turn away from him as if he were an enemy, and prefer their lusts and idols to his unsearchable riches and unspeakable kindness! They indeed love are truly happy; whom he teaches by his Spirit, upholds by his power, and causes to walk in his ways. They do not always know how first to whom they are indebted for these beginnings of healing and salvation; but they will at length acknowledge him as the Author and Finisher of that blessed work. He neither finds sinners willing to be saved in his humblest holy method, nor does he receive salvation upon them against their wills: but he draws them in the most rational, tender, and persuasive manner; rendering his arguments, warnings, motives, and encouragements efficacious by the influences of his Holy Spirit. In the Gospel he sets his rich provisions before them; and by his grace he takes away prejudice, pride, the carnal mind, and the love and dominion of sin, and creates an appetite for the blessed feast; and so they feed and live for ever. But they who have only outward advantages, not knowing that the goodness of God leadeth them to repentance, proceed with a hasty and impatient heart, to treasure up wrath against the approaching day of wrath. For miseries in various forms await those who refuse to return to God, and their own counsels only serve to bring ruin upon them.

But, alas, how bent to backsliding are even God's professing people! Notwithstanding the labours of ministers to call people to the service of the most High, there are CHAP. XII.

Ephraim and Judah reproved, 1, 2. The conduct of the nation exposed, by comparison with that of their pious ancestor Jacob, whom God especially favoured: and call to repentance, 3-6. Ephraim’s crimes and ingratitude provoke God to punish him, 7-11.

EPRAM is feedeth on wind, and followeth after the east-wind: he daily increaseth lies and desolation; and they do make a covenant with the Assyrians, and oil is carried into Egypt.

2 The Lord hath also a controversy with Judah, and will punish Jacob, but few who cordially honour him, and give him the throne in their hearts. So that he might justly give up even a great part of the visible Church, as he did Achan and Zeeboim; may it be his mercy, that we are not consumed. But his companions are free and infinite: he pitied the miseries, forgives the sins, moderates the corrections of his offending people, and seems to repent of his severity towards them. How then should we repent of our ingratitude to him? He will not destroy his Church; nor leave his enemies to triumph; for he is the changeable God, and not like mutable man: he can execute vengeance on hypocrites, and correct his offending children, without inflicting his fierce anger by an indiscriminate destruction. But whilst this Holy One, who deigns to dwell in the midst of his Church, roars like a lion against the workers of iniquity; true Israelites tremble before him, but do not flee from him. Thus fearing his wrath, confessing their guilt, and trusting in his mercy, they will be restored to the enjoyment of his favour; and have the tokens of his acceptance, whilst the deceits and lies of hypocrites shall be exposed and punished. It is peculiarly honourable to him, when we obey his commands, serve him in our respective places, and are faithful amongst his saints, in times of general apostasy; and them who thus honour God, he will honour, but such as despise him shall be lightly esteemed.

NOTES.

CHAP. XII. V. 1, 2. Israel acted as foolishly in seeking help from idols and idolaters, as a man would do, that should seek to satisfy his hunger, by greedily pursuing the noxious east-wind, which could only disappoint him. But indeed they continually multiplied delusions, which served to increase their desolations; for after having made a treaty with the Assyrians, they violated it, sending quantities of oil into Egypt, to purchase the assistance of that people, in shaking off the Assyrian yoke. Indeed the Lord had also a controversy with Judah in this matter: though they adhered to the family of David and the priesthood of Aaron, and did not publicly commit idolatry; yet they were prone to form heathen alliances, instead of wholly trusting in God. For this he intended to punish according to his ways; according to his doings will be recompense him.

3 He took his brother by the heel in the womb, and by his strength he had power with God:

4 Yea, he had power over the Angel, and prevailed: he went, and made supplication unto him: he found him in Bethel, and there he spake with us.

5 Even the Lord God of hosts; the Lord is his memorial.

6 Therefore, turn thou to thy God: keep mercy and judgment, and wait on thy God continually.

V. 3-6. Having mentioned Jacob, (including the whole nation descended from that patriarch,) the prophet showed how contrary their conduct, in trusting to an arm of flesh, was to that of their believing progenitor. As a token that he would afterwards struggle hard for the birth-right and blessing of God, he even in the womb took his brother by the heel, as if contending for the privilege of primogeniture; and afterwards, being strong in faith, he had power as a prince with God, when he prevailed with him for deliverance from the armed force of his enraged brother. He was at that time in no condition to resist, and had no place to flee unto; and he sought no other succour than that of God. But he wrestled with him, and had power over him whom Moses called a Man, as he appeared in human form, but who was the Angel of God’s presence, the eternal Son of God, yea, God, with whom by his strength he prevailed; and he would not depart until he blessed him. His wrestling was only the sign of that spiritual conflict by which he obtained this honourable victory, even fervent prayer; for he went, (for the sins that had erst enraged his brother’s anger, and for the sorrows with which he was then oppressed;) and made supplication to him, even the Angel, for deliverance from his brother’s power. (Notes, Gen. xxxiii.) This very person, called a Man by Moses, (who yet records that the name of the place was called Peniel, or the face of God;) and by Hosea, God and the Angel, yea, the Lord God of hosts; found Jacob at Bethel, and there spake to him, and to his remotest posterity with him. And who could this be, to whom these several titles belonged, but He, who appearing in the Form of God, afterwards took on him the Form of a servant, and was made in the likeness of man? (Marg. Ref.) The Lord spake twice to Jacob in Bethel, but the first time especially seems intended; when God appeared, from above the ladder to him as he lay asleep beneath, having fled from the face of Esau; when he gave most gracious promises to him and his posterity; when Jacob called the place Bethel, or the house of God, and made a solemn vow to him. Afterwards he appeared to him at and used similitudes, by the ministry of the prophets.

11 Is there any iniquity in Gilead? Surely they are vanity; surely they sacrifice bullocks in Gilgal, yea, their altars are as heaps in the furrows of the fields.

12 And Jacob fled into the country of Syria, and served for a wife, and for a wife he kept sheep.

13 And as by a prophet the Lord brought Israel out of Egypt, and by a prophet was he preserved.

14 Ephraim provoked him to anger, most bitterly; therefore shall he leave his blood upon him, and his reproach shall his Lord return upon him.

V. 12—14. The people ought to have remembered the low condition of their progenitors, as well as his plain, honest, industrious character, and his pious confidence in God. When he went into Mesopotamia, (or the country between the rivers Euphrates and Tigris;) he was so destitute, yet so diligent and skillful, that he laid the foundation of his future provision, and even of his family; by serving fourteen years as a shepherd for his two wives, Rachel and Leah, and cheerfully enduring hardship all that time; from which low original all their subsequent prosperity arose. And surely they ought not to despise the prophets, when the Lord by his prophet Moses brought the nation out of Egypt, and preserved them from the destructive rage of Pharaoh. But they had most bitterly provoked his anger, by despising his prophets and abusing his goodness; they should therefore perish in their sins, with their blood upon their own heads: and he would turn upon them the contempt and reproach, which they had cast on him and his servants. (Margin. Ref.) Some think that the passage is connected with the preceding verse, in this manner. Jacob fled to Gilead from Mesopotamia, where he had been a servant and fed Laban’s sheep, for his wives, &c. And God by his prophet Moses delivered Israel to Gilead, when he delivered them from Egyptian bondage. Yet the inhabitants of Gilead which had been thus distinguished were carried away captive: and could Ephraim expect to escape? Mahonaim, where the angels met Jacob, as he returned to Canaan, was in the land of Gilead. (Gen. xxxii. 2, 2 Sam. xvii. 26, 27;) and Peniel, where he greatly aggravated Israel’s crimes. They had used parables, illustrations, and similitudes, to explain and enforce their messages; but all to no purpose. It is probable that this was written some time after the inhabitants of Gilead had been carried captive by Togltph-pilezer, (2 Kings xv. 29.) Do ye think that there was more iniquity in the Gileadites that are already carried away captive, than in you? Surely the rest of Israel is in the same case; they all lie open to the same judgment. They sacrifice to their idols in Gilgal also, (Bp. Hall.) In short, their altars were as numerous as the heaps of dung laid on the plowed field, or of stones gathered out of it.

V. 7—9. Ephraim prospered, by becoming a merchant. The word signifies a Canaanite: the Israelites conducted trade upon Canaanitish principles, covetously and iniquitously; using false balances, cheating by various artifices, and loving to oppress the poor. Thus they grew rich, and they supposed that providence favoured and approved of them. They ascribed their wealth to their own industry, and thought it a substantial advantage; and though the prophets might condemn them, they were satisfied that they could not be detected in any iniquitous methods of growing rich, that could properly be called sin, or deserve the wrath of God. What was not absolutely to be justified might at least be executed. But the Lord, who as their God had favoured them, even from their deliverance from Egypt, would drive them from their stately houses, to dwell in mean and moveable tents, as wanderers among the nations; even such tents as were used on the days of the solemn feast of tabernacles. Some indeed interpret this of future mercies in reserve for Israel, notwithstanding their sins; and suppose that the joy of the feast of tabernacles is referred to. (Zech. xiv. 6—19.)

V. 10, 11. The varied means which the Lord employed by the ministry of his prophets from age to age, WHEN Ephraim spake trembling, he exalted himself in Israel; but "wrestled with God and prevailed," lay in that neighbourhhood. (Judg. viii. 9, 9. Note 3—6.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—6.

They who depend on creatures for safety or felicity, whilst "the wrath of God abideth on them," feed on wind, and follow after the cast wind; and the increase of their delusions enhances their miseries. Such, as in some things deserve commendation, are in other things to be blamed: and the Lord has many a controversy even with his saints, who are visited with rebukes and corrections according to their doings. We should be followers of the most eminent believers, in their most simple dependence on God, their fervency in persevering prayer, and their most unreserved obedience. We should select for our imitation the most distinguished parts of their conduct, in which they are mentioned with most honour, and most evidently prevailed with God, by their strength of faith and humble expectation. If we have power with the great Angel of the covenant, and lay hold of him and his salvation by vigorous faith, whatever our foes or fears may suggest, or however our sins and sorrows may cause us to join tears with our supplications, we shall certainly have power with God: for "He and the Father are One." "He hath all hearts in his hands, and he can easily cause us our most malignant enemies to be at peace with us. Let us then cease from man, and set ourselves to wrestle with him for the blessings, determined never to give over till we prevail. Let us seek him in his ordinances, and hear him speak to us by all his promise and precepts to his ancient servants: and may we be enabled to turn to him, as our Portion, to keep and execute judgment and mercy towards all men, and to wait on our God continually.

V. 7—14.

In general, they who neglect piety, are exceedingly defective in their moral conduct: and lawful, honourable, and useful as commerce must be allowed to be, when properly conducted, yet too many called Christians are mere Commercants in this respect; the balances of deceit are in their hands, and they love to oppress. They think every measure sanctified by which men grow rich; they prosper in the world, ascribe it to their own prudence, and spend their wealth upon themselves; and if they can keep up their credit with men, or excuse themselves by the maxims and customs of the commercial world, or of others in their own line of trade, their consciences are satisfied. Their deviations are trivial and justifiable; they are not worthy to be called transgressors against God; and such as condemn them are uncharitable enthusiasts, or men that know nothing of the world. But however God may wink at such things, in the days and places of total ignorance, he will assuredly mark and punish them, in those who profess his truth and frequent his ordinances: and, who have been favoured with the multiplied visions and similitudes of the prophets, by the parables of Christ, the instructions of his apostles, and the stated ministry of the word. Iniquity in such places is peculiarly hateful; and it is often connected with idolatry, superstition, hypocrisy, or open impiety. It is better to endure the hardest labour in the lowest menial situation, under poverty and oppression, than to grow rich by sin: and we shall best form a judgment of our own conduct, by comparing it with that of ancient believers, in their approved actions, and in similar circumstances. None will despise prophesying, but they who know not what things God hath in former ages done for his Church, by the ministry of his prophets: who endeavours by every means to bring his people acquainted with his truth and will. All therefore who despise them, deserve that they should be, and provoke them to anger more bitterly; they will perish with their blood upon their own heads, except they repent of this their wickedness; and the Lord will cause the reproach, cast on him, to return and rest upon them.

NOTES.

CHAP. XIII. V. 1, 2. When Ephraim was little in his own estimation, and spake in a humble diffident manner of himself; and when he feared the Lord, trembled at his word, lest he should offend him and forgo his protection, he then grew considerable in Israel. Joshua, the conqueror of Canaan, descended from Ephraim: and from his time, that tribe gained the ascendency, in the northern parts of the land, and preserved it, till Jerusalem, an Ephraimite, became king of Israel: and then the kingdom of the ten tribes was frequently called Ephraim. But when Ahab and the successors of kings, set up the worship of Baal, this prosperity declined; and the kingdom in general, and the tribe in particular, became like a criminal condemned to die, or a man languishing under a mortal disease. Yet nothing could induce the people to renounce idolatry. When Jehu had destroyed Baal, they adhered to the golden calves, and lavished their treasures, and em-
CHAPTER XIII.

3 Therefore they shall be "as the morning cloud, and as the early dew that passeth away, " as the chaff that is driven with the whirlwind out of the floor, and as the smoke out of the chimney.

4 Yet I am the Lord thy God from the land of Egypt, and thou shalt know no god but me: "for there is no Saviour beside me.

5 I did "know thee in the wilderness, in the land of *great drought.

6 According to their pastures, so were they filled; they were filled, and their heart was exalted; "therefore have they forgotten me.

7 Therefore "I will be unto them as a lion: as a leopard by the way I will observe them.

8 I will meet them "as a bear that is bereaved of her whelps, and will rend their ingenuity in framing other idols: and when these were taken from them, they made others in their stead. The kings, and priests, and other zealous worshippers, required those who brought sacrifices to "kiss the calves." (Marg. Ref.) By a peculiar arrangement, the word for men is, in the original, next to that for calves. "The sacrificers, a man, the calves shall kiss." That man (Adam,) whom "God made in his own image and likeness," nay, man favoured with the oracles of God, should degrade himself by kissing, as an act of adoration and love, the lifeless image of a mean brute, is a wonderful proof of stupidity and depravity! Thus Cicero describes a statue of Hercules as having its mouth and chin worn smooth, because they knew not how to kiss! But it does not appear that man sacrificed to the worship of the calves.

V. 3, 4. To punish these abominable idolatries, the state of Ephraim, like his goodness, (vi. 4,) would be as the morning-cloud, the early dew, the chaff before the whirlwind, or the smoke out of the chimney; i.e. violently and speedily made to vanish and disappear. For after all that the Lord had done for Israel, from their deliverance out of Egypt, they ought to have acknowledged and worshipped no other god, but him alone; for none but he was, or could be, a Saviour, or Deliverer of his people, from temporal or eternal ruin: (Note, Is. xiii. 10, 11.) This may also be understood as a prophecy of what the Lord would do for them in future times.

V. 5-8. The Lord had acknowledged, regarded, and provided for, Israel in the wilderness; when otherwise they must have perished by thirst, because it was a land of great drought. Yet when they entered Canaan, and were like cattle placed in a good pasture, they gratified their appetites to excess, and their hearts were lifted up in pride. This caused them to forget God and their obligations to him, and so they apostatized to gross idolatry. Therefore he would meet them in vengeance, with the fierceness of a leopard that watches by the way to seize upon the travelers; with the fury of a savage bear enraged by the loss of her young; with the force of a lion, or as the most terrible beast that inhabited their forests. "They new venture to fire on a young bear, when the mother is near: for if the cub drop, she becomes enraged to a degree little short of madness; and if she get sight of the enemy, will only "quit her revenge with her life." (Cook's Voyage.)

V. 9. "One hath destroyed thee, O Israel," (that is, "Thou art destroyed.) Thou shouldst have trusted in me for thy help; but having forsaken me, thou art destroyed. Israel did not trust in God for help, and Semiramis triumphed over them: Hesekiah and Judah did trust in God for help, and were delivered from him. This seems the construction and sense of this verse: and the meaning is nearly the same as in our translation. "O Israel, one hath destroyed thee, but in me is thy help." Israel need not blame others for his ruin; for he had destroyed himself: but he could not save himself, his help was in and from God alone.

V. 10, 11. The Lord had all along undertaken to be Israel's King and Protector; and the judges that he raised up, delivered the people, by his authority and immediate help. But where was there any that could save them in all their cities; or of all their rulers, which they had set up for themselves? In the time of Samuel they would have a king: and God in anger granted their rebellious request, and gave them Saul, who both during his life and at his death, was the occasion of great calamities to them. And similar had the case been with the kings of Israel, from Jeroboam's revolt to the ruin of the kingdom of the ten tribes by the death of Hoshea their last king. This last event seems especially alluded to: "I will give thee a king in mine anger, and take him away in my wrath;" (V. 12, 13.) The nation had accumulated wickedness.
HOSEA.

B. C. 724.

14 I will ransom them from the power of the grave; I will redeem them from death: O death, I will be thy plague; O grave, I will be thy destruction: repentance shall be hid from mine eyes.

15 Though he be fruitful among his brethren, an east wind shall come out of the wind of the Lord shall come up from the wilderness, and his spring shall become dry, and his fountain shall be dried up; he shall spoil the treasure of all pleasant vessels.

16 Samaria shall become desolate; for she hath rebelled against her God; they shall fall by the sword: their infants shall be dashed in pieces, and their women with child shall be ripped up.

from age to age, which was, as it were, bound up in bags, and laid by in a secure place to be produced against the day of account. Marg. (Ref.) The affairs of the nation were coming to a crisis, as the hour of trial approaches to the pregnant woman, and her s-rows can in no wise be avoided. But the event would be that of a woman who dies without being delivered; for the people would make no more efforts to rescue themselves from their difficulties, than a dead child could do. They were so foolish, that they continued in a situation which must certainly end in ruin, without attempting any reformation or repentance; so that the souls of individuals and the state of the nation would perish together, like the mother and child in the case alluded to. They ought indeed to use endeavours most earnestly, without delay to extricate themselves, before it was too late; but they foolishly neglected or postponed even such as!

V. 14. The predictions of the ruin of Israel, as a nation, were connected with an intimation of a merciful and powerful interposition of God to save a remnant of them, as from death and the grave: yet this was but a shadow of the true Israel, by the death, burial, and resurrection of Christ, from the wrath of God, the death of sin, the power of Satan, and finally from death and the grave itself at the last day. When Christ died and was buried, and rose again, he, as it were, disquieted the dominion of death, and was the plague of that king of terrors; and at length he will be the destruction of both death and the grave. This was absolutely determined, and would certainly be accomplished, notwithstanding Israel’s sins and miseries. The Lord would not repent of his purpose and promise: he would even hide repentance from his eyes, as determined not to look at it. The Septuagint renders the middle clause, “Where is thy vengeance, O death? Where is thy sting, O grave? or O hell?” And the apostle seems to have thus understood the passage, though he does not quote it exactly. (1 Cor. xv. 55.) The word translated I will be, is rendered in many versions, Where, both here and in the tenth verse. “Where is thy king?” and only the transposition of a single letter is requisite fully to authorize this construction.

V. 15, 16. Though Ephraim (whose name signifies fruitfulness) had been so fruitful in respect of the number of the people; yet he would certainly be destroyed by the Assyrians, whom the Lord would send against them; as the east wind from the wilderness blights the spreading tree; or as when the springs from beneath dry up, and the withers for lack of moisture. Thus his fountain would be dried up; and his treasures, and choice vessels of precious metal and rich furniture, would be spoiled. For when the land had previously been ravaged, Samaria would be desolated, by the most inhuman murder, even of the women and children. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—9.

Humility, with the fear of God, and a dependence on his mercy, truth, and power, forms the grand requisite for honour and advancement, in the service of Israel’s God and king. But they who exalt themselves shall be abased; and such as forsake God, to follow idols and iniquity, give a fatal wound to their own prosperity, and are the murderers of their own souls. The way of transgression is downhill, and they who begin to descend, often sin on more and more, till they come into the pit of destruction.

Many would spare no expense in religion, provided it might be regulated according to their own understanding, to suit their own inclinations, and not according to the word of God. In this case they would adore the work of the craftsman, or the creature of their own imagination, with abundant reverence, devotion, and affection; and with as much stupidity, as the Israelites prostrated themselves before, and kissed, the dead image of a calf! But every fleeting object in nature might preach to such men the vanity of their religion, and the transient continuance of their prosperity. Surely, no one, who reads the Bible, should acknowledge any other God, than him from whom cometh our salvation! And those who have experienced the power of converting grace, and have walked with God in the liberty of the Gospel, will be effectually preserved from such delusions: for none can be entitled to our worship, who cannot save us from all enemies and evils: and there is no other Saviour, but the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, into whose name Christians are baptized. He takes care of his people, in their lowest estate, and preserves them in every barren desert and land of drought through which they pass. But when sinners under terror of conscience, or in difficult circumstances, obtain the assurance of prosperity, and then run into excess, are lifted up in pride, or pulled into carnal security, and so forget the Lord, they may expect to be punished with marked severity. This ingratefulness, so natural to fallen man, excites his heaviest indignation, and turns his kindness into jealousy, which burns most fiercely against the objects of it. He can torture the inmost soul, and, as it were, rend the caut of the heart of his rebellious and apostate worshippers: nor can
CHAPTER XIV.

Calls to repentance, 1—3. Promises of peculiar blessings to Israel, 4—8. These things worthy of peculiar attention, 9.

ISRAEL, return unto the LORD thy God; for thou hast fallen by thine iniquity.

2 Take with you words, and turn to the Lord: say unto him, 'Take away all iniquity, and receive us graciously: so will we render the calves of our lips.'

3 Ashur shall not save us; we will not ride upon horses; we will not say any more to the work of our hands, Ye are our gods: 'for in thee the fatherless findeth mercy.'

V. 9—16.

We have all destroyed ourselves, and should never so speak of God's purposes, or Satan's temptations, or any other subject, as to forget that our own willful apostacy and rebellion have exposed us to that deserved wrath, which must have terminated in eternal ruin, had not mercy intervened. Nor can we have any help but from the Lord; and blessed be his name, in him is effectual help; and for us, if we are willing to accept of it. All things are now ready, the mercies of God are infinite, his redemption all-sufficient, his invitations free and unencumbered, his promises exceedingly great and precious; his wisdom, power, and truth are concerned to accomplish them to every believer: he will be the King, the Protector and Ruler, of all who believe, and he will save them completely and for ever: but all other schemes for obtaining safety and eternal life, are as vain as Israel's hope in their kings and judges: whom they rebelliously set up, when they rejected the Lord, and would not have him to reign over them. What we inordinately desire, will perhaps be given us in anger: and whether granted, or withheld, or taken from us, will be the occasion of wrath and tribulation to our souls. — The sins of unbelievers, with their aggravations, are laid up in the omniscience of God, as if hid among his treasures: and who can conceive what a long and heavy account there stands out against each of us! Except therefore sinners repent and believe the Gospel, anguish will soon come upon them, as the sorrows of a travailing woman, from which there will be no deliverance. He is then most unwise, who doth not make haste to flee from the wrath to come. For, however men may be alarmed and affected, unless they enter in at the strait gate, and become penitent believers, "new created in Christ Jesus unto good works," they will as surely perish as the child whose mother's womb becomes its grave. But the great Redeemer is able and willing to extricate those that call upon him, out of this and every difficulty. He hath paid the ransom of our souls with his blood, and begun his triumphs by his resurrection from the dead; and all, who accept and bring forth the fruits of his salvation, may be assured that he will also ransom them from the power of the grave, and redeem them from death; until he hath forced the devouring monster to design his prey, and till he have become the destruction of the grave, and mortality be swallowed up of life. Then will the millions of the redeemed rejoice and praise the Lord, for having destroyed the last enemy, and for having restored them, in body and soul, to a glorious immortality. These are true and faithful sayings: for the Lord hath promised, and "repentance will be hid from his eyes." But without fruitfulness in good works, springing from the Spirit of Christ, all other fruitfulness will be found as empty as the uncertain riches of the world: the wrath of God will wither its branches: the springs that watered it shall become dry, and it shall be spoiled, and come to nothing. — In short, tribulation and anguish belong to those who have rebelled against God, and their woes will be far more terrible than any that are experienced in that cruelty and carnage, which often attend the storming of populous cities. From such miseries and murders, and from sin the fruitful parent of all sorrow, good Lord, we beseech thee to deliver us!

NOTES.

CHAP. XIV. V. 1—3. This chapter is very different from the general tenour of the preceding prophecy; and perhaps it was delivered after the reduction of Samaria, and the ruin of the kingdom of Israel. Some penitents would be found among the scattered remnant, who would need encouragement. Others might be brought to repentance by means of their afflictions: and these exhortations and promises, imply predictions of future events to the nation of Israel and to the Church of God. (Mary. Ref.) — Israel is here exhorted to return to the Lord; Jehovah had always been known as their God; and they might expect all blessings from him by virtue of the covenant made with their fathers. They must renounce their sins and idols, by true repentance, by faith in his mercy and grace through the promised Redeemer, and by diligently attending on his worship and service. Thus they would be recovered from that ruined state, into which they had fallen by their iniquities and idolatries. In order to this, they must take (not legal sacrifices, but) words expressive of the desires of their hearts, and with them address the Lord. In order to guide their prayers, the prophet showed them what words suited their case. They first must entreat God to take away all iniquity: (conscious that they could neither expiate, nor subdue their sins:) and beseech him to receive them graciously: to take them of his rich mercy into his family, and to confer on them all the blessings of salvation. Then with their lips they would proclaim his praise, and give him the whole glory of their salvation.
4 I will heal their backsliding, and I will love them freely: for mine anger is turned away from them.

5 Then shall they fear the name of the Lord, and the name of the God of Israel shall dwell in their hearts: and he shall be their God for ever from henceforth and for evermore.

6 The branch of the fruitful tree is their bread, and their seed shall be in abundance in the land, and shall never fail, when the blessing of the Lord shall rest upon them.

7 They shall be as a mighty men of war, they shall run the run, and walk the battle as for chariots, and as for horses; and they shall tread down their enemies.

Concerning the sacrifices of Thanksgiving.

V. 4–8. These verses contain promises in answer to the preceding prayers, whenever Israel should be excused to present them. God would heal Israel's backsliding, etc. And the Lord's people receiving these promises, would be encouraged to continue in the work of the Lord, and would be enabled to offer acceptable sacrifices, as a thanksgiving for the Lord's mercies to them.

V. 9. The due understanding and improvement of these directions and encouragements, would be a proof of wisdom and prudence: and every wise and prudent man in the things of God, would certainly know and improve them.

Sin is the prolific parent of all the misery in the universe, and we should trace all our sorrows to this source. Blessed be God, in this world we may be recovered, how low soever we be fallen by our iniquity: for we are called on to return to the Lord our God, as in a Christ reconciling the world unto himself: and when by faith we obey this call, we are raised up from the brink of despair and hell. } flow from a contrite heart, are far more pleasing to God than ten thousands of bullocks and rams; as being uniformly connected with a disposition to "look unto the Lamb of God, that taketh away the sin of the world." We should not therefore, under any distresses, even when we have fallen by iniquity, turn away from God, but rather turn to him as our only Refuge and Salvation. We should first beseech him to teach us what to ask, and how to ask; and when the words of the Holy Spirit correspond with our desires, we should take them with us, and present them before the Lord, that it may be done unto us according to them. We must especially be earnest with him to take away all our iniquity: if that be pardoned we are happy; as nothing but sin can prevent our receiving all good from our gracious God: and surely the whole glory of our salvation, and every possible expression of praise and gratitude, are justly due to our merciful Deliverer; and we can never refuse him the cheap but honourable sacrifice of the calves of our lips. But the true penitent will also evince his sincerity by renouncing his former sins and carnal confidences: he does not want such sources of satisfaction or such refuges of lies; since he has learned to trust in the tender love and compassion of that God, "in whom the fatherless findeth mercy," and who "withholds no good thing from them that walk uprightly." They who thus come before God, will surely find him ready to heal their backslidings, how great and many soever they have been: he will love them freely, and turn away all his indignation from them: he will refresh their souls with the dew of his grace; he will render them holy, amiable, steadfast, fruitful, and useful: and others will repair to them, and grow up into the experience and fruitfulness of the Gospel, through their converse, example, and prayers. Thus the cause of God revives in one place or another, from time to time; believers ripen for heaven, or grow more serviceable on earth; God is glorified, the Church increased, and sinners saved. Still the Lord waits to be gracious, and he observes with pleasure the broken hearted penitent; he is ready to refresh every weary soul; and to make those joyful and fruitful, who were most barren and disconsolate; for "from him is all our fruit found." May he give us that wisdom and prudence, which lead to the knowledge, experience, and practice of these things; may we learn to walk in the right ways of God, as his righteous servants; and may none of us, being disobedient and unbelieving, stumble at the word of his grace.
THE BOOK OF JOEL.

It is uncertain at what time Joel prophesied: some think he predicted those calamities which Amos lamented, others, that he lived afterwards. He prophesied to Judah exclusively; whether before or after the captivity of Israel. He foretold or described a terrible judgment on the land, by locusts and drought; which has also been considered as typical of the calamities that were about to be brought on the nations by the Chaldean armies and other invaders. These predictions were attended with earnest exhortations to solemn fasting, repentance, and prayer, and with promises of returning peace and prosperity. The conclusion contains prophecies of the glorious times that were coming under the Gospel dispensation, and of the righteous judgments to be executed on all the enemies of God and his Church. In this he coincides with the other prophets; who, (with perhaps the single exception of Jonah,) all more clearly predict, or more obscurely intimate, these great events. But the most remarkable prophecy in Joel, is that which the apostle Peter quoted on the day of Pentecost, and which is more than once referred to in the New Testament. (Comp. ii. 28-32. Acts ii. 16-21. Rom. x. 13-16.) The effects of the Gospel, as the ministration of the Spirit, both among Jews and Gentiles; and the consequences of opposing it, to the Jewish nation in particular, are here foretold in the fullest and plainest manner: and the event to this day fully attests Joel's divine inspiration.—The style of this prophet is allowed by the most competent judges, to be exceedingly beautiful: and few remains of ancient poetry (none, except those preserved in the sacred Scriptures,) contain such an assemblage of elegance, pathos, and sublimity, as are found in his writings. Whatever obscurity appears to us, is wholly in the subject; for the language is uncommonly perspicuous: and consequently the critics have proposed much fewer alterations, than in the more concise, sententious, and obscure prophecies of Hosea; nor has our translation of it been exposed to similar objections.

B.C. 680.

CHAP. I.

The prophet describes the entire destruction of the fruits of the earth, by drought and noxious insects, 1-7. He calls on the people to lament over their calamities, with prayer and fasting, 8-17. He cries to God for them, and represents the very beasts as joining in his supplications, 18-20.

NOTES.

CHAP. I. V. 2, 3. The prophet opened his subject by calling upon the aged men, and all the inhabitants of the land, to attend to the events which were about to take place. None of them could remember such dire calamities, nor had any such befallen Judah since it was a nation. They ought therefore to speak of them to their children, that the account might be transmitted by one generation to another, to warn them not to provoke God to punish them with similar judgments. (Marg. Ref.)
CHAPTER I.

4. That which *the palm-worm hath left hath *the locust eaten; and that which the locust hath left hath *the canker-worm eaten; and that which the canker-worm hath left hath *the caterpillar eaten.

5. Awake, ye drunkards, and *weep; and howl, all ye drinkers of wine, because of the new wine; *for it is cut off from your mouth.

6. For *a nation is come upon your land, strong, and without number, whose teeth are the teeth of a lion, and he hath the cheek-teeth of a great lion.

7. He hath laid mine vine waste, and hath barked my fig-tree: he hath made it clean bare, and cast it away; the branches thereof are made white.

8. Lament like a virgin girded with sackcloth for the husband of her youth.

9. The meat-offering and the drink-offering is cut off from the house of the Lord, *the priests, *the Lord’s ministers, mourn.

10. The field is wasted, the land shall mourn; for the corn is wasted: *the new wine is dried up, the oil languisheth.

11. Be ye *ashamed, O ye husbandmen, howl, O ye vine-dressers, for the wheat and for the barley; *for the harvest of the field is perished.

12. The vine is dried up, and the fig-tree languisheth; *the pomegranate-tree, the palm-tree also, and the apple-tree, *even all the trees of the field, are withered: *because joy is withered away from the sons of men.

13. *If ye dwell in the land, and I remember you, and hearken unto you, *ye priests; *the ministers of the Lord, *the ministers of mine God.

14. *Sanctify ye a fast, call a solemn assembly, gather the elders, *and all the inhabitants of the land, into the house of the Lord your God, and *cry unto the Lord.

15. *Alas for the day! for *the day of the Lord is at hand, and as a destruction from the Almighty shall it come.

V. 4. The exact difference between these several species of insects, cannot easily be explained. Probably they made their appearance in succession, at different sea sons of the year. Sometimes one, and sometimes another of them, had been used to cause a partial devastation of the fruits of the earth; but on this occasion they followed each other, till they had utterly destroyed the whole. Indeed some think that this was the case for several years together, and that it was an emblem of the repeated invasions and devastations of the Chaldeans. We have no history of the completion of this prophecy; if indeed the passage be not historical rather than prophetical. A future event which might be averted by repentance is spoken of, as having already taken place, to enliven the description, by setting the images before the eye of the reader. (By Newcombe.)

V. 5–7. The prophet, considering the effects of this visitation, called on the drunkards to awake and bewail their miseries. Their sins, and the danger to which their souls were exposed, had failed to raise them from insensibility: but this judgment was suited to affect them; as it would deprive them of their idolized indulgence, and force them to be sober in the most distressing circumstances. For though these insects were small and easily crushed; yet their unnumbered multitudes would render them as formidable as a mighty and populous nation invading the land. Their teeth, suited to destroy the vegetables and bark the trees, would be more formidable than those of a lion; and they would leave nothing growing, but leafless and bared stems.

Vol. III.—No. 23.

V. 8. Judah was here called upon to lament on account of her miseries, as a betrothed virgin, who should be deprived of the intended and beloved husband of her youth, before the completion of her marriage; that is, with exceedingly great and unfeigned sorrow. This intimated how heavy their calamities would be.

V. 9. Some of the priests would piously lament the suspension of sacred ordinances, on so melancholy an occasion: the rest would naturally mourn over the diminution of their revenues.

V. 11. The husbandmen would be ashamed of their unsuccessful labours, in cultivating their fields and vineyards; as neither their skill nor industry, on which they would be apt to depend, could prevent the most terrible famine: all their expectations would be frustrated, and they confounded for having entertained them.

V. 12. Because. *Surely all joy,” &c. The joy of harvest, and all joy in outward things, must cease, during such a famine. (Hab. iii. 17, 18.)

V. 13. *He shows, that the only means to avoid God’s wrath, and to have all things restored, is true repentance. The priests, especially those who kept the watches at the temple, are here called on, to set the people an example of humiliation before God. Instead of going to rest, or spending the watches in Psalmody; let them lie all night on the ground in sackcloth, and employ themselves in confessing their sins and deprecating the wrath of God. (2 Sam. xii. 1. 22.) To suppose, that they were only to sleep in sackcloth, instead of their ordinary covering, quite enervates the exhortation.

5 D
Is not the meat cut off before our eyes, yea, joy and gladness from the house of our God?

The seed is rotten under their clods, the garnerers are laid desolate, the barns are broken down; for the corn is withered.

How do the beasts groan! the herds of cattle are perplexed, because they have no pasture; yea, the flocks of sheep are made desolate.

19 O Lord, to thee will I cry: for the fire hath devoured the pastures of the wilderness, and the flame hath burned all the trees of the field.

The beasts of the field cry also unto thee: for the rivers of waters are dried up, and the fire hath devoured the pastures of the wilderness.

We are so dependent upon God in every thing, that no human wisdom or power can provide plenty, when he pleases to send scarcity: without his rain, the seed-corn must perish, the trees of the field must wither, and all our temporal joys must sink and die: and such judgments are emblems of the great day of retribution, which will soon come as a destruction from the Almighty. Even the brute creation groans under the effects of our sins; and they seem, in their way, to cry and complain to the Lord, that without their fault they are reduced to perish by hunger and thirst, through the wickedness of their oppressor and tyrant, man! How stupid then are sinners, who are insensible under such judgments, or only lament with a rebellious and unhumbled sorrow! We should never rest in any expressions of mere grief; but should also humble ourselves before God on account of those sins which have provoked his chastening rod. All our other sorrows should lead us to that "godly sorrow, which worketh repentance unto salvation not to be repented of." We ought chiefly to grieve under outward afflictions, when they deprive us of the comfort and benefit of divine ordinances, or when joy and gladness are cut off from the house of the Lord. No self-denial, humiliation, or continued self-abasement before God, should appear too great, as there is yet hope of forgiveness of our sins and deliverance from everlasting misery. The ministers of God especially should set the example, and use their influence, to promote a spirit of repentance and piety amongst the people. Public solemn seasons of fasting and humiliation, attended with the assembling together of the honourable of the land, as well as of the multitude, to confess their sins, to bow down before God, and to pour out their prayers unto him, are proper means of averting national calamities. And though
A description of the locusts, as a mighty army, sent forth to ravage the land, 11. Earnest calls to public fasting, prayer, and repentance, 12-17. Promises of manifold blessings, 18-27. Predictions of the pouring out of the Spirit, under the Gospel; and of subsequent events, 28-32.

BLOW ye the trumpet in Zion, sound an alarm in my holy mountain: let all the inhabitants of the land tremble: for the day of the Lord cometh, for it is nigh at hand.

2 A day of darkness and of gloominess, a day of clouds and of thick darkness, as the morning spread upon the mountains: a great people, and strong; there hath not been ever the like, neither shall be any more after it, even to the years of many generations.

3 A fire devourth before them; and behind them a flame burneth: the land is as the garden of Eden before them, and behind them a desolate wilderness; yea, and nothing shall escape them.

4 The appearance of them is as the appearance of horses; and as horsemen, so shall they run.

5 Like the noise of chariots on the tops of mountains shall they leap, like the noise of a flame of fire that devoureth the stubble, as a strong people set in battle-array.

6 Before their face the people shall be much pained: all faces shall gather blackness.

7 They shall run like mighty men; they shall climb the wall like men of war; and they shall march every one horror little short of despair. This darkness and horror would result from the invasion of a mighty nation, attended with such effects, as the Jews had never before witnessed, and such as would not occur again for many ages. The progress of this army would resemble that of a conjunction: the lands, on which they had not entered, appeared verdant and fruitful, even as the garden of Eden; but they would make such entire destruction wherever they went, as to leave every place behind them like a barren wilderness.

Ever the like. The locusts which plagued Egypt are described after the same manner. (Ex. xiv.) In both places we are to take it, as a proverbial expression, to set forth the extraordinary greatness of the judgment, and not to understand it too strictly, according to the grammatical sense of the words. (Luther.) (Marg. Ref.)

V. 4, 5. It hath been often observed, that locusts greatly resemble horses in the shape of their heads: the impetuosity of the progress made by these ravagers would be like that of horsemen; their noise heard at the distance of several miles, would be as tremendous as that of chariots of war rattling over the mountains, or like that of a vehement fire consuming combustibles with great crackling and fury; and their progress at the same time so regular, that they would resemble a well-disciplined army upon the march, or attacking the enemy. Many have with admiration observed this to be the case with the immense flights of locusts, which often ravage those eastern regions.

V. 6. Not paleness, which may be occasioned by sickness, or fainting, or slighter terror; but blackness, like that of the countenances of those who are expiring in convulsions, or whose blood is suspended from circulation by some inward or outward violence. The extremity of horror and anguish is intended.
on his ways, and they shall not break their ranks:
8 Neither shall one thrust another; they shall walk every one in his path:
and when they fall upon the sword, they shall not be wounded.
9 They shall run to and fro in the city; they shall run upon the walls, they shall climb up upon the houses; they shall enter in at the windows like a thief.
10 The earth shall quake before them; the heavens shall tremble: the sun and the moon shall be dark, and the stars shall withdraw their shining:
11 And the Lord shall utter his voice before his army: for his camp is very great: for he is strong that executeth his word: for the day of the Lord is great and very terrible: and who can abide it?
12 Therefore also now, saith the Lord, Turn ye even to me with all your heart, and with fasting, and with weeping, and with mourning:

V. 7-9. The particles of similitude here, and in the fourth and fifth verses, show that real locusts are described, and not the Assyrian army. (Hp. Newcome)
—This we lately saw, in our part of the country: for when swarms of locusts came, and filled the lower regions of the air, they flew in such order, by the divine appointment, and kept their places as exactly, as when several party-coloured stones are skilfully placed in a pavement so as not to be an hair's breadth out of their several ranks. Every place lies open to them, for they infect not only the fields and the fruits of the earth, but creep into cities, houses, and the most secret recesses. (Jerome in Lactant.)
17 Let the priests, the ministers of the Lord, weep between the porch and the altar, and let them say, Spare thy people, O Lord, and give not thine inheritance to be a reproach, as it is this day.

V. 12-14. From these predictions the Lord, by his prophet, took occasion to exhort the people to the only method in which they could hope to avert his judgments, or be recovered from the fatal effects of them. Let them turn to him with fasting, and weeping for their sins; let them not be satisfied with the customary tokens of humiliation, such as rending their garments, &c.; for this would be vain, except their hearts were broken in self-abasement, and self-abhorrence, godly sorrow, unfeigned contrition, and resolute separation from their sins. To encourage them thus to turn to the Lord and his service, and to bring themselves to renounce all the fruits of the earth, as a blessing for them, after the locusts had finished their depredations; out of which they might present before him a meat-offering and a drink-offering; that he might not lose the honour, nor they the comfort and benefit of their solemn worship.

who previously sought refuge in his mercy by penitent faith and prayer. The language here used may well be supposed descriptive of the destruction of Jerusalem, and the desolations of the land by the Chaldeans; and will have a literal accomplishment at the end of the world.

V. 17—18. The prophet exhorts the priests, not only to demonstrate their sympathy, and to be as zealous for the interests of the community, as a covenant people, in whatever means God should appoint for avert the calamities then impending, but to bring forth to the altar, as a sacrifice of acceptance, all that they could offer of the products of the earth; that is, the part of the produce which they should preserve for the use of the sanctuary. Here we have a beautiful description of what constitutes the essence of true penitence: and who knew whether he might not return to them as a nation, and avert the public calamities that were otherwise coming upon them? At least they might hope, that he would mitigate the severity of the judgment, and leave part of the fruits of the earth, as a blessing for them, after the locusts had finished their depredations; out of which they might present before him a meat-offering and a drink-offering; that he might not lose the honour, nor they the comfort and benefit of their solemn worship.
CHAPTER II.

21 " \( \textit{f} \) Fear not, O land; \( \textit{f} \) be glad and rejoice: \( \textit{f} \) for the Lord will do great things.

22 Be not \( \textit{f} \) afraid, ye beasts of the field: \( \textit{f} \) for the pastures of the wilderness do spring, \( \textit{f} \) for the tree beareth her fruit, \( \textit{f} \) and the fig-tree and the vine do yield their strength.

23 Be glad then, ye children of Zion, \( \textit{f} \) and \( \textit{f} \) rejoice in the Lord your God: for he hath given you \( \textit{f} \) the former rain \( \textit{f} \) moderately, \( \textit{f} \) and he will cause to come down for you the rain, the former rain, \( \textit{f} \) and the latter rain \( \textit{f} \) in the first month.

24 And \( \textit{f} \) the floors shall be full of wheat, and the fats shall overflow with wine and oil.

V. 15—17. (Notes, i. 14. Ez. xix. 10—15.) The priests and rulers were again, and more particularly and earnestly, excited to announce the observance of a solemn fast, to be kept as a holy day to the Lord. Let them convene the congregation of Israel into the courts of the temple, and prepare the people by external purifications and proper instructions, for the profitable solemnizing of the day. Not only the elders and the grown people, but even the children and the sucking infants, must be present, as a part of the congregation. And that the consideration of the calamities in which they would be involved, might the more affect the minds of their parents: newly married persons, forgetful of the concerns and satisfactions peculiar to their situation, must be wholly engaged in the public humiliation and lamentation of their people. The priests, as the ministers of God, were to take the lead: and standing between the porch of the temple and the altar of burnt-offering, where they might most conveniently be seen and heard, they were required to weep for the sins and troubles of the nation, and to beseech the Lord to spare his people and heritage, though deserving of punishment; and not to let them be utterly ruined by famine, and thus left enfeebled and destitute, to be reproached, insulted, and enslaved by idolaters; who would blasphemously inquire, What was become of Israel's God and Protector? This has been considered as an intimation, that other calamities, besides that of the locusts, were intended in these predictions.

V. 18—20. Whenever the elders, priests, and people of Israel should thus turn unto the Lord, they would find him jealous for the honour of that land, where his temple stood and his name was worshipped, and ready to rescue it from famine and the oppressions of idolaters; and he would be compassionate to the miseries of his people, though brought upon them by their sins. They would then receive encouraging answers to their prayers, assuring them of an abundant supply of all their wants, and of every thing conducing to the enjoyment of life; nor would he again suffer the heathen to insult over them. He would also drive away the vast army of locusts, which from the north had invaded the land, into the deserts betwixt the southern extremity of the Dead sea and the Mediterranean sea, where they should die: and no effect of their ravages should remain, except the stench occasioned by the putrefying of so immense a quantity of insects; though they had done and threatened such immense mischief. \( \textit{f} \) Jerome relates, that in his own time, the heaps of locusts which were driven by the winds into the sea, afterwards putrefied upon the shore, and so corrupted the air as to bring a great pestilence. (Lambert.) The locusts in Languedoc were about an inch in length, of a grey colour. The earth in some places was covered four inches thick with them, in the morning before the heat of the sun.

21—24. The land had been represented, by a bold figure, as mourning over its desolations, and the beasts as groaning, and even crying to the Lord, because of their sufferings, (i. 10. 18—20;) and here the promises of returning plenty and prosperity, are introduced by a poetical address to the land and to the cattle. (Marg. Ref.)—As the locusts had done great things in destroying the fruits of the earth, the Lord would do great things in ren-
25 And I will restore to you the years that the locust hath eaten, the cankerworm, and the caterpillar, and the palmerworm, my great army which I sent among you.

26 And ye shall eat in plenty, and be satisfied, and praise the name of the Lord your God, which hath dealt wondrously with you: and my people shall never be ashamed.

27 And ye shall know that I am in the midst of Israel, and that I am the Lord your God, and none else: and my people shall never be ashamed.

28 ¶ And it shall come to pass afterward, that I will pour out my Spirit upon all flesh; and your sons and your daughters shall prophesy, your old men shall dream dreams, your young men shall see visions:

29 And also upon the servants and upon the handmaids in those days will I pour out my Spirit.

30 And I will shew wonders in the heavens and in the earth, blood, and fire, and pillars of smoke.

31 The sun shall be turned into darkness, and the moon into blood, before the great and terrible day of the Lord come.

32 And it shall come to pass, that they that be left of all the nations which I cast out before you, because of them that pollute Jacob, shall come again upon you with eyes to see, and with heart to understand, and with ears to hear, and with their hands to take possession of the remnant whom the Lord shall call.

25-32. The great abundance of the plentiful years should replenish the granaries and store-houses, which had been emptied in the years of famine. The Lord’s ‘great army’ is a beautiful description, which runs through these two chapters. Every reader of taste must be struck with the poetic and sublime manner in which the prophecy is conducted. There is not a more splendid piece of poetry extant.

V. 25. This promise began to be accomplished on the day of Pentecost, when the Holy Spirit was poured out on the apostles, and on the assembled multitude, of whom great numbers were converted; and it was continued in the converting grace and supernatural gifts, conferred on the Jews and Gentiles through many nations. Then the sons and daughters of the Jews became prophets, and exercised many miraculous powers; both old and young men were favoured with prophetic dreams and visions; and even servants and handmaidens, though in a state of slavery, were made partakers of the sanctifying grace and the extraordinary gifts of the Holy Spirit. But it is predicted, that about that time God would begin to show signs of his awful displeasure against the Jewish nation; and that extraordinary appearances in the heavens and upon the earth, would be preludes of the approaching destruction of Jerusalem and the Jewish church and state, which would be attended with immense bloodshed, terrible conflagrations, and pillars of smoke, such as ascend from the flames of burning cities. Then would the sun, moon, and stars be darkened, or be turned into blood: this foretold either the tremendous appearances in the heavens which preceded these calamities; or the total unking of the Jewish constitution, the subversion of all rule and authority in church and state, and those horrid intestine convulsions and massacres, which made way for the final destruction of the city and temple; by the just judgment of God, who on that great and terrible day of vengeance poured his wrath on the devoted Jews by the hands of the Romans. But in the midst of all these calamities, there would be deliverance and salvation for all who should "call upon the name of the Lord." (This St. Paul explains of those who give themselves up unto Christ, and profess themselves his disciples. (Rom.) Neither is there any way, or means to escape the terribleness of this judgment, but by believing in the Lord Christ, and calling upon his name. For in the Church of God only shall salvation be had, and deliverance from the wrath to come, which salvation shall lie open, both to the believers of the Gentiles, and to the remnant of those Jews whom the Lord shall call." (Bp. Hall.) It is evident, that what is here spoken of "calling on the name of Jehovah," is repeatedly in the New Testament applied to "calling on the name of Christ." And it is remarkable, that those who embraced Christianity, and "honoured the Son even as they honoured the Father," separated from the unbelieving Jews before the siege of Jerusalem, and were preserved from the miseries here predicted: while the unbelieving Jews, though they professed to "call on the name of the Lord," were overwhelmed by them: for "he that honoureth not the Son, honoureth not the Father." He "that hath not the Son, hath not the Father," and the Supreme Being which is worshipped by those who refuse adoration to Emmanuel, is not the true God. "The God of Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob" is the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ; but an idol, the creature of vain man's reasonings and imaginations.
Prophecies of divine judgments to be executed upon the enemies of God's pro-

In the remnant, &c. This seems more immediately to point out the Jews who embraced Christianity in the primitive times: yet it may also include all, whether Jews or Gentiles, to the end of time, who shall be called to the fellowship of our Lord Jesus Christ. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—II.

If the alarm of approaching temporal judgments should be given to offending nations and churches, that men may tremble, and seek to avert the impending storm, surely the ministers of the Gospel should be very earnest in warning sinners to seek deliverance from the wrath to come! The day of judgment with its decisive consequences will soon arrive: but what a day of darkness and gloominess will that be to the inimical workers of wickedness! And how far will its terror exceed all that ever was experienced or imagined on earth! Yet those horrors will be but as the morning, or the entrance on, the subsequent endless state of misery and despair. Our business therefore here is to secure an interest in Jesus Christ, and his eternal salvation. The meanest executioners of the wrath of God can soon consume all our outward comforts, and turn an earthly paradise into a dreary wilderness. We can neither resist, flee away, nor shelter ourselves, when "the Lord musteth his host for the battle." What then will be the case, when the heavens and the "earth shall pass away with a great noise, the elements shall melt with fervent heat, and the sun, and moon, and stars shall for ever withdraw their shining?" Then "the Lord Jesus will be revealed in flaming fire, with his "mighty angels," to execute his threatened wrath; and who can abide that great and terrible day? All temporal calamities therefore should warn us to prepare for this final judgment.

V. 12—27.

So great is the mercy and grace of our God, that, instead of sternly saying to his rebellious subjects, "Depart from me," he invites, yea, commands them to turn unto him. But this must be done with our whole heart, in unreserved and unfeigned repentance, faith, and obedience, with self-abhorrence, hatred of sin, godly sorrow and humiliation, and mortification even to lawful satisfactions, whilst engaged about so important a concern. But fasting, weeping, and mourning, and every outward indication of self-abasement, though highly proper, may yet be delusive and hypocritical: so that a broken and contrite heart, is more pleasing to God, than rending garments, wearing sackcloth, and rolling in ashes; and the remission of sins that once were dear to us, is a better proof of repentance, than floods of tears, and most bitter wailings and lamentations. If we truly humble ourselves before God, we may also take encouragement from the assurance of his mercy and grace; "for he is slow to "anger, of great kindness, and ready to forgive." He will certainly save every believer from the final consequences of his transgressions; but it is not equally certain that he will prevent or remove the painful temporal consequences of them, or immediately speak peace to his conscience. Yet, who knoweth but he may thus return, and repent of the evil that was about to come upon us, and give us comfort when we forebode nothing but bitterness? Whatever the Lord gives or withholds or takes away, we should still count it a blessing to have an opportunity of attending on his ordinances; and that portion of our substance, which is employed in his immediate service, will be the source of the greatest comfort. Those who are in authority should use their influence in calling people to observe seasons of public fasting, humiliation, and prayer for national blessings, in times of peril or calamity: ministers ought to instruct the people how they may observe such seasons in a holy manner: men of superior rank should sanction them by their attendance on sacred ordinances: no
F

O

R, behold, in those days, and in that time, when I shall bring again
the captivity of Judah and Jerusalem, 2 I will also gather all nations, and will bring them down into the valley of Jehoshaphat, and will plead with them there for my people, and for my heritage Israel, whom they have scattered among the nations, and parted my land 3 And they have cast lots for my people, have divided my inheritance among them, the vile酬 glad not as God would, in, and do not return to him;
4 Yea, and what have ye to do with me? O Tyre, and Zidon, and all the coasts of Palestine? will ye render me two recompenses? and if ye recompense me, swiftiy and speedily will I return your recompense upon your own head; 5 Because ye have taken my silver and my gold, and have carried into your age, sex, or character, should be excepted; all private concerns should be postponed to the public duty; and when the ministers of God lead the service, with fervency and affection, and join weeping with their supplications, the people will be the more earnest in calling on the Lord to spare his heritage, that his enemies may not rejoice, as if he were not able or willing to protect his worshippers.

Hence it is that people who thus humbly and uprightly seek the Lord! he will be jealous for them and have compassion on them: he will plead their cause, avert his judgments, drive away their enemies, answer their prayers, and supply their wants; and the greatness of those things which have been done against them, shall only enhance their gratitude for the still greater things that the Lord will do for them. Indeed the sons of Zion can have no greater cause to fear, but they must still have a greater "to rejoice" and be glad in the Lord their God:" he "gives grace and glory, and no good thing will he withhold from those that walk uprightly." He gives us all our comforts, and enables us to use them with thankful hearts; and "though he cause grief, yet will he have compassion according to the multitude of his mercies." The wisdom, truth, and love of his dispensations towards us deserve our highest admiration: he makes us know by happy experience, that he dwelleth in the midst of us; and he will never leave his people to be ashamed of their condence in him.

V. 29—32.

We have at present no scriptural ground to expect that he will pour upon us or our children the extraordinary gifts of his Spirit, or that they shall see prophetic dreams and visions: yet we may hope and pray for the pouring out of his Spirit on us and on ours, as the Author of all holiness, wisdom, and consolation. No age or description of persons is excluded from this expectation; and the gifts of our ascended Redeemer are sufficient to render the poorest slaves, wise, rich, and happy. These sacred influences prepare the soul to meet the Lord: but the neglect or contempt of them shuts up the sinner under aggravated condemnation. The Gospel calls men in general to partake of these blessings, and of that salvation which is revealed and placed in the Church: and whosoever shall call upon the name of the Lord Jesus, as the Son of God and the Saviour of sinners, shall be delivered from the wrath to come. This is the happy case of that remnant of every age and people whom the Lord calleth by his regenerating

Spirit: all things shall work together for their good: they may look forward with comfort to the day when nature shall expire in convulsions, assured that then their eternal redemption shall be perfected. Let us therefore seek for and rejoice in this salvation; and let us still pray for the pouring out of the Spirit upon all flesh, in still greater abundance than in the primitive times, that the earth may be filled with truth and righteousness; encouraged by that ful-fulment of these prophecies and promises, which hath be-beyond doubt already taken place.

NOTES.

CHAP. III. V. 1. 1. The following prophecy relates to the latter times of the world, when upon their conversion God shall deliver the Jews from their oppressors, and restore them to their own land. Since all nations are summoned to answer the impeachment here mentioned, we may suppose the word Israel to comprehend the faithful in all ages: and then we may observe that the judgments denounced against the Church's enemies, are chiefly for their hatred and cruelty against his servants. (Luther.) The restoration of the Jews, and the final decisive victory of true religion over all opposers, are the events more especially foretold. (Note, Is. xxxiv. Ez. xxxvii, xxxviii. xxxix. Rer. xix.) It does not appear that these predictions at all referred to any of the judgments executed on the enemies of the Jews after the Babylonish captivity: but it is evident that they are not yet fully accomplished; and that they coincide with various other prophecies. (Marg. Ref.) The preceding chapters, as in the series of prophecy, to the establishment of Christianity, the destruction of Jerusalem, and the dispersion of the unbelieving Jews, was called "the captivity of Judah and Jerusalem," from which God will bring them back by their conversion to Christ; and this event will be attended, or followed, by the more complete calling of the Gentiles into the Church. At that period the Lord will gather, in his providence, all the nations which continue at enmity with his people, that by warning against them they may bring destruction on themselves, the valley of Jehoshaphat may either mean the valley in which the Lord destroyed the numerous enemies of the prince;
(2 Chr. xxv.) or, alluding to the word Jehoshaphat, which signifies the Lord hath judged, it may refer to the judgment which God will pronounce and execute on his enemies. Then and there he will plead the cause of his people, and avenge them upon those who had scattered them amongst the nations, and seized upon their land.
6 The children also of Judah and the children of Jerusalem, have ye sold into the hand of the Grecians, that ye might remove them further from their border.

7 Behold, I will raise them out of the place whither ye have sold them, and will return your recompence upon your own head:

8 And I will sell thy sons and thy daughters unto the children of Judah, and they shall sell them to the Sabeans, to a people far off for: for the Lord hath spoken it.

9 ¶ Proclaim ye this among the Gentiles; prepare war, wake up the mighty men, let all the men of war draw near; let them come up:

10 Beat your plowshares into swords, and your pruning-hooks into spears, let the weak say, I am strong.

11 ¶ Assemble yourselves, and come, all ye heathen, and gather yourselves together round about: thither shall cause thy mighty ones to come down, O LORD.

12 Let the heathen be awakened, and come up to the valley of Jehoshaphat: for there will I sit to judge all the heathen round about.

13 Put ye in the sickle, for the harvest is ripe: come, get ye down; for the press is full, the fat overflowing; for their wickedness is great.

14 Multitudes, multitudes in the valley of decision: for the day of the LORD is near in the valley of decision.

15 The sun and the moon shall be darkened, and the stars shall withdraw their shining.

16 The Lord also shall roar out of Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem; and the heavens and the earth shall shake: but the Lord will be the Hope of his people, and the Strength of the children of Israel.

17 So shall ye know that I am the LORD your God dwelling in Zion, my holy mountain; then shall Jerusalem be holy, and there shall be no strangers pass through her any more.

V. 3—8. These verses represent the indignities and cruelties, which have been exercised on the Jews and on the Church, in different ages; and which will at length be brought into the account: and whilst some special time of retribution is predicted, terror is spoken to all those in every age, who are guilty of such crimes. The enemies of the Jews took them captives and enslaved them: yet they valued them so little, that they made them the stake in games of chance; nay, they used to sell a boy or girl into perpetual bondage, for the hire of a harlot, or for wine to make them drunk! But what right had any of the oppressors of the Jews, or of the Church, (of which Tyre, Zidon, and the Philistines are mentioned, because of their vicinity to Canaan,) thus to intrude upon the Lord’s property? If they meant to retaliate on the Jews for the judgment which God had executed on them on their progenitors; he was determined speedily to return their recompense upon their own heads. They plundered his people to enrich themselves, or the temples of their idols; and they sold them to be conveyed into far distant nations: but the Lord intended to restore them from their dispersed state, and avenge them on their oppressors, to give his worshippers the ascendancy, and to enable them to reduce their foes to a state of similar debasement and misery. There are no events recorded in history, that entirely correspond with these predictions: perhaps the ruin of the Pagan Roman empire, which had destroyed Jerusalem and dispersed the Jews, might be adverted to; but the grand accomplishment seems to be yet in futurity, and the event alone can fully clear them up.

V. 9—17. This is a challenge publicly proclaimed to the enemies of the Jews and of the Church, to excite themselves and each other to a combined assault. Let not only such as had been trained up to arms, draw near; but let the husbandmen change their instruments of tillage into swords and spears; let the feeble and timid assume courage and affect strength; and let the heathen collect all their forces to battle against the worshippers of Jeshova. The mighty ones, whom the Lord was entertained to cause to come down, may either mean those potentates, that he would bring down as appointed to the slaughter; or those that he would employ as the executioners of his vengeance. Some explain it of angels, as ministers of his vengeance. His enemies would come down to battle, expecting victory and triumph; but he would bring them down as criminals to be judged, condemned, and executed. As their wickedness had been great, and they were ripe for judgment; the Lord would order his angels, or his people, to put in the sickle, to reap the harvest, and to gather and tread the vintage which would be very copious. Immense multitudes would be collected into the valley of decision or judgment, or threshing; where their cause would be decided and their doom pronounced, and executed in the approaching day of the Lord, which would be attended with most alarming prodigies. The Lord would roar against them out of Zion, as they were to be punished for their hatred to his cause, and their injuries to his people. Then the whole visible creation would be thrown into the most violent commotions, as if the final dissolution of all things were come; but in the midst of all these terror, Lord would enable his people to hope and rejoice in his mercy, truth, and powerful protection, and thus strengthen them against their fears and temptations. They should know and experience his gracious presence in his Church; and he would render her holy as well as secure; and preserve her from the injuries and intrusions of heathens, infidels, and such as were strangers to the power of godliness. (Note, 1, 2.) Nothing took place, in the interval between the captivity and the coming of Christ, either in respect of the nations that fought against the Jews, or the purity and peace of Jerusalem, at all answerable to this energetic language. Strangers, one after another, took Jerusalem, and even polluted the temple: and after the coming of Christ, the Romans destroyed both, and they have ever since been “trodden under foot of the Gentiles.” But the Scriptures referred to in the margin, show that almost all the prophets foretold the same final victory of the Church over all the nations that oppose it; about the time when the Jews shall be converted, and restored to their own land, and just before the millennium, when “the kingdoms of this world shall become the kingdoms of our Lord and of his Christ.” The sublime description cannot but lead the reader to think of the end of the world, the day of judgment, and the heavenly Jerusalem: but events preceding the millennium are evidently predicted.

V. 18—21. At the time here foretold, a most abundant communication of divine influences will attend the administration of God’s ordinances; there will be a rapid increase of converts, who will grow in grace, fruitfulness, and consolation in an extraordinary manner; and the Gospel will spread very speedily to the remotest corners of the earth. These events are predicted under significant emblems: it will be, as if the mountains should of themselves distil wine and milk in abundance; and every part of the land should be well watered, and exceedingly productive. That spiritual blessings are principally to be understood, appears from the prediction, “that a fountain should spring forth of the house of the Lord, and water the valley of Shittim.” (Notes, Ezek. xlviii.) So the holy waters in Ezekiel are described, as running—“as far as the Dead sea, the east part of which bordered on the country of Moab, within whose border was the valley of Shittim.” (Num. xxv. 1.) (Lowth.) In this verse, (18) either the times of the Messiah are described, or we have a description of Jerusalem, after its final restoration, when a golden age will commence among its inhabitants, and when the knowledge of God and his Christ, shall be second to none, be widely diffused from it.

—Egypt, (19.) There shall be a signal difference between Egypt and Idumea, whose people shall be lost in the masse of other nations, and whose sovereignty shall not be restored; and Judah and Jerusalem, whose inhabitants shall be reinstated after their captivity; and on their future return, shall dwell for ever in their land. (Lowth.) The word blood, (21) may signify pollution in general. But the words chiefly import, that God will pardon the Jews the great crime of shedding the blood of Christ, upon their sincere repentance; the guilt of which they had imprecated on themselves and their posterity; (Matt. xxvii. 25;) and had felt the effects of God’s displeasure on that account, for many ages. (Lowth.) The spread of the Gospel and the progress of the work will be attended by the ruin of such nations and persons as shall persist in opposing them: on whom vengeance will be taken for all the violence and persecutions that they have committed. From this period the Church will continue in a state of peace and prosperity to the end of time: the Lord will then purify her from all the errors, abuses, and pollutions, which have hitherto defiled and deformed her. For he dwelleth in Zion, among his people, and will at length render his cause triumphant.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—6.

The appointed period of the troubles to which the Church and the believer are exposed, is frequently a day of vengeance on their enemies and persecutors: and all who have scattered, plundered, or injured the servants of God, will certainly be called to a severe account. Whilst men spend upon one vice what they gain by another, they rapidly treasure up wrath against the day of wrath, and show the atrociousness of their impiety and profligacy. Enmity to God and persecution of his people have generally been connected with the most degrading sensuality. But how wonderful is it, that men can sport with the miseries of their own species! can give a momentary worthless gratification, a decided preference to the most important interests of their neighbours, and can subject them to the extremity of hardship and anguish, without reluctance, from such vile motives! The Lord will review all these infamous transactions in due time: he will utterly disregard all the compensations, that oppressors would make for their crimes, by ostentatious liberality or hypocritical shews of piety; and their opposition to his will can avail nothing; but swiftly and suddenly will he return their recompenence upon their own heads. He will make them refund their treasures, which they have gotten by sacrilege, persecution, oppression, and cruelty; or by selling his rational, creatures, or his worshippers, for slaves as cattle, tearing them from their beloved relatives, and removing them far from their borders. They cannot be sure, but that they may fall into the hands of those whom they have thus cruelly injured: and perhaps their wrongs may be retaliated on them or their children; and their ill-gotten estates may descend with this encumbrance on their heirs.

V. 9—20.

Most dreadful, yet deserved punishment, will certainly be inflicted on all impenitent oppressors, and sinners of every description, when the Lord shall call the nations to his tribunal. As men ripen for his judgments, they are cut down like the harvest by the executioners of his vengeance: and the whole multitude will shortly be assembled to hear the righteous sentence denounced against them. He, who now reigns on a throne of grace, as a merciful Saviour, will then avenge himself on the despisers of his grace, and the opposers of his cause; and his wrath from mount Zion will be more tremendous, than that from mount Sinai. But amidst all the trials of life, in the hour of death, and in the day of judgment, the Lord will be the Hope and Confidence of his people, and the Support and Strength of the children of Israel. Various degrees of peace, prosperity, and purity have been, and will be, found in the Church on earth; and we should look forward in hope and with earnest prayers, for those glorious days, which are foretold: but in heaven alone will perfect holiness and felicity be enjoyed. No strangers will enter the Church triumphant, to defile those happy regions; no sin, temptation, or infirmity will then disturb our peace: for the Lord will fully cleanse every one of the blessed company previous to their admission; that he may manifest his presence and love with them for evermore. May we then be numbered with his saints in glory everlasting.
THE BOOK OF AMOS.

Though this prophet was of Tekoa, a city in the tribe of Judah; (2 Chr. x. 5, 6;)—yet he dwelt in Israel, and prophesied chiefly against that kingdom. He was a shepherd, and herdsman, and a gatherer of sycamore-fruit, (vii. 14;) but rural employments were general and honourable among his countrymen. However, in the words, "I was no prophet, neither was I the son of a prophet," he seems to distinguish himself from those who were educated in the schools founded by Samuel. He borrows many images from the scenes in which he had been engaged; and gives them force and dignity, by the eloquence and grandeur of his manner. We shall find in him many affecting and pathetic, many elegant and sublime passages. No prophet hath more magnificently described the Deity; or more gravely rebuked the luxurious; or reproved injustice and oppression with greater warmth and a more generous indignation. An eminent judge and master of style, (Bp. Lowth,) pronounces him nearly equal to the very first prophets in elevation of sentiment and loftiness of spirit; and scarcely inferior to any in splendour of diction and beauty of composition. (Bp. Newcome.)—Amos was contemporaneous with Hosea: but it is supposed by the most competent judges, that he began to prophesy before him, and continued in his office a much shorter time. He has been confounded with Amoz, the father of Isaiah: but the names in the original are very different. He delivered prophecies against several of the neighbouring nations, and against Judah; but he exercised his ministry chiefly in Israel. In coincidence with the other prophets, he foretold the captivity and dispersion of the whole house of Israel; their preservation in this dispersed state, as a distinct people; the coming and kingdom of Christ; the conversion of the Gentiles, the final triumphs of the Church, and the future restoration of Israel: and that part of these predictions, which has been most wonderfully accomplished, is a sure pledge for the fulfillment of all the rest. Two of his prophecies are expressly quoted in the New Testament; (Com. v. 26, 27. with Acts vii. 42, 43. and ix. 11, 12. with Acts xv. 15—17;) in both of which his prophetical character is strongly attested.

B. C. 795.

CHAP. I.

Some account of the prophet, and of the time when he prophesied, 1, 2. The judgments of God on Syria, 3—9. Philistia, 6—8. Tyre, 9, 10. Edom, 11, 12; and Ammon, 13—15.

NOTES.

CHAP. I. V. 1. There is no certainty in any of the conjectures that have been formed concerning this prophet; and we know nothing more of him, than what is intimated in his prophecy, (vii. 14, 15.) The former years of Uzziah coincided with the times of Jeroboam, the grandson of Jehu. (Note, Hosea i.) We find elsewhere, that a terrible earthquake happened during the reign of Uzziah, and it is recorded by Josephus, and is a general tradition among the Jews, that it took place, when Uzziah invaded the priestly office, and was smitten with leprosy. Yet, as Josiah, who managed the affairs of the kingdom when Uzziah was smitten with leprosy, was not born when Jeroboam died; this opinion is worthy of little

B. C. 795.
2 And he said, "The Lord will roar from Zion, and utter his voice from Jerusalem; and the habitations of the shepherds shall mourn, and the top of Carmel shall wither.

3 Thus saith the Lord; For three transgressions of Damascus, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof: because they have threshed Gilead with threshing instruments of iron.

4 But I will send a fire into the house of Hazael, which shall devour the palaces of Ben-hadad.

5 I will break also the bar of Damascus, and cut off the inhabitant from the plain of Aven, and him that holdeth the sceptre from the house of Eden: and the people of Syria shall go into captivity unto Kir, saith the Lord.

6 Thus saith the Lord; For three transgressions of Gaza, and for four, I will turn away the punishment thereof: because they delivered up the whole captivity to Edom, and remembered not the brotherly covenant.

7 But I will send a fire on the wall of Gaza, which shall devour the palaces thereof.

8 And I will cut off the inhabitant from Ashdod, and him that holdeth the sceptre from Ashkelon, and I will turn mine hand against Ekron: and the remnant of the Philistines shall perish, saith the Lord God.

9 Thus saith the Lord; For three transgressions of Tyrus, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof: because they delivered up the whole captivity to Edom, and remembered not the brotherly covenant:

10 But I will send a fire on the wall of Tyrus, which shall devour the palaces thereof.

11 Thus saith the Lord; For three transgressions of Edom, and for four, I will turn away the punishment thereof: because they have carried away captive the whole captivity, to deliver them up to Edom:

12 But I will carry away Edom, in the day of punishment; saith the Lord."

credit. The earthquake, however, seems to have been very tremendous; and it is mentioned as such by Zechariah several ages afterwards. When the prophet collected his predictions, he added this respecting the time when the first was delivered.

V. 2. (Marg. Ref.) Joel uses nearly the same expressions, as those with which Amos begins his prophecy. In Jerusalem and on mount Zion the Lord dwelt among his people, on a mercy-seat; but he would thence denounce and execute judgments, more terrible than the roaring of a lion, on his enemies, and especially on idolatrous and hypocritical Jews and Israelites. For by a drought he was about to desolate the countries, so much as sparing the habitations of the shepherds, or leaving any verdure on the most fertile mountains and regions.

V. 3-5. The prophet first began with denouncing judgment against the three oppressors of his people. Damascus was the capital of Syria. Three and four, or seven transgressions, do not mean an exact number of offences, (Marg. Ref.) but intimate that in many things the persons spoken of had provoked the wrath of God, and were ripe for vengeance: and one offence is mentioned as more aggravated than the others, which was the immediate cause of their calamities. This, in the case of the Syrians, was their oppression of the inhabitants of Gilead beyond Jordan, whom they treated with such great cruelty, as if they had threshed them with threshing instruments of iron: or perhaps they actually tortured, in this inhuman manner, such of them as fell into their hands. (Marg. Ref.) This alludes to the threshing wain, described by Isaiah, (xlii. 15.) It moved on serrated wheels, and at once forced out the grain, and cut the straw. (Bp. Newcome.) Hence the word is used for the weak being crushed by the mighty. (Lomth.) Therefore, will not turn away the punishment thereof: because they carried away captive the whole captivity, to deliver them up to Edom:

V. 6-8. Gaza, Ashdod, Ashkelon, and Ekron, were the principal cities of Philistia; probably Gath was at this time in the possession of the kings of Judah. The Philistines had added to their other crimes a recent instance of cruel revenge against the people of God. On some occasion, they had taken captive a multitude of Jews or Israelites, and had sold the whole company as slaves to the Edomites, who would be sure to treat them with the utmost rigour. The Lord would therefore no longer delay to punish them according to their deserts; but would destroy their cities, dethrone their princes, and extirpate the remnant of the nation. This was executed afterwards by the Assyrians, Jews, and Chaldeans.

V. 9, 10. The Tyrians had forgotten the brotherly covenant, that had subsisted between David and Solomon kings of Judah, and Hiram king of Tyre; and other treaties of amity, which had been entered into for their reciprocal advantage: and they had been guilty of great cruelty to the nation, after the example of the Philistines. This provoked God to send those judgments upon them, which were afterwards inflicted by Nebuchadnezzar and Alexander the Great. (Notes, Is. xxiii. Jer. xlvii. Ez. xxvi. xxvii.) transgressions of Edom, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof, because he did pursue his brother with the sword, and did cast off all pity, and his anger did tear perpetually, and he kept his wrath for ever.

But I will send a fire upon Tekoa, which shall devour the palaces of Bozrah.

Thus saith the Lord; For three transgressions of Moab, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; because they have tattled up the women with child of Gilead, that they might enlarge their border:

But I will kindle a fire in the wall of Rabbah, and it shall devour the palaces thereof, with shouting in the day of battle, with a tempest in the day of the whirlwind:

And their king shall go into captivity, and their princes into captivity; they shall be troubled for Moab, except the little ones among two years old, and many women shall be opened up among them.

V. 13-15. The Ammonites, to the east of Gilead, were as cruel to the inhabitants of that district, as the Assyrians to the north had been. Their enmity and avarice had induced them to be guilty of the most horrid barbarities, in order to extirpate the people, and to enlarge their borders. This was about to bring down the vengeance of God on Rabbah, their capital city, which would be taken by storm, and destroyed suddenly as by a whirlwind; and this would be succeeded by the captivity of the king and his princes.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The Lord hath often chosen the instruments of his work in the sacred ministry and in important services from inferior stations in society: and they need not be ashamed of their mean extraction or former low occupations, and should not be reproached on account of them, provided they faithfully discharge the duties to which they are called. The neglect of warnings from God frequently precedes the execution of his severe judgments; and whilst, from his throne of grace, he delighteth to exercise mercy to the humble believer, he will thence denounce and execute the severest vengeance on his enemies. He bears long with transgressors; but he will no longer turn away the punishment of those who have filled up the measure of their guilt. Cruelty to the helpless, and persecution of his people, ripen nations and individuals for destruction with great rapidity. His wrath consumes flourish ing families and magnificent palaces, like a tremendous fire: it breaks down the gates of fortified cities, de populates fertile regions, dethrones princes, and reduces potent nations to captivity and slavery. Thus oppressors are visited in rotation, according to the degree of their cruelty, treachery, violation of relative duties, or contempt of sacred treaties; or to that of their enmity and oppression. They shall suffer judgment without mercy, who have showed no mercy, and such as cast off pity for their brethren, and those whose wrath and revenge have raged perpetually against them, have no right to expect any mercy from God. Yet what cruelty will not men commit, to increase their estates! And what villainy will not ambitious princes countenance, in order to enlarge their territories? But the day of retribution will come on such inhuman monsters, as an overwhelming tempest and an irresistible whirlwind: and what will they then do? or whither will they flee from the vengeance of God, and from the devouring flame of his incensed justice?

NOTES.

CHAP. II. V. 1. Because, &c. The Lord noticed this expression of impotent revenge of the Moabites, against the dead body of an idolatrous prince, and assigned it as a reason of the severe judgments that he was about to inflict on that people.
CHAPTER II.

4 ¶ Thus saith the Lord; ¶ For three transgressions of Judah, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; ¶ because they have despised the law of the Lord, and have not kept his commandments, ¶ and their lies caused them to err, ¶ after which their fathers have walked:

5 But I will send a fire upon Judah, and it shall devour the palaces of Jerusalem.

6 ¶ Thus saith the Lord; ¶ For three transgressions of Israel, and for four, I will not turn away the punishment thereof; ¶ because they sold the righteous for silver, and the poor for a pair of shoes;

7 That pant after the dust of the earth on the head of the poor, ¶ and turn aside the way of the meek: ¶ and a man and his father go in unto the same girl;

V. 2, 3. (Notes, Is. xv. xvi. Jer. xlviii. Marg. Ref.) The judge seems to mark out the principal magistrate or ruler: for there is no mention of a king, in the prophecies against Moab; though the nation was governed by a king, in the days of Jehoshaphat, king of Judah. (2 Kings iii. 4, 26.)

V. 4. The Jews were not indicted for any particular outrage, against the dictates of humanity or natural conscience, but for their contempt of the law and authority of God, who had committed to them his sacred oracles. Despising his worship, ordinances, and commandments, they hearkened to their false teachers, and worshipped idols, which were vanity and lies. ¶ Seeing the Gentiles ¶ were thus punished, Judah, which was so far inferior,¶ strauched in the Lord's will, might not think to escape. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 6—8. After the prophet had given a general warning to the surrounding nations and to Judah; he more particularly, in the name of God, addressed the Israelites, to whom he was especially sent. They also had filled up, or were about to fill up, the measure of their sins, and the Lord would avert from them the merited punishment. Several atrocious crimes were charged on them, some of which were sanctioned by the authority and example of the rulers. The smallest bribe, even the value of a pair of shoes, would induce the magistrates to give up a poor man to the will of his merciless oppressor, to be cast into prison, reduced to slavery, or put to death; though his cause and character were most evidently righteous; nay, perhaps for that very reason! The least property of a poor man, though scarcely more valuable than the dust of the earth that fell on his head, excited their covetousness, and they panted after it till they had got it from him: or, as some render the clause, ¶ They tread down the heads of the poor into the dust of the earth. ¶ Thus they perverted the cause of such as were too weak, timid, or gentle, to resist their oppressions. At the same time they were equally regardless of the divine law, and even of common decency, in their sensual indulgences; for both the father and his son would cohabit with the same woman, to scandal of religion; when the Gentiles themselves would not allow a man to marry his father's wife. (Marg. Ref.) (Intered of restoring, according to the law, the garments of the poor, when taken as pledges, they made use of them, especially when they prostituted themselves before their idols; when they feasted, or slept, or committed abominations before their altars; and the wine, which they poured out as libations, or drank in their idolatrous feasts, was received as a bribe for the condemnation of innocent persons, or as a fine unjustly levied upon them! The word rendered their god, may be translated their gods. Either the golden calves, or other idols, are evidently meant.

V. 9—12. The peculiar favours, that the Lord had shown to Israel, aggravated the guilt of their iniquities and idolatries. He had destroyed before their fathers the gigantic Amorites, and the other formidable inhabitants of the land, on purpose to put them in possession of it. Not only were some individuals among these nations, of vast stature and strength, and the whole collective body of them resembled a deep rooted and strong oak, which the Lord, for Israel's benefit destroyed, root, branch, and fruit, together. This was only the continuation of his former favours to that nation, in delivering them from the Egyptians, and preserving them in the wilderness. He provided himself also greatly honoured them, and prepared for their spiritual

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

In what varied and horrid forms do the malignant passions of the human heart break forth, on different occasions! But the Lord keeps an exact account of the conduct of ungodly men even towards each other; and he will punish every expression of a vindictive and cruel disposition, towards the living or the dead. They who insult over the fallen or the miserable, may expect to be insulted over, perhaps when in extreme agony; and to die "with tumult and shouting and with the sound of a trumpet," and judges and princes, when ringleaders in wickedness, may have the pre-eminence of more aggravated misery than their subjects. But it is a small thing for those, "to whom are committed the oracles of God," to avoid the gross enormities of benighted heathens; without such crimes, they may fill up a large measure of guilt, and ripen apace for vengeance, "by despising the law of the Lord, and not keeping his commandments," and by preferring their own imaginations or inclinations to his holy truths, ordinances, and precepts. False doctrines, delusive superstitions, idolatries, and atrocious violations of God's word, have often been perpetuated by tradition in the visible church; and one generation after another has "erred through the lies, after which their fathers have walked," till the wrath of God have burned like fire, to consume even the palaces of Jerusalem. When known crimes are deliberately ventured upon for worldly gain, men will by degrees perpetrate the basest villainies for the lowest recompense, and will become callous to all the miseries of the poor: may, they will take pleasure in trampling on the righteous and the meek, out of contempt and enmity to their characters! Such nominal Christians will grudge the poor servant, labour and mechanic the smallest advantage or indulgence, and eagerly pursue every injurious method of extorting their little from them, to increase their own abundance. Injustice and rapacity are generally accompanied with sensuality and licentiousness, and lead to impiety, insidelity, or abominable idolatry. But no wrongs will be so fatal to the injurer, as those that are done to the poor and meek, who cannot, or will not, avenge themselves.

—When the obligations are considered, which profess Christians have received from God in his providence; and by his word, ministers, and ordinances, and the good examples set before them; it must be evident, that their crimes are far more aggravating than similar practices of ignorant Pagans. But they, who hate self-denial and piety themselves, will commonly attempt to seduce such as profess them, either to renounce or disgrace their profession: too many, that seemed to run well, have thus been led into those "worldly lusts which war against the soul," and as "every one that doeth evil, hateth the light," we need not wonder at the pains which wicked men take to silence, intimidate, or corrupt the ministers of God. Thus they add obstinacy to iniquity, and do the work of Satan, as well as that of the fallen children of Adam. When this becomes the general character of churches or nations, it cannot be expected that the Lord will any longer endure them; but they will be given up to complicated misery, notwithstanding all their idolized power, courage or resources; nor can individuals, who profess, and thus disgrace, the Gospel, escape the future wrath of an offended God.

"And he that is courageous among the mighty shall flee away naked in that day, saith the Lord."
CHAPTER III.

HEAR this word that the Lord hath spoken against you, O children of Israel, against the whole family which brought up from the land of Egypt, saying,

2 You only have I known of all the families of the earth: therefore will I punish you for all your iniquities.

3 Can two walk together, except they be agreed?

4 Will a lion roar in the forest, when he hath no prey? will a young lion cry out of his den, if he have taken nothing?

5 Can a bird fall in a snare upon the earth, where no gin is for him? shall one take up a snare from the earth, and have taken nothing at all?

6 Shall a trumpet be blown in the city, and the people not be afraid? shall there be evil in a city, and the Lord hath not done it?

7 Surely the Lord God will do nothing, but he revealeth his secret unto his servants the prophets.

The lion hath roared, who will not fear? the Lord God hath spoken, who can but prophesy?

9 ¶ Publish in the palaces at Ashdod, and in the palaces in the land of Egypt, and say, Assemble yourselves upon the mountains of Samaria, and behold.

NOTES.

CHAP. III. V. 1—3. This chapter begins another message from God, which was addressed, noticed, and favoured by him, in such a manner as no other people had been; especially in having his oracles and ordinances amongst them, and being admitted into a covenant-relation to him as his worshippers. But instead of being, on that account, convited at in their wickedness, his honour required that they should be punished with distinguished severity. They could not reasonably expect to continue in friendship and peace with God, and under his protection, whilst their conduct was directly contrary to his holy law. Without coincidence in judgment, inclinations, and pursuits, men cannot be intimately united in friendship, or live together in harmony and comfort. They, therefore, who do not count the Lord worthy of all love, honour, worship, and obedience, do not love his law, regard not his service as liberty and felicity, dislike his way of saving sinners, and seek not his glory, cannot walk together with him in his ordinances, commandments, and providence, Notions, forms, sects, or outward conduct, cannot supply the want of the proximity to God, which must be derived from the regenerating grace of the Holy Spirit. (Note, Gen. v. 22—24.) Can two go together, except they meet by appointment? As a journey, in which two engage, supposes a settled meeting; so the denouncing of God's designs by his prophets shows that he has m. do himself known to them. (Bp. Newcome.) Others seem to put the same construction on this verse; and the context rather favours it. Yet it does not appear how the prophet's mission could thus be proved, till his predictions were accomplished; and certainly the instruction, of the preceding interpretation, is very important, and accord is with the plain meaning of the words, and the general tenour of Scripture.

V. 4—8. These animated interrogations were intended to convince the people that they had cause for alarm, and should earnestly seek to avert the threatened wrath of God.

Vol. III.—No. 23.
11 I have sent among you the pestilence after the manner of Egypt: your young men have I slain with the sword, and have taken away your horses; and I have made the stink of your camps come up unto your nostrils: yet have ye not returned unto me, saith the Lord.

12 Therefore thus will I do unto thee, O Israel: and because I will do this unto thee, prepare to meet thy God, O Israel.

13 For, lo, he that formeth the mountains, and createth the wind, and declareth unto man what is his thought, that maketh the morning darkness, and treadeth upon the high places of the earth, The Lord, the God of hosts, is his name.
CHAPTER V.

A lamentation over Israel, 1—3. Exhortations to seek God, with promises, instructions, and rebukes, 4—15. The judgments of God on the scornful and presumptuous, 16—20. He rejects their hypocritical services, and predicts their captivity, 21—27.

I heard the word which the Lord spake unto me saying,

2 The virgin of Israel is fallen; she shall no more rise: she is forsaken upon her land: there is none to raise her up.

3 For thus saith the Lord God; The city that went out by thousand shall leave an hundred, and that which went forth by an hundred shall leave ten, to the house of Israel.

4 For thus saith the Lord God; I seek ye, and ye shall live: 5 But seek not Bethel, nor enter into Gilgal, and pass not to Beer-sheba: for Gilgal shall surely go into captivity, and Bethel shall come to nought.

6 Seek the Lord, and ye shall live: lest he break out like fire in the house of Joseph, and devour it, and there be none to quench it in Bethel.

7 Ye who turn judgment to wormwood, and leave off righteousness in the earth,

8 Seek him that maketh the seven stars and Orion, and turneth the shadow of death into the morning, and calleth the day dark with night: call them the waters of the sea, and poureth them out upon the face of the earth: The Lord is his name:

9 That strengtheneth the spoiled with the strong, so the house of Israel shall come against the fortress.

10 They hate him that rebuketh in the gate, and they abhor him that speaketh uprightly.

NOTES.

CHAP. V. V. 1—3. The prophet bemoans the state of Israel, as dead and irrecoverably lost. Those cities, or kingdoms, which never were conquered, are called Virgin. She is forsaken, like an infant that is exposed, or fallen on the ground, and hath none to take it up. (Lawk.) God would forsake the people; and there would be none able to raise them from their ruined condition, or to prevent their being carried away into captivity by the Assyrians. They would soon be so diminished and enfeebled by intestine convulsions and foreign invasions, that their cities would not be able to furnish more than a tenth part of their former number of soldiers; and so they would be utterly unable to resist the power of the Assyrian invaders.

V. 4. Notwithstanding all these denunciations, the Israelites would have nothing to blame for their ruin, except their own obstinacy in rebellion. Still the Lord assured them, that if they would seek him, they should live, and be preserved from their enemies; that is, if they sought his favour and protection, by repentance, faith and prayer, and by returning to his worship and service. And any individuals, who thus sought him, would save their souls alive; and might perhaps be rescued from the general ruin of the nation. But they must not imagine, that going to worship the calves at Beth-el, or Gilgal, or Beer-sheba, (which probably was in the hands of the kings of Israel at that time,) would avail them any thing. All the worship and sacrifices presented in those places were an abomination: and they must protest against them, and seek the Lord according to his word. For Beth-el and Gilgal, and their inhabitants, idols, priests, and worshippers, would fall into the hands of their enemies; and none of them would be able to avert or to quench the fire of God's indignation, which was about to devour the house of Joseph, or the kingdom of Israel, of which Ephraim and Manasseh formed a principal part. The Lord shall become Aton, or vanity. The house of God was become the house of idols, and would soon be utterly ruined. The idol you worship will not be able to deliver you, but will itself be involved in the common calamity. (Lawk.)

V. 7—9. The rulers of Israel were here particularly addressed: their iniquity rendered their judicial proceedings a source of oppression and misery; and they had left off all regard to justice, as well as to religion, throughout the land. Thus they provoked that glorious God, whose favour they should have sought; even Him who had created the stars in their constellations, was disposed to have a great influence on the seasons, for rain or drought, for plenty or scarcity. For he could as easily raise men from the depth of misery to felicity, or cast them down from the summit of prosperity into distress and desolation, as he changes the darkness of the night into the brightness of the day into the dawn of the evening. He could again pour the waters of the ocean upon the earth, and cause a second deluge, if he saw good; for he is the eternal, self-existent, and all-sufficient JE OVAH. He could even give strength to a few plundered and dispirited captives, to vanquish the mightiest conquerors, or to take the most strongly fortified cities. What then had his enemies to expect, but inevitable destruction?
11 Forasmuch therefore as your heart is hardened, and ye take from him burdens of wheat: 'ye have built houses of hewn stone, but ye shall not dwell in them; ye have planted pleasant vineyards, but ye shall not drink of wine of them.

12 For* I know your manifold transgressions and your mighty sins: 'I afflict you justly, they 'take a bribe, and they turn aside the poor in the gate from their right.

13 Therefore the prudent shall keep silence in that time; for it is an evil time.

14 Seek good, and not evil, that ye may live; and so the Lord, the God of hosts, shall be with you, as ye have spoken.

15 Hate the evil, love the good, and establish judgment in the gate: it may be that the Lord God of hosts will be gracious unto the remnant of Joseph.

16 Therefore, 'the Lord, the God of hosts, shall be in all streets; and they shall say in all the highways, Alas! alas! and they shall call the husbandman to mourning, and such as are skilful of lamentation to wailing.

17 And in all vineyards shall be wailing: for I will pass through thee, saith the Lord.

18 Woe unto you that desire the day of the Lord to that it should be for you! the day of the Lord is darkness, and no light.

19 As if a man did flee from a lion, and a bear met him: or went into the house, and leaned his hand on the wall, and a serpent bit him.

20 Shall not the day of the Lord be darkness and not light? even very dark, and no brightness in it!
CHAPTER V.

21 ¶ I hate, I despise your feast-days, and I will not smell in your solemn assemblies.

22 Though ye offer me burnt-offerings and your meat-offerings, I will not accept them: neither will I regard the peace-offerings of your fat beasts.

23 Take thou away from me the noise of thy songs; for I will not hear the melody of thy viols.

24 But let judgment run down as waters, and righteousness as a mighty stream.

25 Have ye offered unto me sacrifices and offerings in the wilderness forty years, O house of Israel?

26 But ye have borne the tabernacle of your Moloch and your images, which ye made for yourselves.

27 Therefore will I cause you to go into captivity beyond Damascus, saith the LORD, whose name is The God of hosts.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—13.

Pious minds will often be constrained to lament over the corruptions and calamities of the visible Church: for if professors of religion provoke God to forsake them, they have none to raise them up from their fallen state. But the true Church, though often distressed and apparently diminished, still maintains its ground, and will again be replenished. Whilst the Judge standeth even at the door, ready to execute vengeance on evil-doers, he still proclaims, mercy to those who will accept of it in his way: but men often expect deliverance, by such idolatrous superstitious forms as only ensure condemnation: and whilst they refuse to seek the Lord, and to come to him by Jesus Christ, that they may live; the fire of divine indignation breaks forth upon them, and none of their devices or teachers can quench it. No man can reasonably disregard the wrath or favour of that God, who orders all things in heaven and earth as he pleases. He destroys countries by drought or fire, by deluges or hostile invaders, in an irresistible manner. He can envelope men in natural or spiritual darkness, or involve them in terror and despair; or he can give light, joy, and prosperity, as he sees good: and whilst oppressors turn judgment into wormwood, and leave off righteousness in the earth; they forget that the Lord can strengthen the spoiled against the strong, and execute vengeance on them by the hands of the poor outcasts whom they despise. But hardened oppressors can seldom be induced to fear the wrath or seek the favour of God: they hate the light, and hate the preachers, who speak not good of them, but evil, and rebuke their crimes as openly as they commit them. Intent on enriching and indulging themselves, they trample on the poor, and iniquitously, as well as unmercifully, deprive them of their hard-earned pitance, that themselves may riot in sensuality and magnificence. But the Lord noticeth all their affliction of the just, and all their bribery, peculation, and perversion of law and equity; and he will soon terminate their prosperity and oppression together. It is, however, generally prudent for men to keep silence in such evil times, and to leave the matter with the Lord; lest improper meddling should render a bad condition still worse.

V. 14—27.

The ministers of Christ must speak, whatever they ven-CHAP. VII.

The judgments of grasshoppers and of fire are accursed by the prayer of Amos, 1-6. By a wall and a plumb-line is shown the strict justice of God in Israel’s punishment, 7-9. Amaziah, the priest, accuses Amos to Jeroboam, and forbids him to prophecy at Beth-el, 10-13. Amos shows how God had called him to prophecy, and predicts the ruin of Amaziah and his family, 14-17.

Thus hath the Lord God shewed unto me; and behold, he formed grasshoppers in the beginning of the shooting up of the latter growth; and, lo, it was the latter growth after the king’s mowings.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Careless sinners are everywhere in danger: but they who are at case in Zion, and possess seared consciences and vain confidence, under the means of grace, are in the most perilous state; and no pre-eminence in rank or station in the Church, no distinction of sect or party, will secure those who are destitute of the sanctifying grace of God. Nay, every other advantage in this case will tend to increase pride, rebellion, and condemnation. Ungodly men are prone to put off the evil day: they presume that they shall live many years, and that they shall escape with impunity; or at least, that there is no danger yet, nor any need of repentance, self-denial, and prayer. Many of them seek to amass wealth by crimes, and spend it in every kind of self-indulgence, and continued pleasure and dissipation; whilst their ingenuity is employed in inventing new methods of gratification, to bend their consciences and harden their hearts. No wonder then that they become insensible to the miseries of the poor, or to the persecutions of the Church; and that they spend that on their lusts, by which God should have been honoured and his people relieved: for they are continually neglecting, and even wilfully murdering their own souls! God must needs abhor the excellency, and hate both the palaces and temples of such professed Christians. Their carnal ease and riotous banquets will soon be removed; and how dreadful will it be, when luxury and excess shall end in hopeless and endless misery! Even on earth sinners may be so loaded with afflictions, or driven to desperation, that sullen silence and astonishment may seize upon them; and every thought of God, of prayer, or of Christ, may increase their agony, and every temper of hell may be experienced and manifested. Men should therefore take warning, not to stifle their convictions, or harden their hearts; and not to discourage the labours of ministers for their good: for if God give them up to obduracy, all efforts to bring them to repentance will be unavailing. Nothing tends more to this judicial obduracy than premeditated injustice, or confidence in our own wisdom, righteousness, and strength, in opposition to the word of God and from enmity to it; and those who thus walk in pride, the Lord knoweth how to abase, or to destroy.

NOTES.

CHAP. VII. V. 1-3. The Lord in vision showed Amos the judgments that he was about to bring upon Israel. He appeared to him as forming grasshoppers or locusts, in order to send them forth to waste the land. It is probable, that the king was used to take a great part of the first mowing of the meadows, for the provender of his horses; so that the cattle of the people chiefly depended on the second growth, and the failure of that supply would have greatly distressed them. The prophet, seeing in this calamity coming on them, and fearing that it would be inflicted in reality, earnestly interceded for his people, that the Lord would forgive their sin, and remit their punishment: for if he thus proceeded against them, by whom could Jacob, or his Church, be recovered from its present enfeebled desolate condition? This idea in which the honour of God was so concerned was prevailed; and the Lord remitted, or mitigated, the punishment. Some suppose this to have been an emblem of the first invasion of the Assyrians, which was not so fatal as might have been expected. After Ahab and his family had reduced Israel to the brink of ruin, they began to revive again under the government of Jehu, his son Joash, and his grandson Jeroboam: yet desolations awaited them from the Assyrians, which would soon begin; but they would be restrained, or retarded, in answer to the prayers of the prophets. (Marg. Ref.) It is probable, that Amos made known to the people these visions, in order, as he received them.

V. 4-6. God next showed the prophet, that he was preparing to contend with Israel by fire: either by excessive heat and drought, or lightning, or the breaking forth of subterraneous fires. This appeared to him to waste, not only the rivers, but the waters of the sea, as well as to consume a part of the people; which implied, that entire ruin was threatened, and was begun to be inflicted. This 7 Thus he shewed me: and, behold, the Lord stood upon a wall made by a plumb-line, with a plumb-line in his hand.

8 And the Lord said unto me, Amos, what seest thou? And I said, A plumb-line. Then said the Lord, Behold, I will set a plumb-line in the midst of my people Israel: I will not again pass by them any more.

9 And the high-places of Isaac shall be desolate, and the sanctuaries of Israel shall be waste; and I will rise against the house of Jeroboam with the sword.

10 ¶ Then Amaziah the priest of Bethel sent to Jeroboam king of Israel, saying, Amos hath conspired against thee in the midst of the house of Israel: the land is not able to bear all his words.

11 For thus Amos saith, Jeroboam shall die by the sword, and Israel shall surely be led away captive out of their own land.

12 Also Amaziah said unto Amos,

13 Thou seest, go, flee thee away into the land of Judah, and there eat bread, and prophesy there: for it is the king's 14 But prophecy not again any more at Bethel: for it is the king's chapel, and it is the king's court.

15 Then answered Amos, and said to Amaziah, I was no prophet, neither was I an herald, but I was an herdsman, and a dresser of sycamore-fruit:

16 And the Lord

17 Therefore thus saith the Lord:

induced the prophet to renew his former plea, and with similar success; and the more tremendous effects of the judgment were prevented. Some understand this of the ravages that Tiglath-pileser made in the land, which only occasioned temporary and partial calamities, though they threatened entire desolation. (2 Kings xv. 29.)

V. 9. The Lord next appeared to Amos, as that wall, that had been formed by a plumb-line; this might represent the Church of Israel, as originally formed according to those rules which God, in infinite wisdom, justice, truth, and goodness, had prescribed by Moses. The plumb-line in his hand implied, that he was examining with exactness how far the people had deviated from their rule and original constitution, being about to judge and punish them according to their sins. This vision seems to have discouraged the prophet's intercession: he saw their idolatries and iniquities to be so many and heinous, and the judgments predicted against them to be so righteous, that he could say nothing to it. But the Lord, having called his strict attention to the vision, showed him that he was about to proceed against Israel in exact justice; that the threatened punishment should not be remitted; that the strong-holds, cities, and idolatrous temples, should be desolated; and that this would begin in the destruction of the family of Jeroboam by the sword of a conspirator. (Margar. Ref.)

V. 10, 11. Amaziah, the chief priest, or president over the idolatrous worship at Bethel, was greatly displeased with Amos for declaring these visions at that place; and especially for the last, which he had not prayed to be averted. Probably he feared lest it should set the people against the worship of the golden calves, undermine his credit and interests, and even alienate them from the established government. He therefore sent word to Jeroboam, (who seems to have been then at Samaria,) accusing the prophet of having conspired against him, and of exciting the people to revolt and rebellion, so that the land was not able to bear his words, and would certainly be greatly injured, unless he were silenced and punished. But he offered no proof of this conspiracy, except Amos's predictions of approaching judgments; and in reporting his words he bare false witness against him; for he had not said, that "Jeroboam should die by the sword," but that the Lord "would rise against his house with the sword," which took place after Jeroboam's death, in the murder of his son Zachariah by Shallum, who succeeded him. (2 Kings xv. 8-12.) He therefore pronounces the prophecy as a stirrer up of sedition, the same crime which was objected to Jeremiah, to Christ, and to St. Paul. (Margar. Ref.)

V. 12, 13. It does not appear that Jeroboam noticed Amaziah's information, either despising the prophet and his predictions, or having a more favourable opinion of him than to suspect him of any bad design. But Amaziah was desirous of driving him away by any means he could therefore ironically called him a seer, or a prophet; but he was not to prophesy any more at Bethel, which was the king's chapel, where his established worship was conducted and graced with his presence, and where he had a palace and kept his court. It was therefore indecent for him to revile the king's religion, and denounce the judgments of God against him and his family and people, in the very place where his chapel and court were.
Thy wife shall be an harlot in the city, and thy sons and thy daughters shall fall by the sword, and thy land shall be divided by line: and thou shalt die in a polluted land; and Israel shall surely go into captivity forth of his land.

V. 15-17. Amos answered Amaziah with great boldness, yet with modesty and propriety. He declared that he had not formerly been a prophet, nor was his father a prophet; nor had he been educated in the schools of the prophets. But he had been a herdsman, and a gatherer of a fruit, (a wild fig,) which grew on some kind of sycamore-trees, and was used for food by the poor people, or perhaps for the cattle. In these rural occupations he had been inured to hard labour and homely fare: and he had followed them contentedly, till the Lord, by express revelation, commanded him to go and prophesy to his people. Yet Amaziah, in direct opposition to the divine messenger, forbade his prophesying against Israel, or dropping a word against that people at Beth-el! The prophet was therefore commissioned to denounce sentence against him; that his wife, either through extreme indignity or licentiousness, should become a harlot in the streets of Bethel; that his children should be slain by the sword of war or of the murderer; that his estate should be divided by line among those who seized on it; that he should die in a heathen land; and that Israel would surely go away into captivity, as an intolerable grievance. Men in general cannot bear with their alarming and reproving words; but mercenary and ambitious priests, the ringleaders of superstition or idolatry, will be the most invertebrate and intolerant. Such have commonly been false accusers of the Lord's servants to princes, and the first movers of persecution: for their reputation, authority, and quiet enjoyment of their preferments, are endangered by the prevalence of truth and righteousness. Sometimes, however, even irreligious or idolatrous princes have not been disposed to listen to their insinuations, or to adopt their counsels; and they have been forced to employ menaces against those whom they would have more impenitently silenced, if they could: or they have given them counsel that savoured of their own character. Such men will perhaps intimate where and how ministers are most likely to obtain preferment or to escape the terrors of the law, but that where good may be done to souls. They consider it as the extreme of folly, insolence, or rusticity, to declare alarming offensive truths before the great; or where error, impurity, and vice, are sanctioned by high authority, law established customs, or eminent examples; as if smooth and soothing heresies alone were fit to be prophesied in the chapels of kings, and soft deceitful words alone would pass current in their palaces! And as if it were the enviable prerogative of royalty and privilege of nobility, to treat unmolested and unannihilated the broad road to everlasting misery! Indeed none should intrude themselves into such places and services: nor are all, that are called to the ministry, qualified to assault iniquity, impurity, idolatry, or superstition, in these strongholds. But when the Lord has work to do of an extraordinary kind, he will raise up and furnish proper instruments for it. In doing this, he often deviates from men's rules, and takes such as have not been regularly educated; but perhaps were engaged in some laborious occupation, where they were inured to hardship, kept at a distance from the luxuries and indulgences of the affluent, and taught indifference to the interests and splendour of the world. They, however, who are selected to these services, must declare the whole world of God without reserve, or respect of persons, to priests, or people, whatever treatment they may be exposed to; and they who oppose, or attempt to silence them, will do it at their peril. We cannot indeed speak too humbly of ourselves and our poor attainments and services, but as ministers we ought to "magnify our office;" and though we ought not to apply the denunciations or examples of God's word, personally to our opponents; yet we should not hesitate to declare, that they who despise the least of those whom the Lord sends forth to preach his word, are despisers of him; and that all who injure them, may expect severe rebukes, in their families, persons, and circumstances, and even fatal effects to their souls, except they repent. Nor can they prevent any of these judgments, the denunciation of which offenders them; whilst their opposition provokes God to contend with them in particular.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-9.

The prayers of pious ministers and believers avert many calamities from churches and nations, which would otherwise overwhelm them. They who most faithfully denounce the terrors of the Lord against sinners, should be the most earnest in prayers for their repentance and forgiveness. The low estate of the Church, and of any part of it, may be pleaded with God as a reason why he should pardon and spare it; for it is his cause: he would be deprived of his revenue of worship and honour, should it be totally ruined; and none but he can raise Jacob from his low estate, when he is so weak and hath so many and powerful enemies. Our gracious God will for a time regard his people's prayers for their irreverent neighbours and relatives, and defer the execution of deserved punishment; but he will at length examine the cause of every community and individual by the line and standard of his word; and then all the unbelieving and impious will be condemned; and even they who have been most pleaded in their behalf, will have no more to say for them.

V. 10-17.

No fervent prayers, or self-denying labours of ministers, can induce proud sinners to bear with their faithful reproofs and warnings. They will be accused of wishing for those miseries, which they warn men to flee from; their opposition to established impurities and iniquities will be construed into dissatisfaction, or rebellion against the king or commonwealth; and their ministry will often be considered
CHAP. VIII.

The vision of a basket of summer-fruits, signifying the speedy ruin of Israel, 1—

Thus hath the Lord God shewed unto me: and behold, a basket of summer-fruits.

2 And he said, Amos, what seest thou? And I said, A basket of summer-fruits. Then said the Lord unto me, The end is come upon my people of Israel; I will not again pass by them any more.

3 And the songs of the temple shall be howlings in that day, saith the Lord God: there shall be much dead bodies in every place; they shall cast them forth with silence.

4 ¶ Hear this, O ye that swallow up the needy, even to make the poor of the land to fail, b Staying, When will the new moon be gone, that we may sell corn? and to themselves, and to each other, When will this tedious day be over? When will this task of religion be done?

7 They wanted to return to worldly pursuits; they were in haste to set forth corn to sale, in order to increase their riches. In managing this traffic, which so nearly concerned the labouring poor, they made the ephah, or bushel, too small, and thus cheated in the quantity of what they sold; and they weighed the silver, with which they were paid, by too heavy a weight, and thus cheated in the sum which they took for it; nay, they used artifice in the act of weighing, and imposed in that way also on their customers; and they even took advantage of the people's necessities, to sell the refuse corn, which was scarcely fit for use. By these methods the poor became their debtors, and they obtained permission to sell them for slaves; which they inhumanly took advantage of, when they gained but a very trivial sum by depriving them of liberty; (lx. 5) But the Lord sware by himself, who was the real fount of all, or most honourable distinction, of his people, that he would never forget or omit to punish any of their works. These crimes would provoke him to send upon them such judgments as would make the land to tremble, as in an earthquake: it would be desolated by overwhelming calamities from one end to another, as Egypt is annually covered by an inundation of the Nile: their prosperity and hopeful prospects would be suddenly darkened, as if the sun should go down at noon-day, and the clear light should be exchanged for midnight darkness: their idolatrous or sensual feasts, and the songs accompanying them, would the sabbath, that we may set forth wheat, making the ephah small, and the shekel great, and falsifying the balances by deceit.

6 That we may buy the poor for silver, and the needy for a pair of shoes; yea, and sell the refuse of the wheat?

7 The Lord hath sworn by the excellency of Jacob, Surely I will never forget any of their works.

8 Shall not the land tremble for this, and every one morn that dwelleth therein? and it shall rise up wholly as a flood; and it shall be cast out and drowned, as by the flood of Egypt?

9 And it shall come to pass in that day, saith the Lord God, that I will cause the sun to go down at noon, and I will darken the earth in the clear day:

10 And I will turn your feasts into mourning, and all your songs into lamentation; and I will bring up a sackcloth upon all loins, and baldness upon every head; and I will make it as the mourning of an only son, and the end thereof as a bitter day.

V. 1—3. Under the emblem of a basket of summer fruit, which must be used immediately or it will perish, the speedy approach of the predicted judgments upon Israel was denoted, for which they were fully ripe. This may be supposed to have begun in the murder of Zachariah the son of Jerobeam: as the subsequent contests, between the successive usurpers of the throne, made way for the Assyrian invasions, which terminated in the entire ruin of the kingdom of Israel. These approaching events would turn the songs that were used in the temple of Bethel, &c. or those of their idol-temples, or in the palace, into howlings of terror and despair. Numbers would die in every place by the sword, pestilence, and famine, whose bodies the survivors would cast forth without the customary solemnities of burial; as hardened in grief and regardless of their nearest friends and relatives, through anxious concern for their own safety.

3 They were exceedingly addicted to injustice and oppression, as well as ringleaders in impiety and idolatry: and the approaching calamities would fall more heavily on them than on others. They ought therefore to consider how they might escape, or how they could endure such miseries; instead of oppressing the poor, as if they would devour and extinguish them by their exactions. It seems, that commerce was suspended, even in Israel, on the new moons and sabbath-days, which they observed with some forms of devotion: but this was a weariness; and the covetous oppressors were ready to say

5—10. The rich and powerful were

NOTES.

CHAP. VIII. V. 1—3. Under the emblem of a basket of summer fruit, which must be used immediately or it will perish, the speedy approach of the predicted judgments upon Israel was denoted, for which they were fully ripe. This may be supposed to have begun in the murder of Zachariah the son of Jerobeam: as the subsequent contests, between the successive usurpers of the throne, made way for the Assyrian invasions, which terminated in the entire ruin of the kingdom of Israel. These approaching events would turn the songs that were used in the temple of Bethel, &c. or those of their idol-temples, or in the palace, into howlings of terror and despair. Numbers would die in every place by the sword, pestilence, and famine, whose bodies the survivors would cast forth without the customary solemnities of burial; as hardened in grief and regardless of their nearest friends and relatives, through anxious concern for their own safety.

V. 1—10. The rich and powerful were exceedingly addicted to injustice and oppression, as well as ringleaders in impiety and idolatry: and the approaching calamities would fall more heavily on them than on others. They ought therefore to consider how they might escape, or how they could endure such miseries; instead of oppressing the poor, as if they would devour and extinguish them by their exactions. It seems, that commerce was suspended, even in Israel, on the new moons and sabbath-days, which they observed with some forms of devotion: but this was a weariness; and the covetous oppressors were ready to say
In that day shall the fair virgins and young men faint for thirst.

They that swear by the sin of Samaria, and say, Thy God, O Dan, liveth; and, The manner of Beersheba liveth; even they shall fall, and never rise up again.

The certainty of the judgments on Israel.

We should carefully notice, and deduce instruction from every discovery which it may please God to afford us of his truth and will. Nothing tends more to alarm the consciences of careless sinners, than a conviction that their end draws near, and that the Lord is about to punish them for their transgressions; but if men will not take warning, and improve present mercies and opportunities, their carnal mirth, self-confident joy, and hypocritical songs of praise, will soon end in howlings of terror and despair. They who are most averse to hear the awful messages of God, should on some occasions be more directly addressed. — Times of public calamity will be peculiarly dreadful to the sensual, the avaricious, and the secure. The ordinances of God must be a weariness to the carnal mind: the sabbath will therefore either be profaned, or be a dull and heavy day; the sermon and service will be thought intolerably tedious; the return of these seasons will be considered as a sad deduction from the enjoyment, or interruption of the business of life; for such persons are all the time out of their element. And could we witness the fraudulent and covetous practices which in diversified forms rend the mercantile transactions of numbers an abomination to the Lord, we should not wonder to see them so averse to the worship of God, or so soon weary of it: for their consciences cannot but be at some times disquieted, as well as their darling pursuits interrupted, by such spiritual exercises. But what place will they be fit for in another world, who have here delighted in iniquity and ungodliness? They may conceal their works, or forget them; but the Lord registers them all in his book of remembrance: and, seeing nations tremble and mourn for sin, and dark and gloomy calamities overspread the most flourishing kingdoms, and turn all their joys into howlings and distress, what will be the weeping and wailing, and gnashing of teeth, that sinners will experience, in that bitter day, which will succeed to their sinful and sensual pleasures? No earthly calamity should be so much dreaded, as the want of the instructions of God's word and the means of grace: this is a far more fatal famine, than that which only kills the body; as it tends to the miserable perdition of the immortal soul. This judgment is often inflicted on those who abuse, despise, or neglect the Gospel; and who prefer antiscr iptural notions and forms to the religion of the Bible. When God in anger thus visits a degenerate church, their own schemes and endeavours, to find out a way of salvation, will stand them in no stead. Let us then value and seek to profit by our peculiar advantages, and fear provoking God to deprive us of them: and let it be remembered, that even if these blessings be continued in our land, death will soon remove ungodly men to that place, where there is no repentance unto salvation, and where the filthy continue filthy still; for they who fall into that pit of destruction, shall rise no more for ever.
1—7. A remnant would be preserved.
8—10. A prediction of Christ, the blessings of his kingdom, and the restoration of Israel, 11—15.

1. "I saw the Lord standing upon the altar: and he said, 'Smite the lintel of the door, that the posts may shake; and cut them in the head, all of them; and I will slay the last of them with the sword: he that fleeth of them shall not flee away, and he that escapeth of them shall not be delivered.'"

2. "Though they dig into hell, thence shall mine hand take them; though they climb up to heaven, thence will I bring them down:"

3. "And though they hide themselves in the top of Carmel, I will search and take them out thence: and though they be hid from my sight in the bottom of the sea, thence will I command the serpent, and he shall bite them:"

4. "And though they go into captivity before their enemies, thence will I command the sword, and it shall slay them: and I will set mine eyes upon them for evil, and not for good."

5. "And the Lord God of hosts is he that toucheth the land, and it shall melt, and all that dwell therein shall mourn: and it shall rise up wholly like a flood; and shall be drowned, as by the flood of Egypt."

6. "It is he that buildeth his stories in the heaven, and hath founded his troop in the earth; he calleth for the waters of the sea, and poureth them out upon the face of the earth:"

7. "Are ye not as the children of the Ethiopians unto me, O children of Israel? saith the Lord. Have not I brought up Israel out of the land of Egypt! and the Philistines from Caphtor, and the Syrians from Kir?"

8. "Behold, the eyes of the Lord God are upon the sinful kingdom; and I will destroy it from off the face of the earth, saving that I will utterly destroy the house of Jacob, saith the Lord."

9. "For, lo, I will command, and I will smite the house of Israel before their enemies, like as corn is sifted in a sieve, yet shall not the least grain fall upon the earth."

10. "All the sinners of my people shall die by the sword, which say, 'The evil shall not overtake nor prevent us."

NOTES.

CHAP. IX. V. 1—4. The altar, on which the prophet in vision saw the Lord standing and giving orders for the destruction of the temple and the worshippers, is generally understood of the altar at Bethel: for the sacrifices offered there to the golden calf chiefly provoked God to take vengeance on Israel. He therefore from them commissioned the Assyrians to smite the lintel of the door, and cause its posts and pillars to shake; to destroy that temple, and put an end to that idolatry; and mortally to wound the king, princes, priests, and people, who worshipped there; for he was determined to slay the last of them by the sword of his vengeance, from which there should be no method of escape. But as the vision seems to coincide with some predictions of the Lord's departure from the temple at Jerusalem; (Notes, Ez. viii. ix. x. xii.) so it may be questioned, whether that event were not also intended by the spirit of prophecy. The devoted objects, however, of the divine indignation, would find no place of refuge from their omnipresent and omnipotent Avenger. Could they even dig to the centre of the earth, or descend to the place of condemned spirits, his hand would there arrest them: could they climb up into heaven, his arm would cast them down: should they hide themselves in the rocks, at the summit of mount Carmel, he would search them out, and drag them from their recesses: or should they endeavour to elude his search by diving to the bottom of the ocean, he would order the serpent, or some destructive sea-monster, to bite or devour them there. The executioners of his vengeance would pursue them into every place whither they fled from them: and even the remnant, that would be dispersed as captives and slaves in the land of their enemies, would be followed by the murdering sword; as the Lord would watch over them for evil, and not for good. The contrast between hell and heaven, (2) shows that the unseen world, and not the grace, is here meant. (Note, Ps. xvi. 8—11.)

V. 5. 6. (Marg. Ref.) The eternal almighty God would even cause the land to melt like wax at his touch; and all the inhabitants to mourn, because of the wide spreading calamities that would follow. For it was he that formed and occupied the heavens as his chambers, or exalted throne; who hath appointed the creatures of this lower world as a troop of his armies, to annoy his enemies; and who can, at his pleasure, bring all the waters of the ocean to cover the whole earth. The power and sure vengeance of the deity are very sublimely described in this and the four preceding verses. (Byr. Newcome.)

V. 7—10. 'Are ye not under a curse, as the Ethiopians, the posterity of Ham, were, by reason of your multiplied sins and apostasies?' (Lowth.) (Notes, Gen. ix. 24, 25. x. 6, 7.) 'The sense seems to be, Trust not
THE BOOK OF OBADIAH.

It is probable, that Obadiah delivered this short prophecy about the time when Jerusalem was destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar. — Obadiah signifies the servant of the Lord, which was a common name in Israel: but the prophet must be distinguished from all others that bare it. — He seems to have been contemporary with Jeremiah, and uses several of his expressions in prophesying against Edom, (Jer. vii. 7—22;) and he concludes, (as almost all the other prophets do,) with predicting victory and prosperity to Israel and to the Church.

B. C. 587.

CHAP. I.

A prediction of the ruin of Edom for his pride, and his malice against the descendants of his brother Jacob, 1—16.

Promises of glorious times, in the latter ages, 17—21.

The vision of Obadiah. Thus saith the Lord God concerning Edom: We have heard a rumour from the Lord, and an ambassador is sent among the heathen; Arise ye, and let us rise up against her in battle.

Behold, I have made thee small among the heathen; thou art greatly despised.

The pride of thine heart hast received thee, thou that dwellest in the clefts of the rock, whose habitation is high; that saith in his heart, Who shall bring me down to the ground?

Though thou exalt thyself as the eagle, and though thou set thy nest among the stars, thence will I bring thee down, saith the Lord.

If sudden cometh to thee, if robbers by night, (how art thou cut off!) would they not have stolen till they had enough? if the grape-gatherers came to thee, would they not leave some grapes?

How are the things of Esau searched out! how are his hidden things sought up!

NOTES.

V. 1, 2. Obadiah might be employed to deliver verbal messages to his people on other occasions; but this vision alone was preserved for the benefit of future generations. — The prophets had heard a report from the Lord, that ruin was preparing for the insulting enemies of the Jews; and ambassadors were sent among the nations, to excite each other to war against the Edomites; by which means the Lord would shortly make them small and despised among their neighbours. (Note, Jer. xiii. 14, 15.)

V. 3—6. (Note, Jer. xiii. 9, 10, 16.) The Edomites inhabited a mountainous country, which they had strongly fortified: they had for some time been prospered, and they proudly confided in their strength and munitions, and concluded that no enemy could prevail against them. But the Lord was become their adversary; and even if they could exalt themselves as much above their other enemies as the stars are out of the reach of man, or like the eagle which builds her nests in the loftiest cedars, yet the Lord would certainly bring them down, and their pride would only help to deceive and ruin them. With astonishment the prophet saw, as it were, their hostile invaders not only making depredations and slaughter, and then departing, but cutting off all their multitudes, and ransacking their most secret treasures, till they had plundered the whole of them.
7 All the men of thy confederacy have brought thee even to the border: the men that were at peace with thee have deceived thee, and prevailed against thee; they that eat thy bread have laid a wound under thee: there is none understanding in him.

8 Shall I not in that day, saith the Lord, even destroy the wise men out of Edom, and understanding out of the mount of Esau?

9 And thy mighty men, O Teman, shall be dismayed, to the end that every one of the mount of Esau may be cut off by slaughter.

10 For thy violence against thy brother Jacob, shall thou be delivered, and thou shalt be cut off for ever.

11 In the day that thou stoodest on the other side, in the day that the strangers carried away captive his forces, and foreigners entered into his gates, and cast lots upon Jerusalem, even thou wast as one of them.

12 But thou shouldest not have looked on the day of thy brother; neither shouldest thou have rejoiced over the children of Judah in the day of their destruction; neither shouldest thou have spoken proudly in the day of distress.

13 Thou shouldst not have entered into the gate of my people in the day of their calamity; yea, thou shouldst not have looked on their affliction in the day of their calamity, nor have laid hands on their substance in the day of their calamity;

14 Neither shouldest thou have stood in the cross-way, to cut off those of his that did escape; neither shouldest thou have delivered up those of his that did remain in the day of distress.

15 For the day of the Lord is near upon all the heathen: as thou hast done, it shall be done unto thee: thy reward shall return upon thine own head.

16 For as ye have drunk upon my holy mountain, so shall all the heathen drink continually, yea, they shall drink, and they shall swallow down, and they shall be as though they had not been.

17 But upon mount Zion shall be deliverance, and there shall be holiness; and the house of Jacob shall possess their possessions.

18 And the house of Jacob shall be a fire, and the house of Joseph a flame, and the house of Esau for stubble, and they shall kindle in them, and devour them; and there shall not be any remaining of the house of Esau; for the Lord hath spoken it.

19 And they of the south shall possess the mount of Esau; and they of the plain the Philistines: and they shall possess the fields of Ephraim, and the fields of Samaria: and Benjamin shall possess Gilead.

V. 7. These calamities would be brought upon Edom by the defection and treachery of all their confederates, who would march to their borders as if to assist them, and induce them to go forth to meet them as friends, and so deceive and prevail against them. The very troops that took pay to defend them would most fatally assault them; nor would they have understanding to see or avoid this danger, or to take warning from this prediction. Those that were maintained at thy cost, as thine allies, have given thee a secret blow which thou wast not aware of. (Lowth.) The Edomites seem to have been joined in alliance with the Chaldeans, and tributary to them, when Jerusalem was taken: but within about five years after, they and their confederates invaded and desolated Edom.

V. 14. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Ps. cxxxvii. 7, Ez. xxv. xxxv. Am. i. 11, 12.) The prophet shows what the conduct of Edom towards his brother Jacob ought to have been; and thus, with peculiar energy, by the implied contrast, exposes the cruelty, violence, insolence, rapacity, and treachery, which he had committed, in various ways, during the distresses of the nation.

V. 15, 18. Israel and Judah had experienced a day of the Lord's righteous judgment on them for their sins, by the hands of the Assyrians and Chaldeans; whilst the Gentiles seemed to escape with impunity, and to prosper in their wickedness: but the day of the Lord was at hand, in which he would judge all those nations that had injured his people, and retaliate their oppressions upon them. The Jews had drunk the cup of God's indignation, even on mount Zion; and the Heathen should drink continually and abundantly of the same cup, until they were utterly destroyed. The ruin of the several nations, that bordered on and had fought against Israel, was predicted; but they were types of the enemies of the Christian church, who will be utterly destroyed in due season. (Notes, Is. xxxviii. viii. 1-6.) The prophet speaks of the Jews here as already under a state of captivity; as they actually were before this prophecy was fulfilled. (Lowth.)
20 And the captivity of this host of the children of Israel shall possess that of the Canaanites, even unto Zarephath: and the captivity of Jerusalem, which is in Sepharad, shall possess the cities of the south.

V. 17—21. When this prophecy was delivered, mount Zion either lay desolate, or was about immediately to be desolated, while the enemies of the Jews had dominion over them. "But upon mount Zion shall be those that "escape," or (an escaping): "and it shall be only." (Bp. Newcome.) Thus it was foretold, that there would be deliverance and holiness at Jerusalem, and the house of Jacob would again occupy their ancient possessions. Then Israel and Judah would become as a flame, to consume the Edomites as stubble, till they were utterly destroyed: and the remnant of the people, that were at that time captives, would not only possess the land of Canaan, but the adjoining districts; which they would take out of the hands of those who now oppressed them.—The remaining tribes would possess the country which had belonged to those who continued in their dispersions, to the utmost borders of the promised land, and even beyond them. Thus Judah would possess mount Seir, to the south; and another company the land of the Philistines, towards the west; and others would recover possession of mount Ephraim and Samaria, though at that time possessed by strangers. Benjamin would inherit Gilead, beyond Jordan, which the Ammonites had seized on; and the residue of the ten tribes would gain possession of all the country formerly inhabited by the Canaanites, even to Zarephath, or Sarepta, which bordered on Zidon. It is not agreed, what is meant by Sepharad; but some think that it was the name of a city in Edom, which the remnant of those who were led captive from Jerusalem would possess, with the cities of the south. For savours, or deliverers, would be raised up on mount Zion, to judge and execute vengeance on the Edomite; and the kingdom, or dominion, would actually be possessed and exercised by Jehovih, for the benefit of his worshippers. This prophecy was accomplished, when the Jews returned to their own land by Cyrus's decree; when the temple was rebuilt, and the worship of God restored; when Jerusalem was re-established in prosperity, and the land replenished with inhabitants; when the Jews, under the Maccabees and other leaders, entirely subdued the Edomites, and incorporated the remnant of them amongst themselves as proselytes; and in their subsequent prosperity, till the days of Christ. No mention is made of the Philistines by Christ or his apostles. They seem, before that time, to have been extinguished from the land. But the salvation and holiness of the Gospel, its success and spread, by the faithful preaching of the word, and the conversion of the Gentiles, were also intended; especially the future restoration of the Jews, the destruction of antichristian opposers, and that prosperous state of the Church, to which all the prophets evidently bear witness. Then, and not till then, in the full sense of the words, shall "the kingdom be the 21 And saviours shall come up on mount Zion to judge the mount of Esau; and the kingdom shall be the Lord's.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—9.

The Lord exalts, or abases, and renders nations honourable, or contemptible, as he sees good. Self-confidence, reliance on external advantages, ambitious projects, and carnal security, uniformly tend to calamity and contempt; and thus the pride of men's hearts deceives them. No exaltation or power can secure those whom God is concerned in honour to bring down. Renowned warriors are generally the most rapacious and insatiable of all thieves and robbers: the prosperity of others only excites their appetite for plunder; and so riches tend to the ruin of their possessors. They who rely on plausible and mercenary helpers, are deficient in understanding; for there is so much treachery in man, that such persons commonly give their confederates the most fatal wounds. They only are happy who trust in the Lord; for in the day of his displeasure, he destroys the wisdom of the prudent, and marks the courage of the mighty, that all his enemies may receive deserved punishment.

V. 10—21.

God will surely confound those who oppress their brethren of the same nature with themselves; and those especially who hate such as the Lord loves, and afflict them because they belong to him. They who rejoice in the calamities which others inflict will be numbered among oppressors; and all that would escape their doom must take care not to sanction their cruelties by their presence, or approbation. It is criminal to behave with the least degree of satisfaction, or even without deep concern, the distresses of our neighbours; and still more to insult over them under their calamities. If we cannot enter the doors of the oppressed and afflicted to sympathize with them, and to soothe or relieve their sorrows, we had better keep at a distance, lest we should increase, or appear to take pleasure in, their misery. How base then must they be, who seize on such opportunities to lay hands on the property of their neighbours, or to wreak their revenge or satiate their cruelty, by giving assistance to the principal actors in such bloody tragedies? But let both the sorrowful believer and the insolent oppressor know, that the day of the Lord is near upon all the heathen: that the injuries which the persecuted have endured will be recompensed upon their persecutors, who will drink of that cup, which they have been instrumental in putting into the hands of others; and that the troubles of the righteous will soon be over, but those of the wicked will be eternal and complete. Happy then is the inhabitant of Zion, even in the most afflicted times: there alone is deliverance. from the wrath to come and from every evil; there holiness is communicated and resides: and whilst the Lord purifies his redeemed "from all their iniquities, to be unto of his salvation! May all employed in this work be faith-" himself a peculiar people, zealous of good works," ful and successful! so that their word may be a savour of both marks them out as his own, and prepares them to possess their purchased inheritance. His people will also be victorious, and as a flame to consume their enemies; and they shall inherit all things, whilst others shall lose even what they seemed to have. Blessed be God, for the divine Saviour and Judge on mount Zion; and for those whom he sends forth as instruments of bringing sinners to partake
THE BOOK OF JONAH.

Jonah was no doubt more ancient than any of those prophets, whose writings are preserved in this part of the sacred Scripture. — He predicted the successes of Jeroboam, the son of Joash; (2 Kings xiv. 25;) and it is probable that the prophecy was delivered a considerable time before its accomplishment. Some think, that Jonah executed his prophetic office as early as the latter part of Jehu's reign: and it is not agreed whether the events recorded in this book, occurred at his entrance on that office, or at a later period.— Nothing more is known of him, except that he was of Gath-hepher, a town in the tribe of Zebulon, (Josh. xix. 13; Gittath-hepher;) and the traditions extant concerning him are unworthy of the least notice.— The book before us is rather a narrative than a prophecy. Several of the events recorded in it are of a very extraordinary nature; which has induced some to explain it as an allegory, and emboldened others profanely to ridicule it. But it should be remembered, that our Lord himself hath repeatedly attested the truth of the narrative, and shown, that the most wonderful event in it was intended as a type or emblem of his own death, burial, and resurrection on the third day. (Matt. xii. 38—41. xvi. 4. Luke xi. 32.) The knowledge of "the power of God," as manifested by the Scriptures, will fully satisfy the humble mind respecting the miracles here recorded: and a deep knowledge of our own hearts will abate our astonishment at the extraordinary conduct of the prophet himself. "The fame of Jonah's deliverance appears to have spread among the heathen nations: and the Greeks, who were accustomed to adorn the memory of their heroes, by every remarkable event and embellishment which they could appropriate, afterwards added to the fictitious adventures of Hercules, that of having continued three days without injury in the belly of a dog, sent against him by Neptune. The fable of Arion and the Dolphin, of which the date is fixed at a time nearly coeval with the period of Jonah, is possibly a misrepresentation of particulars recorded in this sacred book." (Gray's Key.) Jonah lived almost as early as the most ancient of the Greek poets. His impartiality in recording his own sins, is peculiar to the sacred writers.

B. C. 840.

CHAP. I.

God commands Jonah to go and prophesy against Nineveh, 1, 2. He attempts to sail to Tarshish; but is overtaken by a tempest, and discovered by lot, 3—10. The mariners reluctantly cast him into the sea; the storm abates, and they sacrifice to Jehovah, 11—16. Jonah is swallowed by a great fish; and continues in its belly three days, 17.

NOTES.

CHAP. I. V. 1. Some think that Jonah had, before this, for some time exercised his prophetic office in Israel: others, that he was at this time first called to it. But nothing beyond conjecture can be adduced on the subject.
a ship going to Tarshish: so he paid the fare therefor, and went down into it, to go with them unto Tarshish from the presence of the Lord.

4 But the Lord sent out a great wind into the sea, and there was a mighty tempest in the sea, so that the ship was like to be broken.

5 Then the mariners were afraid, and every man unto his god; and cast forth the wares that were in the ship into the sea, to lighten it of them. But Jonah was gone down into the sides of the ship, and he lay, and was fast asleep.

6 So the ship-master came to him, and said unto him, What meanest thou, sleeper? arise, call upon thy God, if so be that God will think upon us, that we perish not.

7 And they said every one to his fellow, Come, and let us cast lots, that we may know for whose cause this evil is upon us. So they cast lots, and the lot fell upon Jonah.

8 Then said they unto him, Tell us, we pray thee, for whose cause this evil is upon us: What is thy occupation? and whence comest thou? what is thy country? and of what people art thou?

9 And he said unto them, I am a Hebrew; and I fear the Lord, the God of heaven, which hath made the sea and the dry land.

V. 2, 3. Nineveh, the capital of the Assyrian empire, was one of the largest cities that we read of; being sixty miles in circumference, if historians may be credited. Other prophets foretold the destruction of heathen cities for their crimes: but Jonah was ordered to go to Nineveh, that he might, on the spot, denounce the judgments of God against it. Some think, that he declined this service, because he was jealous for the honour of Israel, and was not willing that the Gentiles should partake of the benefits of prophecy; and he afterwards intimates, that he apprehended God would mercifully spare Nineveh. and that he should be despised and punished as a false prophet. (Note, iv. 1, 2.) But when we consider the perils and hardships, to which this journey and service were likely to expose him; when we imagine to ourselves the probable reception of a despised prophet of Israel in this proud idolatrous city, come avowedly to predict its speedy destruction; and that this might draw upon him the resentment both of the rulers and the multitude; when we reflect how such a message would be received in the streets of London at this day; we shall not wonder, that he was extremely reluctant to undertake the business. Strong faith, and a habit of unwavering obedience, were necessary, to overcome the reluctance that Jonah must have felt: and perhaps he was a young man, and not as yet inured to perilous services. He seems to have supposed that the Spirit of prophecy would not rest on him, if he left the land of Israel to go some other way than to Nineveh; he desired to be freed from those impulses, with which he had not courage and faith to comply; and he therefore purposed to flee unto Tarshish from the presence of the Lord. Accordingly he went to Joppa, a sea-port town, said to be about forty miles from Gath-hepher, where he is supposed to have dwelt, and in the opposite direction from Nineveh. There he met with a vessel about to sail to Tarshish, and paying the fare went aboard; as if he thought that now he should be removed to a distance from the immediate presence of God, and as not expecting to be pursued by a more imminent danger than any of those from which he fled.

Tarshish. Bochart says, that there were two places of this name; one, Tartessus in Spain—near the pillars of Hercules; the other in the Indian Ocean, near Ophir, God of heaven, which hath made the sea and the dry land.

10 Then were the men exceedingly afraid, and said unto him, Why hast thou done this? for the men knew that the fowl from the presence of the Lord, because he had told them.

11 Then said they unto him, What shall we do unto thee? for the sea is still as calm unto us? for the sea I wrought, and was tempestuous.

12 And he said unto them, Take me up, and cast me forth into the sea; and so shall the sea be calm unto you: for I know that for my sake this great tempest is upon you.

13 Nevertheless the men rowed hard to bring it to the land; but they could not:

not for the sea wrought, and was tempestuous against them.

14 Wherefore they cried unto the Lord, and said, We beseech thee, O Lord, we beseech thee, let us not perish for this man's life, and lay not upon us innocent blood: for thou, O Lord, hast done it as pleased thee.

15 So they took up Jonah, and cast him forth into the sea: and the sea ceased from her raging.

16 Then the men feared the Lord exceedingly, and offered a sacrifice out of thecaling, and made vows.

17 Now the Lord had prepared a great fish to swallow up Jonah. And Jonah was in the belly of the fish three days and three nights.

V. 8–10. When Jonah was thus singled out as the culprit whom divine vengeance pursued, the mariners did not proceed against him with violence, as might have been expected, considering his loss and extreme danger: but, perhaps, perceiving something grave and serious in his demeanour, they calmly entreated him to inform them, whether he was not conscious of some great crime, for which this calamity was come upon them. And whether he could deny that it was on his account? They wanted to know what his employment was: whether lawful or not? Whether he were not upon some criminal project, or fleeing from justice? and in short, who he was, and of what country, &c. Accordingly, he without reserve informed them of his people and religion, as a worshipper of Jehovah, the God of heaven, the Creator both of the sea and the dry land; and ingenuously confessed his heinous sin. This exceedingly abomined them, either as it showed them the power of that God who was contending with them, and whom they knew not how to appease; or because they were in doubt how to behave towards his prophet, perceiving great danger, whether they retained him in the ship, or cast him overboard. They, however, demonstrated with Jonah for rebelling against the command, and attempting to flee from the presence, of the great Creator; and for involving them as well as himself in such imminent danger.

V. 11–16. The mariners, perceiving that the tempest continued to increase, and not knowing how to act, inquired of Jonah himself, as Jehovah's prophet, What they ought to do in this emergency? And he, convinced of his sin and folly, submitting to the justice of God, and expecting death for his crime, and perhaps receiving some instruction of the divine will, counselled them to cast him into the sea; and thus the tempest would cease, for he knew that it was raised on his account. He would not, however, cast himself overboard, for that would have been an act of suicide. But the men, probably affected by the candid confession and the disinterested conduct of Jonah, and fearing to lay hands on the Lord's servant, used every effort to get into port; that putting him on shore, they might preserve his life and their own also. When they found their endeavours to be in vain, (as the sea grew more and more tempestuous,) they prayed (not every one to his God as before, but to Jehovah, entrusting him that they might not perish for taking away Jonah's life, nor be deemed guilty of murdering the innocent; as his sovereign appointment had laid them under the necessity of doing this for their own preservation. After this appeal, they cast Jonah overboard: and as the storm immediately ceased, they were so impressed with what they had seen and heard, that they exceedingly feared the power and reverence the authority of Jehovah, and worshipped his name; and either at that time, or as soon as they could, they offered to him sacrifices of thanksgiving for their deliverance, and made vows of becoming his servants and worshippers. We may conclude, that some of them at least were savingly converted, by means of these extraordinary transactions. Disclaiming all their idol-gods, they offered a sacrifice to the only true God, and made vows to him, (which they would certainly perform upon their return,) to worship him at Jerusalem. (Hp. Hull.)

V. 17. As it was the will of God to chastise Jonah, but not to cut him off; he had prepared a great fish near the ship to receive him into its stomach. Christ hath called it a whale, (KJV) and repeatedly authenticated the whole narration; and probably some of that species have throats wide enough to swallow a man, though others may not. (Morg. Ref.) The whole affair was miraculous: the preservation of Jonah from suffocation in the belly of the whale could only be effected by a continued exertion of almighty power; and the most daring infidel will scarcely venture to say, that God could not prepare such a great fish for this purpose, and effect Jonah's deliverance in such a manner. In this situation Jonah remained for three days and three nights; at least, according to the Hebrew phrase and language; in three days, a space of one whole day and night, and part of two others. In this he was a type of Christ, as dead and buried, and
CHAP. II.

Jonah's prayer in the fish's belly, and his thanksgiving and vows, 1—9. His marvellous deliverance, 10.

ris ing again on the third day. The precise time was th us determined, to prefigure the period of our Lord's continuance in the grave. (Rp. Newcombe.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—10.

They who serve God in the work of the ministry, must prepare for unrestrained obedience amidst manifold hardships and dangers, and should arm themselves with faith and patience, and a spirit of self denial. They must arise and go to every place, whither Providence calls them; and not spare to reprove the sins of the great or of the many, or to denounce against them the judgments of that God, before whom their crimes have been committed. — Unbelief and the fear of man start a thousand objections to such services; and even pious are capable of most absurd notions and most extravagant actions, when desirous of escaping the cross, or declining obedience in perilous circumstances: nay, like Adam, they may be tempted to hide themselves from the presence of the Lord by flight, or by running among the trees of the garden! Thus some awakened sinners have removed from the places, preachers, or companions, that have disquieted them, in hopes of being again easy in their beloved sinful course of life; and thus even pious ministers, when greatly opposed or discouraged, are apt to wish for removals to some other place, and to think they could do better anywhere, or in any situation, than that assigned them by their Lord and Master! But there is always more danger in disobeying than in obeying God: he can arrest his fugitives by storms from without or from within; and nothing but shame and distress can come on those who run away from their proper place and work. Sin and temptation may render even a believer, for a time, more insensible than the most ignorant heathen; in imminent danger, when natural conscience extorts from the latter a cry of distress to an imaginary or unknown god, and induces them to part with their possessions in hopes of saving their lives, and thus providentially remain secure and asleep, without any sense of guilt or fear of wrath. But the Lord will rebuke and chasten those whom he loves; and the persons whom he sometimes employs for this purpose, serve to cover his offending servants with shame, and to fill them with anguish. — Surely the people of the world in general may be thus addressed. Shall men part with all their substance, to save their lives? And will they not renounce worldly interests and pleasures, to save their souls? What do men mean by sleeping on in sin, when the word of God and the convictions of their consciences warn them to arise and call upon the Lord, if they would escape everlasting misery? And do we not all need such reproofs on some occasions? What do we mean, amidst all our fears, temptations, difficulties, and perils, and those of the church or the community, to be so supine and heartless? Should we not admonish each other to wake, and arise, and call upon our God; if so be he would think upon and deliver us?

V. 11—17.

In great distresses it behoves us to inquire, on what account and for whose cause the evil is come upon us? And though it may not be deemed expedient to use the lot, amidst the abuse and profanation of it that prevails, yet we may appeal to the Lord in prayer; and by his word and Spirit, and in his providence, he can readily show us the cause and remedy of all our troubles. They who rebel against God, often occasion great calamities to those with whom they associate; yet they should not be treated with harshness or violence; and careful inquiry should always precede the due punishment of culprits. When the true believer has been betrayed into sin, and is evidently become the criminal cause of harm to others; and when he is brought to a proper sense of his misconduct; he will frankly confess his guilt, and speak honourably of God, though to his own shame and condemnation: and indeed it may justly cause the profligate and profane to tremble, when they consider with what marked severity the Lord often punishes the transgressions of his worshippers. In such circumstances they will condemn themselves, and submit patiently to any temporal punishment, if so be they can hope to be delivered from the wrath to come: nay, they will rather choose chastisement in their own persons, than to become the occasions of ruin to others. (2 Sain. xxiv. 17.) Such behaviour will sometimes win upon the ungodly, when they cannot but see their criminality, and are suffering in consequence of it: and it is proper to do all we can to save the lives even of those who have greatly offended; for the natural conscience has a horror at the thoughts of wilful murder. When necessity constrains men to take away life, it should be done with extreme reluctance, and only in order to preservation from death, or for other important ends. And it ought not to be done, if it can be avoided by any tolerable loss or hardship; for the persons concerned should be able humbly to appeal to God that they could not avoid the painful expedient, and the innocent that innocents would not be laid to their charge. When the cause of evil is removed, the effect will commonly cease; and the renunciation of sinful pleasures or interests makes way for a sweet sense of the pardoning love of God. His servants will scarcely ever be entirely useless; he often takes occasion, even from our sins and follies, to promote the glory of his name and the salvation of souls; and if men's lives be endangered and their property diminished, through their acquaintance with his worshippers, yet, if their discourse or example bring any to fear, trust, worship, and obey God, their gain will be great. Surely the conduct of these heathen mariners will rise up in judgment against numbers of those that are called Christians, who neither offer prayers in their distresses, nor sacrifices of thanksgiving for their most signal deliverances! The Lord will humble, but he will not destroy, his offending servants; and he can preserve, or punish, in numberless ways, of which we have no conception. But let us not overlook Him, who gave himself up to death, to rescue us from the wrath of God: the storm
JONAH.

8 But let man and beast be covered with sackcloth, * and cry mightily unto God: yea, * let them turn every one from his evil way, and from the violence that is in their hands.

9 * Who can tell if God will turn and repent, and turn away from his fierce anger, that we perish not?

10 And * God saw their works, that they turned from their evil way; * and God repented of the evil that he had said that he would do unto them; and he did it not.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The sincerity of our repentance must be evinced by obedience, in those particulars especially about which we have been most rebellious: and the Lord seals the forgiveness of his offending servants, by again employing them in his honourable work. But he will not soften or alter his messages, because of any man’s reluctance to deliver them, or to hear them; or because of the numbers or the power of those whom they condemn. The fear of the power and wrath of God, and the experience of his mercy, will raise us above the fear of men; and he can render the most timorous bold as lions, to proclaim his truths in the midst of his most powerful enemies. We are often needlessly afraid of men in obeying God; for he gives his word a more favourable reception than we expected; and sometimes the heathen will be more attentive than his professed worshippers. It is by faith, that sinners, when warned, are moved by fear to inquire after deliverance from the wrath to come; a small degree of light may convince men, that fasting, humiliation before God, confession of sin, prayer, and turning away from known iniquity and impiety, are probable means of escaping wrath, and obtaining, though not of meriting mercy; and kings and nobles cannot do a more essential service to the people, than in lead-
CHAPTER IV.

Jonah, displeased at the mercy of God to Nineveh, persuasively expostulates, and prays for death, 1-3. God gently reproveth him, 4. He leaves the city; is shadowed by a gourd, which withers; he manifests great impatience and rebellion; but is shown, by his concern about the gourd, the propriety of God's mercy to Nineveh, 5-11.

But it displeased Jonah exceedingly, and he was very angry. 2 And he prayed unto the Lord, and said, I pray thee, O Lord, was not this my saying, when I was yet in mine country? Therefore I fled before unto Tarshish: for I knew that thou art a gracious God, and merciful, slow to anger, and of great kindness, and repentest thee of the evil.

3 Therefore now, O Lord, take, I beseech thee, my life from me; for it is better for me to die than to live. 4 Then said the Lord, Doest thou well to be angry?

5 And so Jonah went out of the city, and sat on the east side of the city, and there made him a booth, and sat under it in the shadow, till he might see what would become of the city.

6 And the Lord God prepared a gourd, and made it to come up over Jonah, that it might be a shadow over his head, to deliver him from his grief; and so Jonah was exceeding glad of the gourd.

7 But God prepared a worm when the morning rose the next day, and it smote the gourd that it withered. 8 And it came to pass when the sun did arise, at the heat thereof, that God prepared a vehement east wind; and the sun beat upon the head of Jonah, that he fainted, and made a proclamation against Nineveh, he was aware of the event. He knew that God would mercifully spare the city, and that he should be stigmatized as a false prophet; being well acquainted with the mercy and goodness of God towards his offending creatures. And now, seeing this had turned out as he expected, he besought God to slay him and end his pain, for death was more desirable in his case than life: as if the Lord had done him an injury in delivering him from the belly of the whale! We must allow something in this case to the feelings and prejudices of the Israelites, under that dispensation: for they were too apt to despise the Gentiles, and to deem the mercy of God to them a deduction from their own privilege. Jonah might also consider Nineveh as a formidable enemy to his nation, and in that view wish for its destruction. Some think, he had a mistaken zeal for the honour of God, and thought that he would appear to have broken his word, in not executing the judgment that he had denounced.

—But it is evident, that he was greatly influenced by a proud and rebellious spirit; that he considered the Ninevites as unworthy of his regard; and that he had neither expected nor desired their welfare, but had only come to denounce and witness their destruction. It is equally evident that he was not duly humbled for his own sins; and had an undue regard to his own reputation; fearing the disgrace of being thought a false prophet, and not daring to trust God to take care of his credit and safety. In this frame of mind, he overlooked the good done, and the glory of the divine goodness and mercy, as of little consequence. Yet the Lord reproved him with gentleness, and inquired whether he had cause to be thus disposed, or did right in these peevish complaints and impatient wishes for death, when such mercy had been shown him? To which he seems to have made no answer, but to have continued sullen and fretful.
wished in himself to die, and said, It is better for me to die than to live.

9 And God said to Jonah, Doest thou well to be angry for the gourd? And he said, *I * do well to be angry, even unto death.*

10 Then said the Lord, Thou hast not laboured, neither madest it grow; which § came up in a night, and perished in a night:

11 And should not I spare Nineveh, that great city, wherein are more than sixscore thousand persons? that can-cannot discern between their right hand and left hand; and also much cattle?

V. 5-8. Doubtless Jonah might have been hospitably entertained at Nineveh, and allowed to live according to his own rules, had he been disposed to be friendly; and he might have been usefully employed in confirming the inhabitants in their good purposes, and in instructing them in the truth and worship of God. But though he had received an intimation that the city would be spared, he seems not to have believed it: and he would neither venture himself in the city, nor have any fellowship with the inhabitants; as if he meant, notwithstanding their repentance, to shake off the dust of his feet, for a testimony against them. He therefore left the city, and made a booth or tent to dwell in, till he should see the event. It pleased God, however, very graciously and miraculously, to prepare a large gourd, which with rapid growth and luxuriant foliage, was speedily ready to afford him a refreshing shadow from the heat of the sun, from which it seemed his tent could not defend him. This tended to appease his grief and calm his spirits: nay, he was exceedingly glad on account of this personal accommodation; whilst the repentance and preservation of a great city made him very angry and peevish! To check this disproportionate joy, and to make way for his further humiliation and instruction, the Lord caused a worm to destroy the root of the gourd; so that the next day it withered: and a sultry east wind increasing the burning heat of the morning sun, Jonah was so oppressed, that he fainted, grew more impatient than ever, and wished again for death as the most desirable deliverance from his misery. Some think, that he left the city, before he had seen the tokens of repentance among the inhabitants; and others, that he waited till the forty days were almost expired, when, dreading some sudden destruction, he dared not to stay any longer. It, however, seems most probable, that he both witnessed the conduct of the Ninevites, and had some intimations of the Lord's gracious purposes, before he left the city; and that he retired from it immediately after.

V. 9-11. The Lord was graciously pleased to renew his exhortations with Jonah at this crisis, and to inquire whether the withering of the gourd could warrant such anger and impatience? But he proudly and passionately justified himself, asserting that he had cause to be angry, even unto death; that is, to break his heart, and to die with grief and vexation. Upon this the Lord graciously condescended to argue the matter with him. Had he pity on the gourd, or such a regard for it, merely for his own convenience and refreshment? and was he very angry when it withered: though it was not his work or property, and had cost him no labour, and though it was naturally of a swift growth and a withering nature? And was it not right, that the Lord should spare Nineveh, in which were so vast a number of his creatures, formed by his power and for the purposes of his glory? If all the inhabitants of that city, who were capable of knowing good from evil, without one exception, were deserving of the most tremendous punishment and ripe for vengeance; yet there were no less than a hundred and twenty thousand infants, incapable of knowing their right hand from their left, who were no more criminal than the offspring of others of man's fallen race: and would Jonah quarrel with his Maker for sparing the city for their sakes? There was also much cattle in the city; to which God had respect, as far more valuable than the withering gourd. And it was further implied, that among the many hundreds of thousands of grown persons in the city, there were numbers of true penitents; and the general humiliation and reformation that had been effected, rendered it peculiarly suitable for God to glorify his mercy in their preservation. Hence it might be inferred, that Jonah was deeply criminal, in being so much concerned about his own case, comfort, and credit; and so unconcerned about the honour of God, and the benefit of his creatures. We may hope, that this silenced and humbled Jonah; that he at length learned submission; and, being made to know the evil of his own heart, that he would be prepared to serve God in the prophetic office with more humility and propriety, than he had hitherto done.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-4.

Human depravity breaks out in such varied ways, as occasions are given, that it is not easy to say what a man is incapable of. Regard to his own honor, or that of his sect, or a proud contempt of others, may possibly seduce even a believer in an unguarded hour, to quarrel with the goodness of the Lord; nay, malignity, in some occasional emotions, may delude a man to think it more desirable to resent or scold the ruins of others, than to be instrumental to their preservation. Indeed this is the root of all bigotry and persecution, as far as pious men have ever been betrayed into it: (Luke ix. 51-56.) Even a faithful minister may, in some possible circumstances, be tempted to impatience, by witnessing unexpected success to his own labours, in places where he had little desire of it, whilst his sanguine hopes and ardent wishes for others have been disappointed; or when his success was productive of bitter effects to his character or interests. When great good is done by those, whose conduct is so inconsistent, and so tends to prejudice men against his ministry; it must be most evident, that the excellency of the power is of "God and not of man." Nothing but a deep knowledge of own hearts can explain to us how it is possible for a true believer to pray in the language of rebellion and self-justification respecting things most flagrantly evil.
How a man, that hath been convicted, corrected, humbled, marvelously delivered, and made thankful for such mercies, can be induced again to vindicate before God his former transgression: How a prophet could decline preaching for fear he should do good; or repent of preaching because he had been singularly successful: Or justify his fleeing from his work, because he knew that the Lord was gracious and merciful: Or mention these endearing per-fections of God, to complain of them: Or how the severest discipline, and the most marvellous deliverances should fail to cure this perverseness. Yet of these things our hearts are capable, and these are but a small part of their deceitfulness and desperate wickedness. This would appear, if God should now, (as he one day will,) publish an impartial history of the secret thoughts of our hearts, in our varied experiences. It is, however, most criminal to indulge this proud and peevish spirit in our prayers: yet this too will be our case, unless we carefully watch over our passions, when under great difficulties and strong temptations. We are even capable of sincerely thanking God one day for sparing our lives, and of fretting the next because we are left to live in trouble! And we are apt to think it better for us to die than to live: not so much because heaven is more desirable than earth, or lest we should live to dishonour God; but because we are troubled by our own imaginations and corruptions; or because we are exposed to reproach and the cross, amidst our successful endeavours to glorify God and do good to mankind. In general we are most apt to desire death, when we are least fit to meet our Judge: so that the mercy of God is as much displayed in bearing with his peevish servants, as in pardoning repenting rebels; and his gentle reproves most effectually show the evil of our discontent and impatience.

V. 5—11.

We often create ourselves uncaseiness by our folly: nay, some are tempted to retire from public stations when they have the fairest opportunities of usefulness! Yet the Lord often sends gracious consolations, when we merit heavy trials, and soothes those sorrows that result from our sin and folly. The same strong ungoverned passions, that expose us to be cast down at trifling difficulties, will render us exceedingly glad of trivial advantages, and dispose us to idealize our dying comforts. These the Lord often recalls, to teach us that all our ourds must wither, and that he alone is the durable Portion of his people. When we are disconsolated without cause, we may expect some real affliction: and the Lord sometimes seems intent with his own hand to increase our sorrows, when we are ready to faint under them, in order to humble us for our future good. But pride and anger render men incapable of perceiving the most glaring absurdities in their own conduct, and dispose them to vindicate the most daring rebellions.
Our discontent, murmurs, contentions, and despondings are often about such trifles, that the cause of them needs only be mentioned, in order to their being exposed! The Lord takes from us what was never ours, and was never likely to continue with us; he sends a little pain or reproach instead of everlasting misery and contempt; and we think we do well to be angry, and even break our hearts with impatience; and speak and act, as if our grief were inconsolable and our wound incurable! Whilst we thus selfishly and in unbelief regard our own case, interest, or credit, we proportionately disregard the glory of God, and the lives and souls of our neighbours: as if these were not worth our attention, compared with our own feelings: so contrary are we to the law of loving God supremely, and our neighbour as ourselves! And such need have we of the pardoning mercy, the atoning blood, and new-creating Spirit of our God! But his mercies are over all his works:
he has a property in his creatures, and will leave none to perish, but for the honour of his justice, holiness, truth, and wisdom. He delighteth in pardoning the penitent;
our infant-offspring are the objects of his tenderest regard;
and even the irrational creatures share his compassion and bounty. Let us then rejoice, and be thankful for, and imitate, the mercies of our God; and whilst he condescends to expostulate with us on our selfishness; may our hearts be humbled and softened to compassion and goodwill to all men, and prepared for every service to which we are called.
THIS prophet was of the kingdom of Judah, as he only makes mention of kings who reigned over that country.—Marshall, (14, 15,) is placed in Judah. (Josh. xv. 44, 2 Chr. xi. 8.) (Bp. Newcombe.)—He is called the Morasthite, from the place of his nativity, Morasthi, which St. Jerome distinguishes from Marashah; though he places them both in the land of Judah. (Louth.)—Micah was contemporary with Isaiah, and Hosea: but it is probable that he began to prophesy later than they. The date of the third chapter, is fixed in Jeremiah to the reign of Hezekiah: but nothing further is known with certainty, concerning the time when his predictions were delivered.

He addressed his messages both to Judah and Israel: and his book, like that of the other prophets, contains sharp reproofs of sin, awful denunciations of wrath, encouraging promises and predictions of Christ, and of the establishment and prosperity of his kingdom. It is evident that Micah was acknowledged to be a prophet, and that his prophecy was well known in the time of Jeremiah. (Jer. xxvi. 18.) His authority, as a prophet, and that of his book as a part of Scripture, are twice appealed to in the New Testament, in respect of the place where the Messiah should be born. (Matt. ii. 5. John vii. 42.) Our Lord uses nearly his words, concerning the persecutions, to which his disciples would be exposed. (Com. vii. 6. with Matt. xxv. 35, 36;) and many of his predictions have received an undeniable accomplishment. (Notes, iii. 8—12. iv. 2—4. v. 2—6;) though others are not yet fulfilled. His style hath been much admired by the best judges: though it is occasionally obscure, through conciseness and sudden transitions from one subject to another.

B. C. 743.

CHAP. I.

The time when Micah prophesied, 1. Judgments denounced against Samaria and Jerusalem for their sins, 2—7. Alamentation over the terror and distress occasioned by the Assyrian invasion, 9—16.

The word of the Lord that came to Micah the Morasthite, in the days of Jotham, Ahaz, and Hezekiah, kings of Judah, which he saw concerning Samaria and Jerusalem.

2 Hear, all ye people; hearken, O earth, and all that therein is; and let the Lord God be witness against you, 1 and the Lord from his holy temple.

3 For, behold, the Lord comeeth forth out of his place, and will come down, and tread upon the high places of the earth.

4 And the mountains shall be melted under him, and the valleys shall be cleft, as wax before the fire, and as the waters that are poured down upon a steep place.

NOTES.

CHAP. I. V. 2—4. Earth, or land, of the Hebrews. 'Let the Lord bear testimony against you, and forewarn you of your danger, by me his prophet.'

(Bp. Newcombe.) 'I call him to witness, that I have forewarned you of the judgments that hang over your heads, unless you speedily repent: and he himself will become a witness against you, and convince you of your 5 For the transgression of Jacob is all this, and for the sins of the house of Israel. What is the transgression of Jacob? is it not Samaria? and what are the high places of Judah? are they not they of Jerusalem?

6 Therefore I will make Samaria as an heap of the field, and as plantings of a vineyard: and I will pour down the stones thereof into the valley, and I will discover the foundations thereof.

7 And all the graven images thereof shall be broken to pieces, and all the hires thereof shall be burned with fire, and all the idols thereof will I lay desolate: for she gathered it of the hire of an harlot, and they shall return to the hire of an harlot.

8 Therefore I will wail and howl, I will go stripped and naked: I will make a wailing like the dragons, and mourning as the owls.

9 For her wound is incurable; for it is come unto Judah; he is come unto the gate of my people, even to Jerusalem.

10 Declare ye it not at Gath, weep not at all: in the house of the posterity of the Philistines they shall make great slaughter.

11 Pass ye away, thouth inhabitant of Saphir, having thy shame naked: the inhabitant of Zaanan came not forth in the mourning of Beth-el; he shall not receive of thee his standing.

12 For the inhabitant of Maroth waited carefully for good: but evil came down from the LORD unto the gate of Jerusalem.

13 O thou inhabitant of Lachish, I will bind the chariot to the swift beast; she is the beginning of sin to the daughter of Zion: for the transgressions of Israel were found in thee.

14 Therefore shall they give presents to Moresheth-gath: the houses of Achzib shall be a lie to the kings of Israel.

15 Yet will I bring an heir unto thee, O inhabitant of Mareshah: he shall come unto Adullam the glory of Israel.

16 Make thee bale, and poll thee for thy dedicative children; enlarge thy baldness as the eagle; for they are gone into captivity from thee.

The word rendered dragons, frequently signifies sea-monsters; but here a land-animal seems to be intended. The word may signify a kind of wild beast like a dog, between a dog and a fox, or a wolf and a dog, our English travellers call them Jakallas) which abiding in the fields and waste places, make in the night a lamentable howling noise. Onls or ostriches. During the lonesome part of the night, they often make a very doleful and hideous noise. I have, often heard them, as if they were in the greatest agonies, an action, beautifully alluded to by the prophet Micah. (Bp. Newcome.)

V. 10-16. The prophet seems here to have had in prospect both the ruin of Samaria and the desolations of 5 K
Israel by Shalmanesar, and the invasion of Judah by Senacherib, kings of Assyria. These successes, of idolaters against Jehovah's worshippers, ought not to be declared at Gath, lest the Philistines should rejoice; (2 Sam. 20:20.) In their presence the Israelites ought not to weep at all. The word Aphrah signifies dust; and the prophet, it is likely, puts it here for Aphrah, in the tribe of Benjamin. (Josh. xviii. 23.) that the name may better suit their condition. In the distressed cities or towns of Israel and Judah, the inhabitants would be called to roll themselves in the dust. Sophir signifies fair or beautiful; (some think Samarion was intended;) but its inhabitants would be stripped of their comely ornaments, torn from their habitations, and led away as naked slaves. Zaanann, (Josh. xv. 37.) Zaanann signifies a place of storks; Bethzel, a house that is near: the inhabitants of the former would not go forth to assist the latter under their distresses; but the enemy would soon fix his station among them, and they would share the fate of their neighbours, and the invaders would obtain a large compensation for their encamping before the city. Maroth signifies bitterness, (Josh. xv. 59. Mearath,) but some think that Ramoth was meant, which signifies exaltations. The inhabitants carefully looked out for and expected better tidings or better times; but evil came from the Lord upon them, and even proceeded to the gates of Jerusalem. Lachish was a city of Judah, but it bordered on Israel; and having learned their idolatries, it communicated to them the inhabitants of other cities, and the sons of Jerusalem: therefore the city would probably be taken and plundered by the Assyrians: and the inhabitants would be glad to flee away in chariots drawn by horses, dromedaries, or the fleeter animals: and they would give presents to Merodach-gath, some town belonging to the Philistines, to tempt them into the invaders. Achzib signifies a lie; and thus that city would deceive the expectation of the kings of Israel. The Lord would also bring the Assyrians, or their colonies, to be the heirs of Maroth, which signifies an heir, or an inheritance, and they would also seize upon Adullam, and mar all the glory of Israel. The honourable men shall be forced to hide themselves, in the cave of Adullam, as David did when he fled from Saul. (Lament.) (Marg. Ref.)—The nation might therefore prepare, (as a mother,) to show every token of distress and mourning over her children, brought up delicately and greatly delighted in, (casing off her ornaments, and cutting off her hair as the eagle moults its feathers,) for they would all in a short time be carried into captivity.

when the morning is light they practise it, because it is in the power of their hand.

2 And they covet fields, and take them by violence; and houses, and take them away: so they oppress a man and his house, even a man and his heritage.

3 Therefore thus saith the Lord; Behold, against this family do I devise an evil, from which ye shall not remove, even to cut off from before the sight of thine eyes two generations. (Ezek. xx. 27.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

They who would escape the Lord's indignation, must hearken diligently to the reproofs and warnings, as well as the doctrines and encouragements, of the sacred oracles.—The Lord will bear witness against all, as well as denounce judgment upon, the workers of wickedness; and his holy temple will not protect hypocrites, but enhance their condemnation. When he comes forth from his place to execute judgment, the haughty and powerful of the earth will tremble and fall before him: for how can sinners endure that presence, before which the elements shall melt and the whole creation shall vanish away? But our transgressions alone render his presence terrible to us: and if sin be pardoned and subdued we have nothing to fear, at death or in the day of judgment. Capital crimes and great men too often give examples of inflamed iniquity, which flow from them throughout whole kingdoms, and infect all the lower orders in society; and the judgments of God will follow in the same channels, and in the same proportion: for ringleaders in wickedness must expect to have the first or largest measure of punishment; and that wealth, which is obtained by vice, will be spent or lost with disgrace and misery. But we should lament the distresses, that we foresee coming upon the ungodly: and tears seem far more congenial to our condition in this world than laughter. No hand can cure the wounds that the Lord inflicts, except his own: we may hope, wait, and seek for good, but evil must come upon us unless he be reconciled to us: all other refuge but Christ must be lies to those who trust in them: other heirs will succeed to every inheritance, except that of heaven; and all glory will be turned into the hoar-frost, if not connected with the hoarfrost that cometh from God only. Sinners may now selfishly disregard the sufferings of their neighbours; yet their turn will soon come. But it is most grievous, when the sins and sorrows of the Church are so notorious, as to rejoice the hearts, and embolden the blasphemies, of her avowed enemies.

NOTES.

CHAP. II. V. 1. The people devised evil in their hearts on their beds, forming their schemes of oppression and robbery during the night, and arising early to carry them into execution, having power to overcome all opposition to their iniquities, and to bear them out in them. (Marg. Ref.)
your necks; neither shall ye go haughtily: for this time is evil.

4 In that day shall one take up a parable against you, and lament with a doleful lamentation, and say, We be utterly spoiled: he hath changed the portion of many of his people: how hath he removed it from me? turning away he hath divided our fields.

5 Therefore thou shalt have none that shall cast a cord by lot in the congregation of the Lord.

6 ¶ Prophesy ye not, say to them that prophesy: they shall not prophesy to them, that they shall not take shame: and prophesy, ye, prophesy not.

7 O thou that art named the house of Jacob, is the Spirit of the Lord straitened? are these his doings? do not thy words do good to him that walketh uprightly?

8 ¶ Even of late my people is risen up as an enemy: ye pull off the robe with the garment from them that pass by securely as men averse from war.

V. 2. 3. 'As they devise mischief against others; so will I devise evil against them. As they have unjustly deprived others of their inheritance; so shall a conquering enemy dispossess them, and carry them into captivity.' The word family is equivalent to people.' (Louth.)

V. 4. 5. The Lord, by the Assyrians and Chaldeans, would make the whole house of Israel lament, that their portion was changed from prosperity to captivity in that of their enemies. He would wonderfully remove their inheritance from them, and, turning away in anger, he would divide their fields to others: nor should there be any appointed, to assign them by lot a portion of land amongst the congregation of the Lord, as had been the case in the days of Joshua, and in the years of jubilee: for they would be totally dispossessed and excluded from their peculiar privileges.

V. 6. 7. The rulers and people endeavoured to silence the true prophets, that they might no more hear their offensive and alarming predictions: and therefore the Lord would deprive them of that invaluable advantage; and let none prophesy to them to put them to shame or bring them to repentance. But did it behave those, that were called by the name of Jacob, to act as if the Spirit of God might be limited in his operations, and constrained to inspire only such things as pleased them? Were these the doings of Jacob? Were these such actions as God would approve? Or were the severe messages of the prophets the Lord's doings, when the sins of the people alone had rendered them necessary? And would they not be useful to them if they uprightness desired to know and do the will of God? And did not all his words, whether they alarmed, humbled, instructed, reproved, or encouraged the people, conduce to the real benefit of all who were upright in heart?

V. 8-10. The people, who were called God's worshippers, had of late, more than ever before, risen against him and his servants as enemies: they had robbed and oppressed the insensitive of the head; and they had forcibly dispossessed the women from their pleasant habitations: and had sold their children for slaves, depriving them finally of their liberty, country, religion, and all the privileges which God had bestowed on Israel to be their glory. The Lord in anger therefore commanded them to arise, and get out of the land into captivity. It should no longer be their rest and quiet habitation, seeing it was polluted by their idolatry and iniquity: but it should rather be to them a place of execution, where they would be destroyed in a most tremendous manner. Many suppose that the ravages committed by Pekah, when Israel made tremendous destruction in Judah, is referred to, as one cause of Israel's ruin.

V. 11. A man, habitually influenced by the spirit of lies, who, for the sake of wine and sensual indulgence, would encourage the people to hope for impunity in sin, and abundance of every thing requisite for the gratification of their passions; who would be more welcome to them, and more congenial to their sentiments and conduct, than the holy servants of God were: and therefore they would be left to be deceived by such prophets.
fore them, and the Lord on the head of them.

d CHAP. III.

Micah reproves the princes for their cru ty, and the prophets for their falsehoods and selfishness, i—7. He declares himself inspired and authorized by the Spirit of God to protest against the sins and presumption of the princes, priests, and prophets; and to denounce the desola tions of the city and temple, 8—12.

AND I said, * Hear, I pray you, O heads of Jacob, and ye princes of the house of Israel; Is it not for you to know judgment?

2 Who hate the good, and love the evil; who pluck off their skin from of them, and their flesh from off their bones;

V. 12, 13. Many expositors interpret these verses, according to the context, as a prediction of the captivity of Israel and Judah. After great numbers had perished, the remnant of them would be assembled, as a flock of sheep in Bozrah into the midst of the fold, to be thence taken out for the slaughter; and the multitude of them, or that of their enemies, would make a great noise and con fusion. The Assyrian or Chaldean commander would march before the army, to break his way into the city; and after the walls had been destroyed, the gates would be opened, by which they would go forth with their spoil and prisoners, with the king of the victorious army before them; and the Lord himself at the head of them, pros pering their undertakings and using them as his execution ers: and indeed this seems the most obvious interpretation.
Yet very respectable expositors understand the passage as a prophecy of the conversion of the Jews and Israelites to Christ. The Lord would not only bring back the rem nant of the nation from Babylon, multiply them as a flock of sheep, and turn their mourning into joyful acclama tions; but he would in due time bring them into the Christian Church as the sheep of his pasture. The Lord Jesus, in the character of The Breaker, would open their way through all obstacles, into a state of communion with God, and happiness in his favour: he would break through all hindrances, by his miraculous incarnation, his obedience and sufferings, resurrection, ascension, and intercession; by leading captivity captive, and opening the gates of heaven to all believers: and by the work of his Spirit in their hearts, breaking off the fetters of sin and Satan.
Thus he hath gone before, and his people follow, breaking, in his strength, through the hosts of their enemies, that obstruct their way to heaven. Their King hath passed before them, and the Lord is at their head, and he leads them forward to share his victories and triumphs, till they enter the same everlasting mansions, and death the last enemy be destroyed. The conversion and restoration of the Jews, according to this interpretation, are especially foretold.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The more deliberately wickedness is contrived and com mitted, the greater guilt is contracted: and men must give an account of all that passes in their hearts, on their beds, and in their most secret retirements. Yet many think every thing allowable that is practicable, and which for the present may be done with impunity; regardless of the woe that God hath denounced against such successful plun derers! The unwearied diligence of wicked men in their sinful pursuits, should shame us out of our indolence in the service of God. When covetousness occupies the heart, vioence or fraud will commonly employ the hands: and whilst men thus oppress whole families, and rob even their provide posterity of their heritage, to enrich themselves; they forget, that the almighty God devises evil against them, from which they will find no possible way of es cape; and that an evil time is coming, when they shall no more behave themselves with meekness and insolen Then their joyful congratulations will be turned into de deful lamentations, that they are utterly spoilt, driven from their earthly portion, and excluded for ever from all share in the inheritance of the congregation of the Lord. No wonder such men hate the faithful messengers of God, who would put them to shame for their sins: they have only the name of Christians, or they would not think to modify the language of the Holy Spirit by human authority, to silence those whom God commands to speak, or to teach his ministers to accommodate their doctrine to humour their lusts. These are not the doings of true Israelites, who are without guile, and who love and profit by all the words of God. Such nominal Christians are in fact the worst enemies of God and his Church, and often join per secution of his people with oppression of the widow and the orphan: and their polluted privileges will soon be taken from them and turn to their destruction. Teachers who will recommend self-indulgence by their doctrine and ex ample, best suit them; and they will generally be given up to such deceivers. But Christ's sheep hear his voice and follow him: he gathers them into his fold and feeds them in his pasture; and an innumerable multitude are already collected, who are before the throne joyfully as cribing salvation to God and to the Lamb that was slain.
As he hath rent the veil, and opened our way to the throne of grace; as he hath burst the grave and opened the gates of heaven, and entered as our Forerunner: let us depe on him, and follow him, and so break through the mazes and customs of the world, the opposition of sin and Satan, and all the difficulties in our way to glory. And when we are called to arise, and depart out of this polluted world to our rest in heaven, we need fear no evil in passing through death and the grave; for he will be with us, and bring us both in soul and body to his holy habitation.
3 Who also eat the flesh of my people, and flay their skin from off them; and they break their bones, and chop them in pieces, as for the pot, and as flesh within the caldron.

4 Then shall they cry unto the Lord, but he will not hear them: he will even hide his face from them at that time, as they have behaved themselves ill in their doings.

5 Thus saith the Lord concerning the prophets that make my people err, that bite with their teeth, and cry, Peace; and he that putteth not into their mouths, they even prepare war against him:

6 Therefore night shall be unto you, that ye shall not have a vision: and it shall be dark unto you, that ye shall not be divined; and the sun shall go down over the prophets, and the day shall be dark over them.

7 Then shall the seers be ashamed, and the diviners confounded: yea, they shall all cover their face; for there is no answer of God.

8 But truly I am full of power by the Spirit of the Lord, and of judgment, and of might, to declare unto Jacob his transgression, and to Israel his sin.

9 Hear this, I pray you, ye heads of Jacob, and princes of the house of Israel, that abhor judgment, and pervert all equity.

10 They build up Zion with blood, and Jerusalem with iniquity.

11 The heads thereof judge for reward, and the priests thereof teach for hire, and the prophets thereof divine for money: yet will they lean upon the Lord, and say, Is not the Lord among us? none evil can come upon us.

12 Therefore shall Zion for your sake be plowed as a field, and Jerusalem shall become heaps, and the mountain of the house as the high places of the forest.

NOTES.

CHAPTER III. V. 1–4. The rulers of Israel might be intended by this address, as well as those of Judah; yet the latter seems to be chiefly meant. They had every opportunity of knowing the rules of justice and equity, and it was peculiarly incumbent on them to understand and practise them; yet they carelessly, nay, wilfully, continued ignorant of them, or decided causes and enacted laws in opposition to them. They evidently hated every thing good and all pious men; and loved wickedness, and the wicked, by whom they could serve their own base purposes. Instead of feeding and protecting the Lord's flock, they fleeced, butchered, and devoured them; reducing the poor people to the deepest misery by their cruel exactions and oppressions. They would therefore shortly cry out under the oppressions of their enemies or other great distresses, but the Lord would utterly disregard them, according to their behaviour to him and their poor brethren. The marginal references will show those who examine them, that these verses are also peculiarly descriptive of the character and conduct of the Jewish scribes, priests, and rulers, in the days of Christ and his apostles; and perhaps predict the subsequent condition of that people.

V. 5–7. The false prophets likewise were highly criminal; and indeed the cause of the general wickedness of the nation. They flattered the people into a delusive expectation of peace in their evil ways: yet they were ready to bile and devour such as opposed them, and even to declare war against those who would not satisfy their avarice and rapacity, being greedy dogs, that could never have enough; so that their peaceable and soft language was restricted to their prophecysings before those who paid well for them. Therefore the 'approaching distresses should confute their prognostications, and prevent them from pretending to any more visions. The sun of their prosperity, reputation, and hope, would suddenly be darkened, and leave them in misery, contempt, and despair. God would shame and silence all such seers and diviners; and they should cover their lips as mourners or unclean persons; confessing that they could obtain no answer from God to their anxious inquiries concerning the end of their calamities. (Marg. Ref.) How exactly does this describe the state of that once favoured nation, for above the last seventeen hundred years?

V. 8–12. It is probable that Micah was greatly opposed by the wicked princes and false prophets: but he knew and confidently declared, that he spake by the authority of God and the inspiration of his Spirit: that he was abundantly endued with honesty, wisdom, and energy, to deliver his faithful message, whether they would hear it or not; and that he was especially commissioned to declare unto his people the number and heinousness of their sins. He therefore encouraged the rulers of the people to attend, and not to persist in engaging against God. They had indeed abhorred all justice and perversed equity; they had beautified the city with magnificent houses, and fortified it with walls, and perhaps repaired, or added buildings to, the temple; but it was done with money that had been the wages of murder and oppression. The magistrates, priests, and prophets, were alike mercenary and avaricious: yet they were exalted upon their external privileges, the temple of God, and their formal worship; so that when they were warned of approaching judgments, they inquired whether the Lord were not among them, and were confident no evil would befall them. To punish therefore their hypocrisy and iniquity, the city would certainly be desolated, and become... say, Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Jacob: and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for the law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem.

But in the last days it shall come to pass, that the mountain of the house of the Lord shall be established in the top of the mountains, and it shall be exalted above the hills; and people shall flow unto it.

And many nations shall come, and say, Come, and let us go up to the mountain of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Jacob; and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths: for the law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem.

And he shall judge among many people, and rebuke strong nations afar off; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks; nation shall not lift up a sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.

Heaps of rubbish, and the mountain where the temple stood would be rendered as waste and unfrequented as the forests and deserts. This prophecy was delivered in the reign of Hezekiah, and probably in the beginning of it. (Note, Jer. xxvi. 16—19.) The princes, priests, and prophets, in general either disowned his zeal for reformation, or concealed in a hypocritical manner; but the king was determined, and these predictions seem to have encouraged and quickened his resolutions, and to have stirred up more persons to concur with him: by which means the judgments were retarded, but not averted. The destruction of the city and temple by the Romans, (as well as that by the Chaldeans,) seems to have been predicted; in which the ground where the temple stood, is said to have been broken up with a plow by the conquerors. (Marg. Ref.)

The avowed counsel of Caiaphas to put our Lord to death, without alleging any charge against him, that the nation might not perish, was a remarkable instance of that carnal policy, by which princes and priests have attempted to build Zion with blood, even the blood of the prophets, apostles, and ministers of God.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Princes and magistrates are more concerned to know judgment than other men, as their conduct has more important and extensive effects; and princes in Israel have abundant opportunity of knowing it. Yet, through human depravity and the temptations peculiar to their situation, they are often ignorant of the rules by which they ought to govern, judge, or act: and sometimes they most evidently prove, that they hate the good and love the evil, by their iniquitous exactions and oppressions. Thus thousands are made miserable, to humour the caprice, to maintain the luxury and ostentation, or to gratify the ambition or avarice of one cruel tyrant. But let not such men expect to be heard or favoured by God, when they shall cry unto him in extreme distress; for “they shall have judgment with out mercy, who have showed no mercy.” Alas! such wholesome truths can seldom reach their ears, who are environed with flatterers or teachers of lies, whom they reward with a share of their plunder and riot. Such are smooth in their doctrine, soft in their manners, and courteously in their address: but they can snarl and bite too, if their inferiors offend them; and contend furiously and maliciously with those that refuse to satisfy their mercenary demands. And though they are dumb dogs, that cannot bark in the cause of God, yet they open their mouths wide, to bawl and to devour. But the light that is in them is darkness: their prosperity and honour will soon end in misery and disgrace, and their sanguine hope in black despair: they will be ashamed of their lying divinations and erroneous doctrines, by which they have fatally misled the people and they shall have no answer from God in the time of their distress. On the other hand, he who preaches by the authority and according to the oracles of God, from zeal for his glory and love to the souls of men; who is conscious of integrity and assured of the truth of his doctrine; may speak with constancy and confidence, in the midst of calamity and opposition; though he should be called upon to expose the transgressions of princes and priests who abhor judgment, and prostitute their important offices to the gratification of their vile avarice, ambition, malice, or sensuality. For even such men may be so blinded as to have a presumptuous confidence in God, and expect security in sin, because of their abused privileges and hypocritical profession: but they must be told that they are in the way of destruction; and it should be known by all, that rulers and teachers of this description are the causes of ruin to churches and nations, and answerable for all the calamities which for their sakes come upon them.

NOTES.

CHAP. IV. V. 1—3. (Notes, &c. Ps. ii. 1—5.)

The connexion of this prophecy, (which hath already been explained,) with the close of the foregoing chapter, shows, that the establishment of the Christian Church, in consequence of the abrogation of the Mosaic dispensation, and the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, were predicted. But though it hath in a measure fulfilled ever since those events, yet its great accomplishment must be future: for the Scripture cannot be broken; and the nations have not yet so submitted to the Prince of peace, as to beat their swords into plow-shares, &c.
CHAPTER IV.

4 But they shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig-tree; and none shall make them afraid: for the mouth of the Lord of hosts hath spoken it.

5 For all people will walk every one in the name of his God, and we will walk in the name of the Lord our God forever and ever.

6 ¶ In that day, saith the Lord, will I assemble her that halteth, and I will gather her that is driven out, and her that I have afflicted:

7 And I will make her that halted a remnant, and her that was cast far off a strong nation: and the Lord shall reign over them from mount Zion for ever and ever.

8 ¶ And thou, O tower of the flock, the strong hold of the daughter of Zion, against thee, that say, Let her be defiled, and let our eye look upon Zion.

9 But they shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig-tree; and none shall make them afraid: for the mouth of the Lord of hosts hath spoken it.

10 Be in pain, and labour to bring forth, O daughter of Zion, like a woman in travail: for now shalt thou go forth out of the city, and thou shalt dwell in the field, and thou shalt go even to Babylon; and there shalt thou be delivered; there the Lord shall redeem thee from the hand of thine enemies.

11 Now also many nations are gathered against thee, that say, Let her be defiled, and let our eye look upon Zion.

12 But they know not the thoughts of the Lord, neither understand they his

V. 4. This beautiful addition to the prophecy, as it stands in Isaiah, denotes the sweet harmony which in those happy days shall prevail among Christians, in communion with God and with each other; their perfect security, and peaceful industry; their thankful and comfortable use of temporal plenty, and the abundance of their spiritual consolations. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 5. The Gentiles were tenacious of the religion of their ancestors, and took pleasure in worshipping their imaginary deities: whilst Israel had always been disposed to grow weary of the worship of God, and to relapse into idolatry. But in the predicted period the true Israel will cleave to the Lord with purpose of heart, and delight greatly in worshipping his name and doing his will, with constancy and perseverance. This is, in some measure, the desire, purpose, and conduct of true believers in every age: God is their Portion, and his service will be their happiness for ever and ever. This will be remarkably fulfilled at the general conversion of the Jews, when this prophecy shall receive its utmost completion. (Lowth.)

V. 6, 7. The collecting of the exiled and dispersed Jewish captives, from Babylon to Jerusalem, (as sheep that had been lamed, or driven away by robbers;) and their subsequent increase into a considerable remnant, and then into a strong nation, under the government of the Lord, formed but a faint shadow of the rapid increase of the Christian Church, amidst all her persecutions and afflictions, in the first age after Christ: and this was but an earnest of the healing, purifying, increasing, and prospering of the Church, which we wait for; when the kingdom of the Lord shall be conspicuously set up, the Jews shall be re-admitted into the Church, and the Gentiles converted; and this reign of Christ shall continue, till it is succeeded by the everlasting kingdom of heaven. Though I have broken the power of my people, removed them into captivity far off, and afflicted them; yet will I restore them to their country, I will send them the Messiah, and will always be their King. For ever. This will be fulfilled at the future restoration of the Jews.—(Bp. Newcome.)

V. 8—10. Mount Zion was the tower of the Lord's flock under the old dispensation, the centre of their union, and the special residence of their Protector; and the temple was its strong-hold. Thither Christ the good Shepherd and the Ruler of his people came, and there first he set up his kingdom. This kingdom would be like the first dominion of Israel in the days of David and Solomon; and would surpass and supersede all other monarchies. The Son of David would come to Jerusalem and establish his kingdom, and thence its influence would extend to other nations. And though that city would soon after be destroyed, yet the evangelical Church, the spiritual Zion, would succeed to it; in which Christ reigns for the benefit of his people, and his cause must prevail even to the end of the world. Indeed, the calamities to be endured by Zion from the Assyrian invasion, and during the Chaldean ravages, and the taking and destruction of the city, (which were typical of the subsequent calamities of the Jewish nation and of the Church;) would cause her to cry aloud as a woman in her pangs; and as if there were no king to protect, or counsellor to direct her. But why did she yield to disconsolate sorrow? Let her remember, that her pains were those of travail, not the agonies of death, that she might have hope under them, and know how to exalt herself for deliverance. She would certainly be driven out of the city, and dwell as in an open field, and even be dragged to Babylon as a captive; yet that crisis would make way for her happy restoration and for better times, when the Lord would redeem her from the hand of her enemies. This event shadowed forth the recovery of the Jews from their present dispensations, and the deliverance of the Christian Church from antichristian tyranny.
CHAP. IV.

A prediction of the establishment, enlargement, peace, and prosperity of the church in the latter days, 1-8. Assurances that Zion's troubles should end happily, and her enemies be destroyed, 9-13.

But in the last days it shall come to pass, that the mountain of the house of the Lord shall be established in the top of the mountains, and it shall be exalted above the hills; and people shall flow unto it. 2 And many nations shall come, and say, Come, and let us go up to the mount of the Lord, and to the house of the God of Jacob:

and he will teach us of his ways, and we will walk in his paths; for the law shall go forth of Zion, and the word of the Lord from Jerusalem.

3 And he shall judge among many people, and rebuke strong nations afar off; and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning-hooks: nation shall not lift up a sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Princes and magistrates are more concerned to know judgment than other men, as their conduct has more important and extensive effects; and princes in Israel have abundant opportunity of knowing it. Yet, through human depravity and the temptations peculiar to their situation, they are often ignorant of the rules by which they ought to judge, govern, or act; and sometimes they most evidently prove, that they hate the good and love the evil, by their iniquitous exactions and oppressions. Thus thousands are made miserable, to humour the caprice, to maintain the luxury and ostentation, or to gratify the ambition or avarice of one cruel tyrant? But let not such men expect to be heard or favoured by God, when they shall cry unto him in extreme distress; for they shall have judgment without mercy, who have shown no mercy. Alas! such wholesome truths can seldom reach their ears, who are environed with flatterers or teachers of lies, whom they reward with a share of their plunder and riot. Such are heaps of rubbish; and the mountain where the temple stood would be rendered as waste and unfrequented as the forests and deserts. This prophecy was delivered in the reign of Hezekiah, and probably in the beginning of it, (Note, Jer. xxvi. 16-19.) The princes, priests, and prophets, in general either disbelieved or profaned his zeal for reformation, or concurred in a hypocritical manner; but the king was then decided, and these predictions seem to have encouraged and quickened his endeavours, and to have stirred up more persons to concur with him: by which means the judgments were retarded, but not averted. The destruction of the city and temple by the Romans, (as well as that by the Chaldeans,) seems to have been predicted; in which the ground, where the temple stood, is said to have been broken up with a plow by the conquerors. (Marc. Ref.)

The avowed counsel of Caiaphas to put our Lord to death, without alleging any charge against him, that the nation might not perish, was a remarkable instance of that carnal policy, by which princes and priests have attempted to build Zion with blood, even the blood of the prophets, apostles, and ministers of God.

NOTES.

CHAP. IV. V. 1-3. (Notes, &c. Is. ii. 1-5.)

The conneXion of this prophecy, (which hath already been explained,) with the close of the foregoing chapter, shows, that the establishment of the Christian Church, in consequence of the abrogation of the Mosaic dispensation, and the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans, are predictted. But though it hath in a measure been fulfilling ever since those events, yet its great accomplishment must be future; for the Scripture cannot be broken; and the nations have not yet so submitted to the Prince of peace, as to beat their swords into plow-shares, &c.
4 But they shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig-tree; and none shall make them afraid: for the mouth of the Lord of hosts hath spoken it.

5 For all people will walk every one in the name of his God, and we will walk in the name of the Lord our God for ever and ever.

6 ¶ In that day, saith the Lord, will I assemble that she which halteth, and will gather her that is driven out, and her that I have afflicted:

7 And I will make her that halteth a remnant, and her that was cast far off a strong nation: and the Lord shall reign from mount Zion forth-for ever, even for ever.

8 ¶ And thou, O tower of the flock, the strong hold of the daughter of Zion, against thee, that say, Let her be defiled, and let our eye look upon Zion.

9 Now why dost thou cry out aloud? is there no king in thee? is thy counsellor perished? is for pang shaketh thee as a woman in travail.

10 Be in pain, and labour to bring forth, O daughter of Zion, like a woman in travail: for now shalt thou go forth out of the city, and shalt dwell in the field, and thou shalt go even to Babylon; there shalt thou be delivered; there shall the Lord redeem thee from the hand of thine enemies.

11 Now also thy nations are gathered against thee, that say, Let her be defiled, and let our eye look upon Zion.

12 But they know not the thoughts of the Lord, neither understand his Counsel: 'for he shall gather them as the sheaves into the floor.
13 Arise and thresh, O daughter of Zion: for I will make thine horn iron, and I will make thy hoofs brass: and thou shalt beat in pieces many people: and I will consecrate their gain unto the Lord, and their substance unto the Lord of the whole earth.

CHAP. V.

A prophecy of the birth and kingdom of

V. 11-13. Many nations would be collected against Zion, to pollute her by their idolatries, or forward and exult in her calamities. But they would not understand that the Lord collected them, as sheaves of corn are gathered upon the floor to be threshed: and Zion, weak and dispirited as she was, should be strengthened, as with horns of iron and hoofs of brass, to trample them down and beat them in pieces: and being enriched by their plunder, she would consecrate her gain to the Lord of the whole earth, by whose assistance these victories would be obtained. There occurs nothing in the history of the Jewish church, that fully accords to this prediction. Sennacherib's army was not destroyed by the Jews; nor had they any hand in the subversion of the Babylonish monarchy. The victories of the Maccabees over Antiochus might be a partial accomplishment of it; and so might that of the Christian Church over the power of her persecutors, after the conversion of Constantine. But the grand accomplishment is yet in futurity. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

While we wait for those last days, in which the kingdom of Christ shall be exalted above all other dominions, and extended over all nations; let us be thankful for our privileges, and excite ourselves and each other to frequent the ordinances of our God; that we may learn, and walk in his holy ways, receiving the law from his hands, that being written in our hearts by his Spirit, it may evidence our interest in the righteousness of the great Redeemer.

Let us also endeavour to keep the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace, and to live peaceably with all men: that whilst the nations of the earth still continue to learn and practise war, and numbers delight in discord and confusion, it may appear by our conduct, that harmony, equity, truth, and love, are genuine effects of faith in Christ, and of his Gospel, when truly obeyed. Even in this world of contention and violence, if we have peace with God, and with our consciences and our brethren, we may rest securely under the divine protection, and fear no enemy: we may rejoice in our privileges, and walk in the name of our God, with grateful praises and unadulterated solemnity and vigour: and we should cleave to him with more constancy, than the men of this world do to their idolized possessions and pleasures. Even the weak in faith, and those who have been wounded and made to hate, in their conflicts with temptation, or have been cast out by their brethren, or driven away by persecution, or weighed down by affliction, may yet hope in the Lord. When they look to him, he will gather, strengthen, and heal them, and take care of them, as their King and Protector: even as he will render his enfeebled oppressed Church a strong nation, and superior to all enemies or competitors. In his glory his people shall be glorious, and the feeblest believer shall rejoice in the joy of his inheritance: and all the affictions of the Church and of the believer, are sure to end happily. We should then cry aloud with the prayer of faith, not with the voice of despondency, under our distresses. We have an omnipotent King to rule over us, and an all-wise Counsellor to advise us: his promises engage that the crisis of extreme sorrow shall introduce that most joyful deliverance, to all who love and obey him; for he will redeem them from all their enemies. But they who unite against Zion, to pollute or triumph over her, are ignorant of these intentions and counsels of our God, and are not aware that they are compassing their own destruction, and that they are only collecting together to be destroyed. As the strength and victory of believers are wholly from the Lord, they can do no less than ascribe all the glory to his name, and consecrate all their powers, advantages, and possessions to his service. Let us thus gird on our armour, and arise to fight the good fight of faith: and amidst our conflicts let us rejoice in hope of being made more than conquerors, and anticipate the songs of heaven; and dedicating all our talents to his service, let us seek and pray, that as the Redeemer of sinners, and the Object of all love and worship to his ransomed people, he may become the Lord of the whole earth.

NOTES.

V. 1. The victory of Zion over her enemies having been predicted in the close of the preceding chapter, they are here challenged to collect their forces for the assault. Either Nineveh or Babylon seems to be meant by "the daughter of troops," as their prosperity arose from success in war, and they were renowned for valiant soldiers. The king of Assyria besieged Samaria, and he or his captains insulted Hosea, the judge or king of Israel, with all indignities; as the victorious king of Babylonia did Zedekiah, when he had besieged and taken Jerusalem. Some have thought, that the outrageous conduct of Sennacherib and Rabshakeh to Hezekiah was meant; but Sennacherib did not besiege to Jerusalem, nor was Hezekiah ever in his power. Many, however, suppose, that Rome was intended by "the daughter of troops," and that the Romans were called upon to collect their armies to 2 But 'thou, Beth-lehem Ephratah, though thou be little among the thousands of Judah, yet out of thee shall he come forth unto me, that is to be Ruler in Israel; whose going forth have been from old, from everlasting.

3 'Therefore will he give them up, until the time that he which travailleth hath brought forth: then the remnant of his brethren shall return unto the children of Israel.

4 And he shall stand and feed in the strength of the Lord, in the majesty of the name of the Lord his God; and by the name of the Lord shall he be great unto the ends of the earth.

5 And this man shall be peace, when the Assyrian shall come into our land; and when he shall treadeth with our borders, they shall waste the land of Assyria with the sword, and the land of Nimrod in the entrances thereof; thus shall he deliver us from the Assyrian, when he cometh into our land, and when he treadeth within our borders.

besiege Jerusalem, because the Jews had thus insulted and despised Christ, the Judge of Israel: (Matt. xxvi.
67, 68.)

V. 2. The house of David would be reduced very low, but the city of David would certainly be honoured by the nativity of the Messiah. Ephratah distinguishes Bethlehem in Judah from another place of the same name, in a different part of the land, (Josh. xix. 15, 16;) and therefore Matthew here quotes the passage according to the meaning, not verbally; "And thou Bethlehem in the land of Judah." This city had been reduced to be small amongst the flourishing cities of that numerous tribe, and its many thousands under its princes; yet the birth of Christ would so dignify it, that it would by no means be the least honourable of them. (Note, Matt. ii. 2; 4-6;) for he would come forth thence to be Ruler in Jerusalem, upon the throne of David, for evermore. Or the clause may be read interrogatively, "Art thou little among the thousands of Judah?" The words, "unto me," may either refer to the Lord; and then they mean, that the birth of Christ was intended for the glory of the Father: or to the Church, as represented by the prophet; and then they signify, that the Son of God became incarnate for the salvation of his people. "His going forth had been from of old, from everlasting." This denotes his eternal co-existence with the Father as the only begotten Son; and his eternal an-

V. 5. 6. This promised Saviour and Salvation would ensure to Judah peace or deliverance, during the ravages of the Assyrians and other enemies. But as Sennacherib's invassion was not repelled by the rulers or chieftains of Israel; nor did the Jews ever invade or waste the Assyrian dominions, or those of the Chaldeans who afterwards occupied the same regions; it seems evident, that these expressions must be understood as mystically intending other enemies and persecutors of the Church, that should be of the same spirit with Sennacherib and the Assyrians.
Whatever heathen, infidel, or antichristian oppositor should at any time harass, or attempt to desolate the Church, as Sennacherib did Judah and Jerusalem, the great Shepherd of the flock would furnish a competent number of able teachers and rulers, to defeat their designs, and at length to retaliate upon them, and to destroy those that had atttempted to destroy them. This may refer to the powerful effects of the preached Gospel in the primitive times in subverting Paganism; to the termination of Pagan perse-if the name of the Lord his God; and they shall abide: for now shall he be great unto the ends of the earth

V. 3. Nevertheless, (as the word therefore may be translated:) the Jews for their sins would be given up to be harassed by the Assyrians, Chaldeans, Syrians, and Ro-

V. 3. Nevertheless, (as the word therefore may be translated:) the Jews for their sins would be given up to be harassed by the Assyrians, Chaldeans, Syrians, and Ro-

5 L
7 And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles, in the midst of many people; as a lion among the beasts of the forest, as a young lion among the flock of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver.

8 And the remnant of Jacob shall be among the Gentiles, in the midst of many people, as a lion among the beasts of the forest, as a young lion among the flock of sheep: who, if he go through, both treadeth down, and teareth in pieces, and none can deliver.

9 Thine hand shall be lifted up upon thine adversaries, and all thine enemies shall be cut off.

10 And it shall come to pass in that day, saith the Lord, that I will cut off thine enemies, and they shall fall by the sword.

11 And thou shalt destroy their chariots; and thou shalt destroy thy strongholds.

12 And thou shalt destroy their altars, and throw down their images; and thou shalt destroy all their castles.

13 Thy graven images also will I cut off, and thy standing images out of the midst of thee; and thou shalt no more worship the work of thine hands.

14 And thou shalt pluck up thy graces out of the midst of thee: so will I destroy thy cities.

15 And I will execute vengeance in anger and fury upon the heathen, such as have not heard.

ration by the conversion of the Roman emperors; and to the prosperity of the Gospel, and the ruin of all Antichristian, Pagan, and Mahometan powers, by the numerous and able Instruments that the Lord will raise up for these purposes.

V. 7—9. The remnant of Israel, that was converted to Christ in the primitive times, namely, the apostles, evangelists, and first teachers and professors of the Gospel, were scattered among many nations, as the drops of dew or the showers of rain on the earth, which cause the grass to grow in those places where no human culture is employed, and without waiting for the help of man. Thus they went into the cities and villages of the Gentiles, not as sent for by them, or commissioned by human authority, or depending on the power or wisdom of man; but as immediately employed, qualified, and approved by God: and by their doctrine, prayers, and example, they were the instruments of rendering those barbarous deserts fruitful in a large increase of spiritual worshippers, and holy servants of God our Saviour. No doubt the converted Jews will hereafter exhibit a still more striking completion of this prophecy. But to those who neglected and opposed this salvation, these same persons would be terrible and destructive as lions among the beasts of the forest, even amongst the flocks of helpless sheep. For their doctrine would condemn them, and the Lord and currying, by his providence, would cut off all their enemies. The destruction of the enemies of the Jews, after their future restoration to their own land, seems to be here predicted. (Marg. Ref.) The former verse described the benefits we are to enjoy, the converted Jews bring to those Gentiles who were disposed to embrace the Gospel: this (8) instructs us how terrible adversaries they will prove to them who persist in their enmity to them and to the truth. (Lomw.)

V. 10—15. In those happy times, the Lord promised to wean the people from all confidence in chariots, horses, cities, and strongholds; even as though they had been entirely destroyed; and to purge out all sorcery, witchcraft, and idolatry, and the relics of those abominations from among them; and having done this, he would destroy their enemies. (so the word translated cities may be rendered i and execute vengeance, in anger and fury, on the nations which have not hearkened unto me.) (Bp. Newcome.) The reformation of the Jews after their return from Babylon might be alluded to; but the purification of the Christian Church from all antichristian corruptions of faith and worship, and all idolatry and superstition, seem more immediately to be predicted. The reliance on human merits for justification; the external pomp used in worship; and the oppressive exercise of human authority in mere matters of conscience, will be entirely destroyed by the clear light of divine truth and the power of divine grace; and simplicity and purity in doctrine, worship, and practice, will prevail, when the enemies of the Church shall be destroyed.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

They who delight or excel in war often gather themselves against the Church of God; and sometimes they treat the most honorable and excellent of the saints, as the Judge of Israel and of the earth was treated in the days of his humiliation: but they cannot prevail against the cause that God upholds, or prevent the accomplishment of his decrees. We should not then be impatient, or despond under any contumely or cruelty, which we meet with for his sake. We should look steadfastly to the divine glory of the Redeemer, "who goes forth have his way of old, from everlasting," and upon his descending love to sinners, when he humbled himself to appear in our nature, and to become poor and a sufferer, that he might be our Prince and Saviour; and that by ruling over us he might confer the most invaluable blessings. A relation to him ennobles the meanest and enriches the poorest; and surely we shall not refuse to obey him, who hath a right to our services, purchased by his unspeakable sufferings for us, and immense obligations conferred on us! Great have been the effects of his redemption; yet his Church hath been left to struggle with various difficulties, and will
The Lord's controversy with his people for ingratitude, 1—9. The vain attempts of alarmed sinners to obtain his favour, contrasted with his reasonable service, 6—8. His voice must be attended to, 9—10.

Reproofs of Israel's iniquity and idolatry; with awful threatenings, 10—16.

Fear ye now what the Lord saith; Arise, contend thou before the mountains, and let the hills hear thy voice.

2 Hear ye, O mountains, the Lord's controversy, and ye strong foundations of the earth: for the Lord hath a controversy with his people, and he will plead with Israel.

3 O my people, what have I done unto thee? and wherein have I wearied thee? to testify against me.

4 For I brought thee up out of the land of Egypt, and redeemed thee out of the house of servants; and I sent before thee Moses, Aaron, and Miriam.

5 O my people, remember now what Balak king of Moab consulted, and what Balaam the son of Beor answered him from Sihim unto Gilgal; that ye may know the righteousness of the Lord.

6 Whereewith shall I come before the Lord, and bow myself before the high God? shall I come before him with burnt-offerings, with calves of a year old?

7 Hear ye, O mountains, the Lord's controversy, and ye strong foundations of the earth; for the Lord hath a controversy with his people, and he will plead with Israel.

8 O my people, what have I done unto thee? and wherein have I wearied thee? to testify against me.

9 ¶ He shall be like a sanctuary, and a stone of refuge to them that escape from the sword; and they shall seek his face, and pray unto him, when they shall suffer affliction.

10 And they shall say unto him, Wherefore didst thou rend us? why didst thou make us to cease from going up into his mountains? to cast into the deep the vessels of his covetousness? and to cut off all his horns, his swift and his strong.

11 And the Lord shall answer and say, They did not cry when I went up the mountains; therefore I will pour out my indignation upon them, and I will hide my face from them; and they shall go down under the shadow of their sins.

12 And I will return and will deal wisely with them; I will lead them again in the wilderness of the people; I will not contents with the children of Jacob, and I will not be grieved any more with Ephraim, for I am the Lord, my mercies I will not utterly destroy.

NOTES.

CHAP. VI. V. 1, 2. After having delivered the foregoing evangelical predictions, the prophet was again employed to reprove the sins of the people. He called upon them to hear the word of God: for he had ordered him to arise, and with great boldness and earnestness to contend with them, in God's behalf, before the mountains and hills; that even these strong foundations of the earth might hear his controversy with Israel, and his pleading against them; and so witness and declare his righteousness in the punishments inflicted on them. 'He taketh the high mountains and hard rocks to witness against the obstinacy of his people.' The most mighty monarchs, the most renowned sages, or most powerful nations of the earth, might thus be figuratively appealed to.

V. 3—5. The people were called upon to declare what they had aggrieved them, that they were become weary of God's worship, and prone to idolatry. Had he ever oppressed them with burdensome or unreasonable services? Or had he refused to supply their wants and protect them? If they had any thing to urge against his commandments, institutions, or dispensations, let them testify against him. Having redeemed them from slavery in Egypt, he had placed Moses, Aaron, and Miriam over them, to rule and teach them, and help them in the exercises of their religion. Nor ought they to forget the consultations of Balak and Balaam, about cursing and prevailing against them; and how the Lord constrained Balaam to bless them altogether, in every place from whence he viewed them; and how he prevented the more fatal effects of his last diabolical device against them, and turned it against Balaam, Balak, and the Moabites. ('Marg. Ref.') Thence they might learn the equity, faithfulness, and kindness of the Lord towards them, and the righteousness of his present dealings with them; for this was a specimen of his continual protection, for which they were inexcusably ungrateful. Shittim was in the plains of Moab, Gilgal lay west of Jordan, all the favours shown to Israel, from Balaam's attempt to curse them till they were encamped in the promised land, are here referred to. "Righteousness." We may often observe, that the original word includes the notion of mercy. ('Bp. Newcome.') When that to which sinners had no claim is mercifully promised, the righteousness of God is concerned in fulfilling that promise.
V. 8—9. Some eminent expositors understand these verses as the substance of Balak’s consultation with Balaam, concerning the method of obtaining the favour of Israel’s God, that he might give them leave to curse his people; and of Balaam’s answer, recommending to him justice, mercy, and a humble walk with God. But this does not at all agree with the history of those transactions; for Balaam seems, from first to last, to have recommended to Balak nothing but numerous and costly sacrifices; and then, when these failed, he counselled him to draw the Israelites into concurrence and idolatry; and to suppose, that, on some other occasion, not mentioned in the history, he gave Balak counsel, not only dissimilar to this, but directly contrary to the character and plan of all the persons concerned, is surely most unnatural and unreasonable. The words rather contain the supposed inquiries of the alarmed but ignorant Jews or Israelites, who heard of the Lord’s controversy with them. They were afraid of his vengeance, and perceived the necessity of coming and bowing down before him, as the most high God; but they did not understand how to seek acceptance with him. The burnt-offerings and sin-offerings, prescribed by the law, might perhaps be deemed insufficient; but would be welcomed with more numerous and costly oblations. Would thousands of rams alone be sufficient for their sins? Would immense quantities of oil; even rams, ten thousand rams, suffice for an oblation, suited to his greatness, and worthy of his acceptation? Or would a human sacrifice appease his wrath? (as the idolaters judged respecting their deities:) Should they give their children, their first-born, to appease their transformations; the fruit of their bodies to expiate the guilt of their souls? These absurd, impossible, or abominable proposals, presuppose the effects of ignorant unhumbled terror upon the sinner’s conscience, which is the root of superstition, in all its frivolous, cruel, and impious devices, to appease God, to quicken conscience, and merit happiness, without repentance, faith in Christ, or the sanctification of the Spirit. But to such an earnest and ignorant inquirer, the prophet answered, that the Lord has found him what was good; that is, in the holy Scriptures, (and not in this verse only, as some explain it:) and therefore, if he come before him with acceptance, it must be in the prescribed way. The holy law was good, as the standard of duty; the sacrifices and legal purifications were good, as shadows of Christ, and of his blood and sanctifying grace; as appointed means of the sinner’s expressing his repentance and faith, and seeking forgiveness and acceptation; but “the testimony of Jesus is the Spirit of prophecy,” and the chief subject of revelation; and what was there in the Lord’s requirements from his worshippers, that was unreasonable or hard? He only commanded them to do justly, rendering to God and man what was their due, and acting with honesty, integrity, and fidelity, without injuring, deceiving, oppressing, or tempting to sin; “to love mercy,” taking pleasure in exercising compassion, forgiveness, and kindness, after the example of the Lord’s goodness and mercy to them: “to walk humbly with their God,” in a teachable, dependent, submissive, patient, thankful spirit; as his creatures, as penitent sinners; and as conscious of great unworthiness, depravity, weakness, and futility; of innumerable wants, and of entire meaness and insignificance in his sight. All this is implied in, and may fairly be inferred from this passage: and we can never suppose that the prophet meant in a single verse to abrogate the ceremonial law, to supersede the necessity of a faith reliance on the promised Redeemer and his predicted atonement, or to establish another method of justification, in contradiction to the whole Scriptures: yet this is evidently the drift of some men’s reasonings from this noted text, which only show how little they understand what is meant by “walking humbly with our God.” The original is, “humble thyself before God,” intimating, that walking before God, as his accepted worshippers, though the utmost honour which can be conferred on us, is so contrary to our natural pride, that we must be greatly humbled before we will come to walk thus with him; and that God so abhors pride, that, till we are humbled in his sight, we cannot be admitted to the privilege of walking with him. (Marg. Ref.) Hypocrites and habitual sinners hope to obtain God’s favour, by performing the external duties of religion; and are willing to purchase their own pardon on any terms, but that of reforming their lives. (Luther.) But are not Pharisees, and all other proud men, equally unwilling “to become as little children,” and submit to God’s righteousness, to abase themselves in unreserved repentance, to renounce all ideas but that of mercy, to receive Christ Jesus as their only Saviour, and cordially to subscribe the humiliating doctrines of the Gospel? And can a sinner, however reformed in his life, come to God, and walk with him, while he neglects and dislikes the great salvation of Christ?
10 Are there yet the treasures of wickedness in the house of the wicked, and the scant measure that is abominable?

11 Shall I count them pure with the wicked balances, and with the bag of deceitful weights?

12 For the rich men thereof are full of violence, and the inhabitants thereof lie on their bed, and they are deceitful in their mouth.

13 Therefore also will I make thee sick in smiting thee, in making thee desolate because of thy sins.

14 Thou shalt eat, but not be satisfied; and thou shalt increase, but not prosper; and thou shalt expect, but be desolate.

15 Thou shalt sow, but thou shalt not reap; thou shalt tread the olives, but thou shalt not anoint thee with oil; and thou shalt tread the presses, but thou shalt not drink wine.

16 For the statutes of Omri are kept, and all the works of the house of Ahab, and ye walk in their counsels, that I should make them a desolation, and the inhabitants thereof an hissing; therefore ye shall bear the reproach of my people.

The excellency of our God, the goodness of his laws, the grace of his Gospel, the pleasantness of his service, and the kindness of his providence, should all combine to make us ashamed of the negligence and inconstancy of our obedience; for we often act as if his service was serious, and we were disposed to renounce it. But were we called to speak, we could neither testify against him, nor urge any reasonable excuse for ourselves: nor can rebels or apostates in any measure justify themselves in departing from the living God. We should always remember the mercies that our progenitors have long ago received, and which tended to our advantage; and the oracles of God, and good teachers, elders, and examples, are to be valued among our greatest privileges. Could we know how often the Lord defeated the machinations of Satan and his servants against us, we should have abundant proof of his kindness, and of our own ingratitude; and this show his righteousness in his sharpest corrections. Plain monuments, on this and similar subjects, tend to alarm men's consciences, and to show their need of coming before the most high God, to deprecate his wrath. In this frame of mind, they would do much, nay, almost any thing, to appease him and quiet their own consciences: but whilst they remain ignorant of the Gospel, or prejudiced against it, they will either rest in external observances and good behaviour, as a compound system of self-righteousness, or they will run into excessive, burdensome, and painful services, which God has commanded: nay, perhaps they will be seduced into an endeavour to please God by those things that are most atrocious and horrid. For if it were possible, in great terrains of conscience, men would present to the Lord ten thousand rivers of oil; and they have actually sought to expiate their guilt by the murder and massacre of heretics, by human sacrifices, and even by "giving their first-born, the fruit of their body, for the sin of their souls."

These practices must arise from mistaken apprehensions of the divine character; and are more suited to the worshippers of Satan, than to those of Jehovah. Blessed be his name, he hath in his word revealed to us a way of access, a propitiatory sacrifice, and a method of applying for its benefits, that are honourable to him, and admirably suited to

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-8.

The ministers of God must be very earnest, faithful, and intrepid, in pleasing his cause against his enemies; and when in controversy with his rebellious subjects, and especially with hypocrites, shall be openly decided, the whole creation will applaud his justice in their condemnation; and thy casting down shall be in the midst of thee; and thou shalt take hold, but shalt not deliver; and that which thou deliverest will I give up to the sword.
The prophet complains of the decrease of godly men, and the iniquity of his people; and encourages himself to trust in God, 1-7. The church expects victory over her insulting foes, and deliverance from her afflictions, with renewed consolations and prosperity, 8-13. Prayers and predictions of glorious times; with an exciting view of the unequalled mercy and truth of God towards his people, 14-30.

Woe is me! for I am as when they have gathered the summer-fruits, as the grape-gleanings of the vintage: there is no cluster to eat; my soul desired the first-ripe fruit. 2 The good man is perished out of the earth; and there is none upright among men; they all lie in wait for blood; they hunt every man his brother with a net.

Our case. And would we show the sincerity of our repentance, faith, and love, he requires nothing from us, but to do justly, to love mercy, and to walk humbly with our God. For, notwithstanding our manifold failures, even in this return of grateful obedience, he is ever ready to renew his pardons, and to communicate his grace to the humble waiting penitent.

V. 9-16.

In order that sinners may receive instruction, the Lord calls them by the voice of his word and by that of his providence: in these the wise beheld his glory and read his character; they hear the correcting rod speak to them of the evil of sin, and their need of repentance; they learn the lessons that he teacheth, and call others to attend, and to consider who hath appointed their afflictions, that they may not murmur or despise, but derive good from them. But if this voice be disregarded, the sword of vengeance will be drawn: for so he is man on wickedness, that amidst all judgments and warnings he is apt to proceed in covetous, fraudulent, or oppressive endeavours to grow rich, or in various ways to multiply lies and deceit. Thus heavier sufferings are ensured, the satisfaction of outward mercies is marred, and the wrath of God may be expected to corrode the inmost soul, nor can there be deliverance, except by repentance, faith, and renewed obedience. But, alas! men are much more ready to observe and cleave to iniquitous and ungodly laws, counsel, and maxims, than to walk in the good ways of the Lord; and when this is the case with his professing people, they may expect a double portion of misery and contempt.

NOTES.

CHAP. VII. V. 1-4. This description of the wickedness of the people, especially in Judah, has been thought inconsistent with the times of Hezekiah: and it hath therefore been considered as prophetic of the wicked reign of Manasseh. But perhaps the prophet witnessed such scenes towards the close of Hezekiah's reign, as caused him dolefully to presage the ensuing apostacy. He lamented that after all his zealous labours he could find very few pious persons: but was like a man that went into an orchard or vineyard, after the fruit had been gathered and, instead of satisfying himself with the first ripe fruit, which was most valued and plentiful, could not find a single cluster of grapes, but only a few gleanings of inferior goodness. He longed to live among eminent believers, but he found very few that had any sense of piety, and there were much inferior to their pious ancestors. For good and merciful men were taken to heaven, and the land was deprived of them, till an upright person could scarcely be found. (Marg. Ref.) In general they sought to enrich themselves, by murdering or ruining their neighbours; even as hunters pursue their game into the net. They were exceedingly diligent and active in mischief, doing it with both hands earnestly, or effectually. They excelled in doing evil, with great diligence and ability. The prince, or magistrate, asked a bribe for perverting justice, and the rich oppressor had only to mention the mischief he purposed; and so the bargain was concluded, and they covered up the infamous transaction. The best of them were entangling and mischievous as briars; and created more pain and trouble to such as had dealings with them, than a thorn-hedge to those that attempted to force through it: the worst of them therefore must be serpents, or wolves and tigers. No doubt then could remain, but that the day of visitation, predicted by all Israel's watchmen, was at hand, when they would be reduced to the most perplexing straits.
Rejoice not against me, O mine enemy: when I fall, I shall arise; when I sit in darkness, the Lord shall be a light unto me.

I will bear the indignation of the Lord, for I have sinned against him, until he pleads my cause, and executes judgment for me: he will bring me forth to the light, and I shall behold his righteousness.

Then she is mine enemy shall see it, and shame shall cover her which said unto me, Where is the Lord thy God? mine eyes shall behold her: now she shall be trodden down as the mire of the streets.

In the day that they wall be built, and in the day that they shall be far removed.

In that day also shall he come even to thee from Assyria, and the mountain of Zion shall be lifted up above the mountains of Samaria.

V. 5-7

The people in general were so deceitful that the few honest persons among them had need to be cautious: no friend, counsellor, or guide, could safely be trusted: nay, it would be dangerous freely to disclose their minds to their own wives, lest they should be hired to betray them.

The prophet therefore saw no safety or comfort, but in looking to the Lord, and waiting on God his Salvation, who would be sure to hear and help him, and those that followed his example. Our Lord quotes the sixth verse, and applies it to the persecutions about to be raised against his disciples: and a careful examination of the marginal references will convince any one, that the character of the Jews, in those days, exactly answered the description here given.

V. 11-13

When the appointed time for rebuilding the walls of Jerusalem should arrive, the decrees of the kings of Babylon, or of Persia, forbidding that work, would be removed far away: and the Jews would flock to Jerusalem from every region, whether they had been dispersed; without being allowed to stay away, by the distance or advantages of their situations. But the conversion of sinners to Christ, in the days of the apostles, and especially in those glorious times everywhere where predicted, was shadowed forth by those events. Though such blessings were reserved for Israel in all ages, yet the wickedness of the nation would certainly bring on them the threatened desolations.

The general restoration of the Jews shall not be brought to pass, till after their land hath lain desolate for some ages, as a testimony of God's displeasure against the ancient inhabitants for their sins, especially that heinous one of rejecting the Messiah.
V. 14–17. The prophet here entreated the Lord to feed his people, (the flock which he valued as his heritage,) with his rod, or by his word, Spirit, and providence, even during their dispersions in distant lands, where they would be exposed and be solitary as sheep. But let him feed them on mount Carmel, and provide for them, as for the flocks in Bashan and Gilead, where was good pasture; or as he had fed their fathers in ancient times: that is, he prayed that God would preserve them during the captivity, and restore them to their own land, and prosper them in it as in their most flourishing times. To this prayer the Lord answered, that he would renew his ancient wonders in their deliverance: which the nations beholding, should be astonished and silenced, not daring to oppose their power, though they stopped their ears to the truth. They would thus be degraded to the dust, grousing on the earth as serpents, and afraid to show themselves as worms that seldom creep from their holes: for they would fear the wrath of God, who thus pleaded the cause of his people.

This too must predict greater deliverances and triumphs of the Church, and debasement and terror of their enemies, than those that took place, when Sennacherib’s army was destroyed, when Babylon was taken, and the Jews liberate by Cyrus, or when the Maccabees were victorious over their persecutors: and doubtless those events were intended, which it hath repeatedly been proved that all the prophets foretold. If the expressions are thought too strong for the events which happened upon the Maccabees, they may likewise have a reference to the times of the future restoration. (Hp. Newcome) (Warg. Ref.)

V. 18–20. The prophet concluded his predictions, by celebrating, with admiration, adoring love and gratitude, the praises of God’s mercy and truth, in his dealings with his people. Who, that ever was worshipped as God, could pretend to equal JEHovah in his perfections and operations? What could be found worthy to be compared with his readiness to pardon the sins, and to remit the punishment, of his heritage; notwithstanding that their transgressions had provoked him to reduce them to a remnant? Though he might justly have retained his anger for ever, yet he did not, because he ever delights in exercising mercy. This had often been evinced: and though heavy judgments were about to come upon the Jews, yet he would return to them with tender compassion, and subdue the power, as well as pardon the guilt of their sins, and so entirely take them away, that they should be, as it were, forever buried in the depths of the sea.

Thus he would fulfill the engagements of his covenant and oath, that he made to Abraham and Jacob, for the glory of his mercy and faithfulness. These engagements evidently related to Christ, and the success of his Gospel, to the end of time; and the future restoration of Israel, and the final prevalence of true religion in all lands will be the complete performance of them.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS. V. 1–10.

It is a heavy trial to pious persons to be deprived of the communion of the saints, especially when it is owing to the decay of godliness, and a decrease in the numbers and zeal of believers. Alas! we may long in vain for the company of many such Christians, as were the first ripe fruits of the Gospel in those happy times, when “great grace was upon them all,” and “the Lord added to the Church daily such as should be saved.” Believers of this description are generally scarce; and when they are removed to heaven, the earth suffers a very grievous loss; and we should long earnestly to see their posterity copy their examples, or others raised up in their places to be the instruments of extensive good. We may, however, be thankful, that we meet with a few gleanings of this vintage: though, alas! the greater part of professed Christians seem given up to selfishness, fraud, iniquity, and ungodliness. Even they who ought to support equity and patronize religion, too commonly do evil with both hands earnestly; and by their connivance in iniquity, help each other to grow rich and great; and thus they conceal many an infamous transaction, which the Lord will at length unfold before the whole world. We cannot but lament the malice and miscarriages of multitudes on every side, and grieve to think of the misery that is coming upon them: we must grieve that so little confidence can be placed in those who make the greatest professions of friendship; and that even the nearest relatives should so often forget their obligations, and prove unfaithful, and the sources of the most painful dissentions, to those connected with them. But if the believer finds that his worst foes are those of his own family, he should be rendered more simple in his dependance, and fervent in his prayers to the God of his salvation, who will never refuse to hear and help him.

We should also, under our trials, look continually unto our divine Redeemer, that we may learn to copy his patience, meekness, constancy, and love, amidst all his unequalled troubles and agonies; and thus become examples to those around us. If we truly belong to him, we shall share his victories, as well as be conformed to him in sufferings. Though our encumbrances may seem to prevail and rejoice over us, we should not despise, or decline the conflict: though cast down, we are not destroyed: though foiled, we are not slain; and ought therefore to resume our arms, and renew the combat. Our darkness, through temptation, tribulation, or persecution, will not long prevent our comfort in the Lord, our Light and Salvation. Though we have often and grievously sinned, and are suffering under the rod of his fatherly displeasure, yet we may unite hope in his mercy with submission to his correction; for he will at length plead our cause, and bring us forth to the light, clear our characters from slanderous imputations, and fulfill to us his faithful promises: so that all, who have derided our confidence in God, because of difficulties and distresses, shall be covered with shame; and those that hate us, for his sake, shall be trodden down as the mire in the streets.

V. 11—20.

No hinderances can obstruct the intended favours of God to his Church or servants: and their returning peace and comfort allure others to come and join themselves to them.

Let us then continue in prayer to the Lord, that he would graciously feed his dispersed flock: his heritage, that dwell "in the world, but are not of it," and that he would support us and our brethren under all disconsolations and trials, and make us joyful in him, as his people were in days of old. Then will he hear our prayers and renew his ancient wonders, and make us victorious over every oppressor; and at length all his enemies and those of his Church shall be filled with terror, and have their portion with the old serpent, the tempter and murderer of mankind. Let us then rejoice, and praise the pardoning mercy of our God; let us hope and pray that he will turn to us, and turn us to himself; that he will have compassion on us, and subdue, as well as forgive, our sins, and fully and finally deliver us from these our inward and most dangerous foes. Let us rely on the mercy and truth, engaged by covenant and oath to Abraham and all his believing children; and remember that the Lord hath given this infallible security, for "the strong consolation of all those that have fled for refuge to lay hold on the hope set before them" in Christ Jesus.
THE BOOK OF NAHUM.

It is probably conjectured, that Nahum delivered this prophecy about the time when Sennacherib invaded Judah. It relates almost entirely to the destruction of Nineveh and of the Assyrian empire, of which the cutting off of Sennacherib's army was an earnest and presage; and its primary intent seems to have been the encouragement of the pious Jews, amidst the troubles and alarms occasioned by that invasion. It does not appear, that this short prophecy is referred to in the New Testament; yet it certainly formed a part of that volume which Christ and his apostles called "the Scriptures," "the oracles of God." No other prediction is clearly contained in it, but that of the desolations of Nineveh; that vast and populous city, whose walls were an hundred feet high, and capable of admitting three chariots abreast upon them, and fortified with fifteen hundred towers, in walls of two hundred feet high—So totally, indeed, was this city destroyed, that in the second century after Christ not a vestige remained of it, to ascertain the spot on which it stood. Its situation has long been a matter of doubt and uncertainty. (Note, iii. 19.) This remarkable prophecy, thus remarkably accomplished, affords a signal evidence of the inspiration of Nahum, and a striking lesson of humility and pride. (Gray's Key.) The best judges are agreed, that, in respect of arrangement, style, and sublimity, it is one of the finest poems extant in human language.

B.C. 710.

CHAP. I.

The majesty and terrible effects of God's indignation, 1—6. His love to his people and severity to his enemies, 7, 8. The prophet foretells the ruin of the Assyrian king and his army; and the rejoicing of the Jews, 9—15.

The burden of Nineveh. The book of the vision of Nahum the Elkoshite.

2 God is jealous, and the Lord revengeth; the Lord revengeth, and is furious; the Lord will take vengeance, and will execute vengeance upon his adversaries, and he reserveth wrath for his enemies.

3 The Lord is slow to anger, and great in power, and will not at all acquit the wicked; the Lord hath his way in the whirlwind and in the storm, and the clouds are the dust of his feet.

4 He rebuketh the sea, and maketh it dry, and drieth up all the rivers; Bashan languisheth, and Carmel, and the flower of Lebanon languisheth.

5 The mountains shake at him, and the valleys melt like wax at his presence. Mounts stand as stubble before him, and the hills as if they were melted before him.

6 - 8... that was coming upon them, which he wrote in a book, and as some think sent to them. (Notes, Jer. xxxiii. 33—40.) His name signifies a comforter, and this prediction would comfort the afflicted Jews. He was called the Elkoshite, from Elkosh in Galilee, the place of his birth, as it is supposed.
the hills melt, and the earth is burned at his presence, yea, the world, and all that dwell therein.

6 Who can stand before his indignation? and who can abide in the fierceness of his anger? his fury is poured out like fire, and the rocks are thrown down by him.

7 The Lord is good, a Stronghold in the day of trouble; and he knoweth them that trust in him.

8 But with an over-running flood he shall make an utter end of the place thereof, and darkness shall pursue his enemies.

9 What do ye imagine against the Lord? who is the shield of his people, and the anointed of the most High?

V. 2—6. The Assyrians had desolated the kingdom of Israel; they often harried that of Judah, and perhaps at this time menaced its ruin; and they triumphed as if their idols had overcome the God of Israel. The prophet therefore began this burden of Nineveh, by declaring that God was jealous of his glory, and revenged himself with fury or great severity, on those that despised or blasphemed him, or injured his worshippers; and that he reserved all his anger for his enemies; the word wrath is not in the original, nor could words express the punishment that he reserved in due time to inflict upon them. Indeed, the Lord was slow to anger; and not hasty in executing vengeance; because he was great in power, and always able to execute his purposes: but he would by no means acquit the wicked, or obstinate impenitent offenders. (Note, Ez. xxxiv. 6, 7.)

His dispensations were indeed very mysterious; and when he came to execute vengeance, his way was through whirlwinds, storms, and black clouds, as if they were the dust of his feet. He would show similar tokens of his power and indignation, as he had done of old, when the sea was divided and Jordan dried up before him; when the mountains trembled, and their productions were withered at his presence: even the earth, yea, the whole world, would at last be burned up before him, and all its inhabitants destroyed. What man, or kingdom, therefore, could withstand him, when his fury should be poured out like fire, and the rocks should be cast down before him? This was a most suitable introduction to predictions of vengeance on proud Nineveh, and her king and inhabitants.

V. 7, 8. The preceding most sublime display of the power of the Lord's anger is next beautifully contrasted with a declaration of his exuberant goodness to his people. The Assyrian invasion, and the insinuating menaces of Sennacherib and his captains, formed a day of trouble to Hezekiah and his subjects: but the Lord was a Stronghold to them; he knew, and approved, those that trusted in him, and would distinguish them from all others. But he would destroy Nineveh, and desolate the place where it stood as with an inundation; and pursue his enemies the Assyrians with dark and tremendous calamities. The place where Nineveh stood is not at present exactly known. Nineveh is already perished, and there is no remaining trace of her. (Lucian, an ingenious heathen, who wrote in the second century.)

V. 9, 10. Sennacherib, (as well as Shalmaneser and his predecessors,) devised to destroy the worshippers of God, which was considered as designing evil against Israkah himself; being the result of proud and defiance of him. He would therefore utterly destroy Nineveh and the Assyrian empire; and the calamity should be so complete, that it would not be necessary to repeat it. Whilst they formed powerful confederacies, and raised numerous armies, to execute their mischievous counsels, being fomented by assemblies; and while they were perplexed in their counsels, and indecisive in their measures, like a drunken man; or while indulging in excess and intoxication, they would be suddenly and totally consumed, as the dry stubble is by the fire. It is recorded that Nineveh was taken by the Babylonians and Medes, when the city was full of riot and intemperance, by reason of a feast, which the king and his nobles celebrated.

V. 11—13. This wicked counsellor, who devised evil against the Lord, seems to mark out Sennacherib, who came from Nineveh to utter blasphemies by the mouth of Robshakheh, and who devised to destroy Jerusalem: for this completed the provocation, that brought the vengeance of God on Nineveh and on the Assyrian Empire. The Lord therefore declared, that though the army of Sennacherib was quiet, fearing nothing from the dismayed Jews, and though they were very numerous, yet the destroying angel, when he passed through them, would cut them down, as the scythe of the mower does the tender grass. And though the Lord had afflicted the Jews by the Assyrians, yet he would no more distress them by their invasions, but would wholly deliver them from the yoke, which had before been very galling to them.
14 And the Lord hath given a commandment concerning thee, that no more of thy name be sown: out of the house of thy gods will I cut off the graven image and the molten image: I will make thy gods graven image: I will make thy vail for them.

15 Behold upon the mountains of his feet that bringeth good tidings, that publisheth peace! O Judah, keep thy solemn feasts, perform thy vows: for the wicked shall no more pass through thee; he is utterly cut off.

CHAP. II.

Predictions of the siege and taking of Nineveh.

V. 14. The Lord had given orders that Sennacherib's army should be cut off: but he himself was reserved for execution by the hands of his own sons. Excrudition his son, indeed, succeeded him, and reigned prosperously many years: but the Assyrian empire was speedily brought to grief, and probably that family was extinct, at least their power was annihilated; and no more of that seed was permitted to be sown or to grow upon the earth. The idols also of Nineveh were about to be extinguished: the graces of the city, the empire, and the royal family, were preparing; and because they were vile in their conduct they would be very greatly despised. The house of thy idol shall become thy grave, when thou shalt be dishonourably slain by thy own sons; as a just punishment of thy blasphemy against the God of Israel. (Lomth.)

V. 15. Messengers would be sent from Jerusalem into the most distant parts of the land, to carry the welcome tidings of the destruction of Sennacherib's army; and of the peace of Jerusalem and Judah; and to invite the Jews to come and celebrate their solemn feasts, and to pay their vows at the temple for their deliverance. They might then do it safely; for the Assyrian tyrant would no more pass through to ravage the land, his power being utterly cut off. This may be considered as typical of the future destruction of the enemies of the Church, which will make way for the universal preaching of the Gospel, and for the peace and felicity of believers.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The scriptural character of our glorious God does not accord to the imaginations and sentiments of proud reasoners on that subject: for, admiring their own supposed excellencies, they form notions of God confirmable to them, and thus admire and worship an ideal deity. But the God and Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, the Father of mercies, is also jealous, and revengeful; and execute most terrible punishments on those, who rebel against his authority, oppose his truth, or persecute his people. He is indeed slow to wrath, and ready to forgive the penitent and believing; but he will by no means acquit the wicked, he will resereth tribulation and anguish for every soul of him that doeth evil. But who regardeth the power
3 The shield of his mighty men is made red, the valiant men are red in scarlet: the chariots shall be with flaming torches in the day of his preparation, and the fir-trees shall be terribly shaken.

4 The chariots shall rage in the streets, they shall justly one against another in the broad ways: they shall seem like torches, they shall run like the lightnings.

5 He shall recount his worthies: they shall stumble in their walk; they shall make haste to the wall thereof, and the defence shall be prepared.

6 The gates of the rivers shall be opened, and the palace shall be dissolved.

7 And Huzzab shall be led away captive, she shall be brought up, and her maids shall lead her, as with the voice of doves, tabering upon their breasts.

8 But Nineveh is old like a pool of water: yet they shall flee away.

9 Take ye the spoil of gold, take the spoil of silver, take instead of blunt for the sword, and take spoil of every good for wine, and let them be filled with sackcloth, and make glad with shame.

10 She is empty, and void, and waste: and the heart melteth, and the knees smite together, and much pain is in all loins, and the faces of all gather blackness.

11 Where is the dwelling of the lions, and the feeding-place of the young lions, where the lion, even the old lion, walked, and the lion's whelp, and none made them afraid?

12 The lion did tear in pieces enough for his whelps, and strangled for his lionesses, and filled his holes with prey, and his dens with ravin.

13 Behold, I am against thee, saith the Lord of hosts, and I will burn thee, saith the Lord of hosts.

NOTES.
CHAP. II. V. 1, 2. (Note, 2 Kings xxiv. 1.) Nabopolassar king of Babylon, or Nebuchadnezzar his son, seems to be here particularly intended by the dasher in pieces, to denote his fierceness and success in war. In conjunction with Cyaxares king of Media, he marched his army to besiege Nineveh, with the avowed purpose of subverting the Assyrian empire: and the king and people of Nineveh are here challenged to employ every art of defence, and to exert all their courage and prowess to defend the city against them; which would all be in vain. For the Lord would avenge on Nineveh the pride and insolence that the Assyrian kings had shown to Jacob, when they magnified themselves against him and grievously oppressed them. They had utterly destroyed the kingdom of Israel, and reduced its inhabitants to slavery in foreign lands; and they had harassed, distressed, and envied to ruin, the kingdom of Judah. Thus they had gathered and carried off the fruit, and muzzled the branch of the Lord's vineyard: and he was about to execute vengeance upon them. "For Jehovah restorthe the excellency of Jacob, as the excellency of Israel." (By Newcome.) "This interpretation agrees better with the scope of the text, and suits very well with the Hebrew idiom." (Louth.)

V. 3–6. The soldiers of the confederate kings carried red shields and wore scarlet garments, to render their appearance more terrible, and to denote their purpose of shedding blood without fear or mercy. Their chariots of war glittered like torches when they were preparing for the assault, and the brandishing of their spears was like the shaking of fir-trees by a terrible tempest. And when they had broken into the city, their chariots would rage and justle, and be driven with speed and fury, like flaming torches or flashes of lightning. The king of Babylon would re-count his valiant captains, and order them to the assault; and their numbers, impetuosity, and contempt of danger and difficulty, would cause them to stumble in marching hastily to mount the walls. Some understand this of the Assyrian king and his army. The besiegers, however, would prepare to defend themselves: but the river Tigris, or other rivers that ran into it, being disregarded, would open the assailants a passage into the city, and the palace being seized on and destroyed, the city would soon be reduced. It is recorded, that an inundation of the Tigris broke down a part of the walls of Nineveh, and thus opened to the besiegers a way into the heart of the city.

V. 7. Huzzab signifies established. Some take it for the name of the queen consort, who would thus be led captive. Perhaps the empire of Assyria, or Nineveh, was poetically represented as a queen, that had been established in great security, but was about to be brought forth, and carried captive to Babylon; and the captivity of the nobles and people of Nineveh might be represented, by this queen being attended by her maidens, mourning like doves, and beating their breasts, as a tabret is struck repeatedly by those who play on it.

V. 8–10. Nineveh had neither been taken nor put in fear for many ages; so that it was like an undisturbed pool, or fish-pond replenished with great quantities of fish. But at the predicted time, her soldiers would flee before their enemies, and all the efforts of their captives to stop them would be ineffectual. The besiegers might then seize upon their immense treasures and all their magnificent furniture: for Nineveh would be emptied and desolated, with the extreme terror and anguish of the inhabitants. (Marg. Ref.) The original is peculiarly animated, and in the highest degree poetical.
CHAP. III.

Henry charges and denunciations against Nineveh, 1—7. The desolation of Nineveh, a warning to Nineveh to expect similar calamities, 8—10. Further predictions of all methods to prevent it, 11—19.

Woe to the bloody city! it is all full of lies and robbery; the prey departeth not;

2 The noise of a whip, and the noise of the rattling of the wheels, and the prancing horses, and the jumping chariots.

3 The horseman lifteth up both the

V. 11—13. The kings of Assyria had long been terrible, powerful, and cruel to their neighbours, like lions to the beasts of the forest, or of the pasture. Their successful wars enriched and advanced their families, and supported them in the most luxurious and magnificent manner. But what became of this lion's den? Of Nineveh, that mighty city? The Lord, being against the wickedness of their kings, would certainly consume their power, destroy their prosperity, spoil them of their prey, and silence the voice of their ambassadors, whom they sent to insult, menace, and demand the submission of the conquered nations; or to blaspheme God and revile his people, as Rabshakeh had done. And then the nations would rejoice at their fall. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

What delight have men in every age taken in dashed others in pieces, though by exposing themselves to similar destruction?—The event of the cruel contests of proud mortals for power, renown, or wealth, is entirely ordered by the just and holy God; who sometimes employs them to correct his people, and at other times to execute vengeance on oppressors and murderers. The consideration of the horrors and miseries of war should make us feel thankful for the blessings of peace, and exclaim to pray for the continuance of the same. Yet we ought always to be prepared for troubles, for we know not how soon they may arrive. We should then be careful not to contract habits of effeminacy, delicacy, or self-indulgence; for these disqualify men for enduring hardship, and render poverty or captivity doubly terrible. We ought also to beware of covetousness, ostentation, and magnificence; for what will treasures or glory do for us, in the seasons of extreme distress, or in the day of wrath? Yet, in making such acquisitions for themselves or their families, how many lose their souls! We should use power or prosperity with gentleness and moderation; for selfishness, arrogance, and inhumanity, expose men to the wrath of God, and the hatred of their neighbours also. If the Lord be against any persons or nations, they must soon be rendered miserable, and sink into silence and darkness. Let us then come to him upon his mercy-seat, that, having peace with him through our Lord Jesus Christ, we may know that he is for us, and that all things shall work together for our everlasting good.

NOTES.

CHAP. III. V. 1. They are still increasing their conquests by ruin and oppression, till it will come to their own turn to be spoiled and conquered. (Lon.)

V. 2. 3. Vengeance is near thee: I am already hearing the noise of the Babylonian whips, in the hands of the charioteers, driving furiously against thee. (Bi. Hall.)

V. 4—6. The idolatries and sorceries of Nineveh, and that licentiousness with which they were attended, and the captivating methods by which the Assyrians brought other nations to submit to their authority, or to unite in their idolatries and iniquities, are here assigned as the reasons of the Lord’s determination to expose them to the greatest ignominy and misery imaginable: in the same manner as they had utterly disregarded the welfare of whole nations, and given them to be spoiled and ruined without remorse. Israel and Judah especially had been thus treated by them. (Marg. Ref.)
CHAPTER III.

8 And thou better than populous that had the waters round about it, whose rampart was the sea, and her wall was from the sea? 9 Ethiopia and Egypt were her strength, and it was infinite; Set and Lubim were thy helpers.

10 Yet was she carried away, she went into captivity: her young children were also dashed in pieces at the top of all the streets: and they cast lots for her honourable men, and all her great men were bound in chains.

11 Thou also shalt be drunken, thou shalt be hid, thou also shalt seek strength because of the enemy. 12 All thy strong-holds shall be like fig-trees with the first-ripe figs: if they be shaken, they shall even fall into the mouth of the eater.

13 Be hold, thy people in the midst of thee are women: the gates of thy land shall be set wide open unto thine enemies: the fire shall devour the bars.

14 Draw thee waters for the siege, fortify thy strong-holds: go into clay, and tread the mortar, make strong the brick-kiln.

15 There shall be the fire devour thee: the sword shall cut thee off, it shall eat thee up like the canker-worm: make thyself many as the canker-worm: thyself many as the locusts.

16 Thou hast multiplied thy merchants above the stars of heaven: the canker-worm spoileth, and fleeth away.

17 Thy are are as the locusts, and thy captains as the great grasshoppers, which camp in the hedges in the cold day, but when the sun ariseth they flee away, and their place is not known where they are.

18 Thy slumber, O king of Assyria: thy nobles shall dwell with the dust: thy people is scattered upon the mountains, and no man gathereth them.

V. 7. If we seek for any mourners over departed Nineveh, none will be found, every one rejoicing over her destruction. (LXX.) (Marg. Ref.)

V. 8-11. Populous No, or, No-Ammon. (Marg.) No-Ammon, in Egypt, (concerning the situation of which learned men are not agreed,) seems to have been desolated, in the manner here described, a short time before this prophecy was delivered: some think that Sennacherib had just taken and destroyed it. It had been very populous, situated in a very fertile soil, and fortified by nature and art in an almost impregnable manner. As an Ethiopian then reigned over Egypt, the immense forces of these two kingdoms were combined for its defence, together with the assistance of the Libyans and Mauritanians, and other nations of Africa: yet was the city taken, and its inhabitants carried captive, after the most shocking cruelties had been exercised upon numbers of them, and even upon their infants; whilst their most honourable men were divided by lot among the conquerors as slaves, and so led away in chains. And were the inhabitants of Nineveh better than those of No, or more likely to be preserved from such a ruin? By no means: on the contrary, they would be infatuated with prosperity, or stampied by excess or calamity; they would hide themselves within their walls, and look out in vain for assistance against their besiegers.

V. 12. Fig-trees. The image, though a common one, is very lively and expressive. (By. Newcome.)

V. 14. 5. That is, make bricks and prepare mortar, in order to erect new fortifications, if possible, to repel the enemy.

V. 15-17. Whilst thou art repairing the old fortifications, or making new ones, the enemy shall set thy works on fire. The sword of thine enemies, who shall be as numerous and destructive as locusts or canker-worms, shall destroy thee. As the locusts destroy the fruits of the earth, and fly away to another place, so shall thy soldiers pillage all the wealth thou hast gained by traffic, and they leave thee. (LXX.) Nineveh, by commerce, became extremely populous: but the number of her traders, when the city was besieged would consume her provisions, as cattellpers waste the land. Perhaps mercenary soldiers are meant, who having devoured the produce of the country, fled or deserted to the enemy, when their help was wanted. Even their tributary kings, or most honourable captians, would resemble locusts, that remove when the sun grows hot; for they would abide with them whilst danger was distant, but would be gone when the enemy approached. The tributary princes deserted Nineveh in the day of her distress. (Herodotus.) Diodorus Siculus, speaking of the siege in which Nineveh fell, says, When the enemy shut up the king in the city many nations revolted, each going over to the besiegers for the sake of their liberty; that the king dispatched messengers to all his subjects, requiring forces from them, to assist him; and that he thought himself able to endure a siege, and remained in expectation of the armies, which were to be raised throughout the empire; relying on an oracle, that the city could not be taken, till the river became its enemy. (By. Newcome.)

V. 18. The rulers of Assyria were become supine, self-indulgent, and negligent, or they would be disearted and debase: and they would be slain and left upon the ground; while the people were scattered as lost sheep, without any to seek after them.
19 There is no healing of thy bruise: thy wound is grievous: all that hear the bruise of thee shall clap their hands over thee: for upon whom hath not thy wickedness passed continually?

V. 19. Upon, &c. Nineveh had corrupted, or oppressed by her wickedness, all the surrounding nations, continually during many ages: therefore all the nations would rejoice at her fall. The absolute word bruise signifies report. The entire desolation of Nineveh is in this prophecy most expressly and particularly foretold: yet no event can be imagined more improbable, at the time when Nahum wrote, than this was. The entire desolation of London, so that none could decide where this great metropolis was situated, would not be considered by us as more improbable, than the desolations of Nineveh must have appeared at that day; when it was the greatest, and most populous and powerful city in the known world. Yet, when conquered by the kings of Babylon, who transferred the seat of empire to the city which they had built for their own glory, Nineveh was deserted by its inhabitants, and left to moulder into ruins; and within two hundred years after the coming of Christ, no trace remained of this vast capital of the Assyrian empire! And now it is not so much, either among learned men or travellers, or the inhabitants of those regions, where Nineveh stood! some even place it on the Euphrates. But of those who agree that it stood on the Tigris, some place it on one side, some on the other, of that river; and some higher up, and some nearer the sea, by many miles. I do not say, that these discordant opinions are alike probable; for most well informed and competent judges would perhaps nearly agree, except as to the exact spot where the city stood: yet the very circumstance, of so many discordant opinions, is the completest proof imaginable that the prediction has been most wonderfully accomplished; and that it was delivered by the inspiration of that God, “known unto whom are all his works, from the beginning of the world.”

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Very flourishing cities are often full of lies and robbery of fraud and injustice; and in general they are contaminated with blood, shed in massacres, persecutions, oppression of dependent provinces, or injurious war: and by these means the prey is accumulated, and deported not till the Lord constrainsthe to make restitution: but he will encompass the crimes of such cities and kingdoms, and pour out the blood of those who are lavish of the blood of others. Too often they resemble well-favoured harlots; and disseminate far and wide their impiety, infidelity, licentiousness and vice; and the nations are corrupted by their example, or enslaved to support their grandeur and luxury, or to gratify their avarice and ambition. The Lord will surely express his abhorrence of such politics and practices; and will turn the glory of such cities into shame, and make them vile, and as a gazping stock to others. Thus Nineveh, Babylon, Tyre, and many others, have been reduced and ruined, that they might be a warning to us; even as No was to Nineveh. And what better are we, than these ancient cities or kingdoms? except as there is a remnant of true Christians among us, who are a greater security and a stronger rampart to us, than all our advantages of situation; than our fleets, armies, or allies, even though our strength should appear to be infinite. In these respects we are not superior to the cities and empires that have been mentioned: and the multitude of the nation are equally wicked, amid vastly superior advantages for being holy. When the Lord shows himself against a people, their enemies have an easy victory, and power to destroy their children, or enslave their nobles and honourable men. Then their strong-holds are taken upon the first assault; their valiant soldiers become as women; their efforts are unsuccessful, their confederates treacherous, their helpers the immediate causes of their ruin: and every confidence must fail, till their wounds become grievous and incurable; and all, on whom their wickedness hath passed continually, will rejoice and exult at their fall. Thus will it at length happen to all the enemies of God: but he continues good to Israel, a Strong-hold in every time of trouble, that cannot be stormed and taken; and “he knoweth them that trust in him.”
BOOK OF HABAKKUK.

The absurd and contradictory legends of the Jewish writers concerning this prophet, are not worthy of notice, except as they show how little dependence can be placed on such witnesses. Some pretend that he was the son of the Shunammith woman, whom Elisha restored to life! While others, (especially the apocryphal book of Bel and the dragon;) introduce him as feeding Daniel in the den of lions, just before the return of the Jews from Babylon. It is, however, plain that he prophesied before the captivity, and probably about the close of Josiah's reign, and the beginning of Jehoiakim's, being contemporary with Jeremiah. Habakkuk stands high in the class of the Hebrew poets. The beautiful connexion between the parts of this prophecy; its diction, imagery, spirit, and sublimity, cannot be too much admired (Bp Newcome.) He is repeatedly quoted as an inspired writer in the New Testament. (Comp. i. 5. with Acts xiii. 40, 41. and ii. 3, 4. with Rom. i. 17. Gal. iii. 11. Heb. x. 37, 38.) And his predictions of the devastations made by the Chaldeans, and the judgments to be inflicted on them, are generally considered as including the temporary success and final ruin of the oppressors and corruptors of the Christian Church, and the final and universal prevalence of true religion throughout the earth. Nahum foretold the destruction of the Assyrians, who carried the ten tribes captive;—Habakkuk foretells the judgments that should come on the Chaldeans, who completed the captivity of the remaining tribes. (Lowth.) The prophet begins with complaints of the wickedness of his people, and then proceeds to predict the Chaldean invasion and its terrible effects. He bewails the successful wickedness of the invaders; gives encouragement to God's people, and denounces judgments on his enemies: and he concludes with celebrating, in the highest strains of sublime poetry, the ancient wonders that the Lord had wrought for Israel, in order to excite confidence and joy in him, in the prospect of approaching calamities.

B. C. 609.

CHAP. I.

The prophet complains that violence and contention prevailed among his people, 1—4. The Lord shows him the vengeance to be inflicted by the Chaldeans, 5—11. He adores God, and laments the treachery and cruelty of prosperous sinners, 12—17.

THE burden which Habakkuk the prophet did see.

2 O Lord, how long shall I cry, and thou wilt not hear! even cry out unto thee of violence, and thou wilt not save! 3 Why dost thou shew me iniquity, and cause me to behold grievance? For spoiling and violence are before me; and there are that raise up strife and contention. 4 Therefore the law is slacked, and judgment doth never go forth: for the wicked doth compass about the righteous; therefore wrong judgment proceedeth.

B. C. 609.

NOTES.

CHAP. I. V. 1. (Notes, Is. xiii. 1. Jer. xxiii. 33—40.)

V. 2—4. 'It is but a vexation to me, O Lord, to see that iniquity which I cannot reform. I see every where cruelty and oppression; and when I reprove them,' 5 N.
Behold ye among the heathen, and regard, and wonder marvellously. For I will work a work in your days, which ye will not believe, though it be told you.

6 For Lo, I raise up the Chaldeans, that bitter and hasty nation, which shall march through the breadth of the land, to possess the dwelling-places that are not theirs.

7 They are terrible and dreadful: their judgment and their dignity shall proceed of themselves.

8 Their horses are swifter than the leopards, and are more fierce than the lions.

There are those which raise up strife and contention against me, (By. Hall.) It appears, that the prophet had long lamented the abounding and increasing wickedness of his people, and prayed that God would put some effectual stop to it; but it continued to prevail, and he was tempted to conclude that his prayers were disregarded. He also complained, that the Lord constrained him to behold violence and iniquity; whilst the poor were crushed and cruelly plundered by the powerful. He inquired why his lot was cast in such evil times, that he was forced to dwell among robbers and oppressors, and to witness discords and virulent contentions? These things were become so common, and the rulers were so addicted to bribery, that the law lay dormant, and the execution of it was entirely relaxed; so that wicked men circumvented and defrauded the righteous with impunity: for either no sentence could be obtained, or it proved an iniquitous decision. Such was the wretched condition of Judah; and it was the consequence of idolatry, impiety, or hypocrisy in religion.

V. 5. In answer to the prophet’s complaint, the Lord showed him that the Chaldeans would speedily execute vengeance on the Jews. They were, therefore, warned to give peculiar attention to the events which took place amongst the heathen, by the victories of the Chaldeans; or to consider themselves as one of the nations that were to be scourged by them; or they were reminded that they would wonder with great astonishment, when scattered among the heathen, at the accomplishment of those predictions, which at present they disregarded. For they would not believe that God would work such a work, at least in their days and by the Chaldeans, though God himself informed them, by his prophets, that he certainly would. The application of this by St. Paul to the Jews in his days, evinces that the destruction of Jerusalem by the Chaldeans was an emblem, or anticipation, of the calamities that came on the nation for rejecting the Gospel. (Acts xiii. 41.)

The apostle quoted the passage from the Septuagint, rather than from the original text: yet the quotation does not exactly agree to either. The Greek translators seem to have read Hragadim, or, despisers, instead of Hragovim, among the heathen. This, with another trivial variation, gives nearly the rendering of the passage, as it stands in the Acts. The meaning is not materially different: and it is not necessary to decide which is the true reading.

—in your days. Hence it follows, that the Chaldeans invaded Judea, while those were living whom the prophet addressed. (By. Newcome.) As Jerusalem was destroyed within less than thirty years from the death of Josiah; and as the Chaldeans were not, till about that time, very formidable among the nations: it may be properly conjectured, that Halakkuk delivered this prophecy about the end of Josiah’s reign, or soon after his death; and that the circumstance of the obscure Chaldeans, rather than the renowned Assyrians, being appointed to accomplish it, conducted to harden the people in infidelity.

V. 6. Bitter, &c. That is, fierce, cruel, and impetuous, bearing all down before them, regardless of the miseries which they occasioned.

V. 7. The decisions and regulations of the Chaldeans would be framed entirely according to their own caprice, and to confirm their own authority, without any regard to the good of the people: they would consider their prosperity and dignity as proceeding from their own courage and conduct, and glory in them on that ground; and they would not consider themselves as accountable to any superior for their use of them.

V. 8. (Marg. Ref.) That is, they would devour all before them, as the unwholesome east wind blasts and withers the productions of the earth. (Marg. Ref.) Some render the words, Whatever they go, they shall carry it toward the east; meaning to Babylon, (Lowth.)

V. 9. Shall sup, &c. (Ez. xxvi-xxxiii.) The Hebrew uses the singular number here, in the following verse; and it is to be understood of the king of Babylon, who conquered kings and princes, and treated them with scorn and contempt. So he used Zedekiah and his princes, &c. (Ez. xxxvi.

V. 10. The rapid and uninterrupted success of the king of Babylon against the Jews and the adjacent nations, would intimidate him with arrogance, and cause him to pass all bounds of reason, moderation, or decency, in his Oppression and impiety: and he would greatly offend the Lord, who had prospered his undertaking, by imputing his success to his idol Belus, or Nebu. This may refer to the golden image that Nebuchadnezzar set up; and to his extraordinary insignity, which was the punishment and curse of his pride: and perhaps Belshazzar’s arrogance and blasphemy also might be adduced to, which preceded the ruin of the Chaldean monarchy, and the deliverance of the Jews from captivity. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 12—17. The prophet again poured out his complaints before God, in the prospect of the dreadful calamities which were coming on his people from the Chaldeans. He had hoped, that the Lord would reform the nation by gentler corrections, or by raising up eminent instruments for that work: but when he understood the heavy judgments to be inflicted upon them, he was grieved, even as he had been by witnessing their crimes; he was astonished, that God would punish his offending worshippers by so wicked and idolatrous a people as the Chaldeans: and he still hoped that he would not finally leave them in their hands. As an Israelite, and as representing that nation, he addressed God, the everlasting Jehovah, his God, his eternal and unchangeable Portion, and the glorious Object of his adoration: “his Holy One,” who was perfect in justice, truth, goodness, and purity: he was therefore assured that he and his people should not die, or be utterly cut off by their enemies. The Lord had indeed ordained and established the Chaldeans in power, to judge his people, to distinguish between hypocrites and believers, to punish and to correct the other for their good, and thus to reform the nation. But he was of puerile eyes, than to behold iniquity without abhorrence; and therefore he would by no means countenance injustice, treachery, or tyranny. Why then should he look on, and keep silence, as an unconcerned spectator, whilst these wicked idolaters devoured those that were more righteous than themselves? Why did he so prosper the cruel and rapacious, as to enable them to prey upon their inferiors, as the sea-monsters and large fishes do upon the multitude of the smaller fishes; or as reptiles are destroyed by more powerful creatures, having none to rule over or protect them? Indeed, men become the prey of their own species, as fishes are taken by the fishermen, without being able to make any effectual resistance; whilst some were drawn out by the angle, others by the cast-net or the draw-net. Thus the victorious Chaldeans would prey upon the helpless Jews, and rejoice in their miseries and their own successful wickedness; and ascribe their victories to means and instruments, to their word, courage, and conduct, by which they lived in plenty and luxury; and not to the living God, who alone gave them power to grow rich and great. And this would increase their propensity to vain glory or vain idolatry; in which they would act as absurdly, as if the fisherman should offer sacrifice or burn incense to his net, when he had taken a large draught of fishes, or grew rich by his occupation. But would the Lord permit them thus to gather and hoard up wealth by fraud and rapine, and to destroy whole nations, (especially his own nation,) to aggrandize themselves?

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS. V. 1—11.

The servants of God cannot but be greatly afflicted, by witnessing the prevalence of ungodliness, iniquity, violence, and contention; especially among those that profess the truth. This will excite their earnest cries; and it will often cause them to complain, that the Lord delays to hear their prayers and to prosper their labours, and constrains them to stand by while his law is despised and trampled on, the laws of men are staked or perverted, and the wicked are allowed to compass about the righteous, and to ruin him by iniquitous judgments. But sometimes their prayers and complaints are answered in a way of which they were not aware; and the Lord lifts up a standard against the incursions of iniquity, by meting them with desolating judgments. Even when he gives warning that this is his purpose, few to whom it is told will believe it. Most men presume upon continued prosperity, or that calamities will not come in their days: so that when predicted judgments overwheel guilty nations or individuals, “they marvellously wonder,” as if no intimation had been given about them! But when the Lord has work of this kind to do, he can soon raise up bitter and nasty instruments, to desolate countries, and seize upon dwelling-places that are not theirs; men whose pride and arrogance are as terrible as their cruelty and fierceness. Their valor, speed, and success, are from God: but their barbarity...
CHAP. II.

The prophet, waiting for an answer, is ordered to write his vision, which would certainly be fulfilled, 1-3. The proud are not upright; but the just live by faith. 4. The judgment of the Chaldeans for insatiableness, ambition, cruelty, treachery, and idolatry, 5-11. A call to the whole earth to keep silence before God, 20.

I will stand upon my watch, and set me upon the * tower,* and will watch rapacity, and treachery, and the abuse of their power and dignity, are of themselves. These influence them to ravage nations, to destroy or enslave millions, to deride and scorn princes, and to take pleasure in mischief and devastation. And whilst the Lord employs and prospers them in executing his judgments, they grow more intoxicated by success, and more hardened in impurity, infidelity, and idolatry; and thus ripen themselves for destruction.

V. 12-17.

The everlasting and holy Lord God of Israel, though he ordains the basest of men for correction and judgment, continues the invariable Friend of his people; and though he "chasten them sore, he will not give them over unto death." He is "of purer eyes that to behold iniquity," and as he will not connive at or countenance the crimes of his worshippers, or even of the incongruous walking of true believers, so he cannot possibly approve of the enormous injustice, treachery, cruelty, rapacity, or blasphemy, of his enemies. Yet the transient success of bad men, in devouing those that are more righteous than themselves, often proves a dangerous temptation to believers; and causes them to question, for the time, the truth of their own principles, and to be dissatisfied with their choice and portion. But this is their infirmity: and prayer for stronger faith and for clearer views of eternal things is their proper remedy. It is lamentably true, that men are like the fishes of the sea, and the ungodened and animal tribes, which devour each other, and are "made to be taken and destroyed." The havoc of the human species by mighty conquerors and cruel tyrants, to enrich and aggrandize themselves, and the constant re-acting of this same bloody tragedy, on one stage after another; all over the earth, through successive generations, with the loud plaudits of the numerous and admiring spectators, form one of the most mortifying reflections imaginable to the pious and humane observer. Yet the Lord hath wise reasons for permitting these things; though he abhors not only the injustice and cruelty of the actors, but also their impunity and self-admiration, whilst they ascribe their greatness and prosperity to their own policy, courage, or good fortune, and rejoice in their fleeting riches and fading glories; and he will soon end their successful and splendid robberies. Death and judgment shall make them cease to prey on others, and they themselves shall be preyed upon. But let us remember, whatever temporal or spiritual advantages we possess, by whatever means, instruments, or endeavours, to give all the glory of them to God, with humble thanksgivings and praises. Thus all things will be sanctified to us, lead our thoughts to the great Source of all felicity, and help to prepare us for the enjoyment of his favour for ever.

NOTES.

CHAP. II. V. 1-3. The prophet, having made his complaints and inquiries before God, humbly waited for an answer. He was a watchman, who was appointed to stand in his watch-tower, to give warning of the approach of either of enemies or helpers. He would therefore wait upon God with recollection and prayer, expecting further instructions: and he would watch to see what the Lord would say to him, or in him, by the Spirit of prophecy, that he might know what to answer to the people, who reproved him and contended with him, uttering the terrifying predictions of the foregoing chapter, and who started objections which he knew not how to obviate. Accordingly, the Lord ordered him to write the following vision in large legible characters, upon tablets made of wood and covered with wax, (as was customary in those days:) that being hung up in some public place, every one might read it with the utmost facility; and that the Jews might generally get acquainted with it. For it related to interesting events which would not immediately be fulfilled; but for which a time was appointed in the purposes of God. When that period should arrive, the prophecy would speak for itself, proclaiming its divine original by its exact accomplishment: this therefore was to be patiently waited for, though apparently long delayed; for it would indubitably come to pass, and not tarry beyond the prescribed and best time. Some interpret this of the coming of Christ, and render it, He will surely come, &c. (Heb. x. 37, 38.)

When I am, &c. "What shall I answer, as to what I have argued," viz. to the expostulations I made with God just before. God commands the prophet to write the contents of this vision, in such visible characters as were used in public tables, and hung up in temples and market-places, that every one might have cognizance of them.

Though it tarry, &c. There are two words in the Hebr: rendered by one English word, tarry. Though he tarry, expect him; because he that cometh, will Behold, his soul which is lifted up is not upright in him: but the just shall live by his faith.

5 Ye also, as ye transgress against the Son of God, against whose blood ye were redeemed, and as ye do good, and as ye patiently wait for the abounding of his grace, which will be unfolded unto you at the revelation of Jesus Christ.

6 Shall not all these take up a part again against him, and a taunting provocation against him, and say, Woe to him that increaseth that which is not his! how come he not beyond the appointed time, but will make good the promise of deliverance given to our fathers? (Lometh.)

4. The former part of this verse is generally applied to Nebuchadnezzar, or Belshazzar; whose hearts were exalted in pride and alienated from God, even when they used submissive words respecting him. The Septuagint renders the verse, "If any man draw back, my soul shall have no pleasure in him: but the just shall live by his faith." This the apostle quotes, only reversing the order of the two clauses in the verse. (Marg. Ref.) This leads us to consider the proud, unbelieving, and apostate Jews, as well as the Chaldeans. The general principle perhaps may be thus stated, with reference to the state of things in the prophet's time. The proud and hypocritical Jews objectied to and scoffed at these predictions; as those of whom St. Peter spake did at that of the coming of Christ to destroy his enemies and judge the world. (2 Pet. iii. 3, 4.) They were elated with self-sufficiency, and proud of their privileges; they confided in their own wisdom, strength, or courage: they "trusted in themselves that they were righteous," and vindicated their conduct against the reproofs of the prophets, and disdained their humiliating messages; their souls, or hearts, were not upright in them; they were unsound and hypocritical, and they drew back, when called to self-denial and trials for conscience sake. Whereas every righteous person, who was accepted of God and walked by the rule of his word, lived by faith in the mercy, grace, promise, and providence of God, and in the redemption of the predicted Saviour: by this faith he was justified and sanctified, and had both his title to and fitness for eternal life: by this faith he lived unto God, in dependence and submission, expecting all good from him, and devoting himself to his service: not being of "such as drew back unto perdition, but of those that believed to the saving of their souls." This discrimination of character, between the proud Pharisee and the humble believer is always to be observed; but it was most evident when Christ came, and when his Gospel was first published; and probably the spirit of prophecy intended those future times and events, to which the apostle has applied this passage.

V. 5-6. The prophet, having assured the Jews of a deliverance in God's appointed time, proceeds now to denounce his judgment against the Babylonian monarchy, speaking of it as comprised under one person. He describes him as intoxicated with successes, and not knowing how to set any bounds to his ambition. (Lometh.) It is probable that the kings of Babylon, (either himself or his subjects,) indulged to a great excess of riot; and inflamed their passions by intoxication for the execution of their destructive projects. Nebuchadnezzar was a very proud ambitious man, intoxicated by greatness and prosperity: he was not satisfied with his paternal dominions; but his lust of dominion and his ambitious views expanded, till he became insatiable as hell and death, or the grave; and he wanted to gather to him all nations, to aggressize himself by extending his authority, to increase his revenues, and to acquire a greater measure of fame among men. But his overgrown empire would speedily be subverted: all the nations, which he or his successors had conquered and oppressed, would at length insolent over his fallen family and empire, with taunting reproaches; they would denounce woes upon him, for seizing upon those countries that did not belong to him; and inquire cunningly how long he had held them? and they would ridicule and reproach him, for loading himself with thick clay; or with those ill-gotten dominions and treasures, which would only pollute, burden, and encumber him, without being of any real use to him or his family. For the Medes and Persians would soon rise up to perplex and harass the kings of Babylon, whose great wealth and extensive empire would render them the richer booty for them. As they had spoiled many nations, a remnant of these very people would join their enemies in spoiling them; to avenge the innocent blood which they had shed, and especially the violence done to the land of Judah, the city of Jerusalem, and the Jews. It is obvious, that all this may be applied both to the temporal conquests, dominion, and tyranny of Pagan Rome, and her persecution of the primitive Christians, and to the ruin of that overgrown empire, also the spiritual pride and ambition, the insatiable thirst for dominion, the tyranny, cruelty, and persecution of Papal Rome; and to the expected event of that usurpation, and the ruin of that city which hath been the seat of it, whether these events were intended in the prediction, or not.
may set his nest on high, that he may be delivered from the power of evil.

10 Thou hast consulted shame to thy house, by cutting off many of them, and hast sinned against thy soul.

11 For the stone shall cry out of the wall, and the beam out of the timber shall answer it.

12 Woe to him that buildeth a town with blood, and stablisheth a city by iniquity!

13 Behold, is it not of the Lord of hosts that the people shall labour in the very fire, and the people shall weary themselves for their vanity?

14 For the earth shall be filled with the knowledge of the glory of the Lord, as the waters cover the sea.

V. 9—11. The king of Babylon aimed to exalt his family to such power and greatness, that they might be of the reach of their enemies, and have nothing to fear from any rival; (as the eagle's lofty nest is the security of her young;) but this covetousness and rapacity prompted him to use most iniquitous, oppressive, and cruel methods of aggrandizing himself, which proved ruinous to his posterity; both by rendering him the object of the hatred and envy of his neighbours, and by exposing him to the righteous judgment of God. Thus by cutting off many people he ensured disgrace to his family, even as if he had consulted how to shame them; and he brought guilt upon himself, as if he had intended to destroy his own life or soul. For if other witnesses of his guilt should be wanting, or men should not dare to give in their evidence, the very stones and timber of the city and palaces, which he had erected with the spoils of the oppressed nations, would concur in crying to God for vengeance upon him, and in testifying his guilt. The temporal effects of Nebuchadnezzar's oppressions on his kingdom and family, which were here predicted: but we cannot draw any conclusion from it, as to the state of his soul; for it is probable that he repented and obtained forgiveness. The stones of the house shall cry, and say that they are built of blood; and the wood shall answer and say the same of itself.

(Marg. Ref.)

V. 12—14. Nebuchadnezzar was very proud of great Babylon, which he had built for himself: but this work was performed at the expense of immense bloodshed, and the iniquity thus contracted brought down the wrath of God on his posterity. He had exposed himself and his soldiers to vast fatigue, hardship, and peril, in his wars; and he had wearied his subjects and vassals, as if they had laboured in the fire, whilst they builted the walls, castles, temples, and palaces of Babylon: and all this was in fact for very vanity. For that city would soon be taken by the Medes and Persians; the monarchy and royal family would be ruined, the seat of empire removed, and Babylon itself at length entirely destroyed. Indeed, it was the righteous purpose of God, to permit the Chaldeans and their associates to be thus harassed and wearied, in order to punish their idolatry, and their oppression of his worshippers; and he intended to destroy that city, in order to show his glory to the whole earth, by redeeming Israel and replenishing Jerusalem; that there the Redeemer might appear, and that his Gospel might spread from thence, to fill the earth with the knowledge of the glorious perfections, truth, and salvation of the Lord; with the worship of his name, and obedience to his will, even as the waters deeply and entirely overspread the whole channel of the seas. This universal spread of the Gospel will follow the ruin of the New-Testament Babylon; that city, which hath been built with blood and iniquity, and where the people have been left to labour in the fire, and to weary themselves for the veriest vanities, in idolatries, superstitions, will-worship, and fruitless efforts to preserve an usurped authority. It is therefore evident that these events also were intended. God's providence in governing the world shall conspicuously appear in the downfall of the Babylonian empire; especially as it is described by the prophets, as an earnest and type of the fall of mystical Babylon, which will be a decisive stroke, that will thoroughly vindicate oppressed truth and innocence. (Lowth.)
CHAPTER II.

18 What propheteth the gravely image that the maker thereof hath graven it; the molten-image, and the teacher of lies, that the maker of his work trusteth therein, to make dumb idols!

19 Woe unto him that saith to the image, Providence, and to the image of the thing, to make thy gods: shall they not teach thee; shall they not tell thee: will they not hear thee? shall thy image teach thee; shall it tell thee? will it tell thee: if thou keep still, and peace come to the earth; if it shall shall teach! Behold, it is laid over with gold and silver, and there is no breath at all in the midst of it.

20 But the Lord is in his holy temple, he will answer the prayers of his servants, though the temple at Jerusalem should be destroyed. (Lowlth.) He is the sovereign Lord of all, to whom all worship, honour, and obedience are due: let all the earth keep silence before him, not daring to oppose his truth or provoke his wrath; but submitting quietly to his reprob, humbly adorning his perfections, accepting of his salvation, and obeying his will, without objecting, murmuring, or disputing. It alludes to such a silence as is kept in courts of justice, when a judge pronounces the sentence. (Lowlth.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.
V. 1-3.

When we have presented our prayers before God, we should expect and wait for an answer; using every means of information, and watching the course of providence; that we may learn his will, and how to answer those who cavil, object, or revile our confidence in him, and our belief of his word. Ministers also must wait upon God, to know how to answer their opposers; as well as watch for opportunities of usefulness. It behoves them to render their important message as plain and energetic as possible; that it may be level to the capacity of the most unlearned, and may excite the attention of the most heedless. For all men are concerned in the truths of God's word: all his predictions, promises, and threatenings, shall in the appointed season be accomplished; every part shall then declare its own truth and divinity; and they, who wait for the Lord, will not complain of having waited in vain. We should rest on and plead his promises; and though the performance of them tarry, we should "hope unto the end," and we shall thus experience their truth and preciousness. But pride objects to this method of seeking happiness, and to the whole system of revealed religion: the ambitious, self-wise, and self-sufficient are not, and cannot be, upright in heart in their religious inquiries and professions; and by rejecting and despising the "righteousness and strength, wisdom and grace; he walks and works, as well as lives, by faith; perseveres unto the end, and is exalted to glory, whilst proud Pharisees and hypocrites are debase unto hell. But in what varied ways does human depravity break forth! A vain exorbitant ambition disposes men to despise the most eligible situations, and torove from home in quest of happiness; success only enlarges their desires, and renders them insatiable and boundless, and HABAKKUK.

CHAP. III.

The prophet prays that God would revive his work, and have mercy on his people, 1, 2. He commemorates the displays made of Jehovah's glory in his ancient works for Israel, as encouraging hope of future deliverances, 3—15. He shows how deeply he was affected by the prospect of the approaching judgments, but resolves to rejoice in God when all other comforts fail, 16—19.

A PRAYER of Habakkuk the prophet, upon Shigionoth.

2 O Lord, I have heard thy speech, and was afraid: O Lord, I revive thy work in the midst of the years, in the midst of the years make known; in wrath remember mercy.

3 Do have I come from Teman, and the Holy One from mount Paran, Selah. His glory covered the heavens, and the earth was full of his praise.

4 And his brightness was as the light; he had born coming out of his hand; and there was no the hiding of his power.

5 Before him went the pestilence, and burning coals went forth at his feet.

In vain do men expect, by an evil covetousness, to advance their families and secure them from the power of evil: they only treasure up guilt and shame and every part of their treasures amased by fraud or violence, will cry out for vengeance on them. For were a man thus to build a city or erect a kingdom for his posterity, he would leave them a curse instead of a blessing: and he in acquiring, and they in attempting to preserve it, would labour in the fire, and weary themselves for very vanity. For the Lord will assuredly himself before all the inhabitants of the earth, in executing judgment upon the murderers and plunderers of mankind, under whatever specious guise they make their appearance. Nor can sensual pleasures do more for men's happiness than avarice or ambition: whilst they transgress by wine, and temp others to that degrading vice, and glory in making their neighbours drunken also, that they may cheat or deride them; they forget, that God hath denounced a wo upon them, and that the cup of his wrath is about to be put into their hands, which will turn all their mirth into howling, and all their glory into contempt. Indeed, all who seduce others into any kind of carnal or spiritual wickedness, to gratify their own vile passions or interests, will meet with the severest condemnation from the Lord. Nor can idols, superstitions, or teachers of lies, of whatever description, profit any man, or render him profitable to others. Wo be to all who incite or countenance such human inventions, or diabolical delusions! say, to those, who are deluded to give that glory to a dumb idol, or to any creature, which our jealous God claimeth wholly to himself! He dwelleth in his holy temple: may we, may all the inhabitants of the earth, fall down before him, welcome his salvation, and worship him through Christ Jesus, and by the influences of his Spirit! Thus we shall shun these vices and delusions, seek durable honours, riches, and pleasures, and employ all our powers to glorify our God and Saviour.

NOTES.

CHAP. III. V. 1. "A prayer of Habakkuk the prophet, with an Ode." (Sept.) Shigionoth may denote a musical instrument of great compass, with which the Jews accompanied this piece of poetry. (Bp. Newcome.) (Marg. Ref.) The word prayer seems to be taken generally for an act of devotion to God.

V. 2. The prophet had hearkened attentively to the discovery, which the Lord had made to him of his future dealings with Israel: and though heavy judgments had been denounced on their oppressors, and intimations of future deliverances had been given, yet there was no reason to hope that the threatened judgments on Israel might be averted or retarded. He was therefore alarmed at the prospect of the captivity; and prayed that God would revive his work among them in the midst of those years of adversity, and make known his glorious perfections and his favour for his people, by preserving them, and purifying them in this furnace of affliction, that they might be prepared for deliverance from it; and that even in the midst of his wrath against them he would remember mercy also, and give them some mitigation of their calamities, and revive true religion among them. This seems preparatory to refer to the years of the Babylonish captivity, though it may be applied to the years that were to intervene before the coming of the Messiah; to those of the antichristian oppressors of the Church; or to any other season when the Church is under divine rebukes or grievous afflictions.

V. 3—5. The prophet, to encourage his hope of effectual help from God in behalf of the people, set himself to celebrate the praises of his former interpositions in their behalf. As Israel's "Holy One," the Object of their worship, and their righteous Ruler and Protector, he had come from Teman, or mount Seir, and from Paran, to 6 He stood, and measured the earth: he beheld, and drove asunder the nations: and the everlasting mountains were scattered, the perpetual hills did bow: his ways are everlasting.

7 I saw the tents of Cushan in affliction: and the curtains of the land of Midian did tremble.

8 Was the Lord displeased against the rivers? was thine anger against the rivers? was thy wrath against the sea?

9 Thy bow was made quite naked, according to the oaths of the tribes, even thy word. Selah. Thou didst cleave the earth with rivers.

10 The mountains saw thee, and they trembled: the overflowing of the water passed by: the deep uttered his voice, and lifted up his hands on high.

11 The sun and moon stood still at the presence of God; but at the presence of the enemy they五官 turned backward.

12 Then the vessels of wine did he break; and the pitchers did he shatter: they did not dare to come to the grainfields; and the harvest did not come.

13 The presses did yield no wine; because the vine was dead, and the fig tree did not flower; because the myrtle did wither: and the field was burned with fire.

14 Therefore the nations feared the name of the Lord; and the nations hasted unto his people.

15 Then the horns of the shepherds did cast down, and theIllustration of the text: deliver Israel from Egypt, and to meet them on mount Sinai. He had sent Moses from that quarter, and his visible glory seemed to come from thence. Then the firmament was illuminated by the displays of his Majesty: he was adorned by all the angels of heaven, and the praise of his wonders ran through all the earth. The brightness of his glory was conspicuous and resplendent as the light. "He had horns coming out of his hand," an emblem of the power which he exerted, to defend Israel and scatter their enemies: or, as it may be rendered, "bright beams came forth from his side." The verb, whence the word here used is derived, signifies to shine, Ex. xxxiv. 23, 29, 35; and a pencil, or cone, issuing from a point, diverses in the shape of a horn. (Note, Ex. xxxiv. 29-33.) In the place whence the light proceeded, he gloriously concealed his presence. Calculus understands the verse of the lightning on mount Sinai: but I rather refer it to the brightness, which occasionally issued from the Shechinah. The Israelites were consumed by a fire, which went out from Jehovah."—The burning-offering was consumed by a fire, which came out from before him. (Bp. Newcome.) (Notes, Lev. ix. 24. x. 1, 2. Marg. Ref.) All this, however, was rather the hiding than the discovery of his almighty power: or, the hiding-place of his power, under which Israel was safely sheltered. Pestilities and fire marched before him and attended his steps, when he passed through Egypt, to destroy the first-born and desolate the land: when he appeared to the people from the top of Sinai: when he destroyed the rebels from among them, and when he marched before them to subdue the Amalekites, Amorites, Midianites, and other enemies. This is a sudden burst of poetry, in the true spirit of the ode; the concealed connection being, that God, who had formerly displayed such power in delivering the Israelites from Egyptian slavery, might succour their posterity in a like wonderful manner; and the enthusiasm of the poet leading him to neglect all obvious ways of entering on his subject. (Bp. Lowth.) "The grandest circumstances are selected, the diction is as splendid as the subject." (Bp. Newcome.)

V. 6. The God of Israel stood and measured out Canaan, and allotted it for the inheritance of their tribes; as he had divided the whole earth among the nations. He dispersed the power of Egypt, which would have hindered Israel’s departure to the promised inheritance; he destroyed the confederated nations of Canaan, that would have prevented them from taking possession of it. The whole creation seemed to be thrown into convulsions at the presence of Israel’s God: Sinai and Horeb shook and quaked; and the most formidable and powerful oppressors, which were as the mountains and hills, that have kept their places from the creation, were driven away as chaff, or made to bow down in subjection to his people. (Marg. Ref.) "The mountains and hills are spoken of as problems of eternity, because time seems to make no change in them. His ways, &c. His purposes are decreed from eternity, and will infallibly be executed in the appointed time." (Lowth.)

V. 7. The prophet in his vision, saw the consternation and distress of the Ethiopians, Arabians, Midianites, Moabites, Ammonites, and others who inhabited the adjacent regions; whilst they heard of the wonders wrought by Jehovah in delivering Israel; whilst they witnessed the convulsions of nature around them; whilst they learned how the Amalekites, and Sihon and Og, had been destroyed by Israel; and when they found themselves attacked by the same terrible enemies. (Marg. Ref.) Several of these tribes dwelt in tents, or within curtains.

V. 8. The Lord was not displeased with the rivers of the sea, when he turned the waters of the Nile into blood, or when he divided those of the Red Sea and of Jordan: but he came, as in haste, to deliver Israel, attended by his holy angels, with his horses and chariots of salvation: and love to his people caused him thus to alter the course of nature, for their deliverance and prosperity. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 9, 10. The question asked, in a very bold and poetical manner, in the eighth verse, is answered in the ninth; that God displayed his power to deliver his people, according to his faithful word. (Bp. Newcome.) (Marg. Ref.) The Lord appeared as a mighty warrior, to fight for Israel, and made his bow, (here put for all the weapons of war,) quite naked, as openly prepared for the assault. This accorded to his oath and word of promise, to Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, in behalf of their descendants the tribes of Israel, to give them the land of Canaan. Therefore the Lord "did cleave," or divide, the rivers of the earth, to open them a passage to their promised inheritance; and the mountains, as if conscious of Jehovah’s presence with his people, trembled and quaked. The overflowing waters of the Red Sea, or of Jordan, removed, to make way for them; and being piled up as walls or 5 O.
11 The sun and moon stood still in their habitation, at the light of thine arrows they went, and at the shining of thy glittering spear.

12 Thou didst march through the land in indignation, thou didst thresh the heathen in anger.

13 Thou wentest forth for the salvation of thy people, even for salvation with thine anointed; thou woundedst the head of the house of the wicked, by discovering the foundation unto the neck Selah.

14 Thou didst strike through with his staves the head of his villages: they came out as a whirlwind to scatter me; their rejoicing was as to devour the poor secretly.

15 Thou didst walk through the sea with thine horses, through theheap of great waters.

16 When I heard, my belly trembled; my lips quivered at the voice: my knees became weak, my legs melt under me, I am become like a child, and thou hast cast me down, in the day of trouble: when he cometh up unto the people, he will invade them with his troops.

17 Although the fig-tree shall not blossom, neither shall fruit be in the vines: the labour of the olive shall fail, and the distinc t services, may be included among his anointed.

(Num. Ref.) As the Egyptians had craftily attempted to crush the enslaved Israelites, by destroying their male children; so God crushed Egypt, by destroying the first-born. And when Pharaoh had consented to Israel’s departure, hearing afterwards that they were entangled in the country, he craftily attempted to come on them unawares, when unarmed or unable to resist or flee, that he might glut his revenge in their destruction; but he fell a victim, with all his forces, to his own malicious and insidious policy.

(Num. Ref.) The Egyptians speedily followed the Israelites; and in imagination devoured a defenceless people. (Bp. Newcome.) Nothing similar to this occurred after Israel had entered Canaan; though some expositors understand the passage of their triumphs over the Canaanites.

V. 14, 15. The Lord, by those instruments that he employed for the deliverance of his people, effectually smote through the heads of the cities and villages of Egypt. They came out furiously as a whirlwind to scatter Israel, rejoicing to afflict and oppress them, either by open violence, or by secret machinations; but Jehovah marched before his poor people through the Red Sea, as with his horses and chariots of war; and having guarded them through the heap of mighty waters, he overwhelmed and destroyed their pursuers, by the reflux of the sea into its former channel.

V. 16. This refers to what the prophet had heard of the Chaldean invasion, which had brought him into the greatest agitation. His body trembled and was convulsed; his voice faltered; his bones were in pain and weakness, as if decayed through diseases; and he trembled in the utmost reeses of his heart; anxiously inquiring, what refuge he could flee to, or what means he could use, to be safe and at rest in the approaching day of trouble, when the king of Babylon would come up, and invade; or cut in pieces, the people with his troops. 'I shall rest secure under the divine protection, when the Chaldeans shall come to invade Judea; ' (Loom.) Some expositors suppose, that the calamities and deliverances which the prophet foresaw were those of the Christian Church, as well as those of the Jews.)
the fields shall yield no meat; the flock shall be cut off from the fold, and there shall be no herd in the stalls: 18 Yet will I rejoice in the Lord, I will joy in the God of my salvation.

V. 17—19. The prophet foresaw, that the Chaldeans would utterly desolate the land, and render the vineyards, olive-yards, orchards, fields, and pastures, entirely unproductive; that every outward comfort would fail, and that the extremity of distress and hardship must be endured. And perhaps he also understood, that all the ordinances of God's house, and other means of grace and of divine consolation, would be suspended. Yet, by meditation, prayer, and praise, composing his mind, he was enabled to exercise faith and hope in God; he had those views of his power, truth, love to his people, and all-sufficiency for their happiness in life and death, and for ever, that he was determined to rejoice in him and his salvation, in all possible circumstances. The Lord God, his Strength, his Support, Protector, and Comforter, was able to make up all losses, to supply all wants, and to rejoice his heart under all afflictions. He would make his feet as those of the hind or hart, that he might walk safely on the brink of the most tremendous precipices, or climb on high places out of the reach of his pursuers; or that he might live in the enjoyment of his exalted privileges, and the hope of a most glorious inheritance; notwithstanding all difficulties, temptations, and dangers. This song of praise and believing prayer, he dedicated to the chief singer at the temple, to be set to music on some stringed instruments, which he had chosen or provided for that purpose.

(Praec. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—16.

Whatever causes us to fear or grieve, should remind us to pray; whether it be a message from God's world, or a dispensation of his providence; whether it respect ourselves or the Church, or those with whom we stand connected. If we fear, or grieve, that the work of God in our hearts, families, or congregations, declines, we should pray the more earnestly that the Lord would revive it in the midst of the years of our pilgrimage; that he would subdue our iniquities, increase our faith and love, convert sinners, and cause believers to be zealous, diligent, and fruitful. Even when we suffer the fatherly corrections of our God, we should hope and pray that in wrath he would remember mercy, and that we may be supported under our trials, and profited by them. We shall see no cause for despension, either in our own case, or in that of the Church, when we remember the ancient wonders of his love to his people. The displays of his power, truth, and mercy, to Israel, and of righteous severity upon his enemies, were very resplendent, and his glory covered the heavens and the earth. How then have they been filled with the brightness of his light, displayed in the great redemption of his Son! The Majesty that shone from mount Sinai, at the Red Sea, in the wilderness, at the river Jordan, and in Canaan, (whilst the mountains saw and trembled, the deep adored, and the sun and moon stood still, as in amazement at their Creator's power, when he rode on his horses and chariots of salvation,) was great, and worthy to be praised; yet was it eclipsed by the harmonious discovery of the divine perfections which was made, when the Son of God suffered on the cross for the sins of his rebellious creatures. Then the sun was darkened, the rocks were cleft, the graces were opened, the veil of the temple was rent; and all creatures seemed to share in the astonishment and consternation, except the hardened priests, scribes, and pharisees! How glorious also was that display, when the earth quaked, and angels descended, to attend upon the resurrection of his crucified Lord! when the Holy Ghost came down from on high, on the assembled apostles, to testify his glorious ascension and exaltation at the right hand of the Father! and when he came in holy majesty and power to avenge himself on his crucifiers, to destroy Jerusalem, and to erect his kingdom on the ruins of that abrogated dispensation; and again to terminate the persecutions of his pagan enemies, by subverting the Roman empire! Great and glorious have been the works of our God for his Church; yet not only history, but prophecy, causes us to meditate terror, when we consider the intimations that are given of various severe conflicts, which his people must sustain with many antichrists.

V. 17—19.

In respect of the troubles which may befal us, however we may be impoverished, tempted, despised, persecuted, or afflicted, in life or death, we should seriously and frequently consider, how we may rest in the day of trouble. And if our fears lead us to abound in prayer and meditation, and in praising God for his former mercies to us or to his Church; if we are led to live wholly by faith in him, as the God of our salvation, and to exercise ourselves to have a conscience void of offence, towards him and all men; we shall find hope prevail. And as we shall have cause for rejoicing in every tribulation or peril, we shall be generally enabled to rejoice: we shall find our hearts assured of support and comfort by the way, and of finishing our course happily; and then other things will less move us: and whatever fail us, or be taken from or laid upon us, we may and ought to rejoice in our all-sufficient and eternal Portion. As he is the Strength, as well as Salvation, of his people, he will fit us for our warfare and our trials; he will carry us above, out of the reach of our enemies, and he will bring us to tread on our high places in his holy habitation in heaven, and to join the songs of those chief singers, who are now celebrating the praises of God and the Lamb. In hopes of this immortal crown, let us sit loose to earthly possessions and comforts, and let us cheerfully bear up under our crosses: for yet a little while, and he that shall come, will come, and will not tarry; and he will take us to himself, that where he is, there we may be also.
THE BOOK OF ZEPHANIAH.

It is probable that Zephaniah delivered these prophecies towards the close of Josiah’s reign, when religion was greatly declined in Judah, through the hypocrisy of those who had concurred in the reformation of that pious king. He was contemporary with Jeremiah, in the first years of that prophet; and often used the same language. He severely reproved the wickedness of the Jews, and predicted the Chaldean invasion and its fatal effects: he exhorted the people to repent and seek the Lord, as the only method of escaping ruin, personal and public; he foretold various judgments, that were coming on those nations, which afflicted, or rejoiced over the miseries of the Jews; and he concluded with most animating predictions of evangelical times, and of great prosperity to the Church. These predictions entirely accord with many which have been considered: and it is certain that this prophecy formed part of the sacred Scriptures, in the days of Christ and his apostles, though no express quotation is made from it in the New Testament.

R. C. 612.

CHAP. I.

The time when Zephaniah prophesied, 1. Denunciations of wrath against Judah and Jerusalem, for idolatry and apostacy, 2—6. Predictions of unavoidable judgments coming on men of different orders and descriptions, 7—18.

THE word of the Lord which came unto Zephaniah the son of Cushi, the son of Gedaliah, the son of Amariah, the son of Hizkiah, in the days of Josiah the son of Amon, king of Judah.

NOTES.

CHAP. I. V. 1. Hizkiah. The letters of this name are the same with those of Hezekiah; and some have thought that this prophet was descended from that pious king. But it does not appear that he had any son except Manasseh; and there was not a sufficient distance of time between Hezekiah and Zephaniah, for four descents. (Lowth.)

V. 3. These are figurative representations of desolating judgments. Neither the fowls of the air nor the fishes of the sea would profit the Jews; and this would be equivalent to their being destroyed. Their idols were stumbling-blocks, the occasion to the people of falling into sin and misery: but in mercy they would be destroyed, with

B. C. 612.

2 * I will utterly consume all things from off the land, saith the Lord.
3 * I will consume man and beast; I will consume the fowls of the heaven, and the fishes of the sea, and the the stumbling-blocks with the wicked; and I will cut off man from off the land, saith the Lord.
4 I will also stretch out mine hand upon Judah, and upon all the inhabitants of Jerusalem; and I will cut off the remnant of Baal from this place, and the name of the Chemarims with the priests.

their obstinate worshippers; and accordingly that nation no more relapsed into gross idolatry after the captivity.

V. 4. A remnant of Baal’s worshippers remained in Jerusalem, notwithstanding all Josiah’s efforts to destroy that idolatry; but the Lord by the Chaldeans finally exterminated it. The Chmarims, or the black ones, were an order of insolatious priests or devotees to Baal, who probably led black garments, or painted their faces black. (Marg. Ref.) The Chemarims were an order of superstitious priests, appointed to minister in the service of Baal, and were as his peculiar chaplains. (Lowth.)
5 And them that worship the host of heaven upon the house-tops: 1 and them that worship m and that swear * by the Lord, and that * swear by Malcham;
6 And them that are turned back from the Lord; 2 and those that have not sought the Lord, nor inquired for him.
7 Hold * thy peace at the presence of the Lord God: 3 for the day of the Lord is at hand: 4 for the Lord hath prepared a sacrifice, 2 be hath † bid his guests.
8 And it shall come to pass in the day of the Lord’s sacrifice, that I will † punish the princes, and the king’s children, and all such as are clothed with strange apparel.

V. 5. They join the worship of idols to that of the true God, who is a jealous God, and will not admit of any rival. Malcham is the same with Molech, to whom the people continued to offer their children, notwithstanding the reprobation that Josiah had made. Swearing is an act of religious worship, or a solemn invocation of God, as a Witness or Judge, and therefore expressly forbidden to be used to idols. (Loth.) (Marg. Ref.)

V. 6. Some had concurred in Josiah’s reformation, who afterwards relapsed into idolatry; and they would be punished with those that had never professed to seek and serve him. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 7, 8. The people were ordered to keep silence, and not murmur or object to the execution that was to take place in the approaching day of the Lord; for the slaughter of the wicked would be a sacrifice to his justice, which he had invited the Chaldeans and their confederates to put upon. This alludes to the custom of those that offered sacrifices, which was to invite their friends to partake of the feast which accompanied it. (Loth.) In that day the princes and even the king’s children would be punished. For though Josiah set his sons a good example, and doubtless gave them good instructions; yet they were very wicked, and shared abundantly in the public calamities. Jehoahaz died a captive in Egypt; Jehoiakim by a violent death; and Zedekiah having seen his sons slaughtered, and his eyes put out, was carried to Babylon, and died there. Such of the Jews also would be punished, as were weary of the dress of their country, and clothed themselves with the strange apparel of idlers, as desirous of being in all respects conformed to them. The text may likewise be explained of such men, as wore women’s apparel, and such women as wore that belonging to men; which was contrary to an express law, and was a rite observed in the worship of some idols. (Loth.) (Note, Deut. xxiii. 5.) The courtiers did imitate the strange apparel of other nations, to win their favour thereby, and to appear glorious in the eyes of all others.

V. 9. The servants of the oppressive princes and nobles exulted, in forcing their way into the houses of the oppressed; leaping for joy, when they pass over the thresholds, that they might convey the plunder into their master’s houses, for which they doubtless were liberally rewarded. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 10. A cry, &c. That is, of the enemy rushing into the city at different gates and in different quarters, on the people, from the hills; and a howling of the people, as terrified or slaughtered by them.

V. 11. Maktesh. The lower city. This is agreeable to the etymology of the word, which signifies a hollow place, or a mortar. (Bp. Newcome.) (Prov. xxvii. 22. Heb.) This is meant of the street of the merchants, which was lower than the rest of the place about it.

Bearers of silver. The rich merchants in general, or the money-changers in particular. (Bp. Newcome.)

V. 12. The Lord determined to detect, expose, and punish those secret idolatries, iniquities, and impurities, which had escaped all human observation. He would search every retired corner; as men search with candles for stolen goods: and no concealed abominations would then escape conviction or punishment. Or, No corner would escape the Chaldeans, who should diligently search the houses, and plunder the wealth of them. They especially would be punished, who were becoming during long continued impiety and prosperity; as wine grows stronger and more heavy when it hath long settled on the lees; who had run into infidelity or atheism, and despised alike the promises and threatenings of God, saying, in their hearts, that he would neither do good to his worshippers, nor punish his enemies. The thoughtless tranquility of the rich is compared to the fixed unbroken surface of fermented liquors. (Bp. Newcome.)
ZEPHANIAH.

V. 13. "The enemy shall plunder their goods and then demolish their houses: so that they shall not enjoy those possessions, which they have gotten by fraud and violece." (Lornh.)

V. 14-16. (Marg. Ref.) Towers. "Properly such were erected on the angles of walled cities. The topic of approaching calamity from Jehovah is often insisted on in the prophets; but no where, I think, with such beautiful amplification, as in these verses.

(By a Newcome.)

V. 17. The blood and the carcasses of the slain would be thrown upon the ground, like dust or dung upon the face of the earth, and left to putrify.

V. 18. (Mang. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The servants of God are all of one mind, and with one voice proclaim that "there is no peace for the wicked."
How soon doth human depravity subvert all that man can do to preserve true religion! Even where a decent exterior excites our favourable judgment, the Lord often sees such abominations as call for his severe vengeance. If the materials and occasions of sin shall perish with the wicked; how much more will the tempters, who seduce men to iniquity! When professors of true religion copy the abominations of the heathen, they must expect severer punishment than they. Vain are all endeavours to worship God and idols, to serve God and Mammon; and apostacy evinces hypocrisy, as neglect of God shows impiety and contempt: "for if a man draw back, the Lord will have no pleasure in him." May we "none of us be of those that draw back unto perdition, but of them that believe to the saving of the soul." It will be unavailing

18 Neither their silver nor their gold shall be able to deliver them in the day of the Lord's wrath; but the whole and shall be devoured by the fire of his jealousy: for he shall make even a speedy riddance of all them that dwell in the land.

CHAP. II.

An exhortation to seek God, without delay, in hope of preservation in the day of his anser. 1-3. Prophecies against the Philistines, Moabites, Ammonites, Ethiopians, and Assyrians, 4-11.

GATHER yourselves together, yea, that they shall walk like blind men, because they have sinned against the Lord; and their blood shall be poured out as dust, and their flesh as the dun grass. (Marg. Ref.)

11 And I will bring distress upon men, and their blood shall be poured out as dust, and their flesh as the dun grass. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 13. The enemy shall plunder their goods and then demolish their houses: so that they shall not enjoy those possessions, which they have gotten by fraud and violence. (Lornh.)

V. 14-16. (Mang. Ref.) Towers. "Properly such were erected on the angles of walled cities. The topic of approaching calamity from Jehovah is often insisted on in the prophets; but nowhere, I think, with such beautiful amplification, as in these verses."

(By a Newcome.)

V. 17. The blood and the carcasses of the slain would be thrown upon the ground, like dust or dung upon the face of the earth, and left to putrify.

V. 18. (Mang. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The servants of God are all of one mind, and with one voice proclaim that "there is no peace for the wicked." How soon doth human depravity subvert all that man can do to preserve true religion! Even where a decent exterior excites our favourable judgment, the Lord often sees such abominations as call for his severe vengeance. If the materials and occasions of sin shall perish with the wicked; how much more will the tempters, who seduce men to iniquity! When professors of true religion copy the abominations of the heathen, they must expect severer punishment than they. Vain are all endeavours to worship God and idols, to serve God and Mammon; and apostacy evinces hypocrisy, as neglect of God shows impiety and contempt: "for if a man draw back, the Lord will have no pleasure in him." May we "none of us be of those that draw back unto perdition, but of them that believe to the saving of the soul." It will be unavailing in the day of the Lord, for sinners to object, cavil, or complain; naught, his presence will certainly stop their mouths: for it will appear that they who perish fall a sacrifice to his justice, for breaking his law, and because they have no interest by faith in the Redeemer's atoning blood. That day of God, (of which all temporal judgments are earnests,) will soon arrive; and then neither pious nor royal parents will prove any security to their ungodly children: nay, the children of kings and of saints, who have abused their peculiar privileges, will experience the deepest condemnation. Then various instances of vanity and conformitv to the world will be adduced as proofs of men's pride and carnality, which now are regarded trivial or justifiable; and oppressors, and their agents, will be reckoned with for their ill-gotten treasures. Then there will be cries and howlings from every quarter, and among men of all descriptions. Then covetous and fraudulent merchants and traders will forget their gainful projects; and plausible hypocrites will be exposed in their secret iniquities. Then daring infidels, who have settled on their lees, and equally despised the favour and defied the wrath of God, will cry to the rocks to fall on them, and hide them from his intolerable frown. In short, in that time of wrath, of trouble and distress, neither men's silver nor their gold will be able to deliver them; but the whole will be consumed with the fire of his indignation. "What is a man profited, if he gain the whole world, and lose his own soul?" And what shall a "man give in exchange for his soul?" Let us then "see from the wrath to come," and "choose that good part, that shall never be taken from us?" Then we shall be prepared for every event; and nothing "shall separate us from the love of God which is in Christ Jesus our Lord."
CHAPTER II.

3 Seek ye the Lord, *all ye meek of the earth, which have wrought his judgment; *seek righteousness, seek meekness: *it may be ye shall be hid in the day of the Lord's anger.

4 For *Gaza shall be forsaken, and Ashkelon a desolation: they shall drive out Ashdod *at the noon-day, and Ekron shall be root up.

5 Woe unto the inhabitants of the sea-coasts, the nation of the *cherethites! *the word of the Lord is against you; *O Canaan, the land of the Philistines, I will even destroy thee, that there shall be no inhabitant.

6 And *the sea-coast shall be dwellings and cottages for shepherds, and folds for flocks.

7 And *the coast shall be for the remnant of the house of Judah; *they shall feed thereupon: in the houses of Ashkelon.

8 Ashkelon shall they lie down in the evening: *for the Lord their God shall visit them, and turn away their captivity.

9 Therefore *as I live, saith the Lord of hosts, the God of Israel, *Surely Moab shall be as Sodom, and the children of Ammon *as Gomorrah, even the breeding of nettles, and salt-pits, and a perpetual desolation: *the residue of my people shall spoil them, and the remnant of my people shall possess them.

10 This shall they have *for their pride, because they have reproached, and magnified themselves against the people of the Lord of hosts.

11 The Lord will be terrible unto them.

NOTES.

CHAP. II. V. 1.—This exhortation to repentance plainly intimated, that the preceding denunciations of desolating judgments were absolute, only because the Lord knew that the nation would generally continue impenitent. Judah was addressed as "a nation not desired?" God had delighted in his people, but he now no longer desired them; nay, he abhorred their odious crimes. Or it may be rendered, *not desist from; that is, wholly careless respecting the fag, or wrath of God. They were, however, ordered to gather together in a solemn assembly, to fast and pray, and humble themselves before God: or, (as some render it,) to examine themselves, that they might discover and repent of their sins. This must be done without delay:—for the decree or sentence against them, was about "to bring forth" those desolations, which would put it out of their power to assemble. The day allotted them for this purpose, would soon pass, as the chaff driven by the wind: and the fierce anger of God, in the day of his wrath, would speedily overtake them. But if the nation in general still neglected this duty, yet let the remnant of the meek and lowly, the humble, teachable, and peaceable, seek the Lord in fervent prayer. Though they were poor, despised and afflicted; yet they had obeyed his commandments and adhered to his worship; or being truly penitent, they were now disposed to do so. Let them therefore seek his favour, and his justifying and sanctifying righteousness, and endeavour more fully to understand, and keep his commandments. Though they were meek; yet let them seek more meekness, that they might be more humble, and become more submissive, dependent, and obedient. This might possibly preserve them from sharing in the approaching calamities; or at least they would in this way be prepared for behaving properly, and finding comfort under them, and for deriving benefit from them.

V. 4—7. *There will be no escaping into the neighbouring countries, such as the Philistines are in particular: for they likewise shall become a prey to the forces of Nebuchadnezzar. The word (Cherethites) is translated Cretians by the Septuagint. They are supposed to have been a colony removed from Crete to Palestine. *The sea-coast shall in after-times belong to the Jews, who shall possess all the Philistines' country; as it appears that they did in the first times of Christianity. (Acts viii. 26. 40.) (Lown.) The sea-port towns of the Philistines, and Cherethites, (Note, Ez. xxv. 16.) would be so desolated, that their commerce would cease, and the sea-coast would wholly be occupied by the waves; until at length it would fall into the hand of the remnant of Judah after the captivity; as it did in the time of the Maccabees. The Lord purposed thus to destroy the enemies of the Jews, and restore his people from captivity: and this information would serve to encourage the repentance and prayers of those who regarded it. (Morg. Ref.)

V. 8—10. (Notes, Jer. xlviiil. xlix. 1—6. Ezek. xxv. 1—11. Amos i. 13—15. ii. 1—3.) Moab and Ammon would be rendered as desolate as Sodom and Gomorrah, though in another way. These countries would become a barren desert, covered with nettles, or dug up for salt-pits, till at length they would be possessed by the Jews. Some think the conversion of the inhabitants of those regions to Christianity was intended, by the expression, *The remnant of my people shall possess them. *Judas Macabaeus and his brethren subdued the Ammonites (1 Macc. i. 6.) but this and the seventh verse will receive their utmost completion, at the general restoration of the Jewish nation. (Lown.) These nations presumed to take from the Jews that country which the Lord had given them.
them: ' for he will *famish all the gods of the earth; and men shall worship him, every one from his place, even all the isles of the heathen.

12 ¶ Ye Ethiopians also, ye shall be slain by my sword.

13 And he will stretch out his hand against the north, and destroy Assyria; and he will make Nineveh a desolation, and dry up like a wilderness.

14 And ships shall lie dead in the midst of her, all the beasts of the nations:

both the ℹ cormorant and the bittern shall lodge in the № upper lintels of it;

their voice shall sing in the thresholds:

a desolation shall be in the thresholds:

15 This is ¶ the rejoicing city that dwelt carelessly, that said in her heart, I am, and there is none beside me: how is she become a desolation, a place for beasts to lie in! every one that passeth by her shall hiss, and wag his hand.

CHAP. III.

Sharp rebukes of Jerusalem, for divers aggravated sins, 1—7. Gracious promises to the Church; with exhortations to wait for the accomplishment of them, and to rejoice in it, 8—20.

WOE to *her that is filthy and polluted, *to the oppressing city!

V. 11. Jehoah, by his terrible judgments, intended to destroy the idolatrous inhabitants of these nations, and to famish with their gods. These were supposed to feast upon the sacrifices, and they would therefore be made lean when none were offered. The extermination of pagan idolatry through many nations, by the promulgation of the Gospel in the primitive ages, in part fulfilled this prophecy: yet it will have a more signal accomplishment, when the universal success of Christianity shall destroy all kinds of idolatry; and men shall worship the Lord, every one in his own place all over the earth, even to the most remote isles of the Gentiles; without any occasion to go up to Jerusalem to worship. (Marg. Ref.) ' The Jews called all places islands, to which they went by sea.' (Luth.)

V. 12. Ye, &c. (Ezek. xxx. 4—6, 9.) Nebuchadnezzar, by whom these predictions were fulfilled, may be here called the Lord's sword. ' Also ye, Ethiopians, shall be with 'those that are the slain of my sword;' namely, the Medes and Ammonites. (Notes, Ez. xxx. 1—9. Marg. Ref.)

V. 13—15. (Notes, Ez. xxxi. Nah. i. ii. iii.) After Nineveh was taken by the kings of Babylon and Media, it went to decay, through the endeavours of the Chaldeans to aggrandize Babylon, until it was at length utterly desolated. (Marg. Ref.)

Cedar-work. ' This reference to the former elegance of the city is finely introduced; and, in the next verse, the grand and affecting description of her desolate state is beautifully contrasted by her past festivity and pride. 'Preferable to rejoicing Nineveh was a proverb.' (Rp. Newcome.) The word translated bittern is by some rendered porcupine.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The most alarming passages in the word of God encourage sinners to repent and seek his favour: and though none are more hopeless than degenerate professors of true religion; yet they should be exhorted to judge themselves, that they may not be judged of the Lord. Nations under tokens of God's displeasure should gather together to depurate his vengeance, before he execute upon them: and whilst life is continued, sinners should be called upon to seek forgiveness, that the sentence recorded in Scripture may not be awarded against them; (Matt. xxv. 46;) otherwise the fierce wrath of the Lord will then drive them as chaff into everlasting punishment. Yet none but the meek of the earth, the contrite, who tremble at God's word, will sincerely seek this salvation. These are poor in spirit, and will hearken to the Lord's teaching, submit to his authority, plead guilty at his mercy-seat, do his will, and trust wholly to his mercy: these will ' seek first his kingdom and his righteousness,' they will long and pray for more humility and meekness; they will be harmless and blameless; and the chief hope of deliverance from national judgments is placed on their prayers and endeavours. But if they fail in this, they will be preserved or comforted under public calamities, and be safe in the day of wrath and revelation of the righteous judgment of God.
6 I have cut off the nations: their towers are desolate; I made their streets waste, that none passeth by: their cities are destroyed, so that there is no man, that there is none inhabitant.

7 I said, Surely thou wilt fear me, thou wilt receive instruction; so the20 dwelling should not be cut off, howsoever I punished them: but they rose early, and corrupted all their doings.

8 ¶ Therefore wait ye upon me, saith the Lord, until the day that I rise up to the prey: for my determination is gathered, to gather the nations, that I may assemble the kingdoms, to pour out upon them mine indignation, even all my fierce anger, and the fire thereof.

9 For all the earth shall be devoured with the fire of my jealousy.

V. 5-7. The special presence of the just Lord in Jerusalem, by his temple and ordinances, aggravated their guilt. He would do no iniquity, and their crimes would neither receive countenance from his example, nor toleration from his justice. By the continual instructions of his word and prophets, he failed not to make known his judgments to them: yet they continued shameless in their iniquities. This is very applicable to the personal presence of Christ with the Jews, and his daily teaching in the temple, the synagogues, and the streets: neither his holy example, nor his doctrine, could make them sensible of their crimes. The Lord had also given the Jews warning, as well as wrought deliverance for them, by the desolations that he had made of other nations and their strong holds: not only those of distant countries, but also those of Ephraim and Samaria; expecting, (to speak after the manner of men,) that they would take the alarm, and fear him and receive instruction, that it might not be necessary utterly to destroy Jerusalem, however they were punished with gentle visitations. But instead of repenting, they grew more bent on wickedness, and corrupted all their doings.

6 I have cut off the nations: their towers are desolate; I made their streets waste, that none passeth by: their cities are destroyed, so that there is no man, that there is none inhabitant.

7 I said, Surely thou wilt fear me, thou wilt receive instruction; so the dwelling should not be cut off, howsoever I punished them: but they rose early, and corrupted all their doings.

8 ¶ Therefore wait ye upon me, saith the Lord, until the day that I rise up to the prey: for my determination is gathered, to gather the nations, that I may assemble the kingdoms, to pour out upon them mine indignation, even all my fierce anger, and the fire thereof:

9 For all the earth shall be devoured with the fire of my jealousy.

45 The just Lord is in the midst thereof; he will not do iniquity: every morning doth he bring his judgment to light; he faileth not; but the unjust knoweth no shame.

5 Notes.

6 Chap. III. V. 1-4. The prophet, having shown the judgments of God on the enemies of the Jews, returned to his subject, and proceeded to reprove and condemn that people for their transgressions. Jerusalem was become filthy and polluted: she was glutinous, luxurious, and infamous, for all kinds of abominable wickedness, especially for oppression and violence. The inhabitants would not obey the voice of God, who spake to them by his word and his prophets; they hardened themselves in iniquity, or gave themselves up to rebellious murmurings and despondency whereunto they were prone; they trusted in their strength and allies, and not in the Lord, for protection and safety; and they drew not near to him, in his courts and ordinances, to seek his favour and assistance in their difficulties; but rather turned from him to their idols. Their princes, nobles, and judges were ravenous as lions; or as wolves that prowl abroad in the evening, after having been pinched with hunger all the day: and they seized all they could to lay it by for the future, as the greedy wolf makes havoc of the flock, reserving the bones to be gnawed when he had no longer an opportunity of devouring the prey. They devour all presently, and leave not so much as the bones to the next day; as the most voracious creatures commonly do. (Lownh.) Their prophets were superficial declaimers, men of light minds, without knowledge or seriousness: they deceived the people with false doctrines and predictions, and imposed upon them in their secular concerns: and the priests, like Hophni and Phineas, polluted the temple by their crimes, and wrested the law by their corrupt glosses, that it might not seem to condemn them. This may be understood of the state of Jerusalem, from the death of Jostiah to the Babylonish captivity: yet the context rather leads our attention to a subsequent period. The predictions of the former chapter relate to the return of the Jews from captivity, and to events connected with their prosperity after that deliverance; the latter part of this chapter evidently predicts the times of the Gospel; and the character here given of Jerusalem aptly suits the state of things among the Jews, from the birth of Christ to the calamities brought upon them by the Romans. Being filthy and polluted, they heartened not to the voice of God, by John Baptist, by Christ, and by his apostles; instructions and corrections were unavailing for their reformation; they trusted in themselves, and not in their incarnate Lord, to whom they would not draw near. And the chief priests, elders, scribes, and pharisies, were precisely such blind guides, deceivers, oppressors, and perpetrators of the law, as here described. (Marg. Ref.)
9 For then will I turn to the people a pure language, that they may all call upon the name of the Lord, to serve him with one consent.

10 From the rivers of Ethiopia my suppliants, even the daughter of my dispersed, shall bring mine offering.

11 In that day shalt thou not be ashamed for all thy doings, wherein thou hast transgressed against me: for then I will take away out of the midst of thee that rejoiceth in thy pride, and the unclean spirit shall depart from thee.

12 And I will create new heavens and a new earth: and the former things shall not be remembered, nor come into mind.

13 But be ye glad and rejoice for ever in what I create: for I will create a new Jerusalem and a new heaven.

14 And the nations shall see thy righteousness, and all kings shall see thy glory: and I will cause thee to be a sanctuary; no more shalt thou be called a reproach; neither shall thou any more be a0 despised among the nations.

15 For the Lord shall rejoice over thee, and thy land shall be married. He will rejoice over thee with joy, and his love shall be exalted in thee.

16 The Lord shall give up Israel; and they shall be as his people in the midst of his land: again shall they be numbered among the nations, and they shall be increased and multiply.

17 And the Lord shall give up Zion, and they shall be as heads among the nations: and the Gentiles shall seek after the Lord from the ends of the earth, and his glory shall be as the light of the morning.

18 And the Lord shall have respect unto Jacob, and shall choose Israel again; and will bring them again into their land, and shall be mercy unto them, and will be to them a savior, and shall deliver them from the power of the heathen, when we return.

19 And they shall be as one people unto the Lord, they that go up to mount Zion to the Lord, unto our God.

20 And he shall judge among the nations, and shall rebuke many people: and they shall beat their swords into plowshares, and their spears into pruning hooks; nation shall not lift up sword against nation, neither shall they learn war any more.

21 But they shall sit every man under his vine and under his fig tree, and there shall be none to make them afraid: for the mouth of the Lord hath spoken.

22 And it shall come to pass in the last days, saith the Lord, that my covenant shall be with them, and I will put my spirit within them, and cause them to understand the fear of the Lord; and this covenant shall not be forgotten among their seed.

23 But this is the covenant that I will make with them; after those days, saith the Lord, I will put my laws into their heart, and in their minds will I write them;

24 Not from the thing which is in their mouth, and that they might call upon me, and serve me with one consent.
14 ¶ Sing, O daughter of Zion; shout, O Israel; be glad and rejoice with all the heart, O daughter of Jerusalem.

15 The Lord hath taken away thy judgments, he hath cast out thine eneminess; the King of Israel, even the Lord, is in the midst of thee: thou shalt not see evil any more.

16 In that day it shall be said to Jerusalem, Fear thou not: and to Zion, Let not thine hands be slack.

17 The Lord thy God is in the midst of thee, he is mighty; he will save, he will rejoice over thee with joy; he will set thee on thine inheritance, he will make the wilderness his inheritance, and the desert his possession.

18 I will gather them that are sorrowful for the solemn assembly, who are of thee, to whom the reproach of it was a burden.

19 Behold, at that time will I undo all that afflict thee: and I will save her that halteth, and gather her that was driven out; and I will bring again the praise and fame in every land wherein they have been put to shame.

20 At that time will I bring you again, even in the time that I gather you: that you may make you a name, and a praise among all people of the earth, when I turn back your captivity before your eyes, saith the Lord.

Therefore be a chosen remnant of genuine Israelites, in whom there would be no guile. Thus reformed and purified, they would be fed and protected by the good Shepherd; and, being safe under his care, they would not be afraid of any enemies. The pure and happy state of the Church in the latter days seems intended in the thirteenth verse.

V. 14-17. These verses without doubt principally relate to the future conversion of the Jews, and the glorious times that shall follow. Then the Church will express her exuberant joy with loud acclamations and thanksgivings. For the Lord will remove the judgments, temporal and spiritual, with which the Jewish nation hath very long been visited, and those persecutions and oppressions, with which antichristian powers have afflicted the Church; and he will cast out every enemy that opposes her. Then will he evidently appear as the King of Israel in the midst of her, (Marg. Ref.) and she shall see no more those evils of which she had hitherto complained. This cannot have had its accomplishment, either in respect of the Jews or of the Church. But in the day here predicted the Church will be encouraged, by the Lord and his ministers, against all her fears, and animated to every duty. For the Lord, her God, her Friend and Portion, will dwell in the midst of her, with mighty power to defend her and destroy her enemies: he will assuredly save her from all her oppressors and corrupters, and rejoice over her with great complacency and delight; he will rest in his love, as well pleased in her, constant in his affection, and taking pleasure in expressing it: nay, he will rejoice over her, as men rejoice over the objects of their endearing love with songs denoting their delight and satisfaction. These multiplied and energetic expressions are intended to show the abundant light, purity, peace, comfort, and prosperity of the Church, in those happy times, when believers will almost live the life of heaven upon earth.

V. 18. Intervening ages, previous to the glorious times predicted, believers would often be sorrowful, because they wanted liberty or opportunity of meeting together in the most solemn public ordinances, (as the pious Jews had been during the Babylonish captivity:) whilst their enemies would reproach their assemblies, as scenes of sedition or iniquity; or scoff at and deride believers because they were unable to meet in them: and this would greatly add to their burden. But the Lord would at length gather them together, and afford them abundance of these opportunities, and much comfort in them: he would ruin all their oppressors, and save every feeble believer, that was scarcely able to walk in those rugged ways, or was driven away by the force of temptation or persecution: and he would cause true Christians to be greatly honoured and commended in all those countries, where they had been stigmatized and treated with contempt. Especially the converted Jews shall be thus honoured among all people of the earth, when they shall be gathered from their dispersed and captive state, into the Church of Christ, and into their own land, in the open view of all nations. These events alone can fully answer to the language of this prophecy.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-7.

What a lamentable proof is it of the strength of human depravity, that Jerusalem should ever become an infamous, polluted, and oppressive city! But when this is the case with any part of the visible Church, doubly fruitful evil will soon be denounced against it: for before such an event can take place, men must generally have been long habituated to disobey the voice of the Lord, to neglect his corrections and instructions, to withdraw their confidence from him, and to forsake, or hypocritically to attend on his ordinances. It must also commonly arise from the misconduct of rulers and teachers: for when they become oppressive and iniquitous, or light and treacherous; when they pollute the sanctuary and pervert the law; they soon cause the people either to run into open impiety, from abhorrence of their crimes; or into error and false religion, in imitation of their examples, or by imitating their doctrines. Yet it has too often been the case, that Zion's professed healers have proved her worst disease; and her princes, priests, and prophets, the most abandoned to iniquity and vice: and neither the presence of the just Lord in his ordinances; nor his example, his word, his messages by his more faithful servants, or even his providential corrections, could put them to shame. In this case, warnings and deliverances only tend to increase men's condemnation: for whilst the Lord devastates cities and nations for their sins, he requires his professing people to fear him and receive instruction, that they may escape ruin; and yet they often grow more corrupt under warnings and corrections, and are more assiduous in doing evil than the most diligent believer is in doing good.

V. 8—20.

The remnant of godly persons, that live in evil times, may confidently call upon the Lord, both to save them, and to terminate the success of his enemies. He will certainly arise to pour upon the wicked the fierceness of his anger, and the whole earth will be devoured by the fire of his jealousy; yet then will he peculiarly bless those that wait for him. When he casts off professed Christians for their hypocrisy, he will send his Gospel to those who have hitherto sat in darkness: and his grace will render his people sincere in their professions, and holy in their conversation; teaching them a pure language, honourable to God, and edifying to men. Such persons should all call upon and serve the Lord with one consent; as "he seeketh those to worship him, who worship him in spirit and truth." For this purpose his Gospel is sent into regions, divided from each other by mountains, rivers, and seas; and all, who become humble suppliants to him for salvation, through faith in Jesus Christ, are numbered amongst the genuine children of his Church, and form a holy priesthood, to offer spiritual sacrifices unto him, wherever they are dispersed. They are also all made partakers of true repentance and complete forgiveness, and none of them shall be put to shame, because of their former transgressions. But the Lord will certainly cast out of his Church all that rejoice in their pride, and are haughty, because of those privileges which they abuse and misuse. He will exclude boasting, and leave no man any thing to glory in, save the Lord Jesus, "as made of God to him, wisdom, righteousness, sanctification, and redemption." All whom he saves are made poor in spirit, and most of them are poor and afflicted in the world; but whilst they trust in him, they cannot but be rich, noble, wise, and happy. Their humiliation in themselves, and their obligations to the Redeemer, concur in forming them upright and sincere; a people that do no iniquity, speak no lies, neither is a deceitful tongue found in their mouths: though nothing is more common amongst many who profess, disgrace, and are proud of, the doctrines of the Gospel; as their shops, customers, and those who depend on their word, too often can testify! But the sheep of Christ are harmless and inoffensive: they may securely rest upon his word, and repose their souls under his care; and he will feed them in his plenteous pastures, and preserve them from the power and terror of every enemy. Many indeed are the troubles of the righteous, from within and without; yet may they still rejoice in God, and triumph in his love. The king of Israel in the midst of them is the Lord of hosts; and he will soon take away their judgments, and save them so effectually, that they shall see evil no more for ever. Let us then encourage each other and ourselves against dejection, that our hands may not be slack, when we should work, or resist our enemies. The love of our mighty Redeemer is as large as his power: he rejoices to save the returning prodigal, to comfort the weeping penitent, to relieve the trembling supplicant, or to restore the wandering sheep: he delights in the objects of his choice, the purchase of his blood, the trophies of his victories, the work of his new creating grace. He rests well pleased in his love of his redeemed Church, and exults with joy over every poor sinner, whom he hath taught to trust in his mercy, to love his name, to obey his commands, and to copy his example. Surely then our hearts should rejoice in him, when we hear such words of infinite condescension and grace! We should express our joy by singing and speaking his praises; and we should rest in his love, and seek no other Refuge, Portion, or Felicity. We may now indeed be sorrowful, because detained from his solemn ordinances, whether by sickness, persecution, or providential hindrances: but we should be glad that this is our cross and grief; and we may rejoice at being reproached for loving the house and word of our God. In due time we shall be gathered into the temple above, from all our dispersions, notwithstanding our weakness and failings in the Lord's ways; and then he will turn our mourning into joy and our reproach into honour, before the whole world. At length the last enemy shall be destroyed, and our captivity to Satan, sin, and death shall be finally abolished; and our glory and felicity will be perfect, unchangeable.
THE

BOOK OF HAGGAI.

The prophets, whose writings have hitherto engaged our attention, lived before, or during, the Babylonish captivity, and referred to it in most of their predictions; but the three that follow, prophesied after the return of the Jews to their own land. Haggai delivered all the messages here recorded, within four months. They relate to the building of the second temple, and contain reproofs, exhortations, and encouragements respecting that undertaking; and also predictions of Christ and his kingdom connected with them, nay, of the final and universal prevalence of the Gospel. The apostle Paul quotes Haggai, to prove that the prophets foretold one great revolution in the external state of the Church, which would shortly take place, and only one. (Comp. ii. 6, 7. with Heb. xii. 26, 27.)

B. C. 520.

CHAP. I.

The time when Haggai prophesied, 1. He reproves the delay of the Jews in building the temple; and exhorts them to proceed, 2—11. They obey, and receive encouragement from God, 12—15.

In the second year of Darius the king in the sixth month, in the first day of the month, came the word of the Lord by Haggai the prophet, unto Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, † governor of Judah, and to Joshua, the son of Josedech, the high-priest, saying, 2 Thus speaketh the Lord of hosts, saying, This people say, The time is not come, the time that the Lord’s house should be built.

* by Haggai the prophet, † unto Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, ‡ governor of Judah, and to Joshua, the son of Josedech, the high-priest, saying, Thus speaketh the Lord of hosts, saying, This people say, The time is not come, the time that the Lord’s house should be built.

NOTES.

CHAP. I. V. 1. (Notes, Ezra iv. 17—24. v. 1, 2. vi. 6—15.) The second year of Darius Hystaspis was about sixteen years after Cyrus issued his decree. The repeated testimony of Zechariah shews that these events occurred, not more than a year after the destruction of the temple by Nebuchadnezzar: (Zech. i. 12, 13. vii. 3—5.) and as no Darius reigned in Persia till long after that term, except Darius Hystaspis, it is beyond all doubt that he was intended. Shealtiel is exactly the same, in the original, with Salathiel, 1 Chr. iii. 17; and Josedech, with Jehozadak, 1 Chr. vi. 14, 15. It would have been more convenient to the mere English reader, if the same persons had uniformly been called by the same names, where the original is the same, or so nearly the same, as to preclude all doubt of the meaning. Joshua, (Ezra ii. 2,) is spelt differently from Joshua in this verse: but the same person is evidently intended. If these two notable men had need to be stirred up and admonished of their duties; what shall we think of other governors, whose doings are either against God, or very cold in his cause? V. 2. The Jews, discouraged by opposition, had left off to build the temple; and they concluded that it was not a proper time to resume that work, though they did not intend to give it up. They were then few in number, and poor; compared with the influence of Israel in the days of Solomon; their enemies were many, and the kings of Persia frowned on them; they had many temporal concerns, personal and public, to attend on; and they concluded that they should not be able to build the temple at all, or not with suitable magnificence. They therefore thought it best to rest contented with an altar on which to sacrifice, till a more favourable opportunity arrived. But the Lord of hosts, (whose power was sufficient to support them against all opposition,) took notice of these vain excuses, and therefore sent the prophet with the subsequent message. They preferred policy and private profit to religion.
3 Then came the word of the Lord by Haggai the prophet, saying,
4 Is it time for you, O ye, to dwell in your ceiled houses, and this house lie waste?
5 Now therefore thus saith the Lord of hosts; * Consider your ways.
6 Ye have plowed much, and brought in little; ye eat, but ye have not enough; ye drink, but ye are not filled with drink; ye clothe, but there is none warm; and he that earneth wages, earneth wages to put it into a bag with holes.
7 Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Consider your ways.
8 Go up to the mountain, and build * the house, and ye shall take pleasure in it, and I will bless, saith the Lord of hosts.
9 Ye * looked for much, and, lo, it came to little; and when ye brought it home, I did blow upon it. Why is this house come to little? because ye did not consider its ways.

V. 4. Though the Jews thought themselves unable to rebuild the temple; yet they were very active about their own houses, and many of them decorated them with wainscot and ceilings of cedar, or other valuable materials; and then lived in them at ease and in indulgence. But if the times had been so hard, as to render it impracticable for them to build the temple, it would not have been in their power to acquire such houses for themselves. Their excuses were therefore fallacious, and even Zerubbabel and Joshua were guilty of conniving at their negligence. (Note, Ezra iv. 17—24.) Its necessity was not therefore so much from the Government as from the will of God, who would graciously take pleasure in it, and might therefore be glorified thereby. The more they continued to neglect the work, the more it appeared as if their Lord was sowing the wind, and reaping a whirlwind. They were allowed to be successful in every other way, but not in that which was essential. Even the Burnett of Jonah 3:10 may be a reference to this, because it was accompanied with various calamities.

V. 5—11. Consider the plagues of God upon you for preferring your policy to his religion; and because ye seek not him first of all. The Lord next called the people to consider their ways. It is not only the conduct and motives by way of self-examination, but also the state of their affairs; by which they would perceive that their conduct was as impious as it was irreligious. They well knew that their crops of corn had been very scanty, in proportion to the land tilled, or the seed sown. They had not a sufficiency of meat or drink, either through scarcity, or for want of a blessing; their clothes were soon worn out, and did not defend them from the cold; and the hard earned wages of the labourer or mechanic, seemed to be put into a bag with holes, they were so soon gone, through dearness of provisions and a variety of expenses. It was therefore expedient for them to review their conduct; and this would show them, that they should immediately, (though to the neglect of their own concerns,) go to mount Lebanon and prepare timber, and set about the building of the temple: and God would graciously take pleasure in it, as the centre of his worship, and the type of Christ, though far inferior in magnificence to Solomon's temple; yet he would deem himself glorified by it. They must know, that when they had used all proper means, had every probability, and had entertained the most sanguine expectations of a large increase, they were strangely disappointed: and even what they had brought home was unaccountably wasted, as if the Lord had blown upon it, and driven it away! And wherefore was this? Truly, because they neglected the temple and left it in ruins, whilst they eagerly employed themselves in building and decorating their own houses: and therefore they were visited by drought and famine, and various diseases, both of man and beast. (Marc. Ref.)

Brought it home, &c. (9.) The line may very well be translated: And ye have brought an offering to my house, and I have snuffed at it. (Bp. Newcome.)

V. 12. This message of the prophet had the proper effect. Though the rulers and people were faulty, yet they were not hardened as their fathers had been; and though they had not lately been accustomed to the ministry of prophets, and Haggai seems not to have wrought any miracle; yet they considered him as sent by the Lord their God, and revered his authority. Zerubbabel and Joshua were most ready to receive this reproof, and accord to his exhortation, and the people were influenced by their example. They therefore feared the Lord and obeyed his
CHAPTER II.

The prophet encourages the Jews, by assuring them that this temple, though far inferior to the former in magnificence, would be rendered more glorious by the presence of the Messiah, 1—9. By the law concerning things holy and clean, he shows that their sins had deprived them of God's blessings, which from that time he would vouchsafe them, 10—19. He predicts the prosperity of Christ's kingdom, under that of Zerubbabel his ancestor and type, 20—23

IN the seventh month, in the one and twentieth day of the month, came the voice, and immediately began to make preparation for the work.

V. 13—15. Within little more than three weeks after the first message was delivered, the people having already testified their readiness to obey, the prophet was sent again to them with a gracious assurance of the Lord's presence and favour. He was called the Lord's messenger, (the word being the same that is generally rendered an angel,) because of his employment, which was to bring messages from God to the people. His word was attended with a powerful blessing, in stirring up their minds and animating their courage for this arduous undertaking. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Even pious persons often need to be excised by repeated admonitions to the duties of their station; especially when attended by danger and difficulty. Many good works have been purposed, and not performed, because men imagined that the proper time was not come: thus believers lose opportunities of usefulness, and sinners procrastinate in the completion of their souls till it be too late. The Lord notices all the objections and excuses, with which men satisfy themselves and each other in the neglect of duty; and when he shall expose and answer them, every mouth will be stopped. Providential dispensations are seldom interpreted properly without a careful attention to the word of God: thus many conclude that poverty or trouble excuses them from duty; when indeed it is intended to rebuke their negligence. They who plead that they cannot at present afford to contribute to pious or charitable designs, often lavish in needless expenses on their tables, houses, furniture, apparel, or decorations, ten times as much as was expected from them for far better purposes; and few are aware how large a fund frugality and self-denial may raise, even from persons of moderate incomes, for good works, without the least injury to them or their families. But if men will dwell in sober houses, and indulge every wayward inclination, when the house of God lies waste and his poor are starved, they may expect rebukes and corrections. How can they, who evidently do not seek for the kingdom of God and his righteousness, think themselves true Christians? And are not lukewarm professors marked in God's word with peculiar disapprobation? (Rev. iii. 15, 16.) Indeed they who do not prosper in the world ought to consider their ways: for there is, that with holiness more than is meet, and it tendeth to poverty.

If the Lord be offended by a man's selfishness, he can easily blast all his projects, and insensibly reduce him, whatever his occupation or industry may be. He can deprive him of all comfort in his possessions; and even if his income be not scanty, he can cause it to spend badly, and then all his gains shall seem to be put into a bag with holes; all his labours be fruitless, all his possessions blown upon, and all his expectations frustrated. Our dependence is in everything so entirely on God, that when we look for much, and have little, and are remarkably crossed in our undertakings, it behoves us to inquire, wherefore he contends with us? And if we attend to his word, consult his ministers, inquire of him in prayer, and examine ourselves; we shall not fail to find out the cause. Perhaps some duty is neglected, the payment of some vow is postponed, or some worldly object is idolized. When this discovery is made, we should without delay amend what was amiss: and if we attend to those things, which else please the Lord and wherein he is glorified, whatever else be neglected or procrastinated, we shall best consult our own true interest and comfort: but without that faith and fear, which produce unreserved and prompt obedience, we cannot expect that the Lord will be with us. The most exalted or sacred characters ought not to be offended, when reminded of their duty by the meanest servant of God; they should reverence his authority, and submit to his reproof, in the words of his ministers: and the more wisdom and piety they have, the more readily will they attend to such exhortations. When leading men set the example, it will influence the remnant of the people, and they may expect encouragement: and if the Lord be with us, who can be against us, to prevent our success, or in any measure to hurt us? These considerations should stir up our spirits to be diligent and courageous in laying ourselves out in the work assigned us: yet if any means prove successful to render us zealous in good works, we must give all the praise to him, from whom alone "come every good and perfect gift," and "who worketh in us to will and to do of his good pleasure."
Haggai 2

1 word of the Lord by * the prophet Haggai, saying,

2 Speak now to Zerubbabel the son of Shealtiel, * governor of Judah, and to Joshua the son of Josedech, the high-priest, and to the residue of the people, saying,

3 Who is left among you that saw this house in her first glory? and how do you see it now? is it not in your eyes in comparison of it as nothing!

4 Yet now be strong, O Zerubbabel, saith the Lord; and be strong, O Joshua, son of Josedech, the high-priest; and be strong, all ye people of the land, saith the Lord, and work; for I am with you, saith the Lord of hosts:

5 According to the word that I covenanted with you when ye came out of Egypt, so my Spirit remaineth among you: 'fear ye not.

6 For thus saith the Lord of hosts: Yet once, * it is a little while, * and I will shake the heavens, and the earth, and the sea, and the dry land.

7 And * I will shake all nations, * and the desire of all nations shall come: * and I will fill this house with glory, saith the Lord of hosts.

8 The silver is mine, and the gold is mine, saith the Lord of hosts.

9 The glory of this latter house shall be greater than of the former, saith the Lord of hosts: and in this place will I give peace, saith the Lord of hosts.

NOTES.

CHAP. II. V. 3-5. (Note, Ezra iii. 12, 13.) This took place about sixty-eight years from the time, when the temple had been destroyed, and about seventeen years from the issuing of the decree of Cyrus; and some Jews remained yet alive, who had seen the former temple in their youth, before they were carried to Babylon. These could not but observe, from the preparations, the plan, and the foundations, that this new temple was likely to be much inferior to it in grandeur. Whilst they lamented this, they seem to have undervalued the labours of the people, and to have discouraged their work; and therefore the Lord sent his servant to prevent the effects. He allowed, that this house must appear as nothing in the eyes of those who had seen the other in its glory; yet, that should not prevent the rulers and people from proceeding with vigour and courage; as God was with them to prosper their work, according to the promises of the covenant made with their fathers; and his spirit, the Author of all true glory and excellency, remained with them, to direct, sanctify, and bless them, as in the days of old; and therefore they needed not fear acceptance or assistance. Some interpret the Lord of hosts, the Word that covenanted with them, and the Spirit, of the three Persons in the Trinity, who would remain with them as the peculiar people of the triune Jehovah.

V. 6-9. For their further encouragement, the people were informed, that during the continuance of this temple, a new dispensation would be introduced. "Yet once more," the Lord intended entirely to change the external form of his Church, and to bring in that dispensation that would endure to the end. "The word, once, has a clear sense, if understood of the evangelical age; for many political revolutions succeeded; but only one great and final religious revolution. (Bp. Newcome.) It should also be remembered, that the apostle has thus interpreted it. (Heb. xii. 20, 26.) This would be in a little while, compared with the years that had passed since the first promise of the Messiah, or even from the giving of the law. Then the Lord would shake the heavens and the earth, &c.: various convulsions and changes would take place in the Jewish Church and state, which would end in the abrogation of the ritual law and the whole Mosaic dispensation, the disannulling of the national covenant, the subversion of their constitution, the destruction of Jerusalem, and the ruin of their civil government; and attended with earthquakes, tempests, and violent commotions of the elements above and beneath, by sea and by land. (Marg. Ref.) These events would be preparatory to the great revolution and convulsions among the nations; the Persian monarchy would be subverted by the Macedonians, and that by the Romans; and all these changes would make way for the coming of Christ, and the introduction of his spiritual kingdom. At the appointed time, He, the Desire of all nations, whom all nations ought to desire, and in due time would desire; He, in whom all the nations of the earth were to be blessed, and of whom coming a general expectation would prevail, as of some most desirable event; He would come, and his presence, who is the glory of the Lord and the true Temple, "in whom all the fulness of the Godhead dwells bodily," would fill that house with glory, and render it far more glorious, than the Shechinah (or visible glory) rendered Solomon's temple. The Lord could, if he so pleased, enrich that house with silver and gold beyond the former temple; for all the treasures of the earth are his; but as a more spiritual dispensation was about to be introduced, he had a greater and a more spiritual glory to confer upon it, in the presence of Immanuel, his incarnate Son. Thither he would come, as the Prince of peace; there he would preach and confer peace; and all those who worshipped there, in anticipation of the blessings of Messiah's reign. The second temple could not excel the first in glory, in any other respect than this: it was indeed considerably beautified, decorated, and enriched in after ages, but nothing equal to the splendour of the temple in the days of Solomon: and the Jews allow, that the ark of the covenant,
CHAPTER II.

10 ¶ In the four and twentieth day of the ninth month, in the second year of Darius, came the word of the Lord by Haggai the prophet, saying,

11 Thus saith the Lord of hosts; Ask now the priests concerning the law, saying, 12 If one bear holy flesh in the skirt of his garment, and with his skirt do touch bread, or viotage, or wine, or oil, or any meat, shall it be holy?

And the priests answered and said, No.

13 Then said Haggai, ¶ If one that is unclean by a dead body touch any of these, shall it be uncleal? And the priests answered and said, It shall be unclean.

14 Then answered Haggai, and said,

So is this people, and so is this nation before me, saith the Lord; and so is every work of their hands; and that which they offer there is unclean.

The visible glory, and some other things which distinguished the former temple, were wanting in this. But they cannot find any thing that is worthy to be mentioned, in which it was more glorious; though they have been excited to rack their invention to the utmost for that purpose. For as the second temple hath been destroyed above seventeen hundred years; if nothing else can be adduced, in which its glory exceeded that of Solomon's temple, it must be allowed that the presence of the promised Messiah was intended; and if this be yielded, it will undeniably follow that Jesus of Nazareth was he: and thus they must condemn their own obstinate rejection of him, concerning whom all their own prophets spoke. For in this alone did the glory of the latter house exceed that of the former, that the Desire of all nations, the Lord of glory, came to it personally, and in human nature. So that this prophecy alone is sufficient to decide the controversy with them, seeing they allow the divine inspiration of Haggai. Some indeed speak, as if Herod the Great entirely pulled down this temple and built another: but the account of Josephus on that subject is not consistent with itself and with other writers, and seems rather penned in the style of panegyric than of history: and, however Herod repaired, beautified, and enlarged the out-buildings of the temple, it never was the general opinion of the Jews themselves, that he demolished the second temple; but that it continued the same, till its destruction by the Romans. With that event the old dispensation ended; for the Desire of all nations was come, and he erected his spiritual temple, as it were, upon the ruins of it. The word rendered con, (T) is plural, and it is with probability supposed, that the substantive should be plural also. The desires of all the nations shall come. Some learned men, therefore, have argued, that the precious or desirable things, namely, the riches of the nations, are meant; and that it is a forced construction to interpret the passage of the Messiah. The objections to this interpretation are, the great solemnity of the introduction, (6, 7;) and the impropriety of the language, "The desirable things of all nations shall come," when it should rather be said, "the desirable things of all nations shall be brought." The word is used plurally, with the force of the singular, (like delicia, or epis, in Latin,) Dom. ix. 23, vtr "deideriorum, greatly beloved." Cant. vi. 10, we have—and ipsa flos desideria for deiderolaris. (There is a plural Hebrew noun of the same root as that here made use of, applied by the Spouse to her Beloved, or by the Church to Christ. It is rendered, "altogether lovely," but is more liberally, altogether lovelinesses. It may well be doubted, whether the second temple could exceed that of Solomon, in the splendour and costliness of its ornaments. Prideaux values the gold, with which the holy of holies alone was overlaid, at four millions three hundred and twenty thousand pounds sterling. It seems to me that, supposing the Messiah to be prophesied of, greater precision in the language would not have been used; for this would have led the Jews to expect a demolition of the temple then building, and the erection of another in its stead. No temporal distinction, between Zerubabbel's and Herod's temple, seems to have been ever made by the Jews: but in popular language, these structures, though really different, were spoken of as the same. On one occasion, Josephus himself mentions only two buildings of the temple; a former, in the time of Solomon; and a latter, in that of Cyrus. In Chronicon Hebraum, &c. Vespasian is said to have destroyed the temple four hundred and forty years after it was rebuilt. (Bp. Newcome.) No more than seven years were spent in building Solomon's temple, and only four in building the second temple, from the time when the Jews resumed the work: it is therefore most evident, that Herod never pulled down the temple, in order to erect a new one. There was a temple for the worship of Jehovah according to the law, during all the forty-six years which were spent in repairing or rebuilding it. One part must therefore have been taken down at once, as far as needful for the purpose, and no more, but the old foundation and many parts of the structure no doubt remained. Whoever compiles the sixth chapter of the first of Kings, even with the most splendid accounts of the second temple, however adorned with costly stones, &c. must perceive, that the former being overlaid in every part with pure gold, gave it a glory, of this kind, which was incomparably beyond that of the second temple, in its highest magnificence: and the prophecy clearly means, that the glory of the second temple should exceed the glory which the first had at any time been favoured with. Nothing but the presence of the incarnate Son of God could fulfil this prediction.

V. 10—14. The time that had elapsed from Haggai's first message to this, being nearly four months, seems to have been taken up in preparing to build: but now the people proceeded to the work itself. The prophet was on this occasion ordered to propose two questions to the priests, the ordinary interpreters of the law. Supposing a man should carry in the skirt of his garment any part of the holy oblations, which were to be eaten by the priests alone, in the courts of the temple, and then with that same skirt touch some ordinary provision, would that communication sanctify to the bread, flesh, wine, or oil thus touched? This the priests answered in the negative; ceremonial holiness could not be thus conveyed. On the other hand, if a man was unclean by a dead body, touched such provisions, would that not render them unclean, unfit to be offered to God, or even for common use? To which they answered in the affirmative. It was then evident, that uncleanness was more easily communicated than holiness; and the inference was, that the people, when they lived in the neglect of their duty as to the building of the temple, through a covetous or self-indulgent attention to secular concerns, could not have their ordinary employments sanctified by the sacrifices which they offered; but on the contrary, they polluted their religious duties by their own unbelief and hypocrisy. That thing, which is of itself good, cannot make another so; and therefore they ought not to justify themselves by their sacrifices and ceremonies: but he that is unclean and not pure of heart, doth corrupt those things, and make them detestable to God, which else are good and godly. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 15-19. The people were therefore called on, to consider from that time, both what had befallen them and what was about to befal them; and to compare these together. Before they had begun to place more courses of stone, on the foundation which they had laid some years before, that is, during the years that the work had been neglected, they had been strangely frustrated in their expectations. If a man came to a heap of corn in the straw or in the chaff, which he computed at twenty measures, he seldom obtained more than ten; for there proved to be much straw and chaff, and little corn. Or if a man expected fifty barrels of wine from the grapes which he carried to the wine-press, when he came to draw it off after they had been pressed, there proved no more than twenty, they were so unproductive. For the Lord had been so offended with their casual negligence of his temple, that he disappointed them in all their works; and visited them with various calamities, which they ascribed to second causes, and so did not repent or return to his service. (Marg. Ref.) But let them take notice that from that very day, when they began to build on the foundation of his house; though their corn was not gathered in, nor had their trees begun to bud, (for it was nearly the depth of winter,) and there was no appearance of a favourable change; yet from that day he would as remarkably bless them with fruitful seasons and an abundant increase; both graciously to recompense their obedience, and to encourage them to proceed. V. 20-23. "And the word of the Lord came the second time unto Haggai, in," &c. The conclusion of the book was a second message sent by the prophet, on the same day with that which precedes. Zerubbabel, as the governor of Judah, was the type as well as the progenitor, of Christ; to whom doubtless the prophecy was principally directed. The Lord again declared his purpose of causing violent concussions and revolutions in the heavens and earth, or in the state of the Church and of the world. He would subvert monarchies one after another, and destroy nations by intestine wars. But he would take Zerubbabel, and keep him safe as his signet; and employ him to rule over his people, as a man ratifies deeds by his signet or seal, and sets it on any thing as a security, or to mark authenticity or approbation: for he had chosen him for that purpose. This was a gracious indication, that the Lord would preserve Zerubbabel, and the people of Judah by him, amidst the machinations of their enemies and the ruin of surrounding states and kingdoms; but it also predicted the establishment and continuance of the kingdom of Christ, the elect Servant of the Father, the Governor of Judah; by union with whom his people are sealed with the Holy Ghost, and stamped with his image, and thus distinguished from all other persons, and preserved unto the day of redemption. And it predicted the changes, that would take place in the Church, and in the kingdoms of the world even to that time, when the kingdom of Christ shall subvert and occupy the place of all those monarchies that have opposed his cause.
CHAP. II.

This could not be fulfilled in Zerubbabel, who did not in all likelihood live many years after the finishing of the temple; and to be sure did not see any of these great changes here foretold: and therefore the Messiah must be here described under the name of Zerubbabel, as he elsewhere is under that of David. (Lomth.)
(Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.
V. 1—9.

The word of God is intended to encourage us, as well as to excite us to our work. They who have witnessed, or read of extraordinary effects produced by the power of God in his ordinances, should not despise or dishearten those who are endeavouring to do good in a little way with small success, and under great disadvantages.
Though it may appear as nothing in their eyes, yet the seed may spring up and become a great tree; and every degree of good to souls should be thought important. Indeed, men are very incompetent judges of what is glorious in religious matters: many things excite admiration because they are noisy and ostentatious; whereas the kingdom of God cometh not with outward observation. Abiding and blessed effects are sometimes produced by obscure and despised instruments, and for a time in silence and neglect: till at length they burst forth to public view, and claim attention as excellent, useful, and permanent; when such, as for a little time excited admiration and applause, but were more superficial, vanish or terminate in confusion. If we be therefore occupied according to the command of God, and in dependence on his promise, we should be strong in faith, vigorous and active, labouring in hope, even in obscurity and with little visible success; for though man may despise us, the Lord of Hosts will be with us, according to his covenanted word, (‘Lo, I am with you always, even to the end of the world!’) and his Spirit, who abideth with his people for ever, will not refuse us a measure of success and comfort in our work:
therefore we should not fear. That power, which shakes the heavens and the earth, the sea and the dry land; and which effecteth such changes and revolutions among the Jews and Gentiles, in the first ages of the Gospel, can easily prepare men’s hearts in any congregation, or of any description, to welcome Christ as the Desire of their hearts and precious to their souls. He whose are all the riches of the earth and all their possessors, can defray the expense of any undertaking which is really for his glory; so that we may depend on him for whatever we want: and if his ministers be poor, or the places appropriated to his worship mean, or any apparently good design fail of adequate resources, we may be sure that he sees it best for his servants, and most for his own glory, that it should be so. They, however, who are stewards of his gold and silver, should remember, that he will demand an account of the use which they make of them; and when they contribute most liberally to pious or charitable designs, they should observe, that they only render to the Lord a portion of his own, and that he hath a right to demand the whole whenever he pleases. But the glory of the Gospel-Church is greater than that of either the former or the latter temple: for ‘Behold a greater than Solomon is here!’ The Desire of all nations is the precious Foundation and ap proved Corner-stone of this spiritual temple: believers are the living stones of which it is formed; and it is the constant habitation of God by his Holy-Spirit, and shall be for evermore. Here are contained the whole spiritual beauty and glory of the earth: hereafter, being removed to heaven, these will be the joy and admiral-of angels and arch-angels to all eternity. May then revolutions and reformation in churches and kingdoms make way for Christ to be desired and valued by all nations; may he abundantly fill his habitation with the glory of his holiness, peace, and consolation; and may the poor blinded Jews have their eyes opened to behold the preciousness of him, whom they have hitherto rejected, and who indeed was ‘a Light to lighten the Gentiles, and the Glory of his people Israel!’

V. 10—23.

Holiness becometh the temple of God and his spiritual priesthood; and they who are appointed to interpret his word, ought to be ready and expert in solving cases respecting it. The merest novice, however, in spiritual things, must know that evil communications corrupt ‘good manners;’ and yet the company of saints hath no natural efficacy to sanctify: for diseases are often in-fecious, but health cannot be imparted in the same way.
Pollution, being congenial to our nature, is more easily communicated than holiness: how dangerous then is it for those who profess godliness to form intimate connections with unbelievers, vainly hoping to impart good, when they have immensely more cause to fear the most important injury to themselves! We should also learn not to depend on external services, which are all rendered unclean by an unbelieving, carnal, and hypocritical heart. Whilst we live in known sin or neglect of known duty, we cannot reasonably expect benefit from ordinances, or comfortable success in our temporal concerns; but when we are up-rightly obedient, the Lord graciously accepts our imperfect and defiled services. Were we carefully to consider the different parts of our lives, and compare them with each other, we should many of us perceive an evident difference between those in which we have been totally irreligious or greatly negligent, and those in which we have endeavoured to seek the kingdom of God and his right:
cousness;’ and that the former have been far more full of anxiety and disappointment, the latter of success and comfort, even in outward things. But if it have not been remarkably so with us; yet the Lord will curse the blessings of the wicked, and embitter the prosperity of the negligent; and he will sweeten the cup of affliction to those who humbly and diligently serve him. And whatever changes take place on earth, all will concur in promoting the comfort, honour, and happiness of his servants, who devote themselves unreservedly to him: even as they will tend to establish the kingdom of Christ, the chosen Signet of the Father, by whom all believers are preserved and sealed unto life eternal.

5 Q 2
THE BOOK OF ZECHARIAH.

Zechariah began to prophesy two months after Haggai; being raised up to be his coadjutor in exalting the Jews to rebuild the temple: but it is probable, that he continued to exercise his prophetic office during a much longer time; though the visions and predictions, in the latter part of the book, are not dated. Various traditions are extant concerning him: but in general they are improbable, or uncertain and frivolous; so that no more is known of him, than what is recorded in Scripture, and may be seen by consulting the marginal references on the verses in which his name is mentioned. His prophetic character and usefulness are recorded by Ezra: (Ezra v. 1, 2, vi. 14.) and his book is repeatedly quoted and referred to, and thus sanctioned as the word of God, in the New Testament. (Com. ix. with Matt. xxii. 39, John xii. 14-16.—xi. 12, 13. with Matt. xxvii. 7—10.—xii. 10. with John xix. 34—37. Rev. i. 7.—xi. 7. with Matt. xxvi. 31. Mark xiv. 27.) The numerous and extraordinary prophecies, however, which it contains, sufficiently demonstrate that the prophet spake as he was moved by the Holy Ghost. Many of these have been undeniably and most wonderfully accomplished: and the rest, though considered as peculiarly obscure, on careful investigation will be found to foretell, sometimes under other emblems and metaphors, the same future events with the most remarkable predictions, both in the Old and New Testament.

Zechariah has been styled, 'the sun among the minor prophets;' and the time approaches, when the propriety of this title will no doubt be fully illustrated. After general warnings and exhortations to repentance, the prophet foretells the completion of the temple; the rebuilding, replenishing, security, and prosperity of Jerusalem and the cities of Judah, and the judgments of God on the enemies of his people: but, in doing this, under the types of Zerubbabel and Joshua, and by using figurative language, he predicts the coming of Christ our King and High Priest, the establishment of his kingdom, the building of his spiritual temple, the conversion of the Gentiles, and the enlargement and prosperity of the Christian Church. (i.—iv. vi.) By the visions of a flying roll and an ephah, he shows the judgments which would come on the wicked Jews, and the object and oppressed state of the nation, after they had filled up the measure of their sins. (v.) Then follow prophecies (interspersed with warnings and exhortations) of prosperity and enlargement to Jerusalem; till at length, the strong nations of all languages would become the worshippers of Jehovah, and join themselves to his people. (vii. viii.) The intermediate events to the surrounding nations, and to the Jews from the completion of the temple till the coming of Christ, are next foretold, with figurative intimations of the prevalence of his Gospel, by the triumphs of his apostles and servants. (ix. x.) To these are subjoined, the destruction of the temple, and the rejection of the nation for contempt of Christ, and other sins; and afterwards of the nations that oppressed Jerusalem and the Church. At length a bright scene is opened to our view, by prophecies of the conversion of the nation to their crucified Messiah; the humility, zeal, and excellence of the new converts; and the final ruin of all idolatry and false religion. (xi. xii. xiii. 1.—3.) And finally, the inspired writer returns to speak more explicitly of the death of Christ, as our sacrifice, by the sword of divine justice; the tremendous judgments which would then be inflicted on the unbelieving Jews; the preservation of a remnant, through fiery trials, and their conversion; the taking and destruction of Jerusalem to be followed by the ruin of the nations who had fought against her; the removing of hindrances, that the Gentiles might enter the Church; its establishment in the primitive times; the state of things during the succeeding ages, to the restoration of the Jews, and the rebuilding of their city, and the arrival of the Millennium, when all the nations will be either terribly destroyed, or become joyful worshippers of God; and the cause of holiness shall decidedly and finally prevail. (xiii. 7—9. xiv.) This is the general outline of the book, according to the author's view and interpretation of it, which is here given, to assist the reader in forming his judgment on the exposition of particular prophecies, in several of which the author has felt some uneasiness, in being compelled to differ from many learned and eminent commentators, who have gone before him.
CHAPTER I.

The prophet expostulates with the Jews, and exhorteth them to repentance, 1-6. His vision of horses and their riders, 7-11. Comfortable promises to Jerusalem, 12-17. A vision of four horns and four carpenters, 18-21.

In the eighth month, in the second year of Darius, came the word of the Lord unto Zechariah, the son of Bichri, the son of Iddo, the prophet, saying,

2 The Lord hath been sore displeased with your fathers.

3 Therefore saith the Lord of hosts; Turn ye unto me, saith the Lord of hosts, and I will turn unto you, saith the Lord of hosts.

4 Be ye not as your fathers, unto whom the former prophets cried, saying, Thus saith the Lord of hosts; Return unto me, and I will return unto you, saith the Lord of hosts.

NOTES.

CHAP. I. V. 1. Baruchiah. (Note, Matt. xxiii. 34-36.) It is the general opinion of expositors, that our Lord, in the passage referred to, means Zechariah, the son of Jehoiada. (Note, 2 Chr. xxiv. 19-24.) Yet some reason may be alleged, which at least render it probable that the prophet Zechariah was intended. For why should the son of Jehoiada be called the son of Baruchiah? Chrysostom indeed asserts that Jehoiada was also called Baruchiah, which signifies, one that blesses the Lord, as Jehoiada does one that confesses him: but there is not the smallest proof in Scripture that he was ever so called: and if the son of Jehoiada be meant, an alteration of the text in Matthew must be admitted, which is not advisable, unless absolutely unavoidable. Zechariah was a young man when he began to prophesy (ii. 4.) he might live long after the temple was finished, and after the death of Zerubbabel and Joshua. Zechariah, of Iddo, is mentioned among the priests, in the days of Josiah, the son of Joshua, (Neh. xii. 16.) and tradition reports, that Zechariah was of the sacerdotal line. It is not peculiarly improbable, that the Jews, exasperated by his faithful expositions, should murder him in the inner court of the temple: and the canon of Scriptures, being previously closed, could not record it, any more than the martyrdom of those who suffered under Antiochus Epiphanes. The silence of Josephus proves nothing, as he uniformly, when he can, passes over, or palliates, whatever he thinks dishonourable to his people. The transaction might, however, be well known in our Lord’s time, by tradition, or authentic history. But, especially, let it be considered, how far it might have been previously considered, that the murder of one, who suffered before the persecuting reigns of Ahaz, Manasseh, and Jehoiakim, (during which more innocent blood was shed, and more prophets were slaughtered, than in all preceding ages,) should be mentioned as the last of the righteous persons, whose blood would be required of the generation which crucified the Messiah?—The blood shed, after the death of Zechariah, son of Jehoiada, especially filled up the measure of national wickedness, and brought on Judah the Babylonish captivity: yet, on this supposition, it is wholly passed over by our Lord. But if Zechariah the prophet were meant, and if he were murdered after the captivity, as the other Zechariah had been before; the whole appears natural, and probably he might be the last eminent person who thus suffered.

V. 2-4. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 5, 6. “Your fathers are dead.” It is true, you say, and so are the prophets too. It was not for them to live here for ever. But though my prophets died; yet the words, both of counsels and menaces, which they delivered to your fathers, live still. Your fathers freely confessed, to God’s glory and to their own advantage, that they were but the work of his hand; and he threatened to deal with us according to our doings, even so hath he done; we are sinful and miserable, and he is just. (Bp. Hall.) As men astonished with my judgments,—not touched with true repentance. It must be supposed, that some were merely astonished, and others truly penitent.

Overtake. As an enemy does one that he pursues, (Bp. Newcome.)

V. 7. Sebat is the Chaldee, or Syriac, name of the eleventh month, which contained part of our January and part of February.
B.C. 519.

there red horses, * speckled, and white.

9 Then said I, O my Lord, * what are these? And * the Angel that talked with me, said unto me, I will shew thee what these be.

10 And * the Man that stood among the myrtle-trees answered and said, * These are they whom the Lord hath sent to walk to and fro through the earth.

11 And * they answered the Angel of the Lord, that stood among the myrtle-trees, and said, * We have walked to and fro through the earth, and, behold, all the earth sitteth still, and is * at rest.

12 ¶ Then * the Angel of the Lord answered and said, O Lord of hosts, * how long wilt thou not have mercy on Jerusalem and on the cities of Judah, against which * thou hast had indignation these threescore and ten years?

13 And * the Lord answered the angel who talked with me, * with good words and comfortable words.

14 So * the Angel that communed with me said unto me, * Cry thou, saying, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, * I am jealous for Jerusalem, and for Zion, with a great jealousy.

15 And * I am very sore displeased with the heathen that are at ease: * for I was but a little displeased, * and they helped forward the affliction.

16 Therefore thus saith the Lord, I will return to Jerusalem with mercies: * my house shall be built in it, saith the Lord of hosts, * and a line shall be stretched forth upon Jerusalem.

17 Cry yet, saying, Thus saith the Lord of hosts, * My cities through which * prosperity shall yet be spread abroad;

V. 8—11. The prophet saw in a vision, by night, (as denoting perhaps the afflicted state of the Jews at that time;) a Man, one in human form, even the Son of God, who afterwards became Man for our salvation; and he sat like a warrior upon a red horse, as about to execute vengeance on the enemies of his people. He was stationed "in the bottom," or in a low valley (denoting both the humility and low estate of the Church;) "among myrtle-trees," an apt emblem of true believers: and behind him were other horses with riders upon them. These seem to have been emblematic of the angels, as ministers of providence under Christ, who waited on him, being ready to execute his commands: and the diverse colours of their horses may denote the different dispensations of wrath or mercy, or both blended together, which they superintended. (Marg. Ref.) When the prophet saw these things, he inquired of One, who communed with him, who it was he meant? He is called "the Angel;" it is, however, evident, that he seems to have been the same, before and afterwards called "the Man," for the Man, who stood among the myrtle-trees, informed the prophet, that these were they, whom Jehovah had commissioned to go throughout the earth and to examine the state of it. And immediately, the other angel, as having returned from executing this commission, showed this Angel, that all the earth was still and at rest. So that the person called the Man, (8, 10.) is also spoken of, as the Angel of the Lord. The Persian king reigned peacefully over his vast dominions. Even the Chaldeans at that time lived quietly under him, and other nations were remarkably at rest, whilst the Church was in great affliction and desolation. Having given this answer, they seem to have waited for another commission. * The Man, or Angel, denotes * the Logos, or Son of God, appearing as the Captain of God's hosts, or armies, (J.sh. v. 13, 14.) They answer this Man, or Angel, as if he were their Superior; or Commander, * (L orth.) * I had a vision by night: * Christ, the Angel of the covenant, represented himself to me as a Man riding on a red horse;—and behind him were several angels, ready to attend his commands.

12 And the great Angel of the Covenant, (as taking the answer out of the mouth of that angel that spake to me,) answered and said, These are ministering spirits, whom the Lord hath sent to take a view of all the parts of the world. (Bp. Hall.) (Marg. Ref.) The Persian empire, and the other nations connected with Judea, enjoyed peace at that time: but the state of the Church was unsettled,—which circumstance gives occasion to the following intercession. (Bp. Newcome.) * All the enemies of the Persian empire in general, and of the Jews in particular, are quiet: so that this seems a proper time for setting forward the building of the temple, which has been so long interrupted. (L orth.)
CHAPTER I.

20 And the Lord shewed me four carpenters.

21 Then said I, What come these to do? And he spake, saying, These are the horns which have scattered Judah, Israel, and the ten tribes, which lifted up their horn over the house of Judah to scatter it.

V. 14.—17. Upon this the Angel, who condescended to commune with the prophet, commissioned him to proclaim these good tidings to his people; and to assure them that the Lord of all the armies in heaven and earth was jealous with vehement jealousy, or zeal, for, as he had been against, Jerusalem. His love and endeared relation to his Church would not permit him to overlook the injuries done her. He was greatly displeased with the Chaldeans and others, who had reduced the Jews to deep and constant distress: for he had been displeased a little with them, and they had helped forward the affliction. The Jews had indeed deserved the heaviest indignation of God; nor could their enemies proceed further than he intended: but they acted out of ambition, malice, and enmity against them; they took pleasure in their disgrace and misery; they used their power with cruelty and tyranny; and they intended to have continued them perpetually in a state of abject bondage and captivity. Therefore the Lord was highly displeased with them. God was displeased with the instruments of his vengeance, for their extreme cruelty to the Jews; and with the nations, who insulted over them in their distress. (Bp. Newcome.) (Marg. Ref.) At the same time, the Jews must be assured, that the Lord was actually reconciled to them, and was returned to dwell among them, with abundance of mercy: the temple would certainly be rebuilt; and the line stretched forth over every part of the city, to mark out the streets of it for building, that it might be restored to its ancient dimensions and prosperity. Nay, the prophet was further to proclaim, that, through the prosperity intended them, the other parts of the land would be replenished with cities: for the Lord would comfort the inhabitants of Zion, and make effectual his choice of Jerusalem, as the centre of his worship and the place of his peculiar and gracious residence. —These predictions primarily related to the state of the Jews after the captivity: yet that was but a shadow of what shall take place in the Church after the termination of the oppression of the New Testament Babylon. V. 18.—21. The prophet had immediately after a vision of four horns, which represented those powers that had scattered the Jews and desolated the city and land. And then Jeremiah, the person with whom he communed, showed him four carpenters, or smiths, (workmen,) who came to fray or demolish these horns of the Gentiles. —Some by the horns understand the four great monarchies, which had scattered or would scatter the Church: and then the carpenters or workmen may mean in part the same powers: the Persians cast out the Chaldeans, the Macedonians the Persians, and the Romans the Macedonians; and the Goths and other northern nations cast down the power of the Romans. Others understand, by the four horns, the several kings of Assyria, Chaldea, and Persia, that had successively crushed Israel and Judah: and then they suppose Zerubbabel, Joshua, Ezra, and Nehemiah, to be the four carpenters. But perhaps the vision only meant in general, that enemies from the four winds had arisen, or would arise, against the Jews and the Church; but that able instruments would be raised up to defeat their attempts, to deliver the people of God, and so make his cause to prevail and prosper. And this may take in both the ministers of his word and those of his Providence. Some interpret the four horns to mean the Samaritans, Ammonites, Arameans, and Philistines, who harassed the Jews that had returned from Babylon; but these nations have never scattered Israel and Judah. Why four? To denote that these kingdoms had many enemies; enemies on every side. (Bp. Newcome.) These signified all the enemies of the Church, east, west, north, and south. (ii. 6.) The carpenters, or smiths, are God's instruments, which with their mallets and hammers break these hard and strong horns; and declare that no enemies' horn is so strong, but God hath an hammer to break it to pieces. Smiths. These were to repair the destructions which the horns had made. (Lenth.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1.—6.

It tends greatly to the conviction of the hearers, when several of the Lord's ministers testify the same truths: and they, who profit by the means afforded them, shall have them continued and increased. Humiliation for sin must precede the comfort of forgiveness: and therefore the "ministration of condemnation" should make way for the "ministration of righteousness and of the Spirit." All our sufferings arise from the just displeasure of the Lord; and this must continue from generation to generation against our sinful race, except as any turn to him by repentance and faith. His readiness to forgive, and to return in mercy to the humble, suppliant, should encourage and induce us to repent; and we should earnestly beg of him to "turn us, that we may be turned." We must follow no examples further than they accord to the word of God: and therefore they whose fathers have refused to hearken to the ministers of Christ, must by no means be like them; as the authority of parents will not bear men out in iniquity, idolatry, superstition, unbelief, or impenitence.
CHAP. II.

The vision of One, who came to measure Jerusalem; and a prediction of its flourishing state, under God's protection, 1—5. The people warned to leave Babylon, before the impending judgments were executed, 6—9. A call on Zion to rejoice in the presence of God and the increase of the church; and on all flesh to be silent before him, 10—13.

I LIFTED up mine eyes again, and looked, and beheld, a man with a measuring line in his hand.

For where are they now? They are dead, their places know them no more, and their authority is terminated; but the word of God endureth for ever: they can do no more harm or good; but he ever liveth to save or to destroy. And where are they who died in their sins? If they have ruined their own souls, is that a reason why their posterity should ruin theirs also? How vain then is it for men to be satisfied with their notions or forms, merely because they received them by tradition from their fathers, when they are contrary to the word of God! They, and the prophets, apostles, or ministers, whose words they rejected, are gone to receive their recompense: but though the prophets do not live here for ever, yet their words of precept, promise, doctrine, or prediction, remain perpetually in force, and are taking effect, or receiving their accomplishment; and the Lord continues to deal with men according to their doings, as tried by this standard. Being dead, they yet speak, and warn us to keep out of the reach of their threatenings; for they will surely take hold of us, except we trust in the promises, and obey the commandments of God; as they have already taken hold of numbers, who too late have found, and been forced to acknowledge, the truth of them.

V. 7—21.

Our divine Redeemer, our Brother and Friend, is not only King of kings, but likewise the Lord of all angels, who go throughout the earth, to execute his purposes of mercy or of judgment, for the good of his chosen people. He descends to notice them in their lowest debasement; he delights in their humility; he takes pleasure in the effects of his own grace, which changes thorns into myrtles; he peculiarly approves of their patience and meekness in suffering afflictions; and he is ever ready to instruct, and to answer the humble inquiries of his servants. But it is common for the enemies of God to be prosperous and careless, and quiet and at rest in their sins; whilst his people are enduring correction, disquieted by fears of wrath, or groaning under oppression or persecution. Yet their heavenly Advocate faileth not to plead their cause; and the measure and duration of their fiery, but purifying, trials, are determined by infinite wisdom and love. His fatherly indignation against them will not endure for ever; but he will have mercy on them, and comfort them at the appointed time. The Lord of hosts will never reject the pleadings of his beloved Son for his beloved people; but will answer him with gracious and comfortable words, which shall be made known to his afflicted brethren, as he sees needful for them. Whatever their distress, fears, or sufferings may be, the Lord is jealous for them; he is a great jealousy; and his anger is little against them, compared with his heavy displeasure against their prosperous enemies; whose cruel contempt and enmity, when employed to correct the people of God, will ensure to themselves the heavier condemnation. But after every hiding of his face, the Lord will return to Zion with mercies; his spiritual temple will surely be built, in defiance of all opposition, and his Churches must be spread abroad. Whatever opposers prevail to scatter his worshippers, or to run down his truth; he will raise up able instruments to defeat their designs, and to put them to confusion; whether persecuting tyrants are to be crushed by powerful kings and their armies; or proud infields and heresiers to be confuted and silenced by his ministers, and the effectual preaching of his holy Gospel.

NOTES.

CHAP. II. V. 1—5. This was a continuation, or variation of the foregoing vision, and related to the same subjects. The prophet saw a man with a measuring line in his hand, whom he ventured to interrogate about his purpose: and he answered, that he was going to measure Jerusalem, and mark out the dimensions of it. If the Angel who talked with the prophet was the same as the Man who stood among the myrtle-trees, (Notes, I. 8—13;) the Angel of the covenant, the Word and Son of God, as it seems most probable, (Vulg. Ref.) the man with the measuring line must have been a created angel in human form. (Note, Ez. xl. 3.) When the Angel who talked with Zechariah went forth, the other angel, with the measuring line, went out to meet him, "To whom He," the first Angel, "said, Run," &c. He directed him, with the measuring line, to give the prophet, who was then a young man, further satisfaction; and to assure him that Jerusalem would be vastly enlarged and replenished; that it would be inhabited, as cities which are not circumscribed by walls, but spread abroad on every
CHAPTER II.

6 If Ho, ho, come forth, and flee from the land of the north, saith the Lord: for I have spread abroad as the four winds of the heaven, saith the Lord.

7 Deliver thyself, O Zion, that dwellest with the daughter of Babylon. For thus saith the Lord of hosts; After the glory hath he sent me unto the nations which spoiled you: for he that toucheth thee toucheth the apple of his eye.

9 For, behold, I will shake mine hand upon them, and they shall be a spoil to their servants: and ye shall know that the Lord of hosts hath sent me.

10 If Sing and rejoice, O daughter of Zion: for, lo, I come, and I will dwell in the midst of thee, saith the Lord.

11 And many nations shall be joined to the Lord in that day, and shall be my people: and I will dwell in the midst of thee, and thou shalt know that the Lord of hosts hath sent me unto thee.

12 And the Lord shall inherit Judah his portion in the holy land, and shall choose Jerusalem again.

13 Be silent, O all flesh, before the Lord: for he is raised up out of his holy habitation.

14 V. 6—9. The language of this proclamation first claims our attention. The Lord of hosts is the Speaker, (8;) yet he speaks as one who is sent; at the same time he says, "I will shake my hand upon them;" by this ye shall know that the Lord of hosts sent me." (9.) The language shows, that not the prophet, but he that spake by him, was intended. There are evidently two persons here called the Lord of hosts: one who is sent, and the other he who sent him: even the eternal Son of God, and the Father who sent him as His Messenger to be the Saviour of his people. Thus, relatively, as well as in respect of his human nature, he descended to be inferior to the Father, though he claimed to be naturally equal, as One with him in the unity of the Godhead. And had not the prophet, or rather the Holy Spirit who spake by him, considered the promise: Messias as Jehovah Sabaoth, Inmanuel, such language would not have been used; for it would have had an evident tendency to mislead us. This must necessarily be understood of Christ, who being God, equal with his Father, was sent, "as he was Mediator, to dwell in his Church." (11.) The Lord having promised to protect, honour, and bless Jerusalem, here issued a proclamation to the Jews, (who still remained in Babylon and the northern regions of Chaldea,) and the Israelites in their dispersions, to return without delay, that they might share her privileges. He had indeed scattered them on every side by their late calamities; and this was their chastisement and affliction, rather than their sin. But since the decree of Cyrus and the assurances of his returning favour, they would be inexcusable in remaining at a distance from the holy city, among devoted idolaters. They might till this time be considered as Zion, the Church of God, though dwelling in Babylon; but now they were commanded to deliver themselves, unless they preferred exile and slavery. For after the glory promised, and already begun to be conferred on Jerusalem, by his presence with his people, the Lord of hosts had sent his Messiah to the nations that had spoiled the Jews, to take vengeance upon them: as he who touched them, touched the apple of his eye; (speaking after the manner of men;) they touched him in the most tender part, and would surely excite his keenest resentment. (Ps. xviii. 8.) The Messiah would therefore shake his hand upon them, as making a signal to the executioners of his vengeance; and then they who had been their servants would plunder and oppress them; and by this the Jews would know that the Lord of hosts had sent him. They ought therefore without delay to flee from those devoted cities and countries, lest they should be involved in their calamities. Not long after this the Babylonians revolted from Darius, and he besieged that city for twenty months; and, having taken it, he made terrible slaughter of the inhabitants, and destroyed most of its fortifications, which prepared the way for its more complete desolation. This may also be considered as the call of Christ to his people, to separate from Antichristian corrupters and oppressors of his Church, to hope that destruction of the New Testament Babylon, which probably will be the grand means of convincing the Jews that Jesus was their promised Messiah. (Mary. Ref.)

V. 10—12. This seems to be an express prediction of the coming of Christ in human nature, to dwell in the midst of his Church. The daughter of Zion, the inhab-
Joshua stands before the Angel in filthy garments, and is resisted by Satan: but the Angel orders him to go and stand in a fair and magnificent place, and to give him encouraging promises, 1-7. A prophecy of the Branch, and the Stone on which are seven eyes; with further promises, 8-10.

The inhabitants of Jerusalem were called on to rejoice and sing, because he would come and dwell among them; for he was "the Glory of his people Israel." But he was also to be "a Light to the Gentiles," and many nations, in that day, would renounce their idolatry, and join themselves to the Lord as his worshippers, among whom he would dwell, and by this the Jews would know that the Lord of hosts had sent him to them. Let the reader attentively mark the language; "many nations shall be joined to Jehovah; and they shall be my people; and I will dwell," &c. It is evident that Jehovah here speaks; yet he adds, "Thou shalt know that Jehovah of host hath sent me unto thee." It is the singular number. The prophet should know, that Jehovah of hosts had sent that person to him, who spake in the name of the Lord; not the people, that Jehovah had sent the prophet to them. It seems impossible that this language should be mistaken, except it be disregarded. Few passages, even in the New Testament, more clearly speak of distinct persons in the unity of the Godhead, than this does. (Marg. Ref. Notes, Gen. xvi. 10, 11, 13, 14, xviii. 1, 2, 33, xxxii. 30, xlvii. 16. Ex. iii. 2, xxiii. 20-23.)

The day intended may either mean the time when the Gospel was first preached to the Gentiles; or that which will soon arrive, when the fullness of the Gentiles shall come in. But the next verse evidently looks forward to the latter day: for then the Lord will inherit Judah, in his holy land, and again choose Jerusalem; having converted the Jews and brought them back to their own land. However, at both these times he would evidently be raised up out of his holy habitation, to plead the cause of his people against their enemies; and it would behoove all the fallen race of men to fear before him, and to adore these displays of his power, justice, truth, and love, with submission, and without murmurs, objections, or opposition.

Many were made proselytes to Judaism; the Edomites were converted in the time of John Hyrcanus." (By. Newcombe.) The vanquished Edomites were indeed then compelled to be circumcised, and to profess themselves Jews. But can any man of reflection be satisfied with such an interpretation? Have not whole nations, and powerful nations, at least in as unexceptionable a way, embraced Christianity? and are not more glorious times foretold? And does not this confirm, beyond reasonable doubt, that exposition which explains the prophecy of our Lord's coming and kingdom?

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The great Builder of the Church, whatever instruments he employs, always works by line and rule; and he knows the dimensions of his holy city, and all those who truly belong to it. But we may boldly apply to him for information about all interesting matters which perplex us, and by his gracious instruction, even the young and inexperienced will be made so wise in the most important concerns, that no man can without great sin despise their youth. The Church of God is so admirably constructed, that, after the millions which have already entered it, "there is yet room" for innumerable millions more: none shall be refused who trust in Christ; and he never excludes from the Church in heaven, one of the true members of the Church on earth. Our desires, prayer, and endeavour, then ought to be, that Jerusalem may be replenished with such numerous converts, that her present limits may be far too narrow, and that the suburbs of this holy city may become far larger than all her present dimensions are.

The inhabitants of Zion need fear no danger or disgrace, however exposed and despised they may be: seeing the Lord will be, "a wall of fire around them, and a glory in the midst of them." We should therefore in our several places circulate his proclamation far and near: that sinners, who are scattered in all parts of the globe, may be brought to separate from their wicked companions, to renounce idolatry, superstition, and iniquity, and to join themselves to the Father of our Lord Jesus Christ, as his worshippers and servants. When he has displayed his glory in purifying his Church, he will proceed to punish those who have spoiled her. Let all men therefore fear to harm his worshippers: for the least injurious touch will provoke his indignation; and if his wrath be kindled, yea, but a little, and he do but shake his hand over his enemies, misery and contempt will seize upon them; and all the world shall know that the Father hath sent the Son to be the Saviour of his people, and the terrible Judge and Avenger of all, who will not have him to reign over them. Let us then rejoice in his salvation, who now dwell in our nature and abides with his people perpetually: and to whom many nations have already been joined, and all the rest in due time will join themselves. May we be found a part of his chosen inheritance, and yield him a large revenue of praise, honour, and worship: and then he will own us for his portion, and be our Portion in his holy land above. And let all fle h tremble and adore before him: for though now he has taken his residence in his holy habitation in heaven, and many are ready to inquire, "Where is the 'promise of his coming?' yet he will soon arise, and make his cause triumphant, and punish his enemies; and he will ere long come to judgment, to complete the salvation of his people, and to punish the inhabitants of the earth for their iniquity.
with garments. And the Angel of the LORD stood by.

6 And the angel of the LORD protected unto Joshua, saying,

7 Thus saith the Lord of hosts; If thou wilt walk in my ways, and if thou wilt keep my charge, thou shalt also judge my house, and shalt also keep my courts, and I will give thee places to walk among these that stand by.

8 ¶ Hear now, O Joshua the high-priest, thou, and thy fellows that sit before thee: for they are men that wondered at: for, behold, I will bring forth my servant, the Branch.

9-10 — The Branch, or Son of God, said unto Satan, "the Lord," even God the Father, "rebuke thee," &c. (Lornth.)

V. 5. The prophet would doubtless rejoice to see Joshua rescued, cleansed, and arrayed: but he observed that he yet had not the mitre inscribed with "Holiness to the Lord," which was the peculiar mark of his appointment to the high priesthood. (Margar.) But he was encouraged to beg that this also might be put upon his head: and his request being granted, Joshua was invested with that as well as the other garments of his office.

Many, however, suppose the first clause to be a continuation of the orders given by the Angel of the Lord: — And accordingly I command you to set a fair mitre on his head. (Hps. Hal.): I, the Lord, further commanded, and said, The angel that talked with me still stood by, and made that solemn protestation which follows. (Lornth.)

V. 6, 7. When this was done, and Joshua was solemnly admitted to his high office, notwithstanding all former sins; (Notes, Is. vi. 1-9.) the Angel protested to him, or solemnly assured him, with the authority of the Lord of hosts, that if he conscientiously walked in his ways, and faithfully continued to execute the important trust and charge committed to him, he should be honoured as the judge or ruler over the temple and all its services, whilst he lived; and should at length have admission to the company of those attendant spirits which were around the throne.

V. 8. Joshua and the other priests, with Zerubbabel and his assistants, had been men greatly wondered at. Their marvellous deliverance from Babylon; their resolution in coming up to Jerusalem when it lay in ruins; their perseverance in the midst of so many hardships and perils; and their preservation among such invertebrate and potent enemies, caused many to think of them with astonishment. But they would surely be preserved; because One was in due time to arise from the remnant of Judah, of whom Joshua was a type, and who was called by the same name; (Joshua being the Hebrew, and Jesus the Greek, termination.) In due time the Lord would bring forth his servant, the BRANCH; namely, at his incarnation, when he would spring forth as a small branch from a decaying root, and yet grow up to supereminent dignity and glory.

The word, rendered wondered at, signifies not only a wonder, but also a sign, or a type. They are intended as signs and tokens, they are typical men; men that foreshow something to come. They, with Joshua, at the head of them, are a figure of the restoration of the Church under the government of the Messiah. I will point out the coming of the Messiah, as a person altogether distinct from Joshua, or any other present among you; and I will make him known among the BRANCH of the BRANCH. The word is rendered by the Septuagint, the east, or sun-rising, from whence it is applied to Christ, (Isa. ii. 78;) and rendered the day spring. (Louth.) How any learned man can suppose that Zechariah was exclusively meant, (when he was already brought forth, and placed as high in authority as at any future period,) would be astonishing; did not multiplied instances prove the difficulty with which very learned men discern the Saviour, in the clearest predictions and testimonies of Scripture. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 9, 10. An allusion might here be made to some corner-stone or foundation stone of the temple, which had been laid under the inspection of Joshua, and in the presence of many of the people; and on which the names of the tribes of Israel perhaps were engraved. But the Lord called their attention to the true Foundation and Corner-stone of the spiritual temple, which he had laid in his purposes and prophecies, and which he would openly lay before the people, in his incarnation and by the Gospel; even Christ, as Immanuel, God and man. The seven eyes upon this stone are interpreted by many to signify the manifold and abundant wisdom and knowledge of Christ, as the Counsellor and ever-watchful Protector of his Church; or the manifold gifts and graces of the Holy Spirit; and some explain it of certain superior ministering angels, so called; but others suppose that they signify a divine attention which would be paid to this precious Corner-stone. The eyes of all believers from the beginning had looked forward to it, through types and predictions; those of all believers, both of the Jews and Gentiles, after Christ's coming to the end of the world, would be fixed upon it, in faith, hope, and love; wicked men would behold it with contempt, abhorrence, or diemany; and evil spirits would eye it with malignity and despair. In short, the eyes of all, in heaven, earth, or hell, would, in one way or other, at one time or other, be fixed upon the iniquity of that land in one day.

10 In that day, saith the Lord of hosts, shall ye call every man his neighbour under the vine, and under the fig-tree.

The Lord of hosts would engrave the graving of this Stone, as the Corner-stone of the temple had been engraved; this seems especially to refer to the sufferings of Christ, through which he was prepared to be the Foundation and Salvation of the whole Church. On that one day, on which Christ was crucified for his people, a complete atonement was made for all their sins, and the way opened for their pardon, acceptance, and sanctification. And in that day, when sinners come to him, the tried Corner-stone, and obtain pardon, and spiritual life and grace from him, they begin to enjoy peace, and to live in harmony; calling upon one another to associate in religious exercises and in holy fellowship; while they rest under his protection and live upon his consolations; as men used to feast together upon the fruit and under the shade of their vines and fig-trees. This may perhaps have a special reference to that day, when the eyes of the Jews shall be fixed upon Christ, that precious Corner-stone which they have hitherto rejected. Then their load of national guilt shall at once be removed, and they shall enjoy spiritual peace and temporal security in their own land, as in the days of Solomon. (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.
V. 1-7.

If we could behold what goes forward in the world of spirits, we should see much to alarm, to humble, and to encourage us. The most honoured, eminent, and excellent of men, when viewed as standing before the Lord, would appear to be sinners deserving of condemnation, not only for their actual sins, but for the defilement of their best services; and Satan would be seen employing a vast variety of subtle and malevolent machinations, to defeat all our pious designs, and even, if possible, to procure our condemnation. But though we cannot answer the charges brought against us, yet our heavenly Advocate never wants an efficacious plea, in behalf of all who entrust their cause in his hands. He will subdue, confound, and silence our bold accuser, by arguments, grounded on his own meritorious obedience unto death, and on the mercy and truth of the Father through him. If it be proved, by our genuine conversion, that we belong to that company, whom he hath chosen, "that they should be holy and without blame before him in love," we have nothing to fear. We were once as brands in the fire, without sense of our misery and danger, or desire of deliverance; and he plucked us out, of his own unsolicited mercy and grace, "according to the eternal purpose which he had purposed in himself," and he will not now leave us to be thrown back into the burning, because of those remains of sin, which are our grief and burden, when we stand daily before him, confessing our guilt, entreatling him to pardon and cleanse us, and prepared to give him all the glory of our salvation. If CHAP. IV.

A vision of a golden candelabrum, with seven lamps, supplied with oil, through pipes, from two olive-trees; explained to mean the effectual assistance, which God would afford Zerubbabel and Joshua in building the temple, 1-10.

The two olive-trees are the two anointed ones, 11-14.

And the Angel that talked with me came again, and waked me, as a man that is wakened out of his sleep, the great Intercessor then silences our accuser by such arguments; we should resist his discouraging suggestions in the same manner; we should desire to be the Lord's instruments in plucking brands out of the fire; and we should bear patiently and meekly with the sins and infirmities of new converts and weak believers, according to the mercy of our Lord to us. In his sight we all appear as clothed in filthy garments; not only in our first approach to him for salvation, but in respect of our hearts and actions ever since; except as he orders the poor prodigal to be divested of his rags, and clothed with the best robe, which he hath provided for his change of raiment. When we truly trust in Christ, we shall thus be made the righteousness of God in him; he will also cause our iniquity to pass away by his sanctifying grace, and enable us to put off the old man, which is corrupt according to the deceitful lusts; and having put on the new man, to walk thenceforth in newness of life. Happy then are they who seek help from him! the prayers of his ministers and people are accepted for them, and they are qualified for every work to which they are called. But if we would have the assurance and comfort of these privileges, and serve the Lord in any honourable and useful station, we must hearken to his protestations concerning the necessity of holiness and faithful obedience, as well as his promises of freedom salvation. We must learn to walk in his ways, and keep his charges, and be faithful in a little; in order that we may be more and more employed on earth, and in hopes of serving him in heaven for ever, along with angels and perfected saints.

V. 3-10.

Whatever trials we pass through, or whatever services we perform; or however we may be wondered at, by friends or foes; our whole dependence must rest on Christ, the Branch of righteousness; that we may be grafted into him and grow like him. On him must our eyes be fixed, as the only Foundation which the Father hath laid for his Church, or on which a sinner can rest his hope of salvation. He alone can remove our guilt: in one day he made an all-sufficient atonement for sin, and the Lord laid on him the transgressions of us all; and when his hands, feet, and side were pierced for us, our names and cause were graven by the Father upon his heart. Whenever we look to him in genuine faith, the guilt and power of sin are marvellously removed: we then begin to enjoy true peace and comfort, in communion with him and his saints; and we have an antipeast of heavenly felicity, while in his ordinances, by faith and love, "we sit down under his shadow with great delight, and his fruit is sweet to our taste." (Cant. ii. 3.)

NOTES.

CHAP. IV. V. 1. Some short interval taking place, between the foregoing and the following parts of the vision, Zechariah, through the infirmity of the flesh, was fallen asleep. But his divine Instructor waked him, that he might attend to what he had further to show him. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 2, 3. (Note, Ex. xxv. 31-37. Rev. i. 20.) This candelabrum of pure gold, (alluding to that in the sanctuary,) represented the Church of God, formed of the excellent of the earth, and fitted for receiving, and communicating, the light of truth and holiness, in this dark world. The lamps of the candlestick in the sanctuary were supplied by the priests, in the ordinary manner; but this was supplied in a supernatural way: for there was a bowl, or common reservoir, placed on the top of the candlestick, at an equal distance from each of the seven lamps; and from this bowl were seven pipes, through which the oil gradually ran of itself, to supply each of them, as it was wanted. At the same time, two olive-trees were growing, one on each side of the bowl; and a branch of each of them, being nearest to it, distilled of its own accord abundance of the finest oil, of a golden colour, through a golden pipe into the bowl; from which the lamps were replenished, through the seven pipes, (11, 12.) Beyond doubt, this represented the abundance of divine grace, for the illumination and sanctification of the ministers and members of the Church, which is treasured up in Christ, to be from him dispensed, through his ordinances, to every individual in all parts of the world, as occasions and circumstances may require; and which cannot be procured, or precluded by any human power, but is communicated, according to the methods which he has established, and revealed in his word. This Church was at that time found among the Jews, and the candlestick was set up at Jerusalem; and its light would be supplied and kept burning, notwithstanding the weakness or shortness of the persons concerned, the number or power of their enemies, or the apparent difficulties under which they laboured.
5 Then the Angel that talked with me answered and said unto me, Knowest thou not what these be? And I said, No, my lord.

6 Then he answered and spake unto me, saying, This is the word of the Lord unto Zerubbabel, saying, Not by might, nor by power, but by my Spirit, saith the Lord of hosts.

7 Who art thou, O great mountain? before Zerubbabel thou shalt become a plain: and he shall bring forth the head-stone thereof with shoutings, crying, Grace, grace unto it.

8 Moreover the word of the Lord came unto me, saying,

9 The hands of Zerubbabel have laid the foundation of this house; his hands shall also finish it, and thou shalt know that the Lord of hosts hath sent me unto you.

10 For who hath despised the day of small things? for they shall rejoice; and shall see the plumb-line in the hand of Zerubbabel, with those seven; they are the eyes of the Lord, which run to and fro through the whole earth.

V. 4-7. The prophet did not understand the vision, but he ventured to inquire the meaning from his gracious Instructor; and being gently reproved for his dulness of apprehension, or his attention being still more excited, he confessed his ignorance, and was left to discover the meaning from the message which he was ordered to deliver to Zerubbabel; assuring him, that his support and success were not to be derived from armies, or human authority, but from the Spirit of God. The power of the Jews, or the authority of the Persian kings, would not avail in these undertakings; but they would be rendered successful by the Holy Spirit. The first edict of Cyrus was procured by the secret operation of God on his mind; Darius and Artaxerxes would be influenced in the same manner to favour them; but especially the instruments employed would not be invested with extensive authority or great power, or endowed with military conduct or courage; but with the Spirit of God, rendering them eminent for wisdom, holiness, faith, and zeal, and directing them to proceed in dependence on God. Such in a measure were Zerubbabel, Joshua, and their helpers; such afterwards were Ezra and Nehemiah, and those that concurred with them. By instruments and means of this kind, the temple was rebuilt, and the civil and ecclesiastical state of Judah was restored. Indeed, the obstructions in their way resembled a great mountain, which would be invincible and insurmountable by any human power: but in the name and strength of that God, who would work by Zerubbabel, he might set them at defiance; for before him the great mountain would become a plain; and he would in time bring forth the head-stone, or the top-stone, to be placed on the summit of the temple: whilst all the people with loud and repeated acclamations ascribed their whole success to the free, unmerited, and abundant grace and favour of God; as well as seek his continued mercy and grace by fervent prayer. In all this, Zerubbabel doubtless was the type of Christ, who builds his spiritual temple, not by human power and authority, but by the converting, sanctifying influences of the Holy Spirit; whilst mountains melt into plains before him, and the work goes on amidst the combined opposition of earth and hell. And thus will he proceed, till the whole multitude of the redeemed shall be perfected, body and soul, in heavenly glory; whilst angels will join the full chorus of the Church triumphant, in adoring praises to that free grace, which formed, conducted, and completed the surprising plan. To this sense the Chaldee paraphrase expands the words. His Messiah shall come forth, who was named from eternity, and shall obtain the empire of all the kingdoms of the earth. And St. Jerome tells us, that the ancient Jews explained it so. (Lamith.)

V. 8-10. The same truths are here expressed, or illustrated, in another manner. Zerubbabel with his own hands had some time before laid the foundation-stone, in the presence of Joshua and the people: yet, through various hindrances, and discouragements, he probably despaired of seeing the work completed; but he was here assured that his hands should also finish it; and by this he would know, that the Lord had sent his prophet to him; or rather, by this Zechariah would know, that Jehovah of hosts, the Father, had sent his divine Instructor to him. "Thou shalt know, (meaning the prophet,) that I am Christ sent of my Father, for the building and preservation of my spiritual temple." The aged persons among the Jews had despised these small beginnings, and probably many others conpired with them; and thus the Lord disheartened one another. Perhaps those in Chaldea, despising such a day of small things, excused themselves from returning into their own land; as if the dawning of the day of God's returning favour ought not to have been highly valued. Their enemies also despised and ridiculed these feeble efforts. Yet all the friends of the work would at length rejoice, in seeing Zerubbabel successfully and skilfully sustain the character of the master-builder of the temple; and with his plumb-line in his hand take surveys of the work, to see that it was properly done, until the whole should be completed. This he would do with those seven, which some explain of seven of his principal assistants; but probably it alludes to the seven eyes, that were upon the foundation-stone. (Note, iii. 9.) and which would still watch over and superintend the work, till it was finished. These were the eyes of the Lord, &c. His omniscience and manifold wisdom, by which he providentially directs every event all over the earth, would concur with Zerubbabel, and order all things in subservience to his success. Thus Christ began, coq-
11 ¶ Then answered I, and said unto him, What are these two olive-trees, upon the right side of the candlestick, and upon the left side thereof?

12 And I answered again, and said unto him, What be these two olive-branches, which through the two golden pipes empty the golden oil out of themselves?

13 And he answered me and said, Knowest thou not what these be? And I said, No, my lord.

14 Then said he, These are the two anointed ones, that stand by the Lord of the whole earth.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

We are so dull, and so soon weary of attending on spiritual things, that the Lord must not only set them before us, but again and again by various methods awaken our attention. The Church contains all the knowledge, holiness, and consolation, which are to be found in this spiritual world: and all this light comes from Christ, as its great source. He hath formed his candlestick on earth of the most valuable materials, and with the most exquisite workmanship; and he hath so arranged his word, his ordinances, his ministers, and people, that no part of the Church may be destitute of the light of life; and that the whole may shine as a light in the world. Even when our ignorance or inattention deserve reproofs, if we ask wisdom of him, he will give us liberally, and not upbraid us.

No human power or efforts can do good to the souls of men, except the Spirit of God work by them: nor can any authority or might prevent that good, which this divine Agent is pleased to do, often by feeble and unworthy instruments. To spread the Gospel, and to render men wise, holy, and happy, we do not so much need the assistance of mighty monarchs and powerful armies; or that of wealth, great abilities, eminent learning; or even the powers of philosophy, eloquence, and oratory: but we want men filled with the Holy Spirit, full of faith, heavenly wisdom, holiness, zeal for the glory of God, and love to the souls of men; who would go forth in simple dependence on the grace and providence of God, to use (no carnal weapons, but) the spiritual armour provided for them; and by fervent prayer seek the blessing from him alone. Before such Zerubbabels mountains would become plains; or rather before him, who hath said "Lo, I am with you always, even to the end of the world." As his instruments, they would begin and finish many a good work even as he laid the foundation, and will in due time bring forth the head-stone, of his Church.—In the mean while, may we first give diligence to obtain the assurance that we are a part of the spiritual building; that we may both witness and partake of the blessing, when the whole company of heaven shall exclaim, "Grace, and grace unto it." Having this assurance, whatever we are called to engage in for the honour of God and the good of the Church, let us use every means diligently, but trust only in the Lord. Let us not be discouraged by mountains in the way, for faith and prayer will not fail to remove them; and let us hope for a happy event to all our endeavours. Nor let us despise the day of small things, either in respect of ourselves or others: for the Lord commonly produces great effects from small beginnings. Rather let us be thankful for every little hope, help, or success, or any little good done by us: let us rejoice to see instruments made active in the Lord's work, either in the magistracy, the ministry, or any other way. Especially let us fix our faith on Christ, and joyfully view him carrying on his work according to his own glorious plan, and daily bringing his spiritual edifice nearer to its completion; whilst the omnipresent and omniscient providence of God concurs with his grace, in perfecting the great
CHAP. V.

Visions of a large flying roll, signifying the judgments, about to be executed on the wicked, 1-4; and of an ephah, with a woman sitting in it, covered with a talent of lead, and carried to be stationed in the land of Shinar; signifying the durance of miseries of the Jews, when they should have fulfilled their measure of iniquity, 5-11.

THEN I turned, and lifted up mine eyes, and looked, and beheld a flying roll.

And he said unto me, What seest thou? and I answered, I see a flying roll; its length is ten cubits, and the breadth thereof ten cubits.

Then said he unto me, This is the curse that goeth forth over the face of the whole earth: for every one that stealeth shall be cut off as on this side according to it; and every one that sweareth shall be cut off as on that side according to it.

I will bring it forth, saith the Lord of hosts, and it shall enter into the house of the thief, and into the house of him that sweareth falsely by my name: and it shall remain in the midst of his house.

NOTES.

CHAP. V. V. 1-4. The preceding visions were replete with encouragement to the pious rulers and people of Judah; but these bear a gloomy aspect, both towards obstinate sinners, and towards the whole nation in process of time. The prophet's attention was called to a flying roll. He saw several skins of parchment, or other such materials, joined together, and written upon, flying in the air; which seemed to him to be above ten yards long and five yards wide. His divine Instructor informed him, that they represented the curse, which would go through the whole land against wicked persons. The Lord would bring it forth, as the rule of judgment, and he would deal with every one according to it. So that the thief, being condemned by one part of it, would be cut off according to it; the perjured person, being condemned by another part of it, would be cut off according to it; and in like manner, with other criminals. For the curse would enter into the house of the thief, the perjured person, &c., and abide there, till it had destroyed all the riches, comfort, and credit of him and his family; even as if it had consumed the stones and timber of his habitation. The large size of the roll might intimate, that it not only contained all the curses written in the law and denounced by the prophets; but also an account of all the sins of those against whom it was sent forth; its flying might signify, that it continually hovered over, and would speedily light on, the heads of the impious; and the two crimes of theft and false swearing might be mentioned as a compendium of the two tables of the law. (Morg. Ref.)

The roll was very ample, to show what a number of curs es should come on the wicked. The thief and the false swearer, says Capellus, are put for every kind of transgressor. (Bp. Newcombr.)

V. 5-11. This vision seems to be a prediction of the present state of the Jews. Though their prosperity would be restored after the captivity; yet they would at length fill up the measure of their iniquity, and be exposed to a far heavier and more durable calamity than the Babylonian captivity. The prophet being again directed by his divine Instructor to look up, and see what went forth; (that is, from the councils of God, before concealed, but thus re.
CHAPTER VI.

A vision of four chariots, with horses of different colours, 1—8. By crowns, put on Joshua’s head, and then preserved in the temple, the Branch, the Messiah, as Priest and King, as building the temple and as executing the counsel of peace, is prefigured, 9—15.

ND I turned, and lifted up mine eyes, and looked, and behold, there came four chariots out from between two mountains; and the mountains were mountains of brass. 2 In the first chariot were red horses; and in the second chariot black horses; and in the third chariot white horses; and in the fourth chariot grisled and bay horses.

4 Then I answered and said unto the Angel that talked with me, What are these, my lord? 5 And the Angel answered and said unto me, These are the four ^spirits of the heavens, which go forth from standing before the Lord of all the earth. 6 The black horses which are therein go forth into the north country; and the white go forth after them; and

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The full discoveries of the free grace of the Gospel, and the greatest encouragements given to repentance, faith, and evangelical obedience, tend to aggravate the guilt and enhance the punishment of those, who go on still in their wickedness. The tremendous curses of God’s word go forth over the face of the whole earth: and they are continually falling upon the heads of the unjust and profane, according to the things written in the book of the law, and in the book of God’s omniscience, who will never forget any of their works. While men seek to enrich their families by fraud, rapine, oppression, perjury, or other crimes; they open their doors, and admit the curse into their habitations along with their ill-gotten gains; and it will there remain, to the ruin of their substance, and the impoverishing of their posterity; while another part of the same curse will rest on their souls, and sink them into everlasting punishment. As we are all transgressors of the law, so we cannot escape this wrath of God, except we flee for refuge to the hope set before us in the Gospel. To give us space for this, the Lord endures our provocations with much long-suffering: but there is an appointed measure for every individual, (as well as for every nation,) in which he sits, and into which all his wickedness is cast: and when he hath filled this measure, the Lord will shut him up under his heavy wrath, as with a talent of lead, and commission the executioners of his vengeance to carry him to his own place, there to assign him his long home, far from the city of our God, and among his enemies, as a vessel of wrath fitted for destruction. There will he be established on his own base, and continue for ever a hatred of God and holiness, and an object of his unchangeable and hot displeasure. Let sinners then fear to treasure up wrath against this day of wrath; for the more they multiply their crimes, the faster the measure fills; let them especially take heed not to oppose, despise, or neglect the great salvation of the Gospel; for this, above all other sins, bastens and ratifies the tremendous sentence; and whilst the day continues, let the wicked forsake his ways, and the unrighteous man his thoughts, and let him return to the Lord, and he will have mercy upon him, and to our God, for he will abundantly pardon.”
7 And the bay went forth, and sought to go that they might walk to and fro through the earth: and he said, Get ye hence, walk to and fro through the earth. So they walked to and fro through the earth.

8 Then cried he upon me, and spake unto me, saying, Behold, these that go toward the north country have quieted my spirit in the north country.

NOTES.

CIIAP. VI. V. 1-8. 'The two brazen mountains may be merely an ornamental part of the vision; or they may denote God's firm and immutable decrees, by which he governs the earth. 'His righteousness is like great mountains.' (Bp. Newcomer.) The emphasis laid on the mountains being mountains of brass, sufficiently proves, that something essential to the vision was intended. The four chariots are generally interpreted of the four great monarchies, the Chaldean, Persian, Grecian, and Roman, which successively executed God's purposes of justice and mercy. As the red horses mentioned at first are afterwards omitted, it is supposed to be intimated, that the first of those monarchies was already subverted; and the bay horses, which are first joined with the grised, but afterwards mentioned separately, are supposed to denote the Goths, Vandals, &c. which subverted the Roman empire. But the reasons assigned for the different colours of the horses, from the different compositions, (so to speak) of these monarchies, do not give entire satisfaction. Certainly the Persian monarchy was more favourable to the Jews, than any of the others; and it does not seem to have been more fatal to other nations. And whatever favours Alexander the Great showed to the Jews, the sufferings of that nation, under some of his successors, especially Antiochus Epiphanes, exceeded all which they endured from the Babylonish captivity till the coming of Christ. The white horses, therefore, are not, in this respect, a proper emblem of the Grecian empire. Nor does it appear, for what end the Chaldean monarchy should be represented in a prophetical vision; seeing it was already destroyed. It seems then more obvious and satisfactory, to explain the passage to be descriptive of the providential government of God, as conducted by the manifestation of angels according to his eternal purposes: and this with special reference to the affairs of the Jews and surrounding nations at that time, (Notes, 7-11.) Angels are called the Lord's chariots: (Notes, Pr. lxviii. 17. Ez. i. x.) By them he goes forth to execute his providential will on earth. The chariot with red horses may represent the execution of his vengeance, by raising up bloody conquerors to waste guilty nations: that with black horses the dreadful judgments of famine and pestilence, which often follow the desolations of war: the white horses may signify the removal of those judgments, by returning peace, health, and plenty: and the grised and bay may denote dispensions mingled with wrath and mercy; or those lighter judgments that are more common in the world. (Notes, Rev. vii. 8.)' Accordingly, the Angel interpreted the vision to signify 'the four spirits of the heavens;' that is, celestial spirits, sent forth from God, to execute his purposes in the different parts of the earth. The red had already gone forth, and were executing their commission, in the wars by which the Persian kings wasted the Chaldeans and other nations in those parts: the black were about to follow them into the north-country; and then the white would go forth after them. But the grised were about to go towards the south, into Egypt, and other countries to the south of Judah: yet the bay, which were connected with them, sought to go to and fro through the earth, and obtained permission so to do. 'Those which were represented by the bay, (not being designed to any particular place,) went forth to pass to and fro throughout the earth, to take charge of the Church of God, scattered in all parts of the world.' (Bp. Hull.) Atlength the prophet's divine Instructure informed him, that they who had gone towards the north-country had quieted his spirit respecting those regions: the judgments inflicted on those who had harassed the Jews, having satisfied the justice of God, he was appeased, and willing that peace should be restored. 'Then cried, &c. 'These words were uttered by God, appearing out of the Shekinah.' (Lesth.) This is certainly a mere assertion: for the text contains no hint to that effect. The Angel, who talked with the prophet, evidently spake in this as well as former instances: and the passage unanswerably shows, that, according to the interpretation before given, this Angel was the Lord of Hosts, the mighty God, Emmanuel. Thus was concluded that succession of visions, which is continued from the first chapter to this place. V. 9. Came, &c. After the night, on which the eight foregoing visions were represented to the prophet.' (Bp. Newcomer.) V. 10, 11. These persons seem to have come from Babylon, to present an oblation from the Jews at Babylon towards the building or decoration of the temple: but it is not certain whether they intended to continue at Jerusalem, or to return to Babylon. The prophet, however, was ordered to meet them on that very day at the house of Josiah, whether perhaps they were gone to present their oblation; and of them he was to take the silver and gold, and to make crowns. With these he was ordered to crown Joshua the high priest: not with respect to his 12 And speak unto him, saying, Thus hearken, the Lord hath said, Behold the Man whose name is The Branch: and he shall grow up out of his place, and he shall build the temple of the Lord:

13 Even he shall build the temple of the Lord: and he shall bear the glory, and sit and rule upon his throne; and he shall be a Priest upon his throne, and shall execute the judgment of the Ancient of Days upon earth.

14 And I will establish him upon his throne: in the days of his kingdom shall the Burke of hosts reign over them, and the Burke of their kingdom shall be from heaven:

15 And it shall come to pass in the days of those kings, that the Burke of hosts shall smite upon the image of the gods: and they shall fight against them to a finish, and shall victorious them.

16 And the kingdoms of this world shall become kingdoms of our God and his Christ; and he shall reign for ever and ever. Amen.

Chapter VI.

Recompense of his humiliation and sacrifice as a Priest: he would still officiate as Priest, by his intercession within the veil; his royal dignity would add splendour and efficacy to his priestly ministrations: "and thus the counsel of peace would be between them both." Some indeed explain this of the eternal counsel of redemption between the Father and the Son, concerning the reconciliation and salvation of the elect; but doubtless it signifies, that the counsel of God would be fulfilled by his union of the kingdom and priesthood in Christ. The form had been confined to the family of David, the latter to that of Aaron; from them Zerubbabel and Joshua were risen, and they concurred in building the temple. One would at length arise, after the order of Melchizedek, who would be a Priest upon a throne, and unite the two distinct offices in one single person; of which the crowning of Joshua was a type. As a Priest, he would offer an atoning sacrifice, and expiate sin, and then make intercession for sinners: as a King, he would rule, enact laws, execute judgment, conquer and destroy his enemies; protect and exalt his people: and thus the counsel of peace would be accomplished by this union of the two offices in our Prince of peace. And as the prophets were always subservient to the pious kings and priests, in the execution of their offices; so the prophetic office makes him known in his kingly and priestly offices. This was understood of the Messiah in the days of our Saviour. Herod had a mind to be thought the Messias; his flatterers had put this thought into his head, who from thence were called "Herodians, as many of the ancient writers suppose.

This put him upon rebuilding the temple. (1

V. 14. 15. After these crowns had been put on the head of Joshua, they were to be placed in the temple, for a memorial of the transaction, and of the piety of those men who had presented the gold of which they were made. —Helem seems to have been the same person as Heldai, and Hen, the son of Zephaniah, as Josiah. Perhaps these names were inscribed on the crowns. And, as they came from a great distance to bring this oblation, so it was foretold, that they that were far off would come and build in the temple of the Lord; either as instruments in the hands of the great Builder, (Notes, 1 Cor. iii. 9—12) or as coming to be made a part of the spiritual building. Thus they would know the truth of the prophet's word. Some reference may be had to the assistance afforded by the Jews who lived in distant countries, and even by gentle princes in building the material temple; but this ty-
The Jews inquire concerning the observance of certain appointed fasts, 1—3. The prophet reproves them for not regarding God in their fasting, P. 4—7. He warns them not to copy the obstinacy and rebellion of their fathers, and exhorts them to practise justice and mercy, 8—14.

And it came to pass in the fourth year of king Darius, that the word of the Lord came unto Zechariah in the forth day of the ninth month, even in the Chisleu;

2 When they had sent unto the house of God, Sherezer and Regem-melech, and their men, to pray before the Lord,

And to speak unto the priests which were in the house of the Lord of hosts, and to the prophets, saying, 'Should I weep in the fifth month, separating myself, as I have done these so many years?'

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

All the diversified events that take place in the world, spring from the unchangeable counsels of God, which are formed in unerring wisdom, justice, truth, and goodness. His counsel shall stand, and he will do all his pleasure; and none can stay his hand, or say to him, what does thou? He might justly fill the earth with unmingled woe; but he moderates the severity of his vengeance, as far as consists with the honour of his justice, and when his judgments have quieted his spirit, as provoked by man's daring rebellions. His angels delight in executing his mandates of wrath, or of mercy. While they seek to go forth, they wait his orders, and exactly conform to his will: and as we hope shortly to be equal to them, we should now study and copy their examples. If insuperable hindrances prevent men from giving personal assistance to pious and good designs, it is well, when they are willing to contribute towards them from their substance; and when such services spring from faith and love, they will remain for a memorial to their benefit in the temple of the Lord above. Yet nothing can be accepted of sinners, but what is presented in dependence on Christ, our Priest and King. For we men and for our Salvation he came down from heaven and became incarnate, and grew as a Branch out of a dry ground, till he arose to his preeminent dignity and glory; showing us, that humiliation and self-abasement are the first steps towards true glory and honour. To him, the great Builder, as well as Foundation, of the temple, all the glory belongs, and shall be rendered for ever. We must both submit to him as our King, trust in him as our Priest, and give him all the glory of our salvation; if we would have the new covenant ratified with us, and its blessed peace communicated to our hearts and consciences. Let us not think of separating what God hath joined together in his counsel of peace; for we cannot obey Christ as our King, unless we come to God by him as our Priest: nor come to God by him as our Priest, if we refuse to have him reign over us as our King. We have heard the Gospel of peace, through the blood of his cross, in these distant regions: but are we come to him and built on him, as a part of his spiritual temple, or are we yet the palace of Satan? Are we endeavouring to promote the purity and prosperity of this temple? or do we defile it by our sins? Certainly we can have no comfortable ground to think our peace made with God, unless we diligently endeavour to obey his voice, and keep his commandments.

NOTES.

CHAP. VII. V. 1. This transaction occurred above two years after the visions recorded in the foregoing chapters: but the prophet doubtless continued to instruct and exhort the people during that time, though none of his predictions were recorded. Chisleu, the ninth month, answered to part of November and part of December.

V. 2, 3. The verb in the Hebrew is singular, "He had sent," but our interpreters render it plurally, by an enallage of the number, which is frequent in the Hebrew; and the vulgar Latin interprets it to the same sense. According to this syntax, the words might be as well translated thus, "When Sherezer, and Regem-melech, and their men, sent unto the house of God."—These probably were men of some note among the Jews that still continued at Babylon." (Lomf.) Either the Jews in Chaldea, or those in Judah, sent the persons here mentioned, with their attendants, to the temple, both to offer prayers in their behalf, and to propose a question to the priests and prophets, concerning some fasts which they had been used to observe. They kept an annual fast in the fourth month, in remembrance of the breaking down of the wall of Jerusalem; another in the fifth month, in remembrance of the burning of the temple; another in the seventh month, on the day on which Gedaliah was slain; and another in the tenth month, because at that time the siege of the city was begun. (Marg. Rif.) But the Jews now questioned, whether they ought to continue the observance of these fasts, seeing the city and temple were both in a fair way of being rebuilt. They had wept for their sins, and separated themselves from food and ordinary recreations and employments, that they might spend the day in devotions, and they had persevered in it for many years; but must they still thus deny themselves?
4 Then came the word of the Lord of hosts unto me, saying,
5 Speak unto all the people of the land, and to the priests, saying, When ye fasted and mourned in the fifth and seventh month, even those seventy years, did ye at all fast unto me, even to me?
6 And when ye did eat, and when ye did drink, did not ye eat for yourselves, and drink for yourselves?
7 Should ye not hear the words which the Lord hath cried by the former prophets, when Jerusalem was inhabited and in prosperity, and the cities thereof round about her, when men inhabited the south and the plain?
8 And the word of the Lord came unto Zechariah, saying,
9 Thus speaketh the Lord of hosts, Execute true judgment, and shew mercy and compassions every man to his brother:
10 And oppress not the widow, nor the fatherless, the stranger, nor the poor; and let none of you imagine evil against his brother in your heart.
11 But they refused to hearken, and pulled away the shoulder, and stopped their ears, that they should not hear.
12 Yea, they made their hearts as an adamantine stone, lest they should hear the law, and the words which the Lord of hosts had sent in his Spirit by the former prophets: therefore gave a great wrath from the Lord of hosts.
13 Therefore it is come to pass, that as he cried, and they would not hear; so they cried, and I would not hear, saith the Lord of hosts:
14 But scattered them with a whirlwind among all the nations whom they knew not. Thus the land was desolate after them, that no man passed through nor returned: for they laid the pleasant land desolate.

V. 4—7. Whoever originally proposed the question, it evidently concerned the whole nation: and therefore the Lord sent his prophet to the people and priests on the occasion. The facts which they had observed were not of divine appointment; though the observance of them would have been good, had they uprightly kept them. But they were not truly humbled or sorry for those sins that had provoked the wrath of God against them: and whilst they wept as sufferers, they did not submit to his justice in their sufferings, or seek his mercy for their deliverance. They were not truly penitent: they did not forsake their sins: the glory and favour of God were not their grand object; their fasting was the result of self-righteousness, or ostentation; or a matter of custom, a form, a compliance with human authority, out of regard to ease, interest, or reputation; and it had no salutary effects upon their temper and conduct: so that they pleased themselves as really, when they wept and fasted, as when they feasted in a sensual and ungodly manner. But whether they fasted or not, they ought certainly to have attended to the earnest calls of the Lord by the former prophets, to repentance and reformation. If their fathers had done this, their ancient prosperity would have been continued; and nothing but this could re-establish them in their former flourishing condition. Did you fast upon religious motives, and for your better improvement in the duties of repentance and amendment? When ye did eat, ye sought your own pleasure and convenience, not my glory.

12 An adamantine stone. Bochart shows that, the word means a hard stone used to polish gems. (Bp. Newcome.)

V. 12. The people cried for temporal deliverance, when the sentence, (as to the destruction of the city and the captivity,) had become irreversible; and therefore God would not hear them: but if any of them, even at that time, cried to him for spiritual salvation in humble faith, he certainly answered them. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 14. Scattered them as with a whirlwind. This sublime metaphor is expressed by a single word, in the CHAP. VIII.

Promises, that Jerusalem shall be replenished with inhabitants, and be prosperous, 1-8. The people encouraged to build the temple, by the assurance of manifold blessings, 9-15. Exhortations to truth, justice, and piety, that their mournful fasts might be turned into cheerful feasts, 16-19. A prediction of the conversion of many nations, by the example and endeavours of pious Jews, 20-23.

AGAIN the word of the Lord of hosts came to me, saying, execute true judgment, and private persons do justice and show mercy and compassions to their brethren; except they cease to oppress the widow, the fatherless, the strangers, and the poor of every name or nation; except men repress their resentments, and forbear to imagine evil against their brethren in their hearts; they evidently refuse to hearken to the warnings of God's word, and to hear the yoke of his commandments; they increase the natural hardness of their stony hearts, by resisting convictions, and indulging their prejudices, lest they should hear the law and the words of the Lord by his Spirit in his prophets; and they cannot expect that even their prayers will turn away the great wrath of the Lord from them. He indeed always readily hears the cry of the broken-hearted penitent; yet it will soon come to pass, in respect of all who die impenitent and unbelieving, that "as he cried, and they would not hear, so will they cry, and he will not hear or help them." And then there will be no remedy, or refuge, from those miseries, which here they despised and defied, but which they then will not be able to endure. (Marg. Ref.)

NOTES.

CHAP. VIII. V. 2. The Lord had been exceeding jealous for his people, and displeased with their enemies; (Is. 14;) and he had already in part avenged them on the Chaldeans and their other enemies, with great fury.—This is the general interpretation, but perhaps the verse, in this connexion, has another meaning. 'I have been jealous against Zion, with a vehement jealousy: and I have been angry against her with great fury.' Zion, the Church of the Jews, acted as an adulterous wife; and the calamities which she had endured were the effects of the Lord's jealousy and indignation: but he was now about to return to her in mercy. A grammatical rule of the Hebrew is indeed supposed to be contrary to this construction, but it certainly admits of exceptions. (Ps. cvl. 15.)

V. 3. A city, &c. That is, a city in which divine truth was known and believed; the true God worshipped in the appointed manner, and in sincerity; and where fidelity, as well as justice and equity, was practised among men. This primarily related to the state of Jerusalem, as reformed by Zerubbabel, Joshua, Ezra, Nehemiah, and others; yet it was typical of the Gospel-Church of true believers, which alone can fully answer to these characters.
5 And all the streets of the city shall be full of boys and girls, playing in the streets thereof.

6 Thus saith the Lord of hosts, If it be marvellous in the eyes of the remnant of this people in these days, should it also be marvellous in mine eyes? saith the Lord of hosts.

7 Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Behold I will save my people from the east country, and from the west country:

8 And I will bring them, and they shall dwell in the midst of Jerusalem; and they shall be my people, and I will be their God, in truth and in righteousness.

9 ¶ Thus saith the Lord of hosts, Let your hands be strong, ye that hear these words from the mouth of a prophet, which were in the day that the foundation of the house of the Lord of hosts was laid, that the temple might be built.

10 For before these days there was no hire for man, nor any hire for beast; neither was there any peace to him that went out or came in, because of the affliction: so I set all men every one against his neighbour.

11 But now I will not be unto the residue of this people as in the former days, saith the Lord of hosts.

12 For the seed shall be prosperous; the vine shall give her fruit, and the ground shall give her increase, and the heavens shall give their dew: and I will cause the remnant of this people to possess all these things.

13 And it shall come to pass, that as ye were a curse among the heathen, O house of Judah, and house of Israel, so will I save you, and ye shall be a blessing: fear not, but let your hands be strong.

14 For thus saith the Lord of hosts, As I thought to punish you, when your fathers provoked me to wrath, saith the Lord of hosts, and I repented not:

15 So again have I thought in these days to do well unto Jerusalem and to the house of Judah: fear ye not.

V. 4, 5. These verses are beautifully descriptive of a state of great outward tranquillity, attended with plenty, temperance, and contentment. The inhabitants of the city are supposed to live at ease in old age, and to walk cheerfully and without fear in the streets; whilst their numerous descendants, being healthful and lively, free from want, fear or sorrow, amicably engage in their childish diversions on every side of them; a sight extremely pleasing to those aged spectators. The walls of Jerusalem were not dedicated, till above sixty years after this prophecy. (By Newcome.)

V. 6. (Magg. Ref.)

V. 7, 8. This denotes the general restoration of the Jewish nation, from their several dispersions. The west country hath a particular reference to their present dispersion, great numbers of them having settled in the western parts of the world. They shall constantly serve and worship me, and I will bless and protect them. (Loml.) The passage, in its full import, must be interpreted either of the Christian Church, or the future restoration of the Jews. (Magg. Ref.)

V. 9—15. The Jews, who had heard and obeyed the words of Haggai and Zechariah, when they called them to build the temple, were encouraged to proceed in that work with vigour and alacrity. While this had been neglected, there had been no profitable employment for those who wished to subsist by the labour of their hands, or by that of their cattle; nor could they travel from place to place in safety, because of the calamities of the times; for the Lord had been provoked to leave them exposed to their enemies, and even to quarrel with each other. But he now intended remarkably to prosper them, beyond the example of all former days. Their lands should bring forth abundance, and they should possess it in peace; and the heathen, who had deemed them a contemptible, wretched, and accursed people, and treated them accordingly, beholding their wonderful deliverances and prosperity, should consider them as an honourable and happy nation. For as nothing could prevent the execution of his purposed wrath upon their fathers: so nothing should interrupt the course of his promised mercy towards them.—The consideration that all the nations, which now worship the true God and receive the Scriptures as his word, have derived all their knowledge in divine things, and all their privileges, under God, from Jewish prophets, apostles, and teachers; and that the Saviour, in whom all nations shall be blessed, sprang from thatfavoured race, emphatically explains what is meant, when the Lord says, “Ye shall be a blessing.” (Magg. Ref.) The restoration of both Judah and Israel, which had been so long separated, shows that both the curse and the blessing here spoken of, in the ultimate sense, belong to the whole body of the Jews; who, as they are a public instance of God’s judgments now, so shall they hereafter be of his blessings; viz. at the general restoration and conversion of the nation. (Loml.) It may be added, that this event will be “as life from the dead” to all the nations, and the Jews shall then indeed be a blessing.
ZECHARIAH.

16 ¶ These are the things that ye shall do: Speak ye every man the truth to his neighbour; execute the judgment of truth and peace in your gates: and love one another, that ye may live: and so shall ye love the house of the Lord your God. 17 And I will set up mine house in your midst, and upright men shall sit before me, and hear my words. 18 ¶ And the word of the Lord of hosts came unto me, saying, 19 Thus saith the Lord of hosts, the fast of the fourth month, and the fast of the fifth, and the fast of the seventh, and the fast of the tenth, shall be to the house of Judah joy and gladness, and cheerful feasts; therefore love the truth and peace.

20 ¶ Thus saith the Lord of hosts; 21 Ye shall yet come past, that there shall come people, and the inhabitants of many cities:

21 And the inhabitants of one city shall go to another, saying, Let us go speedily to pray before the Lord, and to seek the Lord of hosts: I will go also. 22 Yea, many people and strong nations shall come to seek the Lord of hosts in Jerusalem, and to pray before the Lord. 23 Thus saith the Lord of hosts; in those days it shall come to pass, that ten men shall take hold, of all languages of the nations, even shall take hold of the skirt of him that is a Jew, saying, We will go with you: for we have heard that God is with you.

V. 16, 17. (Marg. Ref.) Let those who believe these promises, show their faith by their works, and wait the fulfilment of them, in an obedient tenour of conduct, as magistrates and as private persons. The false oath might be loved, not only because of the gain acquired by it, but also from contempt of God, and enmity against him. V. 19. Love the, &c. Or, "Ye shall love the truth and peace." As in many other similar passages, the implied exhortation is proposed in the form of a promise. (Note, Ez. xxixvi. 25-27.) Whilst the Jews had neglected the truths of God's words and his true worship, and whilst they deceived, defrauded, and quarreled with each other, God had given them occasion for mournful facts; but he had now promised to change these into cheerful feasts, and he therefore exhorted them to love truth and peace, as the proper method of perpetuating their comforts and mercies. V. 20-23. These verses refer to the great accession of converts, which the Jewish Church received, between the captivity and the coming of Christ; to the number of Christian disciples which the Jewish preachers made; and to the future conversions, of which the restoration of the Jews will be an eminent cause. (Bp. Newcome.) Notwithstanding all the miseries that the Jews had long endured, and the reproach and weakness which still attended them; it would at length come to pass, that numbers of persons from many cities would come to court their friendship. For the inhabitants of one city should go to those of another, purposely to persuade them to go with them without delay, to pray before Jehovah, the God of Israel, and to seek his favour, offering to accompany them in so doing. In this manner many people, yea, powerful nations, would come to Jerusalem to seek the true worship of Jehovah, and to lay hold on the skirt of a Jew; a gesture naturally used to entreat assistance and protection. (Bp. Newcome.) For they had been told that God was in an especial manner, present with that people. This is indeed a clear prediction of the most extraordinary and unlikely event, which, at the time when Zechariah delivered it, could be imagined: namely, that many nations, powerful nations, renowned for arts and arms, for civilization and philosophy; nations, which had successively subjugated and oppressed Israel; nations, that had despised and ridiculed, with unbounded scorn, the worshippers of Jehovah; would at length learn religion from that very people! The Jews, when prosperous in their own land, were exceedingly prone to embrace the idolatries of the surrounding nations: what then could be more improbable, or more contrary to general observation, than that, after they had been crushed and enslaved, by successive conquerors, they should at length become teachers of true religion to their oppressors, and to the nations of the earth? Yet this is expressly foretold, with emphatical repetition and variation of circumstances! The term Jehovah, or Jehovah, became the more general national appellation, from the Babylonish captivity: and we have had repeated occasions to remark, that the prophets foretold the conversion of the Gentiles, in language taken from the stated religious worship of their own times. (Notes, Is. lxvi. 19-23. Ez. xl. 2.) It is, therefore, here evidently foretold, that at least ten times as many Gentiles would be converted to the true religion, as there were Jews, properly so called, among them at the time when the prophecy should begin to be fulfilled. The astonishing interposition of God in behalf of his people, at Babylon and Susa, &c. (Esther, iii—ix. Dan. ii—vi.) and the translation of the Scriptures into Greek, and the wide dispersion of them in that language, no doubt had considerable effects; but effects far beneath the language here used. For this certainly can mean nothing less, than that many powerful nations, of all languages, would renounce idolatry, become the worshippers of the God of the Jews, and learn the way of salvation from them, with the grand peculiarities of their religion: and that they would look up to the Jews, as a people peculiarly blessed by the presence and favour of God, and press with great earnestness to share their privi-

The unchangeable love and faithful engagements of God to his people form their only and their sufficient security, that no enemy shall prevail against them, or injure them with impunity: and his gracious presence with his Church alone renders her worthy to be called “the city of truth” and the mountain of holiness.” Godliness and honesty conduct exceedingly to peace and prosperity in cities and nations. It is beautiful to behold the old and young living amicably and comfortably together; and we ought to be thankful to behold our children healthful and cheerful, and engaged in those diversions which suit their tender age, without any cause of terror or complaint: but it is most desirable to see “young men and maids, old men and children,” with one accord joining in the worship and service of God, as citizens of the heavenly Jerusalem. If, in the present low state of vital godliness, we can scarcely conceive how such a change can be effected as to render it general all over the earth, let us not conclude that it cannot be: for it is no marvellous thing in the eyes of the Lord, that such a revolution should be effected; and the mighty power of his new creating Spirit could produce it in less time, than he was pleased to employ in creating the world. When he pleases thus to work, he will save multitudes in all parts of the world, and they will become citizens of his holy city, and his obedient people; and he will be their God in truth and righteousness: for while he performs his promises, and makes them partakers of his salvation, they will learn to serve him in righteousness and true holiness. Let then the hands of all those be strong, who are labouring to promote the cause of the Gospel; for while they attend to the words of his prophets and apostles, they may be sure that their labour will not be in vain. But let us not forget, that we best consult our own interest, by giving the service of God a decided priority in our choice and endeavours. When he is provoked by men’s procrastination or negligence, he can cause trade to decay, and peace to remove, and set every man against his neighbour: but when he returns in mercy, peace and plenty result from his smile, and they become most prosperous, honoured, and happy, who were most abject and miserable.

V. 16—23.

While we rely on the Lord’s promises, we ought also to consider what are the things that we ought to do. Surely Christians should remember the exhortation to “put away lying, and to speak every man truth with his neighbour;” to execute the judgments of truth and peace, to abhor all malice, fraud, and perjury; to hate what the Lord hates, and to love what he delighteth in. When they thus serve him, and he turns their mourning for sin into joy and gladness, and divine ordinances become their cheerful feasts, and they evidently love truth and peace; then they appear amiable, excellent, wise, and happy; their light shines before men; they adorn and recommend the doctrine of God our Saviour, and convince all around them that the Lord is with them of a truth: and thus supported and elevated, a cottage, a dungeon, a death-bed, a fiery furnace, or a lion’s den, may be the scene of great peace and enjoyment. In this way the ancient servants of God attracted the attention and admiration of their heathen neighbours: thus they softened their prejudices, and insinuated themselves into their affections, whilst they saw what manner of men they were among them for their sakes; and so Christianity was diffused through many powerful and prosperous nations. The same cause would again produce the same effect: and when Christians shall generally cease from their sharp contentions, renounce unscriptural tenets and practices, and show their love of truth and peace in the whole tenour of their conduct, we may expect a more extensive spread of true religion, than any that yet hath taken place. In the meantime, let us stir up ourselves and each other, to go and pray before the Lord, and seek his face: let us strive to make known his truth in dark places, and to give weight to exhortation by example.
privileges, and their joy in the goodness and beauty of the Lord, 13-17.

THE burden of the word of the Lord in the land of Hadrach, and Damascus shall be the rest thereof: when the eyes of man, as of all the tribes of Israel, shall be toward the Lord.

2 And Hamath also shall border there by; Tyre, and Sidon, though it be very wise.

3 And Tyre did build herself a strong hold, and heaped up silver as a mire of the streets.

4 Behold, the Lord will cast her out, and he will smite her power in the sea; and she shall be devoured with fire.

5 Ashkelon shall see it, and fear; Gaza also shall see it, and be very sorrowful, and Ekron; for her expectation shall be ashamed; and the king shall not perish from Gaza, and Ashkelon shall not be inhabited.

NOTES.

CHAP. IX. V. 1. This chapter begins another prophecy, which reaches to the end of the eleventh; and it opens with predictions of judgments upon several nations bordering upon the Jews. This burden of the Lord first related to Hadrach: Syria is doubtless intended; but it is not certain whether Hadrach was the name of some idol, or of some place in Syria; or for what reason it was thus called. This burden, however, would fall, and rest, or abide on Damascus, the capital of Syria: and the prophecy was fulfilled by Alexander, who seized on immense riches in that city, and his successors, who governed it as conquerors: and it is not foretell of Damascus, as of Tyre, that the city should be destroyed. These events would take place, when the eyes of men, as of all the tribes of Israel, should be toward the Lord, which may denote, that these troubles would continue till the coming of Christ, and the eyes of men, even of all the tribes of Israel, would be towards the Lord; by whom they would be protected, and their neighbours were reduced. When the Jews saw the conqueror approach, they looked to God, and implored his protection; and Jachin, the high priest, met Alexander in his pontifical robes, who received him very graciously. Some learned men have endeavoured to show, that this and the two following chapters were not written by Zechariah, but before his time. Their arguments, however, do not bring conviction, to my mind at least. They urge, that it was not at all likely for Zechariah to predict the destruction of the temple, when encouraging the Jews to build it: (xi. 1.) but did not God, by Moses, predict the dispersion of Israel, while encouraging them to go up and possess the promised land? (Deut. xxviii.-xxxii.) Did not the Lord foretell to Solomon the destruction of the temple, through the sins of the people, even when it had just before been dedicated? And did not Daniel, a considerable time before Zechariah began to prophesy, foretell the destruction of Jerusalem and the temple, and the judgments of God on his people within seventy weeks; on the very day when his prayer was heard for the rebuilding of the temple, and the restoration of Jerusalem? (Notes, Dan. ix.) It is certain, that Tyre was very affluent and powerful, when Alexander the Great took and destroyed it: and why should not that judgment, and not the desolations by Nebuchadnezzar, be predicted? The arguments, indeed, adduced in favour of this opinion, would not have been much noticed, had they not been sanctioned by eminent names: but, one thing above all others, satisfies my mind, that the opinion is unfounded; namely that they who do not allow, that Zechariah delivered these predictions, are not agreed to whom they should be ascribed, or what date to assign them. Some argue that Jeremiah was the writer of them; but others carry back many parts of them to a far earlier period. In fact, the whole book has been ascribed to Zechariah by the Jews, in every age: and it is rather remarkable, that some, who frequently suppose errors of transcribers, and propose conjectural amendments, should be influenced by what probably was an error of a transcriber, (Note, xi. 12-14. Matt. xxvii. 9.) to assign part of this book to Jeremiah, or to some preceding prophet, contrary to the constant tradition both of the Jewish and Christian Church.

V. 2-4. Hamath bordered on Syria on one hand, and Tyre and Zidon on the other, and they would share her burden. The Tyrians deemed themselves exceedingly wise; they had strongly fortified the city upon the island, since Nebuchadnezzar had destroyed that upon the continent; and they were become extremely rich by their industry and commerce. But the Lord meant to reject and impoverish them, and to destroy the strong holds that were built in the sea, as well as their naval force, and to burn the city with fire. This was fulfilled by Alexander. (Notes, Is. xxiii. Ez. xxvi. xxvii. xxviii.) New Tyre was built on an island, at the distance of half a mile from the shore: so its situation was very strong, and it was fortified with a wall round it one hundred and fifty feet high. By her merchandise she had gathered immense riches. The Carthaginians were not able to assist her with their naval forces. "Lownth." Her power in the sea may signify the strength of her inland situation: and this distinguishes the Tyre taken by Alexander from that destroyed by Nebuchadnezzar. (Note, Ez. xxvi. 14.) The carriage made by Alexander, when he took Tyre, the multitudes sold for slaves, and likewise the entire desolations of the city, fix the fulfilment of the prophecy to the latter event: and the fall of Tyre must prove ruinous to Zidon.
CHAPTER IX.

6 And a bastard shall dwell in Ashdod, and I will cut off the pride of the Philistines.

7 And I will take away his blood out of his mouth, and his abominations from between his teeth: but he that remaineth, even he shall be for our God, and he shall be as a governor in Judah, and Ekron as a Jebusite.

8 And I will encamp about mine house, because of the army, because of him that passeth by, and because of him that returneth: and no oppressor shall pass through them any more: for in my presence the mourning shall be no more forever.

V. 5, 6. The Philistines, having witnessed the desolations of Tyre, would be greatly alarmed and distressed, even in their capital cities. Perhaps they had hoped, that Tyre would stop the progress of Alexander's victories, and that they should have escaped: but they would be made ashamed of these expectations, and find themselves exposed without defence to the power of the conqueror. Then the king would be destroyed at Gaza; Ashkelon would be reduced to desolation; either some base person would be made ruler over Ashdod, or the city would be given to be inhabited by a colony of strangers; and thus the pride of the Philistines would be cut off. Gaza was taken by Alexander after a two months' siege; ten thousand of the inhabitants slain; and the governor, Batis, dragged round the city till he was dead. King is a general word for any governor. Strabo, speaking of Gaza, says, It was formerly a city of note, but was destroyed by Alexander the Great, and remains desert and uninhabited.

(Acts viii. 16.) (Looth.) When Gaza was thus taken and destroyed, the other cities of the Philistines fell into the hands of the conqueror, and probably experienced little favour at his hands; and especially some stranger, not a native of the country, had authority in Ashdod. The family of Israel shall dwell in Ashdod, who before were in it as strangers. (Chalder paraph.) The Macedonians conquered Ashdod; and the Philistines are not mentioned in the New Testament, but their country seems to have been possessed by the Jews.

V. 7. The Philistines and other enemies of the Jews would be deprived of their power to waste them any more; and the spoil, which they had taken by the most bloody and abominable murders, or rapines, would be torn from them, as the prey from between the teeth of a wild beast. Yet there would be a remnant, who would embrace the true religion, and become the people of God, devoted to his service; and they would be honoured even as the governors of Judah, and the inhabitants of Ekron would be privileged as a Jebusite, or a citizen of Jerusalem; as some Jebusites, whom David perhaps proselyted and incorporated among his people, when he took Jerusalem. Araunah, on whose threshing-floor David was ordered to sacrifice, and on which the temple was afterwards built, was a Jebusite; but his conduct showed the spirit of a genuine Israelite. Many Philistines might be proselyted to the Jewish religion, at or after the times of the Maccabees; but their conversion to Christianity was principally intended. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 8. While the Macedonian conquerors were extending their ravages; and afterwards while the successors of Alexander, that reigned in Syria and in Egypt, were continually marching their armies through Judaea, in their wars with each other, the Lord promised to encamp round his temple, to protect it from being plundered and destroyed; for he had seen the oppression of the Chaldeans and others, and he would watch over it, to protect it from similar depredations. Antiochus Epiphanes was permitted to profane the temple and to persecute the Jews; but this was only for a short time, and not like the desolations of the Chaldeans; and it ended in the honour of the Jews, and the disgrace and ruin of their persecutors: so that no such oppressor as Nebuchadnezzar passed through them any more; that is, till after Christ was come and rejected, when they ceased to be the people of God. But the passage no doubt refers to events yet future, which will more signally accomplish it. How can this suit the times before the captivity?

V. 9. Seen, &c. My eye hath pervaded future events, and hath thus determined. (Ep. Newcome.) For I have well noted and pitted thy late affliction. (By. Hall.)

V. 9, 10. From the promise, contained in the foregoing verse, of God's protecting his Church and temple, the prophet, in a sudden transport, takes occasion to break forth into a joyful representation of the coming of the Messias. He is righteous, and the Saviour. It is plain from the Gospels, that the Jews, in Christ's time, understood this prophecy of the Messias. For when our Lord applied it to himself, by entering into Jerusalem upon an ass, it so affected the multitudes, that they spread their garments and palm-branches in the way: nay, his disciples took occasion from this sight to rejoice, and praise God with a loud voice. (Loth.) (Marg. Ref.)

All the preceding deliverners of the Jews were types of the blessings to be conferred on the Church under the reign of the Messiah, or introductory to them. The daughter 5 T 2 of Zion was therefore called on to rejoice greatly and shout for joy, because her long expected King was about to come unto her. (MARG. REF.) When he appeared, he would be perfectly just and holy in his character and public administration; yea, he would honour the divine law and justice in the salvation of his people. Though the most honourable and mighty of all the kings and conquerors, that ever appeared on earth, he would display none of that magnificence and grandeur, by which they generally are distinguished. On the contrary, humility and lowliness would mark his deportment; poverty and outward meanness his circumstances; and contempt and insult would be his lot on earth. On the single occasion, in which he would at all assume the character of a king on the memorable occasion, when he would enter Jerusalem amidst the Hosannas of the multitude, (who would soon after as loudly demand his crucifixion,) he would for once ride; not on a steed gaily caparisoned, or in a triumphal car; but on an unbroken untractable creature, as his colt, a proper emblem of the ungodly nature of those over whom he came to reign; but whose powerful grace renders submissive and obedient, even as his miraculous energy made this animal gentle, docile, and gildable, amidst the clamorous joy of the surrounding multitude. Even this ass's colt was not his own, as Man, but borrowed; nor was it fully prepared to be ridden on, but merely with the clothes of the disciples cast loosely upon it. In every respect the divine majesty and dignity of this King were contrasted with the unexampled manner, in which he was received into the holy city, which was typically the capital of his mighty kingdom. Then the Lord intended to deprive both Jews and Israelites of all carnal confidences; to terminate the contentions among such as were submitted; and to destroy all the form and power of those who rebelled against him. And at the same time he would send his Gospel of peace among the heathen, reconciling them to God and to each other, and inducing them to submit to Messiah's dominion, until it should at length extend, not only over the whole land, but to the utmost borders of the earth. (MARG. REF.) As horses are used in war, Christ may be supposed by this action to have shown the humble and peaceful nature of his kingdom. Ephraim and Judah shall not engage in war to spread the Messiah's kingdom, but their spiritual King shall peaceably con- vert the Gentiles, and shall extend his dominion every where. (Bp. Newcome.) The beginning of the tenth verse may be rendered, "For I will cut off, &c." Both Israel and Judah had been exceedingly prone to rely on chariots and horses; but the ruin of these confidences by the calamities of successive ages would introduce the reign of that meek and righteous King and Saviour, who would enter Jerusalem riding on an ass's colt. By these places, "from sea to sea, &c." the Jews knew that he meant an infinite space and compass over the whole world. (MARG. REF.)

V. 11. The prophet, speaking in the name of God, directs his discourse to the Church of the faithful; for the pronoun and affixes are feminine. (Lev. X.) As for thee, O Zion, whose covenant with me is made and confirmed by the precious blood of the Messiah, I do herein give thee a type of thy future deliverance from all thy spiritual miseries, in that I have brought forth thy captives out of the miserable captivity at Babylon. (Bp. HALL.) The restoration from the Babylonish captivity, and the great future restoration, may both be foretold. (Bp. Newcome.) The bondage of Egypt, from which the Israelites were delivered by the sprinkling of the blood of the paschal Lamb; and that from which they had just been restored, were like pits or dungeons in which there was no water, where they were sinking in the mire, or perishing for want by a lingering death; and both these deliverances were granted in virtue of the engagement of Christ to shed his blood for his people. But these only shadowed forth the deliverance of sinners from the bondage of sin and Satan, and from the sentence of condemnation under which they lay; and numbers have been from age to age sent forth from their gloomy bondage in the pit where there is no water, by the blood of the Redeemer's covenant; and saved from that horrible pit, where not a drop of water can be had to cool the burning tongue of those who are tormented in the flame. (MARG. REF.)

V. 12. This may be considered as an address to the Jews that still remained in Chaldea: they were prisoners; yet the favour shown them by the Persian kings, and especially these promises and predictions, rendered them prisoners of hope. Let them then without delay return to Zion, as the strong-hold prepared for them; assured that God would render their prosperity double to what their adversity had been, or double to all the advantages which they could relinquish for this purpose; for he had that day solemnly declared it. Yet it is also an address to the prisoners of sin and Satan, who, having such a Saviour preached to them, may hope for liberty and felicity: let them then turn to Christ, and in him the power, truth, and love of God will be their strong-hold: and let them expect joys and comforts double both to all their sorrows, and to all their sinful pleasures. (MARG. REF.)

Prisoners of hope. A beautiful address, as God when he doomed his people to banishment by no means totally rejected them.” (Bp. Newcome.)
V. 13—16. When Judah had been prepared by a revival of true religion to be as a bent bow in the Lord's hand; when Ephraim or the remnant of the ten tribes should be made as arrows, to fill the bow, and to be employed against his enemies; when Judas Maccabæus, and his followers the sons of Zimm, should be raised up against Antiochus Epiphanes and his armies, who were of Grecian extraction, and should become terrible as a sword of a mighty man to their oppressors and enemies; then the Lord would be seen over them, as the eagle hovers over and protects her young; and his arrows would be piercing and destructive as the lightning: then he would blow the trumpet of alarm, to call the Jews to the standard, and they would bear down all before them, as the whirlwinds do in the southern deserts. While the Lord should thus defend them, they would consume their enemies, and destroy them with sling-stones, as David did Goliath: they would celebrate their victories with every expression of joy, and their exhalation and acclamations of gratitude would be so great, that they would resemble those that make a noise through wine; and be filled with all good things, or with holy consolations, as the bows used for the drink-offerings (or the corners of the altar into which a part of it was poured,) were with the wine. Thus the Lord would take care of them as his flock, and count them precious as the jewels of his crown, and set them up as an ensign for the Jews to flock to, who had been dispersed by the persecutions of Antiochus. Others, however, interpret the passage of the apostles and the preachers of the Gospel, in the primitive ages. They were prepared for their work, as the Lord's bow and arrows; they were raised up to oppose the idolatry, iniquity, and proud science of Greece and Rome; and they were as swords in the hand of a mighty man. Wherever they went, the Lord evidently attended them: his word from their lips, (like an arrow from the bow,) penetrated the hearts and consciences of the hearers. The blowing of the Gospel trumpet called together increasing numbers, who, with accumulated weight, beat down before them the empire of idolatry and wickedness. They were marvellously defended, in the midst of persecuting foes by the power of God: they gained surprising victories by faith and prayer; they drank abundantly of divine consolations, and were filled with the "Spirit" as consecrated vessels. (Eph. v. 18.) They were saved by the good Shepherd as his flock, and honoured and valued as his jewels and crown; and multitudes continually resorted to them as his ensign, to enlist as soldiers in the army of Jesus Christ. The former interpretation may very well be admitted as typical of the latter; and thus both may stand. 'Alexander the Great is called the king of Javan, or Greece, (Dan. viii. 21.) I will animate the Jews against the troops of Antiochus.' (Grotius.) It is true that Judas Maccabæus gained some advantages over the Syrians; but the language of this prophecy seems too strong for those events; and may remain to be fulfilled against the present possessors of the countries called Javan, which were Greece, Macedonia, and part of Asia minor. (Bp. Newcome.) This may be the case, but the context favours the preceding interpretation.

V. 17. The goodness of God would appear admirable in the protection and successes of the Jews above mentioned; but still more in the redemption of sinners by Jesus Christ, and the success of the Gospel among the benighted Gentiles. The free mercy and plentiful grace, the tender compassion and love of Christ to rebels and enemies, in the whole of his salvation, pass all knowledge; and every deep contemplation upon them must issue in admiration. At the same time his beauty, or the excellency and glory of all the divine perfections, as harmoniously displayed in the person and work of Christ,) is equally admirable with his goodness; for, justice, holiness, truth and wisdom, are as conspicuous as mercy, in this grand concern. This therefore may be supposed to be the principal object which the prophet had in contemplation, when he thus anticipated the admiring praises of the Church in the predicted times. Yet those temporal successes may here also be considered as shadows of this spiritual redemption; and therefore the plenteous gifts, graces, and consolations of the Spirit afforded to believers of every description at and after the day of pentecost, were represented under the allusion of young persons made exceedingly cheerful by an abundance of temporal provisions: as when pinching penury is succeeded by plenty of every thing conducive to enjoyment; or as when victories are celebrated by feasts and rejoicings. (Marg. Ref.) (Notes, Cant. ii. 4, 5. v. i. Joel, ii. 28—32. Acts ii. 17, 18.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—5.

Dreadful will be the case of those on whom the burden of the word of the Lord shall rest, at that solemn season, when the eyes of all the race of men shall be fixed on him, as come to judge the world in righteousness. May our eyes now be fixed on him, in faith, hope, and love, as becomes the true Israel of God! All other wisdom will soon prove folly; all other strong-holds, except the name of the Lord, will be cast down; and all the wealth that men have gloried and confided in, will become contemptible.
An exhortation to seek and expect rain and other blessings from God, as the distresses of the people had arisen from idols, false teachers, and corrupt rulers, 1–3 Promises of extraordinary assistance, deliverance, success, and consolation to the Jews and to the Church, 4–12.

A sk ye of the Lord a rain in the time of the latter rain: so the Lord shall make a bright cloud, and give them showers of rain, to every one grass in the field.

2 For the idols have spoken vanity, and the diviners have seen a lie: and they have told false dreams; they comfort in vain; therefore they went their way as a flock, they were troubled, because there was no shepherd.

3 Mine angry was kindled against the shepherds, and I punished the goats: for the Lord of hosts hath visited his flock, the house of Judah, and hath made them as his goodly horse in the battle.

6 Zion's sons, whom the Lord hath raised up, qualified, and employed in the spiritual warfare against his proud despisers, in former ages; and whenever he thus makes any of them a polished shaft in his bow, when heelects them with crowning grace, and zeal; when he helps them to cast off the works of darkness, and to put on the armour of light, he will assuredly go with them to the combat, and give them a measure of the same success. Let us then sound the trumpet of the Gospel, and take the sling and stone of faith and prayer, the sword of the Spirit, the helmet of salvation, and the whole armour of God: and we shall be able to face any Goliath, who shall defy the armies of our Immortal. And whilst we drink abundantly of his divine consolations, and are filled with the Spirit, we shall be joyful under every hardship, and bold in all dangers. For the good Shepherd will save his purchased flock from every wolf and lion that assaults them. He will preserve every redeemed sinner as a bright jewel in his glorious crown, and set him as an ensign, by which to bring others to enlist themselves in his armies. And the more we are employed, honoured, comforted, and satisfied with the plenteousness of his house, the more we shall admire, love, and praise his goodness and his beauty, which all heaven adores and celebrates, as revealed in the face of our Redeemer. May we behold his glory as in a glass, till we are gradually changed into the same image, by the Spirit of our God.
CHAPTER X.

4 Out of him came forth the corner, out of him the nail, out of him the battle-bow, out of him every oppressor together.

5 And they shall be as mighty men, which tread down their enemies in the mire of the streets in the battle: and they shall fight, because the Lord is with them, and the riders on horses shall be confounded.

6 And I will strengthen the house of Judah, and I will save the house of Joseph, and I will bring them again to place them; for I have mercy upon them: and they shall be as though I had not cast them off: for I am the Lord their God, and I will hear them.

7 And they of Ephraim shall be like a mighty man, and their heart shall rejoice as through wine: yea, their children shall see it, and be glad.

8 I will my hiss for them, and gather them; for I have redeemed them: and they shall increase as they have increased.

9 And I will sow them among the nations, and they shall remember me in the far countries; and they shall live with their children, and turn again.

10 I will bring them again also out of the land of Egypt, and gather them out of Assyria; and I will bring them into the land of Gilead and Lebanon; and place shall not be found for them.

11 And he shall pass through the sea with affliction, and shall smite the waves in the sea, and all the deeps of the river shall dry up: and the pride of Assyria shall be brought down, and the sceptre of Egypt shall depart away.

12 And I will strengthen them in the Lord; and they shall walk up and down in his name, saith the Lord.

13 For the idols, by putting them in mind of the calamities, which idolatry brought on their forefathers. The idols are here said to speak vanity, that is, by the answers the priests gave in their name; for elsewhere they are called dumb idols. (Lam. iv. 20.) The idols of the Jews before the captivity, and their oracles, diviners, and false teachers, had deceived their expectations, imposed upon them false doctrines and lying predictions, and given them vain and delusive comfort, by their assurances of continued prosperity. Therefore the people were driven away, like a flock of sheep by robbers, and their troubles arose for want of faithful rulers and teachers. For they who bore those characters provoked the Lord to anger by their crimes, and by leading the people into wickedness through their influence and example: and therefore he punished the goats, or the great men, who went before the people, as the lie-goat before the flock. But having cut off the shepherds and the goats, the Lord had in mercy visited the remnant of the flock, and was about to renew their courage and strength for conflict and victory, even as the goodly horse is prepared for the battle. This may be applied to the success of the Jews from the captivity, under the Maccabees; or to that of Jewish preachers in spreading the Gospel. (Magg. Ref.) He will be merciful to his Church, and cherish them, as a King or prince doth his best horse, which shall be for his own use in the day of battle.

V. 4. Every one that should be raised up to support the nation, as the corner-stone doth the building; or to unite discordant parties, as the nail the different timbers, must come out from the Lord, and he was to be trusted or thanked for them. Or if any should be employed to crush their enemies, their valour, helpers, and success, must come from him. This may be applied to Christ the Corner-stone and the uniting Nails of his Church, and her Protector and Ruler, who crushes all her enemies by his own power, and by the weapons which he employs. The rulers and teachers of the Church, and the preachers employed in converting the nations to Christianity, may likewise be intended.

V. 5-12. These verses are in some things similar to those considered in the former chapter: yet there are expressions, that can scarcely be applied to either of the events there mentioned. Under Judas Maccabaeus the Jews became very formidable, and trode down the forces of Antiochus as the mire in the streets; and because the Lord was with them, his cavalry could not stand against them. Thus the house of Judah was strengthened and delivered, and re-established in their civil and religious privileges, and many of the dispersed Israelites were joined to them. This might also be applied to the success of the apostles and evangelists in their spiritual warfare: but what follows induces me to conclude, that the recovery of the Jews and the whole remnant of the house of Israel from their present dispersion, and future events for which that nation is reserved, were predicted; and that it can only be accommodated to any of the past affairs of the Temple or the Church. A time is coming, when the Lord will have mercy on them and hear their prayers; he will again place them in their own land, and be as though he had not cast
CHAP. XI.

The destruction of Jerusalem, the temple, and the Jewish rulers, 1—3. Under the type of Zechariah is shewn, Christ's care of his flock, and the people's hatred of him, 4—7. The rejection of the nation for ingratitude and contempt of Christ is denounced, by his breaking the two staves, called Beauty and Bands, 8—14. The type and curse of a foolish shepherd, 15—17.

them off. Then power and gladness will be given to their tribes; and they and their children shall rejoice in God. He will call them together by his word, as the shepherd doth his dispersed flock by his well known whistle: he will gather them as his redeemed people, and increase them as he had done in former ages. He indeed intended to scatter them as seed through the nations of the earth; adverting to their present dispersed state, in which they are nevertheless marvellously preserved a distinct people. In this dispersion they would at length remember him, and turn again and live before him with their children: then he would bring them from the lands in which they had been in bondage and captivity, as he had of old brought them out of Egypt and Assyria, or Chaldea; and he would replace them in their own land, which would be so replenished, that room would not be found for them. At this approaching time they will experience the same marvellous protection and assistance against the enemies who oppose their return or settlement, as their fathers had done when they passed through the Red Sea from their affliction in Egypt, and through Jordan into the promised land; and all the power and pride of their antichristian assailants will be destroyed, like those of Pharaoh and Sennacherib. Thus being strengthened by the Lord, they will walk up and down in his name, trusting and rejoicing in him, and celebrating the praises of his glorious perfections and wonderful works. It can scarcely be doubted but some more signal fulfillment of this prophecy is yet to be expected; but the event alone can exactly determine, in what way the predicted deliverance will be effected. 'By Assyria and Egypt are meant in general the enemies of God and his truth; who shall all be subdued and broken in pieces by the kingdom of Christ.' (Lenth.) (Marg. Ref.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The blessings, held forth in the promises, are actually enjoyed through faith and prayer: and the increase and success in every undertaking must be expected and sought from God alone. He forms the light, and the black clouds, and sends both the beneficial rain, and the destructive thunder-storm: both the ministration of death, and the ministration of the Spirit and of righteousness, are from him: and he not only invites, but commands us to ask good things from him, assuring us that every one who asketh receiveth. But idols, diviners, and false teachers of every description, seduce men by lies and comfort them in vain: and when these impostors are mistaken for pastors, the flock will be scattered and troubled like "sheep that have no shepherd." They who bear the office of rulers or teachers, and do not their duty, but lead men from God and into sin or error, kindle his wrath against themselves and those under their care: but however he may punish degenerate professors of his Gospel and corrupt pastors, he will visit his people, and prepare them for the conflict and the victory. To the Lord we must therefore look, to raise up persons to support, cement, unite, defend, and deliver his Church: and all useful persons are the servants and instruments of Christ, from whom the stability, unity, successes, and triumphs of the Church proceed, and to whom the glory of them must be given. Such as he strengthens and attends, become mighty men, valiant for the truth, and successful in their warfare against the most formidable enemies. When he excites a spirit of prayer, even in those who seemed to be cast off, he will hear and have mercy upon them; then will he renew their comforts, and make their hearts to rejoice in him and his salvation: and he will bless them and their children after them, that they may live before him. Thus he continually calls sinners by his word, redeems them from their iniquities, and gathers them into his Church; for his chosen are scattered through the nations, and walk in evil ways, till he causes them to remember him, and to seek his salvation: then, being delivered from the bondage of sin and separated from the world, they pass through seas of affliction and temptation; by his powerful support, they are made conquerors over their inward enemies and their outward persecutors: and they shall soon pass safely through the Jordan of death to the regions of endless felicity. Let us then trust and rejoice in the Lord, and strengthen our hearts and hopes in him; and let us walk up and down this evil world, by faith in his name, and celebrating his praises: assured of being received into those blissful mansions, where there will be room found for all the innumerable multitude of those whom Jesus hath redeemed unto God with his blood.

NOTES.

CHAP. XI. 1—3. 'There is a remarkable story mentioned in the Jewish writers to this purpose.

Some time before the destruction of the temple, the doors of it opened of their own accord; (a circumstance attested by Josephus;) then R. Johanan, directing his speech to the temple, said, I know thy destruction is at
CHAPTER XI.

4 Thus saith the Lord my God; Feed the flock of the slaughter;
5 Whose possessors slay them, and hold themselves not guilty: and they that sell them say, Blessed be the Lord; for I am rich: and their own shepherds pity them not.

6 For I will no more pity the inhabitants of the land, saith the Lord: but, I will deliver the men every one into his neighbour's hand, and into the hand of his king: and they shall smite the land, and out of their hand I will not deliver them.

7 And I will feed the flock of the slaughter, yea even you, O poor of the flock. And I took unto me two staves: one I called Beauty, and the other I called Bands; and I fed the flock.

8 Three shepherds also I cut off in one month; and my soul was loathed in them, and their soul also abhorred me.

9 Then said I, I will not feed you: that that dieth, let it die; and that that is to be cut off, let it be cut off; and let the rest eat every one the flesh of another.

ministry was among "the lost sheep of the house of Israel," 'reel.' His labours, doctrines, and miracles, were calculated to reform and preserve the people: yet they eventually occasioned their ruin, and he seemed to feed them for the slaughter. Their rulers and teachers, who bore the pastoral office, deceived, oppressed, and devoted the people, without shame or remorse: nay, they boasted of their own righteousness, and hypocritically praised God for making them rich; as if he had conived in their unmerciful oppressions! Therefore the Lord determined to show them no more pity than they had done the people: and as the nation in general was extremely corrupt, and concurred in rejecting Christ: so he would involve them in one common calamity, (except a remnant according to the election of grace:?) and the people would both be given up to destroy one another by furious intestine disensions, and be left in the power of the Roman emperor, whom they acknowledged as their only king, when they demanded the crucifixion of Christ their true King. (Marg. Ref.) Idolatry is not here mentioned among the sins of the Jews, in the times predicted; but covetousness and hypocrisy are specified; which, with the context, fully proves, that the destruction of Jerusalem by the Romans was intended. "He noteth the hypocrites, which have the name of God in their mouths, though in their life and doing they deny God! attributing their gain to God's blessing, which cometh of the spoil of their brethren. "Ye yeave widows' houses, and for a pretence make long prayers; therefore ye shall receive the greater damnation." Some suppose the Romans, when selling the captive Jews for slaves, to be meant: but the language far better suits the covetous, oppressing, hypocritical scribishes and pharisæes. The Jews presumptuously expected, that God would deliver his worshippers, city, and temple, from the Roman idolaters: they had no prophets sent to declare the contrary; (as in the siege of the city by the Chaldeans;) and they had forgotten or explained away these ancient predictions, and scorned the warnings of Christ and his disciples. But the event, and their condition for above seventeen hundred years, have abundantly shown the fallaciousness of their hopes.

V. 7—9. The good Shepherd, by his forerunner, per-10 And I took my staff, even Beauty, and cut it asunder; that I might break my covenant which I had made with all the people.

11 And it was broken in that day: and I cut asunder the covenant of their peace; so the poor of the flock that waited uppon me knew that it was the word of the LORD.

12 And I said unto them, If ye think good, give me my price; and if not, forbear. So they weighed for my price thirty pieces of silver.

13 And the Lord said unto me, Cast it unto the potter: a goodly price that I was prized at of them. And I took the thirty pieces of silver, and cast them for the potter in the house of the LORD.

14 Then I cut asunder mine other staff, even Bands, that I might break the brotherhood between Judah and Israel.

So the people of Judah and the people of Israel were separated from one another.

The horrid circumstance of the Jews, during the siege of Jerusalem, eating, and even quarrelling about, the flesh of their brethren and children, should not here be forgotten.

V. 10, 11. These events seem to have been prefigured by the prophet's cutting asunder his staff, or crook, called Beauty, when he had delivered this part of the prophecy. This signified the abolition of the national covenant with Judah and Israel, who would be deprived of all those distinctions which had been their glory and beauty; which virtually took place when they rejected and crucified Christ. For then, as a nation, they ceased to be God's peculiar people, and their ordinances lost their efficacy, "waxed old, and were ready to vanish away;" and the poor of the flock, those who waited on Christ, knew that this was the word of the Lord. They soon learned that the Jews were no longer to be the peculiar people of God, and so they separated from among them, when they saw the Roman armies about to besiege Jerusalem, being well aware of the event.

V. 12-14. This evident prophecy of a transaction recorded in the New Testament is expressed with much obscurity, as indeed might previously have been expected. It is probable that the prophet performed some symbolical action of this kind before the rulers and priests, as a type of Christ, and as showing by what means the Jews would seal their own condemnation. He demanded his wages for feeding the flock, if they thought good to give him it; and he received thirty pieces of silver, probably shekels, of about the value of half a crown or three shillings each. These the Lord directed him to cast unto the potter; disdaining that he or his shepherd should be valued at so paltry a sum; and accordingly the prophet cast them to the potter in the house of the Lord; either the potter came thither for that purpose, or he was at work near the temple. This predicted the bargain of the chief priests with Judas for that very sum, to betray Christ into their hands, the traitor's returning their money in horror of conscience, and their determining to purchase with it a potter's field to bury strangers in. Then their Shepherd brake the other staff called Bands, that he might break the brotherhood betwixt Israel and Judah; which denoted the dissolution of their civil and ecclesiastical state, and that the people would be given up to the most destructive and furious contests with each other. Some suppose that the whole was merely a vision, which the prophet reported to the people: but it is recorded as a transaction, or a direct prophecy; and not as a vision. (Notes, Hos.) The rulers and priests giving thirty shekels, as the wages of the
CHAPTER XI.

15 ¶ And the Lord said unto me, Take unto thee yet the instruments of a foolish shepherd.

16 For, lo, I will raise up a shepherd on the land, which shall not visit those that be cut off, neither shall seek the young one, nor heal that is broken, nor feed that standeth still: but he shall eat the flesh of the fat, and tear their claws in pieces.

17 ¶ Woe to the idol-shepherd that leaveth the flock! the sword shall be upon his arm, and upon his right eye; his arm shall be clean dried up, and his right eye shall be utterly darkened.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1-11.

The admission of wickedness into communities opens a door to a fire that will consume their prosperity, however great it may be; and the tremendous doom of Jerusalem may well alarm other degenerate churches, as the fall of the cedar might cause the fir-trees and oaks of Bashan to howl. If any part of the Lord's vineyard prove an unfruitful forest, it must be cut down and cast into the fire: and those who have been pre-eminently rich in rank and office, will have the precedence in suffering, when all their glory and pride shall be spoiled: and in such a state of the community, the best methods of reformation often excite such contempt, enmity, and opposition, that they hasten its downfall. Alas! many who possess authority in the Church, only consider what gain they can make of their situation; and whilst they fall upon the miseries or final ruin of the flock, they are too callous to feel either remorse or pity. They follow precedents, take accustomed advantages, and keep out of the reach of human laws: and many cloak their oppression andavarice with hypocrisy, and bless God that they are rich, when they pretend to prove them destitute both of piety and humanity. But the Lord leaves nations to such rulers and teachers for their sins: and it is common even for the oppressed to copy the crimes of their oppressors, till they are given up together into the hands of their neighbours and enemies, who smite and destroy them, and there is none to pity or deliver.
CHAP. XII.

Jerusalem shall be made a cup of trembling, and a burdensome stone to all her enemies, 1-5. The Jews shall be marvellously strengthened, sanctified, and prospered, 6-8. At that time the pouring out of the Spirit of grace shall cause them to look with deep repentance, on him whom they had pierced, 9-14.

THE burden of the word of the Lord, 9 for Israel, saith the Lord, 9 which stretcheth forth the heavens, and layeth the foundation of the earth, and 9 formeth the spirit of man within him. 2 Behold, I will make Jerusalem a cup of trembling unto all the people round about, 9 when they shall be in the siege them. Yet the good Shepherd will have a flock: and he often feeds the poor in mercy, and they learn to wait on him; whilst the rich and powerful are ripe for vengeance. But he does not withdraw from favoured nations those privileges that have been their glory and beauty, till their hypocrisy and enmity to him and his cause render it necessary for him to make them examples of his awful severity. When this takes place, the criminals become of all men the most infatuated, hardened, mischievous, and miserable: and when the ordinances and oracles of God are withdrawn from those who have long abused them, the very poor of the flock will remember, that thus it was written, and that thus it must be.

V. 12-17.

Willful contempt of Christ is the great cause of men's ruin. Alas, at how low a price do men value this precious Saviour! What sums do many lavish on those who subserve their pleasures, amusement, or decorations, and how they grudge the veriest trifle, where the edification of their own souls, or those of other men, is concerned! A trifling loss to be submitted to for conscience' sake seems a great matter: a few pieces of silver still seem to many more valuable than the unspeakable riches of Christ! And the contempt cast upon him, by putting such trifles in competition with him, or giving them the preference to his love and salvation, has in it a proportion of the same guilt which they contracted, which bribed Judas to betray him for thirty shekels; which Judas contracted, who thus sold his Lord; or which they incurred, who cried out, "Not this man, but Barabbas." He may therefore continually say unto us, "a goodly price, that I am valued at by you!!" and no wonder he disdains men's persons and services, and pours contempt on their treasures; when they prefer every worthless object to his inestimable love. Thus Churches provoke him to withdraw his presence, and to leave them in darkness; and to give them up to "bite and devour each other, till they are consumed one of another;" and if professed Christians were more generally agreed in their supreme valuation of Christ, they would not in general contend so much about other matters. But when men reject his authority and salvation, they are often in judgment delivered over to follow blind guides and foolish shepherds, who are far more tremendous accusers than war, famine, and pestilence, all combined together. While such pagancers and worthless idols deceive others to their ruin, they will themselves incur the deepest condemnation; and their usurped or abused authority, or pretended illumination, will end in contempt and the darkness of misery and despair: for "if the blind lead the blind, they shall both fall into the ditch."

NOTES,

CHAP. XII. V. 1. (Marg. Ref.) This verse forms a solemn introduction to the following prophecy, and shows the vast importance of it.

V. 2—5. Some expositors consider this as predicting the victories of the Maccabees over Antiochus: but that persecutor never besieged Jerusalem: and the language is much too strong to denote the success of the Maccabees. (Bp. Newcome.) Others apply it to the success of the first preachers of the Gospel in converting the nations, and to the judgments executed upon their oppressors and persecutors. But, however it may be accommodated, some special events were doubtless intended by the Holy Spirit; and it is probable that the grand accomplishment of it is yet to be expected. It was foretold, that the Lord would make Jerusalem "a cup of trembling," or a stupefying poisonous draught, to all the people round about, when they should be engaged in besieging that capital and the other cities of Judah. That is, divine judgments would immediately overtake them, as the evident effect of their attempts. Yea, he would make Jerusalem "a burdensome stone to all that should burden themselves with it." This alludes to large stones or weights, that men used to try their strength by lifting, which sometimes proving too heavy for them, bruised or even killed them: thus all, who attempted to injure Jerusalem, would destroy themselves, even though all the people of the earth should gather themselves against it. For the Lord would smite their horses with terror and blindness, as well as the riders with madness, out of his attentive, watchful care over Judah: so that the rulers of Judah would cordially expect help from the Lord of hosts, their God, by means of the inhabitants of Jerusalem, without seeking out for any foreign succours. (Marg. Ref.) The former part of this chapter relates to an invasion made upon the inhabitants of Judæa and Jerusalem in the latter times of the world, probably after their return to, and settlement in, their own land. Their horses and riders shall be put into such confusion, as to run foul of one another. (2 Kings vi. 18.) The marginal reading (ṣ), is to be preferred, "There is strength to me, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, in the Lord of our God," "God doth visibly interpose for our deliverance, and thereby encourage us to rely on his protection." (Louth.)

V. 9–14. God's signal interposition in behalf of Judah and Jerusalem, after their future restoration, having been foretold, the prophet proceeds to foretell their conversion to Christianity. (Ep. Newcombe.) At the time when the Lord was about to destroy the enemies of the Jews, he intended to prepare them for that favour, by "pouring upon the house of David and the inhabitants of Jerusalem, a Spirit of grace and supplications." The Holy Spirit is infinitely gracious and merciful; he is most freely bestowed upon sinners; and he is the Author of all grace or holiness. He is also the Spirit of supplications; he shows them their ignorance, indifference, guilt, pollution, misery, and danger; he leads them to understand and believe the truths and promises of Scripture; and he excites hope and spiritual desires, and thus increasingly constrains them to pour out their hearts in earnest prayer. Then, (says the Speaker, Jehovah, who alone can give the Holy Spirit,) "they shall look on Me, whom they have pierced." (John xix. 37.) The ancestors of that generation of Jews caused their crucified Jesus to be nailed to the cross, and pierced by the soldier's spear; for they employed the Romans to execute the sentence which they had denounced, exclaiming, "his blood be on us, and on our children!" And their posterity have ever since been consenting to this deed by their obstinate unbelief. But at the predicted period, they will know who this crucified Jesus was; and then they shall by faith look to him and mourn over him, as pierced and slain by them: this reflection will melt their hearts into extreme sorrow and compassion; they will repent of that national sin, and of all their personal transgressions, as men are used bitterly to lament the death of an only or a first-born son; for they will perceive that they had wickedly slain the Hope and Glory of their nation. This will be a general mourning of the whole people, like that which was occasioned by the death of Josiah, who was slain in the valley of Megiddon. (Marg. Ref.) All the people shall mourn with godly sorrow, which will not only be expressed in public, but in their families and in private; and even husbands and wives will separately, in retirement, give vent to their grief, and humble themselves before God for all their sins. And as their rulers, priests, scribes, and people, had concurred in the crucifixion of Christ; so all orders of men will concur in this repentance. The family of David, the king, that of Nathan, the most eminent prophet in David's reign, that of Levi, or the priests and ministers of religion, and that of Shimei, who perhaps was some noted scribe, might be mentioned, as representing the different orders of men among them. A parallel sentiment to that took place, at and after the day of Pentecost, in the conversion of numbers of the Jews, who had just before crucified Christ; and it is descriptive of the conversion of sinners in every age. Yet there can be no reasonable doubt, but it is an intended prediction of the conversion of the Jewish nation, when they shall as one body embrace the Gospel of Jesus Christ. Some suppose Nathan the son of David to be meant; (12.) but then the royal house is twice mentioned, and the prophets are unnoticed, which in the Old Testament are generally considered as a distinct order. 1 In the margin of the English Bible we have, Or, 1 of Simeon. Our translators therefore thought that the Hebrew text might sometimes be corrected by the Greek version. (Bp. Newcome.) This reading, however, has been added since the time of the translators, and is not found in the old copies with marginal readings.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The word of the Lord, ("who stretcheth forth the heavens and layeth the foundation of the earth, and "formeth the spirit of man within him") will be a heavy burden on those against whom it is sent; but it is "for Israel," and speaks peace to all true believers. Many have been the attempts of wicked men to extirpate the sufferings of Christ, the scattering of his sheep, the destruction of unbelievers, and the saving of a remnant through severe trials, 7—9.

people of God; but they have only ruined themselves: for the Church has always proved a cup of trembling to all her assailants, and a burdensome stone to those who have burdened themselves with her; and all will assuredly be crushed or cut in pieces, who injure her, even if all the power, valour, policy, learning, wealth, and multitude of the whole earth should combine against her. Whilst the rulers and teachers of the Church expect their help and strength from the Lord of hosts their God, and use no means or instruments except such as are consecrated; his watchful eyes will ever be open to take care of them, and his arm stretched forth to protect them, and to strike their persecutors with astonishment, blindness, or madness. But it is far more desirable, when the examples, labours, and conversations of ministers and Christians render them as an hearth of fire among the wood, or like a torch in a sheath; to kindle the flame of divine love and holy affection from heart to heart, and to diffuse the influence of piety to the right hand and to the left. In the conversion of sinners, as well as in redemption, the Lord will exclude boasting, and take care that "no flesh shall glory in his presence;" therefore not many mighty, noble, wealthy, or learned are called; and he often begins among the poor and despised families, towns, cities and nations; and then uses them as his instruments in the salvation of a remnant of the rich, the wise, and the honourable; that these may not have any ground of self-preference or contempt of others, or any pretence for assuming authority over them.

The best of men have hitherto been so very far from perfection, that it is possible for a company of believers to be called forth, the weakest of whom shall exceed the most illustrious of those who have yet been known on earth: and we are led to conclude, that this will actually be the case, in that purer state of the Church that is predicted. Then the feeblest Christian will equal David in strength of faith and vigour of affections; yet there will be rulers, teachers, and examples of such superior attainments, as to be fully qualified to go before the people in every duty and every grace. These will be followers of God as dear children, and bear the image and possess the mind of Christ to a degree of which in these lukewarm days we have scarcely any conception. Before we can expect the peculiar protection and consolation of the Lord, we must be deeply humbled for our sins. The beginning, progress, and perfection of our sanctification come from the "pouring out of the Spirit of grace and supplications;" wherever that is granted, fervent prayer and deep humiliation will be the never-failing effects; the eyes of the mind will soon be directed in faith to him that was pierced for our sins: and whilst we condemn the conduct of him who betrayed and of those who crucified the Lord of glory, we shall not exculpate ourselves. We shall remember, that in fact our sins were the cause of the Redeemer's crucifixion; our unbelief has been a continuation of the crime of his crucifiers; our ingratitude and dishonourable conduct have often tended towards the guilt of crucifying
N that day there shall be a fountain opened to the house of David, and to the inhabitants of Jerusalem, for sin and for uncleanness.

2 And it shall come to pass in that day, saith the Lord of hosts, that I will cut off the names of the idols out of the land, and they shall no more be remembered: and also I will cause the prophets and the unclean spirit to pass out of the land.

3 And it shall come to pass, that when any shall yet prophesy, then his father and his mother that begat him shall say unto him, Thou shalt not live: for thou speakest lies in the name of the Lord:

4 And it shall come to pass in that day, that the prophets shall be ashamed every one of his vision, when he hath prophesied; neither shall they wear a rough garment to deceive:

5 But he shall say, I am no prophet; I am an husbandman: for man taught me to keep cattle from my youth.

6 And one shall say unto him, What are these wounds in thine hands? Then he shall answer, Those with which I was wounded in the house of my friends.

by his Spirit. These blessings are signified in the Lord's supper and in baptism: but to explain this promise of either or both of them, considered as external ordinances, is palpably to mistake the sign for the thing signified, than which nothing can be more perilous.

V. 2, 3. Idolatry had before the captivity been the prevailing sin of the Jewish nation; and their false prophets had been the instruments of unclean spirits, in seducing the people into that and other abominations. But they were never addicted to gross idolatry after the days of Zechariah. That thorough reformation, however, that will take place upon their conversion to Christianity, is predicted under these allusions. Idolatry and superstition have been and are very prevalent in many parts of the Christian Church: and whilst this has formed one grand hindrance to the conversion of the Jews, it has also ensnared many of them, by inducing them to idolatrous compliances, to escape persecution: but about the time here predicted all these antichristian abominations will be terminated; and the converted Jews will watch very carefully against every appearance of such abuses. The very names and memorials of all the idols will be abolished; and the false prophets, and the unclean spirit that inspired them, will be banished. (Rev. xix. 1–3.) and if any shall still presume to prophesy against the Gospel of Christ, or to promote idolatry or superstition, even their parents will strenuously oppose them, and be the first to bring them forth to punishment, according to the law of Moses. (Notes, Deut. xiii. 6–11.) They shall treat such a one in the same manner as their fathers did the true prophet, the Messias; shall pierce or thrust him through. (Lomth.) How far the Jews may then, under a theocracy, be governed according to their judicial law, we cannot determine: but these expressions taken from it, merely denote the vigorous and decided measures that will be used to suppress these abominations, according to the nature of the dispensation under which they shall live. The universal ruin of idolatry seems also predicted. That gross idolatry, where with the world was infected, shall now cease; and the very names of those pagan idols shall now be forgotten. (Bp. HALL.)

CHAPTER XIII.  B. C. 500.
7 Behold, a sword against the throne of hosts, and against the whole land, saith the Lord; two parts thereof shall be utterly cut off, even men and sheep; I will cause it to pass, that therein shall be cut off and die; and the third shall be left therein.

9 And I will bring the third part through the fire, and will refine them as silver is refined, and will try them as gold is tried: they shall call on my name, and I will hear them: I will say, "It is my people; and they shall say, "The Lord is my God."

Christ's sufferings, in which men and evil spirits were no more than the executioners of that wrath of God that he suffered for our sins: yet it seems especially to relate to his agonies in the garden and his exclamation on the cross, when he endured unspeakable anguish from the immediate hand of the Father, who was pleased to bruise him and "to put him to grief," till divine justice was fully satisfied. When the Shepherd should thus be smitten for the sins of the flock, the sheep would be scattered, as the disciples were when Christ was apprehended, (Matt. xxvi. 56.) and then the Lord would "turn his hand upon the little ones," to take care of the helpless company, that would be exposed like little children to the rage of their persecutors, when their Lord was taken from them.

V. 8, 9. In consequence of the sin of the Jews in rejecting and crucifying Christ, and in opposing his Gospel, the Romans would be employed to go through and destroy the greatest part of them, all over the land. But a remnant, a third part, would be preserved: and, after having passed through trials and afflictions, like a fiery furnace, till they were proved and refined, they would at length be converted, and be acknowledged as the people of God. This may refer to the conversion of a remnant of the Jews in the days of the apostles: but it seems also to predict, that the remnant of the nation, which should survive the havoc made of them by the Romans, after having been long preserved a distinct people, in the midst of extraordinary trials and oppressions, would at length, when "the Spirit of grace should be poured upon them," call upon the Lord in good earnest; and, being converted to Christianity, be readmitted to the privileges of his people, and taught to acknowledge him to be the Lord their God, as he is revealed to sinners in Jesus Christ.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Blessed be God, he hath prepared a fountain for the vilest and most polluted; and his Gospel invites us to wash in it and be clean. The proud and unbelieving, however, cannot discern its nature, use, or excellency. But when the heart is humbled and set against sin, the fountain is disclosed to view; and the believer daily washes in it, till his robes are made white, and he is prepared to join the glorious company before the throne of God. (Marg. Ref.)
CHAPTER XIV.

Jerusalem taken and spoiled by many and cruel enemies, 1—3. The conversion of sinners and the increase of spiritual light, till the whole earth submits to God, 4—8. Jerusalem rebuilt and replenished, 9—11. The plague of all who have fought against her, and the conversion of a remnant, 12—19. The holiness of the Church in the latter days, 20, 21.

BEHOLD, the day of the Lord cometh, and thy spoil shall be divided in the midst of the sea.

God, and to hate every false way. They forget, or abhor, their idols and iniquities; they become zealous against all impostures, by which false teachers and unclean spirits corrupt the minds of men; they thenceforth know no man after the flesh: Christ becomes more dear to them than sons or daughters; they will “contend earnestly for the faith once delivered to the saints;” nor will they converse at their nearest relations, who speak lies in the name of the Lord. Indeed the Christian dispensation doth not require those severities which God commanded by the Mosaic law: yet the prevalence of true religion will bring all delusions into neglect, and expose them to censure; and it will make men ashamed and afraid to publish their false visions, or impostures, by which they lie in wait to deceive. Even external mortification and apparent deadness to the world may be the cloak of ambition and hypocrisy; and rough garments may be used, as well as more pompous sacerdotal vestments, to ave men’s minds into a blind deference to an antichristian deceiver: and it is desirable that false teachers should be driven from that employment to some more useful occupation; but still more that they should “repent and do works meet for repentance.” It can never be amiss for us to recollect the wounds in the hands and feet of the gracious Saviour. Alas, how often hath he been wounded in the house of his professed friends! Yes, by his real friends, his disciples, when, forgetful of their obligations, they have acted inconsistently with the honour of his Gospel! May we then ever remember the price which it cost him to open for us a fountain for sin and uncleanness: may we not forget the dignity of our Shepherd, as the Compeer of the Lord of hosts; nor yet the depth of his humiliation and the intensity of his sufferings, whilst smitten by the sword of justice, when it weighed against him, that he might be punished for our sins. Thus, whilst we wash in the sacred fountain, we shall reflect with awe and gratitude on him, whose vital blood supplied the purifying stream: we shall learn to hate sin and love our Benefactor; to submit to corrections and endure persecutions; expecting to be confounded to the fidellem by suffering in this evil world, as we hope to be in glory when we arrive at that better world above. For whilst the many neglect this great salvation to their ruin, the remnant that are saved must pass “through much tribulation into the kingdom of God”; that by these fiery trials, (as well as by the purifying fountain,) they may be refined like gold, and made meet for

2 For I will gather all nations against Jerusalem to battle; and the city shall be taken, and the houses rifled, and the women ravished; and half of the city shall go forth into captivity, and the residue of the people shall be cut off from the city.

3 Then shall the Lord go forth, and fight against those nations, as when he fought in the day of battle.

their Master’s use and ready for every good work. But if the sharpest sufferings lead us to call upon the Lord with increasing fervency, he will hear us: and if we be his people, and he be our God, the event of our trials will be “praise, and honour, and glory, at the appearing of our Lord Jesus Christ.”

NOTES.

CHAP. XIV. V. 1—3. ‘The Romans, being lords of the known world, had the strength of all nations united in their forces.’ (Lactant.) Half. ‘The Hebrew word may be rendered a portion.’ ‘The Romans spared the young and useful part of the Jews. However, these were either condemned to the mines in Egypt, or exposed to the sword and to the wild beasts in the provincial theatres, or sold for slaves. The forty thousand, who were permitted to go where they pleased, were Idumeans.’ (Bp. Newcome.) All these were “cut off from the city.”—Some expositors, on this and other grounds, suppose that all the predictions of this chapter relate to events yet future; but probably they begin with the catastrophe of Jerusalem’s destruction by the Romans, and so gradually extend to those events that shall hereafter take place in respect of the Jews, the Church of Christ, and their enemies. The time when the Romans marched their armies, composed of many nations, to besiege Jerusalem, was the day of the Lord Jesus, on which he came to “destroy those that would not have him to reign over them.” When the Romans had taken the city, all the outrages were committed, and the miseries endured, which are here predicted. A large proportion of the inhabitants were destroyed, or taken captives, and sold for slaves, &c., and multitudes were driven away, to be pursued by various perils and miseries; numbers, having been converted to Christianity, became citizens of the heavenly Jerusalem, and thus were “not cut off from the city of God.” But it is probable that the remnant of Jews, who survived this almost exterminating destruction, and their descendants, who have for so many centuries been preserved a distinct people, in order to their future restoration, are intended. (Note, xiii., 8, 9.) It is also observable, that the Romans, after having been thus made the executioners of divine vengeance on the Jewish nation, never prospered as they had done before: but the Lord evidently fought against them, and all the nations which composed their overgrown empire; till at last it was subverted, and their 4 And his feet shall stand in that day upon the mount of Olives, which is before Jerusalem on the east, and the mount of Olives shall cleave in the midst thereof toward the east and toward the west, and there shall be a very great valley; and half of the mountain shall remove toward the north, and half of it toward the south.

5 And ye shall flee to the valley of the sons of Hinnom; for the mountain of the Lord shall break up as Lebanon amid the valley of the children of Zedekiah, in the day of the LORD's vengeance; and he shall remove thee from the way of thy face, and thou shalt be cast down in that day.

6 And it shall come to pass in that day, that the light shall not be clear, nor dark:

7 But it shall be one day which shall be known to the Lord, not day, nor night: but it shall come to pass, that at evening time it shall be light.

8 And it shall be in that day, that living waters shall go out from Jerusalem; half of them toward the former sea, and half of them toward the hinder sea; in summer and in winter shall it be:

9 And the Lord shall be King over all the earth: in that day shall there be one Lord, and his name one.

10 And it came to pass in those days, that first the heaven opened above Jerusalem. And behold, a great cloud overshadowed the earth: and from the midst of the cloud there appeared the voice of the Lord. And he spake unto the children of Israel, saying,

And the Lord said, I have set my face against this city for evil, because they have done evil in my sight, to provoke me to anger in that which I had determined in my heart to do. In that day, saith the Lord, I will bring thee against Jerusalem with all thine armies: and the cities of Judah shall be cast down by the Lord unto the ground: and I will turn thee over to all thine enemies.

When the Lord brought thee out of Egypt, thou wast as an eagle, and didst fly in the heavens; but now I will bring thee to an uncircumcised people, and to a land the uncircumcised; and thou shalt take an inheritance in their land, and I will set thee with the children of Israel.

And I will set my face against thee, and thou shalt be smitten; thou shalt die, thou shalt be consumed, and I will give over thine enemies to thee, that they may smite thee; and thou shalt give over thine eyes to the blind, and thy bands to the lame: and I will give thee over to the sword of thine enemies, and they shall fill thine houses with ashes, and cast down thy cities, and make thy high places desolate.

Woe unto thee, O Jerusalem! for thou art become as a city that is to be visited: a city where is no justice, nor mercy, nor faith. She is full of falsehood, and violence, and deceit. Her prophets are adulterers, and her priests burn incense in the fire of their own covetousness, and have not known me, neither have they done that thing which is right in my sight. They have not walked in my statutes, neither have they kept my judgments, neither have they walked according to my laws, and my Decalogue.

Ye have seen many things, but ye have not known them: for the Lord hid them from thee. Ye have eaten, and ye have been satisfied, and ye have built up, and ye are filled; and ye have given the sailer to them that were ready to plow the sea. Yet thus saith the Lord, Ye have trodden down my people under feet, and ye have afflicted them in the name of my name. Ye have forgotten the statutes of the Lord, and have not kept his judgments, neither have ye walked according to his Decalogue, nor according to his laws, nor according to his testimonies, which he spake unto you by your prophets. Therefore ye shall be given over to strangers in a land that ye know not; and ye shall be divided in the midst of the heathen, and ye shall perish through the sword. When ye see many ships in the sea, do not fear for yourselves, neither be afraid of their noise, neither be troubled at their aspect, for the Lord is come to save his people, the remnant of his inheritance; for he is like a mighty man to save, and as a man of war to save them. For the Lord shall show himself great as a God, and holy as his name, when he shall save his people.
10 All the land shall be turned as a plain from Geba to Rimmon, south of Jerusalem; and it shall be lifted up, and inhabited in her place, from Benjamin's gate unto the place of the first gate, unto the corner gate, and from the house of Hananel unto the king's wine presses.

11 And men shall dwell in it, and no one shall be more utterly desolate; but Jerusalem shall be safely inhabited.

12 ¶ And this shall be the plague wherewith the Lord shall smite all the people that have fought against Jerusalem; their flesh shall consume away, while they stand upon their feet, and their eyes shall consume away in their holes, and their tongue shall consume away in their mouth.

13 And it shall come to pass, that a great tumult from the Lord shall be among them; and they shall lay hold every one on the hand of his neighbour, and his hand shall rise up against the hand of his neighbour.

attended by the influences of the Holy Spirit, having begun its progress from Jerusalem, would continue its course on every side, amidst all those changes of which summer and winter are an emblem: so that nothing should totally impede its progress, till the Lord should become "King over all the earth," not only in right, but in fact. (Notes, &c. Ez. xxviii.) till neither idols, false religion, nor anticlerical powers, were left to be his rivals; till all princes should submit to and serve him; and all the earth should agree in one object and way of worship, and unite in submission and obedience to one Lord. No longer would they have deities of different names, according to the regions they inhabited; or trust to the tutelary care of this or the other saint; or be divided into a number of sects and parties: but they would be all of one mind, to worship that one "name of the Father, the Son, and the Holy Ghost," into which all Christians are baptized. — This interpretation evidently accords with various other prophecies, both in the Old and New Testament, (Marg. Ref.) and with the history of the Christian Church, which records the fulfillment of those prophecies: and it shows that the prophet was inspired to deliver a regular series of predictions, from the death of Christ, (viii. 7.) to the establishment of the millennium. Whereas, according to some eminent expositors, the most distant events are brought together, without the least connexion; and the reader cannot tell whether any part has been fulfilled, and what; or whether the triumphs of the Church on earth, or the glories of heaven, are foretold.

14 ¶ And Judah also shall fight at Jerusalem; and the wealth of all the heathen round about shall be gathered together, gold, and silver, and apparel, in great abundance.

15 And so shall be the plague of the horse, of the mule, of the camel, and of the ass, and of all the beasts that shall be in these tents, as this plague.

16 ¶ And it shall come to pass, that every one that is left of all the nations, which came against Jerusalem, shall even go up year by year to worship the King, the Lord of hosts, and to keep the feast of tabernacles.

17 And it shall be, that whoso will not come up of all the families of the earth unto Jerusalem to worship the Lord, the King of hosts, even upon them shall be no rain.

18 And if the family of Egypt go not up, and come not, that have no rain; there shall be the plague, wherewith the Lord will smite the heathen that come not to keep the feast of tabernacles.

made in the condition, disposition, and character of the Jews, as great as if a large district should be entirely levelled to a plain; the mountains being cast down, and the valleys filled up. Every outward or inward obstruction to their conversion, and restoration to their own land, will be effectually removed. Jerusalem, that long been trodden under foot of the Gentiles, will be raised up from that debased condition, and rebuilt to the whole of her former extent, and inhabited throughout: and it shall no more be devoted to utter destruction, under the awful curse of God, as it has been after the crucifixion of Christ; but it will become a secure and peaceful habitation for the converted Jews. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 12—15. These verses seem to predict the tremendous judgments, that will be inflicted on those who shall oppose the settlement of the Jews in their own land: but whether they are to be understood literally, or not, the event must determine. (Notes, Ez. xxxviii. xxxix.) They will all, however, be subjugated by the Jews fighting at Jerusalem, and by their fierce contentions with each other; and all that appear to them will share in the plague: whilst the Jews whom they assaulted, will be enriched by their spoil. But it may also be interpreted of the destruction of all antichristian powers, which shall precede the glorious millennium. (Notes, Rev. xix.) The Lord will save the tents of Judah first; and then they shall join their forces against the common enemy, when he comes against Jerusalem. (xii. 2.) (Lonhe.) No doubt the same events are predicted as in the verse-referred to.

5 X 2
V. 16–19. The feast of tabernacles was typical of Christ’s dwelling in our nature as in a tabernacle; and of the Christian’s contempt of the world, and to keep the Lord, as a stranger and pilgrim on earth. To keep the feast of tabernacles therefore seems to mean, that the persons intended would be converted to Christ, and join with pleasure in his ordinances, continually and with perseverance. The remnant of the nations, that had just before been fighting against Jerusalem, or the Church; the subjects of the eastern and western antichrists, and the Gentiles, will in great numbers be converted to pure ChristiAnity, and become the spiritual worshippers and obedient servants of the Lord. But such as persist in idolatry and opposition to true religion, will be visited with drought and famine; which probably implies both temporal and spiritual judgments. And, as Egypt seldom has any rain, and another method must be taken to visit her with famine; so no situation or circumstances shall preserve any people from these judgments, who refuse to worship the Lord alone, because of their attachment to old superstitions and idolatries: they must therefore either be converted or destroyed. * The Jews have a tradition, that the defeat of Gog and Magog, which seems to be the same discomfiture which is here described, shall fall out on the feast of tabernacles; or, as others say, the seven months cleansing of the land shall be finished at that time.* (Lornt.) In the upper parts of Egypt they seldom have any rain; but near the Mediterranean sea it sometimes rains plentifully, which is considered as a detriment, and not an advantage.

V. 20, 21. * God’s name shall be honoured in every circumstance.* (H. Newcome.) At length the time of the complete peace and purity of the Church will arrive. Then the very bells upon the horses, or their bridle pieces, shall be inscribed with HOLINESS TO THE LORD, according to the inscription on the mitre of the high-priest. Some explain this of the war-horses; supposing it to mean, that these being dressed, their ornaments will be consecrated to God. Others understand it of horses employed in common services; and suppose it to imply, that the most secular occupations will then be so conducted, that they will become holy actions performed to the glory of God. Then the pots, (either the earthen or braven pots that were used in boiling the sacrifices, or the drinking cups of the priests,) will be as holy as the bowls before the altar had been; which may signify, that the meanest minister or Christian, (who is a spiritual priest,) will be equal to what the most eminent of God’s servants were; or that all their pleasures will be regulated with such moderation, and united with so much piety and gratitude, as to render them acceptable, even like solemn religious services. And this will be the case with all the pots in Jerusalem: all persons will then be thus devoted to God in their employments and satisfactions. They are likewise represented as using these pots even for sacrifices; which may mean, that the ceremonial distinction between holy and unholy will be abolished; and that men will conduct their ordinary affairs, and their sacred services upon the same holy principles of faith, fear, love, and obedience. And in that day, there will be no more any Canaanite in the house of the Lord: which may mean, that mercenary ministers will no more be allowed to prostitute that sacred function; nor ungodly men to abuse holy ordinances to promote their worldly ends. For the word may he rendered a merchant; and Christ will then drive all buyers and sellers out of the temple. This happy state will continue till the end of the world. How exactly do all the prophets agree about the final event of the long continued contest between the worship of the true God, and idolatry; between piety, and impiety; truth, and error; holiness, and unholiness! * At the even tide it shall be light, and blessed be God, that season cannot be very distant.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1–11. The judgments of God commonly begin at the sanctuary. When his day of retribution comes, he can soon gather the nations together to battle against the objects of his wrath: and he needs only give them power, and their own wicked hearts will dispose them to all the enormities, which avarice, cruelty, revenge, or lust, can perpetrate. But the residue of his chosen people shall never be cut off from the city of our God;* and he seldom permits those to prosper who have imbrued their hands in the blood of his worshippers. The Lord of glory, by his work on earth, in our nature, and by his ascension into heaven, hath removed all obstructions to our entrance into his Church, or into the mansions of felicity; and by his Gospel he hath, as it were, sent Jerusalem’s choicest privileges to these distant regions: yet, except we “flee for refuge to lay hold on this hope set before us,” we shall be no better for these advantages in that day when he shall come to judgment, and all his saints with him. Men flee without delay from an earthquake, and leave everything behind them, “lest the earth swallow them up also;” how should we then flee to the greatest distance from the brink of that tremendous gulf, which continually swallows up such multitudes of the ungodly! In this world the believer enjoys the light of day: yet it is attended with so many clouds and storms, that it often seems to resemble the night. He sees, but it is "through a glass darkly:" he experiences some hope and consolation; but they are interrupted with a variety of fears, sorrows, and temptations: and his fleeting beginnings of holiness are greatly counteracted and obscured by the remains and prevalence of his sinful passions. His course therefore is a strange mixture or interchange of light and darkness, and he often can scarcely tell whether it be day or night with him; yet is it one day that is known to the Lord: his faith and hope may be much enfeebled and clouded; but they are never extinguished: his Sun may be eclipsed, but it never goes down: it may be winter with his soul, but it is never total darkness, as with those who are yet unconverted. The Lord also knows all his difficulties, discouragements, and temptations: he can distinguish between his conflicts, failures, errors, and seasons of distrust or slackness, and the total unbelief, the willing slavery and negligence of the children of disobedience: and he knows how to make all needful allowances, and to communicate proportionable supports. It often happens, likewise, that towards the evening of life the believer's light becomes more clear and abiding, and his last days his best days: and indeed his personal experience generally accords to that of the Church, whose "light will shine more and more unto the perfect day." Let us then be thankful even for the dawning of "the Sun of righteousness" upon our souls; and let us rejoice in the hope of a clearer and more sanctifying and cheering light, towards the close of our pilgrimage, as ushering in the perfect light of the world above. The sacred streams of living waters also, that flowed from Zion, have reached our land: may we continually refresh our souls with them, amidst the varying dispensations of Providence: and may every revolution and every distress of nations make way for them to flow on, wider and deeper, till the Lord Jesus be acknowledged King over all the earth; and till all men in sincerity and peace unite in the spiritual worship and service of our God and Saviour; and all distinctions are swallowed up in the universal harmony of the nations, by the obedience of faith. When the Lord shall begin to work in answer to our prayers, every mountain shall be brought low, and every valley shall be exalted; proud Babylon shall fall, and the ruins of Jerusalem shall be repaired, and her borders enlarged, that men may dwell therein safely, and fear no curse or utter destruction forever.

V. 12—21.

Whilst the grand revolutions predicted in this chapter shall be taking place, (and indeed at all times,) tremendous will be the plagues of all who fight against the Church: and could we see the present condition of those who have perished in this conflict, we should behold more terrible "vines," than if we witnessed men's "flesh consuming as they stand upon their feet, their eyes consuming in their holes, or their tongues in their mouths:" and every member of the body, that had been an instrument of unrighteousness, enduring the awful vengeance of God. Even that furious rage and malice which cause men here to plague, torment, and murder each other. are faint shadows of the perfect mutual enmity which reigns universally among the whole multitude of those that have perished in their sins. But every judgment of God on his enemies will tend to enrich and profit his believing people: his all-powerful grace speedily converts, and his plenteous mercy pardons and reconciles, even those who have just before been fighting against him; and they learn to rejoice in his worship and service. But how distinguishing is that grace which thus saves some of his enemies, at the moment when he consigns others to destruction! Yet no unbelievers can escape, how long soever they be borne with: every sinner must either be reconciled to God, or fall before him; for "his hand will find out all his enemies, and he will make them as a fiery oven in the day of his wrath;" nor can any man evade his vengeance, who doth not come to him, worship him, and rejoice before him. The more the Church is weaned from the beggarly elements of external distinctions and relative sanctity, the more will she be replenished with real holiness. Every action and every enjoyment of the believer ought to be so regulated according to the truth and will of God, and directed to his glory, that it may be holiness to him. Our whole lives ought to be as one constant sacrifice or act of devotion: no selfish or mercenary motive should prevail in any of our actions, any more than a Canaanite should enter into the house of the Lord. Alas, how far are we from this perfection! How far is the Christian Church from this state of purity! How are her sacred functions made subservient to the avarice, ambition, and lusts of men! How are her ordinances profaned to secular and mercenary purposes! How are our lives defiled by low and selfish pursuits, and our duties tainted by wrong motives! But times of greater purity are at hand, and the Lord will come speedily to reform and enlarge his Church, as he hath promised. Yet in heaven alone will perfect knowledge, holiness, and felicity be found.
BOOK OF MALACHI.

The name of this prophet signifies, My angel, or My messenger; and is the same word that he used concerning the forerunner of Christ, and nearly the same that he used about Christ himself, (iii. 1.)—Perhaps he was called Malachi with reference to these predictions, as well as to his prophetical office; and probably he had another name. He seems to have been the last in order of the prophets whose writings were transmitted to posterity; and to have been contemporary with Nehemiah, or to have lived after his time. The scope of his prophecy was to reprove and reform many abuses and enormities, that prevailed among the Jews, and especially the priests; to announce the near approach of the Messiah; to declare the effects of his coming to men of different characters, and to teach the people in what manner they ought to wait and prepare for that event. But it also contains predictions of the calling of the Gentiles and the extensive propagation of the Gospel. Probably with Malachi the prophetic office ceased, or was suspended till the coming of the Messiah, which was about four hundred years. As this prophet particularly foretold the ministry of John Baptist and the speedy coming of Christ, he is very frequently quoted or referred to, in the New Testament. (om iii. 1. with Matt. xi. 10, Mark i. 2, Luke vii. 27.—and iv. 5, 6. with Matt. xvii. 10—12. Mark ix. 11, 12. Luke i. 16, 17.)

R. C. 420.

CHAP. I.

The love of God to Israel contrasted with his hatred of Edom, 1—5. God reprobates the Jews, especially the priests, for ingratitude, and contempt of him and his ordinances; and foretells the calling of the Gentiles, 6—14.

THE burden of the word of the Lord to Israel by Malachi.

1. I have loved you, saith the Lord; yet ye say, 'Wherein hast thou loved us? Was not Esau Jacob's brother? saith the Lord; yet I loved Jacob,
2. And I hated Esau, and laid his mountains and his heritage waste for the dragons of the wilderness.
3. Whereas Edom saith, We are impoverished, but we will return and build the desolate places; thus saith the Lord of hosts, 'They shall build, but I will throw down; and they shall call them, The border of wickedness, and The people against whom the Lord hath indignation for ever.'
4. And your eyes shall see, and ye shall say, 'The Lord will be magnified from the border of Israel.'

NOTES.

CHAP. I. V. 2—5. (M Argentine.) The prophet was directed to open his message of sharp rebukes, by reminding the people of the Lord's peculiar love to them, as it had been manifested in all his dealings with the nation. Yet he knew, that they would inquire wherein he had loved them? They had endured grievous hardships during the Babylonish captivity; and, though now restored to their own land, they still continued subject to the kings of Persia; so that they could not discern any special fruits of such peculiar love to them. Perhaps they supposed, that they were entitled to the divine favour, as the descendants of Abraham, the friend of God, and from Isaac the promised seed. But Esau likewise was descended from Abraham and Isaac; and was twin-brother to Jacob, and elder than he; yet the Lord had loved and chosen Jacob, and
CHAPTER I.

6. A son honoureth his father, and a servant his master: if thou be a child, be as the child; if thou be a Master, where is my fear? saith the Lord of hosts.

7. Ye offer polluted bread upon mine altar, and say, Wherewith have we polluted thy name? I have no pleasure in you, saith the Lord of hosts, neither will I accept an offering at your hand.

8. For from the rising of the sun, even unto the going down of the same, my name shall be great among the nations: and in every place incense shall be offered unto my name, and a pure offering: for my name shall be great among the heathen, saith the Lord of hosts.

9. And now, I pray you, beseech ye the God of Abraham, Isaac and Jacob, that he remember me, and look upon thee, and shew thee mercy.

10. And thou shalt say unto him, Thus saith the Lord of hosts: I sent you not.}

reverted Esau as the object of his aversion. Esau indeed prospered in the world: but he lost the birth-right and the blessing, and lived and died, as far as it is known, profane and unbelieving: whilst Jacob was made the heir of the promises; walked with God as a believer, and died happy. They knew the history of Jacob's posterity, and they could not deny that the Lord had always remarkably appeared for them: but the mountains of the heritage, allotted to Esau's descendants, had, by wars and various means, been rendered so waste and barren, that they were only fit to harbour those monstrous serpents that frequent sandy deserts. The impoverished Edomites indeed were projecting to return to their land and rebuild their cities, as the Jews had done: but the Lord purposed to defeat their efforts, and to make it appear that his indignation against them was perpetual, because of their other sins, and because they had unjustly enlarged their borders, by seizing the lands allotted to Israel. Thus the Jews would see, and be compelled to own that the Lord had magnified himself in maintaining their lot, and punishing those who endeavoured to intrude upon them. Edom was the type of the enemies of God, as Israel was of his chosen people. Judas Maccabeus and other Jewish leaders shortly after entirely subdued the Edomites.

From, &c. Or, “Beyond the border of Israel.”

V. 6-8. It was allowed by all, that a son ought to honour the person, and respect the reputation and authority, of his father. A servant also was used to fear the displeasure, and reverence the will and commands, of his master; and men would condemn him that neglected the duty of this relation. But God had always been a Father to Israel, not only as the Author and Preserver of their natural lives, or their Benefactor in temporal things; but in respect of their religious advantages and the typical adoption that belonged to them: yet where were the honour, reverence, submission, and regard to his will and glory, which that relation required? They also called him their Lord and Master: but they neither aimed to please, nor feared to offend him; they neither respected his authority nor obeyed his commands. This was especially the case with the priests, who were more highly privileged than the people, and more expressly consecrated to his service: yet they had despised his name. They would indeed inquire wherein they had despised his name? as disdaining the charge, and offended with the messenger that brought it. But in answer to this, they were accused of offering polluted bread on his altar. This may refer either to the meat-offerings which were burned upon the altar, and which they made of the refuse of the wheat; or to the sacrifices that fed the sacred flame, and were the bread or food of the altar. If they further inquired how this polluted the Lord? It was answered, that they had said, “The table of the Lord is contempulable.” They thought that any thing was good enough to be consumed on the altar, or to supply, as it were, the table of the Lord: so that, provided the people did but bring the best of their increase to their tables, they let them offer the refuse of their flocks and herds in sacrifice. Thus the blind, the lame, and the sick, that were good for nothing else, were consumed on God's altar, from contempt of him, and expressly contrary to his law; and was not this evidently evil? Would their civil governors be satisfied with such worthless animals for tribute or for presents? Nay, would they not think themselves grossly affronted, if any thing vile and refuse were offered them? And could they expect that the God of heaven would accept either them or their services, seeing they so despised him?—It is evident that these priests understood nothing of the typical meaning of the sacrifices, as shadowing forth the illustrious Lamb of God; that they were entirely ignorant of the law, which required that the Lord should be served with the first and best of every thing; and that they grudged the expense, thinking all those oblations thrown away that did not turn to their own emolument.
12 But ye have profaned it, in that ye say, The table of the Lord is polluted; and the fruit thereof, even his meat is contemnible.

13 Ye said also, Behold, what a weariness is it! * and ye have spuffed at it, saith the Lord, of hosts; * and ye brought that which was * torn, and the lame, and the sick: thus ye brought an offering.

offering: * should I accept this of your hand? saith the Lord.

14 But * cursed be ye, the deceivers, * which * baffle in his flock a male, and voweth and sacrificeth unto the Lord a corrupt thing: * for I am a great King, * saith the Lord of hosts, and my name is dreadful among the heathen.

V. 9—11. The Jews seem to have been at this time under divine rebukes; and the priests were appointed to burn incense and make intercession for the people in behalf of the nation. Let them, therefore, beseech the Lord to be gracious to Israel, according to the duty of their office; but as these judgments came upon the nation for their sins, or those into which they led the people, could they expect that God would regard their persons, or answer their prayers? For they had no love to the Lord or his service, but merely to the emoluments of the sacerdotal office: so that none of them would open the doors of the temple, or keep up the fire on the altar, or do any thing that they could help, except some extra emolument were annexed to it. God had provided sufficiently for their maintenance; but their love of filthy lucre was insatiable, and he had pleasure in such mercenary services. He would, therefore, soon terminate that dispensation, and the priesthood which they so profaned, and deprive the nation of their idolized and abused privileges: but he would cause his name to be adored among the Gentiles all over the earth; and in every place their spiritual worship should ascend as incense and a pure offering into his presence, through the intercession of the great High Priest whom he had appointed. So that whilst the Jews, especially the priests, had despised, and would more despise, his name, it should be rendered great and honoured among the heathen, in all parts of the earth.

(Marg. Ref.) “Surely the doors shall be closed against you, neither shall ye kindle the fire of thy altar in vain.”

(10.) (Hs. Newcome.) Thus the verse may be considered as a prophecy of the abolition of the Levitical priesthood; and an introduction to a prediction concerning the conversion of the nations, and the spiritual priesthood, in the subsequent verse. But then the text must be altered on slender authority, and without necessity; for our version gives an important and instructive view of the subject. We have here a prophecy of the conversion of the Gentiles; and, as usual, under Jewish images. (Hs. Newcome.)

V. 12—14. None of the Jews so much profaned the great name of the Lord as the priests did, who ought to have most hallowed it. They treated his sacrifices and oblations as polluted, and all the gains that regularly accrued from his service contemptible. Perhaps they thought anything was good enough to set upon the table of showbread; and scorned to eat that which was removed from it, as if it had been polluted: they complained and showed by their looks, that the services to which they were continually called were intolerably wearisome, and they smudged with contempt at the portion of the sacrifices allotted to them by the law. They therefore allowed the people to bring blemished sacrifices; who, being also weary of these expensive institutions, readily brought such as God could not consistently accept at their hands. Indeed, if any were in reality so poor, that they could not procure the appointed sacrifices for the payment of their vows, they might be borne with: but that man would surely incur the awful curse of God, who attempted to impose on him by vain pretences, when he had a proper sacrifice, and yet paid his vow with one that was corrupt and worthless. Even the heathens had heard so much of the power and majesty of Israel's King, that they trembled at his name, and could Israelites expect to despise it with impunity? Animals, which must not be sacrificed in payment of a vow, might be presented as a free-will offering. (Note, Lev. xxiii. 18—25.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—5.

Every difference that subsists betwixt one man and another, in outward circumstances, religious advantages, or the state of his soul, originates from the free love of God; who alone maketh one to differ from another, whatever instruments or means are employed for that purpose.

—All the evil that sinners feel or fear, is the just compensation of their crimes; but all their hopes and comforts flow from the Lord's unmerited mercy. He did not choose his people because they had done good; but that they might be holy: nor did he pass others by, because they were worse by nature, or because he foresaw they would be worse; but for reasons best known to himself, and because every one of our fallen race is a vessel of Wrath in himself fitted to destruction. If then "we love him, it is because he first loved us." We all are too prone to undervalue God's mercies, and to palliate our own offences: yet if men habitually derogate from the value of the favours shown them, and excuse their inconsistent and ungrateful conduct, they give clear evidence that they want humility, faith, or love. In vain do ungodly men expect to remedy their own misfortunes, when the anger of the Lord lays their heritages waste; they may build and plant, but he will throw down and root it up; if they persist in their wickedness, they will be called a people against whom he hath indignation for ever: and when the redeemed shall witness the final destruction of the wicked, they will see and acknowledge the glory of God, as displayed in their punishment, as well as in their own most free salvation.
And now, O ye priests, this commandment is for you.

V. 6–14.

Whilst we are encouraged to call God our Father, let our not forget that we must evidence this relation by the temper and conduct of children. “The Spirit of adoption witnesseth that we are the sons of God,” when he influences us to love, honour, call on, trust, and obey him, as our Father. And when we do the things that he commands, simply and without reserve, in reverence and godly fear, we may cheerfully expect, that, as our Lord and Master, he will at last receive us with “Well done, good and faithful servants.” But if men confide in names, forms, and notions, and think themselves the children and servants of God, when they neither honour him as a Father, obey him as a Master, nor pay him homage and tribute as a King, they only render their guilt the more conspicuous. The nearer they approach to the Lord in profession, or in any sacred function, the more inexcusable is their contempt of his name: yet the most guilty are most ready to justify themselves, and disclaim the charge. Our services indeed are so defective and deformed, that we cannot be accepted, save of God’s free mercy in Christ Jesus: yet surely we should not willingly present him any thing, except the prime of our affections, time, and talents! For if we spend our best on ourselves and the world, and only reserve the dregs for devotion, do we not offer polluted bread upon his altar? Do we not offer the lame, the sick, and blind, in sacrifice? Do we not count the table of the Lord, the throne of grace, or the sacred Scriptures, contemptible? And indeed, do we not frequentedly worship him in such an unprepared and irreverent manner, and with such worthless heartless services, that it would fire the indignation of an earthly prince, if we approached him in the same manner? We are indeed under a dispensation of mercy: but “shall we sin on, that grace may abound? God forbid.” We may rely on his mercy for pardon as to the past; but not for an indulgence to sin in future. If there be a willing mind, it will be accepted, though the service be defective: but if any man be a deceiver, and wilfully puts the Lord off with the refuse, and expects him to accept a corrupt thing, whilst his best has been devoted to Satan and his lusts, let that man know, that he is under a curse, and that the wrath of the great King abideth on him. Alas, how greatly do avarice and selfishness prevail among professing Christians! Few, even of those that are called the ministers of Christ, will do anything in his service, out of pure love to him, to their work, and to the souls of men. Inquiry is almost universally made about the value of the living, or the cure, or the salary annexed to the additional labour, and not about the good of souls or the interests of true godliness; and few are found prompt to those labours, however useful, where there is no prospect of either profit or credit, even though they be sufficiently provided for by other means. But the Lord hath no pleasure in such ministers, and he refuses to accept of their mercenary oblations. And whilst the sins of covetous, sensual, and ungodly men, appearing in the sacerdotal character, are bringing down judgments on the land, how can it be expected that their official prayers will induce him to be gracious to us? Though he hath superseded the Jewish priesthood, and sent his Gospel among the Gentiles; and prayers, praises, and thanksgivings, when offered through the merits and by the Spirit of Christ, in any place, are more acceptable to him, than the incense and oblations at Jerusalem were of old, yet human nature appears still the same. Men continue, as formerly, though in a different way, to profane the name of the Lord, and to pollute his table; to despire his work and his recompense as contemptible; to count his service weariness, and to express their contempt of them, in their behaviour towards every thing connected with his worship. And none are at this day more apt thus to despire the Lord, and to offer the lame and blind in sacrifice, than those who enter and continue in the ministry, not “of a willing mind, but for filthy lucre’s sake.” But let all, that love the Lord, pray that he would send disininterested, active, and diligent labourers into his harvests; such as will at present be content with food and raiment, and cheerfully wait till their master returns, expecting at that season to receive a crown of glory that fadeth not away.

NOTES.

CHAP. II. V. 1–3. The prophet had before reproved both the priests and the people: but this message was immediately directed to the priests as a commandment from the Lord: and if they did not carefully and seriously attend to it, to glorify him by repentance and a conduct more consistent with their profession, he would send his curse on them, and even curse their temporal possessions and all their peculiar advantages; that is, he would render them uncomfortable, distressing, ensnaring, and ruinous.
4 And ye shall know that I have sent this commandment unto you, that my covenant might be with Levi, saith the Lord of hosts.

5 My covenant was with him of life and peace; and I gave them to him for the fear wherewith he feared me, and was afraid before my name.

6 The law of truth was in his mouth, and iniquity was not found in his lips: he walked with me in peace and equity, and did turn many away from iniquity.

7 For the priest's lips should keep knowledge, and they should seek the law at his mouth: for he is the messenger of the Lord of hosts.

8 But ye are departed out of the way; ye have caused many to stumble at the law: ye have corrupted the covenant of Levi, saith the Lord of hosts.

9 Therefore have I also made you contemptible and base before all the people, according as ye have not kept my ways, but I have been partial in the law.

10 Have we not all one father? hath not one God created us? why do we deal treacherously every man against his brother, by profaning the covenant of our fathers?

11 Judah hath dealt treacherously, and an abomination is committed in Israel and in Jerusalem; for Judah hath profaned the holiness of the Lord, which he loved, and hath married the daughter of a strange god.

12 The Lord will cut off the man that doeth this, the master and the scholar, out of the tabernacles of Jacob, and him that offereth an offering unto the Lord of hosts.

13 Nay, he had in a measure done this already. But he meant to corrupt their seed-corn, that it should yield no crop; he would not prosper any of their labours: or he would render their posterity and the priestly family contemptible, and bring it to decay: yea, he would render them vile; as if the dung that was taken from the entrails of the sacrifices should be spread over their faces, and they covered over, and taken away to the dung-hill along with it, as refuse and loathsom. 'The maw was the priest's,' (Deut. xviii. 3.) but such priests deserved only the 'dung which it contained.' (1Pt. v. 4.)

V. 4-9. The Lord made a covenant with the tribe of Levi and the family of Aaron about the priesthood, as well as one with the nation of Israel about the land of Canaan, &c.; and afterwards one with David about the kingdom. And the Levites would know at length that God had sent these orders, that this covenant might be confirmed to them, by means of their repentance and reformation.

The whole tribe of Levi and family of Aaron was here spoken of as a single person, with whom the covenant of life and peace had been made: which would be enjoyed in the favour of God and the comfort of his service. This appointment was a gracious recompense of their piety and reverential fear of God: for when this trust was committed to them, many of them were well acquainted with the law given by Moses, and ready to speak of it to the people; their worship and conversation were sincere and faithful, and free from iniquity or hypocrisy; they walked before God, as at peace with him, and as following after equity and peace with men; and they were instrumental in converting numbers from their sins to the worship and service of God. They were not mere sacrificers as their posterity had become; but they were sensible that the priest ought to be ready to speak upon any part of sacred knowledge, and, as the messenger of God, to instruct the people from his word. But their posterity had departed from this good way; they had violated the law by their conduct, and perverted it by their explanations; and thus they stumbled, prejudiced, and misled the people: they had abused, and broken the covenant made with their fathers; and therefore they were rendered vile among the people, and exposed to contempt, as a worthless mercenary set of men. This was a divine judgment upon them for their sins; especially for being partial in the law, and leaving out such parts as did not suit their interest, convenience, or inclination, or interpreting it by private regards and affections.

Fear wherewith, &c. 'As the zeal of the Levites against the worshippers of the golden calf, and that zealous act of Phinehas, mentioned Num. xxv. The Levites had forty-eight cities allotted them among the several tribes, that the people might more easily consult them.' (Lov.) It is required of the priests of God's sanctuary, that they should be men of knowledge and heavenly wisdom; so as their breasts should keep, and their lips should express to the people, the right understanding of divine things.' (Bp. Hali.)

10-12. The prophet next addressed himself to both the priests and the people. They were all descended from Adam and Noah, as men; and from Abraham, Isaac, and Jacob, as Israelites. They were formed by the Creator, of one nature and of one nation; yet they dealt treacherously with each other: and this they did in many respects, so as to profane that holiness, which God had put upon...
CHAPTER II.

13 And this have ye done again, covering the altar of the LORD with tears, with weeping, and with crying out, insomuch that he regarded it not the offering any more, or receiveth it with a good will at your hand.

14 Yet ye say, Wherefore? Because the LORD hath been witness between thee and me, and the wife of thy youth, against whom thou hast dealt treacherously; yet is she thy companion, and the wife of thy covenant.

15 And didst not he make one? Yet whom they grew weary; and, in violation of the most solemn engagements, at length divorced on frivolous premises, that they might take heathen wives instead of them. For though divorces were connived at by the judicial law, yet they evidently formed a deviation from the original institution of marriage. The prophet puts the Jews in mind of the first institution of marriage, (as Christ did afterwards on a like occasion,) and tells them that God made but one man at first, (the word rendered One is masculine,) and made the woman out of him; when he could have created more women, if he had pleased; to instruct men, that this was the true pattern of marriage, ordained for true love and individual affection, and best serving the chief end of matrimony, namely, the religious education of children. (Lowth.) The LORD God breathed into his nostrils the breath, (or spirit) of life, and man became a living soul. But had he not the residue of the spirit? Was his life-giving power exhausted? And could he not have created many women for this one man, had he seen good? But he meant that a godly posterity should be trained up, which would best be done by the joint care of both parents, living together in love, and uniting their instructions, examples, and prayers, to that end, in which polygamy and divorces would have been alike unfavourable. The people were therefore called on to watch over their own spirits, that such sensual and selfish passions might not influence them to behave treacherously to the wives of their youth; for it was evident by the Lord's dealings with their nation, notwithstanding their provocations, that he hated putting away, and could they expect, that he would connive at their putting away their wives without cause, when he had not put them away, though they had given him such abundant cause? He allowed the Jews the liberty of divorces, only for the hardness of their hearts; for it was a thing pleasing to him. Some render the words, If he hate her, let him put her away, rather than use her ill. But the former sense is more agreeable to the scope of the place. (Lowth.) May it not be added, that the latter sense is evidently contrary to the design of the passage, and agrees with no part of Scripture; but is the subsistence of those glosses and traditions, by which the scriptures at length rendered the commandment of God of no effect? The points of the original must be entirely altered, to make it capable of this sense; and these generally show how the passages were for one covereth violence with his garments, saith the LORD of hosts: therefore take heed to your spirit, that ye deal not treacherously against the wife of your youth.

16 For the LORD, the God of Israel, saith, that he hateth putting away:

MALACHI.

CHAP. III.

A prediction of the Messiah’s forerunner, and of the Messiah himself, to cleanse his Church and judge the wicked, 1—6.

The people are warned to repent, especially of their sacrilege and proud blasphemy, 7—15. A blessing is promised.

understood in ancient times. “For I hate him that putteth away.” (By, Newcome.) The Jews indeed endeavoured to cover this oppression with frivolous pretences; as one who by costly oblations attempted to cloak, or atone for, his unrepented crimes: or as if a man should cast a garment over the body of one whom he had violently slain, or the plunder that he had taken; but the Lord would not be thus imposed on. (Marg. Ref.)

V. 17. The profane language of the people was as offensive to the Lord, as their impieties and injustice; for they pretended that he was most pleased with bad men. They did not prosper in their outward circumstances, as they expected; they proudly thought themselves good, and entitled to God’s favour; they envied the prosperity of the wicked; and they argued, that if the Lord were a God of judgment, he would not let matters go on in this manner; so that unless he punished their enemies and prospered them, they should be ready to deny his Being, providence, or perfections. (Marg. Ref.) The prosperity of the wicked implied, as they thought, either that their works were pleasing to God; or else that he disregarded human affairs, and would never call men to account for their actions. (Lorth.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

V. 1—9. They who will not lay the commandments of God to heart, to glorify him by repentance and obedience, must be exposed to his curse; and their abused temporal blessings will be mingled with bitterness, and be made an occasion of falling to them; and often men are under severe rebukes in their persons, consciences, undertakings, and possessions, and yet do not see the hand of God lifted up against them. It is a peculiar favour to be employed in the sacred ministry, and in making known to sinners the covenant of life and peace, when they who are thus engaged are themselves interested in that covenant, and when the Lord hath put his fear into their hearts, and made them eminent for faith and holiness. Such ministers will be able and ready to teach the truths and precepts of God’s word with gravity and sincerity; and iniquity will not be found in their lips: they will walk with God in peace and righteousness, and turn many from iniquity, who will be their joy and crown of rejoicing in the day of Jesus Christ. But all, who sustain or desire to enter into this sacred function, must remember that the lips of a minister should be taught with divine knowledge, brought forth from the good treasure of heavenly wisdom, stored up in the heart: that men may be induced to inquire the truth and will of God from his mouth, as the messenger of the Lord to their souls. Ministers answer this description however God, and he will honour them, and make them honourable before men in due time and measure. Alas, how many of those, who fill the holy office, entirely depart from this good old way! How many pervert and corrupt the precept of the law and the doctrine of the covenant, by their partial, superficial, and erroneous instructions; and cause men to stumble by their wicked examples! Such ministers therefore soon fall into contempt: the people disregard their instructions, and do not scruple to defraud them of their incomes; and sometimes even alienate that provision, which they have done so little to deserve, and so much to forfeit: and, however unjust man may be in these transactions, the Lord is evidently righteous, for “they that despise him shall be lightly esteemed.”

V. 10—17. The selfishness and depravity of the human heart are continually striking out new channels of iniquity. Forgetful that one God hath created them, and that they are sprung from one common father, men multiply frauds and oppressions against their brethren; nay, profess Christians against their fellow Christians, profaning that sacred character to the vilest of purposes. Among other evidences of men’s comparative disregard to piety, that is peculiarly worthy of notice, which arises from the marriages of professors of godliness with those who are openly irreligious. Men, who value their distinctions of rank or family, will not degrade themselves by alliances with those beneath them: yet they who profess themselves to be of Israel, and “holiness to the Lord,” set so little value on this distinction, as to ally themselves with the children of his avowed enemy! This is no light matter; for he who of old determined to “cut off from the tabernacles of Jacob,” the master or scholar; who did this, will never conjoin at it in Christians. The Lord also notices men’s behaviour in the different relations of life; he witnesses the unfaithfulness, impiousness, and unkindness of numbers to their wives, and their violation of the vow and covenant, which they made to them before him and the congregation. He hears the prayers and complaints, and sees the tears, of those who have been thus injured; and, as he would have his children joyful in his service, he will call those to account who cause them to weep before him. The depravity of men hath rendered it necessary in civil society, to connive at deviations from the original institution of marriage: but in all our reasonings on that subject, we must revert to it. Did not he, who had the residue of the “Spirit,” create one woman, and no more, for man in paradise? and was not this designed, that with united attention both parents might bring up their posterity in the fear and service of God? Can therefore polygamy or divorces to such as feared God and speak together of him, when the righteous are separated from the wicked, 16—18.

BEHOLD, I will send my messenger, and he shall prepare the way before me: and the Lord, whom ye seek, shall suddenly come to his temple, even the Messenger of the covenant, whom ye delight in: behold, he shall come, saith the Lord of hosts.

2 But who may abide the day of his coming? and who shall stand when he appeareth? for he is like a refiner's fire, and like fuller's soap: 3 And he shall sit as a refiner and purifier of silver: and he shall purify the sons of Levi, and purge them as gold and silver, that they may offer unto the Lord an offering in righteousness.

on frivolous pretences, be reconcilable with his appointment? And doth not the imperious and unfaithful conduct of many professed Christians, to the wives of their youth, form a perfect contrast to the love of Christ to his espoused Church? If men would take heed to their spirits, they would find, that their behaviour in relative life springs from base selfishness, which disregards the welfare of society and the happiness of individuals, when put in comparison with the indulgence of their vile passions and unreasonable caprices, however they may cloak their violence by other pretences. Yet we may the less wonder at their cruelty to their inferiors, when they weary God himself with their impurity and infidelity; and when they take occasion from his righteous rebukes to blaspheme his name, and charge him with partiality and injustice! But they who inquire in this daring manner, "Where is the God of judgment?" will soon be answered, by his appearing to judge the world in righteousness, and to inflict vengeance on all his enemies.

NOTES.

CHAP. III. V. 1—4. It is evident that the Lord himself here speaks: and he promises that he "will send his messenger to prepare the way before him." Now John the Baptist, who beyond doubt was intended, prepared the way before Christ. (Notes, Is. xl. 2 8. Marg. Ref.) Then the Lord, (the same whom David called "his Lord," P s. cxvii. 10) whom they sought and expected, would come to his temple, over his own temple, which could not be fulfilled in Christ, unless he were both Lord and Proprietor of the temple. (Note, Hos. ii. 7.) He would come suddenly, or immediately after his forerunner had announced his approach: and this he did, when he repeatedly cast out the buyers and sellers from it, and there daily preached to the people. He would be the Angel, or Messenger, of the covenant, even the new covenant of mercy and grace, when he came to mediate. In the prospect of his coming the Jews seemed to delight. He is the person whom they delight in, whose coming is so much desired, the time of it being the subject of your search and inquiry, and the expectation of it your comfort. (Lowth.) But who among the people would be able to abide his coming, and stand the test of his doctrine, and the trying dispensations which would attend the setting up of his kingdom? For he would resemble the refiner's fire and the fuller's soap, and no hypocrite or wicked man could abide the test. He would sit as a refiner of gold and silver, to purify his Church and the hearts of his people from all dross; and thus he would prepare a pure race of ministers and a spiritual priesthood, (instead of the corrupt and rejected tribe of Levi) who might present before him a holy worship, as pleasant to him as the services and sacrifices of the most eminent believers, in the purest times of the ancient Church.

V. 5. 6. (ii. 17.) The coming of Christ would be followed by the condemnation and punishment of the Jewish nation. He would come among them as a witness, to testify that their works were evil; and thus he would speedily convict the sorcerers, and other notorious criminals, of which the bulk of the nation at that time principally consisted. (Marg. Ref.) and then he would bring them to condign punishment. The prevalence of these and similar crimes, indeed, caused the Jews to reject Christ and his holy Gospel, and thus brought on the ruin of the nation. Jehovah, being immutable in his nature and purposes, would not consume the nation till the Messiah was come: but then his immutable justice, holiness, and truth, required him to punish them for their enormous wickedness. The people might inbred imagine, that in the days of the Messiah the Lord would deal with them more leniently; as if he had not continued the same holy and just God as when he gave the law; (thus many nominal Christians seem
MALACHI.

What have we spoken so much against thee?
14 Ye have said,  "It is vain to serve God: and what profit is it that we have kept his " ordinance, and that we have walked " mournfully before the Lord of hosts?
15 And now we call the proud happy; yea, they that work wickedness are set up; yea, they that tempt God are even delivered.
16 Then they that feared the Lord spoke often one to another, and the Lord hearkened, and heard it, and a book of remembrance was written before him for them that feared the Lord, and that thought upon his name.
17 And they shall be mine, saith the Lord of hosts, in that day when I make up my " jewels; and I will spare them, as a man spareth his own son that serveth him.
18 Then shall ye discern between the righteous and the wicked, between him that serveth God, and him that serveth him not.

V. 13–18. Many bold infidels and impious persons were found among the Jews, who spoke stout words against God, and justified them. They thought all their time and expense in his service lost; they attended his ordinances with many expressions of self-denial and humiliation, but they derived no profit from them: and they concluded that those haughty rebels, who cast off all constrain and tempted God by their presumptuous wickedness, were the most prosperous and happy persons. There was, however, also a remnant of humble pious believers, who met together from time to time, that they might confer on religious subjects, animate one another to their duty, and inquire what might be done to check the progress of impiety. Of these and their pious designs and discourses, the Lord took special notice, and, as it were, kept a register. (MARG. REF.) And he would surely preserve them as his portion and peculiar treasure: and no more suffer one of them to be lost, than a kind father would destroy his dutiful and obedient son among his inveterate enemies. So that the people, in the event seeing
CHAPTER IV.

The judgments on the wicked Jews, and the benefits to be enjoyed by believers, at the coming of Christ, the sun of righteousness, 1. — 3. The people charged to regard the law of Moses; and John Baptist predicted under the name of Elijah, 4. — 6.

FOR, behold, 8 the day cometh, that shall burn as an oven; 9 and all the proud, yea, and all that do wickedly, shall be stubble; and the day that cometh shall burn them up, saith the Lord of hosts, 10 that it shall leave them neither root nor branch.

2 But unto you that fear my name shall the Sun of righteousness arise with healing in his wings; and ye shall go forth, and grow up as calves of the stall.

3 And ye shall tread down the wicked; for they shall be ashes under the soles of your feet, in the day that I shall do this, saith the Lord of hosts.

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

The Lord Jesus prepares the sinner’s heart to be his temple, by the ministry of his word, and the humiliating convictions of his Spirit; and then he speedily enters it as the precious Messenger of peace and consolation. But no hypocrite can endure his doctrine, or stand before his tribunal; and no idol or lust can maintain its ground, when he takes possession of the believer’s heart. He refines his people as a purifier of silver; that he may render them zealous of good works, and make them a spiritual priesthood, to offer up spiritual sacrifices, acceptable and pleasant to the Father through him. Yet the upright Christian needs not fear the fiery trial of afflictions and temptations, in which the Saviour refines his gold: for he will take care that it shall not be more intense or durable than is needful for his good; and this trial will terminate far otherwise than that he will make of the wicked at the last day. Then he will be a swift witness to convict them of impiety and iniquity; and their destruction will result from his irrevocable justice, even as the salvation of the righteous from his unchangeable love. We have all departed from God, and robbed him of his glory and worship; and have been guilty of inexcusable sacrilege in spending his talents on ourselves; and grosser sacrilege often brings whole nations under a curse. But let us return to God, and he will return to us: and he, who makes trial, will soon find that nothing is lost by honouring the Lord with his substance, and expending liberally in supporting his cause. Infidels and Pharisees will not believe this; but speak stout words in justifying themselves, and objecting to the divine dispensations: yet they will soon be silenced and confounded. The Lord notes the pious words of those that fear his name and seek his glory. He is graciously present when they meet to converse and pray together. He will preserve them as his jewels, when the earth shall be burned up as dross: yea, he will acknowledge them as his beloved children, who served him in the midst of a crooked and perverse world. And at the day of judgment, the different appearance of the righteous and the wicked; their different reception by the Judge, and their different feelings respecting him; the different discoveries made of them, and the different places allotted to them; will make all the world retract their foolish censures, and confess that they alone were wise, honourable, and happy, who served the Lord, and trusted in him.

NOTES.

CHAP. IV. V. 1. In the day before-mentioned, the wrath of God would burn as an oven, or furnace, against the proud Pharisees and Sadducees, and all others who should reject Christ; and it would destroy all the wicked Jews, with their city and temple; so that no remains of them would be left in the land, or acknowledged as the people of God. The history of the siege and destruction of Jerusalem and the temple, and the unspeakable miseries of the Jews, and the unparalleled slaughter made of them by the Romans; with all the sufferings of the scattered remnant to this day, forms the best comment on this verse.—Leave them, &c. A proverbial expression for entire destruction.

V. 2, 3. Christ is “the Sun of Righteousness.” By his doctrine he discovers God, and his perfections, law, and truth to mankind; he shows the eternal world; he brings men acquainted with themselves, their sins, dangers, wants, enemies, and refuge. He is the Source of all man’s righteousness for justification and sanctification: his influences render the sinner wise, holy, fruitful, and joyful. (Marg. Ref.) All the light in the Church, before his coming, was derived from the dawning of the day which his rising was to perfect. He arose at his birth, became more conspicuous in his ministry, was exalted at his death, shone forth brighter after his resurrection and ascension, and attained his meridian splendour, when the Jewish dispensation terminated in the destruction of Jerusalem, and the Christian dispensation was completely established. Then he shone on all the pious Jews, (viii. 16.) and on all believers, with healing in his wings, or beams? (He. Newcome’s)
B. C. 420.

MALACHI.

4 Remember ye the law of Moses, my servant, which I commanded unto him in Horeb for all Israel, with the statutes and judgments.

5 Behold, I will send you Elijah the prophet, before the coming of the great and dreadful day of the Lord; 6 And he shall turn the heart of the fathers to the children, and the heart of the children to their fathers, lest I come and smite the earth with a curse.

Many things, resembled Elijah, the intrepid, self-denying, and zealous reformer of Israel, in the days of Ahab. He came "in the spirit and power of Elijah," who was considered as the chief of the prophets, after Moses. The utter destruction of the Jewish nation—is here threatened, upon their rejecting the preaching of John Baptist, and refusing to hearken to his testimony concerning the Messias." (Lomth.)

PRACTICAL OBSERVATIONS.

Behold another day is coming, far more dreadful than any that hath gone before, to all the proud, and those that work wickedness! But the Sun of Righteousness now shines, to enlighten and bless all that fear the Lord: and the more we walk in his light and bask in his beams, the sooner will our souls be healed, and the more speedily shall we grow holy, fruitful, and happy. What then will be our felicity, when we go forth from the dungeon of this world, to rejoice and grow up in his immediate presence for evermore! Then all enemies will be put under our feet, and peace and joy unutterable will be our portion. Let others then boast in the darkness of their proud reasonings, and call it illumination; but let us keep near to that sacred word, through which this Sun of Righteousness shines upon the souls of his people: and, in the way of his ordinances and commandments, let us wait with patience the hour of our release; and cheerfully expect the great and dreadful, yet delightful day, when he shall come the second time to complete our salvation. But let all men observe, that, without their hearts are turned from sin and the world to Christ, to God, to peace, and holiness, they cannot escape the curse of his broken law, or enjoy the felicity of his chosen and redeemed people.

GLORY BE TO GOD ON HIGH.